Revival of judgment, see "Judgment," §§ 71, 72.
—— of lien of judgment, see "Judgment," § 61.
Right of action by or against personal representatives, see "Executors and Administrators," §§ 41–55.

§ 1. Objections to jurisdiction.

Objection to the jurisdiction may be taken by motion.—Nazro v. Cragin, Case No. 10,062.

An exception to the jurisdiction of the federal circuit court by a denial of the fact of citizenship, which is properly averred, can only be taken by plea in abatement.—Wood v. Mann, Case No. 17,952.

An averment that defendant corporation is duly chartered under the laws of the state can only be denied by plea in abatement to the jurisdiction.—Blackburn v. Selma, M. & M. R. Co., Case No. 1,467.

A neglect to make proper indorsement on the writ is no ground of a plea in bar. A plea in abatement is the only one that could be filed.—Miller v. Gages, Case No. 9,571.

§ 2. Another action pending.

When a suit in equity and a suit at law are pending between the same parties for the same matter, one cannot be pleaded in abatement or in bar of the other.—Graham v. Meyer, Case No. 5,673; Hunt v. Danforth, Id. 6,888; Paul v. Hulbert, Id. 10,841.

The pending attachment may be pleaded in abatement to an action brought against the maker in another state.—Hacker v. Stevens, Case No. 5,887.

It is not a good plea in abatement to a suit in the federal circuit court for the recovery of land that another action is pending in the state court between the same parties for the recovery of the same land. It must appear that the two actions are founded on the same cause of action.—Wadleigh v. Veazie, Case No. 17,031.

An objection of lis pendens can be sustained only where the two suits are of the same character, and where the parties in both suits are the same.—In re Certain Logs of Mahogany, Case No. 2,559; Wheeler v. McCormick, Id. 17,498; Thurston v. The Magnolia, Id. 14,017;

Brooks v. Mills County, Id. 1,955; Same v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., Id. 1,964.

Lis pendens is created in equity by filing a bill and actual service of subpœna. At law, suing out the writ without service of the same is sufficient.—Fowler v. Byrd, Case No. 4,999a.

As to whether the pendency of a suit in the state court, between the same parties, and upon the same subject-matter, may be pleaded in abatement in a federal court, see Brooks v. Mills County, Case No. 1,955; Earl v. Raymond, Id. 4,243; White v. Whitman, Id. 17,561; Loring v. Marsh, Id. 8,514; McKay v. Garcia, Id. 8,844; Nelson v. Foster, Id. 10,105.

Pendency of suit between same parties respecting the same subject-matter in a federal court in another state may be pleaded in abatement.—Ex parte Balch, Case No. 790.

The pendency of a suit in a court of general jurisdiction in another state, in which property sufficient to satisfy the demand had been attached, is a bar to a second suit in the federal court.—Lawrence v. Remington, Case No. 8,141.

Lis pendens in a foreign country is not a good plea in abatement.—Lyman v. Brown, Case No. 8,627.

Where a suit in the state court has been prosecuted to final judgment by collusion of the nominal parties to the record, the federal court will not allow proceedings pending in its court to be dismissed, against the wishes of the real party in interest.—Nusbaum v. Emery, Case No. 10,381.

A suit will not be abated because of the pendency of another suit for the same cause where the other suit was dismissed after the plea in abatement was filed.—Chamberlain v. Eckert, Case No. 2,576.

§ 3. Defects and objections as to parties and proceedings.

Quaere, whether the misnomer of a corporation must be pleaded in abatement.—Central Bank v. Tayloe, Case No. 2,548.

A misjoinder of parties is waived, unless taken advantage of by plaintiff in abatement.—Chandler v. Byrd, Case No. 2,591b; Clementson v. Beatty, Id. 2,884.

A plea in abatement, in an action on a note, that one of the joint indorsers, not served, is a citizen of another state, is bad.—Cooper v. Gordon, Case No. 3,195.

The omission of mortgagees on a bill in equity in relation to the premises is no cause of abatement of the suit.—Hoxie v. Carr, Case No. 6,802.

Trespass on the case will lie for use and occupation of land in Virginia, but all joint tenants or tenants in common must be joined as plaintiffs. Omission thereof may be taken advantage of without pleading it in abatement.—Newton v. Reardon, Case No. 10,192.

The expiration of the charter of a corporation abates all suits then pending in its name.—Bank of United States v. McLaughlin, Case No. 928.

A suit against a corporation is abated by a surrender of its charter and acceptance by the legislature pending the suit, where the right of action is not saved by the statute.—Greeley v. Smith, Case No. 5,748.

§ 4. Transfer or devolution of title, right, interest, or liability.

An action does not abate by the termination or transfer of plaintiff's interest therein pendente lite.—Elliot v. Teal, Case No. 4,389; Barnard v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co., Id. 1,003.

But no further proceedings can be had until his assignee is made a party.—Barnard v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co., Case No. 1,003.

Where, during the pendency of a suit, one of the defendants is released under the bankrupt law, the suit as to him abates.—Fellows v. Hall, Case No. 4,723.

An action is not abated by substituting the assignee in bankruptcy of plaintiff as party.—Wise v. Decker, Case No. 17,906; Gear v. Fitch, Id. 5,290.

§ 5. Death of party and revival of action—Abatement or survival of action.

Survival or abatement of actions, where death of parties intervenes, depends upon the state or local law.—Ferguson v. Lambert, Case No. 4,739.

At common law, all actions founded on contracts, express or implied, survive, but not actions of tort.—Jones v. Van Zandt, Case No. 7,503; Id. 7,504.

Where a child, a passenger on a steamship, died, as was alleged, on account of negligence of the officers, the cause of action arose on contract, and survived to the administrator.—The City of Brussels, Case No. 2,745.

The rule that actions arising ex delicto die with the person is not affected by the act giving special bail in suits by the United States for penalties.—United States v. Korn, Case No. 15,543.

An action for the injury to a minor child by the wrongful act of defendant, in the absence of a statute, does not survive the death of the person injured, and cannot be brought by his representatives or next of kin.—Sullivan v. Union Pac. R. Co., Case No. 13,599.

An action for malicious arrest and imprisonment under a state warrant, under regular proceedings, abates by the death of defendant (Code Civ. Proc. Ohio, § 399).—Ferguson v. Lambert, Case No. 4,739.

A suit against a co-partnership for infringement of a patent does not abate on the death of a co-partner, and it will not be revived against his executors where it does not appear that the survivors are insolvent, and the co-partnership assets are insufficient to pay the claim.—Troy Iron & Nail Factory v. Winslow, Case No. 14,199.

An action of trespass on the case for harboring runaway slaves survives, under Act Ohio Feb. 14, 1824, as an action for injury to property.—Jones v. Van Zandt, Case No. 7,503.

Actions in the admiralty, for mere personal torts, do not survive the death of the person injured.—Crapo v. Allen, Case No. 3,360.

A state statute will not enable an administrator to maintain an action in the district court for a personal tort committed on the high seas.—Crapo v. Allen, Case No. 3,360.

An action of ejectment is one in which the cause of action survives in Vermont.—Hatfield v. Bushnell, Case No. 6,211.

Death of plaintiff's lessor does not abate an action in ejectment.—Baylor v. Neff, Case No. 1,143.

In an action of detinue, the cause of action on the death of plaintiff survives.—Trigg v. Conway, Case No. 14,173.

In the absence of an act of congress providing for a survival or adopting a state act, an action for a penalty does not survive.—Jones v. Van Zandt, Case No. 7,504.

A suit in equity does not abate by the death of a co-plaintiff or co-defendant. If one plaintiff and one defendant survive, the suit is open for amendment.—Fisher v. Rutherford, Case No. 4,823.

Death of a party where the cause of action survives results in no disadvantage to either party. A suggestion of the fact apud acta removes the technical difficulty.—Nevitt v. Clarke, Case No. 10,138.

§ 6. —— Continuance or revival of action.

Case is not revived on death of party without order to that effect.—Atterbury v. Gill, Case No. 638.

The state statute limiting the time for the allowance of a continuance by an administrator (Civ. Code Or. § 34) applies to actions in the federal courts.—Barker v. Ladd, Case No. 990.

The filing of letters of administration by the administrator of a deceased party held a "proceeding" in the case, under Act Md. 1785, c. 80, § 1.—Wilson v. Harbaugh, Case No. 17,807.

Discontinuance for want of appearance or proceeding for two terms after the suggestion of death (Act Md. 1785, c. 80) held cured by subsequent appearance, trial, and verdict.—Brent v. Coyle, Case No. 1,837.

Where plaintiff dies before judgment. his personal representative may become a party to the suit, and prosecute it to final judgment (Act 1789, § 31), where the cause of action survives by the local law.—Hatfield v. Bushnell, Case No. 6,211; Baldwin v. Lamar, Id. 800; Trigg v. Conway, Id. 14,173.

The assignee of the complainant cannot file a bill of revivor. His proper course on the death of the original complainant is to file a supplemental bill.—Metal Stamping Co. v. Crandall, Case No. 9,493c.

A devisee cannot maintain a bill of revivor. —Slack v. Walcott, Case No. 12,932.

Where defendant in a suit in equity has neither been served with process, nor appeared, the suit cannot be revived against his administrator after his death.—United States v. Fields, Case No. 15,089.

Where defendant in a suit to enjoin infringement of a patent, and for an accounting, dies before decree, a bill of revivor will lie against his personal representatives to prevent abatement of the suit.—Smith v. Baker, Case No. 13,010.

The administratrix and infant son and sole heir of defendant in the original bill are proper parties to a bill of revivor.—Bettes v. Dana, Case. No. 1,368.

The only questions upon bill of revivor are as to its form and the competency of the parties. Objections cannot be taken to the original bill.—Bettes v. Dana, Case No. 1,368.

Defendant, who appeared, held not entitled to three months to answer a bill of revivor under Sup. Ct. Rules 6 and 10.—Oliver v. Decatur, Case No. 10,496.

It seems that the objection that a devisee cannot maintain a bill of revivor may be taken by answer as well as by plea or demurrer.—Slack v. Walcott, Case No. 12,932.

In a suit in equity against the members of a firm, a demurrer will not lie to a bill of revivor to bring in the representative of a deceased partner.—Wilson v. Seligman, Case No. 17,832a.

§ 7. Waiver of grounds of abatement.

Plea in bar waives plea in abatement.—Adams v. White, Case No. 68; Dowell v. Cardwell, Id. 4,039; Evans v. Davenport, Id. 4,558.

A plea of misnomer, in abatement, is too late after the expiration of the rule to plead.—Brooklyn White Lead Co. v. Pierce, Case No. 1,940.

ABDUCTION.

See "Seduction."

Actions for wrongful abduction of infant, see "Parent and Child," § 3.
Jurisdiction over libel for, see "Admiralty," § 30.

ABSTRACTS OF TITLE.

§ 1. Liabilities of examiners of titles.

An attorney employed by the lender to examine the title of property offered as security for a loan, though compensated by the borrower, is responsible to the lender for the correctness of his opinion.—Page v. Trutch, Case No. 10,668.

The certificate of such attorney that the security is a good one is a warranty not only that the title shall be found good on litigation, but that it is free from any palpable grave doubt or serious question of its validity.—Page v. Trutch, Case No. 10,668.

ABUSE OF PROCESS.

See "Process," § 9.

ABUTTING OWNERS.

Weight of evidence, see "Criminal Law," § 79.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

§ 1, Part payment. § 2, Conveyance of property. § 3, Execution of accord as satisfaction. § 4, Pleading.

See, also, "Compositions with Creditors"; "Compromise and Settlement"; "Novation"; "Payment"; "Release."

§ 1. Part payment.

An agreement to deliver, in satisfaction of a debt, notes or money for a less sum, does not discharge the larger debt, unless fully and fairly performed in all its parts.—Memphis v. Brown, Case No. 9,415.

§ 2. Conveyance of property.

A transfer of specific property to trustees for the use of creditors, under a mutual agreement that the property shall be received in full satisfaction and discharge of their several demands, constitutes a valid accord and satisfaction.—Bartlett v. Rogers, Case No. 1,079.

§ 3. Execution of accord as satisfaction.

The making of an allowance for services of a person as an officer of a society, if accepted by him, is conclusive as an adjustment for his services.—Oliver v. Vernon, Case No. 10,501.

§ 4. Pleading.

An unperformed agreement cannot be pleaded in bar as an accord and satisfaction.—United States v. Clarke, Case No. 14,812.

Accord and satisfaction occurring after issue formed in a suit, to be available, must be pleaded puis darrein continuance.—Good v. Davis, Case No. 5,530a.

ACCOUNT.

§ 1, Action of account or account rendered. § 2, Equitable actions.

See, also, "Account, Action on"; "Account Stated."
Accounting between partners, see "Partnership," § 53.
Accounting by assignee for benefit of creditors, see "Assignment for Benefit of Creditors," § 13.
—— in bankruptcy, see "Bankruptcy," §§ 457–465.
Accounting by executor or administrator, see "Executors and Administrators," §§ 56–69.
—— by factor, see "Factors," § 13.
—— by guardian of infant, see "Guardian and Ward," § 9.
—— by receiver, see "Receivers," § 7.
—— by trustee, see "Trusts," §§ 36–40.
—— by United States officers, see "United States," § 12.
—— in suits for infringements, see "Copyrights," § 48; "Patents," §§ 254–259; "Trade-Marks and Trade-Names," § 34.
Copies of accounts alleged or annexed in pleading, see "Pleading," §§ 63, 64.
Jurisdiction over accounting, see "Admiralty," § 8.

§ 1. Action of account or account rendered.

The declaration must show the privity by which plaintiff is entitled to an account, and also proceedings under or pursuant to it, raising a balance in his favor to be recovered.—Travers v. Dyer, Case No. 14,150.

On a general demurrer to a count it need only be sufficient in substance, without regard to form.—Travers v. Dyer, Case No. 14,150.

In an action of account, a plea of plene computavit is not sustained by evidence showing that goods were sent to defendant to be sold on commission, and that he delivered an account in which he debited himself with the entire amount, and credited the sales, leaving a large balance of goods unsold and unreturned.—Read v. Bertrand, Case No. 11,602.

On motion for a decree on the bill (for an account of license fees) and the answer, held, that an affidavit and counter affidavits could not be considered.—Evory v. Candee, Case No. 4,583.

From the fact that defendant objected to certain items of debit, and was silent as to others, the jury ought to infer that he acquiesced in the latter, unless defendant show that he did not so intend.—United States v. Kuhn, Case No. 15,545.

Where, after a jury is sworn, it appears necessary to examine and determine accounts between the parties, the jury will be discharged, and the case sent to an auditor.—United States v. Rose, Case No. 16,193.

In an action of account, on a reference to auditors under judgment quod computet, all transactions between the parties are to be considered down to the time when the auditors make an account.—Couscher v. Tulam, Case No. 3,287.

In an action of account, nothing can be pleaded before the auditors contrary to what has been previously pleaded and found in a verdict.—Spear v. Newell, Case No. 13,224.

An account rendered is proper evidence before an auditor to whom a cause is referred to state the account.—Bank of United States v. Johnson, Case No. 919.

The report "that the plaintiff has no legal demand against the defendant at present" is objectionable.—Couscher v. Tulam, Case No. 3,287.

§ 2. Equitable actions.

Courts of equity possess concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law in matters of account, and will interpose where a court of law could not give adequate redress.—Mitchell v. Great Works Milling & Manufacturing Co., Case No. 9,662.

Where defendants dispute an account stated by them which has been accepted by complainant, the latter may maintain a bill in equity for an account and discovery.—Walker v. Kremer, Case No. 17,077.

Bill to account does not lie on an executory contract where compensation for the breach can be had in damages.—Baker v. Biddle, Case No. 764.

Where a bill for a balance of account is taken pro confesso, the account must be referred to the master.—Pendleton v. Evans, Case No. 10,921.

Where the court has the means to stay an account, the matter will not be referred to a master unless both sides agree thereto.—Jewett v. Cunard, Case No. 7,310.

On a reference to a master to take and state an account, the court will not revise each act of the master as the case progresses.—Union Sugar Refinery v. Mathiesson, Case No. 14,398.

Where accounts are referred to a master, the court will not settle principles previous to taking the account, but they must be brought before it on exceptions.—Vanderwick v. Summerl, Case No. 16,845.

An account will not be referred back before argument of exceptions because of the discovery of new evidence.—Camac v. Francis, Case No. 2,329.

On a reference to a master to take and state an account, the master should make up his draft report after completing his investigation, file it in the clerk's office, and give time for the parties to make their objections thereto.—Union Sugar Refinery v. Mathiesson, Case No. 14,398.

ACCOUNT, ACTION ON.

§ 1, Open accounts. § 2, Verified accounts.

§ 1. Open accounts.

In cases of mutual running accounts, every item, whether for pay, services, or otherwise, ending in a debt, is to be deemed a credit in favor of the party pro tanto.—Gass v. Stinson, Case No. 5,262.

Reliance by defendant upon the credit side of an account held a prima facie admission of the debit side.—Bell v. Davidson, Case No. 1,248; Morris v. Hurst, Id. 9,832.

In an action upon an open account, plaintiff may give evidence of any item of which defendant has had reasonable notice.—Barry v. Barry, Case No. 1,060.

If an account be received and not objected to for several years, the jury may infer that it is correct.—White v. Macon, Case No. 17,553.

In a count in assumpsit "for sundry matters properly chargeable in account," according to an account alleged to be annexed, if no account be in fact annexed, the words referring to such annexation may be rejected as surplusage, and money lent may be proved under the count.—Lovejoy v. Wilson, Case No. 8,551.

Upon a count "for sundry matters properly chargeable, as by account annexed," it is not necessary that the account should be such as would be evidence per se under Act Md. 1729, c. 20.—McLaughlin v. Turner, Case No. 8,875.

§ 2. Verified accounts.

Sufficiency of plaintiff's own oath to support an account under Acts Md. 1729, c. 20, § 9, and 1785, c. 46.—Rogers v. Fenwick, Case No. 12,011.

ACCOUNT STATED.

§ 1, Mode of stating and settling. § 2, Interest on balance. § 3, Opening and correcting. § 4, Surcharging and falsifying.

§ 1. Mode of stating and settling.

An account may be a stated or settled account, though not signed by the parties.—York v. Wistar, Case No. 18,141.

The presumption of a promise to pay arises when the account is rendered and received without objection made in a reasonable time.—York v. Wistar, Case No. 18,141.

An account retained an unreasonable time without objection becomes an account stated, and bars a bill to account.—Baker v. Biddle, Case No. 764.

§ 2. Interest on balance.

An account current, received and not objected to within a reasonable time, will bear interest.—Bainbridge v. Wilcocks, Case No. 755.

§ 3. Opening and correcting.

A receipt in full on a settled account is merely prima facie evidence, and is not binding, unless it be the result of a compromise.—Lawrence v. Schuylkill Nav. Co., Case No. 8,143.

Equity may open the settlement of accounts between merchants having extensive and complicated dealings, for the purpose of correcting errors therein.—Dunbar v. Miller, Case No. 4,130.

An account stated cannot be opened because an item of interest not illegal, which went into it, could not have been recovered by suit.—Bainbridge v. Wilcocks, Case No. 755.

§ 4. Surcharging and falsifying.

An account current, received and kept without objection, except as to particular items, may still be surcharged and falsified as to other items.—Barry v. Barry, Case No. 1,060.

ACCRUAL.

Of claims against bankrupt, see "Bankruptcy," § 369.
Of lien, see "Maritime Liens," § 49; "Mechanics' Liens," § 2.
Of right of action, in general, see "Limitation of Actions," § 9.
—— by or against assignee in bankruptcy, see "Bankruptcy," § 349.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

§ 1, Necessity. § 2, Authority to take. § 3, Mode of taking. § 4, Certificate. § 5, Further certificate of authenticity and conformity. § 6, Curing defects. § 7, Operation and effect. § 8, Evidence.

Admissions as evidence, see "Criminal Law," § 60; "Evidence," §§ 27–38.
—— as ground of estoppel, see "Estoppel," § 8.
After maturity of contract made in infancy, see "Infants," § 2.
By partner, see "Partnership," § 28.
Of certificate of formation of limited partnership, see "Partnership," § 54.
Of indebtedness barred by limitation, see "Limitation of Actions," §§ 17–25.

§ 1. Necessity.

A defective acknowledgment of a deed in Rhode Island renders it void as to all persons except the parties and their heirs.—Richards v. Randolph, Case No. 11,772.

In Rhode Island, a deed of the wife's estate by the husband and wife does not convey her title unless duly acknowledged by her as prescribed by law.—Manchester v. Hough, Case No. 9,005.

A feme covert need not acknowledge her deed, to render it valid under Act Ill. 1869 (Pub. Laws, 359).—Hawes v. Mann, Case No. 6,239.

§ 2. Authority to take.

A notary public is competent to acknowledge and certify a deed of trust, although he is interested as one of the beneficiaries in the trust.—National Bank of Fredericksburg v. Conway, Case No. 10,037.

An alderman of the city of Philadelphia held a "magistrate," within Act Me. Feb. 20, 1821, providing for the taking of acknowledgments.—Gordon v. Hobart, Case No. 5,609.

A deed acknowledged before the mayor of Cincinnati, Ohio, who has the same power as a justice of the peace "in civil and criminal cases," is good under the state decisions, which will be followed by the federal courts.—Shults v. Moore, Case No. 12,824.

A chattel mortgage by a resident of the city of Chicago may be acknowledged before any justice of the peace for that city.—In re Burnett, Case No. 2,172.

The superintendent of the city of Washington, D. C., held authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds of land within the city.—Peltz v. Clarke, Case No. 10,914.

In 1823 the commissioner of public buildings in Washington had power to take acknowledgments of deeds of land.—Middleton v. Sinclair, Case No. 9,534.

§ 3. Mode of taking.

The separate examination of a feme covert, as required by the statute, is indispensable, but the exact statutory words need not be used.—Raverty v. Fridge, Case No. 11,587.

It is the acknowledgment of a married woman which gives effect in Illinois to a deed of her own real property, and it must be in substantial conformity with the law, or the deed is invalid.—Lane v. Dolick, Case No. 8,049.

§ 4. Certificate.

Where the certificate fails to state that the subscribing witness was personally known to the officer taking the acknowledgment, as required by Rev. St. Ill. 1845, p. 107, § 20, it is fatally defective.—Morgan v. Curtenius, Case No. 9,799.

Nothing will be presumed in favor of a notary's certificate of acknowledgment. He must state all the facts necessary to show a valid official act, and that he has affixed his notarial or official seal.—Wetmore v. Laird, Case No. 17,467.

And a certificate which fails to show that the seal affixed is his notarial or official seal is insufficient.—Wetmore v. Laird, Case No. 17,467.

The magistrate's certificate of the acknowledgment of a deed is sufficient, in Pennsylvania, to admit it in evidence, though it be not under seal.—Fellows v. Pedrick, Case No. 4,724.

On a deed of land in Nebraska executed in another state, and not acknowledged before a commissioner for Nebraska, the certifying officer must certify that the execution and acknowledgment are according to the laws of the state in which it is executed.—Morton v. Smith, Case No. 9,867.

It is sufficient if it appear by the certificate of the execution and acknowledgment of a deed by a feme covert that the statutory directions were substantially complied with.—Talbot v. Simpson, Case No. 13,730.

Sufficiency of certificate of acknowledgment to a deed by a married woman reciting that she was made acquainted with its contents through a sworn interpreter.—Norton v. Meader, Case No. 10,351.

A deed by a wife and her husband, purporting to convey her separate estate in Illinois held invalid where the acknowledgment was a mere relinquishment of dower.—Lane v. Dolick, Case No. 8,049.

Where a notary public, in signing a jurat, appended to his name the words "notary public," and affixed a seal bearing his name and the words "notary public," held a sufficient compliance with Act Sept. 16, 1850.—Goodyear v. Hullihen, Case No. 5,573.

§ 5. Further certificate of authenticity and conformity.

An acknowledgment of a deed before a clerk of a court in another state is not good without evidence that the person taking the acknowledgment was clerk.—Wallace v. Dewey, Case No. 17,099.

Where the justices of the peace, in Maryland, taking the acknowledgment were of a different county than that in which the land lay, there must be a county clerk's certificate of their official character to entitle the deed to record.—Milligan v. Mayne, Case No. 9,606.

§ 6. Curing defects.

A defective acknowledgment of a feme covert cannot afterwards be amended by the court before whom it was taken, by parol proof of the facts.—Elliott v. Peirsoll, Case No. 4,395.

Defective acknowledgments of deeds may be made good by statute.—Moore v. Nelson, Case No. 9,771.

§ 7. Operation and effect.

The certificate of acknowledgment of a deed or mortgage is not conclusive, in Minnesota, as to the facts stated therein.—Drury v. Foster, Case No. 4,096.

§ 8. Evidence.

The acknowledgment of a deed before a person who styles himself a justice of the court of common pleas is prima facie evidence that he was such; and it is not necessary to produce the commission of the justice until evidence is given to render the fact questionable.—Willink v. Miles, Case No. 17,768.

The presumption is that the person examined was of full age, until the contrary is shown.—Battin v. Bigelow, Case No. 1,108.

The body of the deed may be considered to determine whether it was duly acknowledged before the proper officer.—Geekie v. Kirby Carpenter Co., Case No. 5,295.

Parol proof that a justice acted as such in taking an acknowledgment is admissible when the fact is not stated in the certificate.—Shults v. Moore, Case No. 12,824.

§ 1. Grounds and conditions precedent.

Actual perceptible damage is not indispensable as the foundation of an action, but it is sufficient to show a violation of a right. The law will presume some damage in such a case. A fortiori, where the act done is such that, by its repetition or continuance, it may become the foundation or evidence of an adverse right. —Webb v. Portland Mfg. Co., Case No. 17,322.

The court will enforce civil rights acquired under a foreign law.—Delilah v. Jacobs, Case No. 3,773.

The ancient doctrine of the common law, that a private wrong is merged in a felony, is not applicable in this country.—Plummer v. Webb, Case No. 11,234.

The civil rights of a person injured by a felonious act are only suspended until the rights of the government to punish it criminally have been satisfied.—Ocean Ins. Co. v. Fields, Case No. 10,406.

Where the felony is not cognizable under the criminal law of the country where civil redress is sought, the civil rights of the party seeking redress are not thereby suspended.—Ocean Ins. Co. v. Fields, Case No. 10,406.

A person who is a slave by the law of his domicil may maintain an action in his own name, in a country where slavery is not allowed, for a personal tort committed within that jurisdiction.—Polydore v. Prince, Case No. 11,257.

A person cannot sue on bills of exchange in the circuit court in Massachusetts, as beneficiary heir and administrator of the estate of the deceased indo-see under the law of France, without taking out letters of administration in the state.—Picquet v. Swan, Case No. 11,132.

There is no privity of contract whereby a creditor may maintain an action against the debtor of his debtor.—King of Spain v. Oliver, Case No. 7,813.

Damages are recoverable for failure to pay a sum of money as agreed, out of funds expected to come into the promisor's hands, if, by his own fault, the money did not come into his hands.—Blight v. Ashley, Case No. 1,541.

The right of the United States to retain moneys due their debtors by an award under a treaty with a foreign power will not affect their right to proceed in a court of equity.—United States v. Myers, Case No. 15,844.

A court of admiralty will not refuse a passenger damages for injuries in a collision, on the ground that he was traveling, at the time, in violation of a law of the state within whose waters the collision occurred. It is for the state to punish violations of its laws.—The D. S. Gregory, Case No. 4,100.

§ 2. Nature and form.

Debt or covenant is the appropriate remedy on a writing obligatory.—French v. Tunstall, Case No. 5,104a.

Where the connection in a joint adventure terminates with the sale of the property, and one party appropriates the proceeds, an action on the case will lie by the other for his portion; but, where the connection is not thus terminated, account render is the proper form of action.—Hourquebie v. Girard, Case No. 6,732.

A submission upon an agreed state of facts waives objections to the form of the action.—Snow v. Miles, Case No. 13,146.

Where a person having an election to bring his suit either on a contract or for a tort proceeds to judgment without a declaration, he cannot subsequently file a declaration for a tort, where the whole course of his proceedings shows that he proceeded upon a contract.—Thibault v. De Basavilbaso, Case No. 13,881.

Neither congress nor the courts can do away with the distinction between law and equity, nor the forms used, nor the causes and reasons which distinguish one from the other.—Butler v. Young, Case No. 2,245.

No state regards the forms or modes of remedies in other states to enforce contracts, but acts upon its own process only.—Titus v. Hobart, Case No. 14,063.

It is not necessary to pursue a statutory remedy in order to enforce a statutory right.—The Highland Light, Case No. 6,477.

When a new right is introduced, and a remedy for its violation is prescribed by statute, the party complaining of such violation is confined to the statutory remedy.—James v. Atlantic Delaine Co., Case No. 7,179.

Where it appears that plaintiff is entitled to the whole of a given sum in certain given rights, it is no objection to a recovery by him that it is not shown how much he is entitled to in each right.—Stokes v. Mowatt, Case No. 13,481.

Whenever the same plea may be pleaded and the same judgment given on two counts, they may be joined in the same declaration.—Stockwell v. United States, Case No. 13,466.

A wrongful act causing loss, being single, but one action can be maintained therefor.—Ætna Ins. Co. v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., Case No. 96.

A bill of review may be conjoined with a bill for relief against a fraudulent decree.—Campbell v. Railroad Co., Case No. 2,366.

A count in assumpsit for a breach of promise of marriage, and a count in tort to recover damages for deceit, cannot be joined, and the defect can be reached by demurrer.—Wilkinson v. Pomeroy, Case No. 17,675.

A count upon the promise of an intestate may be joined to that of the administrator to pay the debt of the intestate.—Wilkings v. Murphey, Case No. 17,663.

The joinder of counts on a bill of exchange as indorsee with counts as beneficiary heir and administrator held bad.—Picquet v. Swan, Case No. 11,132.

A count for injuring the plaintiff's mare by negligence, and a count upon the promise to return the mare safe, may be joined, and advantage can only be taken of the misjoinder (if it be one) by special demurrer.—Dobbin v. Foyles, Case No. 3,942.

Counts charging the defendants as executors upon the promise of their testator, and upon their own promise as executors, in consideration of assets, may be joined in the same declaration.—Dixon v. Ramsay, Case No. 3,932.

A good count in assumpsit, and a count in the same form, but not supported by the cause of action set out, do not constitute a misjoinder of actions without which, if there be one good count, a demurrer to the whole declaration will not be sustained.—French v. Tunstall, Case No. 5,104a.

A severance of a suit, so as to make two several suits out of one joint suit, is not allowed at the common law as to parties defendant.—Smith v. Rines, Case No. 13,100.

Two several actions cannot be brought to recover on different portions of one entire contract.—Chinn v. Hamilton, Case No. 2,685.

Upon a joint shipment and orders by three persons, the master of the vessel is not liable to an action by two for a breach, in the absence of an express promise.—Young v. Black, Case No. 18,153.

The plaintiff in a suit to quiet title cannot, at his option, split his case up into many suits; and if he omits to set forth and prove all the grounds of his right, or his adversary's want of it, he cannot afterwards bring another suit upon the fragment or portion of the case omitted.—Starr v. Stark, Case No. 13,316.

The court may order causes consolidated or one tried as a test case, where they involve same issues.—Andrews v. Spear, Case No. 379.

Actions pending in a federal court of like nature or relative to the same question, may be consolidated to avoid unnecessary costs, or to prevent delay.—The Burke, Case No. 2,159.

Where plaintiff has several causes of action which may be joined, and brings a separate suit on each, the court will compel a consolidation at his costs.—Wolverton v. Lacey, Case No. 17,932.

Consolidation of actions on notes, though parties are the same in all, not ordered.—Bank of Alexandria v. Young, Case No. 857.

Numerous suits involving the same issues will not be consolidated on motion of plaintiff.—Ferrett v. Atwill, Case No. 4,747.

Instead of consolidating actions for trespass to the person and for trespass to property, arising out of the same transaction, the court directed that they be tried at the same time and to the same jury.—Holmes v. Sheridan, Case No. 6,644.

The intermission of a term between the issue of the writ on which one defendant was taken and an alias or pluries against the other will not prevent consolidation of the causes.—Smith v. Woodward, Case No. 13,129.

§ 6. Termination.

A suit is not terminated by the rendition of judgment, nor until satisfaction thereof.—Campbell v. Hadley, Case No. 2,358.

An omission to provide for the decision of pending causes, in an act of the legislature, changing the time of holding courts, does not amount to a discontinuance of such causes.—Boswell v. Newton, Case No. 1,683a.

ACTION ON THE CASE.

See, also, "Action," § 2.
For seduction, see "Seduction."
For trespass, see "Trespass," §§ 3–11.

§ 1. Nature and grounds.

Action on the case lies when there has been no contract, and a tort is unaccompanied by force, and is followed by a consequential injury; or where a contract, express or implied, exists out of which a common-law duty arises, and the party on whom that duty devolves is guilty of malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance in regard to it.—Emigh v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co., Case No. 4,449.

An action on the case will lie for false warranty.—Allen v. Schuchardt, Case No. 236.

An action upon the case for deceit will not lie for a breach of promise.—Fenwick v. Grimes, Case No. 4,733.

An action on the case in the nature of an action for a conspiracy may be maintained, as in the case of a common tort against all or any one or more of the tort feasors.—Smith v. Rines, Case No. 13,100.

Action on the case will lie where a railroad company, after engaging to carry a passenger and taking him on the train, wrongfully ejects him.—Emigh v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co., Case No. 4,449.

The reversioner cannot maintain an action upon the case against a stranger, who, by persuasion or threats, induces the tenant to attorn to a third person, it not being maliciously done.—Brown v. Corcoran, Case No. 1,999.

An action on the case will lie for the loss of plaintiff's slave, although defendant wrongfully and unlawfully acquired and kept possession of the slave.—Washington v. Wilson, Case No. 17,240.

I. JURISDICTION.

On attachment, see post, § 58.

§ 1. Nature, grounds, and scope in general.

Admiralty jurisdiction over a maritime cause is in its nature complete. It extends to the person as well as to the res, and cannot be confined to one of the remedies on a contract when the contract itself is within the cognizance of the court.—Stevens v. The Sandwich, Case No. 13,409.

The jurisdiction of the district court embraces all cases of a maritime nature, whether they be particularly of admiralty cognizance or not.—The Seneca, Case No. 12,670.

Such jurisdiction and the law regulating its exercise are to be sought for in the general maritime laws of nations, and are not confined to that of England or any other particular maritime nation.—The Seneca, Case No. 12,670; Davis v. The Seneca, Id. 3,650.

The district courts of the United States, as courts of admiralty, exercise as large a jurisdiction and are governed by the same principles of maritime law as the courts of the maritime nations of continental Europe.—The S. C. Ives, Case No. 7,958.

Admiralty jurisdiction is referred to in the constitution as it was restricted in England at the time of the Revolution, and as exercised by the state courts before the adoption of the constitution.—Bains v. The James and Catherine, Case No. 756.

The constitutional provision that the judicial power of the courts of the United States "shall extend to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction" embraces those subjects, whether of contract or tort, which, at the time the constitution was adopted, under the general maritime law, were the appropriate subjects of the jurisdiction of admiralty courts.—Scott v. The Young America, Case No. 12,549. See, also, Cunningham v. Hall, Case No. 3,481.

The decisions of the English common-law courts upon the jurisdiction of the admiralty are not binding on the courts of this country.—Steele v. Thacher, Case No. 13,348.

The statutes of 13 & 15 Rich. II. have received in England a construction which must at all times prohibit their extension to this country.—Stevens v. The Sandwich, Case No. 13,409.

The grant of admiralty jurisdiction by the constitution of the United States is more extensive than that allowed to the English high court of admiralty.—Steele v. Thacher, Case No. 13,348.

The admiralty law cognizable in the federal courts is not the civil law of the Roman government, but the admiralty law of Great Britain.—Woodruff v. The Levi Dearborne, Case No. 17,988.

The district court in admiralty is governed by the maritime code possessed before the Revolution, where not altered by law or by a change of circumstance.—Thompson v. The Catharina, Case No. 13,949.

The federal jurisdiction in admiralty in South Carolina extends to all cases whereof the state admiralty courts, by statute or otherwise, had jurisdiction before the federal constitution was adopted.—The Huntsville, Case No. 6,916.

Courts of admiralty in this country are not limited in their jurisdiction by the rules of the common law.—The Stephen Allen, Case No. 13,361.

It seems that no enactment by a state legislature can be the foundation of any right or remedy in admiralty.—The Coernine, Case No. 2,944.

Admiralty jurisdiction is generally determined by the subject-matter.—Davis v. New Brig, Case No. 3,643.

The test of jurisdiction is whether the transaction is maritime in character.—American Ins. Co. v. Johnson, Case No. 303.

The jurisdiction depends not on the character of the parties, but on the subject-matter, whether maritime or not.—De Lovio v. Boit, Case No. 3,776; The Jerusalem, Id. 7,293.

It is not the subject-matter that determines admiralty jurisdiction, but the cause in its secondary sense,—the suit, the legal process.—McAfee v. The Creole, Case No. 8,655.

In cases of torts, injuries, and offenses locality brings them within the admiralty jurisdiction, but in cases of contract it is also necessary that the subject-matter be of a maritime nature.—Thackarey v. The Farmer of Salem, Case No. 13,852.

The admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts is exclusive of the jurisdiction of the state courts.—The Norfolk, Case No. 10,297.

The admiralty jurisdiction extends to actions ex contractu, quasi ex contractu, ex delicto, and quasi ex delicto.—Beane v. The Mayurka, Case No. 1,175.

As the laws of the state of Pennsylvania provide for shipwrights and material men at the port of outfit, and also regulate domestic pilotage, admiralty will not take cognizance of these matters.—Gardner v. The New Jersey, Case No. 5,233.

The admiralty rules prescribed by the supreme court relate merely to the remedy, and were not intended to affect jurisdiction.—In re Kirkland, Case No. 7,842.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of the offense of obstructing a navigable stream by a bridge.—United States v. New Bedford Bridge, Case No. 15,867.

The federal admiralty courts may proceed, under their general powers, in every case in which they are not restricted by statute.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,613.

A suit in admiralty will be conducted, tried, and decided according to the usage and practice of that court, though jurisdiction is dependent upon a local law.—Boon v. The Hornet, Case No. 1,640.

Laws of Oleron, with historical notes.—30 Fed. Cas. p. 1171.

Laws of Wisbuy, with historical note.—30 Fed. Cas. p. 1189.

Laws of the Hanse Towns, with historical note.—30 Fed. Cas. p. 1197.

§ 2. Saving of common-law remedy.

Const. art. 7 of the amendments, providing that the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and that no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law, excludes the jurisdiction of admiralty over contracts regulated by the common law. Suits upon such contracts are appropriately suits at common law, within the terms of the amendment, and are cognizable only in courts of common law.—Bains v. The James & Catherine, Case No. 756.

The common-law rule that a statutory remedy which does not negative the remedy at common law is cumulative is applicable to remedies under the maritime law.—The Waverly, Case No. 17,301.

The remedy at law on an average bond given on a jettison of goods does not deprive admiralty of jurisdiction.—Dike v. The St. Joseph, Case No. 3,908.

Courts of common law have a jurisdiction concurrent with the admiralty over maritime contracts.—De Lovio v. Boit, Case No. 3,776.

The jurisdiction of the admiralty courts of cases of pilotage services is not exclusive of the state courts, in the absence of any legislative provision on the subject.—The Wave v. Hyer, Case No. 17,300.

The extension of admiralty jurisdiction to the lakes (Act Feb. 26, 1845) did not take away the concurrent remedy which existed at common law.—The Globe, Case No. 5,483.

A judgment against the master of a vessel, recovered in an action for wages in a common-law court, cannot be enforced in admiralty.—Assign v. The G. B. Lamar, Case No. 593a.

§ 3. Conflict of jurisdiction as to the res.

When the district courts and state courts have a concurrent jurisdiction in rem, the right to maintain the jurisdiction attaches to that tribunal which first exercises it and obtains possession of the thing.—The Robert Fulton, Case No. 11,890.

The admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States in rem is exclusively in the United States courts. There is no concurrent jurisdiction in rem in admiralty cases between the courts of the United States and the state courts, and the courts of common law are precluded from proceeding in rem to enforce maritime claims.—Ashbrook v. The Golden Gate, Case No. 574; The Isabella, Id. 7,100.

State statutes authorizing actions in rem against vessels for causes cognizable in admiralty are statutes conferring admiralty jurisdiction, and are therefore unconstitutional.—Jackson v. The Kinnie, Case No. 7,137; The Edith, Id. 4,282; Id. 4,283.

The remedy by proceedings in rem against vessels given by Laws Mich. 1864, p. 107, is an exercise of admiralty jurisdiction, and the act and the liens given thereunder are void.—Moir v. The Dubuque, Case No. 9,696.

A vessel in possession of a sheriff under the process of a state court is nevertheless subject to process in rem, in admiralty, to enforce a lien given under the general maritime law.—Wall v. The Royal Saxon, Case No. 17,093; In re Certain Logs of Mahogany, Id. 2,559; The Julia Ann, Id. 7,577; The John Richards, Id. 11,827; The Gazelle, Id. 5,289. CONTRA, see The Robert Fulton, Case No. 11,890; The Oliver Jordan, Id. 10,503.

Whether previous possession by a state sheriff, under a fi. fa. issued by a state court, excludes the marshal from arresting a vessel forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States, quære.—The Florenzo, Case No. 4,886.

Persons, with knowledge that a vessel was under attachment by a marshal, during the temporary absence of the ship keeper, forcibly carried her into another state, and caused her to be attached by process out of the state court. Held, that the marshal might follow and retake her.—The Joseph Gorham, Case No. 7,537.

Where a conflict arises between a sheriff acting under process of a state court and a marshal who has made a subsequent levy on the same property, the sheriff must either apply to the state court to be protected, or by petition to the federal court, to order its officer to withdraw.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,721.

It is no good defense to a petition that freight may be brought into the admiralty court to answer the exigency of suits for mariners' wages and materials, which are a charge on the freight, that the consignee, before the libels were filed, was summoned as trustee or garnishee of the shipowner in a court of common law.—The Caroline, Case No. 2,419.

State statute provisions authorizing seizure of a vessel under process of a justice of the peace to enforce a claim for damages must be strictly followed to give jurisdiction. The appearance of the owner's agent to defend the suit will not give jurisdiction.—The G. H. Montague, Case No. 5,377.

§ 4. Waters and places.

Jurisdiction in admiralty is founded in original cause and place of transaction.—Brevoor v. The Fair American, Case No. 1,847.

The admiralty jurisdiction is not limited to tide waters, but embraces the lakes and navigable streams through which interstate or foreign commerce is carried on.—The Avon, Case No. 680; The Cheeseman v. Two Ferryboats, Id. 2,633; Eads v. The H. D. Bacon, Id. 4,232; Franconet v. The F. W. Backus, Id. 5,048; The Lewellen, Id. 8,307; McGinnis v. The Pontiac, Id. 8,801; Raymond v. The Ellen Stewart, Id. 11,594; Western Transp. Co. v. The Great Western, Id. 17,443; Williams v. The Jenny Lind, Id. 17,723.

Admiralty jurisdiction extends over tidal water (Savannah river), although within the body of a county.—Bulloch v. The Lamar, Case No. 2,129.

The waters of the Welland canal, being used for international commerce, are within American admiralty jurisdiction.—The Avon, Case No. 680; Scott v. The Young America, Id. 12,549.

A seizure in the St. Lawrence river within the territorial limits of the district gives jurisdiction of a libel in rem for collision without reference to the character of the vessel or her voyage.—The East, Case No. 4,251.

Saginaw river, though wholly within the state of Michigan, is a public navigable stream, and within the admiralty jurisdiction.—The General Cass, Case No. 5,307.

Whether admiralty has jurisdiction of collisions upon the Erie canal, or contracts for the carriage of goods from place to place exclusively upon the Erie canal, quære.—The E. M. McChesney, Case No. 4,463.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit for damages caused by collision between vessels at a pier of the city of New York.—Camden & A. R. Co. v. The Thomas Wallace, Case No. 2,337; Camden & A. R. Transp. Co. v. The Lotty, Id. 2,337a.

The admiralty jurisdiction does not extend to matters of contract or tort arising in commerce on tide water wholly between ports in the same state.—Poag v. The McDonald, Case No. 11,238; The Troy, Id. 14,192.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit to recover damages resulting from negligent towage upon the Hudson river on a voyage from Albany to New York, whether founded upon contract or in tort.—Poag v. The McDonald, Case No. 11,238; Id. 11,239.

Act Feb. 26, 1845 (5 Stat. p. 726), extending the jurisdiction in admiralty to certain cases upon the Great Lakes and navigable waters connecting the same, having been passed on the erroneous assumption that admiralty jurisdiction was limited to tide waters, is wholly inoperative, and neither enlarged nor restricted the jurisdiction in admiralty as it existed under the constitution and the judiciary act of 1789.—The Flora, Case No. 4,878; Franconet v. The F. W. Backus, Id. 5,048; Gillet v. Pierce, Id. 5,437; Parmlee v. The Charles Mears, Id. 10,766; The Revenue Cutter No. 1, Id. 11,713; Scott v. The Young America, Id. 12,549; Western Transp. Co. v. The Great Western, Id. 17,443; Wolverton v. Lacey, Id. 17,932.

The part of the sea below low-water mark, and not within the body of any country, is the "high seas" within Act 1789, § 9.—The Abby, Case No. 14.

Waters within the ebb and flow of the tide are to be considered as the sea.—Thackarey v. The Farmer, Case No. 13,852.

All waters, not comprehended within the body of a county, constitute a part of the high sea.—Johnson v. Twenty-One Bales, etc., Case No. 7,417.

It seems that the admiralty and common-law courts have concurrent jurisdiction where an arm of the sea, or creek, haven, basin, or bay, is so narrow that a person standing on one shore can reasonably discern and distinctly see, by the naked eye, what is doing on the opposite shore.—United States v. Grush, Case No. 15,268.

Long Island Sound is not only, in common-law acceptation, an arm of the sea; it is a strait and parcel of the high seas; it is not within the territorial limits of any particular state.—The Martha Anne, Case No. 9,146.

Where the principal contract is maritime, admiralty jurisdiction is not defeated by the fact that some incidental services were performed on land.—The Brookline, Case No. 1,937.

Jurisdiction once attached is not devested by further acts on land in continuation of maritime act.—American Ins. Co. v. Johnson, Case No. 303.

§ 5. Persons—In general.

The admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts in no way depends upon the residence or citizenship of the parties.—Zollinger v. The Emma, Case No. 18,218; The Planter, Id. 11,207.

Where a court of admiralty in a proceeding in rem has jurisdiction over the thing, it is immaterial to whom it belongs.—Clarke v. New Jersey Steam Nav. Co., Case No. 2,859.

Admiralty jurisdiction in cases of tort depends on locality, in cases of contract upon the subject-matter, but never upon the character or occupation of the parties.—Kellum v. Emerson, Case No. 7,669.

Admiralty has jurisdiction to entertain suits in personam, where the parties are foreigners of different nationalities.—Thomassen v. Whitwell, Case No. 13,928.

Maritime courts are not without jurisdiction over suits whether in rem or in personam between foreigners.—Bucker v. Klorkgeter, Case No. 2,083; Davis v. Leslie, Id. 3,639; The Napoleon, Id. 10,015.

But jurisdiction will be declined unless necessary to prevent failure of justice.—Bucker v. Klorkgeter, Case No. 2,083; Bernhard v. Creene, Id. 1,349; Davis v. Leslie, Id. 3,639; The Napoleon, Id. 10,015.

A court of admiralty may decline to entertain jurisdiction where all the parties are foreigners and reside abroad.—Muir v. The Brisk, Case No. 9,901.

But, where the suit is between subjects of different governments, jurisdiction will not be declined.—Bernhard v. Creene, Case No. 1,349.

Though a court of admiralty is not bound to take jurisdiction of controversies growing out of contracts between foreigners having a domicile in this country, it may lawfully exercise it, and ought to do so where justice requires it.—The Sailor's Bride, Case No. 12,220.

Admiralty may, in its discretion, take jurisdiction over a controversy between foreigners where its subject-matter is of a maritime nature, or remit the parties to their home forum.—The Gazelle, Case No. 5,289; In re One Hundred and Ninety-Four Shawls, Id. 10,521; The Havana, Id. 6,226; The Bee, Id. 1,219.

In the case of a suit between foreigners jurisdiction will not be declined where the request is delayed, and the position of the parties has changed in the meantime.—Thomassen v. Whitwell, Case No. 13,928.

Admiralty will entertain a suit for salvage as to property within its jurisdiction, where the only question is as to the rate of reward, though all the parties are foreigners.—In re One Hundred and Ninety-Four Shawls, Case No. 10,521; The Bee, Id. 1,219.

It seems that when, in a salvage suit between foreigners, the answer charges the libelant with wanton misconduct in obtaining possession of the property, and prays the privilege to contest the claim of the libelant before the courts of their common country, the case should be dismissed to the home forum.—In re One Hundred and Ninety-Four Shawls, Case No. 10,521.

Our admiralty courts will entertain jurisdiction in rem to enforce a bottomry bond executed in a foreign country between subjects of a foreign country when the vessel is within their jurisdiction.—The Jerusalem, Case No. 7,293.

In the case of a libel qui tam against a vessel seized by an English cruiser as having been engaged in the slave trade, process in rem will not be denied libelant because he is a foreigner, but will be granted on condition that he enter into a stipulation with sureties to abide by all decrees of the court, interlocutory or otherwise. —The Tigris, Case No. 14,038.

An action will lie against a foreign vessel for wages of an American seaman.—The Napoleon, Case No. 10,015.

Admiralty will take jurisdiction of a libel for personal injuries by an American seaman serving on board a British vessel, where the voyage was terminated here, and the master was domiciled here.—Patch v. Marshall, Case No. 10,793.

§ 6. —— Foreign seamen and vessels.

The district court may take cognizance of a suit by foreign seamen against a foreign vessel. —Armstrong v. The Rydesdale, Case No. 547.

Admiralty jurisdiction in suits by foreign seamen for wages is exercised as matter of comity. —Gonzales v. Minor, Case No. 5,530.

Under the treaty between the United States and the free Hanseatic towns, the federal courts have no jurisdiction of a dispute in respect to wages between the master of a vessel belonging to Bremen and a seaman who is a citizen thereof.—Kendept v. The Theodore Korner, Case No. 7,693.

Under the treaty with Prussia of May 1, 1828, the district court has no jurisdiction of a suit in rem for wages by the crew of a Prussian vessel, where the Prussian consul has previously adjudicated on the claim. Case No. 4,427 reversed.—The Elwine Kreplin, Case No. 4,426.

The court will entertain jurisdiction of a libel for seamen's wages against a Nova Scotian vessel, notwithstanding the protest of the British consul, where the seamen did not belong in Nova Scotia, and the itinerancy of the vessel was uncertain.—The Lilian M. Vigus. Case No. 8,346.

The seamen are not precluded from maintaining the action by section 190 of the British merchants' shipping act of 1854.—The Lilian M. Vigus, Case No. 8,346.

Seamen on board a ship of war or vessel belonging to a sovereign, independent state cannot libel the vessel for wages due.—Moitez v. South Carolina, Case No. 9,697.

Seamen on board letters of marque may sue for their wages in the admiralty courts of neutral nations.—Ellison v. The Bellona, Case No. 4,407.

Where a foreign vessel is in the custody of the marshal on a claim made by an American citizen, the court will take jurisdiction of an intervening libel by one of the seamen, though his contract was made and to be performed in a foreign country, and all the parties are subjects thereof.—The Champion, Case No. 2,584.

The court will not take cognizance of disputes between masters and crews of foreign ships except in special cases.—Willendson v. Forsoket, Case No. 17,682.

Courts of a foreign power will take cognizance of the claims of seamen for their wages only in cases of flagrant wrong or suffering on their part, but not upon an alleged breach of contract, much less to decide upon a quantum meruit.—Graham v. Hoskins, Case No. 5,669.

Admiralty will entertain a libel by foreign seamen for wages only when the voyage is broken up, or when the seamen have been wrongfully separated from the ship, or placed in a state of destitution here.—Lynch v. Crowder, Case No. 8,637; The Becherdass Ambaidass, Id. 1,203; The Infanta, Id. 7,030; Hayes v. The J. L. Wickwire, Id. 6,262.

The district court in admiralty will take jurisdiction of a suit for wages between foreigners, if the voyage is ended, and there is no contract binding the parties to another jurisdiction, and no reason why justice cannot be done here.—The Pawashick, Case No. 10,851.

Admiralty will take jurisdiction of a suit by foreign seamen against a foreign vessel to recover wages, where the voyage is completed or broken up or the seamen are wrongfully discharged. — The Hermine, Case No. 6,409; Burckle v. The Tapperheten, Id. 2,141; Gonzales v. Minor, Id. 5,530; Graham v. Hoskins, Id. 5,669; Orr v. The Achsah, Id. 10,586.

Stipulations in foreign shipping articles, to refer all disputes to home courts, will not prevent American courts assuming jurisdiction in such case.—Bucker v. Klorkgeter, Case No. 2,083; The Infanta, Id. 7,030.

But ordinarily they will not interfere in disputes between the master and seamen of a foreign vessel, when they are bound by the articles to submit all disputes to a home tribunal.—Aertsen v. The Aurora, Case No. 95.

The protest of a foreign consul will not prevent the district court from taking jurisdiction of the case.—Orr v. The Achsah, Case No. 10,586.

Admiralty will take jurisdiction of a suit by a British master against a British vessel for wages, where the voyage is ended and justice can be done.—The Pawashick, Case No. 10,851.

A libel by British seamen against a British vessel for wages will be dismissed on the protest of the consul where it appears that the parties are about to pass into the British jurisdiction.—Saunders v. The Victoria, Case No. 12,377.

A foreign seaman who has shipped to this country, and is offered passage home, cannot sue here for wages, where the master has given security for his return.—The Pacific, Case No. 10,644.

Seamen of a British vessel, whose articles provided that they shall not be entitled to wages until the completion of the voyage, cannot sue in the United States courts for wages, unless it appears that they had been prevented from performing their contract, or seeking redress in the British courts, by wrongful act of the master.—Cochran v. McLean, Case No. 2,927a.

It seems that deviation is no ground of entertaining suits by foreign seamen for wages, where, by the articles, they have stipulated to sue in their own country only.—Bucker v. Klorkgeter, Case No. 2,083; The Infanta, Id. 7,030.

The court will take jurisdiction of a suit by a foreign seaman against a foreign vessel for wages, where the foreign consul consents thereto.—Reynolds v. The Simoon, Case No. 11,733.

The approval of a consul is not absolutely necessary to the maintaining of a suit by foreign seamen.—Bucker v. Klorkgeter, Case No. 2,083.

Ordinarily, seamen belonging to a foreign ship are not allowed to sue for wages without the consent of the commercial representative of their country.—Jelly v. Tiddeman, Case No. 7,256a.

Foreign seamen should show good reason for not obtaining approval of their country's commercial representative.—The Infanta, Case No. 7,030.

The court will decline jurisdiction on a libel by a seaman of a British vessel, who, having submitted his claim to the British consul, disregarded the award.—Townshend v. The Mina, Case No. 14,121.

The court declined jurisdiction in a controversy between foreign seamen and their vessel where the parties might have had redress by a tribunal of their own country.—Thomson v. The Nanny, Case No. 13,984.

§ 7. Vessels and other property.

The materials which constitute a ship become one as soon as she leaves the ways and her keel strikes the element for which she was originally designed, and she then first becomes subject to admiralty jurisdiction.—The Eliza Ladd, Case No. 4,364.

If the business or employment of a vessel appertain to travel or trade and commerce on the water, it is subject to the admiralty jurisdiction, whatever may be its size, form, capacity, or means of propulsion.—The General Cass, Case No. 5,307.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel in rem for services in the nature of salvage to a steamboat dismasted and stripped of her motive power, and fitted and used as a saloon and hotel, where she went ashore while being towed to another place.—The Hendrick Hudson, Case No. 6,355.

A barge without any propelling power or rudder, used as a transport in New York harbor, is a vessel engaged in maritime service upon navigable waters.—Haslett v. The Enterprise, Case No. 6,197.

A canal boat having no power of self-propulsion is not subject to a lien in admiralty for breach of a contract of affreightment.—The Ann Arbor, Case No. 408.

A floating elevator, used in the harbor of New York, though without motive power or capacity for cargo, is a vessel subject to a maritime lien.—The Hezekiah Baldwin, Case No. 6,449.

Steamboats and lighters engaged in trade or commerce on tide water and the seamen employed on board are within the admiralty jurisdiction, but not ferry boats, or those engaged in ordinary traffic along the shores of a river.—Thackarey v. The Farmer of Salem, Case No. 13,852.

Steam ferryboats used between two cities in different states are subject to admiralty jurisdiction, as comprising commerce among the states.—The Cheeseman v. Two Ferry-Boats, Case No. 2,633.

A vessel plying between points on opposite sides of the Mississippi river, six miles apart, though run by a company owning a ferry franchise, is subject to admiralty jurisdiction.—The Gate City, Case No. 5,267.

The maritime law does not apply to a steam ferryboat running between Washington and Alexandria.—Harris v. Nugent, Case No. 6,126.

Flat boats and coal barges used to transport merchandise down stream, and broken up and sold for lumber at the end of their voyage, are not subject to admiralty jurisdiction.—Jones v. Coal Barges, Case No. 7,458.

Admiralty jurisdiction extends to lighters employed in carrying lumber out to vessels lying in deep water.—The General Cass, Case No. 5,307.

The fact that such lighters are not enrolled or licensed does not affect the question of jurisdiction.—The General Cass, Case No. 5,307.

The district court in admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel for collision in the North Sea between vessels of different nations.—The Jupiter, Case No. 7,585.

In the case of a collision in our ports between ships belonging to subjects of different foreign nations, our courts will not decline to take jurisdiction from motives of international comity.—The Russia, Case No. 12,168.

The admiralty court will not proceed against a foreign vessel without the consent of the commercial representative of the foreign government, in the absence of strong circumstances.—Hay v. The Bloomer, Case No. 6,255.

A warship of a neutral nation is not liable to arrest by process from a local court for a wrongful collision, within our territorial jurisdiction, with an American merchant vessel.—The Pizarro v. Matthias, Case No. 11,199.

A public armed vessel in the service of a foreign nation is not exempted from admiralty jurisdiction on libel by one claiming title thereto.—McFaden v. The Exchange, Case No. 8,786.

The harbor police boat owned by New York City cannot be arrested in admiralty to enforce a claim for wharfage.—The Seneca, Case No. 12,668.

A steam tug owned by, and exclusively employed in the service of, a municipal corporation, performing public duties, is not liable to seizure in a suit in rem for a maritime tort, while actually engaged in public service.—The Fidelity, Case No. 4,757; Id. 4,758.

Admiralty has not jurisdiction to try the question of title to certain logs which have been incorporated into a raft and floated down a public navigable river.—Gastrel v. Cypress Raft, Case No. 5,266.

Rafts anchored in a public navigable river are not the subject-matter of admiralty jurisdiction.—Tome v. Four Cribs of Lumber, Case No. 14,083.

Quære, whether admiralty jurisdiction can be sustained against a raft.—The W. H. Clark, Case No. 17,482.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel in rem to enforce a bottomry bond given on cargo belonging to the United States.—The Othello, Case No. 10,611.

A French admiralty court having declared that the capture of an American vessel by a French privateer was unlawful, an admiralty court of the United States will entertain jurisdiction of a libel in rem against the French vessel to recover damages for an unlawful seizure.—McGrath v. The Candalero, Case No. 8,809.

§ 8. Rights and controversies in general —Accounting.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction over matters of account, merely as accounts, although they may arise exclusively out of maritime transactions. It can take cognizance of accounts only as incidental to other matters over which it has jurisdiction.—Davis v. Child, Case No. 3,628; The Fair Play, Id. 4,615.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of an accounting between partners.—United States v. The Isaac Hammett, Case No. 15,446; Turner v. Beacham, Id. 14,252.

Or accounting between part owners of a vessel.—The Ocean Belle, Case No. 10,402; The Susan E. Voorhis, Id. 13,633; Kellum v. Emerson, Id. 7,669.

Or accounts for traffic and dealings between master and mate.—Atkyns v. Burrows, Case No. 618.

Or a suit between shipowners to collect a balance to be determined on settlement of joint accounts.—Martin v. Walker, Case No. 9,170.

If it is apparent from the pleadings that the main object of the libel is the settlement of an account, the libel will be dismissed. Case No. 8,086 reversed.—The Larch, Case No. 8,085.

A court of admiralty will order an account only as incident to other matter of which it has admitted cognizance.—Tunno v. The Betsina, Case No. 14,236.

A party can have a remedy in admiralty for matters of account only upon the basis of an adjusted and recognized liability.—Bradshaw v. The Sylph, Case No. 1,791.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction either of a libel in rem or in personam for a seaman's share in the earnings of the vessel where the amount thereof is not ascertained.—Duryee v. Elkins, Case No. 4,197; The Fair Play, Id. 4,615.

Admiralty may entertain a libel in personam for a specific share in the ascertained profits of the voyage.—Duryee v. Elkins, Case No. 4,197; Dexter v. Munroe, Id. 3,863.

On such libel the court may inquire into the charges in account against libelant, relied upon as reducing or satisfying his share.—Duryee v. Elkins, Case No. 4,197.

A libel by the master and co-owner of a whaling vessel, to recover his lay and disbursements and commissions on sales, will be sustained only so far as the lay is concerned.—Hazard v. Howland, Case No. 6,280.

In an action by a master and co-owner of a whaling vessel to recover the amount due for his lay, the fact that the master was indebted "in his capacity as owner" to the other co-owners, and that such claim might properly be allowed in other courts by way of set-off, does not oust the district court of its jurisdiction.—Dexter v. Munroe, Case No. 3,863.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit for the share of libelant as cooper on a whaling voyage.—Macomber v. Thompson, Case No. 8,919.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel by the master and owners of a vessel against others forming, with libelants, a joint-stock association, for a deficiency in freight, as the suit necessitates an accounting.—Grant v. Poillion, Case No. 5,700.

An account for provisions furnished the owner or commander of a vessel, or for articles for her use when not on a voyage or in a foreign port, is not within the admiralty jurisdiction either as a substantive claim or set-off.—Bains v. The James & Catherine, Case No. 756.

The equitable lien of a part owner and ship's husband on the share of the other owners for advances and disbursements, if any, will not enable a court of admiralty to take an account and enforce it.—The Larch, Case No. 8,085; Id. 8,086.

§ 9. —— Disputes between vessel owners.

In a case of forfeiture, admiralty cannot entertain a claim for alleged balances due by a part owner or a co-partner.—United States v. The Isaac Hammett, Case No. 15,446.

Admiralty has jurisdiction to secure the value of the dissentient minority's interest, in case of disagreement among part owners in the employment of the vessel.—The Tunno v. Betsina, Case No. 14,236.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel for the sale of a vessel, and distribution of the proceeds among the owners, brought by the owners of a moiety against the ship and the owners of the other moiety.—The Annie H. Smith, Case No. 420.

Where two equal part owners of a vessel disagree about the way in which she shall be employed, a court of admiralty may decree a sale of the vessel.—The Seneca, Case No. 12,670, reversing Case No. 3,650; The Ocean Belle, Case No. 10,402.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a claim by a part owner, dissenting from a voyage, for the use or destruction during the voyage of his share of the outfit; the remedy is in equity.—The Marengo, Case No. 9,065.

Admiralty has no power to decree a sale at the instance of minority owners, except, perhaps, as the result of the failure of the owners of the majority interest to give security for the safe return of the vessel.—The Ocean Belle, Case No. 10,402.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit by equity co-owners of a vessel against the other co-owners for supplies furnished.—Hall v. Hudson, Case No. 5,935.

The provisions of the French marine law which authorize a compulsory sale of a vessel in case of partners disagreeing about the use of her are part of the general law of admiralty, binding on the courts of this country. Case No. 3,650 affirmed.—The Seneca, Case No. 12,670.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction to enforce the claim of a mortgagee of a vessel.—The Sailor Prince, Case No. 12,219.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a petition to redeem from a mortgage of a vessel.—The J. B. Lunt v. Merritt, Case No. 7,247.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit in rem for the foreclosure of a mortgage on a vessel, nor of one to try the title or right of property in a vessel.—The John Jay, Case No. 7,352.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction to enforce a mortgage upon a vessel where the mortgagee is out of possession, nor to enforce the payment of freight to the mortgagee.—Deely v. The Ernest and Alice, Case No. 3,735.

Quære, whether a libel lies on a mere mortgage of a vessel, as a chattel, to secure a debt, if arising out of a marine contract and business, or not.—Leland v. Medora, Case No. 8,237.

The surrender or avoidance of a mortgage of a vessel on the ground of laches will not be enforced in admiralty. The remedy, if any, is in equity, after the disputed rights are settled at law.—Dean v. Bates, Case No. 3,704.

An admiralty court has jurisdiction to decree the bounty allowed to persons employed in the cod fishery, and a claim therefor may be united with a claim for an account of the fish taken.—The Lucy Anne, Case No. 8,596.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in case of a wrecked ship to decree a sale upon application of the master.—The Tilton, Case No. 14,054.

Such sale is not conclusive upon the owner or upon third persons.—The Tilton, Case No. 14,054.

Goods taken by pirates, and sold upon land, may be recovered from the purchaser by suit in admiralty.—Davison v. Seal-Skins, Case No. 3,661.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a claim by the owner of goods sold by the master in a foreign port to obtain means of repairing damages to the vessel done on the high seas.—Bulgin v. The Rainbow, Case No. 2,116.

A suit cannot be sustained in admiralty in rem to enforce the payment of duties of the United States.—The Waterloo, Case No. 17,257.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction to decide whether a contract to form a partnership to purchase a vessel is legally or equitably binding.—Turner v. Beacham, Case No. 14,252.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of cases of general average upon losses at sea.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Case No. 9,981.

The owner of cargo shipped under a bill of lading can maintain a libel in rem for its restitution, where it has been separated from the vessel by the wrongful act of the master.—In re Five Hundred and Twenty-Eight Pieces of Mahogany, Case No. 4,845.

No jurisdiction to afford relief for breach of stipulations of personal nature in charter party, —such as agreement by owner to proceed to another than designated port to find market.—Alberti v. The Virginia, Case No. 141.

A proctor may maintain a suit in admiralty for his costs or fees.—McDonald v. The Cabot, Case No. 8,759.

The owners of a steamboat entered into an agreement with a third party, by which the latter was to run the boat, and the proceeds were to go (1) to the expenses of the boat; (2) to the insurance; (3) to a certain sum to the owners; and, lastly, the surplus to be divided among the parties. Held, on a libel in personam brought by the owners for breach of the agreement, that the partnership thereby created was not to commence until the first three claims were satisfied; that until then the third party was merely the bailee of the boat, and the jurisdiction of admiralty was not ousted.—Ward v. Thompson, Case No. 17,162.

§ 12. Ownership and possession of vessels.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit to try the title or right of property in a vessel.—The John Jay, Case No. 7,352.

Admiralty jurisdiction attaches where there is no other question than that of title to a ship, and no pretense of a maritime contract or a marine tort.—Grigg v. The Clarissa Ann, Case No. 5,826.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of petitory as well as possessory actions.—Blanchard v. The Martha Washington, Case No. 1,513; The Friendship, Case No. 5,123; Taylor v. The Royal Saxon, Case No. 13,803; The Watchman, Case No. 17,251.

Admiralty has jurisdiction over petitory as well as possessory suits to reinstate owners of ships who have been wrongfully displaced from their possession.—The Tilton, Case No. 14,054.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a possessory libel on a dispute between co-owners of a vessel.—Morgan v. Tapscott, Case No. 9,808.

An admiralty court has no jurisdiction to decree possession of a vessel to persons claiming title by virtue of a mortgage.—The Martha Washington, Case No. 9,148.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit by the mortgagee of a vessel after condition broken to reclaim possession from a purchaser at a sheriff's sale under a judgment against the mortgagor.—The J. B. Lunt, Case No. 7,246.

A court of admiralty has no jurisdiction to try questions of equitable title to vessels, or to enforce the equities between mortgagors and mortgagees of vessels. It can only pass upon the legal title.—The William D. Rice, Case No. 17,691.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel asserting an equitable title to one-fourth of a vessel, and claiming an account of its earnings and the proceeds of its sale.—Kellum v. Emerson, Case No. 7,669.

The mere equitable title will not sustain a libel for possession.—Kynoch v. The S. C. Ives, Case No. 7,958.

Admiralty can only regard the legal title to a vessel, and, in an action between a mortgagee under an unregistered mortgage and a subsequent purchaser, must decide in favor of the latter.—Bogart v. The John Jay, Case No. 1,597.

Admiralty will not decree possession to a libelant claiming under a contract whereby the claimant agreed to sell an interest in the vessel to libelant or any one whom he might designate, after the vessel should have been approved by a third person, as such contract, being still executory, created only an equitable title, of which admiralty will not take cognizance.—Kynoch v. The S. C. Ives, Case No. 7,958.

Admiralty will not enforce the equitable title of one to whom a yacht was sold in the presence of the builder by one for whom she was built, against the legal title, which never passed from the builder by deed or absolute delivery.—The Amelia, Case No. 275; Hill v. The Amelia, Case No. 6,487.

Restoration must be awarded in a possessory action for a vessel upon the legal ownership without regard to collateral equities.—Cole v. The Brandt, Case No. 2,978.

In a possessory action by a mortgagee to recover possession of a vessel, the accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee cannot be adjusted.—The J. B. Lunt, Case No. 7,246; The J. B. Lunt v. Merritt, Id. 7,247.

§ 13. Contracts—Maritime contracts in general.

The provisions of Act Sept. 24, 1789, which give to the district courts original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, comprehended all maritime contracts, and those which relate to the navigation, business, or commerce of the sea, and the building, repairing, or supplying of vessels.—Davis v. A New Brig, Case No. 3,643.

The subject-matter of the contract must be maritime in its nature, to enable an admiralty court to give a remedy.—Cox v. Murray, Case No. 3,304.

Admiralty has jurisdiction over all maritime contracts, wheresoever the same may be made or executed, and whatever may be the form of the stipulations.—De Lovio v. Boit, Case No. 3,776.

It is not essential to the nature of a maritime contract that it be attended by a lien.—The Richard Busteed, Case No. 11,764.

If the subject-matter of a contract concern the navigation of the sea, it is a case of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, although the contract be made on land.—Zane v. The President, Case No. 18,201.

A contract is not within the admiralty jurisdiction unless it is to be performed upon the sea, or has relation to a maritime service.—The Perseverance, Case No. 11,017.

Every contest between the owners and mariners and the owners and builders or equippers of a ship for the navigation of the sea is cognizable in the admiralty.—Stevens v. The Sandwich, Case No. 13,409.

All maritime contracts made by the master within the scope of his authority as master under the maritime law per se hypothecate the ship, and performance, in whole or in part, does not affect the question of jurisdiction generally, or the character of the proceeding, whether in rem or in personam.—The Williams, Case No. 17,710.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction where a maritime contract sought to be enforced is so inseparably connected with a contract over which the court has no jurisdiction that one cannot be decided without disposing of the other.—Turner v. Beacham, Case No. 14,252.

A contract under which money is advanced to purchase a ship, and her bill of sale deposited with the lender by way of security, with a power of attorney to him to sell the ship for his reimbursement, is not cognizable in admiralty.—The Perseverance, Case No. 11,017.

Such contract gives no interest or lien to the vessel, but only a naked power to sell.—The Perseverance, Case No. 11,017.

Admiralty has jurisdiction to enforce the payment of expenses for curing a sick seaman in the course of a voyage.—Harden v. Gordon, Case No. 6,047.

The obligation of a shipper to afford accommodations for the delivery of cargo according to the usage of the port is a maritime contract, for breach of which an action will lie in admiralty.

—Higgins v. United States Mail Steamship Co., Case No. 6,469.

§ 14. —— Affreightment and charter parties.

A contract for the transportation of goods on the high seas is of maritime jurisdiction.—The Huntress, Case No. 6,914.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of action based on contract of affreightment, though damages may be indirect.—The A. M. Bliss, Case No. 274.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel on a charter party under seal for freight due, where no penalty is demanded.—Drinkwater v. The Spartan, Case No. 4,085.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in cases of charter parties for foreign voyages, and may enforce by proceedings in rem the maritime lien for freight thereunder.—In re Certain Logs of Mahogany, Case No. 2,559; The Volunteer, Id. 16,991.

A bill of lading for goods to be transported by sea, though made on land, is a maritime contract, enforceable in admiralty by action in rem. —The Gold Hunter, Case No. 5,513.

The admiralty courts have jurisdiction of a contract of affreightment for the carriage of merchandise from one port or place to another, within the ebb and flow of tide, on a navigable river. It is immaterial whether the vessel or boat by means of which the service is to be performed is propelled by its own motive power, or is towed by another vessel.—Van Santwood v. The John B. Cole, Case No. 16,875.

The width of a stream or length of a voyage is no criterion by which to determine the character of the service, nor the question of admiralty jurisdiction.—The Gate City, Case No. 5,267.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel for freight on goods transported over navigable tide waters lying between two states.—Gaughran v. One Hundred and Fifty-One Tons of Coal, Case No. 5,273.

To give jurisdiction on a contract of affreightment, the chief part of the service under the contract must be to be performed on tide water. —Wallis v. Chesney, Case No. 17,110.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel for freight on merchandise carried in a canal boat 250 miles by canal and only 40 miles on tide water.—Wallis v. Chesney, Case No. 17,110.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of an action on a contract of carriage by canal boat between New York and Rome in New York state.—The Ann Arbor, Case No. 407; Id. 408.

Admiralty has jurisdiction to enforce a contract for the carriage of goods by canal boat from the Buffalo river to New York City, by way of Lake Erie, the Erie Canal, and the Hudson river.—The E. M. McChesney, Case No. 4,463; Id. 4,464.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in rem of a libel for damages under a contract of affreightment to carry goods from Bound Brook, on the Raritan river, to Philadelphia, by the Delaware & Raritan Canal.—Lowry v. The E. Benjamin, Case No. 8,582.

A contract of affreightment between two ports of the same state is within admiralty jurisdiction where the course of the vessel is in part on the high seas.—Carpenter v. The Emma Johnson, Case No. 2,430.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a contract of affreightment, though it is to be performed wholly between ports of the same state.—The Mary Washington, Case No. 9,229.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a contract of affreightment to be performed wholly on navigable water, though entirely within the state. —The Elmira Shepherd, Case No. 4,418.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel in rem for injuries to a cargo carried under a contract of affreightment between New York City and Troy, made between residents of the state. —The Leonard, Case No. 8,256.

A suit in admiralty may be maintained for the nonperformance of a contract for the transportation of merchandise from the city of Albany to the city of New York, on the Hudson river, in a canal boat designed for the navigation of the Erie Canal, and without motive power of its own.—Van Santwood v. The John B. Cole, Case No. 16,875.

Admiralty has jurisdiction, in a case of loss in the course of water transit, of goods shipped from Chicago to Erie by the Lakes, and thence by land to an inland point, under a contract for through transportation.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Erie & W. Transp. Co., Case No. 11,112.

For transporting goods landwise after voyage by water completed, not expressly contracted for in the shipping contract, there is no lien enforceable in admiralty.—Gaughran v. One Hundred and Fifty-One Tons of Coal. Case No. 5,273; In re One Hundred and Fifty-One Tons of Coal, Id. 10,520.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction where the contract of shipment is made on land, and the damage sued for is done in port.—Jones v. The Massachusetts, Case No. 7,480.

Deviation contrary to express agreement is a breach of maritime contract giving the federal courts jurisdiction in rem.—Knox v. The Ninetta, Case No. 7,912.

A verbal contract for the use of a steamboat for excursion trips, at definite times, for definite sums, is a charter, for breach of which admiralty has jurisdiction in personam.—Marshall v. Pierrez, Case No. 9,130.

A contract for the use of a barge at a stipulated rate is cognizable in admiralty, and a libel may be maintained against the steamboat using it.—The Dick Keys, Case No. 3,898; Scott v. The Dick Keyes, Id. 12,528.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a contract by a steamboat, made in connection with the contract to transport goods, to collect the price, freight, etc., from the consignee, and return the balance to the consignor.—The Hardy, Case No. 6,056; The St. Joseph, Id. 12,230.

Admiralty will not take cognizance of a libel for a breach of a contract to purchase a cargo for a vessel with her funds, although such contract is contained in a charter party stipulating for the carriage of the cargo.—Peck v. Laughlin. Case No. 10,890.

Where a master was instructed, in his home port, to sell a cargo at the port of destination according to his judgment, and he landed the cargo there, and proceeded to dispose of it on shore, held, that this was not a maritime contract, cognizable in an admiralty court.—Waterbury v. Myrick, Case No. 17,253.

Where a master so employed abandoned the sale of the cargo in order to effect a salvage service in a vessel procured by pledging the proceeds of the cargo, held, that this was a breach of contract, for which no action lay in a court of admiralty.—Waterbury v. Myrick, Case No. 17,253.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel to recover damages in the nature of demurrage, although there is no stipulation for demurrage in the bill of lading.—Sheppard v. Philadelphia Butchers' Ice Co., Case No. 12,757.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit for breach of a contract for rent of bar privileges thereon.—The Illinois, Case No. 7,005.

§ 15. —— Executory contracts relating to maritime matters.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction over preliminary contracts leading to maritime contracts, irrespective of the name given to them.—The Tribune, Case No. 14,171.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction to enforce specific performance of an agreement relating to maritime affairs.—Davis v. Child, Case No. 3,628; Deely v. The Ernest & Alice, Id. 3,735.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction to entertain a libel for a specific performance of an executory contract of sale.—The Kynoch v. S. C. Ives, Case No. 7,958.

An action in rem cannot be maintained against a vessel for the breach of a contract in refusing to accept materials or supplies to be furnished. Case No. 7,038 reversed.—The Cabarga, Case No. 2,276.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a contract of partnership to engage in maritime commerce.—The Crusader, Case No. 3,456.

