

Case No. 3,350.

CRANDELL'S TRIAL.

CRIMINAL LIBEL—EVIDENCE.

On an indictment for a seditious libel, in order to show the defendant's intent, the prosecution may give in evidence, any libellous papers subsequently published by the defendant or found, unpublished, in his possession.

{See U. S. v. Crandell, Case No. 14,885.}

{Nowhere reported; opinion not now accessible. The above statement of the point determined was taken from Brightley's Dig. 232.}