A contract to form a partnership to purchase a vessel is not maritime.—Turner v. Beacham, Case No. 14,252.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of matters leading to a charter party or stipulations and representations not embraced therein.—Balchen v. The Eli Whitney, Case No. 792a.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction over contracts leading to policies of marine insurance.—Andrews v. Essex Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Case No. 374.

An executory contract for transportation by, or for the service of, a vessel is not a maritime contract, and does not create a lien on the vessel, and admiralty has no jurisdiction thereof. To make such contract maritime, the vessel must have entered upon its performance.—The Edwin v. Naumkeag Steam Cotton Co., Case No. 4,301; The General Sheridan, Id. 5,319; The Pauline, Id. 10,848; Rynaud v. The Richard Cobden, Id. 12,191; Torices v. The Winged Racer, Id. 14,102; Vandewater v. The Yankee Blade, Id. 16,847; The William Fletcher, Id. 17,692; Hannah v. The Carrington, Id. 6,029. CONTRA, see The Flash, Case No. 4,857; The Pacific, Id. 10,643; Quirk v. Clinton, Id. 11,518. QUERY, see Rich v. Parrott, Case No. 11,760.

A libel in rem will lie for the refusal to receive on board, and the refusal to deliver, cargo contracted by the master to be carried from New York to Brooklyn, where part of the cargo was received on board.—The Flash, Case No. 4,857.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a personal action by a charterer against the owner of a vessel for damages in not proceeding to the port of loading.—Oakes v. Richardson, Case No. 10,390.

Where, under a charter of a vessel, the charterer put a cargo on board, and then took it out and refused to fulfill the charter party, alleging that it had been violated by the owner of the vessel, and the charter party gave to the owner a lien on the cargo for a breach by the charterer, the lien attached as soon as the cargo was put on board, and the owner could libel the cargo in rem in the admiralty for the breach.—The Hermitage, Case No. 6,410.

§ 16. —— Repairs and supplies to vessel.

The district courts of the United States have a general admiralty jurisdiction in rem in suits brought by material men against foreign ships, and in cases of domestic ships where the local law gives a lien.—Wick v. The Samuel Strong, Case No. 17,607.

The question of the right to sue ship or freight or master or owner for supplies or repairs does not depend on the twelfth rule, but on the general admiralty and maritime law.—The Eledona, Case No. 4,340.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of suits in favor of material men.—The Jerusalem, Case No. 7,294.

The jurisdiction in admiralty over a contract for repairs or supplies to a vessel depends upon her character, and not upon the manner in which she is actually employed.—Reppert v. Robinson, Case No. 11,703.

The repair of a canal boat used and navigated on tide waters, although used partly on inland navigation, is a maritime contract, and mechanics and material men may enforce their rights thereunder in admiralty.—McLelland v. The Robert Morris, Cas. No. 8,896.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a claim for repairs to a canal boat navigating the interior canals of a state, and repaired at a point on a river where the tide ebbs and flows.—Boon v. The Hornet, Case No. 1,640.

As the laws of Pennsylvania provide a remedy in the state court for shipwrights and material men at the port of outfit, admiralty will not take jurisdiction of material men's claims at the port of outfit.—Gardner v. The New Jersey, Case No. 5,233.

Admiralty has jurisdiction to enforce a claim for materials and supplies by libel in personam, without regard to the existence of a lien on the vessel therefor.—Schultz v. Bosman, Case No. 12,488.

A contract for repairs in a home port is within the jurisdiction of admiralty as to the person.—Schuchardt v. The Angelique, Case No. 12,483b.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in the case of a contract for repairs or supplies to a domestic ship, to determine to whom the credit was given and who is liable for the amount.—Turner v. Beacham, Case No. 14,252.

A contract made on land by a shipwright to repair a vessel in his shipyard is not maritime, and admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel in personam for negligence or delay in performing it.—Ransom v. Mayo, Case No. 11,571; Ransom v. Mayo, Id. 11,571a.

Under rule 12 of 1845, the admiralty courts have no jurisdiction over suits in personam brought by material men to enforce payment of their claims for supplies furnished at the home port.—Merritt v. Sackett, Case No. 9,484.

When a lien is claimed for labor and materials furnished in fitting out a vessel for sea, the admiralty courts of the United States observe the lex loci contractus, and grant or refuse the remedy sought, according as it is allowed or denied by that law.—The Infanta, Case No. 7,030.

Admiralty jurisdiction over contracts depends principally upon their subject-matter; and in cases of bottomry it is not the absolute necessity of the loan that gives jurisdiction.—The Mary, Case No. 9,187.

Admiralty has jurisdiction over a bottomry bond given by the owner in a home port, where there is an express pledge as security.—The Draco, Case No. 4,057.

Admiralty has jurisdiction over a bottomry bond, when made by the owner, as well as when made by the master.—The Mary, Case No. 9,187.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction to enforce a bottomry bond given in the home port for money not used, and not intended to be used, for the purposes of the voyage.—Knight v. The Attila, Case No. 7,881.

A bond executed as an hypothecation of a vessel, but not upon the principles which govern such security, cannot be enforced in admiralty.—Hurry v. The John & Alice, Case No. 6,925.

§ 18. —— Marine insurance.

A policy of marine insurance is a maritime contract, and therefore of admiralty jurisdiction.—De Lovio v. Boit, Case No. 3,776; Gloucester Ins. Co. v. Younger, Id. 5,487; Hale v. Washington Ins. Co., Id. 5,916.

A contract for wharfage is a maritime contract, and enforceable in admiralty.—The Kate Tremaine, Case No. 7,622; The Ann Ryan, Id. 428; Atlantic Dock Co. v. Wenberg, Id. 622. CONTRA, see Delaware River Storage Co. v. The Thomas, Case No. 3,769; Squires v. The Charlotte Vanderbilt, Id. 13,271.

A claim for wharfage for a period during which a vessel lay sunk in a pier cannot be enforced in admiralty.—Taylor v. The Joseph Walker, Case No. 13,795.

See, further, "Wharves," § 6.

A contract for building a ship or for work or materials used in her construction is not a maritime contract, and admiralty has no jurisdiction thereof.—Allair v. The Francis A. Palmer, Case No. 203; Clinton v. The Hannah, Id. 2,898; The Coernine, Id. 2,944; Foster v. Ellis, Id. 4,968; Ludington v. The Nucleus, Id. 8,598; The Norway, Id. 10,359; Young v. The Orpheus, Id. 18,169. CONTRA, see The Hull of a New Ship, Case No. 6,859; The Charles Mears, Id. 10,766; Read v. Hull of a New Brig, Id. 11,609; The Richard Busteed, Id. 11,764.

Contracts for materials furnished at the home port, in building steamboats and other vessels, are not within Act Feb. 26, 1845, extending the jurisdiction of the district courts to certain cases upon the lakes and navigable waters connected therewith.—Ludington v. The Nucleus, Case No. 8,598.

The district court in admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel in personam against the builder of a vessel, after its delivery, for breach of the written contract under which it was built. Case No. 3,482, reversed.—Cunningham v. Hall, Case No. 3,481.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a claim for damages for refusal to accept boats built under contract with the master of the vessel. Case No. 2,276, reversed. — Ingersoll v. The Carbarga, Case No. 7,038.

A contract to furnish a ship with the means of propulsion, or to change the mode of her propulsion, after she is launched and afloat, is not a contract to build a ship, and is maritime.—The Eliza Ladd, Case No. 4,364.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a contract to furnish materials for the equipment of a vessel after she is launched and afloat on navigable waters.—The Revenue Cutter, No. 2, Case No. 11,714.

Work done in fitting a vessel for navigation after the hull is launched, where it was loaded with flour for ballast, and towed to the place where the work was done, held done in building the vessel.—The Iosco, Case No. 7,060.

It is no objection to admiralty jurisdiction of a claim for negligent towage that the contract of towing was to be performed within the body of the state, or within a harbor.—Leonard v. The Volunteer, Case No. 8,260.

A contract to tow a canal boat in New York harbor is a maritime contract, and gives rise to a lien enforceable in admiralty.—The W. J. Walsh, Case No. 17,922.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel for an injury to a tow from negligent navigation of the tug, in the performance of a contract of towage between Albany and New York.—The Brooklyn, Case No. 1,938.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction in case of breach of towage contract on the Hudson river between Kingston and Albany between residents of New York.—Abbey v. The Robert L. Stevens, Case No. 8.

Towage services on the Great Lakes are maritime.—The Acadia, Case No. 24.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit for services of a tug in hauling off a vessel aground.—The Clarion, Case No. 2,795.

A contract to transport a passenger on the high seas or on tide water is a maritime contract, and within the admiralty jurisdiction both in rem and in personam.—Marshall v. Bazin, Case No. 9,125; Stone v. The Relampago, Id. 13,486.

A contract for an excursion trip by steamer between Philadelphia and Cape May is a maritime contract, and within the admiralty jurisdiction.—Woolston v. The John A. Warner, Case No. 18,033.

A passenger between ports in the same state on a steamer on the Mississippi river making a trip between different states cannot sue in admiralty for injuries sustained as such passenger.—Whitaker v. The Fred Lorents, Case No. 17,527.

A contract for the carriage of a passenger, with stipulations as to the manner in which the vessel should be fitted up, and the number to be carried, is of admiralty jurisdiction in its entirety.—The Pacific, Case No. 10,643.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of an action by a passenger against a steamship for breach of a contract of passage as to the accommodations afforded.—The Hammonia, Case No. 6,006.

A libel by passengers, charging that the master and owners, in disregard of their duty, deprived libelants of reasonable food and drink, and subjected them to cruelties and indignities, states a case of admiralty jurisdiction.—M'Afee v. The Creole, Case No. 8,655.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of an action brought to recover the value of the baggage of a passenger, stolen from her room on board a passenger steamer. — Walsh v. The H. M. Wright, Case No. 17,115.

If services or a contract properly concern a vessel and her owners, they are maritime services, and can be sued against the owners of a domestic vessel in a court of admiralty, or in rem against a foreign vessel.—The George T. Kemp, Case No. 5,341.

The nature of a contract or service, and not the question whether the contract is made, or the service is rendered, on the land or on the water, is the proper test in determining admiralty jurisdiction. — Wortman v. Griffith, Case No. 18,057.

A contract of a special nature is not cognizable in the admiralty merely because the consideration of the contract is maritime service. The whole contract must, in its essence, be maritime, or for compensation for maritime services.—Plummer v. Webb, Case No. 11,233.

Where no materials are furnished or labor bestowed in the refitment or reparation of vessels, services which are entitled to take the rank and character of maritime are such as are performed in aid of the ship's company or the navigation of the vessel, and are rendered while she is afloat upon tide waters.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,097.

To impart a maritime character to personal services rendered in or upon a vessel, they must be connected with the reparation or betterment of the vessel, or be rendered in aid of her navigation directly by labor on the vessel, or in sustenance and relief of those who conduct her operations at sea.—Gurney v. Crockett, Case No. 5,874.

§ 24. —— Services to vessel in port.

Where contracts are made between owners of a vessel and carpenters and others to perform service on land, or within the body of a county, the admiralty has no jurisdiction.—North v. The Eagle, Case No. 10,309.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit by shipping masters to recover for services in procuring a crew to navigate a vessel from one port to another in the same state.—Scott v. The Morning Glory, Case No. 12,542.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a claim for services in hauling a vessel on ways and for a per diem while she is on the ways, and being repaired by another person.—Wortman v. Griffith, Case No. 18,057.

Work done upon a vessel in the dry dock, in scraping her bottom preparatory to coppering her, is not of a maritime character, and compensation for such labor cannot be recovered in admiralty.—Bradley v. Bolles, Case No. 1,773.

Services rendered in compressing cotton in a cotton press for the purpose of arranging the bulk for more convenient carriage and stowage are not maritime in their character.—The Joseph Cunard, Case No. 7,535; United Hydraulic Cotton-Press Co. v. The Alexander McNeil, Id. 14,404.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a claim for wages of a seaman for the time he was engaged in repairing the vessel, which had been sunk in port and raised again.—The M. M. Caleb, Case No. 9,682.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a contract, made between the master of a ship and a cooper, to put the cargo of the ship in landing order, the services being rendered partly on the ship and partly on the wharf, but before the delivery of the cargo.—The Onore, Case No. 10,538.

Services rendered by a fireman on board a British ship while at the dock at Liverpool do not give to the demand for wages a maritime character of which admiralty can take cognizance.—Graham v. Hoskins, Case No. 5,669.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a claim for services in watching a vessel in port while moored to a wharf.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,097; Levering v. Bank of Columbia, Id. 8,287; Russell v. Barkman, Id. 12,151.

A seaman whose wages have been paid up to the end of the voyage, but who remains on board afterwards, while the vessel is moored at the wharf, has no claim for services enforceable in admiralty.—Phillips v. The Thomas Scattergood, Case No. 11,106.

A contract to work at a certain rate per day in port in putting in machinery in a vessel is not a maritime contract, and will not support an action in rem in the admiralty.—Walter v. The Kamchatker, Case No. 17,119.

A person employed to visit a vessel at anchor, from time to time, to see to her safety, ventilate her, try her pumps, and the like, cannot maintain a suit in admiralty to recover his compensation for such services. — Gurney v. Crockett, Case No. 5,874.

Services rendered by one employed to visit a vessel at anchor, from time to time, in getting the vessel under way, and navigating her to another anchorage, are maritime in their character.—Gurney v. Crockett, Case No. 5,874.

The contracts of stevedores for loading or unloading a vessel are maritime in their nature, and admiralty has jurisdiction of claims for services thereunder.—The George T. Kemp, Case No. 5,341. CONTRA, see The Circassian, Case No. 2,722; Paul v. The Ilex, Id. 10,842; The Amstel, Id. 339; Cox v. Murray, Id. 3,304; Coyne v. The Alexander McNeil, Id. 3,312a; Kegan v. The Amaranth, Id. 7,646; Regan v. Same, Id. 11,664; The A. R. Dunlap, Id. 513; The Joseph Cunard, Id. 7,535; McDermott v. The S. G. Owens, Id. 8,748.

§ 26. —— Services connected with navigation.

A contract to sail a vessel in co-partnership for a share of the earnings affords no remedy in rem for wages.—Milne v. Huber, Case No. 9,617; Same v. The John Cook, Id. 9,617a.

A contract relative to services on board a vessel on the sea or within tide waters cannot be enforced in admiralty, unless the service is essentially maritime. — Thackarey v. The Farmer of Salem, Case No. 13,852.

To entitle a person employed on board a vessel to sue in admiralty for wages, the services rendered must contribute to the preservation of the vessel or those employed in her navigation.—Trainer v. The Superior, Case No. 14,136.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit in rem for wages of persons employed on a vessel as musicians.—Trainer v. The Superior, Case No. 14,136.

Services by seamen upon a vessel sailing between Philadelphia and ports on the Chesapeake Bay, employed as laborers to obtain a cargo of oysters for purposes of transplanting, held maritime.—Hart v. The Enterprise, Case No. 6,151.

The pilot, deck hands, engineer, and firemen on board of a steamboat are entitled to sue in the admiralty for their wages.—Wilson v. The Ohio, Case No. 17,825.

A libel in rem cannot be maintained for services in navigating a raft of logs.—Raft of Cypress Logs, Case No. 11,527.

Persons employed to load, navigate, and unload a vessel plying between two adjoining ports principally for the transportation of stone, she being licensed for the coasting trade, and being propelled by sails and the usual apparatus of a coaster, are performing services maritime in their character.—The Canton, Case No. 2,388.

Seamen on a small licensed coasting vessel employed in taking paving stones from Marshfield and Scituate Beaches to Boston have a lien for their wages, enforceable in admiralty.—Lee v. Guardian Life Ins. Co., Case No. 8,190.

Services rendered by the mate and engineer of an enrolled steamer employed in towing vessels in and about a harbor are maritime in their character.—The May Queen, Case No. 9,360.

A contract for services on board a vessel employed in transporting fuel across the Delaware river cannot be enforced in admiralty.—Thackarey v. The Farmer of Salem, Case No. 13,852.

A contract for wages on a voyage between ports of adjoining states on tide water is within the jurisdiction of admiralty, and may be enforced by a suit in rem.—Smith v. The Pekin, Case No. 13,090; Wilson v. The Ohio, Id. 17,825.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel by mariners for wages against a vessel plying on navigable waters entirely within one state.—The Sarah Jane, Case No. 12,349.

The district court has no jurisdiction in rem for seamen's wages for services exclusively within the state.—Brooks v. The Peytona, Case No. 1,959.

A mariner rendering services on board of a vessel carrying coal between Philadelphia and New York upon tide waters, though she be stripped of sails and masts, and be towed by steamboats, may proceed in rem against such vessel for his wages.—The D. C. Salisbury, Case No. 3,694.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a claim for seaman's wages on a voyage between Cincinnati and Pittsburgh on a vessel of more than 10 tons' burden.—Sheckler v. The Geneva Boxer, Case No. 12,735.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit for wages earned in a voyage on a canal connecting navigable lakes in different states, though a small part of the voyage was on public navigable waters.—McCormick v. Ives, Case No. 8,720.

A lien for wages arises from maritime services to a boat plying upon the tide waters of the Hudson river, enforceable in rem in admiralty. —Pierce v. The Victory, Case No. 11,149a.

A hand on board a sloop of over 50 tons plying on the Hudson river, between New York and Catskill, is a seaman, and entitled to sue in personam in admiralty for wages.—Martin v. Acker, Case No. 9,155.

Unless it be shown that the remedy in the local court is doubtful, admiralty may refuse to take jurisdiction of a libel for wages filed by a seaman hired to serve on a small vessel navigating the Hudson river, it appearing that he knew the residence and responsibility of the owner.—The Bolivar, Case No. 1,609.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a contract for the navigation of a boat on the Erie canal from Albany to Rochester, and back to Albany and New York.—Davis v. The Enterprise, Case No. 3,632.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit by a father for wages earned by his minor son by maritime services.—Plummer v. Webb, Case No. 11,233.

A master may maintain a suit in personam in the admiralty for wages, or for compensation in the nature of wages.—Hammond v. Essex Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Case No. 6,001.

The master of a vessel exclusively engaged in navigating the interior waters of one state may maintain a libel in rem for his wages and advances, when a lien therefor is created by the state law.—Whitney v. The Mary Gratwick, Case No. 17,591.

No suit for services performed by the master as a factor, or in any other character except that of master, is cognizable in the admiralty. —Willard v. Dorr, Case No. 17,680.

A contract by the master employing another as nominal master for a particular purpose may be sued on in admiralty as to the wages stipulated, but not as to a further stipulation for an additional sum in case the voyage should be altered or discontinued.—L'Arina v. Manwaring, Case No. 8,089.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in personam as well as in rem for pilotage to, from, and on the sea.—The Anne, Case No. 412.

A contract for pilotage, to be performed wholly within a state, cannot be enforced in admiralty.—Harrison v. The Anna Kimball, Case No. 6,132. CONTRA, see The Wave, Case No. 17,297; Same v. Hyer, Id. 17,300.

Admiralty has jurisdiction notwithstanding pilotage services were rendered under a state law.—The Alaska, Case No. 129.

Congress having adopted the New York laws relating to pilots previous to the passage of the judiciary act, the admiralty courts have no jurisdiction of cases for pilotage services thereunder. Case No. 17,297 reversed.—The Wave v. Hyer, Case No. 17,300.

The claim under a state law for half pilotage on a tender and refusal of services is not a mere penalty, but depends upon a quasi contract, which is maritime in its nature, and admiralty has jurisdiction thereof.—The America, Case No. 289; The George S. Wright, Id. 5,340; The California, Id. 2,312; Banta v. McNeil, Id. 966; The Kalmar, Id. 7,601. CONTRA, see Leitch v. The George Law, Case No. 8,223; Harrison v. The Anna Kimball, Id. 6,132; The Robert J. Mercer, Id. 11,891; Arcularius v. Staples, Id. 509b.

The remedy given by the state law against the consignee is cumulative merely.—The George S. Wright, Case No. 5,340.

Admiralty has exclusive jurisdiction of claims for salvage on the high seas and all public navigable rivers.—Brevoor v. The Fair American, Case No. 1,847; The John Gilpin, Id. 7,345; Williams v. The Jenny Lind, Id. 17,723; Cheeseman v. Two Ferry Boats, Id. 2,633.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in rem to recover for salvage services, though rendered under a contract for a fixed compensation not dependent upon the result.—The A. D. Patchin, Case No. 87; Gager v. The A. D. Patchin, Id. 5,170; The Circassian, Id. 2,723; The Louisa Jane, Id. 8,532; The Williams, Id. 17,710.

Courts of admiralty in the United States have jurisdiction over claims for salvage upon waters within the ebb and flow of the tide, though within the body of a state.—The Wave, Case No. 17,297.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of salvage services on a river navigable from the ocean for vessels of 10 or more tons burden.—Williams v. The Jenny Lind, Case No. 17,723.

Services rendered in raising a floating dry dock are not maritime, and admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit therefor.—Salvor Wrecking Co. v. Sectional Dock Co., Case No. 12,273.

A claim for salvage service in saving a raft of timber may be maintained in a court of admiralty, if there is no local custom making the service gratuitous. — Fifty Thousand Feet of Timber, Case No. 4,783.

The admiralty jurisdiction extends to a salvage suit for services rendered from the land in completion of services rendered by other salvors at sea.—The Huntsville, Case No. 6,916.

The admiralty jurisdiction extends to a salvage suit by a city fire department for services rendered from the land to a burning vessel brought to the city's wharves.—The Huntsville, Case No. 6,916.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in the case of salvage for a retaking on land of property captured by pirates.—Davison v. Seal-Skins, Case No. 3,661.

The jurisdiction of the federal district court in cases of salvage is not confined to American property or to cases occurring in American waters.—Western Transp. Co. v. The Great Western, Case No. 17,443.

Where a tug is hired at a certain sum per day to assist a vessel reported aground, and proceeds to the spot, and returns without having rendered any assistance, the vessel having been floated in the meantime, an action in rem will lie for the stipulated compensation. — The Williams, Case No. 17,710.

See, also, "Salvage," § 58.

§ 29. Liens.

Admiralty has general jurisdiction to enforce all maritime liens.—Davis v. Child, Case No. 3,628; Drinkwater v. The Spartan, Id. 4,085.

Admiralty has jurisdiction over such liens only as arise from work and labor connected with maritime affairs, navigation, or shipping.—Read v. Hull of a New Brig, Case No. 11,609.

Admiralty will take cognizance, under a local law giving a lien on vessels, of all contracts or charges of an admiralty or maritime nature, though no lien was given by the general maritime law; but otherwise as to contracts or charges not of an admiralty or a maritime nature.—Boon v. The Hornet, Case No. 1,640; Griffenberg v. The John Laughlin, Id. 5,811.

Where a shipwright, who has repaired a domestic vessel, retains possession, he has a lien under the common law which admiralty will enforce by proceedings in rem.—The Marion, Case No. 9,087.

A wharfinger's lien cannot be enforced in admiralty against a domestic vessel, as he is not a material man within rule 12, in relation to the liens given by the local law.—Russel v. The Asa R. Swift, Case No. 12,144; The Gem, Id. 5,303.

Where the local law provides for proceedings in rem against domestic vessels, but gives no lien before seizure, admiralty has no jurisdiction, under rule 12, which provides that proceedings in rem may be had in the admiralty courts against domestic ships "when by the local law a lien is given."—The Samuel Strong, Case No. 17,607.

A material man, whose only lien is given by a state law, and has by that law been devested, is not entitled to sue in the United States courts.—The Golden Gate, Case No. 574.

A libel in rem will lie for tolls imposed by a state statute in favor of corporations organized for the improvement of rivers and harbors.—The St. Joseph, Case No. 12,230.

The lien on the ship for wages, given to masters of British vessels by the law of the flag, though not existing under the maritime law, may be enforced in the admiralty courts of the United States.—The Havana, Case No. 6,226.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a claim for state and county taxes assessed against a steamboat.—The Bradich Johnson, Case No. 1,770.

The acceptance of notes as a liquidation of a claim for breach of a charter party, but not in satisfaction thereof, will not bar the admiralty jurisdiction where the notes are surrendered in court for cancellation.—Sheafe v. Kimball, Case No. 12,729a.

An agreement that a wrecked vessel shall be responsible for blocks used in getting her afloat, and for their hire, does not create any hypothecation which admiralty can enforce.—Squire v. One Hundred Tons of Iron, Case No. 13,270.

The equitable lien of a part owner and ship's husband on the share of the other owners for advances and disbursements, if any, will not enable a court of admiralty to take an account and enforce it. Case No. 8,086 reversed.—The Larch, Case No. 8,085.

§ 30. Torts—Maritime torts in general.

For a wrong committed on the high seas or tide waters, for which trespass on the case would lie at common law, admiralty has also jurisdiction.—Smith v. Wilson, Case No. 13,128.

Congress has no authority to legislate in respect to damages done on land within the body of a state by a vessel upon public navigable waters.—King v. American Transp. Co., Case No. 7,787.

Admiralty has jurisdiction over all maritime torts.—West v. The Uncle Sam, Case No. 17,427; Martins v. Ballard, Id. 9,175; The Amiable Nancy, Id. 331; The Martha Anne, Id. 9,146.

Maritime torts, over which admiralty has jurisdiction, are unlawful acts, injurious to others, independent of contract, happening or being committed upon the sea or tide waters.—Philadelphia & Havre De Grace Steam Tow-Boat Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., Case No. 11,085.

The admiralty jurisdiction as to torts depends upon locality, and is limited to torts committed on the high seas, or within the ebb and flow of the tide.—Thomas v. Lane, Case No. 13,902; De Lovio v. Boit, Id. 3,776.

Admiralty courts will take cognizance of cases of collision within harbors and upon rivers where the tide ebbs and flows, although within the body of a county.—The Washington Irving, Case No. 17,242a.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in a cause of collision between vessels when the injury is received in a slip between piers or wharves, where the tide ebbs and flows.—The Lotty, Case No. 8,524.

Admiralty has jurisdiction over cases of collision upon inland canals.—The Monitor, Case No. 9,708.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in the case of a tort committed by collision on an artificial ship canal connecting navigable waters which are within that jurisdiction.—The Oler, Case No. 10,485.

Tort committed upon the Welland Canal connecting Lakes Erie and Ontario, though within the body of Canada, is within admiralty jurisdiction.—Scott v. The Young America, Case No. 12,549.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in cases of collision upon tide waters in Chesapeake Bay or its tributary rivers.—Taylor v. Harwood, Case No. 13,794.

Seizure of a vessel by force in Long Island Sound is a maritime tort, of which the federal courts have jurisdiction in rem and in personam.—The Martha Anne, Case No. 9,146.

Seizure of a vessel in Long Island Sound, under warrant of a justice of the peace of the town of Oyster Bay, for the arrest of persons violating the rights of fishery in that bay, is a maritime tort.—The Martha Anne, Case No. 9,146.

The jurisdiction over marine torts depends upon the locality of the wrong, and not upon its extent or character, or the relation of the person injured.—The Highland Light, Case No. 6,477.

The locality of an injury is the locality of the thing injured, not of the thing causing the injury.—The Maud Webster, Case No. 9,302.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in the case of a tort which originated in port, but did not become a completed act until carried out upon navigable tide waters.—The Yankee v. Gallagher, Case No. 18,124.

If a tort committed partly on land and partly on the high seas be one continued act, admiralty has jurisdiction over the whole matter.—Steele v. Thacher, Case No. 13,348. CONTRA, see The Yankee v. Gallagher, Case No. 18,124.

The district courts in admiralty have jurisdiction of torts committed on the high seas, without reference to the nationality of the parties or vessel.—Bernhard v. Creene, Case No. 1,349.

The master of a scow took, without authority, a lighter lying in a fish pond staked off from the Detroit river, and used it in carrying wood from the shores of Lake St. Clair to the scow, and neglected to return it. Held, that admiralty had jurisdiction in rem for the tort.—The Florence, Case No. 4,880.

The general maritime law gives a lien for a maritime tort upon the offending vessel which travels with the vessel, into whosesoever hands she may go, and irrespective of the place of transfer.—The Avon, Case No. 680.

The proceeding in rem to enforce a lien for damages caused by a collision is not process, or a part of the lex fori.—The Avon, Case No. 680.

A forcible deportation of a citizen to a foreign country in an American ship, commanded by an American master, in pursuance or execution of a sentence of banishment of an illegal and self-constituted body of men, is a marine tort.—Gallagher v. The Yankee, Case No. 5,196; The Yankee v. Gallagher, Id. 18,124.

No damages can be recovered in admiralty for injury to character, etc., by such sentence, or from protracted exile caused by fear to return.—Gallagher v. The Yankee, Case No. 5,196.

The master of the vessel who willingly and knowingly carries such sentence into execution is liable for exemplary damages.—Gallagher v. The Yankee, Case No. 5,196.

A parent may maintain a libel in the admiralty for the wrongful abduction of his child, and carrying him beyond the sea.—Steele v. Thacher, Case No. 13,348; Stephens v. Felt, Id. 13,368; Plummer v. Webb, Id. 11,233.

A libel may be maintained by the father in the admiralty for the consequential damages resulting from an assault and battery of his minor child on the high seas.—Plummer v. Webb, Case No. 11,234.

The fact that the abduction of libelant's son, for service in a voyage on the high seas, began in port, did not prevent the abduction from constituting a maritime tort. The tort was continuing through the entire voyage.—Plummer v. Webb, Case No. 11,233.

Admiralty has jurisdiction to try the question of unlawful seizure of maritime property for taxes or duties.—The North Cape, Case No. 10,316.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel by owners against the master for satisfaction of the damages sustained in consequence of a wrongful capture made by him.—Dean v. Angus, Case No. 3,702.

§ 31. —— Injuries to vessels or other property.

As respects torts, the admiralty jurisdiction depends entirely on the locality, not on the character of the object injured or inflicting the injury.—Simpson v. The Ceres, Case No. 12,881.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a collision between a canal boat and a tug engaged exclusively in harbor service, and occurring upon navigable water, wholly within the body of a county.—The Volunteer, Case No. 16,990.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a collision between a steam tug and a floating dry dock moored to a wharf.—Simpson v. The Ceres, Case No. 12,881.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel against a vessel for damages caused by a collision with a floating bath house.—The M. R. Brazos, Case No. 9,898.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel for injury to a bridge by a vessel.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. The Neil Cochran, Case No. 7,996; The Savannah, Id. 12,384.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of an action for injuries to a vessel by collision with a pier erected, without legal authority, within the navigable channel of a river.—Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Atlee, Case No. 10,341.

A libel for damage to a pier, which avers that the pier is within navigable waters and the ebb and flow of the tide, and does not show that it is part of the land, states a case of admiralty jurisdiction.—New York v. Hichland, Case No. 10,196.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel against a vessel to recover for injuries to a wharf from a collision.—The Ottawa, Case No. 10,616.

The court has no jurisdiction over a claim by a contractor building a lighthouse on a mud shoal for damage caused thereto by being run into by a vessel.—The Maud Webster, Case No. 9,302.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel by the owners of a vessel for collusive spoliation of it, when wrecked under an agreement between the master and a salvor.—Church v. Seventeen Hundred and Twelve Dollars, Case No. 2,713.

The fact that one vessel is engaged in towing another, under a contract for such service, does not change her liability for any negligent navigation, resulting in injury to the tow, from tort to contract, nor deprive the admiralty of that jurisdiction which applies to torts committed on navigable waters.—The Brooklyn, Case No. 1,938.

Admiralty has jurisdiction over a personal tort committed on board a vessel in a harbor where the tide ebbs and flows.—Borden v. Hiern, Case No. 1,655.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a personal tort committed upon tide waters within a local harbor, where connected with other matters within admiralty cognizance.—Thomas v. Gray, Case No. 13,898.

Admiralty has jurisdiction over a tort committed by an officer of the vessel against a seaman on board, in relation to the maintenance of discipline, while the ship is lying in a port of the United States, within the body of a county.—Roberts v. Skolfield, Case No. 11,917.

Admiralty will not entertain suits for merely nominal damages in cases of personal torts, not involving any other subject-matter.—Barnett v. Luther, Case No. 1,025.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in rem for damages for a personal injury caused by a collision between two vessels.—Dunstan v. The R. R. Kirkland, Case No. 4,181; Mendell v. The Martin White, Id. 9,419.

The admiralty has jurisdiction of personal torts to a passenger on the high seas, committed by the master of the ship, and it is immaterial whether such torts be by direct force or consequential injuries.—Chamberlain v. Chandler, Case No. 2,575.

In actions for personal torts, courts of admiralty afford to seamen no remedies and no privileges to which they would not be entitled in courts of common law.—Peterson v. Watson, Case No. 11,037.

The rule that personal actions die with the person does not obtain in admiralty.—The Sea Gull, Case No. 12,578.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit by the father for consequential damages resulting from an assault and battery of his minor child on the high seas, though death resulted therefrom.—Plummer v. Webb, Case No. 11,234.

A right of action for a death caused by wrongful act, given by a state statute, may be enforced in admiralty.—The Highland Light, Case No. 6,477. CONTRA, see Armstrong v. Beadle, Case No. 541.

Damages are recoverable by a libel in rem in admiralty, for the wrongful death of a person, independent of statutory remedy.—Holliday v. The David Reeves, Case No. 6,625.

A husband can recover by a proceeding in rem, in admiralty, against the vessel which caused the death of his wife, for the injury suffered by him thereby.—The Sea Gull, Case No. 12,578.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in action by the wife of a passenger to recover damages for the death of her husband, caused by negligence of the officers of the vessel.—The Charles Morgan, Case No. 2,618.

The district court in admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel for damages for the death of libelant's husband in a collision caused by the negligence of the vessel libeled.—The Towanda, Case No. 14,109.

§ 34. Penalties, forfeitures, and seizures.

The admiralty courts will enforce municipal regulations which affect the equipment, position, or management of vessels within particular jurisdictions.—Vandewater v. Westervelt, Case No. 16,846a.

A libel or forfeiture against a vessel which has been seized upon water navigable from the sea is a civil cause, of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and must be tried to the court sitting as a court of admiralty, without a jury.—The Meteor, Case No. 9,498.

The place of seizure, in maritime offenses, and not the place of committing the offense, gives the court jurisdiction in cases of forfeiture in rem.—The Octavia, Case No. 10,422.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of cases of seizure and forfeiture on tide waters without as well as within the United States, regardless of foreign territorial authority over the place where the seizure was made.—United States v. Arms and Ammunitions, Case No. 14,466a.

An action in rem against the vessel engaged in making an unlawful seizure, and in personam against her master, will lie in admiralty for the tort.—The Martha Anne, Case No. 9,146.

Seizures on water navigable from the sea by vessels of 10 or more tons burden are exclusively cognizable in admiralty.—Cross v. United States, Case No. 3,434.

The restriction in the judiciary act of 1789, confining jurisdiction to waters navigable from the sea by vessels of 10 tons burden or more, applies exclusively to seizures under the laws of impost, navigation, or trade in matters of revenue only.—Western Transp. Co. v. The Great Western, Case No. 17,443.

Goods seized on land are not subject to condemnation and forfeiture in admiralty.—The Ariel, Case No. 527.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel for forfeiture of goods for a fraud on the customs laws, though part of the goods were seized on land.—Two Hundred and Fifty Barrels of Molasses v. United States, Case No. 14,293.

Where, in case of a seizure for violation of the nonimport law, the vessel and part of her cargo were seized in the Delaware river, and part of the cargo after it had been landed, the district court in admiralty has jurisdiction.—Clark v. United States, Case No. 2,837.

The admiralty jurisdiction of the district court in revenue cases extends only to seizures for forfeitures under duty laws, as conferred by Act 1789, § 9.—United States v. Five Hundred Boxes of Pipes, Case No. 15,116.

The penalty of $3 per day given by the act of May 17, 1848, to passengers put upon short allowance of food, must be sued for at law, and admiralty has no jurisdiction.—McAfee v. The Creole, Case No. 8,655.

A suit against a vessel and her master to recover the penalty imposed for failure to enter imported goods on the ship's manifest is a civil case of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.—The Missouri, Case No. 9,652; United States v. The Queen, Id. 16,107.

A vessel may be proceeded against in rem, in the admiralty, to enforce the lien for importing goods not included in her manifest. Act July 18, 1866, § 8.—United States v. The Missouri, Case No. 15,785.

An information in rem on the admiralty side of the district court for forfeiture under the impost laws is proper.—Clark v. United States, Case No. 2,837.

Seizure of the res. before filing of the libel, is essential to jurisdiction under a libel for a penalty or forfeiture. Case No. 9,329 affirmed.—The May, Case No. 9,330.

The want of a seizure prior to the commencement of proceedings in a cause of seizure under the laws of impost, navigation, and trade, under Act 1789, § 9, is fatal to the jurisdiction, though the objection be first taken upon appeal.—The Fideliter, Case No. 4,755.

The district courts, as courts of admiralty, have jurisdiction of the question who are entitled to the proceeds of a seizure as informers or otherwise.—Robinson v. Hook, Case No. 11,956.

The common admiralty jurisdiction extends to all things done super altum mare. The prize jurisdiction embraces the whole question of prize, unrestrained by the locality of capture.—Johnson v. Twenty-One Bales, etc., Case No. 7,417.

A court of common law cannot, even incidentally, decide a question of prize.—Maisonnaire v. Keating, Case No. 8,978.

Admiralty possesses exclusive jurisdiction to ascertain who are the captors in a prize case.—The Dash, Case No. 3,584.

Admiralty has exclusive jurisdiction to entertain suits on ransom bills.—Maisonnaire v. Keating, Case No. 8,978.

Where the subject of litigation depends upon the question of prize or no prize, it is completely within the cognizance of the district courts.—United States v. Bright, Case No. 14,647.

The courts of the United States have jurisdiction over all prizes made in ports, as well as on the high seas, by virtue of the delegation of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.—The Emulous, Case No. 4,479.

District courts are permanent prize tribunals, and take cognizance of questions of prize by virtue of the general jurisdiction.—The Amy Warwick, Case No. 341.

The delegation of admiralty jurisdiction to the federal courts carries with it jurisdiction in prize cases, without any specific mention.—Jennings v. Carson, Case No. 7,281.

The admiralty courts of a neutral nation have no jurisdiction over prize questions arising between belligerents in the case of captures on the high seas.—Findlay v. The William, Case No. 4,790; Hernandez v. Aury, Case No. 6,413.

The prize courts of a belligerent may take jurisdiction of property captured by its cruisers while such property is lying in a foreign neutral port.—The Arabella and The Maderia, Case No. 501.

The jurisdiction of the district court does not extend to the case of a capture on the high seas, by a privateer lawfully commissioned, of the property of an enemy to the sovereign issuing the commission. The case is not altered though the capture should have been originally made by a proscribed privateer.—Castello v. Bouteille, Case No. 2,504.

No suit can be sustained in a neutral tribunal against a lawfully commissioned cruiser brought within its jurisdiction, to recover damages for a supposed illegal capture.—The Invincible, Case No. 7,054.

A French admiralty court having declared that the capture of an American vessel by a French privateer was unlawful, an admiralty court of the United States will entertain jurisdiction of a libel in rem against the French vessel to recover damages for an unlawful seizure.—McGrath v. The Candalero, Case No. 8,809.

Conjunct captures on land of enemy's property by both arms of the service are brought within the prize jurisdiction only by statute.—United States v. Bales of Cotton, Case No. 16,583.

Sale on land in the ports of the United States cannot be prevented by their courts of admiralty, in cases of lawful capture on the high seas, by French privateers duly commissioned.—Moodie v. The Amity, Case No. 9,741.

The act of congress of 1794 (1 Stat. 381) limits the jurisdiction of the district court to a marine league from the coasts or shores, and therefore the district court has no jurisdiction of a libel filed for the restoration of a French vessel captured by an English vessel at a place more than a marine league from the shore, but less than a marine league from certain shoals covered with water, such shoals not being part of the coast or shore.—Soult v. L'Africaine, Case No. 13,179.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of claims by seamen to shares in prizes.—Mahoon v. The Glocester, Case No. 8,970.

Though the capture of an English vessel by a French vessel within the coast-line jurisdiction of the United States during the existence of hostilities between France and England is an offense against the United States as a neutral power, yet, as it is not necessary to bring the captured vessel within the territory of the captors in order to vest the right of property in the captors, admiralty will not entertain jurisdiction of a libel filed by the British owners of the captured vessel for the restoration thereof, as redress of the offense against the United States should be left in the first instance to the executive department of the government.—Moxon v. The Fanny, Case No. 9,895.

The question of jurisdiction in the case of a public armed vessel in the service of a foreign nation libeled by one claiming title thereto may be determined upon a suggestion filed by the district attorney acting under orders of the executive.—McFaden v. The Exchange, Case No. 8,786.

An admiralty court will entertain a libel showing on its face an apparent jurisdiction where there is no opposition.—Skidmore v. The Polly, Case No. 12,923.

At any stage of a proceeding in admiralty until final hearing, the question of jurisdiction is open.—Ward v. Thompson, Case No. 17,162.

Want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the libel should be taken advantage of by demurrer, not by plea.—Knight v. The Attila, Case No. 7,881.

A plea to the jurisdiction can only be interposed by defendant himself in propria persona, and on oath.—Teasdale v. The Rambler, Case No. 13,815.

A plea to the merits in a case of seizure waives any exception to the jurisdiction.—The Abby, Case No. 14.

A stipulation filed to obtain the release of a vessel is not a waiver of the question as to its original liability to seizure in admiralty. Case No. 4,757 affirmed.—The Fidelity, Case No. 4,758.

II. REMEDIES IN PERSONAM AND IN REM, AND MATTERS OF PRACTICE IN GENERAL.

Limitation and laches in suits for seamen's wages, see "Seamen," § 136.

§ 37. Mode and forms of procedure in general.

Admiralty courts have no general jurisdiction to administer relief as courts of equity.—Kynoch v. The S. C. Ives, Case No. 7,958.

Quære: whether a libel of review in the nature of a bill of review in equity will lie in admiralty.—The New England, Case No. 10,151; The Enterprise, Id. 4,497.

A cause of possession, civil and maritime, must be conducted as a proceeding in personam.—Blanchard v. The Cavalier, Case No. 1,508.

The taking of personal security is a waiver of the remedy in admiralty, but, if the security is returned, the liability in personam may be enforced by citation or arrest.—Marshall v. Bazin, Case No. 9,125.

The defect of beginning a former proceeding in admiralty by warrant of arrest against the vessel, instead of summons, is waived by the concurrence of the other party in new proceedings on the same cause of action.—Reed v. The Fanny, Case No. 11,645a.

§ 38. Rules of practice.

The practice of the federal courts in admiralty is governed by the rules of admiralty law found in the English Reports. — United States v. Seven Hundred and Three Casks of Rice, Case No. 16,253b.

A rule of practice established by virtue of an act of congress has the force of a statute.—Scott v. The Young America, Case No. 12,550.

Courts of admiralty, in their practice and modes of proceedings, are even more free from technical rules than courts of equity.—Richmond v. New Bedford Copper Co., Case No. 11,800.

The supreme court has power to regulate the practice of the courts of admiralty, and to frame rules in relation to execution, and other process to be used therein.—Ward v. Chamberlin, Case No. 17,152.

The rules in admiralty are not to be regarded as restrictive, but as enumerative of the more common remedies.—Gates v. Johnson, Case No. 5,268.

The admiralty creates its own forms of proceeding.—The Epsilon, Case No. 4,506.

The district courts in admiralty, in the absence of action by the supreme court, will devise modes of proceeding to enable them to carry into effectual execution any law which they are called upon to administer.—The Epsilon, Case No. 4,506.

§ 39. Grounds of proceeding in personam or in rem.

In salvage cases the court of admiralty may proceed in personam as well as in rem.—The Centurion, Case No. 2,554.

Proceedings in admiralty may be prosecuted for marine torts in rem and in personam.—Arthur v. The Cassius, Case No. 564; McGrath v. Candalero, Id. 8,810; British Consul v. Thompson, Id. 1,899.

The process to enforce the remedy in admiralty for a wrong done or injury incurred by the death of a person may be either in rem or in personam.—The Sea Gull, Case No. 12,578.

The holder of a bill of lading has a remedy in admiralty against the master on his undertaking, or personally against the owners of the vessel, or against the vessel in rem, where the goods shipped on board are not delivered.—The Leonidas, Case No. 8,262.

Where the contract for the carriage of a passenger is broken by the interruption of the voyage, he has an action in rem, as well as in personam, to recover back passage money paid or damages.—Stone v. The Relampago, Case No. 13,486.

The right to proceed in rem does not exclude the remedy in personam.—Brevoor v. The Fair American, Case No. 1,847.

A libel in personam may be maintained in admiralty to recover money awarded to respondent for salvage services by a court without jurisdiction to make such award.—American Ins. Co. v. Johnson, Case No. 303.

Where the depositary of saved property has rendered himself liable for the lien of the salvors, he may be proceeded against in admiralty.—Gates v. Johnson, Case No. 5,268.

A suit in admiralty in personam will lie against the owner of a ship in favor of a shipper who paid salvage to wreckers with whom the master had fraudulently concerted to strand his vessel.—Church v. Shelton, Case No. 2,714.

There can be no suit in rem unless there is a lien on the thing sought to be charged.—Boon v. The Hornet, Case No. 1,640; Willard v. Dorr, Id. 17,679; Beane v. The Mayurka, Id. 1,175.

Where two vessels collide without fault upon the part of either, and one makes a voluntary sacrifice in order to diminish the damage which might otherwise result, no maritime lien for contribution arises in favor of the owners of such vessel, and therefore they cannot maintain a libel in rem against the other vessel, a maritime lien being the foundation of all proceedings in rem.—Beane v. The Mayurka, Case No. 1,175.

There is no maritime lien created by a general average loss, and admiralty has not jurisdiction in rem.—Beane v. The Mayurka, Case No. 1,175.

Though all parties are foreigners, the court within whose jurisdiction the thing is situated has jurisdiction in rem, unless it is brought within the jurisdiction by violation of the sovereign right of another nation.—The Bee, Case No. 1,219.

The remedy of the master for advances for supplies and repairs is in personam.—Bartlette v. The Viola, Case No. 1,083.

The wages of the master of a vessel do not constitute a lien upon the vessel, and he can proceed only in personam for them.—The Grand Turk, Case No. 5,683; The Leonidas, Id. 8,262; Willard v. Dorr, Id. 17,679.

A mate cannot sue in rem for services rendered as captain.—The Leonidas, Case No. 8,262.

The remedy of the master of a vessel to enforce payment for services in performance of pilot's duties is in personam, and not in rem.—Bartlette v. The Viola, Case No. 1,083.

Admiralty cannot enforce a claim for money which has been advanced on the personal credit of the vessel owner or master in a suit in rem.—Maitland v. The Atlantic, Case No. 8,980.

A mortgage or hypothecation of a vessel to secure a bill of exchange given for advances, in which it is stipulated that the lender is not to take the usual marine risks in cases of bottomry and hypothecation, does not give a lien enforceable in admiralty.—Maitland v. The Atlantic, Case No. 8,980.

An hypothecation of vessel by way of a mortgage, for supplies furnished in a foreign port, may be enforced in rem.—The Hilarity, Case No. 6,480.

A libel in rem may be maintained against a sum of money paid into court as compensation for salvage services, where it was alleged that after the money had been so awarded libelant discovered that said services were rendered pursuant to an agreement between the master of the vessel and the salvor that the vessel should be voluntarily wrecked, and the master and salvor divide the salvage award.—Church v. Seventeen Hundred and Twelve Dollars, Case No. 2,713.

A libel in rem cannot be maintained for breach of an agreement between the owners of separate vessels to embark them in a common enterprise in transporting passengers and dividing profits in a mode agreed upon, as such agreement is rather one of consortship, and no mutual liens arise from contracts of consortship, and no suit in rem can be maintained for their enforcement.—Vandewater v. The Yankee Blade, Case No. 16,847.

No libel in rem may be maintained for breach of an executory contract, whereby the libelant was to charter the vessel for the transportation of property.—The Pauline, Case No. 10,848.

A suit in rem will not lie against a vessel chartered to take a cargo for a certain voyage, because her master and owners refuse to take the cargo on board, or to run the voyage. The remedy for such a breach of the contract is against the parties personally.—The General Sheridan, Case No. 5,319.

In the case of a charter party, a suit in rem against the vessel is not maintainable for the misrepresentation or concealment of facts by her master or owner in respect to her tonnage or capacity.—The Eli Whitney, Case No. 4,345.

The widow and son of a hand killed on a steamboat by the negligence of the engineer have a remedy against the owners of the vessel, but not in rem against the vessel. Acts 1838, 1852.—The Highland Light, Case No. 6,477.

Where the possession of movable property has been changed, against the right of the true owner, by a maritime tort, or by the breach of a maritime contract, to which the property was subject, the owner may vindicate his title in admiralty by a proceeding in rem.—Five Hundred and Twenty-Eight Pieces of Mahogany, Case No. 4,845.

A court of admiralty can only proceed in rem against the thing itself, or quasi in rem against the proceeds thereof.—Carson v. Jennings, Case No. 2,464.

Where property in the hands of a third person is arrested, on a claim to a specific lien upon it, that constitutes the suit a suit in rem, whether the third person holds the property as owner of it in his own right or as trustee of the debtor.—Reed v. Hussey, Case No. 11,646.

Proceedings in rem in admiralty cannot be instituted against the individual interest of a part owner in a vessel.—Manhattan Fire Ins. Co. v. The C. L. Breed, Case No. 9,021.

The suit is one in rem, where property in the hands of a third person is arrested on a claim to a specific lien upon it.—Reed v. Hussey, Case No. 11,646.

An action in rem will lie without arrest of the property proceeded against, or its presence within the territorial jurisdiction.—Jones v. The Richmond, Case No. 7,492.

After a vessel has been seized and libeled for forfeiture, the court does not lose jurisdiction to condemn by losing possession of her.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,612.

It is not essential to the jurisdiction of the court on a libel for collision that the marshal should continuously retain the vessel in his custody.—The E. W. Gorgas, Case No. 4,585.

Jurisdiction once acquired by possession of the res is not lost by its subsequent removal beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court without consent of libelant.—Otis v. The Rio Grande, Case No. 10,613.

The right of the admiralty to proceed in rem is cumulative, in many cases, and does not exclude the remedy in personam. A party, however, can have only one satisfaction.—Brevoor v. The Fair American, Case No. 1,847.

An action by seamen for wages is not devested of its character as a proceeding in rem merely because the attachment was levied on the remnants of the vessel after the same had been adjudicated at public auction to a third person with notice.—Reed v. Hussey, Case No. 11,646.

Under the amended twelfth rule of admiralty of May 6, 1872, one who furnishes supplies, etc., to a vessel, domestic or foreign, may proceed in rem against the vessel, or in personam against her master or owner.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,720a.

Parties may have in a court of admiralty the same remedies against the proceeds of property subject to its jurisdiction that they are entitled to against the property itself, in whose hands soever the proceeds may be found.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Case No. 9,981.

A libel in rem cannot be changed into a libel in personam against the owner.—The Young America, Case No. 18,178.

On a libel against a cargo for freight and demurrage, where it is in the hands of a purchaser without notice, freed from the lien, and the consignee appears and admits the claim, the court will turn the proceedings into an action in personam.—One Hundred and Eighteen Sticks of Timber, Case No. 10,519.

Where property had been acquired by agents with full notice of libelant's claim, and on its arrest they intervened by stipulation and answer, held, that the suit might be treated as one in personam against them.—Reed v. Hussey, Case No. 11,646.

Separate and distinct trespasses cannot be joined in the same libel against defendants who are not jointly liable.—Thomas v. Lane, Case No. 13,902.

An allegation founded on an hypothecation of a vessel implied by law for money advanced for repairs, may be united with an allegation on a bottomry bond given for the same consideration.—The Hunter, Case No. 6,904.

A general prize allegation cannot be properly joined with an information on a seizure for the violation of a statute.—The Dimon, Case No. 3,917.

Several demands against the same defendant for breach of the contracts contained in passenger tickets may be united in an action brought by the transferee of such claims in his own name.—Cobb v. Howard, Case No. 2,925; Id. 2,924.

Claims for wages and for moneys advanced to the use of the ship may be united in an action in rem.—The Merchant, Case No. 9,434.

A claim by a seaman against the master for personal damages cannot be joined in the same libel with a claim for the fine imposed by the act of 1840. (5 Stat. 396.)—Knowlton v. Boss, Case No. 7,901.

It was early decided that a libel in rem and one in personam could not be joined in the same suit.—Citizens' Bank v. Nantucket Steamboat Co., Case No. 2,730; Dean v. Bates, Id. 3,704.

Remedies in rem and in personam may ordinarily be sought in one suit, where the vessel and master or owner are conjointly liable.—The Merchant, Case No. 9,434.

A joint action will lie against a vessel in rem and the master in personam on a cause of action for which both are liable.—The Zenobia, Case No. 18,208.

Where a libel is filed for a cause of action upon which both vessel and master may be together liable, the court will not make an order that the libelant elect between the remedy in rem and that in personam, nor that he submit to have either the arrest of the respondent or the attachment against the vessel vacated.—The Zenobia, Case No. 18,208.

A proceeding in rem and a proceeding in personam may be joined in one action, where such joinder is calculated to advance the ends of substantial justice.—The Zenobia, Case No. 18,208.

Parties may join, in one libel, causes of action arising ex contractu and those arising ex delicto, where the causes of action are so united that the same evidence will apply to all.—Borden v. Hiern, Case No. 1,655.

A libel in rem may be joined with a libel in personam for breach of a charter party.—The Aldebaran, Case No. 150; Draper v. The O. C. Clary, Id. 4,071. CONTRA, see Citizens' Bank v. Nantucket Steamboat Co., Case No. 2,730.

An action in rem against goods shipped may be joined with an action in personam against the consignees for freight.—Vaughan v. Six Hundred and Thirty Casks of Sherry Wine, Case No. 16,900; In re Six Hundred and Thirty Casks of Sherry, Case No. 12,918.

A joint action for collision cannot be maintained in rem against one vessel and in personam against the owner of another.—The Young America, Case No. 18,178.

Libelants cannot join in one libel a demand in rem against the vessel for a collision and one in personam against the owners for the same cause.—Ward v. The Ogdensburgh, Case No. 17,158.

An admiralty suit for a collision cannot properly be brought against a vessel in rem, and her owner in personam, unless her owner is also master.—The Richard Doane, Case No. 11,765.

An action of damages, as for asault and battery, against the master of a vessel, cannot be joined in the same libel with an action for wages, if it be excepted to.—Pratt v. Thomas, Case No. 11,377. CONTRA, see Borden v. Hiern, Case No. 1,655.

Under rule 19, a proceeding in rem cannot be joined with a proceeding in personam for salvage of the same goods.—Nott v. Sabine, Case No. 10,366.

The twenty-second admiralty rule requires that in petitory and possessory suits the proceedings shall be jointly in rem and in personam.—Kynoch v. The S. C. Ives, Case No. 7,958.

The joinder of an action for a joint tort against two or more in admiralty with an action for a tort against one separately is bad on objection taken.—Roberts v. Skolfield, Case No. 11,917.

§ 41. Grounds of defense in general.

It is no defense to a libel for failure to deliver goods that no credit is given for freight earned. Such claims should be set up by cross libel.—Maxwell v. The Powell, Case No. 9,324.

§ 42. Place of bringing suit.

The locus rei sitæ gives jurisdiction in suits in rem.—The Ada, Case No. 38.

Cases of maritime torts committed upon navigable waters are cognizable in admiralty within any district where the vessel may be apprehended.—Town v. The Western Metropolis, Case No. 14,114.

A libel in personam is not a "civil suit," within the meaning of section 11, Judiciary Act 1789 (1 Stat. 78), requiring the defendant to be a resident of the district within which suit is brought.—Manchester v. Hotchkiss, Case No. 9,004. CONTRA, see Wilson v. Pierce, Case No. 17,826.

A vessel in the basin at Jersey City moored to piles 40 feet from the dock is within the jurisdiction of the district court for the Southern district of New York.—The Argo, Case No. 515.

A proceeding to limit the liability of a shipowner is properly brought in the district where the stranding, out of which the liability arose, occurred, where the property which such owner seeks to abandon is within such district, and no suit has been instituted in any other district.—The John Bramall, Case No. 7,334.

Jurisdiction in rem in admiralty is exclusive in the district courts, but the suit may be instituted in the district where the res is found, irrespective of where the injury complained of occurred.—Killam v. The Eri, Case No. 7,765.

A libel brought before the right of action is perfected must be dismissed, if duly excepted to on that ground, though such right becomes perfected during the progress of the suit.—The Martha, Case No. 9,144.

An objection that a libel is prematurely brought should be raised on the return day of the warrant of arrest by way of exception.—Furniss v. The Magoun, Case No. 5,163.

An exception that the suit was commenced before the cause of action was matured, not taken until after its maturity, will be considered waived.—Furniss v. The Magoun, Case No. 5,163.

The objection that the suit was prematurely commenced must be raised by plea in abatement or demurrer, to be available where the right of action is perfected before final hearing.—The Isaac Newton, Case No. 7,089.

The giving of assistance in arresting the goods, and subsequently obtaining the same on stipulation, is a waiver of the objection that the libel was filed too soon.—The Salem's Cargo, Case No. 12,248.

A plea to the merits waives any irregularity existing on account of filing the libel at a time when the vessel is not within the district.—St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. The Lake Superior, Case No. 12,244.

Where, in a suit in rem for wages, an answer is filed to the merits, and issue is joined, and the case is brought to a hearing, and proofs are taken on both sides, this is a waiver by the claimant of any right of exception to the regularity of the proceedings of the libelant as to the time of instituting his suit.—The Edward, Case No. 4,289.

Suits for salvage, see "Salvage."
Suits for seaman's wages and lays, see "Seamen."
Suits on maritime liens, see "Maritime Liens."

The statute of limitations of a state is no bar to a suit in admiralty.—Willard v. Dorr, Case No. 17,679; Brown v. Jones, Id. 2,017; Hall v. Hudson, Id. 5,935; Cadmus v. Polhamus, Id. 2,282a.

While the admiralty court is not bound by the local statute of limitations, it is inclined to follow its analogies.—Hall v. Hudson, Case No. 5,935; Cadmus v. Polhamus, Id. 2,282a.

Courts of admiralty govern themselves by the analogies of the common-law limitations of actions.—The Sarah Ann, Case No. 12,342; Jay v. Allen, Id. 7,235; Scammon v. Cole, Id. 12,432.

Independently of any limitations, courts of admiralty will not entertain suits for stale demands.—The Sarah Ann, Case No. 12,342; Willard v. Dorr, Id. 17,680.

There is no fixed rule of limitation in admiralty, but the matter is left to the discretion of the court, to be governed by the facts and circumstances of the case, considered with due reference to the wants and convenience of commerce and the analogies of the local laws of limitation.—The Blenheim, Case No. 1,539; The Harriet Ann, Id. 6,101; Duane v. Goodall, Id. 4,105.

A suit is not barred within the time prescribed by the statute of limitations where there has been no change of ownership.—The Frank Moffat, Case No. 5,060.

In order to maintain the defense of stale claim, it is necessary to allege and prove that the respondents are purchasers in good faith, for a valuable consideration, and without notice of the existence of the claim.—The Melissa, Case No. 9,400. See, also, The Harriet Ann, Id. 6,101.

The statute of limitations is not available to a respondent in admiralty unless it is pleaded.—Brown v. Jones, Case No. 2,017.

Delay pending another case on the same state of facts, arising out of the same transaction, will not render the claim stale.—Jones v. The Richmond, Case No. 7,492.

A demand against a vessel for loss of freight is not barred by lapse of time, where it appears that the demand was prosecuted on the first arrival of the vessel within the district where the cause of action arose.—The Blenheim, Case No. 1,539.

A libel for loss of goods filed two years and ten months after the loss, and after a bona fide assignee of the shipper's bill of lading had seized the boat, cannot be maintained, though the boat has been released on bond.—The Favorite, Case No. 4,696.

Twelve years' delay, unexplained, will affect a demand with the imputation of staleness.—Willard v. Dorr, Case No. 17,680.

Two years' delay to enforce a claim against a vessel, which in the meantime was repeatedly within the jurisdiction of libelant's residence, held to bar the claim as against a mortgagee without notice under a mortgage made nine months after the cause of action had accrued.—Griswold v. The Nevada, Case No. 5,839.

A claim against a resident master for supplies to foreign vessel held not lost by seven years' delay to enforce it, where his absence prevented service of process.—Cadmus v. Polhamus, Case No. 2,282a.

A claim for damages for collision held barred by a delay of over six years where the vessel was for more than a year after the collision within the district in which the owner has continuously resided.—Smith v. Sturgis, Case No. 13,111.

Where a vessel owned in New Jersey became subject to a lien for damage by collision to a vessel owned in Boston, and afterwards came within the district of Boston on three voyages, one of which arrivals was known to the libelants, and was then, nearly four years after the collision, sold to bona fide purchasers without notice, held, that a libel in rem, filed four years and one month after the collision, was too late.—The D. M. French, Case No. 3,938.

A libel verified in 1870, but not filed until 1873, for a collision occurring in 1868, will be dismissed on account of its staleness, no excuse being shown for the delay in bringing suit.—The Columbia, Case No. 3,036.

An objection that the demand in suit is stale or barred by the statute of limitation cannot be made without being properly stated in the pleadings.—The Swallow, Case No. 13,665; The Platina, Id. 11,210; Jones v. The Richmond, Id. 7,492.

§ 45. Pendency of other proceeding.

A suit in personam in a state court, by the consignee against the vessel owner for nondelivery, cannot be pleaded in abatement to a suit in rem in admiralty for the same cause.—The Prince Albert, Case No. 11,426.

The pendency of a replevin suit in a state court to settle the right of property in a vessel will be held to bar a libel in admiralty to settle the same right between the same persons.—Taylor v. The Royal Saxon, Case No. 13,803.

A court of admiralty will not order a salvage suit to be set aside or to be stayed because there is pending in a court of law an action of replevin for the salved property, brought by the owner against the salvor, and in which the validity of the salvor's lien upon the property may be determined.—A Raft of Spars, Case No. 11,528.

The claimant in an answer to a libel for engineer's wages alleged that, prior to the commencement of the suit, it had commenced an action against libelant in another court to recover damages for injuries to the steamboat on which libelant was employed, caused by the misconduct of libelant, and caused a garnishee process to be served on the master and sometime owner of the boat, during the period that libelant was employed as engineer. Held, that the answer was impertinent, as it did not appear that the court in the alleged pending suit had acquired jurisdiction of the libelant.—The Pioneer, Case No. 11,176.

The fact that libelant brought a suit in the state court for the same cause of action, which he voluntarily discontinued, will not prevent a suit in admiralty.—Bingham v. Wilkins, Case No. 1,416.

The objection that a prior suit for the same cause of action is pending in a state court can only be taken in a suit in rem in admiralty by a dilatory or declinatory exception, under rule 76, and not by plea in abatement.—The Prince Albert, Case No. 11,426; Certain Logs of Mahogany, Id. 2,559.

After a decision for libelants in rem for freight and demurrage, it cannot be objected that freight has been found due libelants in a pending suit in personam.—Brookman v. Sixty Barrels of Molasses, Case No. 1,941a.

§ 46. Set-off, counterclaim, and cross suit.

There is no general doctrine of set-off recognized in admiralty; and, if the damages set up by respondent exceed libelant's demand, there can be no decree for the balance, nor any subsequent suit therefor.—Snow v. Carruth, Case No. 13,144.

Courts of admiralty do not take notice of set-offs, except so far as they grow out of a maritime contract, submitted to its cognizance, and then principally by way of diminishing compensation, and not as an independent right.—Willard v. Dorr, Case No. 17,680.

Admiralty does not take cognizance of set-off, but allowances may be made to the master or owner by rebatement of wages in compensation of losses or injuries incurred by them in consequence of negligence or fault of the mariner in the performance of his duties.—The Hudson, Case No. 6,831.

As the seventh amendment to the constitution of the United States preserving the right of trial by jury excludes admiralty jurisdiction over contracts regulated by the common law, no set-off (not otherwise within admiralty jurisdiction) is allowable on a libel for seamen's wages, unless it is a payment on account thereof.—Bains v. The James & Catherine, Case No. 756.

Quære, whether the civil-law action of reconvention, or the remedy of compensatio or stoppage, may be had in admiralty.—The Hudson, Case No. 6,831.

On a libel for freight, the consignee may set up, by way of recoupment, a claim for damages to the goods; but, if the damage exceeds the claim for freight, he can have no decree for the excess, nor can he subsequently maintain a suit therefor.—Snow v. Carruth, Case No. 13,144; Kennedy v. Dodge, Case No. 7,701.

Respondent may, at his election, file a cross libel for such damage, instead of setting it up by way of recoupment, and in such case may have a decree for the excess.—Snow v. Carruth, Case No. 13,144; Kennedy v. Dodge, Case No. 7,701.

A charterer who sets up a neglect of duty by the shipowner merely to repel a claim for demurrage is not thereby prevented from maintaining a cross libel for damages sustained by such neglect.—Nichols v. Tremlett, Case No. 10,247.

A cross action cannot be maintained which seeks a retrial of matters already adjudicated between the parties.—The Navarro, Case No. 10,059.

Nor is this rule varied when the subject-matter is the same, although one action be in rem and the other in personam; the thing sued being regarded in admiralty as substituted for its owner, and, when subject to his responsibilities, entitled at the same time to his immunities.—The Navarro, Case No. 10,059.

Adm. Rule 54, providing that whenever a cross libel is filed the respondents in the cross libel shall give security in the usual amount, and that all proceedings upon the original libel shall be stayed until such security shall be given, was not intended to give jurisdiction on a cross libel in rem without seizure of the vessel.—The Bristol, Case No. 1,889.

On a libel for freight on coal, compensation for carting it to consignee's coal yard, for which there is no lien in admiralty, may be charged against advances made by consignee.—Gaughran v. One Hundred and Fifty-One Tons of Coal, Case No. 5,273.

Debts or liabilities of seamen to the master or owner of a vessel for other cause than for misfeasance or nonperformance in the duties of their position cannot be set up against their demand of wages.—The Hudson, Case No. 6,831.

In an action by a seaman to recover wages, the court cannot compel the seaman to apply towards his wages a sum in his hands as acting captain which remained after the sale of part of the cargo belonging to claimants, as, in an action against a vessel, the court cannot take cognizance of collateral equities to enforce them against the parties personally.—The Leonidas, Case No. 8,262.

Former owners of tug libeled for negligence may file a cross libel under the fifty-third rule, and have proceedings stayed until security given.—The George H. Parker, Case No. 5,334.

Adm. Rule 53, requiring respondents in a cross libel to give security to respond in damages as claimed therein, applies as well to actions in rem as to those in personam.—The Toledo, Case No. 14,077.

The cross libelant must act promptly. A motion for security, made upon the eve of trial, and after the witnesses had been summoned, and case was ready to proceed, comes too late.—The George H. Parker, Case No. 5,334.

§ 47. Consolidation.

Causes of action of a like nature, involving substantially the same questions arising out of a collision, though against different vessels, may be consolidated in admiralty.—The Burke, Case No. 2,159.

§ 48. Stay of proceedings.

In the case of three litigations against a vessel or its owners, involving title to the same property, brought in different courts, the proceedings in one were stayed unless libelant should elect to stay proceedings in the others.—The Idaho, Case No. 6,996.

It is in the discretion of an admiralty court to stay proceedings under a libel until libelant, being out of the jurisdiction, shall enter appearance to a cross libel.—Nichols v. Tremlett, Case No. 10,247.

The taking of notes and mortgages from the owners as collateral security after the seizure and bonding of the vessel held not to operate to stay the suit nor discharge the surety.—The Maggie Jones, Case No. 8,947.

In the case of a libel in personam against the owners of a foreign ship for injuries by collision, where such owners sought the benefit of the rule of the general maritime law permitting them to abandon their vessel and freight, held, that an injunction should be granted against the prosecution of the libel in personam, providing that the vessel owners, who were nonresidents and could not be served with process, should first enter their appearance.—Churchill v. The British America, Case No. 2,715.

A libelant has the right, at any stage of the cause, voluntarily to discontinue the same on payment of costs.—The Oriole, Case No. 10,573.

On a libel to recover possession of a vessel wrongfully taken from the owner, brought against the wrongdoer and a purchaser from him in possession, where no decree for damages is asked against the wrongdoer, the libel against him will be dismissed without costs.—Thurber v. The Fannie, Case No. 14,014.

If a court of equity would not dismiss a case because some of the joint plaintiffs refused to proceed, a court of admiralty would not dismiss a libel under similar circumstances.—Richmond v. New Bedford Copper Co., Case No. 11,800.

The libel was dismissed for delay in prosecuting the same, where libelant refused the option of going to trial on the libel and answer and replication filed on the day appointed for the special hearing.—Douglass v. The Washington, Case No. 4,033.

Upon a tender of the accrued costs by a libelant on the voluntary dismissal of his libel, the court will not, upon the application of claimant, inquire into damages caused him by an unfounded arrest of the ship.—The Oriole, Case No. 10,573.

On the voluntary dismissal of a libel, and tender of the accrued costs by the libelant to claimant, the court will not entertain a motion to compel the libelant to file additional stipulations in the cause, and that the court award out of such securities an indemnity to claimant for the wrongful prosecution of the action.—The Oriole, Case No. 10,573.

A possessory suit being discontinued, no appearance having been entered, the marshal was directed to discharge the vessel, and libelant assumed possession. Held, that the court had no further jurisdiction in such suit, and could not direct the marshal to restore the vessel to the persons from whom he took it.—The Jack Jewett, Case No. 7,121.

III. PARTIES, PROCESS, CLAIMS, AND STIPULATIONS OR OTHER SECURITY.

Proceedings supplementary to execution against stipulators, see "Execution," § 23.

§ 50. Capacity to sue or be sued in admiralty.

A person who, from incapacity of mind or other cause, cannot be made to understand the English language, cannot be a party to a sworn libel. He should sue under the guardianship of a committee, a prochein ami, or a trustee.—Sunday v. Gordon, Case No. 13,616.

If it appears from the libel that the libelant is not entitled to sue, the respondent may demur; but if the incapacity does not appear, but exists in fact, he must plead in bar.—Knight v. The Attila, Case No. 7,881.

A minor may recover wages as a seaman in his own name when the contract was made personally with him, and it does not appear that he has any parent, guardian, or tutor entitled to receive them.—The David Faust, Case No. 3,595.

A minor may recover his wages as seaman upon a libel promoted by his father as prochein ami, where the father has agreed that the son may receive his own wages.—Davis v. The Seneca, Case No. 3,651.

Admiralty will interpose to protect the rights of a minor suing by his prochein ami against the misconduct of the latter, and will hold the acts of the latter to be of no effect in the case of bad faith or collusion.—The Etna, Case No. 4,542.

In an action by a minor to recover wages as seaman, the respondent is not entitled to require the appointment of a guardian ad litem or next friend for the libelant.—Wicks v. Ellis, Case No. 17,614.

§ 51. Libelants—Who may sue in general.

A carrier can maintain an action in admiralty for damage done to goods in his care.—The St. John, Case No. 12,224.

A purchaser who has been put in possession, though he has no bill of sale, may maintain a possessory suit in admiralty.—Thurber v. The Fannie, Case No. 14,014.

The fact that the owners of a vessel in possession have placed the title temporarily in another, to secure moneys borrowed to pay her purchase price, will not prevent their maintaining a libel for collision.—Messena v. The Neilson, Case No. 9,493a.

A libel by a firm of three members against a vessel in which two of them owned an interest cannot be maintained.—The Benton, Case No. 1,334.

It is not a valid objection that proceedings were brought in the firm name by the surviving partner, if he is the real party in interest.—Byrnes v. The Rockaway, Case No. 2,274.

§ 52. —— Assignee or transferee of cause of action.

In admiralty, suits may be brought by the assignee of a chose in action in his own name.—Cobb v. Howard, Case No. 2,924; Swett v. Black, Id. 13,690; Cohan v. The Rolling Wave, Id. 2,959a.

The right to sue in admiralty to enforce a claim for supplies and repairs to a vessel is personal, and cannot be maintained for the benefit of an assignee of a duebill or promissory note given to secure the claim.—Reppert v. Robinson, Case No. 11,703.

The lien of a material man is assignable, and, where the assignment is absolute, the assignee should proceed in admiralty in his own name.—

The Sarah J. Weed, Case No. 12,350; Cohan v. The Rolling Wave, Id. 2,959a.

The assignee of a seaman's claim for wages cannot enforce the same in rem in admiralty.—Logan v. The Æolian, Case No. 8,465; Rusk v. The Freestone, Id. 12,143; Patchin v. The A. D. Patchin, Id. 10,794.

An action in personam for breach of a contract contained in a passenger ticket may be brought by the transferee of the ticket in his own name.—Cobb v. Howard, Case No. 2,925; Id. 2,924.

A suit in the name of an assignor of the bond may be maintained, where the assignee appeared and filed a supplemental libel, which was duly answered.—Burke v. The M. P. Rich, Case No. 2,161.

Insurers who pay the claims upon their policies are subrogated to the rights and remedies of the insured, and may proceed in admiralty in their own names.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Case No. 9,981.

Where the seaman obtains a common-law judgment, which he sells, no libel can be maintained thereupon, either by himself or for the benefit of the assignee.—The Gate City, Case No. 5,267.

In suits for seaman's wages, see "Seamen."

Parties whose interests rest upon a cause of action common to all may unite in the same libel in admiralty, though as between themselves their interests are separate and distinct.—American Ins. Co. v. Johnson, Case No. 303.

Where several persons have causes of action of a like nature, involving one or more questions common to all against a vessel, all may join in one libel.—Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. The Tangier, Case No. 12,267.

In suits in rem in admiralty, all persons having claims of a like nature against the thing may join in a single libel for the purpose of having that question decided, whether the claims arise from tort or contract.—The Young Mechanic, Case No. 18,182.

All the privileged creditors may unite in one libel, or, if a libel has been filed by any one separately, then others may come in by petition and make themselves parties to the suit.—The Hull of a New Ship, Case No. 6,859.

Where the vessel is liable to two libelants for wages, for which, under the practice of the court in respect to the consolidation of suits, they may be compelled to sue in common, they may join in one action in rem, not only in suing for the common demands, but also in respect to other claims which are peculiar to each.—The Merchant, Case No. 9,434.

A libel in personam, resting upon a common cause of action, may be filed for the libelants and for all others interested, whenever the whole subject-matter can be disposed of in one suit.—American Ins. Co. v. Johnson, Case No. 303.

All the owners of a vessel injured by a collision should be joined as libelants.—The Richard Doane, Case No. 11,765.

Ten out of thirteen owners, having a majority of the shares in a ship, may bring a suit in the name of all the owners; but the suit will be stayed until the other owners are indemnified for costs.—Richmond v. New Bedford Copper Co., Case No. 11,800.

Seamen suing for wages cannot be made colibelants with the holders of a bottomry bond.—Jaurekhe v. The S. G. Troop, Case No. 7,231.

A seaman claiming both wages and moneys advanced to the ship's use may join in a libel in rem with another seaman claiming wages only, but not in a libel in personam.—The Merchant, Case No. 9,434.

Where two whalers are under a contract of mate-ship, there is no such joint property in a whale taken by one of them as requires the owners of both to join in an action for its tortious conversion.—Taber v. Jenny, Case No. 13,720.

A claim for wages, and for moneys advanced to the use of a vessel on the part of one libelant, cannot be joined, in an action in personam, with a separate claim for wages alone, on the part of another.—The Merchant, Case No. 9,434.

The name of any party who has lost his interest in the suit can, on a proper application, be stricken from the record.—The Falcon, Case No. 4,618.

A motion by libelants to strike from the record as a party libelant the name of a person who is a mere agent will be granted where it does not appear that respondent will be deprived of any means of defense thereby.—Thompson v. The Jachin, Case No. 13,959.

Where part of the owners of a vessel brought an action in the name of all, held, that the nonconsenting owners could not have their names stricken out, but were entitled to have the suit stayed until they were indemnified for costs.—Richmond v. New Bedford Copper Co., Case No. 11,800.

An action for a joint tort against two or more cannot, in the admiralty, be united with a tort against one separately, if the objection be taken.—Roberts v. Skolfield, Case No. 11,917.

The master and owners of a whaling ship are not liable to be sued jointly by a seaman for his lay or share.—Matern v. Gibbs, Case No. 9,273.

A person who has no interest, in a legal sense, in the subject-matter of a suit in personam, and who is not a party to it, cannot compel the plaintiff to make him a party defendant.—Coleman v. Martin, Case No. 2,985.

The nonjoinder of proper respondents in an action in personam in admiralty can be taken advantage of only by plea in abatement.—Reed v. Hussey, Case No. 11,646.

A decree may be made against a defendant named in the body of the libel though he is not named in the prayer for relief.—Nevitt v. Clarke, Case No. 10,138.

§ 56. Property subject to process.

When property has been sold or otherwise disposed of, so that it cannot be reached in specie by the process of a court of admiralty, the process may be enforced against the proceeds.—The George Prescott, Case No. 5,339.

A sheriff's levy under an attachment is terminated by an order of the state court appointing a receiver of the debtor; and a seizure by the marshal, then in possession, with the sheriff's consent, under admiralty process, becomes legal.—The Roslyn, Case No. 12,068.

§ 57. Process against the person.

Where a libelant procured the arrest of respondent in a suit brought in a district different from that in which they both resided, upon a stale demand, of small amount, and which was already in litigation between the parties in the courts of the state in which they dwelt, it was held, that the respondent ought to be discharged from the arrest.—Martin v. Walker, Case No. 9,170.

The nonimprisonment act of New York (1 Rev. St. p. 807, § 1) does not, by force of acts of congress of Feb. 28, 1839, and Jan. 14, 1841, embrace arrests upon process issued out of maritime courts.—Gardner v. Isaacson, Case No. 5,230; Marshall v. Bazin, Id. 9,125.

Act Aug. 23, 1842 (4 Stat. 518, § 6), conferring upon the supreme court power to regulate the practice of the circuit and district courts, taken in connection with the rules promulgated by the supreme court under that act, in 1845, operates as a suspension of the acts of congress of 1839 and 1841, abolishing imprisonment for debt on process issuing out of the United States courts in all cases where, by the local law, it would be abolished.—Gaines v. Travis, Case No. 5,180; Hodge v. Bemis, Id. 6,557.

And since the adoption of the rules of 1845 parties are liable to arrest and imprisonment on process issuing out of the United States courts, irrespective of subsequent legislation in the several states abolishing imprisonment on like process.—Gaines v. Travis, Case No. 5,180.

Since the promulgation of the supreme court rules of 1850 abolishing arrests on admiralty process, where, by the state laws imprisonment for debt has been abolished, a warrant of arrest sued out without the special order of the judge is nugatory and void.—Van Stratton v. Borbock, Case No. 16,876a.

Since the adoption by the supreme court, in 1850, of rule 48, there has been no imprisonment for debt upon an execution in admiralty in New York.—The Kentucky, Case No. 7,717.

Act March 2, 1867 (14 Stat. 453), making arrests for debt, whether on mesne process or execution, depend upon the laws for similar arrests in the states respectively, applies to admiralty proceedings.—Louisiana Ins. Co. v. Nickerson, Case No. 8,539. CONTRA, see Hanson v. Fowle, Case No. 6,041.

A respondent arrested must remain in custody until he gives bond or stipulation to satisfy the decree made against him. Rule 3.—Gardner v. Isaacson, Case No. 5,230.

The words "civil suit" as used in § 11 of the judiciary act of 1789, do not embrace admiralty proceedings, and a libel may be filed against a person not residing in the district or not found therein, or against a foreign corporation, and property within the district attached to compel appearance.—Atkins v. Fibre Disintegrating Co., Case No. 600; Bouysson v. Miller, Id. 1,709; Casey v. Leary, Id. 2,497; Clarke v. New Jersey Steam Nav. Co., Id. 2,859; Cushing v. Laird, Id. 3,508; Dyer v. National Steam Nav. Co., Id. 4,225; Manchester v. Hotchkiss, Id. 9,004. CONTRA, see Atkins v. Fibre Disintegrating Co., Case No. 602; New England Ins. Co. v. Detroit & C. Steam Nav. Co., Id. 10,154; Wilson v. Pierce, Id. 17,826.

An attachment of the property of a respondent who is not an inhabitant of the United States, and is not found in this district, is allowable under rule 2, providing that in suits in personam the mesne process may be by warrant of arrest of the person, with a clause that, if defendant cannot be found, his goods and chattels may be attached to the amount sued for, etc.—Cushing v. Laird, Case No. 3,508.

The rule of the district court of Massachusetts, in admiralty, adopted in 1845, that a warrant to attach the goods and chattels, or, in default thereof, the credits, of the defendant, may be granted in cases in which an arrest cannot legally be made, was within the power of the court.—Louisiana Ins. Co. v. Nickerson, Case No. 8,539.

Courts of admiralty have authority to issue a warrant of arrest with a clause that, if defendants cannot be found, their goods and chattels, credits and effects, in the hands of parties named, shall be attached.—Trask v. Pelletier, Case No. 14,146.

Such writ will be set aside as to parties served who are not named therein.—Trask v. Pelletier, Case No. 14,146.

§ 59. —— When lies, and property subject to.

Where, in a suit in personam, a respondent cannot be arrested, a foreign attachment may issue against his property in the hands of a third person to compel his appearance.—Reed v. Hussey, Case No. 11,646.

By a rule in the district of Massachusetts, a warrant to attach the goods and chattels, or, in default, the credits, of defendant, may be granted in cases in which an arrest cannot legally be made.—Louisiana Ins. Co. v. Nickerson, Case No. 8,539.

Foreign attachment in admiralty lies in cases of tort.—Barnes v. Steamship Co., Case No. 1,021.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in rem in cases of marine torts where the person or thing is within the territory, and may issue a foreign attachment to arrest the choses in action of the offending party.—The Invincible, Case No. 7,054.

Where the marshal arrests the respondent, and also attaches his property on a warrant in the alternative, the attachment must be set aside.—Grace v. Evans, Case No. 5,650.

A writ of foreign attachment in aid of a libel in personam to recover less than $500, issued without direct sanction of the court, is irregular, and will be discharged, under rule 28.—Van Stratton v. Borbock, Case No. 16,876a.

Rule 28 of the district court is not rescinded by supreme court rule 7, prohibiting employment of the writ of foreign attachment in aid of demands exceeding $500 without authority of the judge.—Van Stratton v. Bordock, Case No. 16,876a.

In admiralty the debtor's property in the hands of a third person or the credits due to the debtor by another may be attached or garnished to compel his appearance.—Smith v. Miln, Case No. 13,081; Lee v. Thompson, Id. 8,202.

Property purchased bona fide by the holder of it is not subject to a foreign attachment.—Reed v. Hussey, Case No. 11,646.

§ 60. —— Procedure.

For a marshal to attach goods without any endeavor to find and serve personally the defendants when they are to be found within the district, is an abuse of the process of the court, and the attachment cannot be sustained.—International Grain Ceiling Co. v. Dill, Case No. 7,053.

Third persons claiming ownership of a vessel seized on process of foreign attachment may move to amend the marshal's false return of "not found," though they have given bond for release.—International Grain Ceiling Co. v. Dill, Case No. 7,053.

A foreign attachment in admiralty may be directed against goods or rights and credits of the debtor, and be carried into operation by actual arrest of goods, when they can be found, or by notice of the object of the proceedings to those who have either or both in their possession.—Smith v. Miln, Case No. 13,081.

Although the process of foreign attachment in admiralty is not borrowed from the custom of London, yet admiralty courts may recur to the practice of the latter courts for explications of the methods by which the common design may be best effected.—Smith v. Miln, Case No. 13,081.

The warrant for process served upon the garnishee in a suit prosecuted by foreign attachment must contain a notice of the claim, citing him to appear and answer, to authorize the proceeding to be carried on against him personally.—Smith v. Miln, Case No. 13,081.

When the service of a foreign attachment in admiralty is by notice to the garnishee, and not by actual levy upon the goods, it must necessarily be shown to the court, before any order can be taken against the garnishee, that he has been warned of the remedy which the process demands, and for what cause, and the time and place he must appear before the court.—Smith v. Miln, Case No. 13,081.

Rule 37 of the supreme court, providing that if defendant cannot be found the officer may attach his goods, or if such property cannot be found his credits and effects in the hands of garnishees may be attached, does not authorize service of process in garnishment without a notice or citation to the garnishee.—Smith v. Miln, Case No. 13,081.

Adm. Rule 29, requiring a garnishee on the attachment of the goods of a debtor in his hands to file his affidavit, giving a full statement of the property in his hands or to pay it into court, does not authorize the service of process in foreign attachment without a notice or citation to the garnishee as part of the process.—Smith v. Miln, Case No. 13,081.

Personal service on the garnishees of a process, containing a clause of foreign attachment, and a notice of what the process demanded, and for what cause, and of the time and place when the garnishees must appear and answer, is a sufficient attachment of any credits and effects of the respondent in their hands.—Cushing v. Laird, Case No. 3,508.

The duty of a garnishee on appearance is to discharge himself of the effect of the citation by showing that he holds nothing belonging to the debtor, or by specifying exactly what it is, and submitting himself in respect thereto to the court; or he may contest the justness or amount of the libelant's demand.—Smith v. Miln, Case No. 13,081.

It is the right and duty of a garnishee in admiralty to put in an answer, which libelant has no right to contest.—Shorey v. Rennell, Case No. 12,807.

After execution against effects or credits in the hands of a garnishee in admiralty, and a refusal by him to pay, he cannot then discharge himself by putting in an answer.—Shorey v. Rennell, Case No. 12,807.

§ 61. —— Effect of appearance or default.

On the appearance of defendant after attachment of their property on a warrant of arrest, the attachment must be discharged.—Essler v. Worth, Case No. 4,533a.

If defendant fails to appear, the attached property will be held until final decision, when it may be proceeded against by execution.—Essler v. Worth, Case No. 4,533a.

Where a warrant of arrest contains a foreign attachment clause, but gives no direction to bring the garnishee before the court, nor any citation to him to answer the libel, the primary purpose of the attachment is to effect the appearance of the defendant in the action, and not that of the garnishee, and therefore a default entered against the garnishee for nonappearance on the return of the process is irregular.—Smith v. Miln, Case No. 13,081.

When a foreign attachment proceeding is for the purpose of bringing defendant into court, and he makes default on proclamation, a scire facias issues against the garnishee.—Smith v. Miln, Case No. 13,081.

On default of one summoned as garnishee, libelant is not entitled to execution in personam against him.—McDonald v. Rennel, Case No. 8,765.

On the default of a garnishee in admiralty, execution does not go against him personally in the first instance, but only against the credits or effects of the principal in his hands.—Shorey v. Rennell, Case No. 12,807.

On the default of a garnishee in admiralty, the libelant may have compulsory process to obtain an answer. But if he needs no disclosure, and can show by affidavits that the garnishee has effects or credits in his hands, execution may issue against them without requiring an answer.—Shorey v. Rennell, Case No. 12,807.

After default by the garnishee the court has a discretion to allow him to answer upon terms.—Shorey v. Rennell, Case No. 12,807.

After such default, the garnishee is not entitled as of right to put in an answer, except to state facts which have occurred since the default.—McDonald v. Rennel, Case No. 8,765.

Such answer may be allowed in the discretion of the court, and in this case was so allowed, on condition that the libelant might take issue upon it, and that the garnishee should stipulate with sureties to pay whatever the court should allow.—McDonald v. Rennel, Case No. 8,765.

§ 62. Process against vessel or other property.

A proceeding in rem will bind the res, in the absence of any personal notice to the party interested; otherwise as to personal actions.—The Globe, Case No. 5,485.

It is immaterial that the vessel, if attached within the district, was out of the jurisdiction when the libel was filed, as the time of service of process is the commencement of the suit.—Kelsey v. The William Kallahan, Case No. 7,680.

The life of a process in rem in admiralty does not end with its return, and if, at any time before the marshal is discharged, his custody becomes legal, the jurisdiction of the court becomes complete from that time.—The Roslyn, Case No. 12,068.

In a proceeding against a vessel under Rev. St. § 4499, for the penalty for violation of the laws relating to inspection, an executive seizure prior to the seizure under the libel is not necessary.—The Joshua Leviness, Case No. 7,549.

Where a sheriff's keeper allows the marshal to take actual possession, and subsequently holds for both the marshal and the sheriff, and the marshal makes a sale upon the deck of the vessel without objection, the warrant of arrest will be held duly served, and the sale valid.—The Julia Ann, Case No. 7,577.

The judge or court may stay proceedings on a commissioner's order for admiralty process, or act upon the petition de novo.—The Eagle, Case No. 4,233.

The question as to which marshal first seized a vessel in waters over which both districts had jurisdiction should be raised by a petition by the marshal, and not on a plea to the jurisdiction by a party in whose favor the marshal held process.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,721.

A marshal's return stating a seizure of a vessel, but that at such time the vessel was in the custody of a state sheriff, does not imply such seizure as to give the court jurisdiction.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,721.

The court does not acquire jurisdiction where the marshal makes return to a process in rem that he was prevented from making service by the adverse possession of a sheriff; the practice in such case is to wait until the sheriff's custody has ceased.—The Julia Ann, Case No. 7,577.

Sundays are not excluded in the 14 days required before the return of process in rem, in admiralty.—The E. W. Gorgas, Case No. 4,585.

Process in admiralty may be served by a person deputized by the marshal by memorandum indorsed thereon.—The E. W. Gorgas, Case No. 4,585.

§ 63. Appearance or default.

See, also, post, § 66.

Default by garnishee, see, ante, § 61.

Objection to jurisdiction founded on personal privilege of declining the forum must be made before general appearance and answering to the merits.—The Bee, Case No. 1,219.

On a libel in rem where want of jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the libel, personal appearance without objection is equivalent to attachment.—Jones v. The Richmond, Case No. 7,492.

Where the record shows that on the return day a certain person "appears for the respondents, and has a week to perfect an appearance and to answer," it will not be regarded as an appearance which operates as a voluntary submission to the jurisdiction, and a waiver of the objection. —The Aberfoyle, Case No. 16.

An entry on the record that on the return day a certain person "appears, * * * and has a week to perfect an appearance," does not show a waiver of objection to jurisdiction.—Atkins v. Fibre Disintegrating Co., Case No. 602.

One who comes into admiralty, and asserts a claim to and demand due from a third person, which is sought to be subjected to the payment of a judgment in personam against another, is bound by the decision. Whatever other remedies he might have had, he lost them by his appearance.—Lee v. Thompson, Case No. 8,202.

Irregularities in entering default are waived by the voluntary appearance of respondent before the commissioner without objection, but such default will be set aside to permit a real defense.—Gaines v. Spann, Case No. 5,178; Same v. Travis, Id. 5,179.

Where the corporate owners of a steamboat voluntarily appear as claimants, though under the wrong name, they are parties to the suit, and no objection can be taken to the decree for want of process against them.—Virginia & M. Steam Nav. Co. v. United States, Case No. 16,973.

In cases of default, proclamation to appear should be made, and a decree entered for default and contumacy; and on reading the libel and proceedings thereon, with or without proof, as the court may direct, such a decree will be made as the case may require.—United States v. The Mollie, Case No. 15,795.

Upon a motion to vacate an order pro confesso, and for leave to answer, respondent must satisfactorily account for his laches, and exhibit by answer or affidavit a meritorious defense.—Scott v. The Young America, Case No. 12,550.

Sufficiency of excuse in the case of a foreign respondent and of affidavit of defense.—Scott v. The Young America, Case No. 12,550.

Default for want of an answer will not be set aside after a decree from which an appeal might be taken. Rule 29.—The Duiveland, Case No. 4,122.

Rules 29 and 40 apply as well to suits in rem as to those in personam.—The Duiveland, Case No. 4,122.

Where the marshal, without authority of the court, has discharged attached property from custody, and subsequently served defendants personally, the court will require them to give security as a condition of opening their default. —Van Winkle v. Jarvis, Case No. 16,883.

§ 64. Claim and intervention in proceedings in rem.

Under a libel of forfeiture, any one claiming an interest in the thing may intervene to contest the forfeiture.—The Mary Anne, Case No. 9,195.

The party seeking to defend, in a proceeding in rem, must file a claim to the property libeled. —The Spark v. Lee Choi Chum, Case No. 13,206.

No one can intervene and defend in a suit in rem unless it appear by the answer and claim that he has a lien or proprietary interest in the thing seized.—The R. W. Skillinger, Case No. 12,181.

The claim must be filed by the owner, or some authorized agent, and must state the facts in a direct issuable form, and not by way of recitals. —The Spark v. Lee Choi Chum, Case No. 13,206.

The interest of a person in a suit, arising solely from his agreement to indemnify respondents against the result of the litigation, is not sufficient to give him the right to intervene in the action.—The Idaho, Case No. 6,996.

A consul of a foreign power, though his sovereign is also represented by an ambassador, is entitled to intervene in a suit in admiralty for all subjects of that power interested.—Robson v. The Huntress, Case No. 11,971.

The consul of a nation may claim on behalf of its subjects, in the absence of any authorized agent.—The London Packet, Case No. 8,474.

The assignment, by the builders of a vessel, of the moneys to become due on the building contract, invests the assignee with no such proprietary interest as will enable him to appear as claimant and defend.—The Revenue Cutter No. 1, Case No. 11,713.

A creditor who has attached the thing before seizure under a libel of forfeiture may intervene as a claimant.—The Mary Anne, Case No. 9,195.

In the absence of the owner, a mortgagee may be permitted to appear as claimant.—The Selt, Case No. 12,649.

A mortgagee may intervene to contest claims affecting his lien upon the vessel.—Thomas v. The Kosciusko, Case No. 13,901; Elmore v. The Alida, Id. 4,419; The Old Concord, Id. 10,482; Home Ins. Co. v. The Concord, Id. 6,659; Furniss v. The Magoun, Id. 5,163.

On the arrest of a vessel, the mortgagee may intervene to protect his interest and contest a forfeiture.—Home Ins. Co. v. Concord, Case No. 6,659.

A default in payment of an installment due on a mortgage on a vessel gives the mortgagee the right to its possession, and he will be permitted to come in and defend a suit in rem commenced the day before the default.—The Jenny Lind, Case No. 7,287.

An indorser upon a note not yet matured gave a mortgage upon a vessel to secure his contingent liability. Afterwards the liability became fixed. The mortgage, however, entitled him to an extension of time for payment. Held, that the mortgagee was to be deemed a mortgagee for a valuable consideration, and entitled as such to intervene for the protection of his interest in a libel filed against the vessel to recover wages. —The Dubuque, Case No. 4,110.

The court may order a vessel libeled for wages to be delivered to the general owners, where the charterers, who are entitled to possession, refuse to claim her.—The Prometheus, Case No. 11,442.

When a vessel is arrested by a lien creditor, and has not been delivered on stipulation, all other such creditors may intervene by summary petition without having the vessel arrested again, and have their claims allowed.—The Young Mechanic, Case No. 18,182.

Creditors having obtained decrees against the proceeds of a vessel, where bottomry creditors come in and arrest the fund, may make themselves parties and contest the bottomry claims. —French v. The Superb, Case No. 5,103a.

Under Rule 34, the underwriter, who has accepted an abandonment, which devests the original claimant of all interest, may be admitted to intervene and become the dominus litis, in a suit in rem.—The Ann C. Pratt, Case No. 409.

In a suit in rem on a bottomry bond, underwriters to whom an abandonment is made, which has not been accepted, are not admissible as claimants.—The Packet, Case No. 10,654.

Underwriters cannot make any claim for salvage property in admiralty, unless there has been an abandonment of the property to them, and it has been accepted by them.—The Henry Ewbank, Case No. 6,376.

An insurance company which has paid the amount of the insurance on the cargo of a vessel sunk by a collision may be joined as a colibelant with the owners of such vessel, after a decree has been given in their favor against the vessel causing the damage, and an order of reference to a commissioner made to ascertain the amount of damage.—The City of Paris, Case No. 2,766.

After the decision of the circuit court on appeal in a collision case is announced, an insurer of the cargo lost by the collision, who has paid the amount in full, may be admitted as a party to settle its rights to a share of the recovery as against the libelants.—The City of Paris, Case No. 2,767.

An administrator appointed in another state, who has not taken out letters within the jurisdiction of this court, may intervene in behalf of his intestate, in a suit in rem against a vessel which was the property of the intestate at his death.—The Boston, Case No. 1,669.

In a petitory or possessory suit material men cannot intervene to enforce a lien which they may have upon the vessel.—The Taranto, Case No. 13,751.

A material man's lien is not affected by a decree in such suit.—The Taranto, Case No. 13,751.

Where a foreign vessel is in the custody of the marshal on a claim made by an American citizen, the court may take jurisdiction of an intervening libel by one of the seamen, though his contract was made and performed in a foreign country, and all the parties are subjects thereof.—The Champion, Case No. 2,584.

A person who becomes interested in the subject-matter pending the litigation may come in and protect his interest if application is made within a reasonable time.—The Jenny Lind, Case No. 7,287.

A claim, to be available, must be interposed on the return day of the process, when proclamation is made.—Baxter v. The Dona Fermoas, Case No. 1,123a.

After trial of the right of a person to appear and claim a vessel as a mortgagee in possession, decided in his favor, leave will be granted to withdraw such claim, and file a new one as owner, where no other party is affected by the proceedings or suffers prejudice.—The Archer, Case No. 507.

An absent owner, on coming within the jurisdiction, may be substituted as claimant in place of his attorney in fact, on payment of costs of opposing the motion, and entering new stipulation for costs.—The Laurens, Case No. 8,121.

Where a party claims under an attachment he must file a caution in court to hold the proceeds remaining after satisfying prior claims.—The Louisetta, Case No. 8,535.

A court of admiralty has power to decide between conflicting claims to property seized by attachment or on execution.—Lee v. Thompson, Case No. 8,202.

In an action on a bottomry bond, the owner of the vessel and the mortgagee thereof having intervened, the court may pass on the validity of the mortgage.—The Panama, Case No. 10,703.

An objection to the right of a person to appear and defend a suit in rem cannot be taken for the first time at the hearing.—Thomas v. The Kosciusko, Case No. 13,901; The Prindiville, Id. 11,435.

A motion to strike the claim and answer from the files, upon the ground that the proofs on hearing show that claimant has no interest, cannot be entertained.—The Prindiville, Case No. 11,435.

The right to appear and defend a suit in rem must be put in contestation, by way of exception, if the disability appear upon the face of the claim, or an exceptive allegation putting the right in issue, if it does not so appear.—The Prindiville, Case No. 11,435.

An objection to the competency of an administrator to appear as claimant in a suit in rem must be taken on his appearance, and before sale of the property and payment of the proceeds into court.—The Boston, Case No. 1,669.

In an action on a bottomry bond, an objection to the right of a mortgagee to interfere and contest the validity of the hypothecation must be put forth in the pleadings and suggested on the argument, or it will be deemed to have been waived.—Furniss v. The Magoun, Case No. 5,163.

In proceedings in rem in admiralty, the death of the claimant does not abate the suit or render a subsequent decree therein erroneous.—The James A. Wright, Case No. 7,191.

If a party to an action in admiralty dies pending the suit, and the cause of action survives, no disadvantage accrues therefrom to either party. A suggestion of the fact apud acta removes the technical difficulty.—Nevitt v. Clarke, Case No. 10,138.

An application by executors to be substituted as libelants in a suit in rem in admiralty, made more than eight years after libelant's death, granted, as claimants could have compelled such substitution at any time.—The Norway, Case No. 10,357.

On an appeal from a judgment for libelant entered after the death of the claimant, the court ordered that his death be suggested on the record, and that the judgment be against the sureties.—The James A. Wright, Case No. 7,191.

Where, in an action to enforce a lien for wages on freight money due the boat, the cargo was arrested, the owners of the cargo should pay into court the freight acknowledged to be due, and thus obtain a release of the property and a discharge of their liability. They cannot be compelled to give bail for the value of the cargo.—The Monadnock, Case No. 9,704.

On a libel in personam against a subcharterer to recover freight, respondent, on petition, will be allowed to pay the freight moneys into court to abide the decision of a contest between the owner and charterer as to a claim for demurrage in which he is not interested, and the suit against him will be enjoined, though the result will be to turn the proceeding into one in rem against the freight.—Copp v. De Castro & Donner Sugar-Refining Co., Case No. 3,215.

Filing a libel in admiralty, and delivery of the writ to the officer, is a commencement of the suit, such that a tender afterwards made must include costs of suit, although the vessel has not been seized.—The Sunshine, Case No. 13,623.

On a bill to enforce a lien for wages upon freight money which was paid into the registry as a substitute for the freight attached, other parties claiming an interest in the freight money so paid in should file their claim and set up rights by answer to the libel.—The Monadnock, Case No. 9,704.

§ 67. Bail.

In suits in personam, in whatever way defendant is brought into court, he must give a stipulation to satisfy the decree before he can be admitted to defend, instead of giving stipulation for costs only.—Millard v. Craig, Case No. 9,547.

In holding a respondent to bail, admiralty is governed much by equitable considerations.—Martin v. Walker, Case No. 9,170.

The admiralty court will not order a defendant to give a stipulation in the action under pain of imprisonment in a case in which he is not liable to arrest.—Louisiana Ins. Co. v. Nickerson, Case No. 8,539.

A bond for appearance to answer a libel is not a bail bond at common law, but a stipulation in admiralty, to be construed accordingly.—Lane v. Townsend, Case No. 8,054.

Under a stipulation for appearance to answer and abide the court's decision, the sureties are not irrevocably bound by a return of non est inventus; but they may surrender the principal at any time before decree against them on citation to show cause.—Lane v. Townsend, Case No. 8,054.

The stipulation for discharge from arrest is for the appearance of the party to abide by the decree, and not for the payment of the sum decreed.—Grace v. Evans, Case No. 5,650.

The principal and surety on the bond or stipulation given upon an arrest in personam stand upon the same footing.—Holmes v. Dodge, Case No. 6,637.

In admiralty the principal cannot be surrendered in exoneration of bail.—Cure v. Bullus, Case No. 3,486.

The standing rules of the district court relating to bail stipulations to be given on the execution of a warrant in personam, and to the method of enforcing them, are superseded by the supreme court rules of 1845, upon the same subject, and stipulations must now be exacted conformably to the supreme court rules.—Gardner v. Isaacson, Case No. 5,230.

The former practice in the district courts in matters of arrest in suits in personam, whereby on default of respondent his sureties were subjected only to the payment of the costs, is changed by Court Rule 3, making the respondent and his sureties liable for the full amount of the demand.—Gardner v. Isaacson, Case No. 5,230.

Quære, if a delivery on bail can be ordered by the court in vacation before the return term of the process.—Ex parte Robbins, Case No. 11,879.

§ 68. Bonds and stipulations in general.

District court in admiralty may deliver property on bail, either in the form of bond or stipulation, on which judgment may be rendered.—The Alligator, Case No. 248.

Where, in a possessory action, the disposal of the case upon the merits is not likely to be attended by delay, a motion to bond will not be granted.—Treat v. The Rainbow, Case No. 14,161.

Where the equal half ownership of a vessel and disagreement alleged in a libel for possession and sale of the vessel are denied, claimants will be allowed to retain possession, pending the hearing, on giving security.—Burr v. The St. Thomas, Case No. 2,195.

In a possessory action, the property will not be delivered on bail to a claimant having an interest of only one-eighth therein, when the court is sitting, and the case can be heard at once.—The Rainbow, Case No. 14,161.

In possessory actions, an application for delivery on bail, by a party who has not yet answered, is premature.—The Rainbow, Case No. 14,161.

Where the title to a vessel could not be determined pending an accounting between the parties, possession was awarded to the master, who was part owner, on his own stipulation.—Coverdale v. The North America, Case No. 3,289.

The amount due upon an accounting between the majority and minority owners cannot be applied to diminish the liability of the stipulators on a bond given for the safe return of a vessel.—The Susan E. Voorhis, Case No. 13,633.

A married woman will not be accepted as surety on a stipulation in admiralty.—The Antelope, Case No. 481.

Stipulations taken for the purpose of sustaining and rendering effectual the court's jurisdiction are to be construed by the intention of the court which required them, and not of the parties bound by them.—Lane v. Townsend, Case No. 8,054.

A stipulation directed to be taken in double the amount of the demand will not be construed as a stipulation simply for costs.—The Roslyn, Case No. 12,068.

The defective execution of a stipulation must be objected to by the party affected by it within the term of the court next subsequent to its becoming known to him.—The Infanta, Case No. 7,031.

A party is entitled to be discharged from a bail bond or stipulation in admiralty only on grounds which at law or in equity would avoid a common money bond, or entitle him to be relieved from it.—Cure v. Bullus, Case No. 3,486.

After the respondent has given a bond to the marshal, as provided by the rules, libelant cannot exact any additional stipulation.—Gaines v. Travis, Case No. 5,179.

A defective execution of a stipulation will be deemed waived unless excepted to before the close of the term next after the opposite party has notice of the defect.—The Infanta, Case No. 7,031.

§ 69. Security for dissolution of attachment.

To discharge a foreign attachment, where defendant is not found, he must furnish a bond to satisfy the full decree.—Bell v. Nelson, Case No. 1,257.

When property is taken for security by a warrant of attachment, the attachment may be dissolved and the property restored to the claimant on his filing a stipulation, with sureties, according to the form used by the court.—Poland v. The Spartan, Case No. 11,246.

Before property can legally be delivered on bail in cases in which the United States are a party, due notice must have been given to the district attorney.—Ex parte Robbins, Case No. 11,879.

In giving bond to relieve property taken by a clause of foreign attachment, defendant must pay costs of the motion before he can defend on the merits.—Millard v. Craig, Case No. 9,547.

A respondent in a suit in personam, whose vessel is attached because personal service cannot be made in the district, does not waive his right to plead to the jurisdiction by filing a stipulation to secure the release of the vessel.—Manchester v. Hotchkiss, Case No. 9,004.

On the dissolution of an attachment against a vessel it should be restored to the person who was in possession at the time when she was taken under process; and in the case of conflicting claims the marshal should not deliver her without the order of the court.—The Two Marys, Case No. 14,300.

Sureties on a bond given by the wife who filed a claim to property attached on a libel against the husband and wife are discharged where the suit is dismissed against the wife, though a decree is rendered against the husband. —Jaycox v. Chapman, Case No. 7,243.

Where the respondent in a suit in personam has gone beyond seas, process may issue against the bail on motion, though no execution against the principal has been returned non est inventus. —In re Snow, Case No. 13,141.

Inasmuch as a suit brought in the district court in admiralty to enforce a lien on a vessel given by state laws is not a "proceeding under the laws of any state," but is under the laws of the United States, the government, if claimant in such suit, is not entitled to have the res discharged from arrest by giving stipulation under Rev. St. § 3753, providing that when property of the United States shall in a "proceeding under the laws of any state" be seized, etc., the secretary of the treasury may cause a stipulation to be entered into, etc.—The Revenue Cutter, Case No. 11,712.

The claimants and not the libelants will be allowed to bond the proceeds of a vessel where libelants' claim is denied in the pleadings.—The Archer, Case No. 508.

The default of libelant on an application to bond a vessel, held should be opened with leave to file objections to the right of the applicant to appear as claimant.—The Two Marys, Case No. 14,300.

Vessels and cargoes liable for forfeiture under Act April 18, 1818, may be delivered to the claimants upon giving a bond for value.—United States v. The Pitt, Case No. 16,052.

Act March 3, 1851, to limit the liability of shipowners, confers no power on the court to discharge the vessel from all liens upon her, on the filing of a stipulation by the owners in the full value of the vessel and freight, for the benefit of all parties having claims upon her. But this may be done under the general admiralty powers of the court.—The City of Norwich, Case No. 11,202.

On a dispute between the master and owners of a British vessel, the court ordered possession to be delivered to the owners on payment of a sum to secure the payment of any sum found due to the master on a suit to be instituted by him within 20 days.—Muir v. The Brisk, Case No. 9,901.

On a libel to recover possession of a vessel, where respondent appealed, the court refused leave to bond the vessel, but directed that the decree be executed unless the appeal was perfected in two days.—Muir v. The Brisk, Case No. 9,901.

A vessel may be released on bond under Rev. St. § 941, at any time before default is entered on the return of process.—The Martha C. Burnite, Case No. 9,147.

In an action in rem against the vessel alone by a single freighter a court of admiralty cannot order the release of the owners on giving a stipulation for value of vessel and freight.—Place v. The City of Norwich, Case No. 11,202.

§ 71. —— Validity, form, and sufficiency.

One who voluntarily executes a bond to a marshal for the purpose of being substituted for a vessel, and with full knowledge of the valuation, will not be permitted to resist execution on the ground that the bond was erroneously executed to the marshal, and that the valuation should have been made by commissioners appointed by the court.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,613.

A bond voluntarily given upon the delivery of property on bail, on application of the claimant, is good, although the condition does not exactly conform to Act March 2, 1799, c. 128, § 89 (1 Story's Laws, 653; 1 Stat. p. 695, c. 20). —The Struggle, Case No. 13,550.

The court may permit a stipulation to be given to satisfy the decree, reserving to the stipulator the right to deny the legality of the custody claimed by the marshal, and, if successful in such denial, to ask to be relieved therefrom.—The Roslyn, Case No. 12,068.

A bond given to release a vessel attached under the nonimportation law need not conform to the provisions of Act March 2, 1799, c. 128. —The Struggle, Case No. 13,550.

Act March 3, 1847, does not abridge the power of the court to accept bail for less than double the amount of libelant's demand.—Peru v. The North America, Case No. 11,017a.

A vessel, cargo, and freight attached on a libel on a bottomry bond will be bonded for their full amount, although the proceeds of the vessel are alone sufficient to meet the claim.—The Archer, Case No. 507.

On a libel against a vessel, though the claims exceed her value, the amount of the freight is not to be included in the stipulation.—The Vivid, Case No. 16,977.

The vessel may be discharged on stipulation in its full value where the claims for which libels are filed exceed its appraised value.—The Antelope, Case No. 481.

In the case of separate suits for salvage by different salvors in different jurisdictions, for services rendered on the same voyage, where claimants have once bonded the property, the court will reduce the bail to a reasonable security for the claim.—Forbes v. The Merrimac, Case No. 4,927.

An agreement fixing the amount of penalty or liquidated damages is not conclusive as to the amount of bail in a suit in rem.—Peru v. The North America, Case No. 11,017a.

An appraisement by an appraiser nominated by the clerk without notice to the opposite party will be set aside.—Alliance Ins. Co. v. The Morning Light, Case No. 246a.

The stipulation or bond in a suit joining the remedy in rem with that in personam only covers the value of the property attached and surrendered.—Draper v. The O. C. Clary, Case No. 4,071.

The obligations of the sureties of a vessel are not increased by amending the libel by increasing the amount claimed.—Darrell v. The Alice Gray, Case No. 3,579.

The undertaking of stipulators, on a libel in rem for the loss of a vessel and cargo by collision, is for their value, and they cannot interfere, in questions relating to the equity of the parties, to amend their pleadings so as to bring within the action all rights which may be legally determined by it.—McCready v. The Brother Jonathan, Case No. 8,732a.

A bond executed in the district court to secure the release of a vessel, conditioned that the parties shall perform the decree of "the court," means the court which shall ultimately decide the cause; so that where the district court dismissed the libel, but its decree was afterwards reversed on appeal, execution may issue on the bond.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,613.

The claimant in an action in rem, who secures the discharge of the property by giving a stipulation for value, must keep his stipulation good in the matter of sureties until the final determination of the case.—The Virgo, Case No. 16,976.

Where, after an appeal by libelant from a decree dismissing the libel, the stipulators for value become insolvent, the circuit court will require the claimant to furnish new stipulators.—The Virgo, Case No. 16,976.

The giving of a stipulation of value to obtain the release of the vessel waives all defects in the service of process.—The Acadia, Case No. 24.

The execution of a delivery bond by the owner of a vessel in a proceeding in rem for a penalty or forfeiture is a waiver of the objection of the want of a prior seizure.—The Lewellen, Case No. 8,307; The Lewellen, Id. 8,308.

A vessel discharged from arrest upon giving the required bond or stipulation is forever discharged from the lien which was the foundation of the action, and the court has no jurisdiction over her for the same cause of action and cannot order her rearrest.—Home Ins. Co. v. The Concord, Case No. 6,659. The Old Concord, Id. 10,482; United States v. Ames, Id. 14,440; The White Squall, Id. 17,570.

Such vessel cannot be again seized for the same cause of action, even by consent of the parties.—Senab v. The Josephine, Case No. 12,663.

Nor can she be rearrested for the same cause of action, though the former action was discontinued by consent. Case No. 13,855 affirmed.—The Thales, Case No. 13,856.

After such release an attachment for contempt will not lie for its forcible taking.—United States v. Towns, Case No. 16,534.

Where the libel was subsequently amended so as to claim a larger amount, the vessel, after a sale to a third person, cannot be ordered again into the custody of the marshal, nor can the owners be required to pay the purchase money into court.—The Union, Case No. 14,346.

A vessel discharged on stipulation of value fixed at the amount claimed in the libel returns into the hands of her owner subject to all previously existing liens or charges, the same as before her seizure, except that on account of which she was seized; and she is subject to any subsequently accruing liens or charges in the hands of her owner, or in the hands of any person to whom she may be transferred.—The Union, Case No. 14,346; Roberts v. The Huntsville, Id. 11,904; Carroll v. The Leathers, Id. 2,455.

Where a vessel has been released from arrest on stipulation for value, she may contract new debts which will operate as liens, which will have preference over the claim of the sureties who are subrogated to the rights of libelant.—Carroll v. The Leathers, Case No. 2,455.

Where a vessel has been released on stipulation for her value, the amount of damages recoverable in a collision case cannot exceed her actual value, though the bond is for a greater sum.—Wells v. The Ann Caroline, Case No. 17,389b.

The sureties on a bond or stipulation for value cannot take advantage of any irregularity in the proceedings.—The Alligator, Case No. 248.

After a decree has been entered in admiralty dismissing a libel, and the stipulation to the action has been canceled, the claimant may, by waiving the decree and consenting to the reinstatement of the cause, revive the liability of the sureties on the stipulation, provided such proceedings do not affect them injuriously.—The Antelope, Case No. 480.

The amendment of the libel by adding a colibelant does not discharge the surety on the stipulation.—The Maggie Jones, Case No. 8,947.

The amendment of a libel by striking out the name of a sole libelant, and substituting another in its place, is virtually the institution of a new suit, and discharges the sureties upon the stipulation.—The Detroit, Case No. 3,832.

The taking of notes and mortgages from the owners as collateral security, after the seizure and bonding of the vessel, held not to operate to stay the suit nor to discharge the surety.—The Maggie Jones, Case No. 8,947.

A stipulator will be discharged from his undertaking where the vessel is subsequently rearrested on libels by others, and sold, and the proceeds brought into court.—Livingston v. The Jewess, Case No. 8,412.

Where a libel in rem is dismissed by default the claimant may without notice enter an order canceling the stipulation and bond.—The Antelope, Case No. 480.

A claimant who, after a libel in rem is dismissed by default and the stipulation and bond canceled, agrees to open the default, waives the decree and order of cancellation, and the court may vacate them so as to hold the stipulators liable.—The Antelope, Case No. 480.

Motion to remand vessel into custody, and cancel stipulation, held premature where made before process returned on other libels by which the security of the stipulators was endangered.—The Empire, Case No. 4,472.

If a bond given to release a vessel attached for violation of the nonimportation law (Act March 1, 1809, c. 91) is void because it does not conform to the terms of the statute, the court will enforce the redelivery of the property.—The Struggle, Case No. 13,550.

The court has power to order the rearrest of a vessel if the stipulation to answer a judgment has been accepted by mistake or fraud, and the sureties were never bound.—The Favorite, Case No. 4,698.

In case of any mistake or fraud committed in entering into the stipulation, and of the improvident discharge of the vessel, it would be competent for the court to relieve the parties concerned, on an application within a reasonable time, by ordering the vessel back into the custody of the officer.—The Union, Case No. 14,346.

When property seized for forfeiture is brought into admiralty for adjudication, it is in the custody of the court, and cannot be withdrawn but by some person who shall establish title to receive it.—United States v. The La Jeune Eugenie, Case No. 15,551.

The officer who has the possession of the property on proceedings in rem is the official keeper of the court, and, if it be taken from him, its redelivery will be enforced by summary process, though in the hands of a person not a party to the cause.—The Phebe, Case No. 11,066.

Where petitioner, without order of the court, has obtained possession of property from the marshal, who had seized the same on process in rem, the court will not order the marshal to deliver up possession.—The Roslyn, Case No. 12,067.

Where an arrested vessel in any manner again comes into possession of the owner, he cannot defeat a lien against her, on the ground that the contract out of which it arose was made, and the consideration for it rendered, while the vessel was in the custody of the law.—The Witch Queen, Case No. 17,915.

The district court, by virtue of its admiralty jurisdiction, has the power to order the restoration of property, the right to the possession of which is in an officer of a court possessing similar powers in an adjoining district.—The Joseph Gorham, Case No. 7,537.

The custody of the law, having been once fixed by the valid levy of an officer duly authorized to seize, continues whether the officer be present or not, unless acts equivalent to a surrender and withdrawal are shown.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,721.

A prize schooner, in a perishing condition, was ordered to be sold, although one of the parties had not appeared, for the use of the person to whom it was finally decreed.—Stoddard v. Read, Case No. 13,470.

Where a vessel seized for forfeiture is sold pending the prosecution, to avoid expenses of keeping, and the libel is subsequently dismissed, the proceeds will be delivered to the claimant, free of all costs.—United States v. The Lion, Case No. 15,607.

IV. PLEADING, PETITIONS, AND MOTIONS.

Effect of amendment on liabilities of sureties on bond, see, ante, § 76.
Pleadings as evidence, see post, § 94.
In suits for forfeiture, see "Forfeitures," § 8.

§ 79. Allegations in general.

Admiralty will not entertain defenses inadequately pleaded and set up for the first time by formal objection at the trial.—Cohan v. The Rolling Wave, Case No. 2,959a.

Pleas or exceptions in admiralty need not embody the formalities required in pleading at common law or in equity, but they must set forth the matter in dispute in perspicuous and definite terms.—The Navarro, Case No. 10,059.

A neglect to state material facts within the knowledge of the party will be taken most unfavorably against him.—Poole v. The Washington, Case No. 11,271.

Maritime courts will not lay much stress on an objection of misnomer unsupported by evidence that the party was in fact not known by the name ascribed to him.—Henry v. Curry, Case No. 6,381.

It is immaterial whether a libel in admiralty be addressed to the judge or to the court in which he presides.—The Joseph Gorham, Case No. 7,537.

Admiralty has not jurisdiction over every floating structure on navigable rivers, and the pleadings should contain an averment to show jurisdiction.—Jones v. Coal Barges, Case No. 7,458.

A libel for assault and battery, alleged to have been committed in the harbor of Havana, is defective, if it does not further allege that the tide ebbs and flows in said harbor.—Thomas v. Lane, Case No. 13,902.

Libels in civil actions in rem need not state the occupation and residence of the libelant.—The J. R. Hoyle, Case No. 7,557.

Libels in admiralty should state the subject-matter in articles, with certainty and precision, and with averments admitting of distinct answers.—The Boston, Case No. 1,673.

Technical precision is not required; but the cause of action should be clearly set forth, so that a plain and direct issue may be made up on the charge.—Jenks v. Lewis, Case No. 7,280.

A libel in rem for breach of a charter party, demanding a stated sum in damages, is sufficient to hold the res to bail, although specific breaches showing a specific amount of damages are not alleged.—Peru v. The North America, Case No. 11,017a.

An allegation that a certain sum loaned by the master on a security of the first earnings of the vessel is still due and unpaid will dispense with an allegation that it has not been paid out of the earnings.—Brown v. The Cadmus, Case No. 1,997.

A complaint framed under Dakota territorial laws, giving a right of action in rem for supplies furnished a vessel, held sufficient to give jurisdiction to admiralty, though requiring amendments to conform it to the practice.—Comings v. The Ida Stockdale, Case No. 3,052.

A libel should set out clearly and explicitly the facts relied on.—The Havre, Case No. 6,232.

A libel for damages should state each distinct act of injury in a distinct article with reasonable certainty of time and place.—Treadwell v. Joseph, Case No. 14,157.

In a libel for a marine tort libelant must set forth in distinct allegations each separate and distinct wrong for which he claims damages.—Pettingill v. Dinsmore, Case No. 11,045.

General ill treatment and oppression on the part of a master, relied on in aggravation of damages in a suit by a seaman for assault, must be propounded in a distinct allegation.—Pettingill v. Dinsmore, Case No. 11,045.

The libel should show jurisdiction.—Boon v. The Hornet, Case No. 1,640.

A libel for a tort will be dismissed unless it contain on its face sufficient averments as to place to show that it is within the admiralty jurisdiction.—Thomas v. Lane, Case No. 13,902.

It is unnecessary to aver that the vessel in question is engaged in navigation, or capable of being so employed.—The Illinois, Case No. 7,004.

To give the admiralty court jurisdiction of a libel in rem for materials used in the construction of a vessel brought before she is launched, it must appear by the libel and record that the vessel is of the size for maritime employment, and that her business was to be maritime navigation on the Lakes or high seas.—The Charles Mears, Case No. 10,766.

A libel for salvage in the name of a British naval officer and the British consul, joining with him "for all other interests," where the vessel, rescued by the British naval vessel, was sent home in charge of the officer, held not fatally defective.—The Huntress, Case No. 6,912; Robson v. The Huntress, Id. 11,971.

A libel for possession of a vessel should unequivocally state the extent of libelant's interest, and that he was owner at the time of filing the libel.—Bradshaw v. The Sylph, Case No. 1,791.

A simple allegation of fraud in a petition to set aside a sale, without setting forth the facts which constitute the fraud, is insufficient.—The Kaloolah, Case No. 7,602.

A libel sufficient under the general maritime law is sufficient in cases arising upon the Lakes, and no averment is required to bring it within the act of 1845.—The Illinois, Case No. 7,004.

Facts will be assumed as broad as the libel will warrant, where it is not objected to for lack of precision and certainty.—Essler v. Worth, Case No. 4,533a.

A libel for a statute forfeiture should substantially agree with the terms of the statute.—The Betsy, Case No. 1,365.

§ 81. Answer.

An agreement for a reference before answer filed suspends the necessity of answer. If the reference is set aside, claimant may answer without terms.—The Nineveh, Case No. 10,276.

When the respondent wishes to avail himself of any particular matter of defense, he must present it with proper averments in his answer or by plea.—The William Harris, Case No. 17,695.

The defense of stale claim must be set up in the answer.—The Melissa, Case No. 9,400.

The objection that the vessel for which supplies or repairs are furnished is not one fitted for navigation on the high seas must be taken by answer.—Reppert v. Robinson, Case No. 11,703.

Matter of abatement may be set up in the answer, but the answer in such case must demand the same judgment as a plea.—Reed v. Hussey, Case No. 11,646.

The answer should set out clearly and explicitly the facts relied on.—The Havre, Case No. 6,232.

An answer to a libel for information must be full and explicit to each article.—The Sun, Case No. 13,612.

Where, to a libel for damage, a defense is put in by way of justification, it must admit the facts; and if the act complained of be relied on as a punishment, it must be so pleaded.—Treadwell v. Joseph, Case No. 14,157.

If the answer admits, to a reasonable intendment, facts stated in the libel, it will be sufficient, though loose and informal as a pleading.—The Aldebaran, Case No. 150.

Where the answer to a libel for seaman's wages sets up payment in full and a release under seal, the particulars of the release need not be set out, as it is only evidence.—The Western Metropolis, Case No. 17,438.

The answer should meet each material allegation of the libel with an admission, a denial, or a defense.—The Boston, Case No. 1,673.

An answer which neither admits nor denies a material averment in the libel is insufficient, and may be excepted to on that ground.—The Elizabeth Frith, Case No. 4,361.

Mere narrative statements in a libel, which allege no damages, and claim no particular remedy, need not be replied to specifically by answer.—The Aldebaran, Case No. 150.

Where an answer is made without oath, as authorized by rule 87, it should still respond fully and particularly to every material averment of the libel.—The Aldebaran, Case No. 150.

Where a libel alleges a particular agreement was made, and a written instrument was executed, and the instrument embodies the substance of such agreement, an admission by the answer of the execution of the instrument is substantially an admission of its contents.—The Aldebaran, Case No. 150.

Matter intended as a defensive allegation should not be blended with the response or answer to an allegation of the libel.—The California, Case No. 2,312.

Where several averments in an answer to a libel on a vessel are inconsistent, and are not excepted to, the court will adopt that one which operates most strongly against the claimant.—The Olbers, Case No. 10,477.

When a plea which sets up no matter of defense is overruled, it is in the discretion of the court to allow an answer to be filed.—The Sea Gull, Case No. 12,578.

§ 82. Reply.

Mere narrative statements need no specific reply.—The Aldebaran, Case No. 150.

Where a sworn answer is not demanded by the libel, libelant may contradict its allegations by proofs, without filing a replication thereto, or notice of such proof.—The Infanta, Case No. 7,030.

In the absence of a specific rule, a replication is necessary to put in issue facts set up by sworn answer; if none be filed, such facts will be taken as admitted.—The Mary Jane, Case No. 9,215.

A replication merely denying the truth of the answer is not required in the district of Massachusetts.—Taber v. Jenny, Case No. 13,720.

New facts must be presented by an amendment to the libel or answer, and not by way of replication and rejoinder.—The Sarah Ann, Case No. 12,342.

A special replication by the libelant under oath is not admissible, unless it be demanded by respondent, or ordered by the court.—Coffin v. Jenkins, Case No. 2,948.

A party cannot be allowed, after receiving a pleading and replying to it, to treat it, upon any ground of defect afterwards discovered, as a nullity, and proceed as if none had been served.—Gaines v. Travis, Case No. 5,179.

Advantage must be taken of the failure to file a replication when evidence is offered at the hearing, or it will be held to be waived.—Thomas v. Gray, Case No. 13,898.

Each party has a right to require the personal answers of the other, under oath, to any interrogatories touching the matter in issue.—The David Pratt, Case No. 3,597.

In a suit for seamen's wages, libelant may compel the adverse party to answer special interrogatories.—Gammell v. Skinner, Case No. 5,210.

The charge in the libel to which a special interrogatory relates will be taken pro confesso where defendant refuses to answer.—The David Pratt, Case No. 3,597.

§ 84. Exceptions, demurrers, and pleas in bar.

The admiralty court may dismiss a libel on exceptions.—The Pauline, Case No. 10,848.

If the response in a general answer is not full, explicit, and distinct, exceptions for insufficiency lie to compel a sufficient answer.—The California, Case No. 2,312.

No exceptions will lie to an answer responsive to the libel, on the ground that it is not a defense to the suit, whether the matter is impertinent or not.—The California, Case No. 2,312.

Objections to a libel for want of specific allegations of fault should be taken by exceptions, and, if taken at the hearing, an amendment will be permitted.—The Coleman, Case No. 2,981.

An exception for irrelevancy taken to a pleading which is not irrelevant, but is only insufficient, will be overruled.—The Elizabeth Frith, Case No. 4,361.

Where no exceptions are taken to an answer which is not as full and explicit and distinct as required by rule 27, the reading of testimony cannot be objected to on the ground of its insufficiency.—The Rocket, Case No. 11,975.

An exception that a libel does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of suit or forfeiture is too general; it should state in what particular the facts are insufficient.—The Active, Case No. 33.

Exceptions, dilatory or declinatory, should be interposed on the return day of process, or at the day appointed for answering the libel.—Furniss v. The Magoun. Case No. 5,163.

Exceptions in an answer to a libel will be deemed waived if not determined before proof taken at the trial.—Aumach v. The Queen of the South, Case No. 657a.

Exceptions to a pleading in admiralty have the effect of a demurrer, and also that of a motion to make the pleading more definite and certain.—Quinn v. The Transport, Case No. 11,516.

A demurrer does not prevent the party demurring from controverting the facts confessed, and compelling the other party to prove them.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,373.

In a libel on a bottomry bond, a demurrer to the replication alleging that the libeled vessel was employed as a cartel, and sailed under the protection of a flag of truce, is not such an admission as to prevent respondent from afterwards controverting it.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,373.

The objection of staleness of claim, or any other defense that does not go to the merits, must be propounded by special plea.—The Platina, Case No. 11,210.

In a libel on a bottomry bond, the overruling of a plea alleging the disability of libelants to sue, on the ground that at the time the suit was brought and the plea was filed they were alien enemies, does not prevent respondents from pleading in bar that, at the time the contract was entered into, libelants were alien enemies, and for that reason the contract was void.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,373.

The district courts have an undoubted power, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, to permit a libel to be amended.—United States v. Distilled Spirits, Case No. 15,943.

The libel may be amended while the proceedings are in fieri and before judgment. (Judiciary Act 1789, § 32.)—Comings v. The Ida Stockdale, Case No. 3,052.

The court will permit amendment instanter in respect to defects of form first objected to at the hearing.—Nevitt v. Clarke, Case No. 10,138.

In the absence of written rules of practice, amendments in matters of substance are within the sound discretion of the court, and are allowable until final decree.—Lamb v. Parkman, Case No. 8,019; Nevitt v. Clarke, Id. 10,138.

Amendments to libels for forfeitures in admiralty, in substance or in form, are within the discretion of the court at any time before final decree.—The Meteor, Case No. 9,498.

An amendment of an information in rem will not be disallowed merely because it may affect the rights of sureties.—The Harmony, Case No. 6,081.

Though a libel for possession of a vessel should state the extent of libelant's interest, and that he was owner at the time of filing the libel, where the defect in that particular arises from accidental omission the court will allow an amendment.—Bradshaw v. The Sylph, Case No. 1,791.

A libel may be amended on motion by striking out unnecessary and impertinent allegations.—American Ins. Co. v. Johnson, Case No. 303.

Libelant may amend his libel in any of the points excepted to by the claimant. (Rule 24.)—Town v. The Western Metropolis, Case No. 14,114.

If an application to amend a libel proposes to introduce a new cause of action, it is usual to allow the amendment when the new cause of action corresponds in character and is kindred in nature to that presented in the original libel; but if the amendment introduces a new substantive cause of action and a new charge against the defendant, it is disallowed.—United States v. Distilled Spirits, Case No. 15,943.

The court will not allow a defendant to recast his entire answer, if he has discovered from the opinion of the district court how it may successfully be done, so as to shift the burden of proof, or obtain by successful pleading other legal advantages.—Lamb v. Parkman, Case No. 8,019.

A person who defends a suit in a certain right, and sets up an agreement consistent only therewith, which he stands by at the trial, will not be allowed, after he has failed in such contention, to set up a claim in a different right, and support the same by proof.—McCarthy v. Eggers, Case No. 8,681.

After alleging ownership and setting up a charter made as owners, respondents cannot, on failure to prove the charter, amend so as to show that they were mortgagees out of possession.—McCarthy v. Eggers, Case No. 8,681.

A claimant in admiralty will not be allowed, after the hearing has been had on claim and answer, establishing that he had no interest in the res at the time when the claim and answer were filed, to amend by showing that he was formerly the owner, and sold with a covenant to discharge all liens.—The Prindiville, Case No. 11,435.

An answer cannot be amended, so as to contradict a material admission, after the cause has been heard.—The Mary C., Case No. 9,201.

A joint libel against three vessels cannot be amended by substituting the name of the owner of one vessel so as to change it from a libel in rem to one in personam.—The Young America, Case No. 18,178.

The court has no power to permit a libel to be amended by striking out the name of a sole libelant, and substituting another in its place.—The Detroit, Case No. 3,832.

An information against a vessel for smuggling may be amended so as to change the allegations as to the ownership of the vessel.—United States v. The Queen, Case No. 16,107.

The court will permit an amendment seeking to withdraw an admission of a matter of fact, upon the ground that it was made because the respondent mistook the law, with great caution, and only under extraordinary circumstances, if ever.—Lamb v. Parkman, Case No. 8,019.

The answer, in an action on a bill of lading, which fails to allege that the damages claimed accrued from the sweating of the vessel, is amendable.—McCullough v. The Echo, Case No. 8,740a.

In an action of tort an amendment may be allowed increasing the damages demanded.—McCready v. The Brother Jonathan, Case No. 8,732a.

A possessory libel cannot be amended so as to proceed for damages in personam.—Kynoch v. The S. C. Ives, Case No. 7,958.

The libel in a proceeding to obtain the benefit of the limitation of liability will be amended so as to show the residence of the libelant.—The John Bramall, Case No. 7,334.

An amendment by inserting a new substantive offense will be disallowed where the statute of limitations has run against it.—The Harmony, Case No. 6,081.

A decree cannot be rendered upon proofs as to matter not embraced within the allegations, but the pleadings should be amended to embrace the merits.—Davis v. Leslie, Case No. 3,639.

Amendment of answer not allowed to make it correspond with the proofs, where the allegations were deliberately made, under a full knowledge of the grounds relied on by libelant.—The Iola, Case No. 7,057.

Where, in a collision case, the pleadings of both parties were defective, the court allowed proper pleadings after the case was closed on the proofs.—Star v. The White Cloud, Case No. 13,306.

Permission to amend a libel to enforce a general admiralty lien for supplies, so as to claim a lien under the local statutes, granted on condition that libelant's lien should be postponed to that of others.—Hudson Coal Co. v. The Minnie R. Childs, Case No. 6,836.

In a suit against a vessel and her master jointly to recover a penalty for importing goods not included in the manifest, it is proper to dismiss the suit as to the master, on the ground that he is entitled to a trial by jury and to proceed with it as against the vessel.—United States v. The Queen, Case No. 16,108.

Where the amendment consists in the denial of a fact previously admitted, or in the allegation of new facts amounting to a new defense, not originally exhibited, the court will require the grounds for the amendment, and the reasons why it has become necessary, and why its necessity was not earlier known, to be shown by affidavit.—Lamb v. Parkman, Case No. 8,019.

The court will require that each of the proposed changes in an answer should be exhibited separately, with apt references to the original answer, so that it can be seen how the original answer will be affected by each, and so that each, when allowed, can be incorporated into the original answer when taken into a new draft as an amended answer.—Lamb v. Parkman, Case No. 8,019.

A writing should be filed containing the matter of amendment as a distinct proceeding in the case, but such writing may extend to a new draft of the libel. (Adm. Rule No. 24.)—Comings v. The Ida Stockdale, Case No. 3,052.

On dismissal of a libel with leave to amend, it is improper to file a new libel setting out a valid cause of action, by adding a second cause, which was substantially a repetition of the libel which had been dismissed.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,723.

Where a decree for libelant in a collision case was reversed by the supreme court, which held both vessels to be in fault, claimant, who had failed to allege in his answer that he had sustained any damages by the collision, was allowed to amend his answer in that respect.—The Pennsylvania, Case No. 10,951.

Where libelant relies on new matter in avoidance, he should file a supplemental libel, which respondent should answer.—Taber v. Jenny, Case No. 13,720.

A supplemental libel, filed before the process is returnable, becomes part of the pleadings, without further notice to respondent, and he is bound to answer it.—Thomas v. Gray, Case No. 13,898.

A supplemental libel in replication is not necessary where the libelant intends merely to deny the truth of the allegations in the answer. Otherwise where it is sought to avoid them by new facts.—Gladding v. Constant, Case No. 5,468.

A supplementary libel alleging new matter and an answer may be filed after appeal, in the discretion of the court.—The Boston, Case No. 1,673.

Libelants were permitted to amend and file a supplemental bill for extra compensation as pilots, where their services were held not to constitute a claim for salvage.—Dexter v. The Richmond, Case No. 3,865.

§ 87. Signature and verification.

Admiralty requires a sworn libel as the foundation of process of arrest of person or property.—Martin v. Walker, Case No. 9,170.

The answer to a libel in personam should be sworn to, but the libelant is not bound to swear to the libel.—Coffin v. Jenkins, Case No. 2,948.

Libelant must verify the debt or cause of action on which his libel is founded by his oath.—Hutson v. Jordan, Case No. 6,959.

The respondent is required to verify his answer by oath.—Hutson v. Jordan, Case No. 6,959.

Libels in rem in civil causes in Indiana need not be supported by the affidavit of the libelant.—The J. R. Hoyle, Case No. 7,557.

In causes on the instance side, the answer of the claimant should be verified by oath.—Gammell v. Skinner, Case No. 5,210.

One verifying a libel as attorney in fact need not show his authority at the time. It is enough to show it when called in question.—Martin v. Walker, Case No. 9,170.

A mere general employment as proctor to prosecute an admiralty suit does not authorize the verification of a libel as attorney in fact.—Martin v. Walker, Case No. 9,170.

It may be shown, in opposition to a motion to set aside all proceedings for want of verification of the libel, that the oath was in fact regularly and duly administered, though the clerk's name was not subscribed.—Nelson v. Bell, Case No. 10,101a.

The absence of the notarial seal from the jurat of a verification of a libel in admiralty is, at most, but an irregularity, not available, after decree, in a collateral proceeding.—The E. W. Gorgas, Case No. 4,585.

§ 88. Filing and service.

Where respondent has been arrested in a suit in personam, the answer is not filed, within the meaning of the eighteenth rule, until bail is perfected.—Thomas v. Gray, Case No. 13,898.

Service of a cross libel, for damages under an independent stipulation, upon the proctor of the original libelant, who is out of the jurisdiction, is ineffectual.—Nichols v. Tremlett, Case No. 10,247.

§ 89. Issues, proof, and variance.

Allegations in a libel, neither admitted nor denied by the claimant, are not to be taken as true, but must be proved.—Clarke v. The Dodge Healy, Case No. 2,849.

Allegations in pleadings are admissions by the pleader, and need no proof unless denied and put in issue, and, as against the pleader, will be taken as matter conceded.—Ward v. The Fashion, Case No. 17,154.

Admission by answer of execution of agreement particularly set out in libel admits contents.—The Aldebaran, Case No. 150.

An allegation in the answer that all the parties are foreigners, and the ship is foreign property, must be proved by the respondent or claimant.—The Napoleon, Case No. 10,015.

In cases of tort, if the injury complained of is admitted by the answer, the burden of proof is cast upon the defense to show affirmatively the matters of justification or defense set up.—The Rhode Island, Case No. 11,745.

The court will not permit respondent to require formal proof of written documents, the authenticity of which was admitted by the original answer, without an affidavit denying the signatures, and explaining satisfactorily his former admission, nor permit respondent to require the production of original papers, copies whereof were admitted by the original answer to "be correct," without showing that such originals are under the control of libelant, and can be produced without delay, and that the production thereof is material.—Lamb v. Parkman, Case No. 8,019.

Where, in the case of a joint tort, separate answers are put in, each respondent must rely for his defense upon his own answer and the proofs.—Gardner v. Bibbins, Case No. 5,222.

No evidence is properly admissible but what applies to matters in issue between the parties, and nothing is in issue but what is averred on one side and denied by the other.—The William Harris, Case No. 17,695.

No evidence is admissible, except it be appropriate to some of the allegations in the libel or answer.—The Boston, Case No. 1,673; Davis v. Leslie, Id. 3,639; The Rhode Island, Id. 11,745; The Morton, Id. 9,864; Turner v. The Black Warrior, Id. 14,253; Campbell v. The Uncle Sam, Id. 2,372. But see The Cambridge, Case No. 2,334.

Allegations not sustained by proof will be rejected.—The Sarah Ann, Case No. 12,342; Kramme v. The New England, Id. 7,930.

The proctor of the libelant, having given notice to the respondent that he should ask only for a decree for costs, cannot at the hearing proceed for damages.—Angell v. Bennett, Case No. 387.

Evidence of special damage may be given under a general allegation.—West v. The Uncle Sam, Case No. 17,427.

Where the libel for damage to cargo alleges that the same was caused by certain specific faults, no others can be set up at the trial.—Soule v. Rodocanachi, Case No. 13,178.

A libel in personam brought solely for an accounting by one of four part owners against only two others (all claiming by an equitable title) cannot be maintained as a suit for wages, though the libelant rendered services on board the vessel as ship's carpenter.—Kellum v. Emerson, Case No. 7,669.

There is no technical rule of variance in admiralty causes.—The Cambridge, Case No. 2,334; The Clement, Id. 2,879; West v. Silver Wire & Skirt Mfg. Co., Id. 17,425; Same v. The Uncle Sam, Id. 17,427.

A variance in pleading is immaterial if the opposite party is not surprised.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,373.

A charter party under seal, made out in the name of a person who acted merely as agent for another, without stating that fact, is admissible in evidence on a libel for breach of contract brought by the principal.—Talbot v. Wakeman, Case No. 13,731; Id. 13,731a.

A party who sets up an admiralty lien which fails cannot set up and rely upon a common-law or statutory lien. Case No. 13,788 reversed.—Taylor v. Commonwealth, Case No. 13,787.

When a libel is filed claiming a forfeiture of a vessel, and the facts do not authorize the forfeiture alleged, but show an offense against other provisions of the same law under which the forfeiture is alleged to have accrued, the libel will be dismissed.—United States v. The Hunter, Case No. 15,428.

A libel on a bottomry bond claimed the freight as hypothecated contrary to the tenor of the bond. The bond, made part of the libel and referred to as the foundation of the hypothecation, showed that the freight was not hypothecated, and could not be demanded. Held, that the variance was immaterial.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,373.

In order to entitle either party to the benefit of a variance, objection must be taken when the evidence is offered at the trial, and it comes too late if made after the evidence is closed and the cause is under argument. The evidence must be material.—The Kirkland, Case No. 4,181.

Variations between the contract sued on and the pleadings and proofs, although sufficient in law to defeat the action, will not be so regarded in admiralty, in a case where substantial justice can be done.—Talbot v. Wakeman, Case No. 13,731a.

Objections for variance will not be allowed after the evidence is closed and the argument for the defense begun.—Dunstan v. The R. R. Kirkland, Case No. 4,181.

A court of admiralty is not restrained from doing substantial justice by mere forms or technicalities.—Dexter v. Munroe, Case No. 3,863.

A claimant, who fails to put his objections upon the record, will be deemed to have waived them by appearing and contesting the case upon the merits.—The Detroit, Case No. 3,832.

Objections to defects of form in a libel in admiralty should be raised by special exception under rule 24. If the exceptions in an answer are not insisted upon at the opening of the trial, they will be considered as waived.—White v. The Cynthia, Case No. 17,546a.

On a libel for the nondelivery of goods the want of averment of ownership in the libelant is waived where the point is not raised in any way in the answer.—The Ville De Paris, Case No. 16,942.

Impertinent and irrelevant allegations in an answer will be stricken out on motion.—The Gustavia, Case No. 5,876.

§ 91. Petitions and proceedings thereon.

The court will not, upon a summary application of a claimant, inquire into damages caused him by an unfounded arrest of his ship.—The Oriole, Case No. 10,573.

Nor will it assume power to coerce parties into issues not raised in the pleadings filed in the cause.—The Oriole, Case No. 10,573.

A question of jurisdiction should not be disposed of on motion, but on hearing.—Cushing v. Laird, Case No. 3,508.

Property will not be discharged from the custody of the court on motion supported by affidavits, on the ground that it is the property of the United States. This question should be raised by claim and answer.—The Othello, Case No. 2,483.

Whether custody of a vessel by a sheriff under a writ alleged to be void is such as to prevent a court of admiralty from acquiring jurisdiction should not be determined on motion.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,721.

A prior decree on the same cause of action, as a defense in an admiralty cause in favor of the party for whom it was rendered, should be given in evidence, and not set up by summary motion to prevent further hearing or to try the fact upon affidavits.—Reed v. The Fanny, Case No. 11,645a.

Questions as to the validity of bottomry claims will not be entertained on motion and notice.—French v. The Superb, Case No. 5,103a.

Where a paper has been intrusted to libelant for the benefit of both parties, the court, on motion, will order its production before answer. But a letter addressed to libelant, forming part of a contract, is not such a paper.—The Voyageur De La Mer, Case No. 17,025.

A motion to set aside an arrest for irregularity in libelant's proceedings will not be denied of course merely because not made at the earliest practicable day.—Martin v. Walker, Case No. 9,170.

Affidavits on motions incidental to a suit, when the facts cannot be supposed to be peculiarly within the knowledge of a party, may be made by his attorneys and proctors.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,096.

The strict rules of the common law are not applicable to admiralty practice. The proctor is, in many cases, in point of fact, dominus litis, clothed with all the authority of the party himself.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,096.

Without regard to that distinction, courts proceeding according to the civil law admit proctors to exercise all the functions of attorneys at law.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,096.

A motion to discharge respondent from arrest on the ground that the libelant has no legal cause of action against him will not be granted where the affidavits read upon the motion in behalf of the respective parties are contradictory as to the merits of the cause.—Wicks v. Ellis, Case No. 17,614.

Where admiralty records have been loosely kept, depositions may be read to prove that a certain order was made in the cause.—Jones v. Walker, Case No. 7,506.

V. EVIDENCE, AND TAKING AND FILING PROOFS.

§ 93. Rules of evidence and mode of proof in general.

The admiralty courts are not bound by the rules of evidence applied in common-law courts, and they may take notice of matters not strictly proved.—The J. F. Spencer, Case No. 7,315.

A court of admiralty, being judge both of the law and fact, is not confined to the strict rules of the common law, in respect to the admission of evidence.—Elwell v. Martin, Case No. 4,425.

The state laws of evidence are not applied in admiralty, and interested witnesses are not excluded except in certain cases of necessity.—The Independence, Case No. 7,014.

State statutes admitting parties as witnesses do not apply in admiralty.—The Australia, Case No. 667; The William Jarvis, Id. 17,697.

Where respondent's counsel does not object to the examination of the libelants themselves as witnesses, the court will receive their evidence.—Ferrara v. The Talent, Case No. 4,745.

Testimony given viva voce in open court should be taken down by way of narrative, and not by way of questions and answers.—The Syracuse, Case No. 13,718.

Upon the question of the bona fides of the purchaser of a vessel from one who, as mortgagor, was permitted to retain possession thereof, the court will determine the facts upon the principles which govern trials by jury.—The Romp, Case No. 12,030.

A proceeding in rem is not within the statute of 1789, which authorizes an order to produce books and writings on the trial of actions at law.—United States v. Twenty-Eight Packages of Pins, Case No. 16,561.

The testimony of the libelants themselves in an action in rem, the one for the other, although legally admissible, ought to be narrowly scrutinized, and received with caution.—Graham v. Hoskins, Case No. 5,669.

The testimony of a ship's crew, being joint libelants, each swearing for the other, will be received with great caution. The court will be more inclined to credit the master of the vessel, when the evidence between them is contradictory, and he has no interest in the action.—The Swallow, Case No. 13,665.

When there is an irreconcilable conflict in the testimony of witnesses, and circumstances of suspicion attach to the credit of them on both sides, the balance of evidence will be regarded as in favor of the party having the greatest number.—The Napoleon, Case No. 10,015.

A copy of a survey of a vessel, not purporting to have been made by any one connected with her, is not admissible against her, no witness able to prove or disprove its correctness being called or shown to be within reach.—The Vivid, Case No. 16,978.

Copies of documents relating to the condemnation and sale of a vessel were certified by the British consul to be copies of official documents on file in his office, and had been proved by deposition a considerable time before the trial, so that the parties were not taken by surprise. Held, that they were admissible in evidence.—The J. F. Spencer, Case No. 7,315.

Shipping articles, being the proper and usual documents of the ship for the voyage, are in the admiralty always admitted as evidence of the terms of hire, even of the master, or his apprentice, but the evidence is not conclusive.—Willard v. Dorr, Case No. 17,680.

A foreign master, who understands and speaks English imperfectly, will not be charged upon his declarations or admissions in that language, without clear proof that he well understood the meaning of what was addressed to him and that used by him in reply.—The Lotty, Case No. 8,524.

Papers which had been proved by deposition a considerable time before the trial held admissible in the admiralty without strict proof.—The J. F. Spencer, Case No. 7,315.

The allegations of one of the parties in a libel are not evidence for him unless called for by the other side, and are then to be weighed as they deserve, without requiring, in all cases, more than one witness to overcome them.—Jay v. Almy, Case No. 7,236.

Neither party can contradict by proof the averments set forth in his pleading, and the opposite party is entitled to rely thereon as an admission of facts.—Totten v. The Pluto, Case No. 14,106.

The answer to the libel, though on oath, is not evidence; but a party may be examined on interrogatories on the demand of the adverse party, and the answers are evidence in the case.—The Australia, Case No. 667.

The rule in equity requiring two witnesses, or one witness and strong corroborative circumstances, to overcome the denial in the answer, does not obtain in admiralty.—Sherwood v. Hall, Case No. 12,777; United States v. The Matilda, Id. 15,741; Hutson v. Jordan, Id. 6,959; Eads v. The H. D. Bacon, Id. 4,232.

How far the sworn answer of the respondent may be referred to, as in the nature of suppletory proof, or in aid of presumptions raised by other proofs in the cause.—The Crusader, Case No. 3,456; Hutson v. Jordan, Case No. 6,959.

A claim to a vessel and cargo filed in an admiralty cause, though sworn to, is not evidence.—The Thomas and Henry, Case No. 13,919.

Answers under oath to special interrogatories are evidence in the cause, as well in favor of, as against, the party answering.—The David Pratt, Case No. 3,597.

Respondent's answer upon oath in reply to interrogatories does not, in admiralty, constitute positive evidence in his own favor.—Cushman v. Ryan, Case No. 3,515.

Answers to special interrogatories are not conclusive, and will not control when opposed to the weight of the other proof or open to suspicion.—The L. B. Goldsmith, Case No. 8,152.

Answers to interrogatories addressed to garnishees holding the proceeds of a vessel, in a libel for a tort committed by such vessel, held not evidence in their favor on a libel by another to recover such funds as owner.—Cushing v. Laird, Case No. 3,509.

§ 96. Depositions.

The oral cross-examination of witnesses on a commission abroad may be allowed as a condition of waiving objection of irregularity in the motion for the commission.—The Louisiana, Case No. 8,536.

A deposition, entitled in the district court, but not received by the clerk until after the trial there, and not sent up as a part of the record of that court, cannot be read on appeal.—The Buckeye State, Case No. 2,085.

The depositions of witnesses for claimant will not be suppressed because taken before answer, where prejudice to libelant does not appear.—The Pride of The Ocean, Case No. 11,419.

Where an application was made for a commission to examine a witness in the East Indies, it appearing that no one was known who could be named as commissioner, except the wife of the witness, she was named as commissioner.—The Norway, Case No. 10,356.

Evidence taken must be in writing—The Boston, Case No. 1,673.

In a suit for collision by the master of a vessel in behalf of the cargo owners, libelant cannot read in evidence a deposition taken in behalf of the owners of the vessel in a suit by them for the same collision.—The John H. Starin, Case No. 7,351.

When a witness is examined de bene esse out of court in an admiralty cause by the claimants, and is cross-examined by the libelant, who reads the cross-examination in support of his action, he cannot then except to the competency of the witness because interested in the cause, and exclude his testimony given in chief for the claimants.—The Osceola, Case No. 10,602.

Notwithstanding an order of court closing all testimony in a cause after a limited time under a commission, the court will enlarge it upon proof of newly-discovered evidence which the party could not procure to be taken under such commission, the same having come to his knowledge after the execution thereof.—The Ruby, Case No. 12,103.

VI. HEARING OR TRIAL, AND REHEARING.

§ 97. Course and conduct of hearing.

Libels or petitions against a vessel are heard by a court of admiralty in any order in which they are brought up.—The Fanny, Case No. 4,638.

A suit in admiralty will not be dismissed for neglect to prosecute, where it was placed on the calendar and noticed immediately after issue joined, but was not called for trial, by reason of the accidental absence of witnesses.—Chambers v. The Henry Kneeland, Case No. 2,581a.

A libel was dismissed for delay in prosecuting the same, where libelant refused the option of going to trial on the libel and answer and the replication filed on the day appointed for the special hearing.—Douglass v. The Washington, Case No. 4,033.

In a suit to enforce a bottomry bond executed in a distant foreign country, though an attested copy thereof is not admissible in evidence, yet, being produced, the court will grant a continuance, that the original may be procured.—The Jerusalem, Case No. 7,293.

Time given to permit production of evidence of payment of money to a third person at seaman's request alleged by way of set-off to his claim for wages.—Ingraham v. Albee, Case No. 7,044.

Before the defendant can be heard in his defense, or introduce evidence in the cause, he must appear and contest the suit, either by exceptions to the libel or by answering it. If he does neither, the court will hear and adjudge the cause ex parte, upon the evidence offered by the libelant.—The David Pratt, Case No. 3,597.

Objections to an action merely formal in their character cannot be taken on final hearing.—Furniss v. The Magoun, Case No. 5,163.

A statement by the advocate of the party, in open court, the day after the hearing, made by authority of the party, may be taken as an admission in contradiction of the evidence submitted by him.—The Harry, Case No. 6,147.

If libelant's proctor negotiates the postponement of the trial, he cannot thereafter allege ignorance of the fact that the answer was on file.—Warner v. The Ralph Post, Case No. 17,187.

There is no right in admiralty to a trial by jury unless given by statute.—Gillet v. Pierce, Case No. 5,437.

By the Revised Statutes (section 566), however, the law is changed, and the right to a trial by jury is expressly given in the class of cases specified in Act 1845.—Gillet v. Pierce, Case No. 5,437.

The party demanding a jury must bring himself by his pleadings within the provisions of the act.—Gillet v. Pierce, Case No. 5,437.

An information in rem against the thing itself, in a case of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, is not a suit at common law, but an admiralty proceeding, and does not require a trial by a jury.—Clark v. United States, Case No. 2,837.

§ 99. Decision.

The federal courts are governed, in commercial and maritime cases, by the general, and not by the local, law.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. The George, Case No. 9,981.

Where a reciprocity of decision in certain cases in admiralty is necessary, the court of one country is often guided by the customs, laws, and decisions of the tribunals of another in similar cases.—Thompson v. The Catharina, Case No. 13,949.

Our courts of admiralty are not bound by the decision of a foreign court, not of admiralty, based on different principles than those here recognized, and leading to a different result, though professedly deciding according to our law.—Lang v. Holbrook, Case No. 8,057.

An action in a federal court for an assault and battery on a vessel anchored within the limits of a county in Alabama is governed by the maritime law of the United States giving the master the right to inflict reasonable chastise-ment, and not by the law of Alabama, which prohibits a master from inflicting chastisement on his servant, as the general maritime law was adopted by the constitution of the United States, and no state can have a separate and distinct maritime law by itself.—Roberts v. Skolfield, Case No. 11,917.

The case of a French seaman for wages on a French vessel will be determined by the marine law of France.—Moran v. Baudin, Case No. 9,785.

Municipal ordinances concerning vessels are binding only as police regulations. Beyond that they have no force in the admiralty courts. But they may be read, and the court will determine for itself their application to the subject-matter. —The Palmetto, Case No. 10,699.

Admiralty causes are to be determined upon equitable principles, and according to the rules of natural justice.—Brown v. Burrows, Case No. 1,995.

Courts of admiralty, so far as their powers extend, act as courts of equity.—Brown v. Lull, Case No. 2,018.

On a libel by the mortgagee of a vessel which was left in possession of the owner, admiralty will determine the bona fides of the sale of the vessel by the owner to a third person upon the principles which govern trials by jury.—The Romp, Case No. 12,030.

In an action in rem against a vessel the court cannot take cognizance of collateral equities to enforce them against persons not made parties to the proceedings, where such decree may be prejudicial to their interests.—The Leonidas, Case No. 8,262.

In a case of seizure for violation of the steamboat inspection law, the court, in case of default, will exercise a discretion, according to Rev. St. § 923, whether to require proofs or not.—United States v. The Mollie, Case No. 15,795.

On a libel of forfeiture (Act 1813, § 6) for violation of the law relating to fishing bounties, in cases of default there must be some hearing before decree of forfeiture.—United States v. The Lion, Case No. 15,607.

This may be by merely examining the libel and the return of the marshal, with evidence that the owners had actual notice, and willfully made default, with knowledge of the material facts.— United States v. The Lion, Case No. 15,607.

Where, on a libel for wages, no one appears for the vessel, the amount claimed must be legally ascertained before the vessel will be sold.— Sanders v. The Sea Fowl, Case No. 12,296a.

Interest is allowed on liquidated demands in admiralty the same as at law, and on seamen's wages from the time they are due.—The Swallow, Case No. 13,665.

In a suit upon stale claims, not resting upon express contract, the court, in rendering a decree for libelant, may refuse interest.—Mitchell v. Kelsey, Case No. 9,664.

On an information of forfeiture under the registration laws, where the jury render a special verdict, the court cannot decide a question of law depending upon facts not found.—Peterson v. United States, Case No. 11,036.

Where the amount involved in an admiralty suit is not sufficient to permit a review by the supreme court of the judgment of the circuit court, a general finding of facts and law by the latter court is sufficient, under Act Feb. 16, 1875.—One Thousand Two Hundred and Sixty-Five Vitrified Pipes, Case No. 10,536.

The decree in admiralty must correspond with the issues in the pleadings, and the opinion of the court on collateral matters should not be incorporated therein.—Ward v. The Fashion, Cases Nos. 17,154, 17,155.

Where a point is reserved for further argument and consideration after a trial and decree in the case, it must be upon the pleadings and proofs as they stood on the original hearing. —Abbey v. The Robert L. Stevens, Case No. 8.

Where a court has jurisdiction of the res in a proceeding in rem, the record of its decree cannot be collaterally attacked for errors and irregularities appearing therein.—Otis v. The Rio Grande, Case No. 10,613.

In a libel on a bottomry bond, the overruling of a plea alleging the disability of libelants to sue, on the ground that at the time the suit was brought and the plea was filed they were alien enemies, does not prevent respondents from pleading in bar that at the time the contract was entered into libelants were alien enemies, and for that reason the contract was void.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,373.

In a joint libel against two or more persons for a marine tort, the court has authority to dismiss the libel as to one of them, even if there be some evidence against him, for the purpose of his being used as a witness, if the purposes of justice require it.—Elwell v. Martin, Case No. 4,425.

A libel in admiralty was dismissed pro forma for want of jurisdiction in order to allow an immediate appeal.—Swaim v. The Franklin, Case No. 13,660.

After pertinent evidence offered involving the merits, plaintiff cannot suffer a nonsuit, so as not to be barred, except by consent of the opposite party, or on leave given by the court for sufficient reason.—Folger v. The Robert G. Shaw, Case No. 4,899.

Where a husband, with the assent of his wife, filed a libel as owner for injury to a canal boat, wholly owned by her, and she gave material testimony at the trial, held, that she would be estopped from bringing another suit, and the libel could be maintained.—The Tillie, Case No. 14,049.

A motion will not lie to review a decree after writ of error lodged.—McGrath v. Candalero, Case No. 8,810.

Summary rehearings on motion are granted only during the term at which the decree was made. In defaulted actions this is limited to 10 days, irrespective of the term. (Rule 40.). —Snow v. Edwards, Case No. 13,145.

The court will not, on mere motion at a subsequent term, set aside a decree made at the hearing.—The Oriental, Case No. 10,569a.

A rehearing or review cannot be had after the end of the term at which a final decree was entered.—Sloman v. Wyssman, Case No. 12,955a; The New England, Case No. 10,151; The Martha, Case No. 9,144.

It is discretionary with the court to entertain, after a decree, a motion for a reargument on the question of costs.—Elliott v. The Leah H. Miller, Case No. 4,393a.

A new trial is not ordered in an admiralty suit, on the mere ground of oversight in not putting in evidence which might have been put in.—The Francis Wright, Case No. 5,044.

A rehearing in a collision case will not be allowed in the district court on the ground that since the trial libelant's witnesses testified differently in another suit, growing out of the same collision, as such evidence is admissible on appeal.—The John Cooker, Case No. 7,337.

The claimants of an informer's share after condemnation and sale of forfeited property may seek a review of a judgment or decree of distribution made by the district court.— Wheaton v. United States, Case No. 17,487.

After the term has passed in ordinary cases, and after 10 days in defaulted cases, the court can entertain a libel of review.—Snow v. Edwards, Case No. 13,145; Janvrin v. Smith, Case No. 7,220.

A petition for review, filed after the term at which the decree was rendered, and after it had been executed, will be entertained by the court, when actual fraud is charged, and the libelant is without fault, and would otherwise be without remedy.—Northwestern Car Co. v. Hopkins, Case No. 10,334.

A rehearing in the circuit court after the lapse of several terms since the decree was entered in a collision case will not be granted where the supreme court, in a libel by the other party, found the facts differently.—Petty v. Merrill, Case No. 11,051.

In a libel for review by defendant in a defaulted action, he can contradict the officer's return in the action.—Snow v. Edwards, Case No. 13,145.

VII. COMMISSIONERS AND PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THEM.

§ 101. Reference to commissioners.

A court of admiralty, on its own motion or at the instance of the parties, may submit any question of fact to commissioners or referees for their opinion and advice.—Lee v. Thompson, Case No. 8,202.

Where it appears on the hearing in court that the main question is one as to an account, the court may properly refer the case to a commissioner.—Shaw v. Collyer, Case No. 12,718.

The court will order a referee to ascertain and report the actual constituents of a bottomry lien, the validity of which is contested.—Furniss v. The Magoun, Case No. 5,163.

Where the rights of parties depend upon questions of nautical skill or seamanship in the management of a vessel, the court may refer the subject to persons skilled in navigation, and act upon their report thereon.—The Emily, Case No. 4,453.

The legality or propriety of an order of reference cannot be impeached upon exception to the report.—The Rhode Island, Case No. 11,740a.

Under an order of reference to ascertain the amount, if any, due libelant, entered by consent, after defendant's default, defendant can only contest libelant's claim.—Mitchell v. Kelsey, Case No. 9,663.

Commissioners appointed to state damages should not hear ex parte evidence without notice to the other party.—The Lively, Case No. 8,403.

A neglect at the trial to object to the competency of evidence waives the right to object to the same evidence on a subsequent reference to the clerk.—The Trial, Case No. 14,170.

Application to the court in the case of improper or irregular proceedings by a commissioner, or to control the proceedings before him, can only be had on a certificate as to his proceedings.—The E. C. Scranton, Case No. 4,271; Id. 4,272.

§ 103. Report.

The clerk's report in matters referred to him should state facts and conclusions, and not detail the evidence at length.—The Trial, Case No. 14,170.

A report of a commissioner as to the amount of libelant's claim is not objectionable, in omitting a detail of the allowances, unless defendant has demanded a specification.—Mitchell v. Kelsey, Case No. 9,663.

An award, made under a rule directing the referee to determine the amount due and the question of costs, is sufficiently certain if it state the amount due, and that libelant is entitled to costs, without stating the amount of the costs.—The Liverpool Packet, Case No. 8,407.

The decision of commissioners or referees to whom a question of fact is submitted, unlike the verdict of a jury, is not conclusive thereon.—Lee v. Thompson, Case No. 8,202.

Commissioners appointed to award a full indemnity for certain losses will be presumed to have fulfilled their duty, and the compensation allowed by them will be presumed to be a full indemnity for a loss.—Brown v. Lull, Case No. 2,018.

Where the report of the commissioner was not excepted to, it is not necessary that the minutes of his testimony should be brought up.—The City of Paris, Case No. 2,767.

An objection to a clerk's report on a reference to ascertain the amount of damages cannot be taken by argument, but must be by formal exception.—Howe v. The Lexington, Case No. 6,767b.

Findings of a commissioner on the merits, when his authority is limited by the order of reference to matters of fact and evidence, cannot be brought up by exceptions to his report. The remedy is a motion to reject the report or for a rehearing on the merits.—The New Jersey, Case No. 10,162.

Objections to the admission of evidence before a commissioner cannot be raised by exception to his report.—The Transit, Case No. 14,138; The Emilie, Case No. 4,451.

Objections to rulings of commissioner on admission of evidence, on reference to ascertain damages, may be brought up on exceptions after report made, or on certificate pending reference.—The Beaver, Case No. 1,200.

Objections to the exclusion of evidence cannot be raised by an exception to the report, but must be raised by an application to the court before the report is made.—The E. C. Scranton, Case No. 4,272.

The credibility and reliability of the witnesses on the reference cannot be investigated on exceptions to the report unless the objections rest wholly on questions of law.—Burton v. The Commander in Chief, Case No. 2,215.

The decree cannot be attacked by exceptions to the commissioner's report thereunder.—Waterman v. Morgan, Case No. 17,259; Burton v. The Commander in Chief, Id. 2,215.

A party cannot, by exceptions to the report of a commissioner to compute damages, raise a question on the merits which was previously decided by the court.—Hovey v. The Sarah E. Brown, Case No. 6,744.

An objection to the regularity of a commissioner's report cannot be brought forward by exception to the report, but should be raised by motion founded upon the irregularity.—The Columbus, Case No. 3,041.

An exception to a commissioner's report draws in question only the reasons upon which the report is founded.—The Columbus, Case No. 3,041.

The court will not hear questions arising on a reference to a commissioner to compute damages at the instance of the parties, unless they have submitted them to the commissioner, and he has decided them, or declined to do so.—The E. C. Scranton, Case No. 4,271.

An exception to the method adopted by a commissioner in ascertaining damages is unavailing, unless the report or the exception show what the method was.—The Transit, Case No. 14,138.

§ 105. Confirmation or recommittal of report.

The conclusion of the commissioner upon a disputed fact will be accepted by the court, unless there is a palpable preponderance of evidence against it.—Holmes v. Dodge, Case No. 6,637; The Narragansett, Id. 10,020.

The decision of experts to which a cause is referred will be adopted by the court unless there is a manifest preponderance of testimony against it.—The Isaac Newton, Case No. 7,090.

The assessor's report of the damages sustained in an action for the wrongful conversion of a whale will not be disturbed unless it be shown to be wrong.—Taber v. Jenny, Case No. 13,720.

An award will not be recommitted because libelant's counsel omitted to call the attention of the referee to a matter which might have influenced him to increase the amount of salvage.—The Liverpool Packet, Case No. 8,407.

VIII. DECREE AND ENFORCEMENT OR VACATING THEREOF, SALE OF PROPERTY AND DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDS.

§ 106. Rendition, form, and requisites.

All decrees in admiralty are deemed to be enrolled as of the term in which they are made.—The New England, Case No. 10,151.

In a suit in personam, defendants not being within the district, and not appearing, the decree will go only against the property attached, and a sale ordered where it consists only of specific articles.—Boyd v. Urquhart, Case No. 1,750.

Such sale will be only of the right of the debtor.—Boyd v. Urquhart, Case No. 1,750.

§ 107. Amendment, opening, or vacating.

The court has power to vary its decree.—Snow v. Edwards, Case No. 13,145.

After the lapse of the term in which a decree is rendered in a prize case, the authority of the court to revoke or alter it is extinct.—The Major Barbour, Case No. 8,984.

A court of admiralty has no general power—at least, after expiration of the term—to set aside a final decree on the ground of oversight, inadvertence, or mistake.—The Illinois, Case No. 7,003.

A decree of the district court will not be opened, and an amended answer allowed to be filed, on the ground of the subsequent discovery of a prior decision of the circuit court in conflict therewith.—Thomassen v. Whitwell, Case No. 13,930.

A decree against a vessel will not be opened, and the sale under it set aside, where the shipowners, with full notice of the proceedings, did not make application until after they were all perfected.—Seaver v. The Carroni, Case No. 12,593.

A party seeking to set aside proceedings against him must embody all objections presumably known to him at the time in one application.—Nelson v. Bell, Case No. 10,101a.

The 10 days allowed by rule 40 for setting aside a decree are restrictive, and a motion made after such time cannot be entertained.—The Illinois, Case No. 7,003.

It is no impeachment of a decree of sale of a vessel that the claim on which the libel was brought was purchased pending the suit.—Seaver v. The Carroni, Case No. 12,593.

After a decision for libelants in rem for freight and demurrage, it cannot be objected that freight has been found due libelants in a pending suit in personam.—Brookman v. Sixty Barrels of Molasses, Case No. 1,941a.

A motion to open a decree in admiralty entered by default must be made within 10 days days after entry; otherwise it must be denied.—Northrop v. Gregory, Case No. 10,327.

The motion must be accompanied by the proposed answer or a statement of the ground of defense, to enable the court to judge of its merits.—Northrop v. Gregory, Case No. 10,327.

A default decree in favor of the master was opened where his lien was disputed and it did not clearly appear that the sum claimed was due.—The George Prescott, Case No. 5,339.

Default decrees in admiralty, founded upon valid claims, held should not be set aside.—The George Prescott, Case No. 5,339.

Where a seaman libeled a vessel, and obtained a decree by default, it will be set aside, where claimant shows that libelant had contracted personally with the master, who was navigating the vessel on a lay.—The Caroline Casey, Case No. 2,421a.

Where the proceeds on a sale under a default decree are not sufficient to pay the lien, the default will not be set aside on petition of one alleging an inferior lien.—The Grapeshot, Case No. 5,702.

The court may receive evidence offered by defendant's counsel, where defendant was absent at the time of hearing, and, through ignorance, failed to answer.—The David Pratt, Case No. 3,597.

A court of admiralty may execute the decree of another court of admiralty.—The Centurion, Case No. 2,554.

The federal admiralty courts will carry into effect the sentences and decrees of foreign admiralty courts.—Otis v. The Rio Grande, Case No. 10,613.

An admiralty decree is not a lien on land, and has never been treated as a lien on land in either England or this country.—Ward v. Chamberlain, Case No. 17,152.

Admiralty decrees can only be enforced in the federal courts in the mode and by the process properly ordained by acts of congress and rules of court for their execution.—Ward v. Chamberlain, Case No. 17,152.

An admiralty decree can only be enforced only by an attachment or a capias against the person of the defendant, or a fieri facias against his goods and chattels. The admiralty court has no power to issue an execution against his lands.—Ward v. Chamberlain, Case No. 17,152.

No notice need be given the opposite party of a final decree before proceedings to enforce it.—Gaines v. Travis, Case No. 5,180.

A final decree for payment of money in a suit in rem is enforced, as prescribed by rule 21, by execution.—The Blanche Page, Case No. 1,524.

Taking out a fieri facias in the first instance without success does not prevent resorting to process of capias ad satisfaciendum, or to an attachment under Rule 21, providing that on a decree for the payment of money libelant may have, at his election, an attachment to compel defendant to perform the decree, or an execution against the property, or, for want thereof, against his body.—The Delaware, Case No. 3,762.

A decree from which an appeal may be taken cannot be executed within 10 days after it has been rendered; but the delay is for no other purpose than to favor the right of appeal, and the mere entry of the decree is notice to all parties.—Gaines v. Travis, Case No. 5,180.

Where, after a decree in admiralty against two vessels for damages which does not apportion the same or settle the equities between their claimants, it is shown that the claimants of one vessel and their sureties stand in the relation of sureties for the claimants of the other and their sureties, the court, on application of the former, will stay proceedings against them until after return of execution first issued against the latter.—The Helen R. Cooper, Case No. 6,335.

If the property attached in a suit in personam against defendants not being within the district be money in the registry, the decree will be satisfied therefrom.—Boyd v. Urquhart, Case No. 1,750.

Under Act Cong. March 2, 1799 (1 Stat. p. 696, § 90), the notice of sale, in cases of condemnation under the act, must be published every day for 15 days in the newspapers directed by the act.—The Hornet, Case No. 6,704.

Under Rules 47 and 48 of the district court, notice of sale under venditioni exponas (except on condemnation of property on seizure by the United States) must be published for six days, and the sale will be set aside if this full number of publications is not made.—The Hornet, Case No. 6,704.

The court has no discretionary power to refuse or postpone an order of sale, where a libelant in rem establishes a clear right.—Davis v. New Brig, Case No. 3,643.

Where the purchaser on a marshal's sale takes possession without paying the price, the court will enforce by summary process either a redelivery of the property in specie or the payment of the purchase money.—The Phebe, Case No. 11,066.

A court of admiralty may compel a purchaser at a judicial sale to complete his purchase. The order need not be directed to any particular person, service of it upon the defaulting purchaser being sufficient.—The Kate Williams, Case No. 7,623.

On a motion for an attachment for contempt in refusing to comply with an order of court requiring the purchaser at a judicial sale of a tug to pay in the purchase money, the failure of the marshal to return the writ of venditioni exponas, and file a report of sale, is cured by an order of confirmation.—The Kate Williams, Case No. 7,623.

A proctor bidding at a sale is personally liable where his agency is not known to the marshal.—The Kate Williams, Case No. 7,623.

The fact that the bidder at a judicial sale of a tug was acting as agent for another person, and that the marshal might have inferred this from his being an attorney at law, is no defense to a motion for an attachment for contempt for refusing to pay in the purchase price in obedience to an order of court.—The Kate Williams, Case No. 7,623.

There is no warranty of a complete outfit on the sale of a vessel "as she lies," though the published notice read "her boats, tackle, apparel, and furniture."—The Kate Williams, Case No. 7,623.

The master of a tug whose tow is lost, through his negligence, is not bound to defend the tug against a valid claim for such loss, nor notify other persons having liens thereon, and he may purchase the same at a sale under a decree therefor.—The E. W. Gorgas, Case No. 4,585.

A sale under an admiralty decree, obtained without fraud, cuts off all claims of the builders of the boat, her owners and creditors.—Stewart v. Fagan, Case No. 13,426.

Foreign attachments are not proceedings in rem, and the sale of a vessel on adjudication therein will not give the purchaser a title superior to that of a prior mortgagee.—Cole v. The Brandt, Case No. 2,978.

The master of a tug whose tow is lost, through his negligence, is not bound to defend the tug against a valid claim for such loss, nor notify other persons having liens thereon, and he may purchase the same at a sale under a decree therefor.—The E. W. Gorgas, Case No. 4,585.

Sales in admiralty must be confirmed by the court before the purchaser takes the property.—The New Hampshire, Case No. 10,160.

Where the purchaser of a vessel at a judicial sale, not confirmed by the court, obtained possession of her without authority, and expended labor upon her, and a resale was afterwards ordered, he was not entitled to maintain a libel for his services.—The New Hampshire, Case No. 10,160.

The purchasers of property under a decree in admiralty take subject to the power of the court to vacate the sale, when such action is necessary to promote the ends of justice.—The Sparkle, Case No. 13,207.

All persons are bound by a decree in admiralty on the point then in controversy. But those who become interested by a purchase, under orders and proceedings of a court of admiralty, are not bound by a decree as to right of property between libelants and claimants.—Jones v. Walker, Case No. 7,506.

A motion to set aside a sale will not be granted where the party has been guilty of inexcusable laches.—Pease v. The Napoleon, Case No. 10,883.

A delay of six months after knowledge of the sale is inexcusable laches.—Pease v. The Napoleon, Case No. 10,883.

An application to set aside a sale of a vessel, regularly made, denied in the case of a delay of three months, where the parties could not be put back to their original position.—United States v. The Austin, Case No. 14,479.

The sale of a vessel under a default decree will not be set aside where it brought full value.—The George Prescott, Case No. 5,339.

An application will not lie to set aside a sale by default in admiralty, where it is not entitled in the same cause, and it does not appear that the promovents were parties or privies to that action.—Freeman v. The Albany, Case No. 5,083a.

A sale will be set aside for fraud of the purchaser, or of the officer who conducted it, or for fraudulent negligence or misconduct in any other person connected with it.—The Sparkle, Case No. 13,207.

A sale in admiralty was set aside where there was a combination between the persons in possession of the vessel and libelant, and the price was grossly inadequate, and petitioner was allowed to intervene and defend.—The Sparkle, Case No. 13,207.

Where property has been ordered to be sold on process in rem, the gross proceeds of the sale, deducting only the expenses of the sale, are paid into the registry.—The Phebe, Case No. 11,065.

§ 110. Enforcement against sureties or stipulators.

Under a stipulation for value, making the rules of court a part thereof, where the decree is in excess of the amount, interest is recoverable.—The Belle, Case No. 1,270.

The surety in a suit in personam cannot be compelled to pay more than the sum stated, although the stipulation is conditioned to pay such sum as shall be awarded by the final decree.—Brown v. Burrows, Case No. 1,996.

The amount due upon an accounting between the majority and minority owners cannot be applied to diminish the liability of the stipulators on a bond given for the safe return of a vessel.—The Susan E. Voorhis, Case No. 13,633.

Sureties in stipulations or appeal bonds are not required to appear before the court for examination concerning their property after final decree.—The Blanche Page, Case No. 1,524.

The liability of sureties on a stipulation for value cannot be enforced by an attachment to compel them to comply with its stipulations.—The Blanche Page, Case No. 1,524.

A court of admiralty has no power to punish sureties on a stipulation for value for contempt in failing to comply with the provisions of the decree.—The Blanche Page, Case No. 1,524.

Under Acts Feb. 28, 1839, and Jan. 14, 1841, a surety in a stipulation in admiralty is exempt from imprisonment on execution when he would be exempt under like process from the state courts.—The Kentucky, Case No. 7,717.

Where the respondent in a suit in personam has gone beyond seas, process may issue against the bail on motion, though no execution against the principal has been returned non est inventus.—In re Snow, Case No. 13,141.

A summary judgment may be rendered on a stipulation in the nature of recognizance given for the delivery of property for the appraised value thereof and costs.—The Alligator, Case No. 248.

The real estate of the sureties in a stipulation in admiralty is subject to execution issued from the admiralty court.—The Kentucky, Case No. 7,717.

A special notice to the surety, of application for execution against him, is not necessary.—Holmes v. Dodge, Case No. 6,637.

In the case of a stipulation given on an arrest in personam, a final decree against the principal may be enforced by summary process of execution against both principal and surety, under rule 3.—Holmes v. Dodge, Case No. 6,637; Gaines v. Travis, Id. 5,180.

Such rule repeals the former practice, whereby an order to show cause why the stipulator should not fulfill his engagement was served before execution issued.—Holmes v. Dodge, Case No. 6,637.

After affirmance of the sentence of condemnation of the district court, for a breach of the revenue or nonimportation laws, the court will forthwith, on motion, give judgment against the claimant and his sureties, on the bond given upon the delivery of the cargo to him at the appraised value.—Nelson v. United States, Case No. 10,116.

Where the circuit court, on appeal by the claimant, decrees against him for a sum allowing of an appeal to the supreme court, which may be a supersedeas, the circuit court can enter no summary judgment against the sureties on the appeal bond until 10 days from its decree.—The New Orleans, Case No. 10,181.

Where, in the case of an appeal in admiralty transferred to another circuit, a commissioner in the former circuit certifies to the giving of a stipulation by respondents with sureties, but such stipulation is not filed in court, a summary judgment cannot be entered against the sureties on the affirmance of the decree.—Sawyer v. Oakman, Case No. 12,403.

Judgment on a bail bond or stipulation taken in a case arising under the revenue laws cannot, it seems, be rendered until after 20 days from the decree of condemnation, and then in open court.—McLellan v. United States, Case No. 8,895.

In proceedings in rem, upon a bond for the appraised value given jointly and severally, if one of the obligors dies, the court will proceed against the survivors, or, at the option of the plaintiffs, against the representative of the deceased also.—The Octavia, Case No. 10,423.

A decree against a stipulator, after his death, is void.—The Clara Davidson, Case No. 2,791.

The right of the libelant to summary judgment against the surviving stipulator is not affected by the death of the other stipulator, or by the fact that libelant had not exhausted his remedy against the claimant of the vessel.—The C. F. Ackerman, Case No. 2,564.

Money or goods in the hands of the marshal by order of this court are subject to any further order of court.—Coulter v. L'Esperanza, Case No. 3,277.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a petition for a surplus in the registry, though the application involves the settlement of partnership accounts.—The L. B. Goldsmith, Case No. 8,152.

Courts of admiralty have full jurisdiction, as incidental to proceedings in rem, to decree freight to the shipowner in proper cases.—The Nathaniel Hooper, Case No. 10,032.

By the forty-third rule, the party entitled to the remnant or surplus in court after a sale can only obtain it by petition or motion. Any person having an interest has a right to intervene pro interesse suo on due notice to adverse parties, whether his application may or may not involve the settlement of partnership accounts.—The L. B. Goldsmith, Case No. 8,152.

The claims of officers of the court for fees and expenses upon proceeds in the registry must be presented to the court for allowance.—The Phebe, Case No. 11,065.

In cases in which a common interest has been promoted by services of counsel which a mere selfish consideration of his client's interest would not have induced him to render, a part or even the whole of his compensation may occasionally be allowed from the general fund arising from the sale of the vessel.—The Wreath, Case No. 18,061.

If the evidence shows that certain parties not before the court were actual salvors, and entitled to compensation as such, it would be the duty of the court to retain their proportion in the registry subject to their order. In no event would such amount inure to the benefit of the claimants of the vessel.—The T. P. Leathers, Case No. 9,736.

A master, who has a right to sue in personam for wages, may proceed by summary petition against surplus proceeds in the registry.—The Stephen Allen, Case No. 13,361.

The decree of distribution does not follow the report of the auditor, as matter of course, because no exception has been taken thereto.—Harper v. New Brig, Case No. 6,090.

Where proceeds are prematurely ordered to be paid over, a rule to return will be granted.—The Ariadne, Case No. 526.

A creditor of libelant to whom money in court has been decreed to be paid cannot compel its appropriation to his debts.—Brackett v. The Hercules, Case No. 1,762.

On a libel by a bottomry holder, where both the mortgagee and owner appear and claim the proceeds, the court may decree distribution between the claimants, or require them to formally litigate their claims.—The Panama, Case No. 10,703.

In such proceeding the owner may set up in defense to the claim of the mortgagee that the mortgage is void for usury.—The Panama, Case No. 10,703.

The right of a surety in a stipulation to be paid out of the proceeds of the boat, which has been sold under his execution, is subordinate to the claims of those who have established liens thereon.—Carroll v. The Leathers, Case No. 2,455.

Sureties for the claimants, who are compelled to pay a salvage decree, are not entitled to priority over valid mortgages which antedated the salvage services.—Roberts v. The Huntsville, Case No. 11,904.

A libelant who consents to the release of a vessel libeled and seized under process waives his priority of claim as against subsequent libelants under whose libels the vessel is condemned and sold.—The A. R. Gray, Case No. 519.

IX. APPEAL.

Appeal from taxation of costs, see post, § 148. In salvage cases, see "Salvage," § 77.

§ 112. Appellate jurisdiction.

The circuit court of Massachusetts has no cognizance of causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction from the district court of Maine, except by appeal, and a writ of error thereon will be quashed.—McLellan v. United States, Case No. 8,895.

The court of appeals established by congress under the Articles of Confederation had full power to re-examine and reverse or affirm the sentences of the courts of admiralty established by the different states, though founded upon the verdicts of juries.—United States v. Bright, Case No. 14,647.

A seizure case triable by jury in the district court can be reviewed in the circuit court only on writ of error.—United States v. Fifteen Hogsheads of Brandy, Case No. 15,090.

An appeal will not lie from a decree pro forma in admiralty.—Hindley v. The Wellington, Case No. 6,513.

A petition by an informer to be paid his proportion out of proceeds in the registry after condemnation is an original suit in admiralty, and from the decree therein an appeal lies to the circuit court.—Westcot v. Bradford, Case No. 17,429.

The allowance or nonallowance of costs in an admiralty case being a matter within the discretion of the court, is not a subject of appeal.—Taylor v. Woods, Case No. 13,809.

An appeal lies from a decree of the district court refusing an order for the sale of a vessel on an application by one of two equal part owners.—Davis v. The Seneca, Case No. 3,651.

There is no appeal to the circuit court from a decree dismissing a libel in rem in admiralty for want of prosecution.—The Merchant, Case No. 9,436.

A decree awarding a certain rate of salvage of the proceeds, after deducting charges and expenses and fees of court, is not a final decree, but, at most, is only an interlocutory decree in the nature of a final decree.—The New England, Case No. 10,151.

A party may appeal from an interlocutory decree, having the effect of a final decree; or he may, at his election, wait until the final decree is positively entered, and then may enter an appeal.—The New England, Case No. 10,151.

To make a decree in a salvage case positively final, all the charges and expenses should be ascertained, and the salvage apportioned, and the rights of each salvor definitely fixed, so that he may appeal therefrom, if he chooses.—The New England, Case No. 10,151.

A decree in a suit in rem on a bottomry bond referring the case to a commissioner, to ascertain the amount, and report to the court, with liberty to either party to move to frame the decree thereon, is not final and appealable.—The Yuba, Case No. 18,192.

On a libel for condemnation of merchandise and gold coin, a decree directing that the coin should be deposited in the registry to await further orders is not final; and an appeal will lie from a decree, made over two years later, ordering the gold to be paid over to a claimant.—United States v. Canoe, Case No. 14,718.

A decree final in other respects is not converted into an interlocutory one because it directs a taxation of costs.—Craig v. The Hartford, Case No. 3,333.

A decree against a person served with process of foreign attachment, requiring him to pay the money into court as property of the respondent, is not final and appealable.—Cushing v. Laird, Case No. 3,510.

Where the only question in dispute is the recovery of a sum of money, the record must show the amount to give jurisdiction to the circuit court on appeal in admiralty.—Agnew v. Dorman, Case No. 100.

No appeal lies by any party from a decree of the district court in admiralty unless on his part the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of $50.—Shirley v. Titus, Case No. 12,796.

Appeals are allowed to the circuit court from decrees in admiralty in all cases where sum in dispute exceeds $50. (Act March 3, 1803).—Ayer v. The Glaucus, Case No. 683.

In a suit for an assault and battery on the high seas, no appeal can be sustained from a decree of the district court unless there be an ad damnum laid in the libel exceeding $50.—Jenks v. Lewis, Case No. 7,279.

An appeal lies to the circuit court in admiralty where the amount of the claim, with interest, amounts to more than $50 when the decree is entered.—Godfrey v. Gilmartin, Case No. 5,498.

On the sale of a vessel on a decree for wages amounting to more than $50, the proceeds, after paying charges, were less than $50. Held, that the owner was entitled to appeal, the wages being the matter in dispute.—The Enterprise, Case No. 4,497.

A suit in admiralty in which the libel claimed more than $50 is not appealable to the circuit court where libelant admitted that a sum less than $50 was all that was due him.—McGinnis v. Carlton, Case No. 8,799.

The respondent cannot appeal to the circuit court where the libel claimed $300 damages, and a decree was given for libelant for $40, and acquiesced in by him.—Greigg v. Reade, Case No. 5,804.

Though the jurisdiction of the circuit court is limited to cases involving more than $50, respondent may appeal from a judgment for no more than the sum tendered and paid into court by him, which libelants refused to accept. The tender was not an admission so as to reduce the amount in controversy below the jurisdictional limit.—Lubker v. The A. H. Quinby, Case No. 8,586.

On the erroneous refusal of an appeal by the district court in admiralty, application may be made to the circuit court, which will require the proper security to be given.—The Enterprise, Case No. 4,497.

§ 115. Preservation and reservation in lower court of grounds of review.

Where the amount due for supplies to a vessel is determined by report of commissioner before libelant's right to recover is established, no objection to allowances can be made on appeal which were not raised in the court below.—Harris v. Wheeler, Case No. 6,129.

§ 116. Parties.

On a joint decree against respondents for a maritime tort there may be separate appeals where respondents have severed in their pleadings, or jointly pleaded a general denial.—Thomas v. Lane, Case No. 13,902.

An appeal or writ of error will not lie in the name of a steamboat.—The Spark v. Lee Choi Chum, Case No. 13,206.

An appeal from a decree of the district court must be taken in open court before the adjournment sine die, unless a different period be prescribed by the court.—Norton v. Rich, Case No. 10,352; The New England, Id. 10,151.

If in either case an appeal is entered within the prescribed term, it relates back to the time of the decree, although actually entered in vacation.—The New England, Case No. 10,151.

Appeals in admiralty should be taken to the term of the circuit court next succeeding the term of the district court at which the decree was rendered. If not so taken they will be dismissed. (Rev. St. § 635, is inapplicable.).—The New England, Case No. 10,151; The Oriental, Id. 10,570; United States v. Five Thousand One Hundred Dollars in Specie, Id. 15,119; Same v. The Glamorgan, Id. 15,214.

An appeal from the district court is properly entered at the term of the circuit court begun next after the entry of the decree in the district court, though the term of the latter was not ended when the term of the circuit court began.—United States v. Certain Hogsheads of Molasses, Case No. 14,766.

After a final decree has been made by a district court sitting in admiralty, and the court has adjourned without day, the decree cannot be set aside or opened, so as to allow an appeal to the circuit court, a term whereof has intervened since the decree was made.—United States v. The Glamorgan, Case No. 15,214.

An appeal to the circuit court in admiralty is not regular unless appellant gives security for costs.—Chew v. Baker, Case No. 2,663; Hayford v. Griffith, Id. 6,263.

To effectuate an appeal so as to suspend execution, it is necessary for libelants to give security by stipulation within 10 days after decree is rendered (Dist. Ct. Rule 153), and also to serve upon claimants four days' notice of the names of the sureties proposed, and of the time and place of giving stipulation (Rule 154).—The Infanta, Case No. 7,031.

In the absence of rules specially prescribed, the practice of the court will govern as to notice of appeal and appeal bonds.—Otis v. Rio Grande, Case No. 10,614.

§ 119. —— Citation and notice.

On an appeal to the circuit court in admiralty, no citation is necessary, but only a written notice by the proctor to the proctor of the adverse party.—The Ellen, Case No. 4,375.

In the absence of rules specially prescribed, the practice of the court will govern as to notice and appeal bonds.—Otis v. Rio Grande, Case No. 10,614.

Appeal in admiralty held well taken, where notice was given in open court, and a written notice and bond in an approved amount were subsequently filed during the term, though such facts were not entered on the docket or minutes of the district court.—Otis v. Rio Grande, Case No. 10,614.

§ 120. Effect of appeal, and stay of execution.

An appeal in admiralty supersedes altogether the decree of the court below, and the case is to be tried in the appellate court as if no decree had been passed in the court below.—The Saratoga v. Four Hundred and Thirty-Eight Bales of Cotton, Case No. 12,356.

An appeal from the district court in admiralty to the circuit court carries with it the property which is the subject of the suit, and the former cannot make any order in regard thereto.—Davis v. The Seneca, Case No. 3,651; The Grotius, Id. 5,844; United States v. Towns, Id. 16,534. CONTRA, see Jones v. Walker, Case No. 7,506.

An appeal to the circuit court in admiralty carries with it all the funds belonging to the case, which funds still remain in the circuit court on a further appeal to the supreme court.—Hayford v. Griffith, Case No. 6,263.

A commission to take testimony cannot be issued by the circuit court in an admiralty case after an appeal has been taken to the supreme court, until after the supreme court on motion has decided the question as to the admissibility of the evidence.—The Ocean Queen, Case No. 10,411.

The decree of the district court in admiralty is of no effect where, on appeal, security of damages is given; otherwise when security is not given.—Dutcher v. Woodhull, Case No. 4,204.

Where an appeal is taken to the supreme court on the affirmance by the circuit court of a decree for libelants, and appellant fails to serve a copy of his petition of appeal within the 10 days, so as to make the appeal operate as a stay of execution under Act Sept. 24, 1789, § 23, and Act March 3, 1803, § 2, the court has no power to permit such service to be made nunc pro tunc.—The Roanoke, Case No. 11,875.

Where a seizure case, by agreement of the parties, is tried by the district court without a jury, the record should be made up as in the case of a writ of error, with the proper exceptions to the admissions or rejections of testimony, etc.—United States v. Fifteen Hogsheads of Brandy, Case No. 15,090.

On appeal to the circuit court in admiralty, the whole decree is brought up, though only a part of it is appealed from.—The Roarer, Case No. 11,876.

Admiralty cases should not be taken by appeal to the circuit court, without the evidence, upon the facts found by the district court.—Gloucester Ins. Co. v. Younger, Case No. 5,487.

In the case of six months' delay to perfect the appeal, the appellee was allowed to notice the cause for a hearing, and was required to take his depositions during the session of the court.—Nall v. The Illinois, Case No. 10,005.

§ 122. Hearing and rehearing.

If the appellant delay to perfect his appeal, so that the record is filed a very short time before the term of this court, the appellee may notice the cause for hearing or continue it, at his option.—Backus v. The Marengo, Case No. 713.

Where an appeal in a prize case was taken from an order overruling a motion for further proofs, and also from the decree on the merits, held, that the appellate court would not grant a separate hearing on the motion, but would consider the entire appeal at the same time.—United States v. The Lilla, Case No. 15,600.

An appeal from a decree rendered on the report of a commissioner awarding damages cannot be dismissed on motion, but must be heard in the usual way, where appellant appeared before the commissioner, and contested the damages, though he took no exception to the report of the commissioner to whom the cause was referred on appellant's default on the merits.—Farrell v. Campbell, Case No. 4,682.

The circuit court on appeal cannot rehear a cause or admit a claim at a term subsequent to that in which the cause was finally decided.—The Avery, Case No. 672.

§ 123. Trial of cause anew, amendments, and new pleadings and proofs.

The hearing on appeal from the district court in admiralty is de novo, but, on questions of fact, the burden is on appellant.—Ayer v. The Glaucus, Case No. 683.

On an appeal in admiralty to the circuit court, the trial there is de novo, and the opinion of the district judge cannot be read.—Two Hundred and Fifty Barrels of Molasses v. United States, Case No. 14,293.

An objection that certain repairs for which a lien was enforced in the district court were made in the home port cannot be set up for the first time in the circuit court on appeal, especially when not averred in the pleadings.—Meagher v. The Lizzie, Case No. 9,377.

Where libelants appeal in a salvage case the appeal opens the whole case. They cannot be allowed to claim the benefit of the decree below, and, standing secure on that, try new claims in the appellate court.—The Saratoga v. Four Hundred and Thirty-Eight Bales of Cotton, Case No. 12,356.

The circuit court on an appeal in admiralty may allow amendments.—Anonymous, Case No. 444; The Morton, Id. 9,864.

Such amendments may be allowed so as to permit new evidence, and new grounds of defense.—Reppert v. Robinson, Case No. 11,703.

Amendments may be allowed on appeal in revenue cases or proceedings in rem in district court.—Anonymous, Case No. 444.

Amendment not allowed on appeal to the circuit court in admiralty so as to allege damages in an amount to give jurisdiction, though the testimony shows the amount.—Agnew v. Dorman, Case No. 100.

The circuit court on appeal will give leave to amend by striking out the names of parties improperly introduced, where necessary to enable it to dispose of the appeal upon its real and substantial merits.—Taylor v. Harwood, Case No. 13,794.

The appellee may amend his libel so as to make a claim for damages above costs caused by a vexatious appeal.—Weaver v. Thomson, Case No. 17,311.

The circuit court on appeal will not admit new matters of defense or allegation, known to exist at the time of the hearing in the district court.—Coffin v. Jenkins, Case No. 2,948.

On appeal from a decree dismissing a libel in rem for the foreclosure of a mortgage on a vessel, the circuit court will not permit the libel to be amended so as to convert the suit into an action to recover possession of the vessel.—The John Jay, Case No. 7,352.

The power of the court, upon appeal, to allow amendments to the pleading so as to let in new evidence and new grounds of defense, ought only to be exercised to bring the merits of the controversy fairly before the court.—Reppert v. Robinson, Case No. 11,703.

In admiralty, amendments in sworn answers in the appellate court should introduce new substantive facts previously unknown, or correct substantial mistakes in matters of fact, and cannot be allowed on account of any mere defect of skill in drafting the original answer, in consequence of which respondent's case was not presented on the record in the best possible manner, or so as to secure to him all possible legal advantages.—Lamb v. Parkman, Case No. 8,019.

On appeal to the circuit court, either party can take new evidence.—Carrigan v. The Charles Pitman, Case No. 2,444.

After an appeal, the court may allow evidence, not received in season, to be put upon the record de bene esse, with a memorandum of the fact.—The London Packet, Case No. 8,474.

Time will be given to produce new evidence, where it appears that appellant was not guilty of laches in not producing it in the court below.—Rose v. Himely, Case No. 12,045.

New testimony, introduced on an appeal in admiralty, except under peculiar circumstances, is not entitled to the same consideration as testimony introduced in the first instance.—Taylor v. Harwood, Case No. 13,794.

Material evidence, the production of which in the court below is not excused, is subject to suspicion in the circuit court.—The Busy, Case No. 2,232.

In the case of a collision between vessels mutually in fault, an insurer of a cargo of one lost by the collision who has paid the loss cannot be permitted on appeal, and where the carrier vessel has been sold several times since the collision, and his remedy over has been lost by delay, to make proof of the innocent ownership of the cargo so as to charge the other vessel with the entire damages.—The City of Paris, Case No. 2,767.

On an appeal in admiralty the appellee cannot raise the question of the right of the district court to entertain a libel of review.—The Enterprise, Case No. 4,497.

The action of the court in respect to amendments is not reviewable on appeal.—Brown v. The Cadmus, Case No. 1,997.

Though the question of costs is perhaps not per se the proper subject of appeal, it is yet reviewable when the case is properly before the appellate court.—Lubker v. The A. H. Quinby, Case No. 8,586.

The objection that the district court has not jurisdiction of a cause of seizure, under the laws of impost, navigation, and trade, because it does not appear that the property was seized before the proceeding was commenced, may be urged successfully upon appeal in the circuit court, notwithstanding it was not taken in the district court.—The Fideliter, Case No. 4,755.

Where damages are discretionary, the burden of proof is on the appellant to show some clear mistake or error in the court below, either in awarding excessive damages, or in promulgating an incorrect rule of law, or to offer new and materially important testimony, which must go to the proof of the new allegations without contradicting the former evidence.—Cushman v. Ryan, Case No. 3,515.

On an appeal to the circuit court in admiralty if the libelant does not appeal he cannot ask to have the damages increased on claimant's appeal except by an allowance for the delay in payment.—Allen v. Hitch, Case No. 224; Airey v. Merrill, Id. 115; Merrill v. Arey, Id. 9,468.

Appeals in admiralty on questions of mere fact will be discouraged.—Hill v. The Emma Peterson, Case No. 6,490.

The decree of the district court, where no question of law is involved, is entitled to the same weight as a verdict in a suit at law, not to be disturbed unless it is contrary to the clear result of the evidence on the facts in issue.—Palmer v. Dallet, Case No. 10,689.

The circuit court, on an appeal in admiralty, will not disturb the finding of the district court on a question of fact depending upon the weight of the testimony and credibility of witnesses, though differing from such court.—The Sunswick, Case No. 13,625.

A decree in a case of marine tort will not be reversed on appeal, on a question of the amount of damages, unless clearly excessive.—Smith v. Jordan, Case No. 13,068.

On appeal in admiralty, the circuit court will not reverse a decision of the district judge upon a question depending on conflicting testimony, unless it clearly appears that the decision was against the weight of evidence.—Davison v. Sealskins, Case No. 3,661; Baker v. Smith, Id. 781; Baker v. The Potomac, Id. 778; Cushman v. Ryan, Id. 3,515; Lee v. Thompson, Id. 8,202; McGuire v. The Golden Gate, Id. 8,815; Taylor v. Harwood, Id. 13,794.

To warrant a reversal on a question of fact on an appeal in admiralty, the preponderance of evidence must be such as would justify the granting of a new trial in a court of common law.—The Grafton, Case No. 5,655.

§ 125. Determination and disposition of cause.

Where a specific relief is asked for, even though there be a prayer for general relief, the circuit court, on appeal in admiralty, cannot grant a relief which is inconsistent with, or entirely different from, that which is prayed.—Wilson v. Graham, Case No. 17,804.

On appeal in a salvage case, the whole cause, including costs, is before the court, irrespective of the decree below, and the court may decree more, or less, or nothing.—Lubker v. The A. H. Quinby, Case No. 8,586.

Where the record shows that the court was controlled by the findings of the jury, to which issues of fact were submitted, without consideration of the evidence, the proceeding is irregular, but where all the evidence is before the appellate court such judgment will be rendered as the evidence warrants.—Lee v. Thompson, Case No. 8,202.

Where, on an appeal in admiralty, the court was of the opinion that the damage sustained by a charterer for breach of a condition in the charter party should be deducted from the freight in an action therefor, the court, to save expense and prevent delay, made the proper deduction itself, instead of sending the case back to the clerk to take proof.—Parsons v. Ogden, Case No. 10,781.

On an appeal to the circuit court in admiralty, the appellate court, after decision, must execute the decree, and it has no power to remit the proceedings to the district court.—The Roarer, Case No. 11,876.

On an appeal in admiralty, after the case is entered, plaintiff, who is appellant, and recovered judgment below for less than he asked, cannot become nonsuit without prejudice, on payment of costs, if defendant object.—Folger v. The Robert G. Shaw, Case No. 4,899.

A motion to dismiss an appeal already taken from the district court on the ground that notice of appeal and affidavit of service had not been filed in time, should be made in the circuit court.—The Josephine, Case No. 7,545.

The respondent in an admiralty suit appeared before the commissioner, and contested the damages after a default, but did not take any exceptions to his report. Held, that a motion to dismiss an appeal taken by him was not the proper remedy.—Farrell v. Campbell, Case No. 4,682.

Where libelant in admiralty recovered a small amount, and appealed, held, that the circuit court could dismiss the libel at libelant's costs, although claimant had not appealed.—The Saratoga v. Four Hundred and Thirty-Eight Bales of Cotton, Case No. 12,356.

Reasonable diligence should be used in prosecuting an appeal in admiralty from the district to the circuit court.—Nall v. The Illinois, Case No. 10,005.

If, in a prize cause, claimant appeals, and deserts his appeal, the circuit court may affirm the decree below, with costs.—The Montgomery v. The Betsey, Case No. 9,734.

Where both parties appeal from a decree for salvage, which is affirmed, libelants will not be allowed interest from the date of decree in the court below.—The Rebecca Clyde, Case No. 11,622.

On a hearing on appeal from a decree dismissing a libel in personam on the ground that there was no proof of incorporation of defendant, or that it owned the vessel, where such objections were removed by evidence, the circuit court, on reversing the decree, allowed both parties to take proofs on the merits, with liberty to either to amend his pleadings.—Remington v. Atlantic Royal Mail Steam Nav. Co., Case No. 11,695.

The portion of the decree unappealed from, in case of a reversal, remains in full force, to be executed in the circuit court, and becomes a part of its decree.—The Roarer, Case No. 11,876.

On affirmance by the circuit court of a decree for libelant in admiralty, no execution can issue until the entry of a formal decree awarding a recovery to libelant.—Harris v. Wheeler, Case No. 6,130.

The question of damages in admiralty may be raised upon a remand after affirmance of a decree silent upon such question.—American Ins. Co. v. Canter, Case No. 302b.

When a decree in admiralty is reversed in the supreme court and the cause remanded, the circuit court may allow interest unless expressly forbidden to do so by the decree of the supreme court.—The Grapeshot, Case No. 5,703.

The fact that the proceeds had remained for a long time in the registry, without producing interest, is no reason for refusing interest on the sum found due.—The Grapeshot, Case No. 5,703.

§ 126. Liabilities on appeal bonds.

Where the amount claimed is sufficient to allow an appeal to the supreme court, summary judgment cannot be rendered by the circuit court against the sureties in the appeal bond on dismissal of the libel until after the expiration of 10 days after the rendering of the decree.—The Jesse Williamson, Jr., Case No. 7,297.

But summary judgment can be rendered against the sureties on the appeal bond where the decree is for a sum not sufficient to allow an appeal to the supreme court.—The Blanche Page, Case No. 1,525.

X. COSTS.

In collision cases, see "Collision," § 160.
In salvage cases, see "Salvage," § 76.
In suits for seamen's wages, see "Seamen," § 143.
Right of proctor to costs on compromise by parties, see "Attorney and Client," § 6.

(A) PARTIES TO AND AGAINST WHOM AWARDED.

§ 127. Power to award in general.

Courts of admiralty will dispose of the question of costs according to the general equities of the case.—The Martha, Case No. 9,144.

Costs in admiralty are in the sound discretion of the court, to be exercised according to settled practice and in furtherance of justice.—Lubker v. The A. H. Quinby, Case No. 8,586; Hill v. The Triumph, Id. 6,500.

§ 128. Want of jurisdiction of suit.

The district court, on dismissing a libel for want of jurisdiction, has no power to award costs against libelant.—The McDonald, Case No. 8,756; Abbey v. The Robert L. Stevens, Id. 8.

A successful respondent should not be denied costs because libelant has mistakenly sued in admiralty, instead of in the state courts, in disregard of a long-settled law.—Kegan v. The Amaranth, Case No. 7,646.

Where, on the face of a libel, the court has jurisdiction, and lack of jurisdiction is only disclosed by plea and evidence, costs may be awarded to defendant.—Lowe v. The Benjamin, Case No. 8,565.

§ 129. Other adequate remedy.

Costs will not be allowed where vessel is arrested for a small cause of action, for which the party has another adequate remedy, and the suit is prosecuted vindictively.—The Boston, Case No. 1,672.

A libelant in admiralty, for services on board a vessel on the Hudson river, cannot recover costs, where less than $50 is in demand, and he had a clear remedy, known to him, in the local courts, the burden of showing which is on claimant.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,095.

The object of this rule was to prevent an unnecessary resort to the expensive proceeding in rem. It will be so enforced as to compel the mariner to resort to the local courts only in case his remedy there is convenient and sure.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,095.

Costs will not be refused on a libel for wages because libelant did not sue in the state court, where there was no apparent intention to annoy respondents.—Jones v. Crowell, Case No. 7,459.

Libelant cannot recover costs where the amount of liability is tendered before suit.—The Alaska, Case No. 129.

A tender of the amount due, and costs, will throw costs upon libelant.—The M. M. Caleb, Case No. 9,682.

Failure to tender the amount admitted to be due by the answer gives libelant a right to costs, though no more is recovered.—Nine Thousand Six Hundred and Eighty-One. Dry Ox Hides, Case No. 10,273.

In the absence of proof or allegation of a tender of wages due, which were paid into court after libel filed, the seaman will be entitled to costs.—The Cortes, Case No. 3,258.

A tender or offer of payment relied on to bar costs should be set up in the pleading, and should be a continuing offer.—The Walter W. Pharo, Case No. 17,124.

On a libel in rem against cargo for freight and demurrage, where freight was previously offered and was paid into court after suit brought, where libelant fails to recover demurrage, he is liable for costs.—One Hundred and Twelve Sticks of Timber, Case No. 10,524.

Circumstances held equivalent to a tender of the balance of freight after sale of damaged cargo, and before suit brought.—Dedekam v. Vose, Case No. 3,729; Id. 3,732.

Costs were refused a seaman who sued to recover wages, where the difference between the tender and claim was only $2, although the money was not paid into court under Rule 72.—The Brothers, Case No. 1,968.

A mere attempt to negotiate a compromise of a claim at an amount specified, unaccompanied with a tender or direct offer to pay such amount, does not operate as an equitable bar to costs.—The H. B. Foster, Case No. 6,290.

An offer by a shipper to pay a balance of freight, deducting damages to the goods, to be ascertained by arbitration or sale at auction, held a sufficient tender to relieve him from payment of costs.—Dedekam v. Vose, Case No. 3,732.

An offer to pay wages at the owner's counting house, and a refusal to pay elsewhere, does not exonerate him from costs.—The Sarah Jane, Case No. 12,348.

In salvage cases the court will not deny libelant compensation nor award costs to respondent on a plea of tender alleged in a supplemental answer, where there was not a legal tender of a specific amount by a deposit of the money in court, and the propositions for a compromise were not so made as that they could be made a matter of judicial cognizance.—Evans v. Charles, Case No. 4,556.

Where, in a suit for salvage, the proctors for respondent offer to deposit in court for the benefit of libelants a fair compensation, the court will decree costs against the libelants out of such amount.—Hessian v. The Edward Howard, Case No. 6,436.

Where each party had made an offer of settlement, libelant is entitled to costs where he recovered more than he was offered, though much less than he had demanded.—The Walter W. Pharo, Case No. 17,124.

§ 131. Demand and notice of claim.

Where a minority owner of a vessel objects to a proposed voyage, he is entitled to a bond for the safe return of the vessel, and his failure to demand it will not prevent his recovering costs on a libel therefor.—Sturges v. The Mary Staples, Case No. 13,566a.

Where a libel for salvage is filed without notice to the owner of the vessel to whom the service was rendered, costs will not be allowed.—The Jack Jewett, Case No. 7,122.

Costs were awarded where the suit was defended in the interest of a former owner, though no demand had been made of the claimants.—The Melissa, Case No. 9,400.

Costs were denied libelant, and given to claimants, on a libel against a steamer for injuries caused by her swells, by passing at rapid speed near a pier at which libelant's vessel was moored, where no notice of the claim was given in advance of bringing suit.—The Rhode Island, Case No. 11,742.

Costs denied to owners of canal boats sunk by swells, because they delayed for 30 days to give notice of their claim.—The Massachusetts, Case No. 9,258.

Where libelant in a suit on a bottomry bond included in the bond unauthorized charges, and brought his action, without giving claimant a reasonable time to examine into the the question of the amount really due, the court refused him costs.—The Edward Albro, Case No. 4,290.

A libelant who demands an entire sum when part of it has been paid according to his directions, and compels the respondent to defend, impairs his equity to costs in a court of admiralty.—Shaw v. Thompson, Case No. 12,726.

Though a plea in abatement on the ground that the action was prematurely commenced has not been interposed, the court will protect the parties in the adjustment of costs from any injustice arising from a too early commencement of the suit.—The Isaac Newton, Case No. 7,089.

A factor setting up title to proceeds in admiralty as general owner, where he has in equity merely a lien, will be denied costs.—The Packet, Case No. 10,655.

An unfounded claim for a lien was dismissed without costs, the vessel owners being personally liable.—M'Dermott v. The S. G. Owens, Case No. 8,748.

§ 133. Prevailing and losing parties generally.

The common-law rule to give costs in all cases to the successful suitor is not recognized in admiralty as the law of costs, and they are awarded at the sound discretion of the court, without regard to the ultimate termination of the action.—The Moslem, Case No. 9,876.

Admiralty courts, in adjudging costs in their discretion, regard the essential merits and equities of the parties rather than the result of the litigation.—Shaw v. Thompson, Case No. 12,726.

Costs in admiralty, though resting in the discretion of the court, are usually given to the prevailing party.—Regan v. The Amaranth, Case No. 11,664.

Prima facie the prevailing party is entitled to costs.—Leland v. Medora, Case No. 8,237; The Moslem, Id. 9,876.

Costs will not be awarded against claimants in a suit on a bottomry bond, where there appeared some reason for contesting it.—The Robert L. Lane, Case No. 11,892.

Costs will be decreed a libelant, though no debt is recovered, where he was misled into bringing suit by the misconduct of defendant.—Case of Pettit, Case No. 11,047.

Where both parties in an admiralty suit are in the wrong, costs will not be awarded to either.—Shaw v. Thompson. Case No. 12,726.

Costs will not be allowed where the libel is dismissed on a dilatory plea after a trial in which the court overrules the defense on the merits.—The Martha, Case No. 9,144.

Where a libel in a collision case which fails to convey any idea of the manner in which the collision occurred is not excepted to, and is dismissed at the hearing, no costs will be given.—The Warren. Case No. 17,192.

Where the question as to the liability for injuries in a collision was novel the court refused to award costs.—The Leo, Case No. 8,250.

On a libel for salvage, where a special agreement is shown in defense, but no tender of the balance of the stipulated price is shown, a decree will be entered for such amount, with costs.—Dominy v. Anchors, Sails, etc., of The D'Alberti, Case No. 3,977.

A stipulation to abide the decision of a suit by another party will not prevent the successful claimant recovering costs, because not given in the suit prosecuted against an administratrix who was substituted as libelant.—The Buffalo, Case No. 2,110.

On a dismissal of a libel against a vessel for damages to the cargo, libelants held chargeable with costs.—Faber v. The Newark, Case No. 4,602.

Costs in admiralty upon exceptions to a commissioner's report made in the alternative.—The Joshua Barker, Case No. 7,547.

Where a vessel, libeled on behalf of the United States, was afterwards libeled for seamen's wages, sold on an interlocutory order, and finally decreed to be restored, it was held that the custody fees should not be borne by the owners, nor by the seamen, but by the United States.—The Louisetta, Case No. 8,535.

Libelant who proves either of two claims sued on is entitled to costs, but only for the evidence required to prove such claim.—Borden v. Hiern, Case No. 1,655.

A party will not be allowed, by tacking a small undisputed claim, upon which he has never made a demand, to a contested claim for wages denied him, to recover costs on the demand denied him.—The Swallow, Case No. 13,664.

A libelant in admiralty who fails as to the greater part of his claim cannot recover costs.—The Gomez De Castro, Case No. 5,525; The John Walls, Jr., Id. 7,432.

A respondent who contests the entire demand of a libelant when a portion of it is justly claimed, although he defeats the suit in the main matters in contestation, loses his equity to costs.—Shaw v. Thompson, Case No. 12,726.

Where the opposite parties in an admiralty suit each prevail on one of the two issues involved, each is entitled to taxation of costs of the issue decided in his favor, and the two bills of costs should be set off against each other, and any balance paid.—Simpson v. Caulkins, Case No. 12,880; Thomas v. Gray, Id. 13,898.

Costs will be allowed neither party on libel for collision where both claim a greater amount of damages than they were able to prove.—The David Morris, Case No. 3,596.

Where both parties except to commissioners' report in a collision case, and libelant's exceptions are overruled, and respondent's allowed, the latter is entitled to costs of the reference.—The Baltic, Case No. 824.

When seven exceptions are filed to a commissioner's report, and six are sustained by the court, costs will be allowed therefor, to be deducted from the amount decreed to the libelant.—The New Jersey, Case No. 10,162.

The circuit court allowed to a libelant his costs in the district court, and, as the claimant had been partially successful on the appeal, it divided the costs in the circuit court.—The Shady Side, Case No. 12,692.

§ 135. Several suits or parties.

Where two libels are filed in admiralty, where only one is required, costs in one only are allowed.—The R. P. Chase, Case No. 12,099.

A seaman, who needlessly brings suit separate from his fellows will not be allowed costs.—The Cabot, Case No. 2,277.

Where two separate suits in admiralty by seamen were filed and process issued, and afterwards a number of other suits were consolidated therewith, held, that the costs of the first two suits to the date of consolidation should be taxed separately, but that a single bill of costs, only, could be allowed to either party after the consolidation.—Simpson v. Caulkins, Case No. 12,880.

Where several seamen joined in a libel for shares of a whaling voyage, and the decrees in favor of some were final and the others were appealed, held, that the former were entitled to recover all the costs which they had advanced, or for which they were liable.—In re Two Hundred and Ninety Barrels of Oil, Case No. 14,294.

Where several seamen unite in an action in personam to recover wages, a seaman recovering less than $50 can tax full costs, and enforce his decree by execution, where the decrees for the others are appealed.—Collins v. Hathaway, Case No. 3,014.

Where both a libel by the master against consignees for freight and a libel by the consignees against the vessel for damages to the cargo are sustained, a decree will be given for each party, with costs.—The Isabella, Case No. 7,099.

Several material men may unite in one libel, for various supplies furnished in repairing a single vessel; and where they do not join, and no good reason for refusing is shown, costs in one suit, only, should be allowed.—The Young Mechanic, Case No. 18,182.

Where two libels are unnecessarily filed for salvage, the increased costs must be borne by the libelants in the second libel.—The Maryland, Case No. 9,218.

Taxation of costs in case of a claim on proceeds of a vessel in admiralty where other parties are interested.—The Jerusalem, Case No. 7,294.

Practice as to costs and charges where several parties intervene in admiralty for separate interests.—The Louisetta, Case No. 8,535.

§ 135a. Amount of recovery.

Full costs decreed claimant in admiralty, although the demands of libelants are less than $50 each.—The Swallow, Case No. 13,664.

Act March 3, 1847, regulating costs in admiralty proceedings in rem where less than $100 is recovered, is repealed by Act Feb. 26, 1853.—The Young Mechanic, Case No. 18,182.

(B) SECURITY FOR PAYMENT.

§ 136. When required.

On a libel under Act July 7, 1838 (5 Stat. 304), providing for the better security of passengers on steam vessels, the court may require the informer to give security for costs, and on his failure to do so may strike out his name, and let the suit proceed in the name of the United States alone. Aliter, if the informer is an officer whose duty it is to institute the proceedings.—The Planter, Case No. 16,054.

A person may sue in admiralty without giving security for costs on proof of inability.—Wheatley v. Hotchkiss, Case No. 17,483.

Where libelant, in consequence of poverty, is unable to find sureties, his juratory caution will be taken, instead of a stipulation with sureties.—Polydore v. Prince, Case No. 11,257.

Seamen will not be compelled to give security for costs on suing for wages, because the amount is small.—The Arctic, Case No. 509a.

The rule allowing seamen to libel without giving security must be modified in cases where they have been paid off before a shipping commission.—The Niveto, Case No. 10,279.

A claim for damages for the breaking up of a voyage is not a claim for seamen's wages, and libelant must file security for costs.—The Caroline & Cornelia, Case No. 2,420.

A seaman will be required to file a stipulation for costs when suing in rem to enforce a conditional agreement outside the written articles.—The Great Britain, Case No. 5,736.

Security for costs will not be required on a libel for a seaman's wages, where the answer was "forfeiture for desertion," and an attachment was issued after hearing on the summons, but such defense was not then interposed.—Chambers v. The Henry Kneeland, Case No. 2,581a.

The rule relieving seamen from stipulations for costs produces no unreasonable inequality as against shipowners.—Collins v. Hathaway, Case No. 3,014.

In a case of forfeiture, on a suggestion that the owners were unable to give security for costs, held, that an affidavit of ownership, inability, and merits would be exacted, before the government would be required to make further proofs.—United States v. The Lion, Case No. 15,607.

Respondent will not be required to file a stipulation for costs in a suit in personam where libelant does not move therefor until after a decree and a notice of appeal.—Pharo v. Smith, Case No. 11,062.

The respondent may waive the right to require the libelant to give security for costs.—Polydore v. Prince, Case No. 11,257.

§ 138. Additional security.

Increased stipulation for costs should not be required of claimants on account of delays in the suit occasioned by libelant.—The Laurens, Case No. 8,121.

The affidavit on a motion for additional security for costs may be made by the proctor of the party.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,096.

§ 139. Liability of surety.

A consent to a rehearing by the parties to a suit will not affect the rights of a surety in a stipulation for costs, who has been discharged by a previous final decree.—The Martha, Case No. 9,144.

§ 140. Right to object.

Libelant is not entitled to ground any proceedings on the omission of respondent to give security for costs allowed for the protection of the officers of the court.—Gaines v. Travis, Case No. 5,179.

(C) AMOUNT, ITEMS, AND TAXATION OF COSTS.

§ 141. In general.

Where process in rem is commenced without notice to the owners who reside within the district, no more costs will be allowed than in a case of a monition to show cause.—Chatfield v. The Wolga, Case No. 2,632.

Libelant having asked no costs, but disbursements, only disbursements were awarded against him on dismissal of the libel.—The Seneca, Case No. 12,668.

Where claimants in admiralty, in different rights, appear by the same counsel, but one bill of costs will be taxed.—The Jeremiah, Case No. 7,290.

§ 142. Clerk's fees.

Clerk's fees in admiralty for filing and entering claim, answer, appearance, and consent, for jurats, for attendance on the justification of sureties, and making up costs on the bonding of the vessel.—The F. Merwin, Case No. 4,893.

A clerk may tax as costs $2 for notices of trial.—The Siren, Case No. 12,910.

A calendar fee of one dollar paid to the clerk on delivering a note of issue on an appeal in admiralty is taxable.—The Alice Tainter, Case No. 196.

§ 143. Marshal's fees and disbursements.

The custody fees where a vessel is held by virtue of two warrants to arrest, in different suits, are chargeable equally upon the two suits.—The John Walls, Jr., Case No. 7,432; The Circassian, Id. 2,725.

The charge of $2.50 a day allowed to the marshal by statute for "expenses of keeping vessels," does not include wharfage, and a bill for wharfage paid by the marshal for the vessel, while she is in his custody, can be properly taxed as a disbursement.—The F. Merwin, Case No. 4,893.

Money paid by the marshal for insurance of arrested vessel cannot be taxed as costs.—Burke v. The M. P. Rich, Case No. 2,162.

Since the adoption of the circuit court rules of 1845, Rule 96 of the district court of 1838, refusing to a proctor in a suit fees as advocate, is abrogated, in respect to all fees other than those specifically introduced and appointed by the district court; and fees for services as proctor and as advocate are taxable to the same person.—Manchester v. Milne, Case No. 9,007.

In actions for seamen's wages, counsel fees will not be allowed as costs, unless the defense is merely vexatious, or there are special reasons for the allowance.—The Elizabeth Frith, Case No. 4,361.

In cases of claims on proceeds in the custody of the court, where other parties are entitled, no attorney's fee, or other costs beyond actual charges of court, can be allowed.—The Jerusalem, Case No. 7,294.

Counsel who successfully resisted a lien claim which would have absorbed the proceeds in court held entitled to a fee of $250 out of the proceeds.—Shannon v. The Angelique, Case No. 12,705.

The rate of compensation of proctors in admiralty is controlled by the statutes in force at the time the right to costs accrues, or at the time of taxation.—Sturgis v. The Joseph Johnson, Case No. 13,576a.

Counsel fees cannot be allowed as part of the taxable costs, beyond the amount mentioned in Act 1853, c. 80 [10 Stat. 161].—The Liverpool Packet, Case No. 8,407.

Since the act of Feb. 26, 1853, the district court in admiralty has no power to award an additional sum to libelants in the court's discretion under the name of a counsel or proctor's fee.—Sturgis v. The Joseph Johnson, Case No. 13,576a.

Where libelant cannot proceed in a cause without application to the court and its specific order, his proctor will be allowed 62½ cents for every necessary motion made in court on every necessary proceeding in a cause.—Sanborn v. Stetson, Case No. 12,291.

The proctor may charge $1.25 in each of several sequent motions before the court, when necessarily in attendance to make one of them.—Sancho v. Atwood, Case No. 12,291a.

Costs will be taxed for opposing motions made on notice to put the cause over the term, but not where the applications were without notice, and only to defer the hearing to another day in the same session.—Manchester v. Milne, Case No. 9,007.

Costs are not taxable in admiralty for services rendered by a proctor or advocate on a motion to postpone the hearing of a cause called in its order on the calendar.—Manchester v. Milne, Case No. 9,007.

Costs cannot be taxed in admiralty for services rendered by an advocate or proctor on merely supposititious motions, such as motion for final decree, motion for costs, for reference, etc., when the objects of the supposed motions are embraced in the decretal order of the court.—Manchester v. Milne, Case No. 9,007.

Costs cannot be taxed in admiralty for attending court, and for motions made in writing, merely formal, as for time to enable the defendant to answer, etc.—Manchester v. Milne, Case No. 9,007.

Costs are not taxable for the preparation of written arguments, except upon a stipulation in writing to that effect.—Manchester v. Milne, Case No. 9,007.

The $20 docket fee allowed to a proctor or attorney by Act Feb. 26, 1853 (10 Stat. 151) can be taxed only on a final hearing or final disposition of a cause on a calendar, and can be taxed but once in a cause.—Dedekam v. Vose, Case No. 3,730; Id. 3,731; Hayford v. Griffith, Id. 6,264.

Such docket fee may be taxed on dismissal of the appeal for an irregularity in failing to give security for costs.—Hayford v. Griffith, Case No. 6,264.

That fee is not taxable, after a decree on an appeal in admiralty, on a motion that the stipulators on the appeal pay into court the amount of their stipulations.—Dedekam v. Vose, Case No. 3,731.

§ 145. Miscellaneous items.

In ordinary cases an independent charge for costs of a reference to a commissioner in a suit for seamen's wages is not allowed.—Holmes v. Dodge, Case No. 6,637.

Where, however, the reference is solely for the benefit of the respondent, the court will modify the order of reference so as to require the extra costs incurred to be defrayed by him.—Holmes v. Dodge, Case No. 6,637.

Such modification must be asked for on obtaining the order of reference.—Holmes v. Dodge, Case No. 6,637.

Act Aug. 12, 1848 (9 Stat. 284), limiting the fees of commissioners for taking testimony to two dollars, applies only to suits of the United States, and to fees to be paid out of the treasury of the United States.—Sancho v. Atwood, Case No. 12,291a.

The commissioner is entitled to charge for taking depositions though the examination is not had before him, where the witnesses are first sworn before him, and subsequently swear to the depositions before him.—The F. Merwin, Case No. 4,893.

The fact that the notary public who took the depositions was a clerk of the proctor of the claimant does not affect the right to tax the amount of usual compensation which was paid to him.—The F. Merwin, Case No. 4,893.

Costs are not allowed for illegible depositions.—The Avid, Case No. 678.

An auctioneer cannot have costs or disbursements taxed in his favor by the court in invitum.—The Tubal Cain, Case No. 14,212.

Witness' fees and mileage for the attendance of a party to an admiralty suit cannot be taxed in his favor against the other party.—The Elizabeth and Helen, Case No. 4,354.

§ 146. Amount dependent upon amount of recovery.

The district court in admiralty does not tax plenary costs when the sum in dispute does not exceed $50, although the proceedings are plenary.—McGinnis v. Carlton, Case No. 8,799.

Summary costs only are recoverable on a libel in admiralty where libelant admits that a sum less than $50 is all that is due, irrespective of the claim in the libel.—McGinnis v. Carlton, Case No. 8,799.

Where a libelant unites a demand for contract wages unpaid with a claim for a short allowance, and obtains a decree for the wages, he will only obtain costs on that demand, and is liable for costs on the other branch of the litigation.—The Childe Harold, Case No. 2,676.

A libel joined a claim of $6.75 for wages with one of $75 for salvage service. The salvage claim was disallowed, and a decree entered for wages due, "with costs." Held, that plenary costs were taxable.—The Caithneshire, Case No. 2,294.

A retaxation will be allowed where, by mistake or other casualty, the original taxation was not opposed.—Collins v. Hathaway, Case No. 3,014.

An irregularity in the taxation of costs may be corrected by the court, on motion, after final decree rendered.—Collins v. Hathaway, Case No. 3,014.

§ 148. Appeal from taxation.

The discretionary power of the court over the award of costs cannot be exercised on an appeal from taxation, especially after the expiration of the term in which the decree is rendered.—The Caithneshire, Case No. 2,294.

(D) COSTS ON APPEAL.

§ 149. When allowed and amount.

The action becomes a plenary suit in the circuit court on appeal in admiralty, and full costs may be taxed where the decree is affirmed with costs.—Godfrey v. Gilmartin, Case No. 5,498.

Costs will not be awarded on affirmance where both parties appeal.—The Atlas, Case No. 634.

A decree for salvage services was modified on appeal by awarding compensation for towage services merely. Held, that libelant should be allowed his costs in the district court, while claimant should have costs of appeal.—The Emily B. Souder, Case No. 4,458.

No costs on appeal awarded to either party where a decree of the district court was affirmed in so far as it dismissed the libel, but reversed as to the award of costs to claimant.—The McDonald, Case No. 8,756.

On reversal in the circuit court of the decree of the district court in admiralty, the successful party is entitled to costs on the appeal, unless new evidence was introduced which might have affected the judgment in the court below.—The Margaret v. The Connestoga, Case No. 9,070.

Counsel fees to the successful party in such case may be allowed in the discretion of the court, but such power is sparingly exercised.—The Margaret v. The Connestoga, Case No. 9,070.

Costs allowed on reversal in the circuit court on new evidence in an admiralty case, where there was a transparent contrivance to rescue freight from attachment.—Gonzales v. Minor, Case No. 5,530.

When the decree of the district court is reversed on account of a different state of the evidence as presented in the circuit court, the party succeeding on the appeal does not have costs.—Carrigan v. The Charles Pitman, Case No. 2,444.

Claimants in admiralty, not tendering the actual amount due until after appeal, allowed only costs of appeal, on reversal.—Davis v. Five Hundred and Seventy-Four Bags of Coffee, Case No. 3,633a.

The clerk may charge for including the evidence in a suit in admiralty in the final record on final decree, notwithstanding the provision of Act Feb. 16, 1875, § 1, in regard to appeals in admiralty to the supreme court.—The Alice Tainter, Case No. 196.

A fee of $2.50 for reading, on an appeal in admiralty, a deposition read below, is not taxable.—Dedekam v. Vose, Case No. 3,730.

On removal to the circuit court of an appeal in admiralty before the passage of Act Feb. 26, 1853, the fee for removal is not taxable.—Dedekam v. Vose, Case No. 3,730.

(E) PAYMENT AND REMEDIES FOR COLLECTION.

§ 150. Priority.

The claims for costs of parties appearing in admiralty voluntarily, to protect their own rights, are entitled to only the same priority with their other claims.—The Rodney, Case No. 11,993.

§ 151. Stay of prosecution.

Where property is attached in a suit in personam, after return of "Not found," respondents must pay costs of the attachment before they can defend on the merits.—Millard v. Craig, Case No. 9,548.

§ 152. Enforcement against stipulators.

The regular proceeding against a surety in a stipulation for costs is by petition after notice, and the decree may be final and peremptory. Upon proceeding by motion after personal demand, a conditional decree only is awarded.—The Baltic, Case No. 826.

On default of stipulators for costs an order or decree must be obtained, on which execution may issue against the entire estate of the parties.—The Delaware, Case No. 3,762.

Taking out a fi. fa. in the first instance, without success, for costs in admiralty, does not prevent resorting to process of ca. sa. or to an attachment.—The Delaware, Case No. 3,762.

The remedy on attachment for costs, etc., in admiralty is to be governed by the rules which belong to courts of admiralty as contradistinguished from courts of common law.—The Delaware, Case No. 3,762.

I. NATURE AND REQUISITES.

§ 1. Statutory provisions.

Construction of the statute of limitations of California in relation to Mexican titles and land grants.—Palmer v. Low, Case No. 10,693.

The statute of 21 Jac. I. as to 20 years' possession was not adopted in New Jersey by force of the act of 1727.—Gardner v. Sharp, Case No. 5,236.

A party claiming land under the Illinois limitation laws must deduce a title directly from a specified source, and by a chain of genuine conveyances.—Hedges v. Paulin, Case No. 6,319.

An actual residence on land is not necessary to constitute an adverse possession; but there must be such an occupancy, by exercising acts of ownership, enjoying profits, etc., as to give notice to the public and all concerned of the claim.—Ewing v. Burnet, Case No. 4,591.

Possession may be held by other means than actual residence or by a fence.—Ellicott v. Pearl, Case No. 4,386.

"Rodeo boundaries," under the California customs and usages, constituted as notorious evidence of possession as cultivation or fencing in an old-settled country.—Boyreau v. Campbell, Case No. 1,760.

The possession of lands by an agent or manager is an actual possession, upon which adverse possession may be predicated.—Roberts v. Moore, Case No. 11,905.

Where there is no visible adverse seisin of any part of the land, an entry by one of the co-tenants gives a seisin of the whole according to their titles.—Thomas v. Hatch, Case No. 13,899.

Information, knowledge, or belief, obtained since the possession commenced, cannot impair the efficacy of such possession as a ground of prescription.—Gaines v. Agnelly, Case No. 5,173.

§ 3. Duration and continuity.

To acquire title by adverse possession, the possession must have been open, adverse, and continuous for 20 years under a claim of title.—Sacket v. McDonnell, Case No. 12,202.

Possession for 15 years, under Act Pa. 1785, to bar ejectment, must have commenced when the law was passed.—Griffith v. Bradshaw, Case No. 5,821.

Twenty years' continuous, adverse possession of real estate in Oregon bars an action to recover possession; but the burden of proof is on the party alleging such possession.—Shuffleton v. Nelson, Case No. 12,822.

Ejectment held barred by 60 years' possession under Act N. J. June 5, 1787.—Gardner v. Sharp, Case No. 5,236.

The same length of possession by defendant which will bar a recovery is sufficient, if had by plaintiff, to sustain a recovery.—Holtzapple v. Phillibaum, Case No. 6,648.

The limitation under the Pennsylvania statute begins to run from the time of an actual, adverse possession, and not before.—Potts v. Gilbert, Case No. 11,347.

The statute of limitations of 1863 commenced to run in favor of the adverse possession of such lands at such time.—Harris v. McGovern, Case No. 6,125.

A grant made by an alcalde of San Francisco after the transfer of California to the United States is a Mexican title, within the meaning of the proviso to section 6 of the California statute of limitations.—Palmer v. Low, Case No. 10,693.

When defendant allowed to tack possession of prior occupant to his own to bar action by length of possession.—Barger v. Miller, Case No. 979.

Several successive, unconnected disseisins or adverse possessions, amounting in the aggregate to 20 years, cannot be tacked together to make a continuous possession.—Shuffleton v. Nelson, Case No. 12,822; Potts v. Gilbert, Id. 11,347.

The possession of part of a tract of land cannot be joined to the possession of another part so as to make up the 21 years.—Potts v. Gilbert, Case No. 11,347.

Successive adverse possessions may be tacked together to form a continuous adverse possession when there is a privity of possession between the successive occupants, and such privity arises from a mere parol bargain and sale, followed by delivery of possession, as well as by a formal conveyance.—Shuffleton v. Nelson, Case No. 12,822.

The possession of the disseisor and of his grantee, who immediately succeeds thereto in pursuance of the conveyance, constitutes one entire and continuous possession.—Harris v. McGovern, Case No. 6,125.

The sale by one intruder to another without an exact definition of the property conveyed, will not aid the purchaser in establishing a continued adverse possession.—Potts v. Gilbert, Case No. 11,347.

On the forfeiture of land to the state for failure to pay taxes, the adverse character of a possession by a third person ceases, and it cannot be revived.—Morrill v. Armstrong, Case No. 9,822.

Plea of prescription is unavailing where there had been a mixed possession of the property in controversy, and a continual contest over it.—Brownsville v. Cavazos, Case No. 2,043.

On service of citation on one only of two debtors bound in solido, prescription in favor of the other is suspended during the pendency of the action, and it is not merely interrupted.—Ellery v. Brown, Case No. 4,383.

A claim to land is not barred by lapse of time where the right has been asserted at various times, and possession has been taken of a part of the land.—Walton v. Coulson, Case No. 17,132; Sawyer v. Shannon, Id. 12,405.

Possession must be hostile both in its origin and continuance to be adverse.—Adams v. Burke, Case No. 49.

But the jury may infer that a possession is adverse where a person entered upon and inclosed the premises more than 20 years before suit brought, without any recognition of a hostile title.—Wilkes v. Elliot, Case No. 17,660.

To avoid the bar of a statute by entry, it must be shown that the entry was made with intent to claim possession, and some act done indicative of such intention.—Holtzapple v. Phillibaum, Case No. 6,648.

Where a person's occupancy of land is necessary to the performance of his contract with the government, he will not be considered to have held the same adversely.—Jackson v. Porter, Case No. 7,143.

Possession under a purchase to be paid for in certain work to be done, when the deed is to be made, cannot by lapse of time ripen into a title; otherwise where a deed is given.—Stansbury v. Taggart, Case No. 13,292.

The possession must be under claim or color of title.—Arrowsmith v. Burlingim, Case No. 563; Granger v. Swart, Id. 5,685; McIver v. Reagan, Id. 8,832; Nelson v. Madison, Id. 10,110; Patton v. Hynes, Id. 10,835; Taggart v. Stanbery, Id. 13,724; Wilkes v. Elliot, Id. 17,660.

Color of title or entry under a formal deed is only necessary to adverse possession, when such possession, as to part of the premises, is merely constructive.—Shuffleton v. Nelson, Case No. 12,822.

Color of title in good faith must be such as would pass the land if a better title were not shown.—Arrowsmith v. Burlingim, Case No. 563; Dubois v. McLean, Id. 4,107. But see Roberts v. Pillow, Case No. 11,909.

A purchase at a tax sale, and inclosed possession under it, give color of title.—Wilkes v. Elliot, Case No. 17,660.

But the possession of a purchaser at a tax sale is not to be considered under claim and color of title until the tax deed is actually executed.—Holden v. Collins, Case No. 6,599.

A tax deed which shows upon its face that legal notice of the sale was not given is void, and does not set running the statute of limitations.—Moore v. Brown, Case No. 9,753.

Lapse of time short of 20 years will not bar an action to recover possession of real property, where defendant claims under a sale by an administrator, except where the sale was made under Code Or. c. 5, § 42, to pay decedent's debts, and plaintiff claims under such decedent.—Wythe v. Myers, Case No. 18,119.

The possession of an occupant of a lot in Coffin's addition to Portland, Or., was not adverse to the title of Coffin until the passage of the donation act, because the legal title of the latter did not accrue until then.—Shuffleton v. Nelson, Case No. 12,822.

An entry into possession, claiming title to the entirety under a deed, where the title turns out to be defective as to a moiety, is a disseisin of the parties entitled to that moiety.—Prescott v. Nevers, Case No. 11,390.

No other deed or title than that originally asserted can be set up to help out the possession.—Jackson v. Porter, Case No. 7,143.

If a man having two titles to land, one defeasible, and the other indefeasible, enters generally, the law adjudges that he entered under his better title.—Gardner v. Sharp, Case No. 5,236.

§ 5. Payment of taxes.

Paying taxes, suing trespassers, etc., is not enough to constitute an adverse possession.—Ewing v. Burnet, Case No. 4,591.

Payment of taxes for 21 years, without an adverse possession during such time, gives no color of title.—Girard v. Philadelphia, Case No. 5,459.

II. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

§ 6. Extent of possession.

The possession of the disseisor does not extend beyond the particular part occupied, and the legal possession of the owner revives the moment the intruder quits such part.—Potts v. Gilbert, Case No. 11,347.

Where one enters into land having title, his seisin is not bounded by his actual possession, but is coextensive with his title; otherwise where he enters without title.—Jackson v. Porter, Case No. 7,143; Ellicott v. Pearl, Id. 4,386; Fraser v. Hunter, Id. 5,063.

§ 7. Property and estates affected.

No length of occupancy under an Indian grant can ripen into a title by adverse possession.—Jackson v. Porter, Case No. 7,143.

If the statute of limitations has once run against a tenant in tail, it is a complete bar to a subsequent tenant in tail upon a descent cast.—Inman v. Barnes, Case No. 7,048.

§ 8. Title or right acquired.

By the common law, land held adversely cannot be conveyed.—Bowman v. Wathen, Case No. 1,740.

In California, adverse possession for the time prescribed vests title.—Meeks v. Vassault, Case No. 9,393.

Adverse possession for the time limited by the statute not only bars the remedy, but extinguishes the right, and vests a perfect title in the adverse holder.—Four Hundred and Twenty Min. Co. v. Bullion Min. Co., Case No. 4,989.

The alienee of a disseisor in possession has a good title as against all persons not having a paramount title.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

III. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

§ 9. Pleading title or right.

A plea which alleges just title, good faith, the requisite period of possession, and that possession continued peaceful and without interruption, is sufficient (in Louisiana) to show title by prescription.—Gaines v. Agnelly, Case No. 5,173.

§ 10. Presumptions and burden of proof.

A deed is not to be presumed where the evidence shows that plaintiffs frequently remonstrated, and consulted counsel about redressing their wrong.—Stillman v. White Rock Mfg. Co., Case No. 13,446.

A perception of the esplees is evidence of seisin, but this is presumed under a deed.—Barr v. Galloway, Case No. 1,037.

Possession, accompanied with a claim of ownership in fee, is prima facie evidence of such an estate.—Jackson v. Porter, Case No. 7,143.

An affidavit may be sworn to before affiant's counsel, though wholly in his handwriting.—Atkinson v. Glenn, Case No. 610.

Affidavits taken by justices of the peace and masters in chancery of the state of Arkansas are good in the circuit court of the United States.—Gray v. Tunstall, Case No. 5,730.

Notaries public have no power under the Revised Statutes to administer oaths in the United States circuit court.—Buerk v. Imhaeuser, Case No. 2,107a.

Affidavits taken before notaries public cannot be read in bankruptcy proceedings.—In re McKibben, Case No. 8,859.

An affidavit not sworn to before a judge of the court, or a commissioner appointed to administer an oath, cannot be read in evidence.—Haight v. Morris Aqueduct, Case No. 5,902.

Affidavits not entitled in the cause are not admissible.—Buerk v. Imhaeuser, Case No. 2,107a.

An affidavit taken in a suit in equity, sworn to before bill filed, must not be entitled in the suit.—Baldwin v. Bernard, Case No. 797.

An affidavit entitled as in a cause pending, but taken before it existed, cannot be read in evidence with such title, nor after the title is rejected, if the absence of the title renders material portions meaningless.—Blake Crusher Co. v. Ward, Case No. 1,505.

§ 3. Venue.

The venue in affidavits taken before a United States commissioner should be "United States of America, District of ——," and not "State of ——, County of ——."—Sterrick v. Pugsley, Case No. 13,379.

§ 4. Jurat or certificate of officer.

An affidavit whose certificate does not state the place where it is taken is not admissible as evidence.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692c.

A certificate stating that a person of the same name with the one who administered the oath is a magistrate, but not stating that the person who administered it is a magistrate, is an insufficient authentication.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692c.

§ 5. Affidavits taken in other state or foreign country.

Where a clerk certifies the mayor, it is not necessary that the mayor should certify the clerk.—Wright v. West, Case No. 18,102.

§ 1. Disabilities—Who are aliens.

On a transfer of territory by one nation to another the political relations between the inhabitants of the ceded territory and the former government are changed.—Tobin v. Walkinshaw, Case No. 14,070.

Naturalized citizens of such ceded country, who owe allegiance, purely statutory, when released therefrom, are remitted to their original status.—Tobin v. Walkinshaw, Case No. 14,070.

§ 2. —— Protection of persons and property.

Under the treaty of July 28, 1868, art. 6, Chinamen can reside in the United States on the same terms as the subjects of Great Britain and France.—Chapman v. Toy Long, Case No. 2,610.

The right to reside in the United States, given by treaty, implies the right to labor there, which right the states have no power to restrict.—Baker v. Portland, Case No. 777.

A treaty with a country giving its subjects the same privileges that are granted "to the most favored nation" does not include rights granted by special convention.—Weiberg v. The St. Oloff, Case No. 17,357.

§ 3. —— Real and personal property.

A British subject could not, in 1793, inherit lands in the United States from a citizen of the United States.—Contee v. Godfrey, Case No. 3,140.

If one of four parceners be an alien, the whole descends to the remaining three.—Contee v. Godfrey, Case No. 3,140.

An alien to whom an interest in real estate is devised is entitled to hold the same until the state interposes its prerogative claim.—Cross v. De Valle, Case No. 3,430.

The rule which prevails at common law, that an alien can take lands by purchase, though not by descent, prevails also in equity.—Cross v. De Valle, Case No. 3,430.

A deed upon a secret trust for an alien, of which the grantee has no knowledge, is not invalid where the alien is incapacitated from acquiring or holding realty, the trust, only, being void.—Hammekin v. Clayton, Case No. 5,996.

The title to land held in trust by an unnaturalized alien held to vest in a new trustee, appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction, on the death of the first trustee, though the heirs were all unnaturalized aliens, where the commonwealth had not consummated her title by inquest and office found.—Randall v. Jaques, Case No. 11,553.

Under Act Md. Dec. 1791, § 6, no alien can take by descent the real estate of an alien or naturalized citizen, but he can take real estate by deed or will.—Dixon v. Walker, Case No. 18,291.

By the Mexican law in force in Texas from March 17, 1836, to January 20, 1840, aliens were prohibited from holding lands except by titles issuing directly from the government.—Hammekin v. Clayton, Case No. 5,996.

But a title under a deed not emanating from the government is good against all persons until declared void in some proceeding analogous to office found.—Hammekin v. Clayton, Case No. 5,996.

After the passage of the Mexican law of 1842 relating to foreigners, no unnaturalized foreigner could receive a grant of land without the express license of the supreme government.—United States v. Cambuston, Case No. 14,713.

A state has power to give capacity to aliens to hold lands within it.—Beard v. Rowan, Case No. 1,181.

The Mexican governors of California had no authority to remove the disabilities of foreigners in respect to holding lands under the Mexican laws of 1836 and 1842.—United States v. Cambuston, Case No. 14,713.

An act giving capacity to aliens "which shall have resided in the state two years" applies as well to future as to past residence.—Beard v. Rowan, Case No. 1,181.

The statute of 7 Anne, c. 5, § 3, does not apply to children born under the same allegiance with that of their father.—Contee v. Godfrey, Case No. 3,140.

The personal property of an alien or naturalized citizen dying intestate will be distributed according to the law of the domicile of the deceased.—Dixon v. Walker, Case No. 18,291.

§ 4. —— Actions.

Alien friends are entitled to claim the same protection of their rights in the federal courts as citizens.—Taylor v. Carpenter, Case No. 13,784; Id. 13,785.

An executor may recover rents for the use of the heir who is an alien.—Wise v. Resler, Case No. 17,911.

A plea in bar in a suit between aliens, that the contract was made abroad, held good.—Fields v. Taylor, Case No. 4,777.

§ 5. Exclusion or expulsion.

A state in the exercise of its police powers cannot discriminate against citizens of a foreign treaty power.—In re Ah Fong, Case No. 102.

Exclusion of foreigners when convicts, lepers, etc., within police power of states.—In re Ah Fong, Case No. 102.

§ 6. Immigration.

A state statute imposing conditions on Chinese immigrants not imposed on other immigrants is in violation of Act May 31, 1870.—In re Ah Fong, Case No. 102.

§ 7. Naturalization—Power to naturalize in general.

A state possesses concurrent authority with congress upon the subject of naturalization, but cannot use such authority to contravene a rule established by the latter.—Collet v. Collet, Case No. 3,001.

An alien could not become a citizen either of a state or of the United States, by compliance with state naturalization laws, after congress passed a naturalization law.—Matthew v. Rae, Case No. 9,284.

A state cannot make a foreigner a citizen of the United States.—Lanz v. Randall, Case No. 8,080.

An attempted naturalization under the Pennsylvania act of 1789, after the adoption of the new state constitution, held ineffectual.—United States v. Villato, Case No. 16,622.

A married woman may be admitted to be naturalized.—Ex parte Pic, Case No. 11,118.

A native of China, of the Mongolian race, is not a white person entitled to naturalization. (R. S. § 2169.)—In re Ah Yup, Case No. 104.

An alien in the United States before 1802 may be admitted to the rights of citizenship without proof of having resided, etc., five years.—O'Brien v. Woody, Case No. 10,398.

To entitle an alien to naturalization, under the act of 1802, he must have a territorial residence. Continuous service on board a United States naval vessel is not sufficient.—Anonymous, Case No. 465.

To entitle an alien to be naturalized, the five years' residence in the United States under the acts of 1802 and 1804 must be a continued residence.—Ex parte Saunderson, Case No. 12,378; Ex parte Walton, Case No. 17,127.

Constant service as a sailor after domicile acquired will not affect right to naturalization. (Acts April 14, 1802, § 1, and March 3, 1813, § 12.)—In re An Alien, Case No. 201a.

A foreign mariner, residing in Alexandria five years, but sailing occasionally during that time in American vessels from that port, may be naturalized.—Ex parte Pasqualt, Case No. 10,788.

A person who serves an apprenticeship in the United States, and thereafter is in constant service as a sailor, spending the intervals between voyages at his mother's home in the United States, is entitled to naturalization under Act May 26, 1824.—In re An Alien, Case No. 201a.

The word "armies," as used in acts admitting enlisted aliens to citizenship, does not include "marines."—In re Bailey, Case No. 728.

To entitle an alien to naturalization, he must prove that he has behaved as a man of good moral character during all the period of his residence in the United States.—In re Spenser, Case No. 13,234.

A person who commits perjury is not entitled to admission to citizenship, though he has received a pardon.—In re Spenser, Case No. 13,234.

§ 10. —— Jurisdiction of courts.

A court of record without a recording officer distinct from the judge is not competent to receive an alien's declaration of intention. (Act 1802.)—Ex parte Cregg, Case No. 3,380.

The probate courts of Ohio, which are courts of record, with common-law jurisdiction in many cases, and which have a seal and clerk, possess jurisdiction in matters of naturalization, under the act of congress of 1802.—Ex parte Smith, Case No. 12,969.

The city court of Yonkers is a court having common-law jurisdiction, within Rev. St. § 2165, and may naturalize an alien.—United States v. Power, Case No. 16,080.

The clerk of the court may receive the preliminary application and oath of an alien to be naturalized. Act May 26, 1824.—Butterworth's Case, Case No. 2,251.

A deposition, made in 1802, that deponents have known the applicant "since the year 1793, in New York," is not evidence that he was residing in the United States before Jan. 29, 1795. (Act April 14, 1802.)—Ex parte Tucker, Case No. 14,214.

The registry required by Act April 14, 1802, § 2, must have been made five years before the application for naturalization.—Anonymous, Case No. 468.

The applicant must also prove the period of his residence and also the other matters required by such section. Parol evidence of the arrival of the applicant five years prior to the application is not sufficient.—Anonymous, Case No. 468.

§ 12. —— Record and certificate.

The question as to what constitutes a record of naturalization considered.—In re Coleman, Case No. 2,980.

The applicant who has complied with all the conditions of admission to citizenship cannot be prejudiced by the failure to record all the proceedings.—In re Coleman, Case No. 2,980.

The validity of a judgment admitting a person to citizenship is not impaired by inaccurate recitals, not intended to deceive, it being clear that the applicant was entitled to naturalization.—In re McCoppin, Case No. 8,713.

§ 13. —— Offenses against naturalization laws.

The words, "if any person shall make, forge," etc., a certificate of naturalization (Act March 3, 1813, § 13), are intended to be general in their operation, and are not confined to seamen.—United States v. Randolph, Case No. 16,120.

The certificate or evidence of citizenship, the sale of which is made criminal by the act of March 3, 1813, is a certified copy of the act by which one was naturalized, and which authorizes his employment on an American vessel.—United States v. Makins, Case No. 15,710.

ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

§ 1, Materiality. § 2, Person making alteration and intent. § 3, Rights founded on original transaction or consideration. § 4, Pleading and evidence.

See, also, "Forgery"; "Reformation of Instruments."

§ 1. Materiality.

An alteration of the recitals of a bond, which does not in any manner prejudice the obligees or affect their rights or obligations, is immaterial.—Crawford v. Dexter, Case No. 3,368; Walton v. Coulson, Case No. 17,132.

An alteration of a patent by scratching out the dot over the letter "i" in the name of the grantee held not sufficient to exclude the patent as evidence.—Morgan v. Curtenius, Case No. 9,799.

The addition of the names of others as joint makers to a promissory note will not avoid it.—Bingham v. Reddy, Case No. 1,414.

The insertion of the words "Value received" after an indorsement is not a material alteration, and does not avoid the note, unless done with the privity of plaintiff.—Riggs v. St. Clair, Case No. 11,829.

The addition of the name of a place to the signature of the maker of the note, to make it negotiable according to the law of such place, is a material alteration.—Commercial & Farmers' Bank v. Patterson, Case No. 3,056.

The erasure of the place of payment from a promissory note is not a material alteration, as it enlarges and does not limit the rights of the maker; and, where done by an unauthorized person, will not prevent recovery against the maker.—Major v. Hansen, Case No. 8,982.

Erasing the words "after date," in a printed blank, following "on demand," will not avoid a note.—Bingham v. Reddy, Case No. 1,414.

An alteration of the date of a promissory note, whereby the time of payment is prolonged, does not invalidate it as against the maker.—Union Bank v. Cook, Case No. 14,349.

§ 2. Person making alteration and intent.

A deed is not avoided by the seal's being torn off fraudulently or innocently by the obligor.—Cutts v. United States, Case No. 3,522.

§ 3. Rights founded on original transaction or consideration.

An obligee who has torn off the seal and canceled a bond, in consequence of fraud and imposition practiced by the obligor, may maintain an action on such bond, and set forth the special facts in the profert.—United States v. Spalding, Case No. 16,365.

§ 4. Pleading and evidence.

In the absence of direct evidence, an altered check will be presumed to have been altered in the first state where it is known to be altered.—United States v. Britton, Case No. 14,650.

Where the maker changes the date of maturity to enable him to discount the note, he has the burden of proof as to the consent of the other parties to the alteration, and such consent will not be presumed from the fact that they subsequently participated in the benefits of the discount.—Bank of Washington v. Way, Case No. 957.

Under the plea of non est factum, an erasure in a deed must be shown to have been made before its execution by the party asserting its validity.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,406.

On a question whether an alteration was made by the original draftsman or by a stranger, other proved writings of his, and also testimony of witnesses, are admissible to show that the peculiarities were such as the draftsman frequently used in his ordinary handwriting.—Smith v. Fenner, Case No. 13,046.

AMBASSADORS AND CONSULS.

§ 1, Evidence of recognition by government. § 2, Powers and duties. § 3, Privileges and immunities. § 4, Bonds. § 5, Consular courts. § 6, Actions. § 7, Criminal prosecutions.

Authorities and duties of consuls in relation to seamen, see "Seamen."
Liability of consul to arrest, see "Arrest," § 1.
Right of consul to intervene in admiralty, see "Admiralty," § 64.

§ 1. Evidence of recognition by government.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove the period when a person was considered by the United States government as a minister.—United States v. Liddle, Case No. 15,598.

§ 2. Powers and duties.

Consuls represent the subjects of their respective nations, if not otherwise represented, where such consuls reside.—Gernon v. Cochran, Case No. 5,368.

A consul in a foreign port, under whose authority a vessel is sold, cannot acquire an interest therein under the sale.—Riley v. The Obell Mitchell, Case No. 11,839.

§ 3. Privileges and immunities.

The willful injury to the dwelling of a foreign minister is an attack on the minister and his sovereign, and punishable as such.—United States v. Hand, Case No. 15,297.

An attaché to a foreign legation is a public minister, within Act 1790 prohibiting an officer from executing process on a public minister.—United States v. Benner, Case No. 14,568.

A consul is not entitled, by the laws of nations, to the immunities and privileges of an ambassador or public minister. He is liable to civil suits, like any other individual, in the tribunals of the country in which he resides.—Gittings v. Crawford, Case No. 5,465.

The privileges of a foreign minister are not extended to a person having a commission from a revolutionary government not acknowledged by the United States.—United States v. Skinner, Case No. 16,309.

It is a breach of diplomatic privilege for an officer to enter the dwelling house of a secretary of legation, and seize there a runaway slave.—United States v. Jeffers, Case No. 15,471.

To support an indictment under Act 1789, § 27, for executing process on a foreign minister it is not necessary that defendant, who executed the process, should know the person arrested to be a foreign minister, or that he was in fact an officer.—United States v. Benner, Case No. 14,568.

It is no defense to an indictment for an assault on a foreign minister that defendant was ignorant of his public character.—United States v. Ortega, Case No. 15,971.

A foreign minister cannot waive his privileges or immunities, and his submission or consent to an arrest is no justification.—United States v. Benner, Case No. 14,568.

If a foreign minister commits the first assault, he forfeits his immunity so far as to excuse defendant for returning it.—United States v. Liddle, Case No. 15,598; Same v. Ortega, Id. 15,971.

It is the duty of the state court to quash proceedings therein in violation of the privilege of a foreign minister.—Ex parte Cabrera, Case No. 2,278.

Upon an indictment for assaulting a member of legation, the certificate of the secretary of state, dated subsequently to the assault, is the best evidence to prove the diplomatic character of the person assaulted.—United States v. Liddle, Case No. 15,598.

A certificate by the secretary of state, under seal, that a person has been recognized by the department of state as a foreign minister, is sufficient to prove his immunity from arrest.—United States v. Benner, Case No. 14,568.

Upon an indictment for an assault committed on a foreign minister, proof that the person assaulted is received and recognized by the executive of the United States is conclusive as to his public character.—United States v. Ortega, Case No. 15,971.

§ 4. Bonds.

The surety of a consul for the faithful discharge of his duties and for his truly accounting for all moneys coming into his possession by virtue of Act April 14, 1792, is not responsible on account of moneys remitted to him for purposes not comprehended within his consular duties, as prescribed by such act.—United States v. Bell, Case No. 14,565.

§ 5. Consular courts.

The consular court is a court of limited jurisdiction, and all the jurisdictional facts must be alleged in a libel or petition.—The Spark v. Lee Choi Chum, Case No. 13,206.

On an appeal from the consular and ministerial courts of China and Japan to the circuit court of the United States of the district of California, the record must show an allowance of the appeal.—The Spark v. Lee Choi Chum, Case No. 13,206.

Form and sufficiency of record on appeal from a consular court of Japan to the circuit court for the district of California.—Tazaymon v. Twombley, Case No. 13,810.

§ 6. Actions.

The constitutional provision vesting in the supreme court "original jurisdiction" in all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, does not make that jurisdiction exclusive.—United States v. Ravara, Case No. 16,122.

The circuit court of the United States has jurisdiction of a suit against a foreign consul.—Graham v. Stucken, Case No. 5,677; St. Luke's Hospital v. Barclay, Id. 12,241.

The state courts have no jurisdiction of suits against foreign consuls, but they have jurisdiction of suits brought by them.—Sagory v. Wissman, Case No. 12,217.

The federal district court has jurisdiction of a suit by an alien against the consul of his nation, residing within the district, to recover the amount of official fees improperly exacted.—Lorway v. Lousada, Case No. 8,517.

The consul of a foreign nation can be sued alone in the federal district court on a contract executed by him jointly with another person.—Valerino v. Thompson, Case No. 16,813a.

See, also, "Courts," § 101.

§ 7. Criminal prosecutions.

Under section 11, Judiciary Act, giving the circuit court jurisdiction of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, such courts have jurisdiction to try an indictment against a foreign consul for offenses committed in this country.—United States v. Ravara, Case No. 16,122.

A foreign consul is indictable and triable in the federal courts for the common-law offense of sending anonymous letters and threats, with intent to extort money.—United States v. Ravara, Case No. 16,122a.

Public cruelty to a horse is an indictable offense.—United States v. Logan, Case No. 15,623.

It is an indictable offense at common law to incite a fierce and dangerous dog to bite and tear a cow.—United States v. McDuell, Case No. 15,672.

Beating to death a cow in or near a public street is indictable at common law as a public nuisance.—United States v. Jackson, Case No. 15,453.

§ 3. Trespassing.

Where cattle are impounded for damage feasant, the badness of plaintiff's fence is no justification of pound breach, but may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages.—Young v. Hoover, Case No. 18,158.

§ 1. Nature and form of remedy—Statutory provisions.

The power to issue "all other writs not specially provided for by statute" (Judiciary Act, § 14) only applies where jurisdiction already exists.—United States v. Plumer, Case No. 16,056.

Appeal and writs of error at common law considered; and Act 1807 and Act April 17, § 50, construed.—Clark v. Shelton, Case No. 2,833b.

The nature of a writ of error, and when it lies, discussed in an opinion by Clifford, J.—United States v. Plumer, Case No. 16,056.

Where a new jurisdiction, unknown to the common law, is created, a writ of error will not, and a certiorari will, lie to it.—Campbell v. Strong, Case No. 2,367b.

A writ of error coram nobis is issued by a court to reverse its own judgment.—Ledgerwood v. Pickett's Heirs, Case No. 8,175.

A writ of error coram nobis lies to set aside an erroneous execution.—Phillips v. Russell, Case No. 11,105a.

A writ of error coram nobis does not lie in the circuit court, either from its own judgment, or the judgment of the district court.—United States v. Plumer, Case No. 16,056.

A writ of error is the proper process to correct errors of the district court in common-law actions. No appeal lies from the district to the circuit court except in civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.—United States v. Wonson, Case No. 16,750; United States v. Haynes, Id. 15,335.

Confiscation causes are not admiralty, but common-law, cases, and are to be reviewed by writs of error.—Brown v. United States, Case No. 2,032.

A petition by an informer for his proportion of the penalty recovered in an action on a coasting license bond is a proceeding at common law, and from the sentence on the petition no appeal lies. The remedy is by writ of error.—Westcot v. Bradford, Case No. 17,429.

A seizure case triable by jury in the district court can be reviewed in the circuit court only on writ of error.—United States v. Fifteen Hogsheads of Brandy, Case No. 15,090.

Where property seized upon land is libeled as forfeited to the United States for violation of the revenue laws, the case can only be reviewed by writ of error.—United States v. Thirty-Seven Barrels of Rum, Case No. 16,467.

If the alleged error be in the judgment itself, and not in the process, a writ of error does not lie in the same court to correct it.—United States v. Plumer, Case No. 16,056.

Questions of fact cannot be re-examined on a writ of error.—Ruddick v. Billings, Case No. 12,110.

A writ of error does not lie from the supreme court to the circuit court.—United States v. Plumer, Case No. 16,055.

A writ of error does not lie on an allowance against an executor or administrator under Act Ark. 1825, § 30.—Campbell v. Strong, Case No. 2,367b.

Erroneous proceedings must be reversed on a writ of error, or they are binding.—Thompson v. Phillips, Case No. 13,974.

§ 3. Decisions reviewable—In general.

A supreme court justice sitting in the circuit will not review a ruling by a district judge holding a circuit.—Appleton v. Smith, Case No. 498.

An action of debt to recover a penalty is a "civil cause" (Act 1789, § 9), in which a writ of error lies from the federal district to the federal circuit court.—Jacob v. United States, Case No. 7,157.

Where the circuit court enters a decree dismissing the bill, where a certificate of division of opinion on a question of jurisdiction is dismissed by the supreme court because of an equal division of opinion, an appeal may be taken from such decree, and the case reviewed in the supreme court, the same as if the decree were pronounced by the judgment of the circuit court.—Coleman v. Hudson River Bridge Co., Case No. 2,983.

No appeal lies from a decree of a federal district court unless the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of $50.—Shirley v. Titus, Case No. 12,796.

An appeal does not lie to the superior court of Arkansas in cases where the sum in controversy is less than $100.—Murphy v. Byrd, Case No. 9,947a.

No final judgment or decree of the circuit court can be re-examined in the supreme court, unless the matter in dispute exceeds $5,000. (Act Feb. 16, 1875, § 3.)—Robbins v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., Case No. 11,882.

In a suit in equity by or against an assignee, an appeal to the circuit court is allowed only upon final decrees of the district court where the sum in controversy exceeds $500.—In re Zug, Case No. 18,222.

§ 5. —— Finality of determination.

An appeal will not lie except from a final decision or judgment; and, where none is given, the appellate court has not jurisdiction.—Blakely v. Fish, Case No. 18,240.

The words "ideo consideratum est" in the entry of a judgment are not essential to show that it is final.—Whitaker v. Bramson, Case No. 17,526.

An appeal does not lie from an interlocutory judgment dissolving an injunction.—Clark v. Shelton, Case No. 2,833b.

The decision of the district judge, awarding a perpetual injunction against a treasury warrant of distress, is a final decree within Act March 3, 1803, and appealable to the circuit court.—Porter v. United States, Case No. 11,290.

A decree against a person served with process of foreign attachment, requiring him to pay the money into court as property of the respondent, held not final and appealable.—Cushing v. Laird, Case No. 3,510.

An order in railroad foreclosure proceedings, approving, only on certain conditions, a consent contract for the erection of a bridge, held not appealable.—La Crosse Railroad Bridge, Case No. 7,969.

A denial of a motion for a nonsuit is not reviewable on error.—Miller v. Jones, Case No. 9,576.

A judgment of the orphans' court against petitioner, on demurrer to his petition for review, is subject to an appeal.—Mauro v. Ritchie, Case No. 9,312.

On a libel for condemnation of merchandise and gold coin, a decree directing that the coin should be deposited in the registry to await further orders is not final; and an appeal will lie from a decree, made over two years later, ordering the gold to be paid over to a claimant.—United States v. Canoe, Case No. 14,718.

A party may appeal from an interlocutory decree having the effect of a final decree, or may wait until final decree is entered.—The New England, Case No. 10,151.

§ 6. —— Nature, scope, and effect of decision.

The refusal of a court to amend a verdict cannot be assigned for error.—Stearns v. Barrett, Case No. 13,337.

Irregularities committed by the jury relative to their verdict cannot be examined by writ of error.—United States v. Gillies, Case No. 15,206.

A writ of error does not lie at common law for the refusal of a court to grant a new trial.—United States v. Gibert, Case No. 15,204.

Allowing a party to open and close is not the subject of a bill of exceptions.—United States v. Dunham, Case No. 15,006.

The issue of nul tiel record is an issue of fact, and, as such, no writ of error lies from the judgment of the federal district court on that fact to the circuit court. (Act Sept. 24, 1789, c. 20, § 22.)—United States v. Cook, Case No. 14,851.

A finding of fact by the federal district court is not a subject of review by a writ of error when the record does not show that any rules of law were violated, or that any erroneous construction of statute was applied to the facts proved.—United States v. Sixty ⅝ Carats Brilliants, Case No. 16,305.

The federal circuit court has jurisdiction to review a judgment or decree of distribution made by the district court among various claimants of the informer's share in a forfeiture after condemnation and sale of the forfeited property.—Wheaton v. United States, Case No. 17,487.

Defendant cannot appeal from a superseded judgment. (Act Md. 1791, c. 67.)—Coumbe v. Nairn, Case No. 3,278.

The decision on a challenge for favor is not reviewable.—United States v. McHenry, Case No. 15,681.

A tender, by answer and payment into court of a certain sum as salvage, is not an admission that such sum is due; and if the tender is refused, and the same sum is decreed, respondent may still appeal.—Lubker v. The A. H. Quinby, Case No. 8,586.

§ 8. Presentation and reservation in lower court of ground of review—Objections.

Mere technical objections taken for first time in appellate court are unavailing.—Babbitt v. Burgess, Case No. 693.

An exception cannot be taken to a verdict for the first time on appeal.—Campbell v. Strong, Case No. 2,367a.

Where defendant acquiesces in a reference, and appears before the auditor, and contests the claim, he cannot, on writ of error, object that the case should have been tried by a jury.—Kelly v. Smith, Case No. 7,675.

§ 9. —— Exceptions.

Objections to evidence are not available where no exceptions were taken to the ruling of the court at the time.—Locke v. United States, Case No. 8,442.

A bill of exceptions which shows that the exceptions were taken for the first time four days after the verdict and judgment will not be considered.—Strain v. Gourdin, Case No. 13,521.

§ 10. —— Cases certified.

A division in opinion between the judges holding the circuit court in respect to granting a new trial is not a case which can be certified to the supreme court.—Lanning v. London, Case No. 8,075.

No civil suit where there is a certificate of division of opinion can be taken to the supreme court, except upon final judgment, and by a writ of error or appeal. Rev. St. §§ 650, 652, 693.—Robbins v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., Case No. 11,882.

The judges of the federal circuit court on a motion for a new trial cannot certify to a division of opinion at the trial itself, unless both were present.—Taylor v. Carpenter, Case No. 13,785.

Practice stated in regard to certificates of division of opinion where the court is held by two judges.—United States v. Fullerton, Case No. 15,175.

§ 10a. Parties.

An appeal or writ of error will not lie in the name of a steamboat, or in the name of a firm without stating the names of the individuals.—The Spark v. Lee Choi Chum, Case No. 13,206.

§ 11. Requisites and proceedings for transfer of cause—Time of taking proceedings.

An appeal from a decree of the district court must be taken in open court before the adjournment sine die, unless a different period be prescribed by the court.—Norton v. Rich, Case No. 10,352.

An appeal from the district to the circuit court must be prayed for and allowed to the next circuit court held within the district.—United States v. Haynes, Case No. 15,335.

An appeal in a suit to confirm a land grant will be granted on application made after the expiration of the term at which the decree was rendered.—Noe v. United States, Case No. 10,286.

The limitation of the time for bringing writs of error to five years after rendition of the decree complained of (Act 1789, § 22) does not apply to writs of error coram nobis.—Strode v. The Stafford Justices, Case No. 13,537.

A district judge sitting in the circuit court may, in a proper case, enlarge the time for filing an appeal in the circuit court.—Morris v. Brush, Case No. 9,828.

Time for appeals from the orphans' court of the county of Alexandria, D. C.—Tracy v. Scott, Case No. 14,126.

§ 12. —— Prayer, allowance, and affidavit.

An appeal taken to the superior court of the territory of Arkansas without the affidavit prescribed by law must be dismissed.—Janes v. Buzzard, Case No. 7,206b.

The prayer for appeal, and an order granting it upon terms, is not evidence that the terms were complied with or the appeal prosecuted.—Lambert v. Smith, Case No. 8,028.

Where an appeal bond was presented and approved, but no formal appeal prayed, held, that the court might afterwards allow the appeal nunc pro tunc.—Nicholson v. Chicago, Case No. 10,248.

§ 13. —— Bonds or other securities.

An executrix may appeal from the orphans' court to the circuit court of the District of Columbia without giving security.—Deneale v. Young, Case No. 3,785.

Where the writ of error operates as a supersedeas, the security is to be for costs, and such damages as the supreme court may award for the delay.—Renner v. Bank of Columbia, Case No. 11,699.

Where an appeal ties up a fund in court, the bond should provide for payment of interest during the pendency of the appeal.—Turner v. Indianapolis, B. & W. Ry. Co., Case No. 14,260.

The practice of requiring a bond in double the amount of the decree and costs will not be departed from except under special circumstances rendering it unnecessary.—American Nicholson Pavement Co. v. Elizabeth, Case No. 310.

Where the judgment is for a large amount, the court may approve an appeal bond whose penalty is not double such amount.—Hatch v. Coddington, Case No. 6,205.

On writ of error from the supreme court, a justice refused to order an increase in the bond given, though, by reason of the supersedeas, the fees and emoluments coming to plaintiff from defendant would greatly exceed the amount of the bond given.—Butchers' Ass'n v. Slaughter House Co., Case No. 2,234.

The affidavit of the surety on an appeal bond, as to his responsibility, where he does not personally appear, is not sufficient. There must be independent evidence of his responsibility.—Hobson v. Johnson, Case No. 6,553.

The usual affidavit of the ability of the sureties accompanying the bond when approved, held sufficient justification.—Hatch v. Coddington, Case No. 6,205.

A bond with security is a substantial compliance with the statute requiring a recognizance.—Deen v. Hemphill, Case No. 3,736a; Dowlin v. Standifer, Id. 4,041a.

A bond which does not set out the nature of the action, nor the court to which the appeal is prayed, is informal, but not void.—Smith v. Walker, Case No. 13,123a.

Where an appeal bond is defective, a new one may be filed at any time before the case is finally acted on, and the appeal will not be dismissed.—Deen v. Hemphill, Case No. 3,736a.

The bond is waived by an appearance and failure to object, and the want of it does not affect the jurisdiction.—Dillingham v. Skein, Case No. 3,912a.

When a condition in an appeal bond is in the disjunctive, defendant in an action thereon must, by his plea, show which part he has performed.—Tucker v. Lee, Case No. 14,221.

§ 14. —— Writ of error and notice.

After a reversal in the supreme court, where defendant entered an appearance, he cannot object that no writ of error was sued out.—Evans v. Eaton, Case No. 4,560.

Where the record is actually returned and filed in due time, and the copy of the writ of error is correct, a mere clerical error in the return day in the original writ is immaterial, and is cured.—United States v. Six Lots of Ground, Case No. 16,299.

Circuit court obtains jurisdiction on appeal by filing and serving notice of appeal, and not by filing of transcript. — Baldwin v. Raplee, Case No. 802.

If the appeal is prayed on the day of trial, notice is unnecessary, and the appeal bond may be given at any time within 10 days.—Billingsley v. Bell, Case No. 18,237.

§ 15. —— Entry.

An appeal from the district court is properly entered at the term of the circuit court begun next after the entry of the decree in the district court, though the term of the latter was not ended when the term of the circuit court began.—United States v. Certain Hogsheads of Molasses, Case No. 14,766.

§ 16. Effect of transfer of cause or proceedings therefor.

The pendency of an appeal from a final decree, where no supersedeas exists, does not deprive the court below of the power to compel the decree to be executed.—Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Central Railroad of Iowa, Case No. 4,664.

The purchaser under a judgment pending a writ of error or appeal, where no stay of proceedings was obtained, acquires a good title.—South Fork Canal Co. v. Gordon, Case No. 13,189.

After a case has been appealed from the circuit to the supreme court, it is not the proper practice to apply to the circuit court for a request to the supreme court to send the case back for a rehearing.—Roemer v. Simon, Case No. 11,998.

A substantial defect in a declaration cannot be amended in the circuit court while the case is pending in the supreme court.—Marsteller v. McClean, Case No. 9,140.

After a writ of error has been served and returned to the supreme court, the record cannot be amended in the court below, though the writ has been dismissed in the court above.—United States v. Hooe, Case No. 15,386.

On an appeal from a final decree dissolving an injunction, taken in such form as to operate as a supersedeas, the court below has no jurisdiction to restrain the successful party from prosecuting the previously enjoined work pending the appeal.—Eureka Consol. Min. Co. v. Richmond Min. Co., Case No. 4,549.

§ 17. Supersedeas or stay of execution.

Where the terms of a bond on appeal comply with the provisions of Rev. St. § 1000, in regard to a supersedeas and stay of execution, the bond operates as a supersedeas and stay of execution without any order to that effect.—Arnold v. Frost, Case No. 558.

Further action of a justice of the supreme court of the United States is superseded by the application for and allowance of a writ of error.—Butchers' Ass'n v. Slaughter House Co., Case No. 2,234.

A writ of error to the judgment of the circuit court of the District of Columbia awarding a peremptory mandamus is a supersedeas.—United States v. Columbian Ins. Co., Case No. 14,840.

Both appeals and writs of error operate as a supersedeas without express order, if taken within the proper time and with an offer of the requisite security. — Butchers' Ass'n v. Slaughter House Co., Case No. 2,234.

The allowance of an appeal to the supreme court relates back to the time when the original application was made to the judge of the circuit court, and entitles the party to a stay.—Thornhill v. Bank of Louisiana, Case No. 13,991.

An appeal and the bond given in pusuance thereof do not vacate or suspend an order of injunction.—Whitney v. Mowry, Case No. 17,592.

A writ of error to a decree dissolving an injunction restraining enforcement of a judgment at law held not a supersedeas. — Grundy v. Young, Case No. 5,850.

A writ of error is not a supersedeas unless a copy is filed in the clerk's office for the adverse party within the ten days. Act 1789, § 23.—Moore v. Dunlop, Case No. 9,759; Ex parte Ben, Id. 1,285.

The 10 days within which a writ of error must be sued out to operate as a supersedeas, where a motion for a new trial is denied, commences to run from the entry of the rule for judgment in the clerk's office.—Hatch v. Coddington, Case No. 6,205.

A writ of error is not a supersedeas unless served within 10 days after rendition of the judgment, irrespective of agreements of the parties for a stay of execution.—Thompson v. Voss, Case No. 13,979.

Where the writ of error pending in the supreme court was not taken out in time to operate as a supersedeas, execution against the bail will not be stayed, nor will an injunction issue.—Foyles v. Law, Case No. 5,024.

A bond on appeal from a decree for plaintiff held not to cover the amount directed to be paid to the master, and the collection thereof not subject to be stayed by the proceedings for appeal.—Myers v. Dunbar, Case No. 9,990.

Execution on a judgment obtained in a suit on a judgment obtained in another state will not be stayed pending an appeal from the original judgment, where such appeal is not a supersedeas.—Troy City Bank v. Lauman, Case No. 14,194.

When one tribunal reviews the judgment of another, or the action of its own subordinate bodies or officers, it should never reverse without having before it all the facts and conditions upon which the decision to be reviewed was based.—In re Weber Furniture Co., Case No. 17,331.

The ground of objection to the admissibility of evidence must appear, to render the exception available.—Locke v. United States, Case No. 8,442.

§ 19. —— Scope and contents of record.

Where a seizure case is, by agreement of the parties, tried by the district court without a jury, the record should be made up as in the case of a writ of error, with the proper exceptions to the admission or rejection of testimony, etc.—United States v. Fifteen Hogsheads of Brandy, Case No. 15,090.

A note sued on is not part of the record, unless produced on oyer.—Cook v. Gray, Case No. 3,156a.

A statement by counsel of the evidence, not made a part of the bill of exceptions, though formally certified by the clerk, is no part of the record.—Strain v. Gourdin, Case No. 13,521.

§ 20. —— Necessity and sufficiency of bill of exceptions or case.

The proceedings and judgments of the district court in actions at law cannot be reviewed where the facts are controverted and no case is stated for the opinion of the court.—Blair v. Allen, Case No. 1,483.

A statement in the clerk's minutes that a bill of exceptions was sealed and placed on file is not available unless the exception was seasonably reduced to writing, and embodied in a regular bill of exceptions.—Locke v. United States, Case No. 8,442.

The findings of fact by a referee cannot be reviewed on writ of error to the circuit court, where his report was not excepted to, and a case containing exceptions forming part of the record contained only proceedings which took place prior to the making of such report.—Tyler v. Angevine, Case No. 14,306.

Where objection is made to the admissibility of testimony, the bill of exceptions must set it out so that the court may judge of its admissibility, and, if this is not done, the judgment will be presumed to be correct.—Wiley v. Robinson, Case No. 17,656a.

Where the rulings of the court on documentary evidence are made the subject of exceptions, the documents must be inserted in the bill of exceptions.—United States v. Dunham, Case No. 15,006; Stockwell v. United States, Id. 13,466.

The appellant in Maryland is not bound to prosecute his appeal, and transmit the record, until the term next after the approval of the appeal bond.—Scott v. Law, Case No. 12,537.

If a term intervenes between the issuing of the writ of error and filing the record and writ, plaintiff in error will be non prossed.—Janes v. May, Case No. 7,206c.

Time for filing transcript on appeal in the circuit court may be extended by consent of parties beyond statutory time.—Baldwin v. Raplee, Case No. 802.

§ 22. —— Questions presented for review.

Judgment will not be reversed because the court refuses to give a charge abstractly correct, but which the bill of exceptions does not show was pertinent to the case.—United States v. Three Hundred and Thirty-Seven Cases of Wine, Case No. 16,506.

Error in excluding depositions cannot be considered when the bill of exceptions does not identify them, but they are inserted in the copy of the record by the clerk, more than two months after the bill is signed.—United States v. Three Hundred and Thirty-Seven Cases of Wine, Case No. 16,506.

§ 23. —— Matters not apparent of record.

On review by writ of error, facts not stated in the bill of exceptions will not be noticed.—Pendleton v. United States, Case No. 10,924.

§ 24. Assignment of errors.

Nothing can be assigned for error which contradicts a record.—Field v. Gibbs, Case No. 4,766.

§ 25. Dismissal.

An appeal from the orphans' court, Washington county, D. C., will be dismissed if the record is not transmitted within 30 days after the order appealed from.—Mauro v. Ritchie, Case No. 9,312.

It is too late to object to an appeal where both parties have treated it as valid.—The Native, Case No. 10,054.

The authority of the district court in cases pending on appeal extends only to the protection of parties against unreasonable delay. A motion to dismiss must be made in the circuit court.—The Josephine, Case No. 7,545.

The appellate court may sustain the appeal in part, and dismiss it in part, on the ground that, as to such part, the case could not be brought up for review on appeal.—Westcot v. Bradford, Case No. 17,429.

A writ of error, in exceptional cases, will be dismissed without prejudice to another writ, or to an effectual process to remove the cause.—Ruddick v. Billings, Case No. 12,110.

After dismissal of an appeal, the appellate court cannot affirm the judgment.—Maxwell v. Williams, Case No. 9,324a.

§ 26. Hearing—Continuance.

The appellee may continue the cause where the record is filed only a short time before the term.—Backus v. The Marengo, Case No. 713.

§ 27. Rehearing.

Circuit court, on appeal, cannot rehear a cause or admit a claim at a term subsequent to that in which the cause was finally decided.—The Avery, Case No. 672.

§ 28. Review—Scope and extent in general.

On error to the circuit court from a judgment of the district court based on the report of a referee, conclusions of law alone can be reviewed, and these only so far as excepted to below.—Sicard v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,831.

On a writ of error to a district court in Iowa, its ruling on a motion to the jurisdiction may be reviewed under Act June 1, 1872, § 5, making the practice of the state courts applicable to the federal courts.—Nazro v. Cragin, Case No. 10,062.

§ 29. —— Parties entitled to allege error.

A party not appealing from the decision of the district court cannot be heard in opposition thereto.—Bush v. The Alonzo, Case No. 2,223.

Amendments may be made in the appellate court only when the suits are on the admiralty side.—United States v. Three Hundred and Ninety-Six Barrels of Distilled Spirits, Case No. 16,503.

The circuit courts, on appeal from the district courts, may allow any amendments of defects in form occurring in the court below, or may disregard them; otherwise as to defects in substance.—Smith v. Jackson, Case No. 13,065.

§ 31. —— Additional proofs and trial of cause anew.

New evidence cannot be heard upon an appeal from the orphans' court.—Gittings v. Burch, Case No. 5,464.

Where a cause has once been tried by a jury in the district court, there cannot be a new trial by a jury at the circuit court.—United States v. Wonson, Case No. 16,750.

§ 32. —— Presumptions.

Instructions will be presumed to be correct where the evidence is not spread upon the record by exception or otherwise.—Blakely v. Ruddell, Case No. 18,241.

Where the record states that the jury were sworn, it will be presumed that the proper oath was administered.—Dillingham v. Skein, Case No. 3,912a.

The appointment of an elisor, to summon a jury, will be presumed to be correct, and to have been done for reasons satisfactory to the court.—Campbell v. Strong, Case No. 2,367a.

§ 33. —— Discretion of lower court.

The decision of the court on a motion for a continuance will not be disturbed save in a flagrant case.—Campbell v. Strong, Case No. 2,367a.

§ 34. —— Questions of fact, verdicts, and findings.

A decision on a question of fact, established with reasonable satisfaction, will not be disturbed.—Baker v. The Potomac, Case No. 778.

A decree will not be disturbed on appeal as against evidence, where the evidence is conflicting and the preponderance is doubtful.—Davison v. Seal-Skins, Case No. 3,661.

A finding of fact by the district court will not be reversed unless clearly erroneous.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,802.

A decree of the district court, based wholly upon a question of fact, will not be reversed where the evidence raises only a doubt as to the fact.—Baker v. Smith, Case No. 781.

Where there is a good and bad count in a declaration, and it appears that the evidence applied solely to the bad count, the judgment will be reversed.—Scull v. Roane, Case No. 12,570c.

It is reversible error to allow evidence to go to the jury which would constitute the ground of a separate action.—Wyatt v. Harden, Case No. 18,106a.

§ 35. —— Harmless error.

An appellate court will not reverse a judgment on technical grounds, where substantial justice has been done.—Fisher v. Reider, Case No. 4,822a.

A new trial will not be granted for error in instructions if it be apparent that justice has been done.—Mirick v. Hemphill, Case No. 9,647a.

Error in rulings is no ground for reversal where the appealing party had no case.—Marionneaux's Case, Case No. 9,088.

Where the judgment on the whole record is right, it will not be disturbed, though errors were committed.—Johnson v. McLain, Case No. 7,395a; Anonymous, Id. 18,224.

A judgment will not be reversed for a refusal to admit evidence offered, unless it appears affirmatively that, if admitted, it would tend to prove a material fact in the cause.—Watt v. United States, Case No. 17,292.

The error in the admission or rejection of evidence on a question of fraud or deceit must not only be striking, but must necessarily have been calculated to mislead the jury, before the verdict will be interfered with.—Walker v. Hawxhurst, Case No. 17,071.

Where the instructions are not applicable to the facts proved in the case, and have no influence on the verdict, they are not ground of a reversal, however erroneous they may be.—United States v. Wright, Case No. 16,775.

Error in the admission of testimony of a custom is rendered harmless by a subsequent instruction construing the contract without regard thereto.—Lee v. New Haven, M. & W. R. Co., Case No. 8,197.

Judgment will not be reversed because papers recognized on the trial as in evidence were not formally read.—Andrews v. Graves, Case No. 376.

The incompetency of a witness as to the loss of goods shipped is immaterial, where the loss is otherwise sufficiently proved.—Brown v. The Elvira Harbeck, Case No. 2,005.

§ 36. Determination and disposition of cause—Decision in general.

Where there are two points actually decided in a case, and it does not appear that the court intended to rest its judgment upon one alone, the decision upon neither can be regarded as obiter.—Starr v. Stark, Case No. 13,317.

If the verdict below was given upon an immaterial issue, a repleader cannot be awarded, but judgment must be rendered against the party who committed the first fault.—United States v. Burnham, Case No. 14,690.

If a declaration is fatally defective, the court will affirm a judgment nonsuiting a plaintiff, without considering whether nonsuit was proper.—Earhart v. Campbell, Case No. 4,241a.

Where, by the pleadings, a complete bar is shown to the action, a judgment for defendant must be affirmed, though an error in his favor appear on the record.—United States v. Carlton, Case No. 14,725.

§ 38. —— Modification.

Where plaintiff is at least entitled to nominal damages, he should be permitted to avoid a new trial for erroneous instructions by remitting damages.—Cowing v. Rumsey, Case No. 3,296.

A judgment, broader and more advantageous than a party is entitled to, will be reversed or modified, although, upon the record, it appears to be technically correct.—Four Hundred and Twenty Min. Co. v. Bullion Min. Co., Case No. 4,989.

§ 39. —— Reversal.

The judgment will not be reversed for the small excess of $1.90.—Tunstall v. Robinson, Case No. 14,238a.

As to the question of title where property was sold on attachment and the judgment in the action was afterwards reversed, see—Biggs v. Blue, Case No. 1,403.

The title acquired by a stranger through a sale of lands regularly made under a judgment of a court of record, valid upon its face, cannot be defeated by a subsequent reversal of the judgment on appeal.—Galpin v. Page, Case No. 5,205.

Where a judgment has been enforced and subsequently reversed on appeal, the party is entitled to a right of action for a money equivalent of that which was lost by the erroneous judgment.—South Fork Canal Co. v. Gordon, Case No. 13,189.

On reversal of a judgment in an action brought by a writ of error from the district court, the circuit court may, if justice require, award a venire facias de novo, triable at the bar of the circuit court.—United States v. Sawyer, Case No. 16,227.

§ 40. —— Mandate and proceedings in lower court.

The effect of a remitter of the cause on reversal by the supreme court.—Harvey v. Richards, Case No. 6,182.

Unless modified or restrained by subsequent events, the mandate of the supreme court must be promptly and implicitly enforced by the court below.—South Fork Canal Co. v. Gordon, Case No. 13,189.

After a judgment against defendant in the supreme court on appeal on demurrer, he will not be allowed to amend.—Hodgson v. Marine Ins. Co., Case No. 6,566.

After reversal, on error to the supreme court, of an order sustaining demurrers to the plaintiff's petition, further demurrers cannot be filed.—Hitchcock v. Galveston, Case No. 6,533.

The court may allow the general issue to be pleaded after judgment upon demurrer has been awarded by the supreme court, and a mandate issued to enter the judgment and award a writ of inquiry.—Sheehy v. Mandeville, Case No. 12,740.

On certificate of division of opinion on a question of jurisdiction dismissed by the supreme court because of an equal division of opinion, the circuit court must enter a decree dismissing the bill.—Coleman v. Hudson River Bridge Co., Case No. 2,983.

In passing upon a collateral branch of a case which has been to the supreme court, the circuit court will not admit that the supreme court made a mistake in regard to any facts actually passed upon.—Kennicott v. Wayne County, Case No. 7,710.

An order for the performance of a decree affirmed on appeal, made in pursuance of a mandate, cannot be superseded under Act Md. 1791, c. 67.—White v. Clarke, Case No. 17,542.

A judgment on affirmance may be amended four years after rendition by adding the name of another person.—Coelle v. Lockhead, Case No. 2,943a.

§ 41. Liability on bonds and undertakings—Unauthorized appeal.

Where defendant takes an unauthorized appeal and gives a bond, plaintiff may maintain an action thereon.—Chase v. Smith, Case No. 2,629.

§ 42. —— Discharge of sureties.

Where a judgment is reversed, but it is ordered that the reversal be set aside, and an affirmance entered on the filing of a remittitur of a certain amount, which is accordingly done, the sureties on the supersedeas bond are released.—Seymour v. Gregory, Case No. 12,686.

An appeal bond is invalidated by interlining the name of a new obligor, and its execution by him without the consent of the other sureties.—Long v. Oneale, Case No. 8,481.

§ 43. —— Grounds and accrual of liability.

The condition of an appeal bond is broken unless the judgment be reversed in toto.—Butt v. Stinger, Case No. 2,246.

The sureties on an appeal bond are absolutely fixed without a ca. sa. or any step against the principal on his failure to prosecute the appeal with effect.—Dowlin v. Standifer, Case No. 4,041a.

§ 44. —— Extent of liability.

The appellant is not absolutely bound by the condition of a bond on appeal to the supreme court to pay the amount of the original judgment.—Bank of the Metropolis v. Swann, Case No. 902.

The sureties in the appeal bond are liable to the extent of its penalty, and have no right to compel the application of proceeds made under the original decree.—Sessions v. Pintard, Case No. 12,674.

§ 45. —— Summary remedy.

Summary judgment can be rendered against the sureties on an appeal bond where the decree in a circuit court is for a sum not sufficient to allow an appeal to the supreme court.—The Blanche Page, Case No. 1,525.

§ 46. —— Action.

Remedies on appeal bonds in Ohio.—Goshorn v. Alexander, Case No. 5,630.

The court in which the action was brought has jurisdiction of a suit on an appeal bond given therein.—Arnold v. Frost, Case No. 558.

Action on bond may be brought jointly by obligee claiming interest in the suit.—Arnold v. Frost, Case No. 558.

Debt is the proper action on an appeal bond or recognizance, but by the common-law rule the plaintiff must sue all, if living, or one, and not an intermediate number.—Dowlin v. Standifer, Case No. 4,041a.

In an action on an appeal bond given on appeal to the supreme court, plaintiff must aver damages sustained by defendant's not making his plea good.—Bank of the Metropolis v. Swann, Case No. 902.

In an action upon an appeal bond given upon a writ of error to the supreme court, the breach to be assigned must be a single breach, denying each alternative.—Tucker v. Lee, Case No. 14,221.

The plaintiff in error is bound only to indemnify the defendant in error for whatever losses he may have sustained by the judgment not being satisfied and paid after affirmance, which must be specially alleged in an action on the appeal bond.—Tucker v. Lee, Case No. 14,221.

APPEARANCE.

§ 1, Authority to enter appearance for another party. § 2, Time for appearance. § 3, Entry and record of appearance. § 4, Proceedings in cause constituting appearance. § 5, Operation and effect in general. § 6, Rights acquired by defendant. § 7, Jurisdiction acquired. § 8, Waiver of process or notice. § 9, Waiver of objection. § 10, Effect of appearance after judgment. § 11, Setting aside or striking out.

Bonds for appearance in admiralty, see "Admiralty," § 67.
By attorney general, see "Attorney General."
By corporation, see "Corporations," § 55.
Effect of, see "Admiralty," § 61; "Courts," § 63; "Removal of Causes," §§ 27, 36.
In admiralty, see "Admiralty," § 63.
In bankruptcy proceedings, see "Bankruptcy," § 568.

General appearance by solicitors is a waiver of exemption from jurisdiction by a nonresident of the district.—Kerp v. Michigan L. S. R. Co., Case No. 7,727.

An appearance by attorney, and the filing of a plea to the jurisdiction by attorney, and not in person, is a submission to the jurisdiction.—Thayer v. Wales, Case No. 13,872.

After an appearance entered at a previous term, it is too late to call for the authority to appear.—Rogers v. Crommelin, Case No. 12,009.

§ 2. Time for appearance.

A party may appear in person or by counsel at any time in the course of the action.—Hightower v. Hawthorn, Case No. 6,478b.

Defendant has the whole of the return term to appear in, and, if plaintiff withdraws his action before the end of the term, he cannot maintain a suit on the bail bond.—Ringgold v. Renner, Case No. 11,849.

§ 3. Entry and record of appearance.

An appearance cannot be entered upon the docket, out of court.—French v. Venable, Case No. 5,105.

A special appearance, entered by the clerk upon the order book at the request of defendant's attorney, without leave of court, held an admission of jurisdiction.—Thayer v. Wales, Case No. 13,872.

§ 4. Proceedings in cause constituting appearance.

A demurrer on the ground that the petition does not set forth facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is an appearance which cures defective service of process.—Dallmeyer v. Farmers', Merchants' & Manufacturers' Fire Ins. Co., Case No. 3,546.

The giving of a bond by a nonresident for the release of property seized under foreign attachment from a United States court is not a voluntary appearance.—Chittenden v. Darden, Case No. 2,688.

§ 5. Operation and effect in general.

An appearance by defendant, shown by the record, cannot be denied by plea or otherwise.—Thompson v. Emmert, Case No. 13,953.

§ 6. Rights acquired by defendant.

Where defendant in equity has appeared by a solicitor, notice of application for a decree, after an order pro confesso, must be given such solicitor.—Bennett v. Hoefner, Case No. 1,320.

The voluntary appearance of defendant in a suit commenced by foreign attachment cures the defect of jurisdiction.—Chittenden v. Darden, Case No. 2,688.

A nonresident of the district waives his immunity from suit by voluntarily appearing and pleading jointly with other defendants.—McCloskey v. Cobb, Case No. 8,702.

§ 8. Waiver of process or notice.

A voluntary appearance after the revival of a suit is a waiver of process.—Carrington v. Brents, Case No. 2,446.

Appearance of counsel for defendants waives notice of injunction.—Bell v. Ohio Life & Trust Co., Case No. 1,260.

Want of 10 days' notice to an administrator of the presentation of a claim to the probate court is cured by the voluntary appearance of the administrator.—McCoy v. Lemons, Case No. 8,730a.

§ 9. Waiver of objection.

A defendant who appears in an action or proceeding waives his right to urge an objection to the process or notice, or the service thereof.—Brammer v. Jones, Case No. 1,806; Flanders v. Ætna Ins. Co., Id. 4,852; Gadsby v. Miller, Id. 5,167; In re Ulrich, Id. 14,327; Winans v. McKean R. & N. Co., Id. 17,862.

An appearance by persons whose names are alleged in the bill to be unknown, and who are designated by fictitious names in the bill, and subpœna served on them, does not cure these defects or make such persons parties on the record.—Kentucky Silver Min. Co. v. Day, Case No. 7,719.

§ 10. Effect of appearance after judgment.

An appearance, after decree rendered, for the mere purpose of moving to strike the case from the docket on the ground that no process had been served, will not validate the decree.—Dorr v. Gibboney, Case No. 4,006.

Appearance by attorney to set aside office judgment held not to waive irregularity of service.—Knox v. Summers, Case No. 7,913.

§ 11. Setting aside or striking out.

The court will not order defendant's appearance to be struck out, so as to charge the marshal.—Wood v. Dixon, Case No. 17,943.

APPRENTICES.

§ 1, Persons who may bind. § 2, Indentures. § 3, Recovery of runaway. § 4, Compelling performance of covenants.

§ 1. Persons who may bind.

A mother cannot bind out her child.—Ballard v. Edmonston, Case No. 817.

Justices of the peace in the District of Columbia have no power to bind out an orphan not brought before them.—Smith v. Elwood, Case No. 13,042.

Justices of the peace have no authority to bind out an orphan child while the orphans' court is in session.—Gody v. Plant, Case No. 5,499; Lynch v. Ashton, Id. 8,636; May v. Bayne, Id. 9,331.

§ 2. Indentures.

Under Act Md. 1793, an indenture made by one justice of the peace under the seventh section of the act will be enforced, though there were many objections to the form of the indenture.—Charles v. Matlock, Case No. 2,615.

The father of an apprentice who binds himself is liable upon the indentures, by reason of his signature and seal, although there be no express words of covenant binding the father.—Woodrow v. Coleman, Case No. 17,982.

An indenture, signed and sealed by a minor 15 years old, bound out by his father, is binding on him, though he is not named therein, and there are no covenants on his part.—Studer v. Glenn, Case No. 13,558.

In the indentures of an apprentice bound out by the orphans' court, it is not necessary to state that the apprentice was present in court.—Smith v. Elliot, Case No. 13,040.

The master is concluded by the recitals in the indentures as to the age of his apprentice.—McCutchin v. Jamieson, Case No. 8,743.

An entry on the minutes of the orphans' court "that A. B. be bound apprentice to C. D." does not constitute a lawful binding.—Hines v. Hewitt, Case No. 6,520.

A stranger to the indenture of apprenticeship cannot take advantage of the omission to insert the age of the apprentice.—Heinecke v. Rawlings, Case No. 6,326.

The orphans' court of Alexandria county has power to bind out orphan children without indentures.—Bell v. English, Case No. 1,250.

Binding out of apprentice in Washington county, D. C., is of no effect, unless parents approve and indorse indentures within two months.—Barrett v. McPherson, Case No. 1,049.

The order of the orphans' court to bind out an apprentice does not of itself create the relation of master and servant.—Stewart v. Duffey, Case No. 13,425.

An infant cannot bind himself as an apprentice, nor can a master assign the indenture of his apprentice.—Handy v. Brown, Case No. 6,019.

An apprentice bound in Maryland, and brought into the District of Columbia, may be discharged by the court, who will order him to be bound again, by two justices of the peace, to a new master.—Gusty v. Diggs, Case No. 5,878.

§ 3. Recovery of runaway.

Where the indenture is void by the law of the state where made if the apprentice is carried out of the state, the master cannot hold him in another jurisdiction.—United States v. Scholfield, Case No. 16,231.

The statute and constitutional provisions for the rendition of persons held to labor include apprentices.—Boaler v. Cummines, Case No. 1,584.

A person binding himself as an apprentice, with the assent of his father living in another state, may be arrested and remanded as a fugitive from labor.—Boaler v. Cummines, Case No. 1,584.

§ 4. Compelling performance of covenants.

An apprentice will be compelled after the expiration of the term to serve the number of days lost by an absence without consent of the master.—Easby v. Fletcher, Case No. 4,250.

For failure to obey the order of the court, the apprentice may be punished as for a contempt.—Easby v. Fletcher, Case No. 4,250.

Assumpsit lies by apprentice against master for disobedience of order although no indentures are executed.—Adams v. Miller, Case No. 63.

APPROPRIATION.

Of water rights, see "Waters and Water Courses," §§ 1, 7.

APPURTENANCES.

Included in contract for sale of land, see "Vendor and Purchaser," § 12.

ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

§ 1, Submission. § 2, Arbitrators. § 3, Proceedings. § 4, Award. § 5, Action on awards.

See, also, "Reference"; "Submission of Controversy."

Submission by trustee, see "Trusts," § 24.

§ 1. Submission.

The reservation in a submission to referees of the right to move to set aside their report takes away its character of a submission to arbitration; and an agreement for a cognovit for the amount of the report will be deemed to refer to the amount as finally settled by the court.—Denny v. Brown, Case No. 3,805.

An agreement to submit a question to arbitration is revocable before the award is given.—Tobey v. County of Bristol, Case No. 14,065.

A revocation of the submission and notice thereof before the award is made and signed will invalidate the same.—Sangster v. Quantrill, Case No. 12,321.

When the terms of submission to arbitration are uncertain, parol evidence may be given of the controversies submitted.—Davy v. Faw, Case No. 3,663; Faw v. Davy, Id. 4,701.

If the submission be general, and the award be of a particular thing, it will be presumed that nothing else was in controversy unless the contrary appears.—Kleine v. Catara, Case No. 7,869.

Where a reference in a pending suit is made without order of court, it can only be enforced by separate action.—Banert v. Eckert, Case No. 837.

§ 2. Arbitrators.

Where one of the arbitrators has prejudged the cause, the award will be set aside.—Taber v. Jenny, Case No. 13,720.

After delivering their award, the arbitrators cannot again act upon the case without new authority.—Talbott v. Hartley, Case No. 13,732.

A submission to three referees does not authorize an award by two only.—The Nineveh, Case No. 10,276.

Where, after vain efforts to secure agreement, the third referee refused to sign the award, and declared it unnecessary to ask him to meet again, held, that the remaining referees might make the award.—Kingston v. Kincaid, Case No. 7,821.

An award will be set aside where the arbitrators have refused to give time to defendant to produce an absent witness to explain evidence in a case of surprise.—Torrance v. Amsden, Case No. 14,103.

Under a general submission, referees are not bound to award on principles of law only, but may decide according to equity and good conscience.—Kleine v. Catara, Case No. 7,869.

An umpire is not to be called in until the original arbitrators have differed, and is then only to decide the points on which they differ.—Traverse v. Beall, Case No. 14,153.

An umpire provided for in an order of reference may be appointed before the referees have heard the evidence and discovered that they could not agree.—Swann v. Alexandria Canal Co., Case No. 13,671.

An umpire must give notice to the parties and to the arbitrators of the time and place of his proceeding to act.—Thornton v. Chapman, Case No. 13,997.

An umpire must hear the parties.—Taber v. Jenny, Case No. 13,720.

§ 4. Award.

Where a third person was to be chosen in case the two arbitrators disagreed, it need not appear in the award that the two disagreed, or that the third was appointed in writing.—Frye v. Scott, Case No. 5,144.

Notice of an award need not be given unless specially provided in the submission.—Matthews v. Matthews, Case No. 9,288.

Objections to award because made without giving notice of time and place, because one party had revoked submission, and because notice of the award was served only on defendant's attorney, overruled.—Masterson v. Kidwell, Case No. 9,269.

An award not delivered within the time prescribed by the arbitration bond is invalid. The time cannot be extended by parol.—Goldsborough v. McWilliams, Case No. 5,518.

An award made upon part only of the subjects submitted will be set aside.—Faw v. Davy, Case No. 4,701.

An award is void which is not final and conclusive, and does not embrace all the matters submitted, and settle the dispute.—Talbott v. Hartley, Case No. 13,732.

The award must decide the whole matter submitted, and be certain, final, and conclusive thereon.—James v. Thurston, Case No. 7,186.

In Pennsylvania it is the rule that awards of referees must be so plainly expressed that the parties may know precisely what they are to do. An objection otherwise fatal may be cured by averment of something dehors the award which renders it certain.—Kingston v. Kincaid, Case No. 7,821.

A mistake by the referees in a point of law need not appear on the face of the award, to induce the court to set it aside.—Hurst v. Hurst, Case No. 6,930.

An award is conclusive upon all matters of fact, and a mistake of fact is no ground for setting aside the award; but when apparent on the face thereof, or when the arbitrators certify that they have made a mistake, and wish to correct it, the award will be recommitted for that purpose.—Kleine v. Catara, Case No. 7,869.

If referees refer a point of law to the court by spreading it on the award, the award will be set aside if they have mistaken the law; but if they admit the law, and decide contrary thereto, upon equity and good conscience, the award must stand.—Kleine v. Catara, Case No. 7,869.

An arbitration award is conclusive as to the parties thereto, and can only be avoided or vacated for fraud or gross misconduct.—Denny v. Brown, Case No. 3,805.

An award will be set aside for misconduct of arbitrators, or where they have decided contrary to law.—Torrance v. Amsden, Case No. 14,103.

An award may be good in part and void in part.—Wise v. Geiger, Case No. 17,908.

In the case of common awards, the arbitrators cannot be called upon to disclose the grounds upon which the award was made.—Kingston v. Kincaid, Case No. 7,821.

In an action to set aside an award, where it is contended that the referees have made a mistake in a point of law, new evidence cannot be admitted.—Hurst v. Hurst, Case No. 6,930.

Plain mistakes in facts appearing on the face of the award, or from the evidence submitted, are no ground for relief in equity from the judgment entered upon the award.—Hurst v. Hurst, Case No. 6,932.

A general award cannot be impeached collaterally.—Kleine v. Catara, Case No. 7,869.

An award upon a submission of a question whether the parties had a right of set-off is conclusive.—Greene v. Darling, Case No. 5,765.

Mistakes of law by arbitrators, or errors of judgment by them on the evidence, cannot be reviewed or rectified.—Denny v. Brown, Case No. 3,805.

§ 5. Action on awards.

Averment that an award was duly published is an averment that the notice of the award required by the submission was given.—Matthews v. Matthews, Case No. 9,288.

Where four counts declare on an alleged submission and award, a plea purporting to answer the whole action, but alleging revocation of one submission only, without showing which one of the four, is bad on general demurrer.—Matthews v. Matthews, Case No. 9,288.

In debt on an award, a plea that the referees never made any such award as is averred is bad, as amounting to the general issue.—Matthews v. Matthews, Case No. 9,288.

A count on an award which requires a release by plaintiff on payment of a sum by defendant is bad on general demurrer if it failed to aver plaintiff's readiness to give the release.—Matthews v. Matthews, Case No. 9,288.

§ 1. In general.

The power of congress to provide for the government of the land and naval forces "in peace and war" is not affected by amendments to the constitution.—In re Bogart, Case No. 1,596.

§ 2. Officers—Pay and allowances.

See, also, post, § 8.

A captain in the marine corps, acting as brevet lieutenant colonel, while in command of a separate post designated by the navy department as entitled to extra rations, is entitled to double rations.—United States v. Freeman, Case No. 15,163.

Where a captain of the marine corps acts as brevet lieutenant colonel, and is paid as such, he cannot, during the same period, receive the pay either of captain or the allowance which he would be entitled to as such for the charge of the clothing of the company.—United States v. Freeman, Case No. 15,163.

Under Act April 16, 1818, c. 64 (3 Stat. 427), additional brevet pay is not to be allowed, unless there be at least two organized companies of men, with suitable officers, though the whole number of men present may average enough for two companies.—United States v. Freeman, Case No. 15,163.

An officer detailed from his regiment, and commissioned, as captain of volunteers, to command a company of Indians in the Florida war, held entitled to the regular pay of his rank, in addition to his special pay as such captain.—United States v. Lee, Case No. 15,587.

Money received by a naval officer for a special purpose, accompanied by instructions from the secretary of the navy, is not covered by the specified allowances mentioned in Act March 3, 1835, § 2.—United States v. Jones, Case No. 15,493a.

The marine station at the Washington navy yard held "a permanent or fixed post garrisoned by troops." within Act Aug. 23, 1842, § 6, allowing double rations.—Tyler v. Walker, Case No. 14,311a.

Where a brevet commission is conferred, to take rank from a prior date, the pay and emoluments of the rank conferred follow as an incident from such date whenever the officer has rendered services according to such rank.—United States v. Vinton, Case No. 16,624.

§ 3. —— Authorities and duties.

Duties, rights, and emoluments of pursers in relation to the stores to be provided, and the price therefor, and the effect of usage.—United States v. Buchanan, Case No. 14,678.

An army officer in command of a military district under Act March 2, 1867, cannot order a sheriff to place a person in possession of property at the time in possession of another person.—Whalen v. Sheridan, Case No. 17,476.

A bond by a battalion quartermaster, conditioned "to expend faithfully all public moneys, and to account for all public property," requires an accounting, not with the quartermaster general, but the treasury department; and the obligation extends to moneys as well as property, and to expenditures made by the obligor while acting as a deputy of the quartermaster general.—United States v. Lent, Case No. 15,593.

A quartermaster who furnishes other articles than such as are allowed by law and usage cannot charge the United States with them.—United States v. Webster, Case No. 16,658.

Under Act May 28, 1836, c. 82, the quartermaster may adjust and settle claims against the United States arising during the Florida war for proper supplies taken by impressment.—United States v. Webster, Case No. 16,658.

Where a provost marshal has good reason to believe, and does believe, that a person is threatening him for the purpose of interfering with him in the execution of his official duties, he is justified in arresting and detaining such person.—Walker v. Crane, Case No. 17,067.

A military officer has no right to arrest and detain a person not subject to the rules and articles of war, for an offense against a law of the United States, except in aid of the judicial authority.—Ex parte Merryman, Case No. 9,487.

After the accounts of an officer of the navy have been once stated and settled by the treasury department, the auditor has no power to open or resettle them of his own mere authority.—Ex parte Randolph, Case No. 11,558.

§ 4. Enlistment—In general.

See, also, post, § 7.

Sufficiency of the oath of enlistment under the acts of 1812, 1858, and 1861.—In re Ferrens, Case No. 4,746.

Where oath was taken before military officer, it will be presumed that services of a civil magistrate could not be obtained.—In re Cline, Case No. 2,896.

A person will be discharged on habeas corpus, whose enlistment into the military service was procured by fraudulent representations on the part of the recruiting officer, or by mistake of fact of one ignorant of the English language.—Schmeider v. Barney, Case No. 12,462.

Persons who have been accepted as volunteers (Act Feb. 6, 1812) are not entitled to be discharged as alien enemies.—Wilson v. Izard, Case No. 17,810.

A married man who enlists in the military service upon his statement that he is a single man is not entitled to his discharge, though the army regulations require special authority for the enlistment of married men.—Ex parte Schmeid, Case No. 12,461.

The fact that an enlisted man has a wife and child held not to invalidate the enlistment.—In re Ferrens, Case No. 4,746.

Acts of congress relating to the enlistment of marines, listed.—Ex parte Brown, Case No. 1,972, note.

The enlistment of a minor without the oath of enlistment is illegal.—In re McDonald, Case No. 8,752.

A minor under 18 years of age cannot be mustered into the army.—In re Riley, Case No. 11,834.

The enlistment of a minor in the army is illegal unless made with the consent of his parents or guardian.—In re McDonald, Case No. 8,752; Ex parte Burke, Id. 2,156a; United States v. Wright, Id. 16,778; Id., 16,777.

"Parent," as used in the statute forbidding the enlistment of any minor in the army without the consent of his "parent, guardian, or master," includes the mother when the father is dead and there is no guardian or master.—Shorner's Case, Case No. 12,808.

Congress has a constitutional power to enlist minors in the army or navy without the consent of their parents.—United States v. Bainbridge, Case No. 14,497.

A minor, 17 years of age, who has enlisted in the army without his parents' consent, is entitled to discharge on habeas corpus.—Ex parte Burke, Case No. 2,156a.

A contract of enlistment by a minor over 18 years of age, without the consent of his parents, may be avoided by the minor himself.—In re McNulty, Case No. 8,917.

A prisoner of war, paroled by the enemy, although a minor illegally enlisted, is not entitled to his discharge until after his exchange.—United States v. Wright, Case No. 16,777.

Minor enlisting without consent of parent will be discharged on request of parent.—In re Andrews, Case No. 369; United States v. Anderson, Id. 14,449; In re Keeler, Id. 7,637; In re McLave, Id. 8,876.

Quære, whether a person enlisting as a minor is not entitled to his discharge at the age of 21, regardless of the term of his enlistment.—Ex parte Brown, Case No. 1,972.

An enlisted minor, who has not been mustered into the service, nor received any rations or clothing, cannot be held in custody as a volunteer, either under the United States or Massachusetts statutes.—Bamfield v. Abbot, Case No. 832.

The whole power of discharging minors from the army is given to the secretary of war, and cognizance of such matters is taken from the courts.—In re Riley, Case No. 11,834; In re Neill, Id. 10,089. CONTRA, see In re McDonald, Case No. 8,752; Seavey v. Seymour, Id. 12,596.

The oath of a recruit as to his age is conclusive (Act Feb. 13, 1862).—In re Cline, Case No. 2,896; In re Conley, Id. 3,102; United States v. Taylor, Id. 16,439; In re Riley, Id. 11,834.

The oath of enlistment is not conclusive upon the courts, but is a protection to the enlisting officer.—United States v. Wright, Case No. 16,778.

A contract of enlistment irregularly made held to have been ratified by the receipt of rations and clothing, and the performance of duties as a recruit for 20 days.—In re Ferrens, Case No. 4,746.

Under the navy acts of 1798, 1806, 1807, 1809, 1813, the consent of the father is not necessary to the valid enlistment of minors.—United States v. Bainbridge, Case No. 14,497.

A minor of the age of 18 can enlist in the navy without the consent of his parents or guardian.—United States v. Watson, Case No. 16,650a; Same v. Stewart, Id. 16,400. CONTRA, see In re McLave, Case No. 8,876; In re Hayes, Id. 6,261a.

Minors may be enlisted in the marine corps, as musicians, with the assent of their fathers; and may be bound as apprentices to the drum major, in behalf of the government.—Ex parte Brown, Case No. 1,972.

A contract of enlistment in the marine corps by a minor over 18 years of age without the consent of his parents may be avoided by the minor himself, or by his parents, or by the United States.—In re McNulty, Case No. 8,917.

§ 6. Compulsory service.

The board of enrollment has no power, after publication of its decision declaring a person exempt on the election of his widowed mother, to revise the same.—In re Irons, Case No. 7,066.

Under Act March 3, 1863, § 3, if a married man over 35 years of age be enrolled and drafted in the first class, he may be discharged by a federal court on habeas corpus.—Stingle's Case, Case No. 13,458.

Militiamen of a state cannot be lawfully drafted into the service of the United States unless their names have previously been accurately enrolled. A person misnamed is not liable to the draft.—McCall's Case, Case No. 8,669.

A militiaman of a state duly called into the service of the United States under Act July 17, 1862, and who has disobeyed an order to attend a rendezvous, may be compelled by military force.—McCall's Case, Case No. 8,669.

A person drafted under Act March 3, 1863, is in the custody of the provost marshal from the time he regularly reports for duty.—In re Irons, Case No. 7,066.

A notary public is an officer authorized to administer oaths in such cases.—United States v. Sonachall, Case No. 16,352.

§ 7. Enlisted men.

Where a soldier who has served out his term is refused his discharge, he is nevertheless, while remaining in the barracks, subject to the rules of the establishment.—United States v. Travers, Case No. 16,537.

The place of service of volunteers may be changed notwithstanding the insertion in their enrollment of the officer's name under whom they were to serve.—Wilson v. Izard, Case No. 17,810.

A United States soldier, when acting as a part of the posse of a United States marshal or revenue officer, is as much bound to obey the laws of the United States as any other citizen.—Georgia v. O'Grady, Case No. 5,352.

An officer of the marine corps, to whom an advance of money is made, is liable therefor as a debtor, and not merely as a bailee.—United States v. Freeman, Case No. 15,163.

§ 8. Paymasters, pursers, distributing officers, and agents—Appointment.

See, also, post, §§ 17–19.

Appointments to office can be made by heads of departments only in those cases which congress has authorized by law, and consequently the appointment of an agent of fortifications, by the secretary of war, is irregular.—United States v. Maurice, Case No. 15,747.

An agent of fortifications is an officer whose office is established by law. (Act April 24, 1816, § 9; Act March 2, 1821, § 13.)—United States v. Maurice, Case No. 15,747.

Presumptions arising from the showings of the books of the treasury department in account with a navy paymaster, considered, together with what evidence is necessary to rebut the same.—United States v. Kuhn, Case No. 15,545.

Where an officer of the marine corps to whom money is advanced to be applied to the expenses of the corps deposits it in a bank, which afterwards fails, whether the bank was or was not a public depository, it does not exonerate him as debtor without a special act of congress to that effect.—United States v. Carr, Case No. 14,732.

A navy agent stationed abroad, who has been removed, or whose office has been vacated, cannot charge the government with his return home, nor with his traveling expenses in going to the seat of government to settle his accounts.—Armstrong v. United States, Case No. 548.

The secretary of the navy has authority to order the fourth auditor to allow a credit to a naval paymaster for extra official service; and an allowance so made is equivalent to an allowance by the secretary himself.—United States v. Kuhn, Case No. 15,545.

An army officer superintending works on fortifications, held entitled to credits for extra services of 2½ per cent. of the amount disbursed by him.—United States v. Eliason, Case No. 15,040.

Compensation of acting purser of navy, under Act April 18, 1814.—Goldsborough v. United States, Case No. 5,519.

Rate of pay of a paymaster in the marine corps between 1821 and 1830 considered.—United States v. Kuhn, Case No. 15,545.

Act May 15, 1820, in relation to the settlement of accounts of military and naval officers charged with the disbursement of public moneys, does not apply to a mere acting purser in the navy.—Ex parte Randolph, Case No. 11,558.

A purser in the navy, who disburses money for the United States which it is not his duty, as purser, to disburse, is, in equity, entitled to a reasonable compensation therefor.—United States v. Fitzgerald, Case No. 15,107.

The words "pay of the army," in charging moneys advanced to a militia paymaster, held evidence merely of the appropriation out of which the advances were made, and not as to their disbursement.—United States v. Willard, Case No. 16,698.

Pursers are bound by the naval regulations of 1817 as to commissions on disbursements, in the absence of a different, authorized agreement.—United States v. Fitzgerald, Case No. 15,107.

Paymasters of the army held entitled to receive the pay and emoluments of majors of infantry, and not majors of cavalry.—United States v. Gwynne, Case No. 15,272.

Time of service and the amount disbursed by a navy agent furnish the data for computing the amount of his compensation for any fractional part of a year.—United States v. Wendell, Case No. 16,666.

The maximum compensation of navy agents is fixed at $3,000 per annum (Act March 3, 1855), and the excess of commissions in one year cannot aid the deficiency of another.—United States v. Wendell, Case No. 16,666.

A navy agent is not entitled to extra compensation for services rendered out of his district, which appertain to the duties of another officer.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,684.

A navy agent appointed acting purser for the naval school, held entitled to the salary allowed by law to pursers.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,684.

A navy agent is entitled to office rent and clerk hire, and to engage them by the quarter, and, if dismissed from office, he will be allowed for the whole quarter.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,684.

A navy agent disbursing navy and privateer pensions is not allowed extra pay or emolument therefor.—Browne v. United States, Case No. 2,036.

The government is bound to indemnify a navy agent removed before the end of his term for office rent and clerk hire for which he, in good faith, became liable before removal.—United States v. Jarvis, Case No. 15,468.

§ 11. —— Liabilities of sureties on disbursing officer's bonds.

The surety on a paymaster's bond is liable for the penalty named therein, and for interest thereon from the commencement of the suit to the entry of judgment.—United States v. Meeker, Case No. 15,757.

The debt of a paymaster to the United States is created by the advances made to him, and not at the time of striking a balance of accounts against him on the treasury books; and his surety becomes a debtor as soon as the paymaster fails to account according to law.—United States v. Clark, Case No. 14,807.

The sureties on the official bond of a regimental paymaster are not liable for his failure to account for funds placed in his hands after six months' neglect to account for funds previously placed in his hands.—United States v. Vanzandt, Case No. 16,611.

The secretary of the navy may require navy agents to pay navy pensions, and their sureties are responsible for the faithful performance of such service.—United States v. Cutter, Case No. 14,911.

The surety of a navy agent is liable for misappropriation of public moneys by his principal, though they were advanced to him contrary to law.—United States v. Cutter, Case No. 14,911.

A new bond of a navy agent, given when a defalcation was known, held to cover past defalcations as well as the future.—United States v. Brodhead, Case No. 14,654.

Certified copy of regimental paymaster's account and of his bond held competent evidence in action against sureties.—United States v. Vanzandt, Case No. 16,611.

§ 12. Civilian employés and contractors.

Army contractors and their subordinates are liable to arrest by the military commander for frauds against the government under their contracts, but must be brought to trial with reasonable diligence.—Holmes v. Sheridan, Case No. 6,644.

Where a person in an Indian country induces Indians to steal cattle for him, with which to fulfill a government contract for army supplies, the major general commanding in that country may order his arrest and the seizure of the cattle.—Holmes v. Sheridan, Case No. 6,644.

§ 13. Civil status and liabilities of persons in military or naval service.

A commanding officer of a militia cannot lawfully impress the horse of a citizen even in time of war.—Jacobs v. Levering, Case No. 7,162.

A military officer acting under the law martial is justified by an order from a superior officer, apparently within the scope of his authority.—Despan v. Olney, Case No. 3,822; McCall v. McDowell, Id. 8,673.

If the superior has secretly abused his power, he, and not the inferior who executes the order, is answerable.—Despan v. Olney, Case No. 3,822.

An officer cannot justify an unlawful seizure by showing the orders of his superior officer.—Harmony v. Mitchell, Case No. 6,082.

Lawful and public orders from the president and from the secretary of the navy are a good defense to a suit against a naval officer for the destruction of property by a bombardment of a foreign town.—Durand v. Hollins, Case No. 4,186.

The military officers are liable for an arrest and imprisonment ordered by them in states where the civil courts were not disturbed even though ratified and approved by the executive.—Milligan v. Hovey, Case No. 9,605.

The limitation imposed by Act March 3, 1863, is valid and binding on state tribunals, and the statute begins to run against a continuing imprisonment.—Milligan v. Hovey, Case No. 9,605.

The damages in such cases should be compensatory, and not exemplary.—Milligan v. Hovey, Case No. 9,605.

Members of a raiding party connected with the Confederate army are individually liable for property taken, whether present at the taking or not.—Shirley v. Triplett, Case No. 12,797.

An action for assault and battery and false imprisonment will lie against a provost marshal for acts outside of his official duty while in the performance of his official duty.—Walker v. Crane, Case No. 17,067.

A provost marshal has the right to order a person to leave the premises occupied officially by him, and, if such person refuses to go, to use as much force as is necessary to remove him.—Walker v. Crane, Case No. 17,067.

The seizure by military authorities of drafts, where the drawer and drawee are citizens of different states in rebellion, does not give such authorities the right to take physical possession of the moneys of the drawees, and a person seizing the same is liable therefor, although he was acting as a military commander.—Britton v. Butler, Case No. 1,903.

Nor is the seizure of such moneys under such circumstances validated by Act March 2, 1867.—Britton v. Butler, Case No. 1,903.

The circuit court of the United States has no jurisdiction in trover for the seizure and conversion by a military officer of the United States, while in an insurgent state, of property belonging to a citizen of that state. The right, if any, is against the government.—Coolidge v. Guthrie, Case No. 3,185.

In an action for damages against the commander of a military district, who had ordered the sheriff to place a person in possession of property then in possession of another person, defendant may justify under such order if the person put in possession was the true owner, and entitled to possession.—Whalen v. Sheridan, Case No. 17,476.

§ 14. Offenses by persons in military or naval service.

There can be no criminal desertion where the enlistment was illegal.—United States v. Wright, Case No. 16,778.

§ 15. Offenses by persons not in military or naval service.

A conviction for having procured or enticed a person to desert (Act 1812, c. 14, § 17) is sustained by evidence of the making of representations as to the means and facilities for deserting to induce a person to enlist, with the belief that they were likely to cause him to desert, if they had such effect.—United States v. Clark, Case No. 14,808.

A seaman who has passed the examination at the naval rendezvous merely, and has not been examined and passed on the receiving ship, is not enlisted, within Act 1855, c. 136, § 11, punishing the enticing to desert of an enlisted seaman.—United States v. Thompson, Case No. 16,491.

Act Feb. 24, 1864, fixes a definite period of imprisonment for fraudulently procuring the exemption of a drafted person, leaving the court no discretion.—United States v. McCarty, Case No. 15,658.

The period of imprisonment fixed is the same as that for which the person was drafted to serve, which, under Act March 3, 1863, § 11, may be three years, or less than three if the Rebellion end sooner.—United States v. McCarty, Case No. 15,658.

An indictment will not lie under Act March 3, 1863, for obstructing, hindering, and delaying an enrolling officer.—United States v. Will, Case No. 16,697.

An assault causing the death of an officer is an offense under Act Feb. 24, 1864, § 12, where it was committed while the officer was engaged in a matter relating to the proper discharge of his official duties, though the offender did not intend to obstruct the execution of the law.—United States v. Gleason, Case No. 15,215; Id., 15,216.

If a person assault parties charged with the service, prescribed by the statute when they are not engaged therein, he is not amenable to the federal laws, however malicious the deed may be, and even though it result in death.—United States v. Gleason, Case No. 15,216.

Persons employed by proper officers to arrest deserters, when, having come into a vicinage on such service, they are returning therefrom to another place to obtain assistance, are employed in arresting deserters, within Act Feb. 24, 1864, § 12.—United States v. Gleason, Case No. 15,216.

The protection of the act continues so long as the person is employed in a service necessary and proper to the discharge of his duty in that behalf.—United States v. Gleason, Case No. 15,216.

The protection which the law affords to persons executing it does not depend upon the legal guilt of the persons charged as deserters.—United States v. Gleason, Case No. 15,216.

An indictment for purchasing of a soldier "his arms" can only be sustained by showing that the soldier was in lawful possession of the arms, or had a special bailment of them.—United States v. Brown, Case No. 14,669.

§ 16. Courts of inquiry.

The district court will not issue a warrant of arrest for parties charged with murder on the high seas, on board a naval vessel, while the matter is under investigation by a court of inquiry instituted by the secretary of the navy.—United States v. MacKenzie, Case No. 15,690.

§ 17. Courts-martial—Jurisdiction.

The fact that manslaughter is not named in the naval code as an offense punishable by court-martial is no ground for holding that the civil courts of the United States have jurisdiction thereof. In the absence of any statute conferring jurisdiction upon these courts, it is sufficient in any case, to exclude such jurisdiction, that the accused is charged with the offense, in taking the life of a seaman belonging to a naval ship, in the exercise of what was claimed to be his rightful authority as an officer in command.—United States v. Mackenzie, Case No. 18,313.

Congress has constitutional power to provide that crimes, even of a capital character, committed on board a naval vessel, by persons who formed part of the naval forces of the United States, shall be tried exclusively by courts-martial.—United States v. Mackenzie, Case No. 18,313.

Under article of war 88, a soldier may be arrested and tried, after the expiration of his term of service, for a military offense committed during such term.—In re Bird, Case No. 1,428.

A soldier, if arrested before the expiration of his term of enlistment, may be held for trial thereafter by military authority.—In re Bird, Case No. 1,428.

A court-martial is a lawful tribunal existing under the constitution and acts of congress, and is supreme while acting within the sphere of its exclusive jurisdiction.—In re Bogart, Case No. 1,596.

Congress has power under the constitution to provide for punishment by naval court-martial without indictment or the intervention of a jury.—In re Bogart, Case No. 1,596.

A paymaster's clerk may be tried by court-martial for an offense committed while on duty in the navy, upon proceedings commenced after his dismissal.—In re Bogart, Case No. 1,596.

A mere contractor to furnish supplies to the government for the use of the military service cannot be punished by court-martial under Act March 2, 1863.—Ex parte Henderson, Case No. 6,349.

Act July 17, 1862, § 16, is unconstitutional in so far as it operates to subject a contractor to trial by court-martial.—Ex parte Henderson, Case No. 6,349.

If not unconstitutional, such act only makes contractors subject to trial by court-martial for fraud or willful neglect of duty in connection with their contracts, and not for offenses unconnected therewith.—Ex parte Henderson, Case No. 6,349.

A clerk in the employ of a paymaster of the United States army is in the military service, and subject to trial by court-martial for forging vouchers in the disbursement of a reconstruction fund.—In re Thomas, Case No. 13,888.

A paymaster's clerk in the navy is a person "in the naval forces," and in case of embezzlement is liable for the amount embezzled, under Act March 2, 1863, § 1, and not to the penalty under section 3.—In re Bogart, Case No. 1,596; In re Reed, Id. 11,636; United States v. Bogart, Id. 14,616.

§ 18. —— Proceedings.

The clause in the fifth amendment "when in actual service in time of war" has no reference to the regular army or the navy, but refers only to the militia.—In re Bogart, Case No. 1,596.

Article 70 of the articles of war, limiting the term of confinement of officers and soldiers, applies solely to confinement preliminary to trial.—In re Corbett, Case No. 3,219.

A charge that defendant was engaged in furnishing supplies "for the military service" is indefinite, in failing to show that the supplies were furnished for the regular army and navy.—Ex parte Henderson, Case No. 6,349.

In a trial by court-martial the charges cannot be so amended after arraignment as to entirely obliterate the original specifications, and insert new ones, describing wholly different offenses.—Ex parte Henderson, Case No. 6,349.

The convening officer of a naval court-martial has authority to send back to the court the record of its proceedings, with the finding and sentence, for the reconsideration of such court as to revision of the sentence.—In re Reed, Case No. 11,636.

Where the revision is made by the court composed of the same members that took part in the trial, the sentence is not rendered illegal by the fact that its membership was changed during the intermission.—In re Reed, Case No. 11,636.

Such revision of sentence can be made after an intermission in which the court had been occupied with other trials.—In re Reed, Case No. 11,636.

The circuit court of the District of Columbia has no power, by habeas corpus or otherwise, to revise or correct the error of a court-martial. The appeal must be to the president.—In re Biddle, Case No. 18,236.

§ 19. —— Sentence and punishment.

Sentence rendered by a court-martial against an individual without notice is void.—Meade v. Deputy Marshal, Case No. 9,372.

The status of a soldier is not affected by a sentence of court-martial discharging him from service, subsequently set aside.—In re Bird, Case No 1,428.

Proceedings on arrest, see "Criminal Law," §§ 38–43.

In an action of debt in a federal court in New York against a foreign consul for money received in a fiduciary capacity, defendant is subject to arrest under Code Proc. N. Y. § 179, made applicable by Acts Feb. 28, 1839, and Jan. 14, 1841.—McKay v. Garcia, Case No. 8,844.

§ 2. Actions in which arrest is authorized.

An agent is not liable to arrest in New York in an action for money collected by him under an agreement to account for and pay over the proceeds monthly to his principal.—Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co. v. Clinton, Case No. 5,845.

An action for the value of goods illegally imported held not one to recover damages for a fraud or for a penalty, so as to make defendant liable to arrest, under Code N. Y. § 549.—United States v. Moller, Case No. 15,793.

A manufacturer of matches, who sells them unstamped, in an action to recover a penalty for such violation, may be arrested as in an action for a debt incurred by fraud.—United States v. Walsh, Case No. 16,635.

A party to a cause depending for trial is privileged from arrest during the continuance of the court at which the trial will take place.—Ex parte Hurst, Case No. 6,924; McFerran v. Wherry, Id. 8,792.

Such privilege will prevent his arrest when coming to and returning from court, and while at his lodgings.—Ex parte Hurst, Case No. 6,924.

The witness is privileged from arrest during a reasonable time in going to court and returning to his home.—Smythe v. Banks, Case No. 13,134.

A recommitment of debtor upon ca. sa. is not a breach of the debtor's privilege as a witness and party bound to attend court.—Ex parte Bill, Case No. 1,405.

The protection from arrest given to suitors extends to petitioners under the bankrupt law. (Act 1842.)—Ex parte Mifflin, Case No. 9,537.

A bankrupt on his way to the register's office, for the purpose of being examined under an order previously served on him, is entitled to be considered a witness, and, as such, to be protected from arrest at the hands of a state court.—In re Kimball, Case No. 7,767.

A person arrested in a civil suit, and going to another state in virtual custody of his bail, may there be arrested in another civil suit, if his bail voluntarily relinquish all claim to his detention.—Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. McDougal, Case No. 13,618.

See, also, post, § 11.

§ 4. Grounds.

Fraud in an importer in inducing the acceptance of less than the whole sum due for duties does not make the balance of the debt fraudulently contracted, so as to subject the importer to arrest in a civil suit.—United States v. Wood, Case No. 16,755a.

A debtor who is about to remove from the state without the consent of his creditors, and without an intention to return, is prima facie an absconding debtor. (Code Or. § 106.)—Norman v. Manciette, Case No. 10,300.

The legislature has power to authorize the arrest and imprisonment of such a debtor so as to enable his creditors to enforce the establishment and collection of their debts by legal proceedings in the tribunals of this state.—Norman v. Manciette, Case No. 10,300.

§ 5. Jurisdiction and authority to grant.

Nonresident party defendant cannot be arrested (in North Carolina) on mere affidavit in action for injury to person or character.—In re Bergen, Case No. 1,338.

No process can be issued to arrest a defendant in a civil suit except under the state law.—Cooper v. Dungler, Case No. 3,192.

§ 6. Affidavits for arrest.

Where the cause of action and arrest are identical, a verified complaint is a sufficient affidavit upon which to allow an order of arrest.—United States v. Walsh, Case No. 16,635.

The verified complaint in an action to recover a penalty and damages for making a false claim against the United States (Rev. St. §§ 3490–3493) is a sufficient affidavit for the arrest of defendant.—United States v. Griswold, Case No. 15,266.

A commissioner of the United States may, as an officer under the state law, take the verification of all necessary papers in order to procure the arrest of defendant.—Fulton v. Gilmore, Case No. 5,154.

§ 7. Undertaking.

Defendant may be arrested and held to bail without an undertaking by plaintiff, as provided in Civ. Code Or. § 107.—United States v. Griswold, Case No. 15,266.

§ 8. Place and time of arrest.

An inhabitant of Alexandria county, D. C., may be arrested in Washington county without a non est in Alexandria county.—Thompson v. Lacy, Case No. 13,965.

A creditor who has caused the provisional arrest of an absconding debtor under Code Or. § 106, has until the time allowed for a return of an execution against property to charge the body of such debtor in execution.—Norman v. Manciette, Case No. 10,300.

§ 9. Quashing or vacating.

The arrest can only be set aside by direct proceedings where the affidavit states sufficient facts to make out a case, though the proof is slight and not entirely satisfactory.—Nelson v. Cutter, Case No. 10,104.

The mode of redress for a person privileged from arrest, when arrested, is by motion to the court from which the process issued.—Lyell v. Goodwin, Case No. 8,616.

On the arrest of defendant in an action of debt under Code Proc. N. Y. § 179, plaintiff may oppose defendant's affidavits by affidavits in addition to those on which the arrest was granted.—McKay v. Garcia, Case No. 8,844.

§ 10. Discharge of prisoner.

One arrested after the adoption of the supreme court rule abolishing imprisonment for debt, but before its publication, is entitled to be discharged.—Bell v. Nelson, Case No. 1,257.

§ 11. Arrest on criminal charges.

A congressman is not privileged from arrest on a warrant charging that he is about to commit a breach of the peace by fighting a duel.—United States v. Wise, Case No. 16,746a.

An officer may hold a person upon a warrant without informing him that he is arrested upon it.—United States v. Omeara, Case No. 15,919.

An officer effects an arrest of a person by laying his hands on him for the purpose of arresting him, though he may not succeed in stopping and holding him.—United States v. Benner, Case No. 14,568.

A marshal who receives a warrant to be served upon a circuit court commissioner is bound to make return of his doings thereunder.—United States v. Scroggins, Case No. 16,244.

A constable having a warrant to arrest a man for assault and battery may break open the door of his dwelling house to arrest him.—United States v. Faw, Case No. 15,079.

Where the presentment of the grand jury is equivalent to the finding of "Not found," or "Not a true bill," the prisoner will be discharged.—United States v. Elliott, Case No. 15,045.

Assault by seamen, see "Seamen," § 157.
—— on seamen, see "Seamen," § 179.
—— with intent to kill, see "Homicide," § 3.

§ 1. What constitutes criminal assault.

It is an assault to double the fist and run it at another, saying, "If you say so again, I will knock you down."—United States v. Myers, Case No. 15,845.

The mere taking hold of another's coat, if done in anger, or a rude and insolent manner, or with a view to hostility, constitutes an assault and battery.—United States v. Ortega, Case No. 15,971.

Striking at a person, though no blow be inflicted, or raising the arm to strike, or holding up one's fist, if done in anger or a menacing manner, constitutes an assault.—United States v. Ortega, Case No. 15,971.

A person is guilty of the offense if he could have reached the person intended by extending his arm, so as to inflict a blow, although no blow was actually given.—United States v. Salisbury. Case No. 16,214.

It is an assault to threaten to strike a woman with an uplifted club if she open her mouth.—United States v. Richardson, Case No. 16,155.

An indictment will not lie under the penitentiary act for an assault with intent to kill. There must be a battery also.—United States v. Turley, Case No. 16,546.

It is a misdemeanor at common law to persuade, instigate, and incite another to commit an assault and battery.—United States v. Lyles, Case No. 15,646.

If a man be present, and encourage an assault and battery, he is a principal.—United States v. Ricketts, Case No. 16,158.

A person who flourishes or points a deadly weapon at another, intending personal harm, is guilty of an assault, within Act March 3, 1825, § 22, although no battery has been committed.—United States v. Salisbury, Case No. 16,214; Same v. Kierman, Id. 15,529.

Malice is not an ingredient of the offense of an assault with a dangerous weapon, under the federal statute.—United States v. Lunt, Case No. 15,643.

A man cannot lawfully push another off from his land without first requesting him to leave.—Thompson v. Berry, Case No. 13,943.

The builders of a house have a right to remove, without unnecessary violence, all persons who come into the building without authority, and refuse to depart upon request.—United States v. Bartle, Case No. 14,531.

§ 2. Persons liable.

An indictment at common law in the county of Alexandria will lie against a free negro or mulatto for assault and battery upon a white man.—United States v. Carter, Case No. 14,741.

§ 3. Indictment.

To make those liable who are only present aiding and abetting, it is not necessary that they be indicted jointly or with a simul cum.—United States v. Hunter, Case No. 15,425.

In an indictment for assault and battery with intent to kill, it is not necessary to state the manner and extent of the assault and battery, nor the particular weapon used, nor to charge the assault to be felonious or malicious, or with malice prepense, nor to show that, if death had ensued, it would have been murder.—United States v. Herbert, Case No. 15,354.

An indictment for assault and battery with intent to kill need not show that the crime would have been murder if death had ensued.—United States v. Tharp, Case No. 16,458.

An indictment under the penitentiary act for assault and battery with intent to kill need not aver malice aforethought, or any other evil intent than the intent to kill.—United States v. Lloyd, Case No. 15,619.

An assault with a dangerous weapon under Act March 3, 1825, § 22, is a misdemeanor; and the indictment need not charge that it was committed feloniously, or with intent to perpetrate a felony.—United States v. Gallagher, Case No. 15,185.

In an indictment for an assault with a dangerous weapon, an allegation of criminal intent is implied in the word "assault."—United States v. Lunt, Case No. 15,643; Same v. McClare, Id. 15,659.

On an indictment for assault and battery against a constable serving a warrant, parol evidence of the contents of the warrant cannot be given, unless it be lost or destroyed.—United States v. Long, Case No. 15,625.

In an indictment against one of several who made a joint assault, the acts of the others may be given in evidence.—United States v. Johnston, Case No. 15,490.

On a plea of not guilty, evidence may be given in mitigation of the fine to be assessed by the jury.—United States v. Bartle, Case No. 14,531.

§ 5. Trial.

An indictment for assault and battery and an indictment under the statute for the same assault and battery with intent to kill may be pending and tried at the same time, but there cannot be a judgment of conviction upon both.—United States v. Herbert, Case No. 15,354.

Whether an assault was with a dangerous weapon or not may depend upon matter of fact, as upon the manner of the assault; and the court cannot declare, as a matter of law, that an assault, if committed with a belaying pin, was with a dangerous weapon.—United States v. Small, Case No. 16,314.

On an indictment for assault and battery on H. with intent to kill him, a verdict, "Guilty of an assault by shooting H. with intent to kill," is substantially a general verdict of guilty.—United States v. Lloyd, Case No. 15,619.

No words of provocation will justify an assault, although they may constitute a ground for the reduction of damages.—Cushman v. Ryan, Case No. 3,515.

Under the plea of not guilty plaintiff need not prove that defendant assaulted him first. Contra on the plea of son assault demesne.—Stevens v. Lloyd, Case No. 13,402.

Evidence of defendant's state of mind, caused by recent excitement or provocation, is admissible in mitigation under the general issue.—Cushman v. Waddell, Case No. 3,516.

Provocation will only excuse the payment of exemplary damages and such damages cannot be recovered where the assault was committed in the heat of passion caused by the appearance and statement of defendant's son punished by plaintiff, and without previous malice.—Cushman v. Waddell, Case No. 3,516.

§ 1. Requisites and validity.

A right of action for a tort is not assignable, and an action for damages resulting from a tort can only be sustained by the person directly injured thereby.—Ware v. Brown, Case No. 17,170.

To render an assignment valid at law, the subject of the assignment must have an existence, actual or potential, at the time of the assignment. A mere possibility is not assignable. Otherwise in equity.—Mitchell v. Winslow, Case No. 9,673.

A bona fide assignment of goods at sea and their proceeds will pass the legal title to both, without an indorsement of bill of lading.—De Wolf v. Harris, Case No. 4,221.

An assignment may, in point of law, be good, of goods and their proceeds, though given by way of mortgage or as security for future advances.—De Wolf v. Harris, Case No. 4,221.

An assignment of "all the assignor's estate and effects in possession, or which may accrue or become due and owing to him," will not transfer a mere possibility of a legacy.—Cook v. Conway, Case No. 3,154.

An assignment of a debt carries with it all the accessory obligations by which the debt is secured.—The Hull of a New Ship, Case No. 6,859.

One taking an assignment of a demand after fraud committed on the assignor is entitled to all rights of the latter.—Aiken v. Edrington, Case No. 111.

Where an assignee of a claim takes no steps to enforce the same, he will lose his right as against a subsequent assignee in good faith.—Judson v. Corcoran, Case No. 18,304.

The execution of an assignment by a corporation and by S., president, held to be a good execution by S. for his individual interest.—Campbell v. James, Case No. 2,361.

See, also, post, §§ 3, 4.

§ 3. Rights and liabilities of parties.

A creditor who believes his debtor to be insolvent can assign his demand to a debtor of the insolvent whose debt is not yet payable so as to enable the latter to set it off.—In re City Bank of Savings, Loan & Discount, Case No. 2,742.

A debt due on a single contract or obligation cannot be split up by assignment so as to give a right of action by each assignee.—The Hull of a New Ship, Case No. 6,859.

In an action between the original parties to a contract, the defense of illegality cannot be defeated by an assignment to a third person.—Fales v. Mayberry, Case No. 4,622.

An assignment, with notice, of a negotiable chose in action, founded in illegality, will not protect the parties thereto.—Fales v. Mayberry, Case No. 4,622.

The assignment of a nonnegotiable chose in action without notice of fraud or illegality in its origin will not preclude a defense to an action thereon.—Fales v. Mayberry, Case No. 4,622.

§ 4. Actions.

The transfer of a bankrupt's effects in England, being an assignment merely by operation of law, will not enable the assignees to maintain an action in their own name in the courts of this country.—Blane v. Drummond, Case No. 1,531; Perry v. Barry, Case No. 11,000.

An assignee of a nonnegotiable contract cannot sue upon it in his own name in the circuit court for the Southern district of New York, as the state procedure is not adopted by such court.—Suydam v. Ewing, Case No. 13,655.

A person who sues as assignee is bound to allege an assignment to show title in himself.—Earhart v. Campbell, Case No. 4,241a.

Payments made to the original creditor, after notice of the assignment of the debt, cannot be given in evidence in a suit brought by the assignee in the name of the original creditor.—Gardner v. Tennison, Case No. 5,238.

The legal plaintiff has a right to dismiss a suit brought in his name by order of a person who claims to be his assignee of the right of action, and the court will not interfere to protect the assignee unless the evidence of the assignment is clear.—Welch v. Mandeville, Case No. 17,370.

§ 1. Requisites and validity—Nature and essentials of trust for creditors.

An assignment by a person while laboring under the immediate effects of intoxication will not be favored in a court of equity.—Bowen v. Clark, Case No. 1,721.

Quære, whether one partner can, without the assent of the others, make a general assignment for creditors.—Pearpoint v. Graham, Case No. 10,877.

An assignment is void as to the firm property, as well as to the individual estate of the nonsigning members of the firm.—In re Bear, Case No. 1,177.

An assignment of property to creditors, or to others for their benefit, is founded upon a good consideration.—Lawrence v. Davis, Case No. 8,137.

An instrument whose effect is to transfer property beyond the reach of an execution in trust for assenting creditors is within the Pennsylvania statutes regulating voluntary assignments for creditors.—Corn Exch. Nat. Bank v. Philadelphia Trust, Safe-Deposit & Insurance Co., Case No. 3,244.

The execution of a deed of assignment and the transfer of the property, under the New Jersey assignment act, constitutes the assignee a trustee in possession for the equal benefit of all creditors.—In re Kimball, Case No. 7,771.

A trust for creditors (Act Ohio March 14, 1853) will not be implied from a transfer by an insolvent, to indemnify a surety, of property sufficient only for that purpose.—Coolidge v. Curtis, Case No. 3,184.

An assignment to creditors is not valid without their assent.—Lawrence v. Davis, Case No. 8,137.

The assent of creditors to an assignment, not stipulating for a release, may be presumed; aliter if release stipulated for.—Halsey v. Fairbanks, Case No. 5,964.

Agreement by part of creditors to take assignment of debtor's property to apply on account of debts of all creditors is valid as against a creditor not present at the meeting.—Adams v. Blodgett, Case No. 46.

§ 2. —— Form and requisites of instruments.

One partner may sign and seal an assignment for the firm, and it will bind the partnership, as a release of the debt.—Halsey v. Fairbanks, Case No. 5,964.

Delivery of schedules is not necessary to the validity of the assignment.—In re Kimball, Case No. 7,770.

Sufficiency of inventory and schedule by assignors for benefit of creditors, under Laws N. Y. 1877, c. 466, and Laws 1878, c. 318.—In re Bear, Case No. 1,177.

§ 3. —— Reservations.

On the general validity of assignments made by a failing debtor for the benefit of creditors, with various stipulations and conditions.—Halsey v. Fairbanks, Case No. 5,964.

A provisional stipulation that the creditors shall delay their suits against the debtors, or else forfeit their claims upon the fund assigned, is fraudulent.—Marsh v. Bennett, Case No. 9,110.

It seems that an assignment for the benefit of such creditors as should release their claims within 60 days is valid.—Pearpoint v. Graham, Case No. 10,877.

Quære, whether, in Rhode Island, an insolvent assigning only a part of his property for the benefit of all his creditors may stipulate for a release.—Stewart v. Spenser, Case No. 13,437.

Quære, whether an assignment stipulating for a release of the debtor is fraudulent.—Halsey v. Fairbanks, Case No. 5,964.

A stipulation for a release, and that the dividends of creditors refusing to become parties shall be paid to the assignor, does not render the assignment fraudulent and void on its face, by the law of Rhode Island.—Heydock v. Stanhope, Case No. 6,445.

If the terms of release are general, its operation will be restrained to a release of debts.—Halsey v. Fairbanks, Case No. 5,964.

If the terms of a covenant by creditors to indemnify the debtor against claims under them are general, it will be construed a several covenant by each creditor, and not a joint one by all.—Halsey v. Fairbanks, Case No. 5,964.

The preference of certain creditors upon condition that they accept a distributive share, and release the balance of their debts, does not invalidate a general assignment for creditors under the Virginia laws.—Wickham v. Dillon, Case No. 17,612.

A general assignment in trust for such creditors as should become parties thereto and release their claims, the surplus to be paid the assignor, is void as against dissenting creditors.—The Watchman, Case No. 17,251.

§ 4. —— Preferences.

An insolvent debtor may lawfully prefer one creditor to another.—Pearpoint v. Graham, Case No. 10,877.

Preferences to creditors, if not made for fraudulent purposes, are valid in Ohio.—Coolidge v. Curtis, Case No. 3,184.

Preferences are valid in Illinois, not being prohibited by statute.—Lawrence v. Davis, Case No. 8,137.

It is not a fraud upon any attaching creditor to provide for the payment of all the creditors in preference to one who means to attach by process the property conveyed.—Halsey v. Fairbanks, Case No. 5,964.

A state law as to the effect of an assignment by a debtor in failing circumstances is inapplicable to an assignment made in another state of an instrument executed in the former state.—Dundas v. Bowler, Case No. 4,141.

Construction and effects of Ohio acts of 1824, and 1842, in relation to assignments made by banks.—Dundas v. Bowler, Case No. 4,141.

An assignment with preferences, made by two members of a firm, in the absence and without the knowledge or consent of the third, who had previously refused to give preference, is not valid as to him.—Bowen v. Clark, Case No. 1,721.

§ 5. —— Fraud.

An assignment is not void because made to the clerk of the assignor without requiring bond, and permitting a sale on 30 days' credit if the assignee deem best.—In re Walker, Case No. 17,063.

Concealment of a large sum in cash at the time of making an assignment renders the instrument of assignment fraudulent and void.—Gilkerson v. Hamilton, Case No. 5,424a.

A general assignment for creditors held fraudulent, where, from the course of business, the assignor must have had ample assets, but the same were not revealed.—Fuller v. Ives, Case No. 5,150.

An assignment for benefit of creditors by a debtor absconding with a large sum of money is fraudulent as to creditors where it stipulates for a release as a condition of obtaining a preference under the assignment.—Stewart v. Spenser, Case No. 13,437.

A general assignment for the benefit of creditors is not invalidated by subsequent fraudulent acts of the assignor.—In re Walker, Case No. 17,063.

Delivery of assets to the assignee before he has qualified himself to take possession by filing the inventory and bond is a fraudulent conveyance.—Gilkerson v. Hamilton, Case No. 5,424a.

The omission of schedules and inventory by an insolvent merchant making an assignment is a badge of fraud.—Gilkerson v. Hamilton, Case No. 5,424a.

Payment by an insolvent of a just debt to his assignee at the time of making the assignment is a quasi bribe, and a badge of fraud.—Gilkerson v. Hamilton, Case No. 5,424a.

An assignment, fraudulent as to creditors, does not in law oppose any obstacle to the enforcement of their legal rights.—In re Beisenthal, Case No. 1,236.

§ 6. Construction and operation in general—Property conveyed.

An assignment of all the property mentioned in a schedule referred to, which merely enumerates specific property, affords no presumption of a general assignment.—United States v. Langton, Case No. 15,560.

A general assignment is valid for future liabilities, as well as for debts due, if the parties so intend.—Halsey v. Fairbanks, Case No. 5,964.

An assignment of "all the goods, wares, merchandises, and personal property of every kind" belonging to the assignor, does not pass an interest under a contract.—Kendall v. Almy, Case No. 7,690.

One of the trusts of an assignment was to pay "$8,400 in customhouse bonds, on which M. is surety." M. was surety on bonds for a less amount, but the assignor in fact owed such bonds amounting to $8,257. Held, that only the bonds on which M. was surety were included.—United States v. Langton, Case No. 15,560.

A claim for damages for collision of a craft passes to the assignee under a deed of general assignment for benefit of creditors under the Ohio statute.—Murdock v. The Emma Graham, Case No. 9,940.

§ 7. —— Foreign assignments.

An assignment valid by the law of the state where it is made, though void if made in another state, conveys property in such other state.—Caskie v. Webster, Case No. 2,500.

A general assignment for the benefit of creditors by an insolvent residing in another state will not protect property at such time in Maine from attachment of a creditor resident therein. —The Watchman, Case No. 17,251.

An assignment valid in the state of the assignor's domicile, where it is made, will transfer goods then in another state, under whose law such assignment, if made there, would have been invalid.—Wickham v. Dillon, Case No. 17,612.

§ 8. Appointment and qualification of assignee.

Member of firm of attorneys, absent when assignment was made to the firm, will be presumed to have assented thereto, where he did not refuse to act after notice.—Gordon v. Coolidge, Case No. 5,606.

An assignment made to two persons, and accepted by one, becomes operative as to him.—Gordon v. Coolidge, Case No. 5,606.

Acceptance of the trust by the trustee, who was also a creditor, will not entitle him to the benefit of the trust, if he has failed to execute the release in time. — Pearpoint v. Graham, Case No. 10,877.

§ 9. Rights and powers of assignee.

An assignee in insolvency has no right to retain goods which were in the hands of his assignor for sale on commission, on which the latter had a lien as security on accommodation acceptances given to the owner after a tender of such acceptances and a demand of the goods. —Terry v. Bamberger, Case No. 13,837.

The assignee may avoid a transaction of the debtor for fraud or collusion when the debtor could not do so because a party to it.—Whetmore v. Murdock, Case No. 17,509.

Quære, whether the assignee of an insolvent can sue, in his own name, in a foreign jurisdiction.—Bradford v. Jenks, Case No. 1,769.

§ 11. Rights and remedies of creditors—Presentation, proof, and payment of claims.

One to whom partners have become individually liable may, on an assignment of their individual and firm assets, prove the claim against their separate estates and the surplus against their joint estate after payment of their joint debts.—Drake v. Taylor, Case No. 4,067.

Where an assignment is made for the benefit of such creditors as should release their debts within 60 days, a mere offer to release is unavailing.—Pearpoint v. Graham, Case No. 10,877.

§ 12. —— Claims and liens prior or superior to assignment.

A creditor who purchases property from a trustee in ignorance of the fraud is not precluded from impeaching the assignment.—Johnson v. Rogers, Case No. 7,408.

Unlawfully preferred creditors have no priority as against a mortgagee equally preferred, but not enforcing his mortgage to their prejudice.—Bowen v. Clark, Case No. 1,721.

An assignment for the benefit of all creditors is good against subsequent attachments, although all the creditors are not parties to the deed before the attachments.—Halsey v. Fairbanks, Case No. 5,964.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors is good against a subsequent attachment, as to creditors, who, though not parties, assented thereto before the attachment.—Brown v. Minturn, Case No. 2,021.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors held to take priority as against subsequent attachment of goods held by another on consignment.—Bholen v. Cleveland, Case No. 1,381.

Creditors levying after, but not those levying before, expiration of time to file inventory and schedule, under the New York insolvent law (Act N. Y. June 16, 1877, § 3) acquire a lien where the inventory, etc., is not filed within the time.—In re Bear, Case No. 1,177; In re Croughwell, Id. 3,440.

Recovery of judgment, and levy thereunder prior to the filing of an inventory and bond, but after the execution of the assignment, and after the assignee has taken possession, create no lien under the New Jersey assignment act. —In re Kimball, Case No. 7,771.

A party who purchases a judgment has no higher right to impeach a fraudulent assignment than his assignor had.—Johnson v. Rogers, Case No. 7,408.

§ 13. Accounting by, and compensation of, assignee.

An assignor may, by bill in equity against the assignee and the only unpaid creditor, compel an accounting of the assignee.—Carpenter v. Robinson, Case No. 2,431.

All the creditors must be made parties to a bill for an account to fix the amount of a trust fund for creditors. Without them, the court cannot distribute parts of the fund to those who are entitled to them in severalty.—Greene v. Sisson, Case No. 5,768.

The assignee who is put upon inquiry as to facts rendering the assignment voidable by creditors has no lien, as against attaching creditors, upon the proceeds of the property for services or counsel fees.—Hastings v. Spenser, Case No. 6,201.

ASSISTANCE, WRIT OF.

§ 1. Nature and grounds.

A writ of assistance will be granted where defendant refuses to surrender under a decree. —Pratt v. Burr, Case No. 11,372.

ASSOCIATIONS.

§ 1, Rights of members in property of association. § 2, Mutual dealings of members. § 3, Liability of members for debts of association. § 4, Actions.

See, also, "Building and Loan Associations"; "Joint Stock Companies."

Mutual benefit assurance associations, see "Insurance," §§ 196–199.

§ 1. Rights of members in property of association.

On the wrongful expulsion of a member of an association having an absolute community of property with right of survivorship, held, that he should have a decree for his numerical proportion of the whole capital stock.—Nachtrieb v. The Harmony Settlement, Case No. 10,003.

§ 2. Mutual dealings of members.

A written agreement between the members of an unincorporated association to relinquish all individual interest in the proceeds of their joint labor for the common benefit is valid and binding.—Goesele v. Bimeler, Case No. 5,503.

§ 3. Liability of members for debts of association.

A stockholder of an unincorporated association is liable in equity for the debts of the association, irrespective of the provisions of the by-laws limiting his liability.—Riggs v. Swann, Case No. 11,831.

§ 4. Actions.

Where an unincorporated association of persons sued in the association name waive process, and appear and answer without objecting, they cannot afterwards raise the objection that it was improperly sued.—Deems v. Albany & Canal Line, Case No. 3,736.

ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF.

§ 1, Grounds. § 2, Defenses. § 3, Persons liable. § 4, Pleading. § 5, Issues and proof. § 6, Evidence.

See, also, "Account Stated"; "Money Received"; "Use and Occupation"; "Work and Labor."

§ 1. Grounds.

There can be no recovery in assumpsit if a special agreement be proved.—Krouse v. Deblois, Case No. 7,937; Rambler v. Choat, Id. 11,542.

Assumpsit will lie for money due upon a special contract.—Hyde v. Liverse, Case No. 6,972.

Assumpsit will lie for money due under an executed contract.—Maupin v. Pic, Case No. 9,309.

Assumpsit will not lie at common law on a parol demise.—Wise v. Decker, Case No. 17,906.

Assumpsit will lie for articles or services commonly charged on book account.—Edwards v. Nichols, Case No. 4,296.

Assumpsit lies upon the judgment of a justice of the peace.—Green v. Fry, Case No. 5,758.

Assumpsit is the proper form of action at common law to recover money paid as usury.—Whitaker v. Pope, Case No. 17,528.

Assumpsit will lie on the indorsement of a writing obligatory, the undertaking of the defendant not being under seal.—Campbell v. Jordan, Case No. 2,362.

Plaintiff may recover on a general indebitatus assumpsit for work and labor done under a special agreement.—Pipsico v. Bontz, Case No. 11,183.

Assumpsit will not lie for work and labor done under a sealed agreement unless the whole work has been done according to the contract.—Fresh v. Gilson, Case No. 5,112.

Assumpsit will lie for work done under a contract under seal which had been rescinded for failure to comply with its terms, where the work was accepted by the other party.—Lee v. New Haven, M. & W. R. Co., Case No. 8,197.

Assumpsit will not lie for work and labor done in the lifetime of defendant's intestate under a special contract for payment by the conveyance of land, without showing fraud in the making of such contract.—Powling v. Varnum, Case No. 11,364.

Assumpsit will lie for the value of work done under an agreement under seal, where plaintiff has been prevented by defendant from finishing the job.—Preston v. Young, Case No. 11,399.

A balance remaining due from the due increase and sale of property received as security for a debt, and to be accounted for, may be recovered in an action at law under a count for money had and received.—Jewett v. Cunard, Case No. 7,310.

Assumpsit will lie on interest coupons, not under seal, attached to railway aid bonds under seal, where each coupon contains an express promise to pay to bearer, and is signed by the proper officer.—First Nat. Bank v. Bennington, Case No. 4,807.

Interest coupons attached to a municipal bond, and made payable to bearer according to the condition of the bond, are not negotiable instruments, but are mere evidences of interest due on the bond, and assumpsit cannot be maintained thereon.—Clarke v. Janesville, Case No. 2,854.

Where defendant contracted to pay a certain sum for each patented article sold, the amount received may be recovered on the general count for money had and received.—Stanley v. Whipple, Case No. 13,286.

Where proceeds of an execution in a sheriff's hands were claimed by the plaintiff in the execution and by the United States, and were paid to the former, on his agreement to pay them to the latter if "the said court" decided they were entitled thereto, held, that assumpsit would lie in a federal court in behalf of the United States.—United States v. Mechanics' Bank, Case No. 15,756.

Assumpsit lies for work done under a sealed contract, without previous demand for stock agreed to be received in payment.—Hallihan v. Washington, Case No. 5,962.

Assumpsit will not lie for the costs of appeal against the person for whose use the appeal was prosecuted.—Williams v. Hopkins, Case No. 17,722.

A promise to account for the proceeds of a bill of exchange "as soon as the fate of the bill is decided" held a promise to pay, conditional upon the bill being paid.—Hutz v. Karthause, Case No. 6,963.

A promise to pay a claim out of the proceeds of a bill of exchange is not enforceable where the bill is protested for nonpayment.—Hutz v. Karthause, Case No. 6,963.

§ 2. Defenses.

An agreement to release a debtor upon his executing a deed is a good defense in assumpsit, the deed being executed.—Bartleman v. Douglass, Case No. 1,073.

A credit of six months in a note expired before suit will not defeat a recovery on the general counts.—Brown v. Noyes, Case No. 2,023.

§ 3. Persons liable.

An action for money had and received will lie by the holder against the acceptor of a bill who received a fund out of which it was payable.—Grammer v. Carroll, Case No. 5,681.

Proper form of declaration in assumpsit.—Myers v. Davis, Case No. 9,986.

In assumpsit for board and lodging and articles furnished, the day stated in the declaration is not material if the articles were delivered and to be paid for before the action was brought.—McLaughlin v. Turner, Case No. 8,875.

One who has fully performed a special agreement may recover upon a general count.—Brockett v. Hammond, Case No. 1,916.

A declaration in assumpsit may be amended (in Connecticut) by adding a special count in covenant.—Lee v. New Haven, M. & W. R. Co., Case No. 8,197.

The declaration on a promissory note in a suit in the federal court in New York, drawn under the Code of Procedure, held bad on general demurrer, as a claim of damages is necessary in assumpsit.—Brownson v. Wallace, Case No. 2,042.

§ 5. Issues and proof.

A partnership debt may be given in evidence to support a several assumpsit by one of the partners.—Edmondson v. Barrell, Case No. 4,284.

A promissory note is good evidence, under the money counts, in a suit by an indorsee as well as by the payee.—Brown v. Noyes, Case No. 2,023.

A special agreement to do the work at certain prices cannot be given in evidence on a general indebitatus assumpsit.—Farrell v. Knapp, Case No. 4,684.

Although the contract offered in evidence vary from that stated in the special count, the receipt for the purchase money at the bottom of the contract is evidence on the money counts.—Jamieson v. Alexander, Case No. 7,203.

The statute of gaming may be given in evidence, upon nonassumpsit, without notice.—Watson v. Bayley, Case No. 17,276.

Payment may be given in evidence under non assumpsit without notice.—Jeffrey v. Schlasinger, Case No. 7,253a.

Defendant need not plead a former recovery to give the same in evidence in an action of assumpsit or on the case.—Lonsdale v. Brown, Case No. 8,493; Ridgway v. Ghequier, Id. 11,816; Stone v. Stone, Id. 13,488.

A declaration in general indebitatus assumpsit for property sold and delivered is not supported by evidence of a sale and delivery under a special contract for a price named.—Talbot v. Selby, Case No. 13,729.

Upon a count for a certain sum for work and labor, plaintiff must prove an express assumpsit for a certain sum.—Farrell v. Knapp, Case No. 4,684.

Indebitatus assumpsit will lie against a corporation aggregate upon an account stated by their treasurer, without examining him as a witness.—Davis v. Georgetown Bridge Co., Case No. 3,637.

§ 1. Nature and grounds—Nature of attachment, causes of action, and parties.

A foreign attachment is a remedy, and may be defeated by any act that bars or takes away the remedy or right to judgment under it.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

A proceeding by attachment is a proceeding in rem, and only binds the defendant to the extent of the property levied on.—Westerwelt v. Lewis, Case No. 17,446.

An attachment under Act Md. 1795, c. 56, will not lie for a debt under $20.—Dix v. Nicholls, Case No. 3,926.

Under the Georgia law no attachment lies for the recovery of unliquidated damages consequent upon the breach of a contract.—Zerega v. McDonald, Case No. 18,212.

The remedy by a foreign attachment in Pennsylvania cannot be pursued except for a demand arising under contract, and where the measure of damages can be averred.—Fisher v. Consequa, Case No. 4,816.

The remedy by foreign attachment in Pennsylvania may be pursued in an action for breach of a contract, made in a foreign country by persons who had never resided in the state, to deliver a quantity of tea of a particular quality.—Fisher v. Consequa, Case No. 4,816.

A foreign attachment for breach of stipulation in a charter party cannot be sustained where the amount of plaintiff's damages cannot, with propriety, be averred or sworn to.—Clark v. Wilson, Case No. 2,841.

The proceedings upon attachment, upon an assigned cause of action, must be in the name of the legal plaintiff; and all the requisites of the statute must be complied with.—Davis v. Wyer, Case No. 3,660.

Attachment lies against absconding debtor under the Virginia law.—Allen v. Greenwood, Case No. 222.

A man who leaves a place to avoid service of process, requesting false information to be given of his movements, "conceals himself so that process cannot be served upon him," within the meaning of the attachment law of Illinois.—North v. McDonald, Case No. 10,312.

It is not necessary that process be first issued, or that an attempt should first be made by the officer to find him; nor is it material that he is in another county.—North v. McDonald, Case No. 10,312.

Antedating a note substituted in place of an unexpired credit held a fraud upon grantees, and the note no ground of attachment against the land conveyed.—Briggs v. French, Case No. 1,871.

The intent to delay or defraud one creditor alone in the disposal of goods by the debtor is sufficient ground of attachment. — Correy v. Lake, Case No. 3,253.

§ 3. Property subject to.

The wages of a seaman are not subject to attachment.—The John E. Holbrook, Case No. 7,339.

Lands are subject to a foreign attachment in Pennsylvania.—Graighle v. Notnagle, Case No. 5,679.

Property in the hands of a lienor is not attachable in a suit against the owner, unless the lien is waived.—Meeker v. Wilson, Case No. 9,392.

A lien is not attachable as personal property or as a chose in action of the person entitled to it.—Meany v. Head, Case No. 9,379.

A chancery attachment will not lie against the effects of a deceased person.—Henderson v. Her-derson, Case No. 6,353; Patterson v. McLaughlin, Id. 10,828; Redfern v. Rumney, Id. 11,627.

An order for the attachment "of the property of" a defendant named, issued as a provisional remedy, prior to judgment, under the provisions of Code Prac. Ky. § 223, gives the sheriff no authority to seize property which has been conveyed to another, on the ground that such conveyance was in fraud of creditors; and such a seizure, if made, does not carry the property into the custody of the court.—Manier v. Trumbo, Case No. 18,309.

A foreign attachment may be laid on property in the hands of the plaintiff in the attachment, and in such case no special process is necessary.—Graighle v. Notnagle, Case No. 5,679.

Goods in the officer's hands under a distress for rent are liable to attachment, at the suit of the same landlord, for the rent not yet due.—Herbert v. Ward, Case No. 6,398.

Money awarded under a rule of court cannot be attached.—In re Bridgman, Case No. 1,867.

A judgment rendered in the federal circuit court cannot be attached by process issued out of a state court against the plaintiff in the judgment.—Thomas v. Wooldridge, Case No. 13,918.

If the indorser of a promissory note accept an order from the indorsee for the amount of the note in favor of a third person, a subsequent attachment of the money in the hands of the indorser by a creditor of the indorsee will not avail him.—Whetcroft v. White, Case No. 17,507.

§ 4. Proceedings to procure — Jurisdiction and venue.

Under Act 1789, c. 20, § 11, a foreign attachment cannot be maintained against the principal defendant unless he is an inhabitant of the district where the suit is brought, or is found within it, at the time of service of the process.—Richmond v. Dreyfous, Case No. 11,799.

It is no objection to a foreign attachment that plaintiff has sued out an attachment in another state on the same cause of action.—Clark v. Wilson, Case No. 2,841.

Quære, whether a foreign attachment can be sustained where plaintiff has sued out an attachment in another state for the same cause, and defendant has given bail therein.—Clark v. Wilson, Case No. 2,841.

Proceedings and practice under the foreign attachment law of Pennsylvania.—Graighle v. Notnagle, Case No. 5,679.

An attachment under Act Md. 1795, c. 56, will lie against lands and tenements in Alexandria county, D. C.—Hough v. Smoot, Case No. 6,723.

§ 5. —— Affidavits.

Sufficiency of instrument and affidavit produced to the magistrate to warrant attachment under Act Md. 1795, c. 56.—Hard v. Stone, Case No. 6,046.

To obtain attachment (Act Md. 1795, c. 56), it is not necessary that all plaintiffs should make affidavit, nor that they appear to be citizens.—Birch v. Butler, Case No. 1,425.

An affidavit to obtain attachment under Act Md. 1795, may be made by one of the co-partners, and need not state that he is the acting partner, nor that the other partners were absent.—Drake v. Cleveland, Case No. 4,059.

An affidavit made before a judge in another state is not good without a certificate of authority to administer the oath.—Bolton v. White, Case No. 1,616.

The affidavit, in the territory of Arkansas, may be made before the clerks of the circuit court.—James v. Jenkins, Case No. 7,181a.

In an affidavit to obtain an attachment under Act Md. 1795, it is not necessary to state the plaintiff to be a citizen of the county of Washington, D. C.—Decatur v. Young, Case No. 3,722; Kurtz v. Jones, Id. 7,954.

In order to obtain an attachment under Act Md. 1795, c. 56, the affidavit must be positive as to the amount of the debt.—Munroe v. Cocke, Case No. 9,928.

Affidavit held insufficient where the debt arose in part upon a note, and the note was not produced.—Mills v. Wilson, Case No. 9,616.

A positive averment, in the words of the statute, that "plaintiff's debt was fraudulently contracted," is sufficient, under Laws Minn. 1867, c. 66, § 1.—Cheshire Provident Inst. v. Johnston, Case No. 2,659.

It is not necessary that the deponent, in an affidavit upon which an attachment is applied for, should swear positively to the fraudulent intent of the defendant; facts going to show the intent must be stated, and facts reasonably authorizing a belief of such intent are sufficient.—Ely v. Hanks, Case No. 4,430.

Proof of a general intent to dispose of property to prevent a particular creditor from collecting his demand by legal proceedings is sufficient proof, in an action by such creditor, that be is about to do so.—Correy v. Lake, Case No. 3,253.

§ 6. —— Security.

Plaintiff in attachment in a federal court must furnish security in the same manner and amount, and with sureties of the same qualifications, as if he were proceeding in a state court.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Mason, Case No. 12,903.

In a chancery attachment in Virginia, the court may order the attached debt to be paid over to the plaintiff, on his giving security to refund, etc., although the plaintiff's right may be doubtful.—Wilson v. Dandridge, Case No. 17,801.

Money deposited in court under a stipulation to abide the issue in attachment cannot be withdrawn, and a bond substituted therefor.—United States v. Hutton, Case No. 15,435.

§ 7. Writ or warrant.

An attachment against partners, where the writ failed to show their given names, but was amended in this particular before the return day, held valid.—Harrington v. Fire Ass'n, Case No. 6,106.

The writ and capias may be amended by inserting given names of plaintiffs.—Birch v. Butler, Case No. 1,425.

§ 8. Levy.

To constitute attachment of personalty as against assignee in bankruptcy, officer must take actual possession.—In re Ashley, Case No. 581.

A levy under an attachment satisfies the debt if the property be of sufficient amount, though it be wasted by the negligence of the officer.—Starr v. Moore, Case No. 13,315; Same v. Taylor, Id. 13,319.

An attachment cannot be served in court.—Davis v. Sherron, Case No. 3,652.

§ 9. Lien.

An attachment, on mesne process, is not a lien in the sense of the common law.—In re Bellows, Case No. 1,278; In re Cheney, Id. 2,636.

An attachment on mesne process is only a contingent and conditional charge, until the judgment and levy.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

An attachment levied on land fixes the lien from the time of the levy, and a sale under a judgment on the attachment relates back to such time.—Tyrell's Heirs v. Rountree, Case No. 14,313.

§ 10. Priorities.

The attachment first served is entitled to priority of payment.—Johnson v. Griffith, Case No. 7,386; Grigsby v. Love, Id. 5,827.

Questions as to priority of attachment and unrecorded conveyances.—Briggs v. French, Case No. 1,871.

The rule applicable to a purchaser claiming land, with notice of a prior unrecorded attachment, does not govern where two creditors are proceeding by suit in invitum with knowledge of the attachments of each other; and each is entitled to any priority which he can lawfully obtain.—Kent v. Roberts, Case No. 7,715.

§ 11. Custody and care of property in general.

The nature and kind of possession which the officer is bound to keep of personal property to save the attachment.—Lewis v. The Orpheus, Case No. 8,330.

Where attached property is lost without the neglect of the officer or plaintiff, the loss must be sustained by defendant; and a plea that property was attached and lost is defective in not showing how the loss occurred.—Starr v. Moore, Case No. 13,315; Same v. Taylor, Id. 13,319.

§ 12. Delivery of property on forthcoming or delivery bond.

Effect of redelivery to defendant of property taken on attachment under Civ. Code Or. §§ 178, 179.—Correy v. Lake, Case No. 3,253.

A sheriff, who delivers up to defendant the attached property before the action is actually dismissed, though ordered to do so by plaintiff, may be required to account to subsequent attaching creditors for the value thereof.—Rice v. Baldwin, Case No. 11,750a.

The giving of a bond for possession does not prevent defendant from making as full a defense as if the bond had not been given.—Lehman v. Berdin, Case No. 8,215.

A bond to prevent the removal of property in litigation beyond the jurisdiction of the court creates a personal obligation only against the obligor.—Lenox v. Notrebe, Case No. 8,246b.

Upon attachment of the effects of both and each of two joint debtors, bail must be given for both, to release the joint and separate effects.—Magee v. Callan, Case No. 8,942.

Bail will not be received of one only to discharge his separate goods.—Magee v. Callan, Case No. 8,942.

The court will not, upon affidavit, decide whether the effects attached are the joint or several property of the defendants.—Magee v. Callan, Case No. 8,942.

See, also, post, § 17.

§ 13. Proceedings to support or enforce.

A valid attachment of property within the jurisdiction gives a state court power to render judgment that an absent defendant, not otherwise served, is indebted to plaintiff, and to enforce payment by the sale of the property.—Mickey v. Stratton, Case No. 9,530.

A sale of land of an absent defendant, under an attachment, is void where the return shows that copy of process was posted on the premises, but does not show that there was no occupant with whom it could have been left.—Mickey v. Stratton, Case No. 9,530.

A personal judgment cannot be rendered against defendant on a foreign attachment under the Indiana statute of 1838, where defendant was not personally served with process, and did not appear; and the judgment in such cases should be for a sale of the property attached. A sale on fieri facias issued on such judgment is void.—Wyman v. Russell, Case No. 18,115.

Defendants in attachment may appear and plead without entering special bail to the action, and then the property attached is considered as a substitute for bail.—Gibson v. Scull, Case No. 5,400a.

A judgment in a proceeding by attachment is erroneous where the service of the writ does not conform to the statute.—James v. Jenkins, Case No. 7,181a.

A judgment in attachment is not to be treated as a nullity because the affidavit does not appear in the record.—Biggs v. Blue, Case No. 1,403.

The bill cannot be taken for confessed for nonappearance in a chancery attachment if the subpœna be served on the principal without an affidavit and publication.—Dean v. Legg, Case No. 3,709.

The plaintiff must prove his debt before he can obtain judgment of condemnation. (Act Md. 1795, c. 56.)—Stephenson v. Giberson, Case No. 13,372.

In a judgment upon an attachment, interest cannot be added.—Power v. Semmes, Case No. 11,360.

§ 14. Quashing, vacating, dissolution, or abandonment.

An attachment, issued upon a return of non est, before the appearance day, will be quashed.—Camilloz v. Johns, Case No. 2,343.

An attachment will be dissolved where defendant is arrested before its return.—Cox v. Watkins, Case No. 3,307.

It is no ground for dismissing a foreign attachment, instituted in the federal court, that plaintiff had sued out another attachment against the defendant in a state court, and afterwards discontinued it.—Fisher v. Consequa, Case No. 4,816.

The second attaching creditors are entitled to the relief against fraud given by Act Mass. Feb. 21, 1824, though their writ be not returnable to the same term of court as the first attachment.—Lodge v. Lodge, Case No. 8,460.

An attachment under Act Md. 1795, against the property of a corporation aggregate is dissolved by its appearance without bail.—Nicholl v. Savannah S. S. Co., Case No. 10,225.

An attachment by way of execution is discontinued if there is no appearance at the return term.—Bank of Washington v. Brent, Case No. 948.

An attachment under Act Md. 1795, c. 56, is dissolved by the death of the principal defendant and the appearance of his administrator.—Pancost v. Washington, Case No. 10,706.

§ 15. Claims by third persons.

Rights under an attachment depend on the state of the property when the attachment was levied.—Clarke v. Chase, Case No. 2,845.

Trustees in an attachment suit, who unsuccessfully contest a transfer of bank stock on the books of the bank on the ground that the sale by the debtor was fraudulent as to the attachment creditor, are liable for costs.—Hubbard v. Bank of United States, Case No. 6,815.

§ 16. Return.

When a marshal has several writs of attachment put into his hands, he must return all the property, as attached on each of them.—Violette v. Tyler, Case No. 16,955.

The state court has discretionary power to allow a sheriff to amend his return on attachment by reducing the stated value of the goods to the actual value, and its decision is not subject to review by the federal circuit court.—Pierce v. Strickland, Case No. 11,147.

§ 17. Liabilities on bonds and undertakings.

A judgment against a surety on a delivery bond given in attachment proceedings under the Tennessee laws is valid, although entered without notice, and while the surety was a nonresident of the state.—Kuhn v. McMillan, Case No. 7,945.

If the attachment be not sustained, plaintiff, though he recovered judgment for his debt, cannot resort to the bond given for possession.—Lehman v. Berdin, Case No. 8,215.

§ 18. Wrongful attachment.

An officer in Massachusetts seizing property of a firm on a writ against one partner who has no equitable interest in such property is a trespasser.—Cropper v. Coburn, Case No. 3,416.

Reputed ownership by a debtor of goods in his possession, in fact belonging to another, will not justify a creditor in attaching them.—Merrill v. Rinker, Case No. 9,471.

The attaching creditor, by giving bond and directing the sheriff to sell, ratifies the act of his attorney in directing the attachment.—Murray v. Lovejoy, Case No. 9,963.

Judgment against a sheriff for property wrongfully attached, without full satisfaction, is no bar to an action of trespass against the attaching creditor. Partial satisfaction of such judgment goes to reduction of damages.—Murray v. Lovejoy, Case No. 9,963.

The measure of damages for seizure under attachment of the goods of a third person is their value at the time of seizure, with such further damages as may be found to have been actually sustained by reason of seizure.—Comly v. Fisher, Case No. 3,053.

Right of attorney to make affidavit in admiralty, see "Admiralty," §§ 92, 138.
—— to waive question of jurisdiction, see "Appearance," § 1.

§ 1. Office of attorney—Suspension and disbarment.

The circuit court of the District of Columbia, may inquire in a summary manner into alleged malpractices, and suspend or expel an attorney. —Ex parte Burr, Case No. 2,186.

The court will strike an attorney from the roll for malpractice, though it be not indictable. —United States v. Porter, Case No. 16,072.

A proposition by a lawyer to his client that he will visit, with his family, the family of the judge, and at such time seek to commit the judge in favor of his client, is ground of disbarment.—Ex parte Cole, Case No. 2,973.

Name of proctor stricken from the rolls for contempt in filing a notice of motion to set aside a decree on the ground that the same was rendered without any consideration or deliberation, and was the result "of either prejudice or corruption," and in "willful violation of a known duty."—In re Hastings, Case No. 6,199.

The effort of an attorney to secure from certain persons, as condition to his consent to their appointment as receivers of a railroad, a secret promise to appoint certain persons as chief officers thereof, is not alone ground of disbarment.—Ex parte Cole, Case No. 2,973.

Fidelity to the client does not justify an attempt to evade the fair operation of the law, or to impede the administration of justice.—Ex parte Giberson, Case No. 5,388.

Inciting and encouraging clients, parties to a pending litigation, to influence, improperly, judicial action by newspaper publications and printed circulars disparaging the court, with intent to intimidate the judges, is ground of disbarment, though the attorney's suggestion is not acted upon.—Ex parte Cole, Case No. 2,973.

An information charging such conduct need not state the precise mode by which the attorney conveyed such suggestions to the client. —Ex parte Cole, Case No. 2,973.

Nor is it demurrable on the ground that the suggestion to the client is a privileged communication.—Ex parte Cole, Case No. 2,973.

The discretion to remove or suspend an attorney should be exercised with great caution.— Bradley v. Tochman, Case No. 1,788.

§ 2. Retainer.

An attorney employed by the lender to examine the title of property offered as security for a loan, though compensated by the borrower, is responsible to the lender for the correctness of his opinion.—Page v. Trutch, Case No. 10,668.

An attorney may recover for services in a litigation ordered to be prosecuted by a city, and conducted in its behalf, with notice of his employment, where it accepts the benefits thereof, though without express contract.—Blake v. Elizabeth, Case No. 1,495.

A party cannot, without the consent of the court, substitute a new solicitor for one who has had charge of the cause.—Sloo v. Law, Case No. 12,958.

Where a solicitor, who has faithfully discharged his duties, is notified that he is discharged, and that no fee will be paid him, the fact that he sues out an attachment against his client for his fees is no ground for ordering his discharge from the cause, without payment of his fees.—Sloo v. Law, Case No. 12,958.

§ 3. Authority of attorney.

The appearance of an attorney in a cause is received as evidence of his authority, and no additional evidence is required. — Baldwin v. Wylie, Case No. 18,228.

Warrant of attorney to appear is not necessary.—Bank of the United States v. Roberts, Case No. 934.

An affidavit on information and belief, without stating the grounds of the belief, that an attorney had no authority, is not a sufficient foundation for a rule against the attorney to show his authority.—Standefer v. Dowlin, Case No. 13,284a.

If defendant insists upon it, plaintiff's attorney must file his warrant of attorney as evidence of authority to bring the suit.—King of Spain v. Oliver, Case No. 7,814.

Attorneys at law, having confided to them by creditors a discretionary power to collect a debt, may, in the exercise of their discretion, bind their clients by assent to an assignment for the benefit of creditors.—Gordon v. Coolidge, Case No. 5,606.

The court will not, on the motion of one attorney, order the names of other attorneys, whose appearance has been entered, to be stricken off the docket.—Eriko v. Bomford, Case No. 4,517.

The court will not enforce the private agreements of counsel.—Moore v. Dulany, Case No. 9,758.

The submission of a controversy to arbitration by an attorney binds the client.—Denny v. Brown, Case No. 3,805.

A party will not be held responsible for the conduct of his counsel in acting without probable cause, if not directed by him, nor for his counsel's malice, unless he attempts unjustly to take advantage of his act.—Burnap v. Albert, Case No. 2,170.

An attorney employed, not to attend to all his client's legal business, but to collect a particular debt, is a special, as opposed to a general, agent; and those dealing with him are bound to ascertain the extent of his authority. —Williamson v. Richardson, Case No. 17,754.

The counsel in a case has power to enter into a stipulation for the entry of a decree against his client.—Farmers' Trust & Canal Bank v. Ketchum, Case No. 4,670.

An attorney has exclusive control of the conduct of his client's suit, and neither the client nor his attorney in fact can sign a stipulation for a continuance.—Nightingale v. Oregon Cent. Ry. Co., Case No. 10,264.

An attorney employed to collect a claim, after entry of judgment, satisfied the same on receiving a less amount, which he failed to pay over. Held, that the satisfaction would be set aside on condition of the indorsement on the judgment of the amount paid. — Pierce v. Brown, Case No. 11,143.

A proctor in admiralty cannot release or compromise his client's debt without special authority, but an insufficient amount paid in settlement is a discharge pro tanto.—Bates v. Seabury, Case No. 1,104.

An attorney may confess judgment for his client in an action on contract. — Denny v. Brown, Case No. 3,805.

A ratification of the proceedings of an attorney in a suit is not valid to bind the client unless it is made with a full knowledge of all the material facts.—Williams v. Reed, Case No. 17,733.

§ 4. Duties and liabilities of attorney to client.

An attorney is justified in acting according to a decision of a state supreme court, though it is afterwards reversed by the United States supreme court.—Marsh v. Whitmore, Case No. 9,122.

It is not gross negligence in an attorney to unite in one suit debts secured and debts unsecured, for the moneys made on execution will be applied first to the unsecured debts.—Williams v. Reed, Case No. 17,733.

An attorney at law is not liable to a suit for moneys collected or for interest until demand, directions to remit, or some equivalent act.—Sneed v. Hanly, Case No. 13,136.

An attorney is bound to disclose to his client if he has any adverse retainer which may affect his own judgment or his client's interest; but the concealment of the fact is not a necessary presumption of fraud.—Williams v. Reed, Case No. 17,733.

An attorney chargeable with negligence is liable only to the extent of the injury his client has received.—Suydam v. Vance, Case No. 13,657.

An attorney at law cannot avail himself of the statute as to moneys collected for his client, until demand, directions to remit, or some equivalent act.—Sneed v. Hanly, Case No. 13,136.

Attorneys, in the exercise of their proper functions as such, are not liable for their acts when performed in good faith to protect clients' interest.—Campbell v. Brown, Case No. 2,355.

An attorney, who enters an appearance, without authority, is answerable in damages, for the injury he may thereby have occasioned the parties.—Field v. Gibbs, Case No. 4,766.

See, also, ante, § 2.

§ 5. Compensation.

A contract for a contingent compensation of 7½ per cent. for collecting and distributing an estate of $800,000, held not unconscionable.—Ex parte Plitt, Case No. 11,228.

Amount of attorney's charges where there were 11 suits, involving the same questions, with identical pleadings.—Ferrett v. Atwill, Case No. 4,747.

Where several attorneys appear for defendants, the attorney's fee in the bill of costs will be equally divided among them.—Hurst v. Durnell, Case No. 6,928.

Attorneys are entitled, in the absence of contract, to recover a quantum meruit for professional services.—Newman v. Keffer, Case No. 10,177.

A proctor may maintain a suit in admiralty for his costs or fees.—McDonald v. The Cabot, Case No. 8,759.

An action at law will not lie by a counselor of the circuit court of the District of Columbia, for his fees as such, even under an express promise; otherwise as to an attorney.—Law v. Ewell, Case No. 8,127.

Counsel fees, as such, are not recoverable without express agreement, but otherwise as to reasonable fees and expenses.—Blake v. Elizabeth, Case No. 1,495.

See, also, ante, § 2.

§ 6. Liens.

An attorney cannot acquire a lien for his compensation upon a judgment obtained by him, unless he has a special agreement as to the amount thereof. Civ. Code Or. § 1012.—In re Scoggin, Case No. 12,511.

A mere debt due by the adverse party to the client of the attorney is not money in the hands of such party, within Civ. Code Or. § 1012, subd. 3, upon which the attorney can acquire a lien.—In re Scoggin, Case No. 12,511.

Attorney held entitled to a lien upon notes of the client in his hands for counsel and solicitor's fees in suit not relating thereto.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,984.

The court will uphold the proctor's right to costs awarded against acts of the principal to his prejudice.—Collins v. Hathaway, Case No. 3,014.

A proctor for libelant in admiralty may proceed for costs after a clandestine settlement between the parties without his consent, after suit commenced.—Angell v. Bennett, Case No. 387; Collins v. Nickerson, Id. 3,016; The Planet, Id. 11,204; The Sarah Jane, Id. 12,348; The Victory, Id. 16,937; Trask v. The Dido, Id. 14,142; Johnson v. A Raft of Spars, Id. 7,370a.

A proctor who in such case intends to continue the suit to recover costs must give distinct notice to claimant or respondent.—The Sarah Jane, Case No. 12,348.

The proctor of a seaman may proceed with his suit for wages where the master of the vessel secretly settles with the seaman after summons sued out, with knowledge thereof, and of the fact of an assignment to the proctor.—Eldridge v. The Ashley, Case No. 4,333.

Where the master on whom a libel has been served for seamen's wages pays the wages over at once on garnishment from a state court, at the request of the seamen, without any notice to their proctor in admiralty to enable him to secure his costs and fees, he renders himself liable therefor.—McDonald v. The Cabot, Case No. 8,759.

In a suit in admiralty for a personal tort, a compromise between the parties before decree will bar a further suit by libelant's proctor to obtain the costs.—Peterson v. Watson, Case No. 11,037; Purcell v. Lincoln, Id. 11,471.

A notice by the proctor to respondent that, in case of a compromise, he will be held liable for the costs, is ineffectual.—Peterson v. Watson, Case No. 11,037.

Where payment of a claim to an assignee thereof by officers of the government will defeat an attorney's lien upon the fund, the court will enjoin the assignee from demanding payment without the attorney's consent.—Key v. Bank of United States, Case No. 7,746.

A client can change his solicitor whenever he pleases, subject to the solicitor's lien. But the lien does not extend so far as to enable the solicitor to stay or delay the proceedings in the suit.—Isaacs v. Abraham, Case No. 7,094.

Where a proctor, in conducting a suit in rem for wages, to recover his costs, after a settlement without his knowledge with the libelant, makes unnecessary litigation, the cost thereof may be set off against his claim.—The Victory, Case No. 16,937.

§ 7. Offenses by attorney.

Upon an indictment for barratry, no evidence can be given of specific acts without notice given before the trial.—United States v. Porter, Case No. 16,072.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

§ 1. Authority.

Comp. Laws Nev. § 2778, does not authorize the attorney general to appear for state generally in actions against officers in individual capacities, so as to bind state.—Adams v. Bradley, Case No. 48.

A direction given by the attorney general to a district attorney in respect to his official action in regard to an indictment cannot control the court.—United States v. Davis, Case No. 14,923.

AUCTIONS AND AUCTIONEERS.

§ 1, License and bond of auctioneer. § 2, Liability of auctioneer. § 3, Conduct and validity of sale.

Requirements of statute of frauds, see "Frauds, Statute of," § 3.

§ 1. License and bond of auctioneer.

An auctioneer's bond given to the corporation of Georgetown, D. C., by its corporate name, held void.—Georgetown v. Baker, Case No. 5,342.

The license must be under the corporate seal.—Georgetown v. Baker, Case No. 5,342.

In debt on an auctioneer's bond for failure to pay over money, it may be pleaded that the auctioneer's liability has not been established by judgment.—Alexandria v. Moore, Case No. 185.

§ 2. Liability of auctioneer.

An auctioneer limited as to price is liable if he sell at a less price.—Williams v. Poor, Case No. 17,732.

§ 3. Conduct and validity of sale.

Where the last bid before the purchaser's on a sale at auction is a real bid, and the judgment of the real bidders and the purchaser has not been blinded by previous sham bids, the fact that the seller employed sham bidders will not render the sale invalid.—Veazie v. Williams, Case No. 16,907.

An association of individuals may purchase at an auction sale of public lands.—Piatt v. Oliver, Case No. 11,114; Id. 11,115.

A party who is not himself injured thereby cannot defeat the title of the purchaser at a sale by auction of public land, by showing a combination to prevent competition in bidding.—Root v. Shields, Case No. 12,038.

After the lapse of five years, where the property has greatly depreciated in value, a bill cannot be maintained to set aside a sale by auction by defendant's agent on the ground of fraudulent by-bidding which enhanced the price, but which was without defendant's knowledge or connivance.—Veazie v. Williams, Case No. 16,907.

AUDITA QUERELA.

§ 1. Judgments subject to review.

The proper remedy for persons aggrieved by proceedings under a judgment obtained against a testator is an audita querela, or by obtaining a rule of court to stay proceedings.—Wilson v. Watson, Case No. 17,847.

Taxation of expenses for procuring, see "Costs," § 22.

I. IN CIVIL ACTIONS.

§ 1. When bail will be required.

Special bail may be required in cases of tort as well as in cases of contract, and without affidavit as to the true amount of the debt or damage.—Parkhurst v. Kinsman, Case No. 10,761.

Bail cannot be required of a feme covert in a civil action.—Henry v. Cornelius, Case No. 6,380.

Special bail will be required in an action of covenant for rent, upon a proper affidavit.—Wager v. Lear, Case No. 17,034.

Bail required in trespass for cutting up a scow.—Voss v. Tuel, Case No. 17,015.

Bail not required in debt on bond with collateral condition.—Barbour v. Russell, Case No. 971.

Special bail refused to be ordered in debt on a replevin bond, although there had been judgment for a return, etc.—Jenkins v. Porter, Case No. 7,274.

A defendant discharged under a state insolvent law may appear in the District of Columbia, and discharge an attachment, without giving special bail. — Davis v. Marshall, Case No. 3,641.

Defendant cannot appear to a chancery attachment in Virginia without giving bail.—Mayor and Commonalty v. Cooke, Case No. 9,358.

In a common-law attachment, under Act Va. Dec. 26, 1782, § 6, the court may, in its discretion, suffer the principal defendant to appear without bail at the first term after the return of the attachment, to plead to the jurisdiction, without discharging the attached effects.—Locke v. Cannon, Case No. 8,440.

In ordinary cases of libel, special bail is not required without some special reason other than the publication of the libel itself.—Withers v. Thornton, Case No. 17,918.

A resident of Alexandria may be held to special bail in Washington in an action of debt founded upon a judgment in an action of debt in Virginia in which bail was given, although no previous writ had been issued against the defendant in Alexandria county.—Gordon v. Lindo, Case No. 5,616.

Bail will not be required to be given by the defendant in an action by his immediate indorsee while another action is pending against him by a more remote indorsee, and it appears that the name of the plaintiff has been stricken from the note by the subsequent indorsee.—Johnson v. Harris, Case No. 7,387.

In an action upon a bond, where defendant offered to appear without bail, held, that he could not appear without bail until he should be committed for want of bail, when he might appear and plead in custody. — Aldridge v. Drummond, Case No. 156.

If bail has not been required upon the cap. ad resp., it will not be required upon setting aside the office judgment without affidavit.—Gordon v. Riddle, Case No. 5,619; Shean v. Towers, Id. 12,731.

Defendant will be held on bail, notwithstanding the discontinuance of an action for the same cause in the state court in which he was discharged on common bail, where the proceedings do not appear to be vexatious.—Parassel v. Gautier, Case No. 10,709.

Where defendant has been discharged under the state insolvent law from a debt contracted in the state, he will be discharged on common bail.—Read v. Chapman, Case No. 11,605.

Probable cause, on oath, must be set forth, to justify the court in holding defendant to special bail, under Act Feb. 26, 1795.—Leonard v. Caskin, Case No. 8,257.

Where there is no declaration, special bail will not be required unless plaintiff appears at the return of the writ.—Thompson v. Carenough, Case No. 13,947.

If defendant offers to appear on the calling of the appearance docket, time will not be given to procure an affidavit to hold him to special bail.—Meade v. Roberts, Case No. 9,374.

Defendant is entitled to the whole of the return term to give special bail.—Rhodes v. Brooke, Case No. 11,747.

In Virginia, special bail in an action of debt upon judgment rendered in one or the other states cannot be required by the indorsement of an attorney.—Wray v. Riley, Case No. 18,060.

§ 2. Waiver of bail.

By the Pennsylvania practice, filing the declaration before the return of the writ is not a waiver of bail.—Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Case No. 1,589.

§ 3. Proceedings in giving and taking bail.

If the affidavit to hold to bail is sufficient, the court will not, on a motion to appear without bail, inquire into the merits.—Laverty v. Snelling, Case No. 8,124; Lee v. Gamble, Id. 8,189; Parassel v. Gautier, Id. 10,709.

But a positive affidavit of debt does not preclude the court from inquiring into the cause of action.—Oliver v. Parish, Case No. 10,500.

To hold the defendant to bail in debt on a bond, the bond need not be produced until oyer demanded, if there be a sufficient affidavit of debt.—Day v. Hackley, Case No. 3,679.

§ 4. Affidavit or certificate to hold to bail.

An affidavit to hold to bail must be positive as to the indebtment. The opinion or belief of the affiant is insufficient.—Jolly v. Rankin, Case No. 7,440; Nelson v. Cutter, Id. 10,104; Smith v. Watson, Id. 13,124; Wright v. Cogswell, Id. 18,074.

But where there is such positive averment, the source of the knowledge need not be stated. —Postley v. Higgens, Case No. 11,304.

An affidavit to hold to bail in Ohio need not state that the affiant is a citizen of any other state.—Cooper v. Dungler, Case No. 3,192.

An affidavit in the form required by Act Md. 1729 held sufficient to hold defendant to bail in District of Columbia.—Graham v. Konkapot, Case No. 5,670.

The affidavit to hold to bail must show that the debt was due at the time of issuing the capias.—Hill v. Myers, Case No. 6,496.

An affidavit to hold to bail for assault and battery must state a specific injury and the amount of damages.—Mecklin v. Caldwell, Cases Nos. 9,388, 9,387.

Where, in slander, the affidavit is positive as to the damages sustained, it is not a valid objection thereto that the speaking of the words is averred on information and belief.—Stettinius v. Orme, Case No. 13,386.

Bail, in an action for slander, will be required where the words were maliciously uttered, and it appears that the defendant is a transitory person, and about to leave the district, although the plaintiff does not swear positively as to the damages.—Doyne v. Barker, Case No. 4,055.

In slander, appearance bail is not required if the affidavit does not state the words spoken, and that defendant is about to leave the district.—Lanstraaz v. Powers, Case No. 8,078.

In a suit upon protested bills of exchange, the court will not require an affidavit of the amount due upon the bills to hold defendant to special bail.—Robbins v. Upton, Case No. 11,886.

Where the plaintiff filed, as his cause of action, a promissory note of A., and an affidavit by an indifferent witness that B. acknowledged to him that he was a partner with A. in the transaction and equally liable for the debt, B. was held to bail.—Miller v. Wheaton, Case No. 9,595.

Affidavit that account "is just and true as stated, and no part thereof has been paid," is sufficient to hold defendant to bail.—Clarke v. Druet, Case No. 2,850.

An affidavit that defendant is justly indebted to plaintiff in a sum certain for goods sold and delivered to a third person upon defendant's written guaranty is sufficient to hold to bail.—Laverty v. Snelling, Case No. 8,124.

Where an account is headed, "A. to B., dr., for articles furnished by his direction, and he is to be answerable for the payment thereof," and an affidavit of the plaintiff is indorsed on the account "that the within account is just and true as stated," such account and affidavit are not a sufficient affidavit to hold to bail.—Travers v. Hight, Case No. 14,151.

In an action by an administrator, his affidavit "that the above account is truly extracted from the books of the deceased, and that he believes the same to be a just and true account, and that since the death of the intestate he has received no part thereof," is sufficient to hold to bail.—McLaughlin v. Johns, Case No. 8,871.

In an action upon the case for selling negroes out of the neighborhood contrary to agreement, the defendant will not be held to special bail upon an affidavit stating the breach of the agreement and the belief of the plaintiff that he has sustained damage to a certain amount.—Young v. Palmer, Case No. 18,170.

In an action for money lent, an affidavit to an account "that the above account, as stated, is just and true, and that the plaintiff has not received any part, parcel, or satisfaction for the same," but does not state that the plaintiff has received no security, is sufficient to hold to bail.—Young v. Moriaty, Case No. 18,167.

The affidavit to hold to bail must be strictly construed, and must state the indebtedness positively, and specify the exact amount due, leaving nothing to inference.—Robinson v. Holt, Case No. 11,955.

An affidavit charging defendant as follows: "1809, Oct. 5. To goods per bill, $19.89,"—is insufficient.—Bartleman v. Smarr, Case No. 1,074.

A certificate in the usual form, by the treasury officials, that a certain balance is due by the defendant to the United States, is not sufficient cause for bail.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,331.

§ 5. Motion to appear without bail or for discharge on common bail.

The court will not decide upon the merits, on a motion to appear without bail.—Day v. Hackley, Case No. 3,679.

A motion, made before the appearance day, to appear without bail, will not be heard if the defendant be not in actual custody.—Olive v. Mandeville, Case No. 10,488.

On motion to discharge on common bail, the court will not decide doubtful questions of citizenship, or the effect of a discharge in insolvency upon debts contracted in another state.—Knox v. Greenleaf, Case No. 7,909.

§ 6. Amount of bail and motions to reduce.

In an action upon the case for a libel, where the damages were laid at $20,000, and the plaintiff in his affidavit averred damages to the same amount, the court required the bail to justify to the amount of $500.—Mayo v. Smith, Case No. 9,355.

The ad damnum in the writ and the sum demanded in the declaration are guides to the sheriff; but the amount may be reduced on motion on affidavit showing it to be unreasonable.—Parkhurst v. Kinsman, Case No. 10,761.

If another suit is pending elsewhere for the same cause of action, special bail will be reduced to a nominal sum, or only common bail allowed.—Parkhurst v. Kinsman, Case No. 10,761.

In actions on the case for uncertain damages, the court will mitigate the bail according to circumstances.—Sanderson v. Serat, Case No. 12,300.

A set-off cannot be shown, to mitigate the amount of bail.—Robbins v. Upton, Case No. 11,886.

When a bond for the payment of money is filed, an affidavit to hold to bail is not necessary, and the court will not mitigate the bail upon affidavit that the whole is not due, nor receive as bail persons not resident in the district.—Lee v. Welch, Case No. 8,204.

On motion to reduce special bail the court will not decide the question of jurisdiction.—Parkhurst v. Kinsman, Case No. 10,761.

The administrator of appearance bail cannot be allowed to appear as appearance bail and plead for the principal.—Finley v. McCarthy, Case No. 4,794.

Bail residing in Alexandria county cannot be received in an action in Washington county.—Conningham v. Lacey, Case No. 3,116.

A recognizance of bail taken out of court is only de bene esse, and plaintiff may object to the sufficiency of the bail on return of the writ and recognizance.—Poe v. Mounger, Case No. 11,240.

If special bail be taken out of court by two justices of the peace by recognizance, there must be two sureties.—Thomas v. Elliot, Case No. 13,896.

No justification of bail is necessary where it is entered for the purpose of making a surrender.—Stockton v. Throgmorton, Case No. 13,463.

Marshal may justify appearance bail at second term after exception taken at the rules.—Brent v. Brashears, Case No. 1,836.

§ 9. Rights and liabilities of sureties.

Special bail for the stay of execution before a justice of the peace become liable to pay the debt in case it is not paid by the principal, or made out of his property, on the issuing of execution at the expiration of the stay; and nothing can discharge the bail except payment of the judgment.—Wilson v. Eads, Case No. 17,801a.

The engagements of special bail and appearance bail are of a different nature. Because the former may deliver up the principal before the second sci. fa., it does not follow the latter may do so.—Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Case No. 1,590.

The undertaking of the appearance bail can be fulfilled only by defendant's giving special bail, if so ruled, and that bail justifying, if excepted to.—Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Case No. 1,589.

Bail may follow their principal into another jurisdiction, and take him out of the custody of another person who has subsequently become bail in the latter jurisdiction.—Sharpless v. Knowles, Case No. 12,712.

See, also, post, § 11.

§ 10. Discharge or exoneration of sureties.

When bail become fixed, they cannot be discharged from liability, either by the surrender, bankruptcy, or arrest of the principal on a ca. sa.—Dowlin v. Standifer, Case No. 4,041a.

The discharge of the principal under the insolvent law discharges the bail.—Burns v. Sim, Case No. 2,184; Byrne v. Carpenter, Id. 2,271; Claggett v. Ward, Id. 2,780; King v. Simm, Id. 7,805.

Discharge of the principal under a commission of bankruptcy issued after return of sci. fa. against bail is no discharge of bail.—Bennet v. Alexander, Case No. 1,310.

Bail will not be exonerated upon scire facias, by the discharge of the principal under the insolvent act (2 Stat. 237), unless the discharge was before the appearance day of the first scire facias returned executed, or of the second returned nihil.—Munroe v. Towers, Case No. 9,930.

A discharge of the principal under an insolvent law is ineffectual to release the bail when not produced until the third term after the return of a sci. fa. against the bail.—Boyer v. The Wisconsin and The Hector, Case No. 1,756.

A note given by the bail, on being taken on execution, where the principal was discharged in insolvency before the bail was fixed, will be ordered to be canceled.—Bussard v. Warner, Case No. 2,229.

Where defendants are not liable to be imprisoned on the judgment, the special bail is not bound to surrender them in his discharge.—Beers v. Haughton, Case No. 1,230.

Bail is not discharged by a discontinuance of the suit at the rules, if it be reinstated.—Gadsby v. Miller, Case No. 5,167.

Bail are discharged by an amendment adding a cause of action which could not be given in evidence upon the original declaration, or which is not contained in the affidavit to hold to bail.—Hyer v. Smith, Case No. 6,979.

An amendment conforming the declaration to the cause of action upon which the bail was given will not authorize the discharge of the bail.—Carrington v. Ford, Case No. 2,449.

After scire facias returned, the bail will be exonerated if the principal be confined in the penitentiary of one of the states before any execution returned against him, and so continue to be confined until the return of the scire facias.—Wormsley v. Beedle, Case No. 18,049.

An exoneretur on the bail piece, on the ground that the defendant was confined in the hospital as a lunatic, refused.—Bowerbank v. Payne, Case No. 1,727.

The court will not receive, upon motion to exonerate bail, evidence of fraud in contracting the debt.—Burns v. Sim, Case No. 2,184.

A discharge of the appearance bail, arrested upon a joint ca. sa. against him and his principal, does not release the principal.—Watson v. Summers, Case No. 17,289.

§ 11. Surrender of principal.

Bail cannot surrender their principal before a judge at chambers.—Baxter v. Biays, Case No. 1,123.

On surrendering his principal, the bail must give notice to the creditor.—Maynadier v. Wroe, Case No. 9,351.

A surrender of the principal will not be received after the return term of the sci. fa. against the bail.—Boyer v. Herty, Case No. 1,753.

The court will not relieve the appearance bail, upon his delivering the principal in court, unless he put in and perfect special bail.—Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Case No. 1,590.

If the special bail surrender the principal, who has been discharged under an insolvent law, the court will discharge the principal from custody.—Richardson v. McIntyre, Case No. 11,789.

Where, in such case, he has given special bail, the court will order an exoneretur to be entered on the bail piece.—Richardson v. McIntyre, Case No. 11,789.

Upon surrender of the debtor upon a ca. sa., the court will not, without motion, order him to be committed in execution.—Peter v. Suter, Case No. 11,021.

Where two become bail jointly and severally, and two writs of sci. fa. are issued, and one of the bail surrenders the principal, he must pay the costs upon both writs.—Pennington v. Thornton, Case No. 10,939a.

Where the marshal had refused to permit the bail to seize his principal in court, held, that the court would not interfere to authorize such seizure.—Smith v. Catlett, Case No. 13,021.

§ 12. Motion to quash bail bond.

A motion to quash the bail bond, under the statute of Illinois, may be made at any time during the return term, as well after as before judgment.—Postley v. Higgens, Case No. 11,304.

§ 13. Proceedings to enforce bonds or recognizances.

It is not necessary in a suit on a bail bond to state defendants to be citizens of a different state from that of plaintiff.—Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Case No. 1,592.

To a suit by the assignees on the bail bond, defendant may plead that the principal was not a citizen of another state, as laid in the original declaration. — Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Case No. 1,592.

Proper conclusions to a replication of nul tiel record.—Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Case No. 1,591.

A replication nul tiel record to a plea comperuit ad diem in an action by the assignee of a bail bond presents an issue.—Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Case No. 1,591.

The plea of comperuit ad diem affirms a legal appearance. — Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, Case No. 1,591.

That no ca. sa. was issued against the principal held a good plea in bar in sci. fa. against bail.—Bernard v. McKenna, Case No. 1,348.

In an action on the recognizance, the bail may plead discharge of principals under state insolvent laws.—Beers v. Haughton, Case No. 1,230.

In sci. fa. against bail, interest not allowed on judgment rendered against principal.—Anonymous, Case No. 433.

Material variance between record of recognizance and recital of it in sci. fa. is fatal.—Barnes v. Lee, Case No. 1,017.

The writ in the original suit cannot be set aside after judgment on motion in an action on the bail bond.—Hall v. Singer, Case No. 5,946.

II. IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

§ 14. Right to release on bail.

Every person not committed for treason or felony is entitled to the benefit of the prison bounds upon giving security.—United States v. Wise, Case No. 16,746.

Flight while under bail during trial on indictment for one of a series of crimes held to forfeit the privilege of liberation on recommitment to answer other charges.—Lee's Case, Case No. 8,180.

Notwithstanding such flight, where it appears that the punishment could be but nominal, and the imprisonment pending trial would be unreasonable, held, that the prisoner should be admitted to bail.—Lee's Case, Case No. 8,180.

A person accused should be retained in custody, or required to give security for his appearance, while his examination is pending, but only on evidence sufficient to furnish probable cause.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,693.

The announcement of readiness to proceed to trial at the close of the term before adjournment will not entitle the prisoner to be released on bail, where he had previously obtained a postponement on the ground of absence of witnesses. —United States v. Stewart, Case No. 16,401.

On testimony given in court on the return of habeas corpus, bail will be allowed if it is clear that a conviction of murder should not take place.—United States v. Marshal of the District of Columbia, Case No. 15,726a.

Security by a recognizance may be taken for fine and costs in Washington county, D. C.— United States v. Hilliard, Case No. 15,367.

Act July 17, 1862, giving the courts authority, in their discretion, to impose fines and imprisonment, instead of death, as punishment for treason, makes the offense bailable.—Case of Davis, Case No. 3,621a.

Prisoners, even when charged with piracy, will be admitted to bail if suffering under a disease which may be ultimately dangerous from continued confinement. — United States v. Jones, Case No. 15,495.

Pending the hearing of a motion for new trial on conviction as a common scold, defendant was required to give bail for appearance and for good behavior.—United States v. Royall, Case No. 16,202.

§ 15. Amount of bail.

Where the indictment does not describe an indictable offense, the magistrate has a discretion as to the amount of bail, and is not criminally liable for taking insufficient bail.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,330.

A bond to secure the appearance of a person charged with two distinct offenses, taken for the aggregate amount, is invalid.—United States v. Goldstein's Sureties, Case No. 15,226.

To require larger bail than the prisoner can give is, in effect, to refuse bail.—United States v. Lawrence, Case No. 15,577.

§ 16. Jurisdiction and authority to admit to bail.

On preliminary examination, prima facie evidence of guilt is sufficient to hold to bail until the offense may be examined by a grand jury.— United States v. Cobb, Case No. 14,820.

Where, after conviction, time is granted to prepare a case and move in arrest of judgment, the court has no authority to take bail in the meantime.—United States v. Devlin, Case No. 14,955.

Where an indictment has been found the court will not examine the evidence, for the purpose of taking bail.—United States v. Jones, Case No. 15,495.

The magistrate's discretion in taking bail in a criminal case is to be guided by a consideration of the ability of the prisoner to give bail, and the atrocity of the offense.—United States v. Lawrence, Case No. 15,577.

A United States commissioner, as respects the taking of bail, has the same power as the state magistrate, and no greater.—United States v. Horton, Case No. 15,393.

A United States commissioner has power to let to bail one brought before him on a criminal complaint, pending the proceeding, in those states where justices of the peace have a similar power.—United States v. Rundlett, Case No. 16,208.

A commissioner in New York has no authority to take bail for the appearance of a party accused, for examination before himself at a future day.—United States v. Case, Case No. 14,742.

Where a United States commissioner adjourns the examination of a prisoner for a longer time than that allowed by the local law, a recognizance taken for his appearance is invalid, and the prisoner and his sureties are not estopped from setting up the want of jurisdiction.—United States v. Horton, Case No. 15,393.

On arresting one for misdemeanor, the marshal is not required to take the bail bond himself, but may take the prisoner to a justice, to give bail.—United States v. Milburn, Case No. 15,765.

Where a prisoner is in the custody of the military power in a region subject to martial law, the judge of a civil court cannot hear an application to admit the prisoner to bail until the legality of the military custody has been inquired into, by means of an application for a writ of habeas corpus.—Case of Davis, Case No. 3,621a.

§ 17. Bond, undertaking, or recognizance.

The recognizance need not state the particular charge on which the party is under arrest and to which he is to appear.—United States v. Atwill, Case No. 14,475; Same v. De Grieff, Id. 14,935a; Same v. George, Id. 15,199.

A condition that defendant should appear "to answer to the charge of stealing from the mail of the U. S., contrary to the statute of the U. S. in such case made and provided," held sufficient.—United States v. Dennis, Case No. 14,949.

A recognizance is sufficiently certain if it sets out an act punishable by the statute, without any of the particulars.—United States v. Dennis, Case No. 14,949.

The material parts of the obligation and the condition in a recognizance should be set forth in the body, so as to admit of extension, consistently with its terms.—Dillingham v. United States, Case No. 3,913.

An acknowledgment without the signatures of the parties certified by a justice of the peace is all that is required to make a recognizance valid and obligatory.—United States v. Pickett, Case No. 16,043.

A recognizance of bail is not objectionable because embracing the amounts required upon two separate indictments.—United States v. Reese, Case No. 16,138.

Where the accused is admitted to bail pending consideration of objections to the indictment, the recognizance is a binding obligation, though the indictment be eventually adjudged void.—United States v. Reese, Case No. 16,138.

A bond signed by a third person, whose name did not appear in the body thereof after its execution by defendant and another, does not import a joint liability, and a joint action cannot be sustained thereon.—United States v. Pickett, Case No. 16,043.

A recognizance of bail taken out of court is only de bene esse, and does not discharge the marshal.—Bennett v. Pendleton, Case No. 1,322.

§ 18. Breach of bond or recognizance.

A person under recognizance to appear at a certain place at a certain hour is not in default before the expiration of that hour, and he is not bound to appear elsewhere.—United States v. Rundlett, Case No. 16,208.

Upon a recognizance for the appearance of defendant in a case of misdemeanor, he is bound to appear on the first day of the term.—United States v. Hodgkin, Case No. 15,375.

The cognizor must be called at the time and place when and where he was bound to answer, and an entry made of his default on the minutes of the commissioner, which he returns to the court, to show a breach of the condition of the recognizance.—United States v. Rundlett, Case No. 16,208.

Money voluntarily paid to a marshal in satisfaction of forfeited recognizances is not within the custody or summary jurisdiction of the court.—In re Corlies, Case No. 3,232.

§ 19. Relief from forfeiture and motions to remit.

Where a recognizance to appear for trial is forfeited, but the accused appears at a subsequent term, the court may suspend the recognizance, for good cause shown by the accused why he did not comply with its condition.—United States v. Feely, Case No. 15,082.

A motion to remit the forfeiture of a recognizance on the ground that the party, when called, was in the custody of a state officer, under warrant issued out of the state court, will be denied on the ground that the question can be best determined on the trial of the action on the forfeited recognizance.—United States v. Stricker, Case No. 16,410.

A motion to set aside a forfeiture of a recognizance given for appearance to answer an indictment, on the ground of irregularities, will be denied, where defendant is a fugitive from justice.—United States v. Stien, Case No. 16,403.

Where defendant absconded, and the trial proceeded in his absence, and he was acquitted, held, that the estreat would be set aside on application of the bail.—United States v. Santos, Case No. 16,222.

Where the recognizance of one indicted for smuggling was forfeited, but afterwards defendant appeared and was tried, and the jury were discharged as unable to agree, held, that the forfeiture would not be remitted, the court deeming the defendant guilty and the punishment deserved.—United States v. Mercer, Case No. 15,758.

The court cannot remit the forfeiture of a recognizance in a criminal case after the term in which it was entered.—United States v. Cookendorfer, Case No. 14,856.

The federal courts have power, even after judgment on a recognizance, to relieve the surety, where he is without fault in the escape of the prisoner. (Act Feb. 28, 1838.)—United States v. Duncan, Case No. 15,004.

§ 20. Discharge of bond or recognizance.

A recognizance to appear to answer to a certain indictment, and not to depart without the leave of the court, is not discharged by the quashing of the indictment, and if a new indictment is found the bail remain liable for his principal's appearance to answer such new indictment.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,678.

§ 21. Discharge or exoneration of sureties.

Subsequent detention for additional security, and subsequent arrest to compel the prisoner to keep the securities good, will not release the sureties.—United States v. Atwill, Case No. 14,475.

The subsequent arrest, conviction, and imprisonment of the principal on process from a state court, out of the jurisdiction of the district, is no defense to sureties on a recognizance given to the United States.—United States v. Van Fossen, Case No. 16,607.

The death of the principal after default and forfeiture of his recognizance does not exonerate his sureties.—United States v. Van Fossen, Case No. 16,607.

§ 22. Actions on bonds or recognizances.

In a declaration on a recognizance, where the officer taking it has jurisdiction over cases of the general description named therein, it is not necessary to aver the existence of the particular facts showing the authority of the officer to take it.—United States v. George, Case No. 15,199.

A declaration on a recognizance should state that the recognizance was filed in court.—United States v. Atwill, Case No. 14,475.

A declaration upon a forfeited recognizance given in a criminal proceeding may be amended in the discretion of the court.—United States v. George, Case No. 15,199.

A material variance between the warrant and the recognizance set forth in the declaration and those given in evidence is fatal.—Dillingham v. United States, Case No. 3,913.

In an action on the recognizance, it must be clearly proved that the party was called and warned, and neglected to appear.—Dillingham v. United States, Case No. 3,913.

It is not sufficient to aver and prove aliunde that the cognizor had in fact absconded, and did not intend to appear, and could not have appeared if he had been called.—United States v. Rundlett, Case No. 16,208.

BAILMENT.

§ 1, Nature and elements. § 2, Title and rights to property. § 3, Care of property. § 4, Negligence of bailee. § 5, Conversion by bailee. § 6, Compensation of bailor. § 7, Redelivery to bailor. § 8, Actions.

See, also, "Banks and Banking," §§ 9, 11, 19; "Carriers," §§ 2–36; "Innkeepers"; "Pledges"; "Warehousemen."

Contracts of bailment or sale, see "Sales," § 3. Embezzlement or larceny by bailee, see "Embezzlement."

§ 1. Nature and elements.

A bank requested another bank to loan money for it, and to make a proper charge therefor. The latter made the loan, but did not intend to charge therefor. Such intention was not communicated, but no charge was made in the running account between the banks. Held, that the bank was not a gratuitous bailee as to securities deposited to secure the loan.—Second Nat. Bank v. Ocean Nat. Bank, Case No. 12,602.

§ 2. Title and rights to property.

A sale by the bailee will not pass title to the property.—Stump v. Roberts, Case No. 13,561.

The bailor of wool and yarn to be manufactured into cloth at a specified price has a right to the unfinished product on the bankruptcy of the bailee, on an offer to the assignee, to pay the charges, without actual tender.—Aborn v. Mason, Case No. 19.

The delivery of the manufactured cloth to the person furnishing the yarn passes title, though the manufacturer furnished the filling, and was to have a share in the product for his labor.—Buffum v. Merry, Case No. 2,112.

§ 3. Care of property.

One hiring a horse is bound to take such care of him as a prudent man would of his own.—Laub v. Lansdale, Case No. 8,118.

A direction to remit, by mail or some responsible person, the proceeds of notes sent for collection, is complied with by sending the money by a trustworthy youth 18 years old, who had transacted business for himself for two years, and the collector is not responsible where the youth's pocketbook containing such money is stolen.—Pelham v. Pace, Case No. 10,911a.

A person who hires a steamboat to tow another vessel is not liable for an injury thereto sustained in the course of the navigation and not caused by the negligence of those in charge.—Reeves v. The Constitution, Case No. 11,659.

Gross negligence of bailee is to be considered with reference to the nature of the goods committed to his care.—Tracy v. Wood, Case No. 14,130.

A gratuitous bailee is guilty of gross negligence if he omits that reasonable care which persons in the like situation exercise or which he is accustomed to exercise in like cases.—Tracy v. Wood, Case No. 14,130.

An action against an attorney at law for negligence in failing to collect a promissory note must be brought in the name of the legal owner, though a receipt therefor was given to another.—Sevier v. Holliday, Case No. 12,680a.

The question of negligence of a bailee, as a general rule, is one of fact for the jury.—Tracy v. Wood, Case No. 14,130.

One who hires property of another is answerable only for such injuries thereto as are caused by the omission of that care which a man of common prudence would have taken in his own concerns.—Reeves v. The Constitution, Case No. 11,659.

Where defendant had sold complainant a bill of exchange, and kept it as security for its price, and the drawers became bankrupt, and defendant failed to recover the dividends on the draft, he was liable for any loss resulting.—Childs v. Corp, Case No. 2,677.

One to whom the note of a third person is loaned is liable where the amount is lost through his failure to use reasonable diligence to collect it.—Higbie v. Hopkins, Case No. 6,466.

§ 5. Conversion by bailee.

A person who hires a slave, and carries her out of the state without the consent of the owner, whereby she is lost, is liable for her value.—Semmes v. Sherburne, Case No. 12,656.

The recovery of a judgment for the hire of a slave to a period subsequent to the commencement of an action of trover to recover for her loss will bar the action of trover.—Semmes v. Sherburne, Case No. 12,656.

§ 6. Compensation of bailor.

The person who obtains possession of the slave of another is responsible for hire, although the slave ran away before expiration of the time, and the bailee be liable for his loss.—Janes v. Buzzard, Case No. 7,206a.

A person who hires a slave for a fixed term must pay the stipulated price, though he lose the service of the slave by his arrest and imprisonment for theft during the term.—Scott v. Bartleman, Case No. 12,524.

§ 7. Redelivery to bailor.

The acceptance on a redelivery on demand of property which has been placed with another for repairs or additions thereto does not admit that the services have been performed as agreed.—The Isaac Newton, Case No. 7,089.

§ 8. Actions.

Though a bailor does not own property bailed, yet, there being no privity of contract between the owner and bailee, and the bailor having, as between himself and the bailee, represented the interests of the owner, the bailor may sue the bailee for loss of the property.—White v. Commonwealth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,544.

The bailor of goods to be manufactured can recover the proceeds of a sale by the assignee in bankruptcy of the bailee less the expenses of manufacture.—Aborn v. Mason, Case No. 19.

I. CONSTITUTIONALITY AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

See, also, post, § 515.

§ 1. The constitutional grant.

The power given by the constitution to congress to regulate bankruptcy comprehends both voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy. Case No. 7,866 reversed.—In re Klein, Case No. 7,865.

Congress has a complete constitutional authority to enact a bankrupt act, giving to the district and circuit courts full jurisdiction in law and equity.—Mitchell v. Great Works Mill. & Mfg. Co., Case No. 9,662.

The power of congress to establish uniform bankruptcy laws is not limited to acts similar in scope to those in force in England at the adoption of the constitution, but is plenary over the subject of bankruptcy.—Silverman's Case, Case No. 12,855.

Under the bankruptcy clause, any and all uniform legislation tending to promote the distribution of an insolvent's estate among his creditors, and his discharge from their demands, is within the power of congress.—Silverman's Case, Case No. 12,855.

Congress has no power to vest jurisdiction in the state tribunals to carry into effect the bankrupt law.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,885; Mitchell v. Great Works Mill. & Mfg. Co., Id. 9,662.

Congress is not prohibited by the constitution from passing laws violating the obligations of contracts, and hence Act 1841 (5 Stat. 440), which provides that a bankrupt may be discharged from his debts contracted before its passage, is constitutional. Case No. 7,866 reversed.—In re Klein, Case No. 7,865.

Congress has power to destroy any lien upon property of the bankrupt, whether created by contract, by statute, or by judgment.—In re Jordan, Case No. 7,514; Id. 7,515.

Act March 3, 1873 (17 Stat. 577), is constitutional as to all cases where petition in bankruptcy is filed after the passage of the act.—In re Everitt, Case No. 4,579.

The bankrupt law is not rendered unconstitutional by reason of the want of uniformity in the exemptions allowed in different states.—In re Jordan, Case No. 7,514.

Act June 22, 1874, § 17, providing for compositions, is constitutional and valid.—In re Reiman, Case No. 11,673; Id. 11,675, affirming Case No. 11,674.

The provisions of Act 1867 which apply to persons other than merchants and traders and apply to corporations are not unconstitutional.—In re California Pac. R. Co., Case No. 2,315.

Act 1867, § 44, punishing the fraudulent disposition of the goods of a debtor, obtained on credit, and remaining unpaid for within three months next before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, is within the power of congress, as a law "necessary and proper" for carrying the bankrupt law into effect.—United States v. Pusey, Case No. 16,098.

States may pass bankrupt laws in absence of action by congress.—Adams v. Storey, Case No. 66. CONTRA, see Golden v. Prince, Case No. 5,509.

Act Pa. March 13, 1812, is unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of a contract, and because congress have exclusively the power to pass a bankrupt law.—Golden v. Prince, Case No. 5,509.

§ 2. When bankruptcy acts take effect.

Act 1841 is inoperative as to transactions occurring before Feb. 1, 1842, the date when it went into effect.—In re Horton, Case No. 6,708.

The date of the passage of Act 1841, as referred to in section 4 thereof, means after the date of the approval thereof, August 19, 1841, and not after the day when it was to go fully into operation.—In re Tebbetts, Case No. 13,817.

The meaning of the word "future," in Act 1841, § 2, cl. 1, is future with reference to the passage of the act.—Hutchins v. Taylor, Case No. 6,953.

The meaning of the word "future," in Act 1841, § 2 [5 Stat. 442], is future with reference to the day on which the act was to take effect.—In re Chadwick, Case No. 2,569.

A general assignment with preferences, made after the passage of Act 1841, but before it was to go into operation, is an act of bankruptcy.—Hutchins v. Taylor, Case No. 6,953.

The clause in Act 1841, relative to assignments, etc., made by a debtor after the 1st day of January, 1841, gives retrospective effect only as to voluntary bankruptcy.—Hutchins v. Taylor, Case No. 6,953.

Act March 2, 1867, was operative from the date of its passage, though proceedings thereunder were necessarily postponed until the appointment of officers and the adoption of rules.—Perry v. Langley, Case No. 11,006.

A deed of trust recorded on March 2, 1867, the date of the approval of the bankrupt act, is not avoided thereby.—In re Wynne, Case No. 18,117.

The amendatory act of June 22, 1874, went into effect from the first hour of the day of its approval, and not from the time of the actual signing by the president.—In re Carrier, Case No. 2,443; In re Williams, Id. 17,700.

§ 3. Rules of construction.

American bankruptcy laws have differed from the English in that they apply to any debtor, while the English law is applicable only to fraudulent traders.—In re Klein, Case No. 7,865.

The bankrupt act is remedial, and should be construed with a view to effect its objects, and promote justice between a debtor and his creditors.—In re Muller, Case No. 9,912.

In construing the bankruptcy law, the federal courts are not bound by decisions of state courts upon a similar insolvent law.—In re Knight, Case No. 7,880.

Distinction between insolvent and bankrupt laws.—Adams v. Storey, Case No. 66.

The act of June 22, 1874, must be considered as supplementary and amendatory to the provisions of the Revised Statutes on the subject of bankruptcy. Case No. 10,558 reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

Congress did not intend by Act June 22, 1874, to validate contracts void under the original act, or to affect contracts theretofore made, or the substantial rights of parties acquired under the original law.—Hamlin v. Pettibone, Case No. 5,995.

The amendments of June 22, 1874, do not apply to involuntary proceedings commenced, but not determined, prior to December 1, 1873.—Singer v. Sloan, Case No. 12,899; Hamlin v. Pettibone, Id. 5,995.

Where a substantial averment in the petition is lacking to give jurisdiction, the proceedings will not be considered as commenced within the exception of the amendatory act of 1874.—In re Burch, Case No. 2,138.

The amendment of June 22, 1874, did not annul or disturb judgments rendered or adjudications made or in force at the time it took effect.—In re O'Bear, Case No. 10,395; In re Pickering, Id. 11,120.

An adjudication after the passage of the amendatory act of June 22, 1874, where the petition was filed before such amendment, must be in accordance therewith.—In re Taylor, Case No. 13,776.

A petition on which issue was taken and a jury had rendered a defective special verdict, without a general verdict, at the time the amended act of June 22, 1874, was enacted, should be considered as a pending case, to which the retroactive provisions of the amended act applied.—In re King, Case No. 7,782.

The validity of an act alleged to be preferential in its character and which took place prior to December, 1873, must be tried according to Act 1867. Act June 22, 1874, § 12.—Oxford Iron Co. v. Slafter, Case No. 10,637.

The amendment of June 22, 1874, is inapplicable to a suit in equity by the assignee to recover a fraudulent preference in compulsory proceedings commenced prior to December 1, 1873.—Thomas v. Woodbury, Case No. 13,916.

The rights of the assignee to sue to set aside conveyance by bankrupt are not affected by Act June 22, 1874, when the adjudication of bankruptcy was passed before the amendments were adopted.—Barnewall v. Jones, Case No. 1,027.

The amendatory act of June 22, 1874, in reference to the rights of assignees to recover property transferred in contravention of Act 1867, and in reference to the proof of debts by creditors who have taken a preference, does not apply to proceedings commenced before its passage.—In re Lee, Case No. 8,179.

The amendment of Act 1867, by Act June 22, 1874, controls cases in which conveyance was made before the passage of such amendatory act, provided there was no judicial passage on the conveyance previous to the amendment.—Bradbury v. Galloway, Case No. 1,764. But see Boothe v. Brooks, Case No. 1,650.

The amendment of June 22, 1874, respecting the number and amount of petitioners, does not apply to a case in which the adjudication was entered before the passage of the act, as the adjudication is a decree of the court and is beyond legislative control.—In re Angell, Case No. 386; Barnert v. Hightower, Id. 1,009; In re Comstock, Id. 3,077.

Act June 1874, § 10, as an amendment to Act 1867, changing the period from four to two months, is not retrospective in its operation, and does not affect transactions happening before the time fixed for it to take effect.—Bradbury v. Galloway, Case No. 1,764.

The amendment of June 22, 1874, reducing the time within which conveyances, preferences, etc., are to be invalidated, and giving section 10 of the amended act no force until after the expiration of the two and three months, respectively, does not interfere with past transactions so far as time was an element. Case No. 12,899, affirmed.—Singer v. Sloan, Case No. 12,898.

Act June, 1874, § 11, substituting "knowing" for "reasonable cause to believe," does not affect transactions happening before December 1, 1873, in cases where bankruptcy proceedings were begun before that date.—Bradbury v. Galloway, Case No. 1,764; Tinker v. Van Dyke, Id. 14,058, affirming Case No. 16,849; Brooke v. McCraken, Case No. 1,932.

Act of June 22, 1874, which amends Act 1867, § 35, by inserting "knowing," applies to cases brought after the amendment, though the instrument creating the alleged preference was executed before that time. Case No. 12,899 affirmed.—Singer v. Sloan, Case No. 12,898.

In an action by trustees under Act 1867, § 39, to recover money paid by the bankrupt as a preference, commenced prior to December 1, 1873, the amendment of June 22, 1874, requiring proof that the creditor knew that the payment was made to him in fraud of the act, is not applicable. Case No. 16,849, affirmed.—Tinker v. Van Dyke, Case No. 14,058.

The amendment of June 22, 1874, to Act 1867, § 39, was not retroactive as to cases which, though commenced since December 1, 1873, had passed to an adjudication prior to June 22, 1874. Case No. 8,235 affirmed.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,231.

Act July 27, 1868, is retroactive.—In re Billing, Case No. 1,408.

The amendments of July 22, 1868 (15 Stat. 227), and July 14, 1870 (16 Stat. 276), to Act 1867 (14 Stat. 517), extend the time as to the operation of the provisions of the second clause of section 33 as if the original act had in this respect been passed January 1, 1869.—In re Hershman, Case No. 6,430.

Act June 22, 1874, § 9, concerning the conditions upon which a discharge is to be granted, applies to cases pending when the act was passed.—In re Griffiths, Case No. 5,825; In re King, Id. 7,781; In re Francke, Id. 5,045, reversing Case No. 5,046; Singer v. Sloan, Case No. 12,898, affirming Case No. 12,899. CONTRA, see In re Perkins, Case No. 10,983.

Where the right to discharge was barred by limitation under Act 1867, § 29, prior to the amendatory act of June 22, 1874, section 9 of the latter act does not remove the bar. Case No. 8,576 affirmed.—In re Lowenstein, Case No. 8,573.

The amendatory act of June 8, 1872, is prospective, but it may be availed of in all pending cases where assets are undistributed and the exemption can be granted without prejudice to the interest already vested before the passage of the act.—In re Wyllie, Case No. 18,112.

The amendment of March 3, 1873, in relation to exemptions, is not unconstitutional as applied to existing liens.—In re Jordan, Case No. 7,514; Id. 7,515.

Act March 3, 1873, in relation to exemptions, is constitutional in cases where petition is filed after passage of such act, and in such cases wherein the petition is filed before its passage, where, after the passage, there remains in the hands of the bankruptcy court an unappropriated fund.—In re Kean, Case No. 7,630.

The amendatory act of March 3, 1873, which provides that the exemptions allowed the bankrupt by Act June 8, 1872, shall be the amount allowed by constitution and laws of each state, respectively, as existing in the year 1871, and that "such exemptions shall be valid against debts contracted before the adoption and passage of such state constitution and laws, as well as those contracted after the same," etc., is constitutional.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,986.

A bankrupt filing a voluntary petition after the passage of Act March 3, 1873, is entitled to exemptions "as existing in the place of his domicile on the first day of January, 1871," even as against judgments rendered prior to the state act increasing the exemption.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,986.

§ 5. Repealing acts.

The repeal of the bankrupt law of 1800 by Act Dec. 19, 1803, bars a criminal prosecution thereunder.—Anonymous, Case No. 475; United States v. Passmore, Id. 16,005.

The statute repealing Act 1841 took effect the first moment of the day it was approved, which was March 3, 1843, and a petition presented and filed on that day is of no effect.—In re Howes, Case No. 6,788; In re Welman, Id. 17,407. CONTRA, see In re Ankrim, Case No. 395; In re Richardson, Id. 11,777.

The original act of 1867 and all the acts amendatory thereof, except June 22, 1874, were superseded by the title "Bankruptcy" of the Revised Statutes and repealed by section 5596. Case No. 10,558 reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

Act June 22, 1874, did not repeal any part of Rev. St. § 5112, or any prior enactment embodied therein, except the provision requiring "fifty percentum of such assets."—In re Sheldon, Case No. 12,747.

Act June 22, 1874, § 17, in providing a remedy by composition, does not operate to repeal the general provisions of Act 1867.—In re Jacobs, Case No. 7,159.

The repealing clause in Act June 22, 1874, does not affect suits by assignees then pending. —Hamlin v. Pettibone, Case No. 5,995.

The repeal of the bankrupt act does not prevent the assignee from suing to reduce the property of the bankrupt to possession.—Carr v. Hilton, Case No. 2,436.

§ 6. Effect upon state insolvent laws and proceedings thereunder.

The bankrupt law of 1841, upon going into operation in February, 1842, ipso facto, suspended all action upon future cases arising under state insolvent laws, where the insolvent persons were within the purview of the bankrupt law. —Ex parte Eames, Case No. 4,237.

State insolvent laws, which merely protect the person from imprisonment, and do not affect the contract, are not suspended by the bankrupt act. (Act 1841.)—Sullivan v. Hieskill, Case No. 13,594.

Cases pending under state insolvent laws when Act 1841 came into operation are not affected thereby.—In re Holmes, Case No. 6,633.

State insolvent laws in force at the time of the passage of Act 1867 are suspended thereby in so far as the provisions of the latter cover the subject-matter of the former.—In re Reynolds, Case No. 11,723.

Act 1867 does not devest the state power to pass laws for winding up the estate of insolvent corporations. The jurisdiction conferred upon the bankruptcy court in this respect is superior to, but not exclusive of, that of the state laws. —Chandler v. Siddle, Case No. 2,594.

Act La. March 14, 1842, in relation to the liquidation of banks, held in effect a bankrupt law, and superseded by the bankruptcy act of 1867.—Thornhill v. Bank of Louisiana, Case No. 13,990; Id. 13,992.

The Louisiana laws relating to insolvency, insolvent debtors, etc., were superseded by the bankruptcy act of 1867.—Thornhill v. Bank of Louisiana, Case No. 13,990; Id. 13,992.

Act N. Y. April 3, 1811, is an insolvent and not a bankrupt law.—Adams v. Storey, Case No. 66.

II. PETITION, ADJUDICATION, AND WARRANT.

(A) JURISDICTION AND COURSE OF PROCEDURE IN GENERAL.

1. Jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction on appeal, see post, § 681.

§ 7. In general.

Courts of bankruptcy derive all their jurisdiction from the act creating them.—Jobbins v. Montague, Case No. 7,330.

Under the bankrupt act of 1841, c. 9 (5 Stat. 440), the circuit and district courts have full jurisdiction in equity, in respect to all cases arising in bankruptcy, to do all which is necessary and proper to accomplish the entire settlement and distribution of the bankrupt's estate, whether the proceedings be formal or summary. —Mitchell v. Great Works Mill. & Mfg. Co., Case No. 9,662.

Authority for the complete administration of the bankruptcy system exists in the district courts under the acts of 1841 and 1867.—Watson v. Lemar, Case No. 17,287; Goodall v. Tuttle, Id. 5,533.

The jurisdiction of federal courts in bankruptcy is exclusive in all matters arising under the bankrupt act of 1867.—In re Barrow, Case No. 1,057.

The jurisdiction of the federal courts in bankruptcy is exclusive, and the jurisdiction of the state courts over insolvent corporations is at an end when the corporation is adjudged a bankrupt.—Watson v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, Case No. 17,279.

The federal district courts, sitting in bankruptcy, have general equity jurisdiction, without previous notice to the adverse party.—Ex parte Carlton, Case No. 2,415.

Act 1867, § 2, relates exclusively to the jurisdiction of the circuit courts, and its provisions cannot be referred to to limit the jurisdiction of the district courts conferred by section 1 of such act.—Goodall v. Tuttle, Case No. 5,533.

The jurisdiction of the bankrupt court is not affected by the fact that an assignment for the benefit of creditors under the state law had been made prior to the adjudication.—Pool v. McDonald, Case No. 11,268.

The fact that the state is a creditor does not affect the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. —In re Greenville & C. R. Co., Case No. 5,787.

The circuit court has no jurisdiction of a bill in equity filed by creditors before the appointment of an assignee to restrain a chattel mortgagee in possession from disposing of the goods of an alleged bankrupt.—Johnson v. Price, Case No. 7,407.

Under Act 1867, the federal district courts have jurisdiction, both in law and equity.—In re Fendley, Case No. 4,728.

The district court, when sitting as a court of bankruptcy, should not decline jurisdiction of a case within its jurisdiction, as such, on the ground that the claim might have been presented in the district or circuit court sitting in equity.—Norris' Case, Case No. 10,304.

The district courts have no power to make general rules under Act 1867, such power being vested in the United States supreme court by section 10 of such act.—In re Kennedy, Case No. 7,699.

Notice to all creditors is not necessary to give the bankruptcy court full and complete jurisdiction as to all debts of the bankrupt; such jurisdiction is acquired by petition, adjudication, and warrant.—In re Archenbrown, Case No. 504.

All the orders and proceedings must be by the judge to whom the application is made.—Connelly's Case, Case No. 3,111.

A district judge has no jurisdiction in bankruptcy, virtute officiorum, but only from the statutes.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

A decree of bankruptcy, and an order for the discharge of the bankrupt, must be made in court and not at chambers. (Act 1841.)—In re Johnson, Case No. 7,368.

§ 8. As dependent upon character of parties—Alien and nonresidents.

An alien residing in the United States may be adjudged a bankrupt on his own petition, regardless of his length of residence.—In re Goodfellow, Case No. 5,536.

In order to give the bankruptcy court jurisdiction the debtor must reside within the jurisdiction of the United States when the petition is filed.—In re Burton, Case No. 2,214.

§ 9. —— Infants.

An infant is entitled to the benefit of the bankrupt act, and the proceedings may be had in his own name.—In re Book, Case No. 1,637.

The bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction to make an adjudication against one who was an infant at the time of filing the petition; and a petition by the bankrupt, after he comes of age, for a confirmation of the proceedings, cannot give jurisdiction. (Act 1867.)—In re Derby, Case No. 3,815.

§ 10. —— Married women.

The district court will consider the state statutes and decisions in applying the bankrupt law to married women.—In re Goodman, Case No. 5,540.

It seems that in a state where a feme covert may be sued upon her contracts she may be declared a bankrupt.—In re O'Brien, Case No. 10,397.

In Indiana a petition in bankruptcy will not lie against a married woman where it is not shown that she has a separate estate.—In re Goodman, Case No. 5,540.

A married woman living separate and apart in California may be adjudged a bankrupt, as, under the state laws, she is liable to suit for her indebtedness.—In re Lyons, Case No. 8,649.

In Illinois a married woman may be a voluntary as well as an involuntary bankrupt.—In re Collins, Case No. 3,006.

§ 11. —— Executors.

An executorship for the limited purpose of winding up testator's business, and to carry on the same for such purpose, cannot be administered under Act 1867.—Graves v. Winter, Case No. 5,710.

§ 12. —— Corporations.

Any corporation created for the purpose of carrying on any lawful business defined by its charter, and clothed with power to do so, for gain, is amenable to Act 1867.—Rankin v. Florida, A. & G. C. R. Co., Case No. 11,567.

A railroad company is a "moneyed, business, or commercial corporation," within Act 1867, § 37, providing that such corporations may be adjudged bankrupt.—Adams v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co., Case No. 47; Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Id. 126; Sweatt v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co., Id. 13,684; In re Greenville & C. R. Co., Id. 5,787; Winter v. Iowa, M. & N. P. Ry. Co., Id. 17,890; In re California Pac. R. Co., Id. 2,315; In re Southern Minnesota R. Co., Id. 13,188. CONTRA, see In re Opelousa & G. W. R. Co., Case No. 10,547.

An insurance company is a "business or commercial" corporation, within such act.—In re Merchants' Ins. Co., Case No. 9,441; In re Hercules Mut. Life Assur. Soc., Id. 6,402; In re Independent Ins. Co., Id. 7,017, affirming Case No. 7,018.

A national bank cannot be proceeded against in bankruptcy.—In re Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, Case No. 9,051.

§ 13. —— Traders.

A person engaged in a business requiring the purchase of articles to be sold again either in the same or an improved shape, is "using the trade of merchandise," within Act 1841.—Wakeman v. Hoyt, Case No. 17,051.

The owner of timber lands, who manufactures lumber therefrom as a means of deriving profit from the real estate, is not a merchant or trader (Act 1841), unless he carries on such business on a large scale substantially and independently as a trade.—Hall v. Cooley, Case No. 5,928.

A distiller engaged in the purchase and sale of grain and the sale of alcohol into which it is converted, and the purchase of domestic animals, and the sale of them or of their flesh after being fattened, is subject to the operation of Act 1841 upon the petition of a creditor.—In re Eeles, Case No. 4,302.

Livery stable keepers are not merchants or traders, under the act of 1841.—Hall v. Cooley, Case No. 5,928.

§ 14. Effect of appointment of receiver by state court.

A petition in bankruptcy will lie against an insolvent corporation, notwithstanding a decree of dissolution and the appointment of a receiver on proceedings in the state court by a state officer.—In re Washington Marine Ins. Co., Case No. 17,246; Thornhill v. Bank of Louisiana, Id. 13,992, affirming Id. 13,990; In re Merchants' Ins. Co., Case No. 9,441; In re Independent Ins. Co., Id. 7,017, affirming Case No. 7,018; In re Safe-Deposit & Savings Inst., Case No. 12,211; In re Green Pond R. Co., Id. 5,786.

The bankruptcy proceedings must be commenced within six months after the dissolution.—In re New Amsterdam Fire Ins. Co., Case No. 10,140.

Act Feb. 13, 1873, does not deprive the bankruptcy court of jurisdiction over a corporation of which a receiver has been appointed by a state court, but only saves acts done by the state court and the receiver prior to filing the petition.—In re National Life Ins. Co., Case No. 10,046.

§ 15. As dependent on locality—Residence or place of business.

Proceedings may be instituted in the district either of the debtor's residence or place of business (Act 1841, § 7).—Ex parte Hall, Case No. 5,919.

The residence or place of business of the debtor must be within the district to give the court jurisdiction and the objection cannot be waived by him.—Fogarty v. Gerrity, Case No. 4,895; In re Palmer, Id. 10,680.

Albemarle, Cape Fear, and Pamlico, as defined in Act April 29, 1802 (2 Stat. 156), are "districts," within Act 1841, § 7 (5 Stat. 446), providing that bankruptcy proceedings must be in the district where the bankrupt resides.—In re Johnson, Case No. 7,368.

A voluntary proceeding may be prosecuted in the district where the debtor has carried on business for the requisite time, irrespective of residence.—In re Alabama & C. R. Co., Case No. 124.

Under Act 1841 the proceedings can be had in a district other than that of the bankrupt's residence only when it appears that he has a fixed and notorious employment, denoting a place of business in such other district.—In re Kinsman, Case No. 7,832.

Where a debtor files a petition in the Southern district of New York, not averring any place of residence, and on his examination it appears that he resided in New Jersey four years previous, and for about six months before filing he has been keeping books for a firm in New York City, such court has no jurisdiction of the case.—In re Magie, Case No. 8,951.

Where a resident of Massachusetts becomes domiciled in California, and leaves the latter state without any intention of returning, and after staying without the limits of the United States several months returns to Massachusetts, and in less than two months thereafter files his petition, it is rightly filed in Massachusetts, as the act of leaving California with no intention of returning at once revived his domicile in the other state.—In re Walker, Case No. 17,061.

The word "residence" (Act 1867, § 11) is not synonymous with "domicile," and where a person, resident with his family in one place, buys a stock of goods in another, and goes there for business, leaving his family in the former place, the petition is properly filed in the place where he carries on such business.—In re Watson, Case No. 17,272.

The mere fact that a trader had desk room in an office in one district, where he was engaged in closing up the affairs of the business which he carried on in another district, in which he still resided, will not give the court of the former district jurisdiction (Act 167).—In re Little, Case No. 8,391.

Petition of merchant failing in business in New York City, who moved his family to New Jersey, but continued with his successors as clerk, is properly filed two years later in the Southern district of New York.—In re Belcher, Case No. 1,237.

A nonresident, who has for six months preceding petition carried on business as agent and attorney for another within a certain district, may file his petition in such district.—In re Baily, Case No. 753.

The business of a railroad corporation within the meaning of Act 1867 can only be carried on where its railroad is, or is to be, constructed, maintained, and operated. The fact that its officers and directors meet and act within a certain district does not give jurisdiction.—In re Alabama & C. R. Co., Case No. 124.

Involuntary proceedings cannot be prosecuted against an Alabama railroad corporation in a federal district court in New York where it has its general offices, but no railroad.—In re Alabama & C. R. Co., Case No. 124.

Where it appears in an involuntary proceeding that prior to the filing of the petition the debtor had resided less than two months within the district, prior to which he had resided for over six months in another district, the court has no jurisdiction, as the debtor has not resided in the district for the longest period during the six months preceding the filing of the petition.—In re Leighton, Case No. 8,221.

Where a bankrupt, during the six months previous to filing his petition, carried on business for two months in the Southern district of New York, and for the same two months in the district of Massachusetts, and carried on business nowhere else, during such six months, his petition is properly filed in the Southern district of New York.—In re Foster, Case No. 4,962.

The district court of the district in which the domicile and only place of business of the firm is located has jurisdiction of a petition in involuntary bankruptcy, although it is proved that one of the partners resided in another district.—Cameron v. Canieo, Case No. 2,340.

In case of partnerships, either partner may be declared a bankrupt in the district where he resides, or where the partnership is established. But the court first acquiring jurisdiction has exclusive jurisdiction over all the partners and all their property, joint and several.—Ex parte Hall, Case No. 5,919.

The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction of a petition by a resident partner of a firm doing business in another state, in which the other partners reside, to have the firm and each partner thereof adjudged a bankrupt, where it is alleged that they are unable to pay the partnership debts in full, and that the other partners had refused to join in the petition (Act 1867, § 36).—In re Penn, Case No. 10,927.

The court first acquiring jurisdiction on a petition of a partner has exclusive jurisdiction, and proceedings by the other partners in another court are void.—In re Greenfield, Case No. 5,772.

An adjudication of bankruptcy of a firm on the petition of one member is void as to members not consenting to the adjudication and living outside the district, and having no place of business therein.—In re Martin, Case No. 9,150.

Where an Ohio firm was dissolved in 1861, and in 1867 one of the partners filed a petition in bankruptcy in New York, praying for his individual discharge, and the other partners, who were then resident in Ohio, thereupon filed a petition setting forth the above facts, and stating that they had no debts except partnership debts, that all the debts of the first-mentioned partner were partnership debts, and praying that they might be allowed to file their petition in New York, Act 1867, § 36, does not apply, and the petition will not be granted.—In re Boylan, Case No. 1,757.

Where involuntary proceedings are commenced against two persons who are doing business in this country, but one of them is a resident of Canada, an adjudication may be granted against the resident alone.—In re Burton, Case No. 2,214.

§ 17. —— Conflict of jurisdiction.

Where petitions in bankruptcy against the same debtor are filed in two or more district courts, each having jurisdiction, the court in which the petition is first filed will be accorded exclusive jurisdiction over the case. Case No. 1,679, reversed.—In re Boston, H. & E. R. Co., Case No. 1,677.

Where a corporation is created under the laws of two states, the bankruptcy court which first exercises jurisdiction will be permitted to carry the proceedings to their final conclusion without the interference of the bankruptcy court in another state.—In re Boston, H. & E. R. Co., Case No. 1,677.

An adjudication in one state, made between the time of signing and filing an adjudication in another state, is prior. Case No. 1,679, reversed.—In re Boston, H. & E. R. Co., Case No. 1,678.

Where a bankrupt resided in New York, but did business in New Jersey, and a creditors' petition was filed in New Jersey against him, upon which he was declared a bankrupt, and after the property had been in the custody of the New Jersey court for many months a creditors' petition was filed in New York, and an adjudication of bankruptcy against the same debtor was entered by consent, and it appeared that an abandonment of the proceedings in New Jersey would involve the parties in great loss, the provisions of general order No. 16 did not apply, and the adjudication in the New York case was set aside, and all proceedings stayed pending the New Jersey proceedings.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,982.

§ 18. Pleading and objections.

Where the want of jurisdiction appears on the petition, the consent of the parties cannot give jurisdiction, and the bankruptcy court, of its own motion, will take notice of the point.—Hopkins v. Carpenter, Case No. 6,686.

Where the allegation of residence within the district as the ground of jurisdiction is false as to one of the petitioning partners, the bankruptcy court is without jurisdiction as to any of them.—In re Beals, Case No. 1,165.

The question of jurisdiction depending upon averments in the petition in a voluntary proceeding cannot be raised on an application by creditors to set aside the adjudication of bankruptcy, but this question may be raised when an application for a discharge is made.—In re Penn, Case No. 10,926.

The proceedings will not be stopped, after adjudication, on a mere protest alleging want of jurisdiction in the court, under amended acts, before the court has full knowledge of their context.—In re Rosenthal, Case No. 12,062.

2. COURSE OF PROCEDURE IN GENERAL.

§ 19. Commencement of proceedings.

Filing a petition, unaccompanied by due proof to sustain it, is not the commencement of proceedings under Act 1867, § 38, although an order to show cause is improperly issued upon it, and although a proper petition is afterwards filed and prosecuted to adjudication.—In re Rogers, Case No. 12,003.

An order to show cause, issued without such proofs, is illegal and void, and does not constitute the commencement of proceedings.—In re Rogers, Case No. 12,003.

§ 20. Representation of parties by attorneys.

The appearance of a debtor not served on a petition against joint debtors may be by attorney.—In re Weyhausen, Case No. 17,474.

Where a person who is not an attorney at law desires to represent another before a register, he must show a formal power of attorney, but in such case the authority of one who is an attorney at law will not be questioned, and he will be accepted unless some one requires him to prove the same.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519.

The authority of an attorney or counselor of the circuit or district court, who appears for the creditors in a proceeding in bankruptcy, cannot be questioned by the register.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,481.

An attorney at law cannot vote for his client without being duly constituted his attorney in fact.—In re Purvis, Case No. 11,476.

At a meeting held in a course of proceedings in bankruptcy, an attorney cannot act for a creditor unless he has authority to do so, evidenced by a letter of attorney acknowledged before a register or United States commissioner.—In re Christley, Case No. 2,702.

The mere fact of an attorney verifying proof of debt for a firm, and swearing that he was duly authorized thereto, does not show authority to appoint another to act for the firm at a creditors' meeting in bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Knoepfel, Case No. 7,891.

To authorize counsel to appear for a corporation and admit acts of bankruptcy charged, the corporators or shareholders should by vote authorize such action. Case No. 11,706, affirmed.—Leiter v. Republic Ins. Co., Case No. 8,227.

The counselor of the assignee may act as attorney for creditors in bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Levy, Case No. 8,299.

An attorney other than the duly-appointed attorney may appear as counsel for the assignee in a particular proceeding pending in court.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,080.

An attorney who has no authority to appear in a proceeding instituted by the assignee cannot be heard to question the authority of the attorney who appears in such proceeding as counsel for such assignee.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,080.

A power of attorney to appear for a creditor need not be acknowledged.—In re Powell, Case No. 11,354.

A power of attorney to prove debt need not be acknowledged.—In re Barnes, Case No. 1,012.

A notary public has authority to take acknowledgments of letters of attorney in bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Butterfield, Case No. 2,248; In re McDuffee, Id. 8,778.

In the absence of an express rule, the bankruptcy court will follow the rules of the circuit and district courts whereby agreements between counsel must be in writing or of record, provided no inequitable result would be caused thereby.—In re Amory and Leeds, Case No. 336a.

A power of attorney under form No. 26, which concludes with the words, "and with like powers to attend and vote at any other meeting of creditors or sitting of court holden * * * for the declaration of a dividend, or for any other purpose in my interest whatever," does not authorize the filing of an opposition to the bankrupt's discharge.—Creditors v. Williams, Case No. 3,379.

§ 21. Schedule—When required.

Where the acts of bankruptcy charged in a petition filed after December 1, 1873, are denied, and a jury trial demanded, the bankrupt, under Act 1867, § 39, as amended June 22, 1874, will be required to file a list of creditors and amount of their claims.—Warren Sav. Bank v. Palmer, Case No. 17,207.

In an involuntary proceeding a bankrupt will be required to make statement in writing under oath, where he is relied on to prove insufficient number of petitioning creditors as suggested by a creditor.—Clinton v. Mayo, Case No. 2,899.

A debtor will not be compelled to file a full list of creditors, when sworn statements of the petitioning creditors show that the requisite amount and number have not petitioned.—In re California Pac. R. Co., Case No. 2,315.

The bankrupt is only bound to set forth in his schedule such property as he has a right or interest in at the time of petitioning.—Ex parte Robertson, Case No. 11,921.

An interest in the net profits of a business as additional compensation for services of the bankrupt need not be scheduled by him.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,978.

Where claims against a bankrupt are purchased at a discount, they remain subsisting against him for their full value in the hands of the purchaser, whatever may be the latter's rights against other creditors, and the bankrupt may properly state in his schedules that the purchaser of the claims is his creditor to their full amount.—In re Houghton, Case No. 6,728.

The bankrupt must state in his schedules whether or not any note has been given, or any judgment rendered, for every debt, and whether or not any person is liable with the debtor as a partner or joint contractor, and what is a sufficient statement of those facts is a matter of discretion with the register.—In re Orne, Case No. 10,582.

Purchases of bankrupt's property by members of his family at judicial sales, though a part of the property was left in the bankrupt's possession, but not remaining with him at the time of filing his petition, do not afford presumptive evidence of an ownership remaining in the bankrupt which will require him to account for the property in his schedules, under Act 1841.—In re Bailey, Case No. 726.

A claim of the bankrupt for damages on a contract for the sale of goods must be stated in his schedule.—In re Orne, Case No. 10,581.

The bankrupt must show, either in the schedule attached to his petition, or in a separate affidavit, the efforts made by him to find the present residence of creditors, which is not given. —In re Pulver, Case No. 11,466.

A creditor objecting that the petitioner does not set forth a list of his creditors, with their residences and the amounts due, must point out the omission.—In re Plimpton, Case No. 11,227.

A person named in a bankrupt's schedule as a creditor, who does not appear either in person or by duly-constituted attorney, and has not proved any debt, cannot file a protest against being named as a creditor.—In re Altenheim, Case No. 268.

§ 23. —— Form and sufficiency.

The use of dots or contractions in the schedules to indicate a repetition of words previously used is forbidden by rule 14 of the general orders in bankruptcy.—In re Orne, Case No. 10,582.

A schedule of a voluntary petitioner's real estate which states the county and town in which the property is situated, together with the name of the grantor, is sufficiently accurate.—In re Dodge, Case No. 3,946a.

The description of property by a bankrupt in his schedule as "an interest in half a lot in Buffalo" is not sufficient.—In re Frisbee, Case No. 5,130.

A bankrupt's schedule of assets should set forth the separate items of household furniture and wearing apparel, but such defect may be remedied by amendment.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,481.

Every article of family stores and wearing apparel, generally described, need not be set out in the schedule.—In re Malcom, Case No. 8,986.

The statement in the schedule of a bankrupt of the amount due to each creditor is sufficient, when the sum and date of the debt or judgment is given.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,481.

Where the petitioner in bankruptcy has no property except what he claims as exempt, and his creditors are all of one class, he is required in making up his schedule to use such forms as are appropriate to and descriptive of the debts and property he is required to list.—Anonymous, Case No. 457.

In a bankrupt's schedule of creditors containing debts owing to newspapers, the names of the proprietors of the newspapers should be given, and not the names of the newspapers only.—Anonymous, Case No. 462.

A judgment due a firm should be scheduled in the firm's name, without setting forth the names of its members; but, if their names are set forth, the schedule is not thereby vitiated.—Anonymous, Case No. 457.

A judgment in favor of a bankrupt should be set forth in Schedule B, No. 2, under letter b.—In re Sallee, Case No. 12,256.

The certificate of the register as to the sufficiency of the inventory of the assets of a bankrupt is not conclusive so as to preclude inquiry at the proper time, and in the proper manner, as to the sufficiency of the same.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,481.

§ 24. —— Verification.

The schedule may be verified before a notary. —In re Bailey, Case No. 727.

§ 25. —— Amendments, when allowed.

A register may allow amendments to the schedules on the ex parte application of the bankrupts, at any time while the cause is pending before him.—In re Heller, Case No. 6,339.

A register may allow a bankrupt to amend his schedules when such amendment is not opposed. Such amendments should be filed with the clerk. —In re Morford, Case No. 9,796.

The register may, of his own motion, order a bankrupt to amend his schedules after the adjudication of a bankruptcy and the appointment of an assignee.—In re Orne, Case No. 10,582.

A bankrupt cannot amend his schedules by adding other names to the list of creditors, as of course, after the warrant, and after the close of the business of the first meeting, but the register may report provisionally as to the conditions on which the amendments should be allowed.—In re Morganthal, Case No. 9,813.

Material additions to the schedules of debts, or to the property, are not allowable, by way of amendment, after the first meeting of creditors, except upon such conditions as may prevent injustice.—In re Ratcliffe, Case No. 11,578.

The application of the bankrupt for leave to amend his schedule by adding property omitted as appearing on his examination is an ex parte one, which no creditor has any right to oppose.—In re Watts, Case No. 17,293.

Amendments of schedules will be allowed on payment of costs where there is proof that the errors arose from inadvertence.—In re Frisbee, Case No. 5,130.

The bankrupt may, by order of court, amend his schedules, even after the consideration of specification in opposition to his discharge.—In re Preston, Case No. 11,392.

Procedure on allowance of amendments to schedules.—In re Morford, Case No. 9,796.

§ 26. —— Order for amendment.

Where the register makes an order that the bankrupt's schedules be amended, the order ought to specify particularly the respects in which it is to be amended.—In re Orne, Case No. 10,582.

§ 27. —— Operation and effect of amendment.

The allowance of an amendment of the schedule by adding property omitted does not conclude a creditor to avail himself of any ground of opposition to the discharge arising out of such omission.—In re Watts, Case No. 17,293.

Creditors whose names were omitted from the schedule on the erroneous supposition that their debts were barred by the statute of limitations, and brought in by amended schedules, are entitled to notice, and a new warrant should issue. —In re Perry, Case No. 10,998.

In such case, where an assignee has already been chosen, notice of an application to remove him should be given, to enable all creditors to be heard.—In re Perry, Case No. 10,998.

§ 28. Records and files.

The record of the bankruptcy court showing that a petition in bankruptcy was filed at a particular time is conclusive, and cannot be contradicted by parol evidence.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 127.

Where the record of the federal district court shows that the judge ordered a petition in bankruptcy to be filed, and made an order to show cause thereon, it will be presumed that the petition was filed before or contemporaneously with the order to show cause, unless the record shows the contrary.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 127

Where the record of the federal district court shows that a petition in bankruptcy was not filed on the same day that an order to show cause was made thereon, if in fact the petition was filed on that day, an order may be entered by the district court nunc pro tunc correcting the date of filing.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 127.

Original papers referred to in bankrupt's deposition, and annexed thereto, cannot be withdrawn from the files at the option of the bankrupt, but the bankruptcy court may order a withdrawal for good reason shown by party interested.—In re McNair, Case No. 8,908.

The statutes authorizing the taking of testimony (Act 1789, § 30; Act 1817; Act 1872) do not apply to proceedings in bankruptcy.—In re Dunn, Case No. 4,173.

Testimony in bankruptcy proceedings can only be taken on commission, and cannot be taken on notice.—In re Dunn, Case No. 4,173.

The jurat subscribed by the commissioner need not contain a venue, when it appears from the deposition itself that the oath was administered where the officer resides.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,485.

The register has power to take affidavits and depositions at any time after petition filed.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,700.

§ 30. Motions and decisions thereon.

A motion in a bankruptcy proceeding, which has been denied without prejudice to any other motion, suit, action, or proceeding in respect thereto, cannot be repeated on the same facts, nor upon additional papers which do not touch the merits of the controversy.—In re Mott, Case No. 9,878a.

§ 31. Production of bankrupt on habeas corpus.

A bankrupt who is in custody may be produced in court on habeas corpus whenever necessary for further proceedings in bankruptcy before the court or a commissioner.—In re Cheney, Case No. 2,636.

Rule 27 of the "general orders in bankruptcy," authorizing the district courts to issue writs of habeas corpus in certain cases, applies only to the court in which the proceedings in bankruptcy are had.—In re Seymour, Case No. 12,684.

(B) VOLUNTARY PROCEEDINGS.

§ 32. By corporation.

A petition by a corporation in voluntary bankruptcy should be authorized by a vote of a majority of the corporators at a legal meeting called for the purpose. Rev. St. § 5122.—Freeman's Nat. Bank v. Smith, Case No. 5,089.

Such meeting need not be called in the manner prescribed by section 21 of Act N. Y. Feb. 17, 1848, in regard to the formation of corporations.—Freeman's Nat. Bank v. Smith, Case No. 5,089.

Under Act 1867, § 37, authority to file a petition in behalf of a corporation can only be given by a vote of a majority of the stockholders, even if the management of the corporate affairs is vested by the state law in a board of trustees.—In re Lady Bryan Min. Co., Case No. 7,978.

A contumacious resignation by officers of a company cannot prevent the company from filing a petition in bankruptcy authorized by the majority shareholders.—Davis v. Railroad Co., Case No. 3,648.

Under Rev. St. § 5122, which requires a petition in voluntary bankruptcy to be authorized by a majority of the corporators, stock of an intestate, on whose estate administration has not been granted, is not to be counted.—Freeman's Nat. Bank v. Smith, Case No. 5,089.

A voluntary petition, filed in behalf of a corporation without express authority by a vote of the stockholders, gives the register no jurisdiction; and a ratification by the stockholders, after adjudication, does not cure the defect.—In re Lady Bryan Min. Co., Case No. 7,978.

The policy holders in a mutual life insurance company are "corporators," within Rev. St. § 5122, requiring them to be notified of the meeting called to authorize proceedings in bankruptcy.—In re Atlantic Mut. Life Ins. Co., Case No. 628.

After the lapse of four years, it will be presumed, as against a stockholder of the corporation, that a petition filed by an officer by order of the directors was authorized by the stockholders as required by law.—In re Jefferson Ins. Co., Case No. 7,253.

The authority of the officer of a corporation to file a petition in bankruptcy cannot be disputed in a collateral proceeding.—Davis v. Railroad Co., Case No. 3,648.

Bankruptcy proceedings by a corporation, authorized by a minority of the members, will not be dismissed on the petition of an officer for the purpose of his evading an alleged liability, after the lapse of a year, as brought without authority, where the corporation was hopelessly insolvent, and the stockholders did not differ as to the propriety of the proceedings.—In re Collateral Loan & Savings Bank, Case No. 2,997.

§ 33. By partners.

Where there are no partnership assets to be collected and distributed, an individual member of a former partnership may, upon his own petition, be discharged from all his debts, both partnership and private.—In re Marks, Case No. 9,094.

A member of an existing firm having firm debts and firm assets cannot be discharged on his individual petition unless the firm is also declared bankrupt.—In re Winkems, Case No. 17,875.

On a voluntary petition by a member of a firm, the bankruptcy court has power to determine the question what persons constituted the firm.—In re Griffith, Case No. 5,820.

Where one member of a firm files his petition, scheduling both firm and individual assets and liabilities, it is the right of the other member to be made a party to the proceedings.—In re Gorham, Case No. 5,624.

Where all the partners do not join in the petition, a nonresident partner cannot join in a petition filed in a district in which he neither resided nor carried on business.—In re Prankard, Case No. 11,366.

A decree cannot be rendered against a firm on a voluntary application therefor, unless the whole of the partners unite therein. Act 1841.—Ex parte Hartz, Case No. 6,174.

Where a voluntary petition in bankruptcy omits the names of some members of the firm which it is asked shall be declared bankrupt, proceedings against the nonjoining partners cannot be made by a creditor.—Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Cass, Case No. 2,732.

Parties cannot apply jointly for a decree in bankruptcy after a dissolution of their partnership. Act 1841.—Ex parte Hartz, Case No. 6,174.

After a sale by a partner of all his interests as co-partner to a third person, who is taken into the firm, neither the old firm nor the retiring partner can be adjudged bankrupts on the petition of the continuing partner.—In re Hartough, Case No. 6,164.

A dissolution of a partnership will not prevent the bankrupt court taking jurisdiction, so long as any unfinished business, debts, credits, or assets remain.—In re Crockett, Case No. 3,402; In re Noonan, Id. 10,292.

One partner may petition to have himself and his co-partner adjudged bankrupt after a dissolution of the co-partnership; and he will not be estopped from petitioning by having undertaken to pay all the joint debts, the joint creditors not having accepted him as their sole debtor.—In re Stowers, Case No. 13,516.

Where one partner of a dissolved firm petitions for an adjudication in bankruptcy against himself and his late partner, and it appears that the petitioner has undertaken to pay all the joint debts, and has given a bond to his late partner with a solvent surety conditioned for such payment, and the creditors did not desire an adjudication, and that such partner was solvent, the petition will be dismissed.—In re Bennett, Case No. 1,314.

An adjudication against a firm by a partner on his voluntary petition, where the firm had been dissolved by the death of a co-partner, is void.—In re Temple, Case No. 13,825.

One or more partners may file their petition praying that the firm be declared bankrupt without making the others parties, but notice of the pendency of the proceedings must be given to the other partners.—In re Moore, Case No. 9,750.

A firm may be adjudicated bankrupt so long as there are undistributed partnership assets, and partnership debts and liabilities.—In re Gorham, Case No. 5,624.

The petitioner cannot be decreed a bankrupt while he owes debts which were created while he was acting in a fiduciary character. Act 1841.—In re Hardison, Case No. 6,053; In re Cease, Id. 2,540.

A municipal officer who receives moneys as license fees is a public officer, within Act 1841 (9 Stat. 440, c. 9), and, if a defaulter in such office, cannot maintain a voluntary petition under the act.—In re Johnson, Case No. 7,365a.

A judgment obtained in bastardy proceedings for the maintenance of a child and a judgment for damages in an action of seduction are not "debts," within Act 1841, § 1, and the debtor cannot maintain a petition founded thereon.—In re Cotton, Case No. 3,269.

A fraudulent transfer by the petitioner will not prevent his being declared a bankrupt under the act of 1841.—In re Houghton, Case No. 6,727.

Where the debtor in involuntary proceedings indorses on the copy of the petition served on him an admission of the truth of its allegations, except those relating to fraud, but before the day to appear files an involuntary petition, and is adjudicated a bankrupt thereon by the register, such adjudication is void, and an adjudication will be made in the involuntary proceeding.—In re Stewart, Case No. 13,419.

A petition by a debtor to be declared a bankrupt will be received, notwithstanding a petition for a compulsory decree has already been filed, and an order of notice to show cause thereon obtained by a creditor against the same debtor.—In re Canfield, Case No. 2,380.

The pendency of a petition in involuntary proceedings, not carried to adjudication, a composition having been made, is no bar to a voluntary petition, where the composition has been set aside for the reason that the debtor was unable to carry it into effect.—In re Flanagan, Case No. 4,850.

A bankrupt to whom a discharge has been refused, and who has contracted new debts, may file a new petition. Case No. 4,090 affirmed.—In re Drisco, Case No. 4,086.

§ 35. Defenses and objections.

The allegation filed to deprive a debtor of the benefit of the insolvent act (2 Stat. 237) must be specific and certain.—Connelly's Case, Case No. 3,111.

Where the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction over the debtor, an adjudication on his petition cannot be resisted on the ground that he is solvent, as the filing of the petition is an act of bankruptcy.—In re Fowler, Case No. 4,998.

Proof of ownership in past years, or dissipation or dishonest squandering of property, is not sufficient to defeat a petition under Act 1841.—In re Bailey, Case No. 726.

As to property subsequently acquired which is matter of record, the creditors must move within a reasonable time to have the same shown. Act 1800.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

§ 36. Parties and intervention.

Persons cannot join in a petition with a view to separate decrees; and, where a petition is disallowed conjointly, it cannot avail petitioners individually. Act 1841.—In re Moritz, Case No. 9,814.

In a voluntary proceeding, where the bankrupt neglects to move for a decree of bankruptcy, so that an assignee may be appointed, the creditors may move the court for that purpose.—Ex parte Harris, Case No. 6,110.

Under the act of 1841, a proceeding upon the debtor's petition was not ex parte.—Lathrop v. Stuart, Case No. 8,113.

§ 37. Petition.

A voluntary petition in bankruptcy need not allege the insolvency or dissolution of a firm of which the petitioner was a member.—In re Dodge, Case No. 3,946a.

An averment that petitioner "is a copartner in the firm of C., P. & Co., a copartnership composed of said petitioner" and certain persons named, is a sufficient averment of a subsisting copartnership. Act 1867, § 36.—In re Penn, Case No. 10,927.

On a petition by a partner for a separate decree he need not set forth the partnership accounts in detail, but he must allege his share of the partnership property.—Ex parte Norcross, Case No. 10,293.

An allegation by a bankrupt that he had made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors some time before the date of his petition is not open to the objection that it fails to state what estate remains undisposed of, or that it fails to give the assignment itself, if accompanied by the sworn statement that the assigned property will not pay the debts it was conveyed to provide for.—In re Mott, Case No. 9,878b.

Where the interlineations in a debtor's petition are small and not such as affect its sense, the decree will not be denied on that ground. —In re Malcom, Case No. 8,986.

§ 38. Verification.
The petition and schedules may be verified by the debtor's attorney, if he is a notary public. —In re Mauer, Case No. 9,304.

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy cannot be verified before a notary public.—In re Heller, Case No. 6,338.

In the petition to be declared a bankrupt, the date of the jurat is not essential.—In re Houghton, Case No. 6,727.

§ 39. Oath of allegiance.
The oath of allegiance annexed to the debtor's petition may be taken before a register.—In re Walker, Case No. 17,062.

§ 40. Amendments.
The register should allow all necessary and proper amendments whenever a proper cause therefor is shown.—In re Heller, Case No. 6,339.

A creditor, after his claim has been duly proved, has the right to ask that the petitioner amend defects in his petition or schedule.—In re Jones, Case No. 7,447.

A bankrupt filing a petition in which no allusion was made to the fact that he was a member of a firm will be allowed to amend so as to bring in the other members of the firm, where his schedule showed firm debts and assets.—In re Little, Case No. 8,390.

Where a bankrupt is liable for both personal and partnership debts, his petition for discharge, individually, may be amended so as to cover the partnership debts.—In re Bidwell, Case No. 1,392.

In a partner's petition against his co-partner, an omission to state the latter's residence may be supplied by amendment.—In re Vanderhoef, Case No. 16,841.

§ 41. Withdrawal of petition.
The petitioner under Act 1841 cannot withdraw his petition before adjudication, without showing good cause, if opposed by any creditor. —Ex parte Harris, Case No. 6,110.

A voluntary petition under Act 1841 may be withdrawn, and all further proceedings stayed, on the application of the petitioner, before the decree has been made, upon proper cause shown and the payment of costs.—Ex parte Randall, Case No. 11,550.

A petition under Act 1841 cannot be withdrawn, and further proceedings stayed, after the decree, without the concurrence of all whose interests may be affected.—In re Gile, Case No. 5,423.

The court may allow the bankrupt to withdraw his petition for discharge, and file a new one at a later day.—In re Svenson, Case No. 13,659.

A voluntary petition will be annulled on motion on due notice, where all the claims against the bankrupt have been paid by an assignment to one creditor, who has released the bankrupt.—Case of Stern, Case No. 13,376.

§ 42. Arrest of bankrupt.
Act 1867 does not authorize the arrest of the bankrupt in a voluntary proceeding.—In re Hale, Case No. 5,911.

§ 43. Adjudication.
A petitioner cannot be decreed a bankrupt when, in his petition and schedule, he does not include all his creditors, and the debts due to them.—In re Hardison, Case No. 6,053.

The adjudication will not be postponed until the register has certified the petition and schedules to be correct.—In re Patterson, Case No. 10,815.

An adjudication against a firm, obtained by one partner on his voluntary petition, without giving the notice required by general order 18 is void.—In re Temple, Case No. 13,825; In re Moore, Id. 9,750.

An adjudication upon a voluntary petition is a conclusive finding that the petitioner is insolvent, and owes more than $300, but not that he is within the jurisdiction of the court in other respects.—In re Goodfellow, Case No. 5,536.

An ex parte adjudication obtained by the bankrupt on the filing of amendments by him after objections to the form of his proceedings will be vacated.—In re Oakley, Case No. 10,392.

The correctness of a decree declaring a corporation bankrupt upon its voluntary petition cannot be impeached, after the lapse of a year, by a stockholder who had full knowledge of all the facts.—In re Baltimore County Dairy Ass'n, Case No. 828.

A receiver of a corporation, appointed under state laws, may move the bankruptcy court to set aside an adjudication that the company is bankrupt, as unauthorized by the members, obtained on petition by one of its trustees in its behalf, but will not be heard on such motion to contest that the company is insolvent, as the rule that the filing of the petition by the bankrupt is per se an act of bankruptcy, and that his actual solvency or insolvency is not material, applies as well to proceedings by corporations as by individuals.—In re Atlantic Mut. Life Ins. Co., Case No. 628.

A motion by partner five months after joining in a petition for involuntary bankruptcy to set aside the adjudication, on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentations of his copartners, inducing him to join in the petition when the firm was solvent, for the purpose of depriving him of his property, will be denied, where it appears that the rights of creditors have become fixed through such partner's voluntary acts.—In re Court, Case No. 3,284.

The adjudication on a voluntary petition as to what persons constitute a firm will not be set aside after six years, on petition filed four years after a different decision in the state court, where rights and interests of third persons have grown up under it and been adapted to it.—In re Griffith, Case No. 5,820.

(C) INVOLUNTARY PROCEEDINGS.

1. In General.

§ 44. Against whom lies.
Where the owners of a planing mill contracted debts as traders, but discontinued that branch of the business a few months before committing an act of bankruptcy, they will be considered merchants as to such debts, within the meaning of Act 1841.—Baldwin v. Rosseau, Case No. 803.

A trader who has withdrawn from business may be proceeded against upon debts which were contracted while he was actually in trade. Act 1841.—Everett v. Derby, Case No. 4,576.

An insane person may be made a bankrupt for an act of bankruptcy committed while sane. —In re Pratt, Case No. 11,371.

A party under guardianship as a lunatic may be adjudged a bankrupt, against the consent of his guardian.—In re Weitzel, Case No. 17,365.

Since Act June 22, 1874, a corporation cannot be subjected to compulsory bankruptcy upon the petition of a single creditor.—In re Detroit Car Works, Case No. 3,833.

§ 45. Defenses.
It is no defense to a petition in invitum that the petitioning creditor is the only creditor of the supposed bankrupt.—In re Alexander, Case No. 161.

It is a good answer to a petition alleging, as an act of bankruptcy, the suspension of payment of commercial paper, that the paper in question is usurious.—In re Staplin, Case No. 13,304.

In an involuntary proceeding, the debtor may show that the petitioner is not a creditor, and have the petition dismissed. Case No. 3,250 affirmed.—In re Cornwall, Case No. 3,251.

A plea of tender can, under no circumstances, be a defense to the petition to have a debtor adjudged a bankrupt.—In re Ouimette, Case No. 10,622.

Preferences, concealment of property, or other acts done in contravention of Act 1841, §§ 2, 4, cannot be set up in opposition to the decree of bankruptcy; such acts may be set up in opposing his final discharge only.—Ex parte Paget, Case No. 10,670.

2. Against Partners.

Where a person, who is a member of two partnerships, without notice to his co-partners, files his individual petition, showing in his schedule assets and liabilities of the two firms, upon his being declared a bankrupt his assignee may petition for the adjudication of both of the firms, where it appears that they are insolvent, for the purpose of administering their assets in the bankruptcy court.—In re Grady, Case No. 5,654.

An involuntary petition cannot be maintained by a copartnership against one of its members.—Robinson v. Hanway, Case No. 11,953.

§ 47. Against whom petition lies.

One who permits himself to be held out as a partner may be made a bankrupt as a member of the firm, at the suit of the creditors.—In re Krueger, Case No. 7,941.

A partnership consisting of husband and wife may be adjudicated bankrupts, and it seems the wife may also be adjudged individually bankrupt.—In re Kinkead, Case No. 7,824.

A creditor cannot compel partners, willing or unwilling, to petition for the adjudication of other persons, who are alleged to be their fellow-partners.—In re Harbaugh, Case No. 6,045.

A firm may be declared bankrupts, although one of its members may have already been adjudicated on a creditor's petition.—Hunt v. Pooke, Case No. 6,896.

A person not actually a copartner cannot be adjudged bankrupt upon petition of a pretended copartner.—In re Berryman, Case No. 1,360.

§ 48. Effect of dissolution or proceedings therefor.

For the purposes of petitioning in an involuntary proceeding, a partnership is held to subsist so long as there are outstanding debts against the firm, or assets, undistributed, belonging to it.—Hunt v. Pooke, Case No. 6,896.

So long as partnership debts remain due and outstanding, a joint petition in bankruptcy may be brought by or against the partners, notwithstanding a dissolution of the partnership.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,703.

Where a firm has been dissolved by mutual consent, and the members continue to treat each other as partners after the alleged dissolution, and to act as such in their business transactions with third persons, a petition can still be filed against the members of the firm as though there had never been a dissolution.—In re McFarland, Case No. 8,788.

Where a partnership has been dissolved more than a year, and a partner files his individual petition in bankruptcy for an adjudication against himself and his late partnership, no partnership assets appearing, the case is not within Act 1867, § 36.—In re Work, Case No. 18,044.

A suit by a partner, in the state court, against his copartners, for an accounting, in which he was appointed receiver, will not prevent jurisdiction in bankruptcy, on petition of defendant partners.—In re Hathorn, Case No. 6,214.

After a sale by a partner of all his interests as co-partner to a third person, who is taken into the firm, neither the old firm nor the retiring partner can be adjudged bankrupt on the petition of the continuing partner.—In re Hartough, Case No. 6,164.

Proceedings pending in a state court to wind up a partnership and the appointment of a receiver will not prevent the bankrupt court taking jurisdiction of a petition by one partner to have the firm declared bankrupt.—In re Noonan, Case No. 10,292.

A petition by a partner of a dissolved firm against his copartners will be dismissed where it appears that the firm was dissolved by judicial decree, and all its assets transferred to a receiver.—Hopkins v. Carpenter, Case No. 6,686; In re Oehninger, Id. 10,441.

The bankruptcy court on petition against surviving partners cannot take the estate out of the hands of the administrator of the deceased partner, who has possession thereof under the state statutes. Case No. 3,536 affirmed.—In re Daggett, Case No. 3,535.

§ 49. Grounds of proceedings and defenses.

Partners in trade cannot be decreed bankrupts in invitum, on the ground of insolvency alone.—Albany Exch. Bank v. Johnson, Case No. 133.

A petition by one partner against another is quasi in invitum, and the objecting partner may show that the firm is not insolvent.—In re Fowler, Case No. 4,998.

§ 50. Number and amount of creditors.

In estimating the number and amount of creditors on a petition against a partner, partnership creditors must be considered.—In re Price, Case No. 11,408a; In re Lloyd, Id. 8,429.

Where the requisite number of creditors join in a petition against a firm, they need not all be creditors of the firm.—In re Matot, Case No. 9,282.

§ 51. Indebtedness to support proceedings.

The right of one partner to have the firm adjudicated bankrupt is coextensive with the right of the firm creditors, or of another partner.—In re Gorham, Case No. 5,624.

An adjudication may be made against one partner only, upon a joint debt.—In re Melick. Case No. 9,399.

A member of a dissolved firm is not entitled to an adjudication against his copartner on the ground that he can prove a debt against him in respect to bonds and mortgages given by them jointly.—Sigsby v. Willis, Case No. 12,849.

A member of a dissolved firm cannot have an adjudication against his copartner on the ground of having a contingent debt against him; but he may prove a claim for fraudulent misappropriation of partnership funds precisely as if no partnership had existed.—Sigsby v. Willis, Case No. 12,849.

§ 52. Acts of bankruptcy.

An assignment of firm property by two resident members to secure part of the firm creditors is an act of bankruptcy as to such members, and where the nonresident members had no previous knowledge of the assignment, and dissent therefrom as soon as they hear thereof, they will not be affected thereby personally, but where it appears that the firm and partners are insolvent, they will, by reason of their insolvency, be declared bankrupt under Act 1841, § 14.—Ex parte Galbraith, Case No. 5,187.

A surviving partner may be adjudged bankrupt on an act of bankruptcy committed by him in administering the partnership assets, although the separate estate of the deceased partner will pay all his debts, joint and separate.—In re Stevens, Case No. 13,393.

Where the petitioning creditors at the time the indebtedness was incurred knew that a person was a secret partner of a firm, and such partner is a guarantor on commercial paper, the nonpayment of which constitutes the alleged acts of bankruptcy, he may, although solvent and having personally committed no acts of bankruptcy, be adjudged a bankrupt on petition filed against him and his partners.—In re Ess, Case No. 4,530.

A conveyance by a partner, of his individual property, though made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud firm creditors, or to prefer one of them, will not sustain a proceeding against the firm.—In re Redmond, Case No. 11,632; In re Williams, Id. 17,703.

§ 53. Parties.

In involuntary proceedings against a partnership, one of whose members is a married woman having separate property, it is not necessary to join her husband.—Lastrapes v. Blanc, Case No. 8,100.

A petition by a member of an insolvent firm who was adjudged a bankrupt in proceedings in invitum and his assignee to bring the other members in for adjudication is entitled to consideration, and the relief asked is not so obviously beyond the power of the bankruptcy court that the petition will be dismissed summarily.—In re Kelley, Case No. 7,656.

One or more partners may file their petition for adjudication against the firm without making the others parties.—In re Mitchell, Case No. 9,656.

A firm cannot be adjudicated bankrupt in an involuntary proceeding to which one of the members is not a party, and the petition cannot be amended by adding a new party after all the testimony has been taken, and the case is on hearing before the court.—In re Pitt, Case No. 11,188.

Distinct firms, consisting of three persons, one of whom was a partner of both, cannot be joined in one proceeding, though one was the successor of the other, and undertook to pay its debts.—In re Wallace, Case No. 17,095.

§ 54. Petition.

On a petition by one partner against the firm, acts of bankruptcy need not be alleged.—In re Noonan, Case No. 10,292.

§ 55. Adjudication.

Where the partners of a firm are insolvent, and there is a sufficient ground for decree of bankruptcy against any member of the firm, the decree will go against all the members of the firm, and all the joint and separate property of the partners will pass to the assignee.—Fisher v. Currier, Case No. 4,818; Ex parte Galbraith, Id. 5,187.

An adjudication of a firm as bankrupt on a petition of one partner, individually, is erroneous, where the other members were not made parties to the proceedings, or did not assent to the adjudication.—In re Lewis, Case No. 8,311.

But a petition by the other partners praying leave to join in the first petition is a sufficient expression of assent to validate the adjudication against the firm.—In re Lewis, Case No. 8,311.

An adjudication against a partnership is not void merely because a dormant partner was not originally made a defendant, but was subsequently brought into court by a supplemental petition.—Metcalf v. Officer, Case No. 9,496.

3. Acts of Bankruptcy.

By partners, see ante, § 52.
Preferences, see, also, post, §§ 214–286, 594–601.

§ 56. Capacity to commit.

The giving of a mortgage by an infant is not an act of bankruptcy, as it is subject to the infant's election to affirm or disaffirm it after coming of age.—In re Derby, Case No. 3,815.

An insane person cannot commit an act of bankruptcy.—In re Weitzel, Case No. 17,365.

One whose mind is so unsound as to be wholly incapable of managing his affairs can commit no act by which he can be forced into bankruptcy against the objection of his guardian.—In re Marvin, Case No. 9,178.

§ 57. Joint liability.

An act of bankruptcy by one of two persons jointly and severally liable for a debt, who are not co-partners, is no ground of adjudication against the other.—James v. Atlantic Delaine Co., Case No. 7,179.

§ 58. Departure from state.

For one partner to influence or procure the departure of another partner from the state is not an act of bankruptcy.—In re Terry, Case No. 13,836.

§ 59. Concealment of debtor.

Concealment of debtor from creditors does not constitute an act of bankruptcy unless service of process is thereby prevented.—Barnes v. Billington, Case No. 1,015.

Denial to an officer by an insolvent, whereby he is prevented serving process, must be really adversary, and not by concert between the creditor and the debtor, to constitute an act of bankruptcy.—Barnes v. Billington, Case No. 1,015.

A denial to a sheriff is not an act of bankruptcy, unless he went to serve on the debtor, nor a debtor's concealing himself, nor being denied to his creditors, if he did not thereby prevent service of process.—Barnes v. Billington, Case No. 1,015.

An examination in supplementary proceedings under a state law is "legal process," within the meaning of Act 1867, § 39, authorizing proceedings in bankruptcy where the debtor conceals himself to avoid service of process.—Brock v. Hoppock, Case No. 1,912.

§ 60. Concealment or removal of property.

The secretion of goods by an insolvent to prevent their being taken on attachment is an act of bankruptcy. Act 1867.—Anonymous, Case No. 466.

There is no concealment where the debtor makes a bona fide conversion of his property, and shows good faith in respect to the care of the money received therefrom.—Fox v. Eckstein, Case No. 5,009.

A deposit of bonds which were not included in the bankrupt's schedule in New York, by a bankrupt residing in North Carolina, will be held as a device to defraud creditors, in absence of proof to the contrary, where they were delivered up shortly after the petition was filed, and he drew dividends on them.—Fullings v. Fullings, Case No. 5,151a.

§ 61. Arrest or imprisonment of debtor.

An order of arrest in a civil action, where defendant immediately gave bail and was not lodged in jail, though it remained in force for more than seven days, is no ground of adjudication, under Act 1867, § 39.—In re Davis, Case No. 3,615.

An imprisonment for but seven days, exclusive of the first day, is not sufficient to support an adjudication.—Hunt v. Pooke, Case No. 6,896.

Unlawful imprisonment in a civil action founded on contract, submitted to for more than seven days before an effort at liberation was made, is an act of bankruptcy, under Act 1867, § 39.—In re Cohn, Case No. 2,967.

§ 62. Transfer of property—In general.

A conveyance or assignment which contravenes the provisions or objects of Act 1841 is an act of bankruptcy, though good at common law.—Gassett v. Morse, Case No. 5,264.

Gift of all property to wife is an act of bankruptcy.—In re Alexander, Case No. 161.

An assignment of property which bears no internal revenue stamp, being void, will not support the petition.—In re Dunham, Case No. 4,143.

A mortgage by an insolvent railroad company to secure all its creditors equally out of its earnings, or to pay such as refuse the security their ratable proportion of the proceeds, is not an act of bankruptcy.—In re Union Pac. R. Co., Case No. 14,376.

A mortgage to secure prior advances is not in the usual course of business, and is prima facie fraudulent and evidence of an intended fraud.—In re Holland, Case No. 6,603.

A common carrier is not a trader, and a mortgage by a railroad company is not an act out of the ordinary course of its business, within the meaning of the bankrupt law.—In re Union Pac. R. Co., Case No. 14,376.

The giving of a chattel mortgage on tools and a stock in trade, to secure certain creditors, where the debtor a few days afterwards suspended payment, is an act of bankruptcy.—In re Rogers, Case No. 12,002.

A transfer by an insolvent, where both transferror and transferee have knowledge of the insolvency, though to pay a just debt, is an act of bankruptcy, within Act 1867, § 35.—Brock v. Terrell, Case No. 1,914.

Where a partnership is dissolved, and the whole stock transferred to the only solvent partner for the purpose of settling the affairs of the partnership, a sale of the whole stock by such partner is not an act of bankruptcy.—In re Weaver, Case No. 17,307.

The transfer of firm property from one member of a solvent firm to another is not an act of bankruptcy, within Act 1867, § 39.—In re Munn, Case No. 9,925.

§ 63. —— Intent, in general.

Where there is no fraudulent intention, a dealer may, though insolvent, continue to sell his stock at retail, and endeavor to effect, if possible, a compromise with his creditors. In re Munger, Case No. 9,923, reversed.—Curran v. Munger, Case No. 3,487.

An indorsement of a bill of lading to a third person, to protect the property from attachment and save it for the benefit of all the creditors, is not an act of bankruptcy.—Ex parte Potts, Case No. 11,344.

§ 64. —— Intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors.

Giving a chattel mortgage to secure a pre-existing indebtedness with intent to delay, hinder, and defraud the creditors is an act of bankruptcy.—In re Cowles, Case No. 3,297.

The giving of a mortgage of the whole of bankrupt's estate and effects to a particular creditor, to hinder and delay the general creditors, is an act of bankruptcy, within the express terms of Act 1841.—Baldwin v. Rosseau, Case No. 803.

A fraudulent chattel mortgage on the bankrupt's stock of goods, made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, is an act of bankruptcy.—In re McKibben, Case No. 8,859.

Where the members of a commercial partnership owning jointly a plantation, and, not being indebted individually, mortgage the same, without consideration, to defraud firm creditors, such transaction is an act of bankruptcy.—Lastrapes v. Blanc, Case No. 8,100.

Where a conveyance is made with intent to delay one creditor, it is an act of bankruptcy if its necessary effect is to delay all the creditors, and such an act may be declared on either as a fraudulent conveyance or as a concealment.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,703.

§ 65. —— Intent to prefer and in contemplation of insolvency.

Although a mortgage is given for a precedent debt, and with intent to prefer the creditor, yet if it is not given with intent to hinder or defraud other creditors, or in contemplation of bankruptcy or insolvency, it is not an act of bankruptcy. Act 1867, § 39.—In re Dunham, Case No. 4,143.

The making of conveyances in contemplation of bankruptcy and to prefer creditors, which are declared void by Act 1841, § 2, are acts of bankruptcy.—Stewart v. Loomis, Case No. 13,433.

Retirement of one partner, and consequent transfer of assets and liabilities to the other, are not necessarily acts of bankruptcy in the partnership, but may be so if intended in order to give a preference to a separate creditor over partnership creditors, or to place him on an equality with them, or in any other way to cover actual or legal fraud.—Ex parte Shouse, Case No. 12,815.

The act of payment by an insolvent debtor is, of itself, sufficient evidence of the intent to prefer, casting the burden upon the debtor to show that he was not aware of his insolvency. Case No. 10,559, reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561

A payment to a creditor is not fraudulent unless the debtor was insolvent, and intended to prefer the creditor. Act 1867, § 39.—Morgan v. Mastick, Case No. 9,803.

A conveyance by an insolvent of property to secure a creditor, if not made to give a preference or in contemplation of bankruptcy, is not an act of bankruptcy. Act 1841.—Jones v. Sleeper, Case No. 7,496.

A mere security, though given as a preference, is not an act of bankruptcy, unless given in contemplation of bankruptcy.—In re Bonnet, Case No. 1,632.

A conveyance made by an insolvent in contemplation or with the intention of breaking up his business is an act of bankruptcy. Act 1841.—Jones v. Sleeper, Case No. 7,496.

Where a trader gives a mortgage to one of his creditors, in contemplation of bankruptcy, and for the purpose of giving such creditor a preference over the others, it is an act of bankruptcy, within the meaning of Act 1841.—Arnold v. Maynard, Case No. 561.

If a person gives a preference to a creditor in contemplation of bankruptcy, it does not change the nature or effect of the act if done under the threats and coercion of the creditor.—Atkinson v. Farmers' Bank, Case No. 609.

Making a transfer of property, giving a warrant to confess judgment, or procuring or suffering property to be taken on legal process, constitute acts of bankruptcy when done by an insolvent or in contemplation of bankruptcy with intent to give a preference.—In re Craft, Case No. 3,316.

See, also, post, § 216.

§ 66. —— As affected by question of solvency.

A debtor who is solvent may pay any or all of his debts, although proceedings in bankruptcy are pending against him. Case No. 10,559, reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

The sale of a stock of goods will not be considered an act of bankruptcy, where there is no evidence of the seller's insolvency at the time of the sale, and it appears that his only object was to change his business, and the purchaser acted in good faith.—In re Valliquette, Case No. 16,823.

To constitute a transfer to a creditor a fraudulent preference, on the ground that the debtor was insolvent, he must have known himself so to be, and have intended to give a preference.—Miller v. Keys, Case No. 9,578.

See, also, post, § 215.

§ 67. —— As affected by time.

The clause in the act of 1841 relating to transactions entered into in good faith more than two months before petition filed does not protect the bankrupt either in a question of bankruptcy or right to a discharge, but protects only the party dealing with him.—Gassett v. Morse, Case No. 5,264.

A prior agreement that securities purchased with all overdrafts made by a debtor shall be the property of the bank prevents a subsequent transfer of securities made in pursuance thereof from being an act of bankruptcy; but an agreement to turn over the title as a future act does not rest a title to the securities in the bank, and such a transfer of them will not be a preference.—Payne v. Solomon, Case No. 10,856.

It is not an act of bankruptcy for a party to transfer property after he has become involved, according to an agreement which was made while in prosperous circumstances, to transfer specific property as collateral security for advances made.—Ex parte Potts, Case No. 11,344.

An executory agreement by a railroad company to transfer certificates of its stock is not an act for which it can be forced into bankruptcy.—Winter v. Iowa, M. & N. P. Ry. Co., Case No. 17,890.

The recording after the passage of the bankrupt act of a deed of trust made before such passage cannot be held to be an act of bankruptcy, but the consequences flowing from the act of the grantor attach as from the date of its execution.—In re Wynne, Case No. 18,117.

See, also, post, § 600.

§ 68. —— Payment of present consideration.

A transfer of property made in payment for advances made at the time is not an act of bankruptcy.—In re Pierson, Case No. 11,153.

The giving of mortgages by the debtor upon a present consideration and in good faith to raise a contested attachment and pay overdue paper, to enable the debtor to continue business, is not an act of bankruptcy.—In re Sanford, Case No. 12,310.

See, also, post, § 225.

§ 69. —— Exchange or return of property.

Where, pending negotiations for an extension of time on debtor's business paper, a piano ordered for a customer, who refused to receive it, is returned to the sellers, the return thereof is not a preference of creditors or an act of bankruptcy.—Doan v. Compton, Case No. 3,940.

Where bankrupts, before adjudication, believing themselves to be solvent, give security to their creditors in exchange for a smaller amount given for the same debt, such act is not in itself an act of bankruptcy.—Albany Exch. Bank v. Johnson, Case No. 133.

§ 70. —— Conveyances fraudulent at common law.

A conveyance or assignment, fraudulent at common law, is an act of bankruptcy. (Act 1841, § 1.)—Gassett v. Morse, Case No. 5,264.

A mortgage of a stock of goods to secure the mortgagee as security on the mortgagor's note, given less than six months before the petition was filed and with the understanding that the mortgagor should continue his business in the ordinary way, and the subsequent taking possession thereunder by the mortgagee, are acts of bankruptcy, the former as a fraudulent conveyance and the latter as an unlawful preference.—In re Foster, Case No. 4,964.

The giving of a mortgage by a debtor on a large portion of his property, purporting to be security for a debt which in fact never existed, is an act of bankruptcy.—In re Ryan, Case No. 12,183.

The taking of partnership property, when the firm is insolvent, to pay a debt not a debt of the firm, is an act of bankruptcy, although each of the partners may be liable therefor (Rev. St. § 5021).—In re Matot, Case No. 9,282.

See, also, post, §§ 236, 237.

§ 71. —— Payments to creditors.

Where policies in an insurance company are terminated, the insured do not become creditors of the company for the amount of unearned premiums, within the purview of Act 1867, §§ 35, 39, so that a payment of them will be held a preference to a creditor.—Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Comstock, Case No. 7,879.

Certifying a check, in reliance upon the promise of the maker to make his account good during the day, creates the relation of debtor and creditor, and the payment of such a debt after insolvency is an act of bankruptcy.—Payne v. Solomon, Case No. 10,856.

A payment by an insolvent debtor is an act of bankruptcy, although it is made in the usual course of business. Case No. 10,559, reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

The payment of running expenses for the month previous to the making of a general assignment, where made in good faith with no intent to create a preference, is not an act of bankruptcy (Act 1867).—Smith v. Teutonia Ins. Co., Case No. 13,115.

Payment of wages to employés, though made in the regular course of business, is an act of bankruptcy if done in contemplation of insolvency.—In re Kenyon & Fenton, Case No. 17,780, note.

Payment by a corporation, actually insolvent, of rent necessary to preserve a valuable lease, is an act of bankruptcy, though judicious in itself and made in good faith.—In re Merchants' Ins. Co., Case No. 9,441.

A conveyance by an insolvent railroad company in trust to secure bonds to be issued and sold to pay unsecured debts made in good faith to enable it to continue its business, is not an act of bankruptcy.—In re Union Pac. R. Co., Case No. 14,376.

The issue at par of the stock of a railroad company, not theretofore issued, in payment of the bona fide debts of the company, is not an act of bankruptcy.—Winter v. Iowa, M. & N. P. Ry. Co., Case No. 17,890.

But, where paid-up stock is disposed of to creditors under circumstances to give them an illegal preference, it will be an act of bankruptcy.—Winter v. Iowa, M. & N. P. Ry. Co., Case No. 17,890.

A payment by an insolvent debtor of a percentage on claims of a part of his creditors which does not lessen the percentage which his other creditors will receive, is not a preference.—In re Hapgood, Case No. 6,044.

The fact that the debt paid was a fiduciary debt, and that the creditor pressed for payment, will not prevent the payment's being an act of bankruptcy.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,884.

Where the debtor, being insolvent, pays freight debt in full by procuring an order from the railroad for and furnishing lumber, such payment is a preference of a creditor, and an act of bankruptcy.—Farrin v. Crawford, Case No. 4,686.

See, also, post, § 232.

§ 72. —— Preferences.

Under Act 1841, § 2, an act of preference is an act of bankruptcy, although it is shown to have been made by the debtor upon the demand or request of a creditor.—Van Kleeck v. Thurber, Case No. 16,861.

Transference by a partnership of the note of a third party to one creditor as security for an antecedent debt, on the day of calling a meeting of their general creditors, is a fraudulent preference, and an act of bankruptcy.—Ex parte Shouse, Case No. 12,815.

An insolvent debtor who prefers one or more of his creditors necessarily thereby commits an act of bankruptcy.—In re Drummond, Case No. 4,093; In re Ryan, Id. 12,183.

Where a transfer of property places a creditor in a better position as to his debt than he occupied by reason of a levy made by him on the property of the bankrupt, he receives a preference, within the meaning of Act 1867.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,884.

The transfer to one of the creditors of a bankrupt of the book accounts within two months of commencement of proceedings is not presumptively a fraudulent preference.—In re Broich, Case No. 1,921.

The knowledge or motive of the preferred creditor is immaterial in an involuntary proceeding. Case No. 10,559, reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

See, also, post, §§ 214–250.

§ 73. —— Assignment for benefit of creditors.

A general assignment by an insolvent with preferences, though made without moral fraud, is an act of bankruptcy.—Wakeman v. Hoyt, Case No. 17,051; Ex parte Breneman, Id. 1,830; Gassett v. Morse, Id. 5,264; Grow v. Ballard, Id. 5,848; In re Burt, Id. 2,210.

A general assignment by an insolvent, though without preferences, and untainted by actual fraud, is nevertheless an act of bankruptcy, as being, in contemplation of law, made with intent to defeat or delay the operation of the bankrupt act.—Jones v. Sleeper, Case No. 7,496; Perry v. Langley, Id. 11,006; In re Randall, Id. 11,551; In re Smith, Id. 12,974; Spicer v. Ward, Id. 13,241; In re Burt, Id. 2,210; Cragin v. Thompson, Id. 3,320; In re Mendelsohn, Id. 9,420; In re Frisbee, Id. 5,129; In re Croft, Id. 3,404. CONTRA, see Farrin v. Crawford, Case No. 4,686; In re Kintzing, Id. 7,833; Langley v. Perry, Id. 8,067; Smith v. Teutonia Ins. Co., Id. 13,115.

Where the execution of such an assignment is admitted, an adjudication will be made, although the respondent denies any intent to defeat or delay the operation of the bankruptcy act.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,974.

An assignment for benefit of creditors will be deemed to have been made with intent to delay the operation of the bankrupt law, where the exercise of the powers granted by it would have that effect.—In re Chamberlain, Case No. 2,574.

A general assignment under a state insolvent law for the benefit of creditors, made when a creditor is about to obtain a judgment, is a conveyance with intent to delay, defraud, and hinder the creditor (Act 1867 § 39).—Perry v. Langley, Case No. 11,006.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors, at a time when a judgment is about to be recovered against the assignor, is not a conveyance with intent to delay and defraud creditors unless made with such intent (Act 1867).—Langley v. Perry, Case No. 8,067.

An assignment for benefit of creditors, made with intent to defeat and delay the operation of the bankrupt law, is complete on the day of its execution, and the intent existing at that time determines its character.—In re Chamberlain, Case No. 2,574.

A general assignment under a state law will be held an act of bankruptcy where the debtor did not turn over to the assignee money in excess of the authorized exemptions.—Farrin v. Crawford, Case No. 4,686.

A voluntary assignment is an act of bankruptcy and a ground for an adjudication, although such assignment is defectively executed.—In re Lawrence, Case No. 8,133.

An assignment invalid under the state laws, and so defective in its execution that it cannot be enforced, but used as a means of giving a preference, is an act of bankruptcy.—In re Mendelsohn, Case No. 9,420.

See, also, post, §§ 249, 250, 599.

§ 74. Warrant to confess judgment.

Giving a bond with warrant to confess judgment, to one creditor, upon the eve and in contemplation of bankruptcy, does not constitute an act of bankruptcy, under the act of 1800, unless the judgment entered on the bond and the issuing of the execution were at the instance or by the procurement of the debtor.—Barnes v. Billington, Case No. 1,015.

Giving a warrant of attorney to a mere indorser, whereby he secures a priority, is not to be considered an involuntary act, so as to prevent it from being an act of bankruptcy, under Act 1841, for an indorser has no legal power of coercion.—Stewart v. Loomis, Case No. 13,433.

To render the confession of a judgment an act of bankruptcy, under Act 1841, it must not only have been intended as a preference, but also have been given in contemplation of bankruptcy.—Atkinson v. Farmers' Bank, Case No. 609.

A judgment given to a particular creditor, followed by an execution, in the absence of evidence that the debtor was insolvent at the time he gave such judgment, or that it covered the whole of the debtor's effects, does not amount to an act of bankruptcy, under Act 1841.—In re Bonnet, Case No. 1,632.

A warrant of attorney to confess judgment, made to enable the debtor to continue in business, where there was no intention to defeat or delay the operation of Act 1867 is not an act of bankruptcy.—In re Leeds, Case No. 8,205.

The fact that a confession of judgment is signed by only one member of the firm does not impair the effect of the judgment in determining the question of bankruptcy.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,884.

A debtor commits an act of bankruptcy within Act 1867, § 39, although the warrant of attorney to confess judgment by which a preference was given by a creditor was executed under threats of legal process and arrest, and in fear of disgrace.—Campbell v. Traders' Nat. Bank, Case No. 2,370.

A confession of judgment by an insolvent debtor, and the levy upon and sale of his property, will make out a case under Act 1867, § 39, though the debtor did not know that there was such a law as the bankruptcy law.—In re Craft, Case No. 3,316.

The giving of a warrant of attorney to confess judgment for full consideration is not an act of bankruptcy, though the warrant was not recorded, but kept in the creditor's custody, unknown to others.—Blabon v. Hunt, Case No. 1,455.

See, also, post, § 245.

§ 75. Procuring or suffering person or property to be taken on legal process.

Act 1841, § 1, which makes it an act of bankruptcy for a debtor to "willingly or fraudulently procure himself to be arrested," extends to the case of a debtor who, in a state, willingly or fraudulently procures himself to be arrested by a creditor, although he is not arrested, the laws of such state forbidding arrest in actions founded on contract.—Van Kleeck v. Thurber, Case No. 16,861.

Voluntary aid given by the debtor in taking his property upon attachment, or in perfecting an attachment previously incomplete, is an act of bankruptcy (Act 1841).—Fisher v. Currier, Case No. 4,818.

It is an act of bankruptcy for a trader willingly to procure himself to be arrested, or his goods to be attached, although the attachment was not fraudulent.—Wakeman v. Hoyt, Case No. 17,051.

A debtor cannot be said to have procured his goods to be taken on execution where he remains passive when they are attached, and does nothing to aid the creditor.—Jones v. Sleeper, Case No. 7,496.

A debtor who directly or indirectly assists or facilitates the obtaining of a judgment on which an execution has followed is guilty of procuring or suffering his property to be taken in execution.—In re Woods, Case No. 17,990.

Mere honest inaction on the part of an insolvent debtor who is sued on a just debt, and allows judgment to go against him, is not an act of bankruptcy, within Act 1867, § 39, unless it appears that there was an actual intent to prefer a creditor.—Wright v. Filley, Case No. 18,077.

An insolvent who makes no defense to an action by a creditor, and does nothing to prevent his obtaining a preference, suffers his property to be taken under legal process under Act 1867, § 39, and the law presumes that he intended to give a preference.—In re Heller, Case No. 6,337; Fitch v. McGie, Id. 4,835.

The inaction of a debtor after the passage of Act 1867, in taking no steps to set aside a fictitious judgment entered before the passage of such act and to prevent execution being issued on it, is a procuring or suffering by him of his property to be taken on legal process.—In re Schick, Case No. 12,455.

A debtor suffers his property to be taken on legal process where, knowing that a debt is past due, or being insolvent or contemplating insolvency, he refrains from voluntary bankruptcy, and his property is taken on legal process.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,884.

An intention in law to give a preference is conclusively shown from a levy which operates as a preference, suffered by a debtor, insolvent or contemplating insolvency.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,884.

Where one of the members of an insolvent firm, with knowledge of such insolvency, delivers a message at the request of a creditor, although unwillingly, to an attorney, directing him to enter judgment upon a judgment note which the firm had previously given, such member procures the judgment and the enforcement thereof.—In re Benton, Case No. 1,333.

Suffering a sale to take place, from inability to resist it, is not an act of bankruptcy, even if, by so doing, one creditor should be preferred to another.—Rankin v. Florida, A. & G. C. R. Co., Case No. 11,567.

An insolvent person who fails to petition, and his property is taken by creditors on legal process, may be adjudged a bankrupt on petition of his creditors whose claims have not been satisfied by the taking of the property.—In re Wells, Case No. 17,388.

The appointment by a state court of a receiver to take possession of the property and assets of the corporation is "a taking on legal process," within the meaning of Act 1867, § 39.—In re Merchants' Ins. Co., Case No. 9,441.

The appointment by a state court of a receiver, for the purpose of paying debts, defeats and delays the operation of the act; and, where procured by the debtor, he must be presumed to have intended such effect.—In re Bininger, Case No. 1,420.

The collection, under legal process, by the receiver of a dissolved corporation, appointed more than six months before the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, of a claim due the corporation, is not an act of bankruptcy.—In re New Amsterdam Fire Ins. Co., Case No. 10,140.

See, also, post, § 243.

§ 76. Compromises.

Where an insolvent debtor compromises with all his creditors except one, whom he promises to pay in full on a large extension of time, transferring to him property as security therefor, he commits an act of bankruptcy.—Ecfort v. Greely, Case No. 4,260.

Where, pending proceedings in bankruptcy, a preferred creditor and the insolvent settle the petitioning creditor's debt, and, through an attorney, compromise with the other creditors, paying some one price and others another, such compromise is prima facie fraudulent, and the burden is on the acting parties to show that all creditors consented to discrimination in the payment of claims. In re Munger, Case No. 9,923, reversed.—Curran v. Munger, Case No. 3,487.

§ 77. What constitutes insolvency.

The word "insolvency," in Act 1841, § 14, as applied to voluntary applications for a decree, means inability to meet engagements; but, in relation to compulsory proceedings by creditors, it means the bankruptcy of the debtor as known to the court as a ground for proceedings, and must be proved in the manner indicated by section 1 of the statute.—Ex parte Hull, Case No. 6,856.

Where it appears that, if all the property of the debtor were sold, it would not produce sufficient funds to pay his debts, he is insolvent, within the meaning of Act 1867, § 39.—In re Wells, Case No. 17,388.

A debtor is insolvent if his property, put up on reasonable notice for sale, where it exists under the circumstances of the case, will not bring cash enough to pay his debts. Case No. 10,559, reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

Inability to pay debts as they mature, in the ordinary course of business, constitutes "insolvency," under Act 1867, § 39.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,884; In re Randall, Id. 11,551; In re Wells, Id. 17,388; In re Bininger, Id. 1,420; In re Holland, Id. 6,603.

A debtor, if unable to meet his engagements as they accrue, is insolvent, though his assets greatly exceed his liabilities.—Morgan v. Mastick, Case No. 9,803; In re Woods, Id. 17,990.

The ordinary course of business in Act 1867 does not mean an ability to turn out goods or other property to pay one debt, without leaving in the debtor's hands assets to provide for other debts as they become due.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,884.

See, also, post, § 215.

§ 78. What constitutes "contemplation of" bankruptcy or insolvency.

"In contemplation of bankruptcy" (Act 1841) means simply in contemplation of a state of bankruptcy, or a known insolvency and inability to carry on business, and a stoppage in business.—Hutchins v. Taylor, Case No. 6,953.

To constitute a conveyance "in contemplation of bankruptcy," it is not necessary that the transferee should know of his debtor's insolvency, or should co-operate with him to obtain priority of payment. (Act 1841.)—Peckham v. Burrows, Case No. 10,897.

A conveyance of the bulk of the debtor's property to a creditor, where the debtor owed claims to a greater amount than its value, will be regarded as having been made in contemplation of bankruptcy and in fraudulent preference of creditors. (Act 1841).—Peckham v. Burrows, Case No. 10,897.

The words "in contemplation of bankruptcy," in Act 1867, § 39, mean in contemplation of committing what is made by the act an act of bankruptcy.—In re Craft, Case No. 3,317.

If a debtor, at any time, from the state of his circumstances, contemplates that he will not be thenceforth able to pay his debts as they mature in the ordinary course of business, he contemplates insolvency.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,884.

See, also, post, § 216.

§ 79. Suspension of payment of commercial paper—To whom applicable.

Act 1867, § 39, cl. 9, provides that any person "who, being a banker, merchant, or trader, has fraudulently stopped or suspended and not resumed payment of his commercial paper, within a period of 14 days," shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy. This was amended by Act July 14, 1870, so as to read "who, being a banker, broker, merchant, trader, manufacturer or miner, has fraudulently stopped payment, or who has stopped or suspended and not resumed payment of his commercial paper within a period of 14 days." Held, that a railroad company is not within the meaning of such acts.—In re Greenville & C. R. Co., Case No. 5,787; Winter v. Iowa, M. & N. P. Ry. Co., Id. 17,890. But see In re Hercules Mut. Life Assur. Soc., Case No. 6,402.

Charter authorizing railroad company to manufacture materials for equipment does not constitute the company a "manufacturer," within such section.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 126.

One who prepares for market and sells lumber, the growth of his own land, is a manufacturer, within such act.—In re Chandler, Case No. 2,591.

The publishers of a daily paper and proprietors of a book and job printing office are manufacturers within the meaning of such act.—In re Kenyon & Fenton, Case No. 17,780, note.

One engaged in a manufacture and sale of lumber is a "trader." (Act 1841.)—In re Cowles, Case No. 3,297.

The owner of oil lands who divides them into leaseholds, and receives the rent in oil, is not a trader, within such act, as he deals only in the product of his land.—In re Woods, Case No. 17,990.

One contracting to grade and build a railroad is not, by virtue of such contract or his acts under it, a merchant or trader, within the act.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,981.

A petition against a married woman in New York, grounded on nonpayment of her notes, will be dismissed, where it does not appear from the notes, or by allegation, that they were given for the benefit of her separate estate, or in course of trade.—In re Howland, Case No. 6,791.

Suspension of payment by a solvent trader for 14 days is an act of bankruptcy.—In re Bininger, Case No. 1,420.

Where a merchant fails to pay, for 14 days, commercial paper given before, but falling due after, he became engaged in business, he can be adjudged a bankrupt under Act 1867, § 39.—In re Carter, Case No. 2,470.

Under Act 1867, § 39, as amended by Act July 14, 1870, a person who is not a banker, merchant, trader, manufacturer, or miner is liable to be put into bankruptcy if he has stopped or suspended, and has not resumed, payment of his commercial paper within a period of 14 days.—In re Hercules Mut. Life Assur. Soc., Fed. Cas. No. 6,402. CONTRA, see In re Greenville & C. R. Co., Case No. 5,787; Winter v. Iowa, M. & N. P. Ry. Co., Id. 17,890.

§ 80. —— Retired traders.

Suspension of payment of a negotiable note given by a retired trader for a trade debt is not an act of bankruptcy.—In re Jack, Case No. 7,119; McKenney v. Baker, Id. 8,853.

The fact that the debtor ceased to be a trader before the period of suspension of payment of his negotiable paper is no defense.—Davis v. Armstrong, Case No. 3,624.

Where, on the dissolution of a firm, one member agrees to pay its outstanding commercial paper, and payment thereof is suspended for 14 days, it is an act of bankruptcy of the firm.—In re Weikert, Case No. 17,361.

§ 81. —— Commercial paper.

"Commercial paper," as used in Act 1867, denotes bills of exchange, promissory notes, and negotiable bank checks, which are governed by what is known as the "law merchant."—In re Nickodemus, Case No. 10,254.

"Commercial paper" means paper, which, by the law governing the contract, has the ordinary qualities and incidents of negotiable paper, in the sense of the law merchant.—In re Hollis, Case No. 6,621.

The bonds and coupons of a railroad company are not commercial paper within the meaning of Act 1867.—In re Opelousa & G. W. R. Co., Case No. 10,547.

A note payable in money is commercial paper, though, at the time and place of its execution, Confederate currency was the only medium of exchange.—Mendenhall v. Carter, Case No. 9,426.

Promissory notes given by a firm as vouchers or memoranda in exchange for notes of like amount simultaneously given to them, but not as obligations to be paid at maturity, are not commercial paper, as between the firm and the person to whom they were given.—In re Westcott, Case No. 17,430.

Commercial paper mentioned in Act 1867, § 33, includes all negotiable paper irrespective of the mode in which it was issued or used in a given case.—In re Chandler, Case No. 2,591.

To be a debtor's commercial paper, within Act 1867, § 39, cl. 9, the debt which the paper represents must have been incurred by him in his character of banker, merchant, or trader; whether as principal or otherwise, is immaterial.—In re Lowenstein, Case No. 8,574; In re McDermott Patent Bolt Mfg. Co., Id. 8,750; In re Nickodemus, Id. 10,254.

Accommodation paper signed by a trader is not his commercial paper, within the bankruptcy acts. Act 1867, Amend. Act 1874.—McKenney v. Baker, Case No. 8,853.

A negotiable note is not the "commercial paper" of an accommodation indorser thereof, within the meaning of Act 1867, § 39.—Innes v. Carpenter, Case No. 7,049; In re Clemens, Id. 2,877, reversing Case No. 2,878. CONTRA, see In re Chandler, Case No. 2,591.

A note, given by a merchant for money loaned payable to his own order on demand, and duly indorsed by him, is "commercial paper."—In re Sykes, Case No. 13,708.

A note and a duebill given for money loaned to a manufacturing company, payable on demand, are not "commercial paper," within the meaning of Act 1867, § 39.—In re McDermott Patent Bolt Mfg. Co., Case No. 8,750.

A person who guarantied paper given by partners in settlement of their indebtedness, and subsequently became a partner with them, cannot be made a party to bankruptcy proceedings founded on nonpayment of such paper.—In re Manning, Case No. 9,040.

A judgment note is not commercial paper, so that a stoppage of payment of it for 14 days will constitute an act of bankruptcy. Act 1867.—Love v. Love, Case No. 8,549.

Renewed commercial paper subjects a trader to the same legal consequences, under Act 1867, that the original paper did.—McKenney v. Baker, Case No. 8,853.

Notes given in settlement of partnership accounts, on dissolution of a manufacturing firm, are not commercial paper given in the course of business, nonpayment of which would constitute an act of bankruptcy.—In re Lanz, Case No. 8,079.

Where, after the dissolution of a firm, a solvent partner gives notes by way of settlement to a creditor who has assisted in dissolving the firm, the notes will not be considered as commercial paper of such partner, it appearing that he was not by business a merchant, and that he entered the firm for the purpose of benefiting a relative, and closing it up as soon as it was discovered to be unprofitable.—In re Weaver, Case No. 17,307.

The object to which the money borrowed was applied cannot affect the character of the instrument given as evidence of the indebtedness, so as to make the instrument commercial paper, under Act 1867, § 39.—In re McDermott Patent Bolt Mfg. Co., Case No. 8,750.

A stopping of payment of commercial paper under Act 1867, § 39, is fraudulent, where the liability is undisputed, when it is done purposely, and not by accident or mistake.—In re Hollis, Case No. 6,621.

The word "fraudulently," as used in Act 1867, § 39, cl. 9, does not qualify the whole sentence, and an adjudication can be had where the suspension continues for 14 days, although such suspension was not fraudulent, and may be had at once where the original suspension was fraudulent.—In re Cowles, Case No. 3,297; Doan v. Compton, Id. 3,940; In re Sohoo, Id. 13,162; In re Hall, Id. 5,920; In re Thompson, Id. 13,936; In re Weikert, Id. 17,361; In re Wells, Id. 17,387; Baldwin v. Wilder, Id. 806. CONTRA, see In re Cone, Case No. 3,095; In re Jersey City Window-Glass Co., Id. 7,292; In re Leeds, Id. 8,205; In re Davis, Id. 3,615; In re Hollis, Id. 6,621.

The suspension of payment of commercial paper for 14 days by a banker, merchant, or trader is prima facie evidence of fraud, and, where unexplained, will support a decree of bankruptcy.—In re Ballard, Case No. 816; In re Shea, Id. 12,729.

A bona fide refusal of payment of commercial paper on the ground of a legal defense is not a stoppage or suspension of payment, within the meaning of the statute.—In re Thompson, Case No. 13,936; In re Sykes, Id. 13,708; McLean v. Brown, Id. 8,880; In re Hercules Mut. Life Assur. Soc., Id. 6,402; In re Mannheim, Id. 9,038; In re Westcott, Id. 17,430; In re Munn, Id. 9,925.

Where the debtor, 8 days after the maturity of a note, is served with an injunction restraining him from making any disposition or transfer of his property, nonresumption of payment within 14 days cannot be alleged as an act of bankruptcy.—In re Pratt, Case No. 11,369.

Where the stockholders of a trading corporation having agreed to lend it money, one gives his note, which the company indorses and agrees to provide for at maturity, and it fails to do so, and the promisor pays it within 14 days, such suspension is not an act of bankruptcy by the corporation.—In re Massachusetts Brick Co., Case No. 9,259.

The running of the 14 days, necessary, after stoppage of payment of commercial paper, to make an act of bankruptcy, cannot be prevented by making an assignment for benefit of all creditors previous to the expiration of such period.—In re Laner, Case No. 8,055.

A petition which alleges as the act of bankruptcy the failure to pay commercial paper maturing after December 1, 1873, filed before the expiration of 40 days from such maturity, is prematurely filed, and cannot be amended (Act June 22, 1874).—In re Tivoli Brewing Co., Case No. 14,064.

The continued neglect to pay commercial paper may be alleged as an act of bankruptcy, although the first 14 days after maturity expired more than 6 months before the filing of the petition (Act 1867, § 39).—In re Raynor, Case No. 11,597.

A creditor need not commence proceedings to have his debtor adjudged a bankrupt within six months from the first suspension of the payment of commercial paper, if he can show that the debtor had suspended payment within the six months, although the suspension commenced before that time.—Baldwin v. Wilder, Case No. 806.

Where the only act of bankruptcy alleged in the petition is the failure to pay specified commercial paper, and where the original default in payment occurred and had continued more than seven months before the proceedings were commenced, the petition cannot be sustained.—In re Brewer & Bemis Brewing Co., Case No. 1,850.

Under the provision of the amendment of Act 1867, of July 14, 1870, that if a merchant has fraudulently stopped payment, "or has stopped and suspended and not resumed payment of his commercial paper he shall be adjudged a bankrupt," a suspension, commenced before and continued after the amendment, is per se an act of bankruptcy.—Baldwin v. Wilder, Case No. 806.

The nonpayment of a single piece of commercial paper by a person within the statute for 14 days, without legal excuse, is an act of bankruptcy, without reference to whether he is actually insolvent.—McLean v. Brown, Case No. 8,880; In re McNaughton, Id. 8,912; In re Wilson, Id. 17,780.

§ 84. —— What is a suspension within the statute.

There is no suspension of payment of commercial paper, within the bankrupt law, where a note payable one day after date remains unpaid for 40 days, where no demand is made.—In re Wolf, Case No. 17,923.

Stopping payment of a note long before the passage of Act 1867, and not resuming afterwards, is not an act of bankruptcy.—Mendenhall v. Carter, Case No. 9,426.

§ 85. —— Resumption of payment.

A resumption of payment of commercial paper after the expiration of the 14 days during which payment was suspended does not cure the act of bankruptcy unless the debtor's whole indebtedness is paid, and any creditor may petition.—In re Ess, Case No. 4,530.

§ 86. —— Effect of extension of time of payment.

An agreement on the maturity of a note given in the course of business that it may lay over for that day is only a forbearance to sue, and does not destroy its character as commercial paper.—Perin & Gaff Mfg. Co. v. Peale, Case No. 10,981.

A suspension of payment of commercial paper for 14 days, where the debtor subsequently obtained an extension of time from all but one creditor, is not an act of bankruptcy.—Doan v. Compton, Case No. 3,940.

A stipulation in a suit at law upon a note giving time to plead does not operate as an extension of time upon the note, as against Act 1867.—In re Sykes, Case No. 13,708.

§ 87. —— Who may take advantage of suspension.

Suspension of payment of commercial paper held by another than the petitioning creditor may be alleged as an act of bankruptcy.—In re Hall, Case No. 5,920.

§ 88. Acts of agent.

When an insolvent's agent compromises with creditors, and some of them, through him, return different terms than those submitted, such agent does not thereby become that of such creditors, but remains the agent of the debtor, and his knowledge, mistakes, and acts are those of his principal, the insolvent.—Curran v. Munger, Case No. 3,487, reversing In re Munger, Case No. 9,923.

§ 89. Effect of rescission.

The legal liability for an act of bankruptcy cannot be discharged by a subsequent rescission of the transaction.—In re Ryan, Case No. 12,183.

§ 90. Estoppel to set up act of bankruptcy.

A creditor may allege as an act of bankruptcy the taking of property on his own execution in such manner as would operate to give preference to himself.—Coxe v. Hale, Case No. 3,310.

Creditors who have obtained a preference by a bill of sale from the debtor are estopped to set up the execution of the same as an act of bankruptcy.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,706.

Creditors are not estopped from treating a general assignment as an act of bankruptcy, by an unaccepted offer to assent to the assignment, if the assignee should be changed.—Spicer v. Ward, Case No. 13,241.

An application by a creditor to the state court to have increased the security of assignees under a general assignment will not estop such creditor from claiming that the assignment was an act of bankruptcy.—Perry v. Langley, Case No. 11,006.

Creditors who have taken possession of the entire property of the debtor, under a general assignment or bill of sale intended to prefer them, are estopped from setting up the nonpayment of a note as an act of bankruptcy, for by taking possession of his entire property they deprive him of the means of making payment.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,706.

A creditor who accepts a certain sum as a compromise,, and is not misled as to payments to others, cannot sustain a petition alleging a fraudulent preference of those who received a greater percentage. In re Munger, Case No. 9,923, reversed.—Curran v. Munger, Case No. 3,487.

The failure of a stockholder, who was present at a meeting of the stockholders, to object to the giving of a mortgage to secure another stockholder for advances, at which meeting it was voted unanimously to give the mortgage, will estop him from setting up the mortgage as an act of bankruptcy.—In re Massachusetts Brick Co., Case No. 9,259.

A petition in an involuntary proceeding which states the giving to the petitioner of an unlawful preference in respect to his debt, but does not surrender the preference, will be dismissed.—In re Rado, Case No. 11,522.

4. PARTIES.

§ 91. Who are parties.

The only parties to bankruptcy proceedings are the bankrupt and the creditors.—In re Fredenberg, Case No. 5,075.

The only parties to an involuntary proceeding are the petitioning creditors and the bankrupt, and the mere service of an injunction upon a person, restraining him from interfering with the bankrupt's property, does not make him a party, and give him the right to contest or move to vacate the adjudication.—Karr v. Whittaker, Case No. 7,613.

§ 92. Who may file petition generally.

The pendency of a suit at law is not a bar to a petition by the creditor on a distinct and independent demand.—Everett v. Derby, Case No. 4,576.

An attachment by creditors is an unequivocal dissent from an agreement for extension of credit, and creditors who signed on the agreement that it was not to be binding unless joined in by all creditors are released therefrom.—Ex parte Potts, Case No. 11,344.

The fact that a debtor, after judgment against him in a state court, fraudulently conveyed all his real property, of a value greater than the debt, to his sons, is not a sufficient cause of bankruptcy as to the judgment creditor, whose remedy is to have the conveyance set aside in a court of equity.—Avery v. Johann, Case No. 675.

A petition to have a corporation adjudged a bankrupt may be maintained by any creditor, under Rev. St. § 5122. Case No. 10,558, reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

§ 93. Indebtedness to support petition.

A petitioning creditor's debt, which is certain and liquidated, though payable in future, will support a decree in bankruptcy. (Act 1841.)—In re King, Case No. 7,785.

A petition may be filed by a creditor under the act of 1841 upon a claim which is not yet due if it is provable in bankruptcy.—Barton v. Tower, Case No. 1,085.

The same is true under the act of 1867.—Phelps v. Clasen, Case No. 11,074; In re Muller, Id. 9,912; In re Alexander, Id. 161·

Linn v. Smith, Id. 8,375; In re Ouimette, Id. 10,622.

A debt contracted prior to passage of Act 1841 is within its operation, and will support a decree.—Ex parte Hull, Case No. 6,856.

A secured debt will support a petition, and it is not necessary to waive the security in the petition.—In re Bloss, Case No. 1,562; In re Stansell, Case No. 13,293.

The levy of an execution on sufficient property to satisfy the debt does not estop the creditor from filing a petition in bankruptcy, but the levy will be held to have been waived thereby.—In re Sheehan, Case No. 12,737.

A creditor who holds security from the supposed bankrupt may petition for adjudication against him, if the security falls short of the debt by $250 or more.—In re Alexander, Case No. 161.

A creditor fully secured by attachment cannot, while holding on to his attachment, sustain, on the same debt, a petition in bankruptcy.—In re Hazens, Case No. 6,285.

A promissory note, overdue on its face at the time the petition is presented to the judge, is sufficient to support the proceedings. Act 1841. —In re Hill, Case No. 6,485.

A claim which is barred by the statutes of limitation of the state cannot be the foundation of a petition in involuntary bankruptcy. Case No. 3,250 affirmed.—In re Cornwall, Case No. 3,251.

A debt merged in a judgment which is clearly a fraudulent preference cannot be the foundation of a petition by the judgment creditors, unless the preference is surrendered.—In re Hunt, Case No. 6,882.

A note of the alleged bankrupts delivered by them to the payee after it was due, and after the alleged acts of bankruptcy, and subsequently purchased by the petitioning creditor, to enable him to petition, is a sufficient debt for that purpose.—Ex parte Shouse, Case No. 12,815.

The existence of the creditor's claim as a liability, and not as a debt at the time a transfer was made, does not prevent such transfer being fraudulent as to him.—Burpee v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 2,185.

A judgment creditor of a manufacturing corporation cannot sustain a petition against its officers or stockholders who are made personally liable for its debts for failure to comply with the law.—James v. Atlantic Delaine Co., Case No. 7,179.

When an indorser's liability becomes fixed it is a debt which may be made the foundation of involuntary proceedings.—In re Nickodemus, Case No. 10,254.

A voluntary agreement between certain persons, to which the debtor is in no wise a party, to make a contribution to him, does not create an indebtedness to him. Case No. 10,559 reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

A note given in place of a lost note, which latter was without consideration, will not support a petition.—In re Cornwall, Case No. 3,-251.

A debt founded upon a note made prior to the emancipation proclamation of which slaves were the consideration will support a petition. —Miller v. Keys, Case No. 9,578.

The debt provable under Act 1867 which a creditor must have as a foundation for his petition may be an equitable demand.—Sigsby v. Willis, Case No. 12,849.

A married woman may avail herself of her coverture to defeat the debt which is the basis of the proceeding, unless it is rendered a valid obligation by the state laws.—In re Slichter, Case No. 12,943.

§ 94. Number and amount of creditors who should join in petition—To what debtors statute applies.

The same proportion of creditors must join in the proceeding to force a corporation into bankruptcy that is required in the case of natural persons, under Act June 22, 1874, § 12.—In re Leavenworth Sav. Bank, Case No. 8,165, affirming Case No. 8,166; In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561, reversing Case No. 10,558.

The petition will be dismissed where the debtor has counterclaims against the petitioning creditor, of such a nature as are provable in bankruptcy, sufficient to reduce his claim below $250.—In re Osage Val. & S. K. R. Co., Case No. 10,592.

An involuntary petition must be signed by one-third in value of all the creditors, and by one-fourth in number of creditors whose debts exceed $250. If there are none such, or if a sufficient number of them do not petition, the one-fourth in number may be made up from the smaller creditors, and it is not necessary that the larger creditor should refuse to sign. It is sufficient if they do not sign. (Act 1874, § 12.)—In re Currier, Case No. 3,492.

In computing the number of creditors who must join in the petition, creditors whose debts do not exceed $250 are not to be reckoned, but, in computing the amount or value, all should be included. (Act 1867, as amended Act June 22, 1874.)—In re Hadley, Case No. 5,894; In re Broich, Id. 1,921; In re McAdam, Id. 8,654; In re Woodford, Id. 17,972; In re Hymes, Id. 6,986; In re Philadelphia Axle Works, Id. 11,-091.

The petitioning creditors whose debts equal or exceed $250 must be one-fourth of all that class of creditors.—In re Riker, Case No. 11,-833.

The aggregate of petitioners' debts must be equal to one-third of all the debts, irrespective of their individual amounts, provable against the estate (Act June 22, 1874).—In re Bergeron, Case No. 1,342; In re Hadley, Id. 5,894. CONTRA, see In re Hymes, Case No. 6,986.

One-fourth of the creditors, whose provable debts severally are over $250, and in the aggregate are equal in amount to one-third of the provable debts, are sufficient to constitute a legal quorum of petitioning creditors.—In re Lloyd, Cases Nos. 8,429, 8,430.

In default of enough of this class signing the petition, one-fourth in number of all the creditors, whose debts, without regard to their several amounts, equal in the aggregate one-third of all the provable debts, must be joined. —In re Lloyd, Case No. 8,429.

In making up the requisite number, petitioners may compute those simply whose debts exceed $250, or proceed upon the hypothesis that they represent one-quarter of the entire number of creditors, in which case those of less amount than $250 may be reckoned.—In re Hall, Case No. 5,923.

Where petitioners who hold debts exceeding $250 do not represent one-third of all provable debts, every $250 creditor sinks into a common unit in the mass of creditors, and counts but one.—In re Blair, Case No. 1,481.

Creditors whose claims are under $250 are not to be counted in computing the number who must unite in an involuntary petition, if one-fourth of the creditors whose claims are above that sum join in the petition.—In re Woodford, Case No. 17,972.

The petitioning creditors cannot add their costs to their debt, in order to raise it above the jurisdictional amount.—In re Skelley, Case No. 12,921.

All the creditors joining in a petition need not file proofs of debts.—In re Philadelphia Axle Works, Case No. 11,091.

§ 96. —— What demands are included in computation.

Costs of attachment proceedings do not constitute a demand against a debtor which can be included in estimating the amount of his provable debts.—In re Hatje, Case No. 6,215.

In computing the quorum of creditors, debts secured and debts barred by the statute must be eliminated, and all offsets due the debtor deducted.—In re Bouton, Case No. 1,706.

Secured creditors or those claiming liens are not counted in determining whether the requisite number of creditors have joined in the petition. Act June 22, 1874.—In re Frost, Case No. 5,134; In re Green Pond R. Co., Id. 5,786; In re Crossette, Id. 3,435.

The claim of a creditor on a bond, the sureties on which have been indemnified by mortgage, is not a secured claim, and should be counted in computing the legal quorum of petitioning creditors.—In re Lloyd, Case No. 8,429.

An indorsed promissory note is not a secured claim, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 5075 (Act 1867).—In re Broich, Case No. 1,921.

A secured creditor may be counted as having a provable debt if he seasonably releases his security before the hearing and decision as to a quorum.—In re Crossette, Case No. 3,435.

The act of joining in a creditors' petition by a secured creditor, without reference to the security, is a waiver of such security.—In re Broich, Case No. 1,921.

Creditors fraudulently preferred are not to be counted in estimating the number and value of creditors who must join in the petition (Act 1867, § 39, as amended Act 1874, § 12).—Clinton v. Mayo, Case No. 2,899; In re Currier, Id. 3,492; In re Israel, Id. 7,111.

Attachment creditors who acquired their liens within four months are not to be reckoned in computing the proportion of creditors who must unite in the petition.—In re Scrafford, Case No. 12,556, reversing Id. 12,557; In re Jewett, Case No. 7,305. CONTRA, see In re Broich, Case No. 1,921.

A party may purchase a claim in good faith, in order to join in an involuntary petition, and make the necessary number.—In re Woodford, Case No. 17,972.

If such sale of a claim is void for fraud or want of consideration, the claim is to be deemed to belong to the assignor, and will be so treated in determining whether the requisite creditors have joined in the petition.—In re Woodford, Case No. 17,972.

An indorser of the bankrupt's paper, who has, before the filing of the petition, become absolutely liable to the holders, by due notice of dishonor, is not a creditor of the bankrupt at the time of such filing.—In re Riker, Case No. 11,833.

Where an indorser pays an indorsee of a note pending bankruptcy proceedings against the maker, the indorsee is no longer a creditor of the maker, and the indorser becomes subrogated to the indorsee's rights.—In re Broich, Case No. 1,921.

§ 97. —— Time to join in petition.

Twenty days will be allowed pending investigation of the sufficiency of the bankrupt's list of creditors for other creditors to join in the petition for adjudication.—In re Bullock, Case No. 2,130.

Creditors may unite in the proceedings any time before the judicial ascertainment, made on notice to creditors, that the requisite number and amount have not joined. Rev. St. § 5021, as amended Act June 22, 1874, § 12.—In re Frisbee, Case No. 5,129.

Where the ascertainment as to whether the requisite number and amount of creditors have joined is not made upon reasonable notice to the creditors, the power to grant time for other creditors to join is not limited by Act June 22, 1874, § 12.—In re Rebmeister, Case No. 11,623.

Petitioning creditors will be allowed 10 days further time, in which to obtain the consent of others to join in the petition.—In re California Pac. R. Co., Case No. 2,315.

§ 98. —— Hearing and determination.

Where a question is made as to whether a sufficient number of creditors have joined in an involuntary petition in bankruptcy, the case may be referred to a register or commissioner to examine the proofs and report.—In re Sargent, Case No. 12,361.

On a denial by the debtor that the requisite number and amount of creditors have joined, a reference will be ordered to ascertain the fact, on 10 days' notice to all creditors, on which reference the creditors have the affirmative of the issue.—In re Hymes, Case No. 6,986.

Upon a reference to a register to determine whether or not there is a legal quorum of petitioning creditors, he should return with his report lists of the claims counted and rejected.—In re Lloyd, Case No. 8,429.

In determining whether the petitioners represent one-third of all the debts provable, the bankruptcy court may examine a petition for an injunction filed with the petition in bankruptcy.—In re California Pac. R. Co., Case No. 2,315.

An affidavit of debtors admitting that the petition is presented by the requisite creditors accompanying a petition for involuntary bankruptcy is no part thereof, but is evidence of good faith in admissions by bankrupts on which the adjudication was founded, and any examination of the facts adjudged by the court is forbidden unless fraud is alleged.—In re Duncan, Case No. 4,131.

The allegation and proof as to the requisite number of creditors joining in the petition cannot be waived by the debtor.—In re Scammon, Case No. 12,427.

The petition will be dismissed on motion without requiring the debtor to file a schedule, where it appears that the petitioning creditors knew that they did not constitute the requisite number of creditors, under Act June 22, 1874.—In re Scammon, Case No. 12,429.

On such motion the court will hear affidavits in evidence offered by either party, and may order an examination of the persons verifying the petition.—In re Scammon, Case No. 12,429.

Since the amendatory act of June 22, 1874, a petition by a single creditor will not be sustained, if it appears that he did not have good reason to believe that he constituted the requisite portion of the creditors.—In re Scammon, Case No. 12,428.

Affidavits are admissible to show that a single creditor, filing a petition, had good reason to believe that he did not constitute the requisite proportion of creditors (Act June 22, 1874).—In re Scammon, Case No. 12,428.

The bankruptcy court may inquire into the value of securities held by creditors, to determine whether the debts due petitioners are of the amount required, and that a secured creditor has a provable debt.—In re California Pac. R. Co., Case No. 2,315.

The judgment of the district court declaring that a legal quorum of petitioning creditors have joined in the proceeding (Act June 22, 1874) is final, and precludes further review by the circuit court.—In re Lloyd, Case No. 8,431.

§ 99. —— Objections.

A merchant who has refused to give creditors demanding it information about his affairs sufficient to enable them to know the number and amount of his debts will not be heard to object that a sufficient number of his creditors did not join in the petition, if enough have come in before trial (Act 1867).—Perin & Gaff Mfg. Co. v. Peale, Case No. 10,981.

Lawful solicitation by a debtor to induce his creditors to sign a petition against him in involuntary bankruptcy is permissible.—In re Bouton, Case No. 1,706.

§ 100. —— Withdrawal of petitioners.

A creditor voluntarily joining in a petition to make up the requisite number and amount cannot afterwards defeat the proceedings by withdrawing his consent.—In re Rosenfields, Case No. 12,061; In re Heffron, Id. 6,321; In re Philadelphia Axle Works, Id. 11,091.

Such creditor cannot withdraw on the ground that he was induced to join in the petition by misrepresentations made by the debtors.—In re Vogel, Case No. 16,981. CONTRA, see In re Sargent, Case No. 12,361.

§ 101. Effect of tender or payment by debtor.

If the debtor against whom a petition in bankruptcy is pending is clearly insolvent, he cannot defeat the petition by tendering the petitioning creditor the amount of his debt.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,703.

The district court has no jurisdiction of an involuntary case unless the debtor owes provable debts exceeding $300, and owes the petitioning creditors $250 thereof. If the indebtedness is reduced, by payments after the filing of the petition, below those sums, jurisdiction is lost.—In re Skelley, Case No. 12,921.

Receipt by petitioning creditors of payments reducing the indebtedness below the minimum fixed by the statute in order to confer jurisdiction is a waiver of the act of bankruptcy alleged in their petition.—In re Skelley, Case No. 12,921.

The receipt by a creditor of part of his claim does not preclude him from becoming a petitioner in an involuntary proceeding against his debtor, if he offers to bring the payment into the registry of the court.—In re Marcer, Case No. 9,060.

§ 102. Substitution of parties.

Where one who files a petition in bankruptcy against another is himself adjudged a bankrupt, his assignee may be properly substituted as petitioner in his place. Act 1867, § 16.—In re Jones, Case No. 7,450.

§ 103. Intervention—To prosecute petition.

Where an application is made by creditors for an involuntary decree, under Act 1841, in bankruptcy, it is open to other creditors to come in on the day appointed by the court for the hearing, and pray for a decree, although the petitioning creditors may in the meantime have arranged with the debtors.—Ex parte Calendar, Case No. 2,307.

The application of a creditor to have his debtor decreed a bankrupt, in invitum, under Act 1841, inures to the benefit of all the creditors, any of whom may come in within a reasonable time, and prosecute the petition, but a delay by such creditors for 17 months to prosecute the petition will deprive them of the right.—Ex parte Freedley, Case No. 5,079.

Where the petitioning creditor, under Act 1867, fails to prosecute, another creditor may intervene and prosecute the petition.—In re Lacey, Case No. 7,965; In re Buchanan, Id. 2,073; In re Calendar, Id 2,307; In re Sheffer, Id. 12,742.

The right of such creditor to intervene cannot be defeated by any settlement whereby the petitioning creditor attempts to withdraw the petition.—In re Lacey, Case No. 7,965; In re Buchanan, Id. 2,073; In re Calendar, Id. 2,307.

The application of a creditor for an adjudication upon the petition of another creditor cannot be made after the return or adjourned day of the order to show cause.—In re Olmsted, Case No. 10,505.

Where the parties appear and join issue, and no further proceedings or adjournment is had, the matter will be regarded as pending from day to day, until disposed of, to permit any other creditor to come in and prosecute the original petition.—In re Buchanan, Case No. 2,073.

Such intervening creditors need not constitute one-fourth in number of the creditors, or represent one-third in value of the debts due by the debtors.—In re Sheffer, Case No. 12,742.

On such intervention, the case proceeds upon the original petition, and the adjudication will operate upon preferences given within four months before it was filed.—In re Lacey, Case No. 7,965.

Where the original petition was insufficient as to the number and amount who signed, the fact that intervening petitions sufficient, of themselves, as to number and amount, to constitute the necessary quorum, were afterwards filed, will not sustain the jurisdiction of the court.—Robinson v. Hanway, Case No. 11,953.

An order in an involuntary proceeding that the petition be dismissed, when all the fees due the clerk and marshal shall be paid, is not a financial discontinuance, so as to deprive another creditor of the right to intervene and prosecute the original petition at any time before such fees are paid.—In re Lacey, Case No. 7,965.

The debtor alone is properly the "person interested" to appear and contest the facts stated as the grounds for the petition (Act 1841).—Dutton v. Freeman, Case No. 4,210.

The stockholders of a creditor bank are not parties in interest so as to be entitled to object to a decree.—In re Tallmadge, Case No. 13,738.

Where it is alleged in the petition that certain creditors have been fraudulently preferred, and the bankrupt does not appear, they may appear and contest the allegations.—In re Heusted, Case No. 6,440.

An attaching creditor is not a "person interested," and has no right to appear and contest the facts stated in the petition of creditors in an involuntary proceeding.—Dutton v. Freeman, Case No. 4,210.

§ 105. —— To oppose adjudication (Act 1867).

An attaching creditor, though not a party, may intervene and oppose an adjudication.—In re Mendelsohn, Case No. 9,420; In re Hatje, Id. 6,215; In re Williams, Id. 17,706; In re Scrafford, Id. 12,557; In re Burton, Id. 2,214.

Such creditor may oppose the adjudication on the ground of fraud and collusion between the petitioner and debtor.—In re Mendelsohn, Case No. 9,420.

Or on the ground that the requisite number and amount of creditors have not joined.—In re Hatje, Case No. 6,215.

Such creditor may intervene to oppose, not only to object to the jurisdiction, but also to contest the proceeding upon the merits, and may take advantage of any ground of defense which would be available to the debtor.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,706.

A creditor who, after the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, obtains an attachment and a judgment in a pending suit, has only the rights of a creditor at large, and cannot intervene and contest the right to an adjudication.—In re Vogel, Case No. 16,981.

The levies of execution by the creditors applying to intervene and contest the adjudication, after the filing of the petition in an involuntary proceeding, gives them no greater right to intervene than the creditors at large.—In re Lawrence, Case No. 8,133.

A creditor or other person having an adverse interest to be affected by an adjudication in bankruptcy may be admitted to defend.—In re Austin, Case No. 662; In re Jonas, Id. 7,442; Anonymous, Id. 441. CONTRA, see In re Boston, H. & E. R. Co., Case No. 1,679; In re Bush, Id. 2,222.

Judgment creditors who would be damaged by the adjudication in an involuntary proceeding may intervene to oppose proceedings alleged to have been brought by fraudulent collusion between petitioner and defendant.—In re Jack, Case No. 7,119.

A creditor of a corporation upon whose petition it has been adjudged a bankrupt will be allowed to intervene to prevent bankruptcy proceedings subsequently commenced in another state.—In re Boston, H. & E. R. Co., Case No. 1,677.

Where debtor in involuntary bankruptcy proceedings declines to defend in form, but is personally present, the court will hear suggestions from any creditor that an insufficient number of persons had joined in the petition.—Clinton v. Mayo, Case No. 2,899.

A creditor at large may suggest suspicious circumstances, upon which the bankruptcy court will direct an inquiry to ascertain whether the petition is not collusively and fraudulently prosecuted.—In re Hopkins, Case No. 6,684.

5. Pleadings and Depositions.

§ 106. In general.

A formal plea in bankruptcy is not necessary nor usual, and, if filed, will be treated as a motion.—In re Book, Case No. 1,637.

The construction and sufficiency of pleadings depend upon the rules of the court in which the petition is pending.—In re Sutherland, Case No. 13,638.

§ 107. Petition—Formal requisites.

In a case of involuntary bankruptcy, the name of the judge to whom the petition is addressed must be correctly stated, and when stated incorrectly it cannot be stricken out as surplusage, and permission to file such petition will be denied.—Anonymous, Case No. 459.

A petition will not be allowed to be filed where the writing is illegible.—Anonymous, Case No. 471.

§ 108. —— Allegations in general.

Facts relied upon to justify a warrant of arrest and seizure should not be set forth in the creditors' petition.—In re Hadley, Case No. 5,894.

A petition against a corporation which does not show that the corporation is either a moneyed, business, or commercial corporation is insufficient. Cases Nos. 10,558, 10,559, reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

§ 109. —— Allegations as to number and amount of creditors.

Under Act June 22, 1874, a petitioner in proceedings commenced since December 1, 1873, where no adjudication is had, must file a sworn amendment to the petition, alleging that the petitioners represent the requisite number and amount of creditors.—In re Joliet Iron & Steel Co., Case No. 7,436.

The allegation as to the requisite number of creditors may be on information and belief.—In re Scammon, Case No. 12,427; Id. 12,430.

It is sufficient to state upon belief, without averring either knowledge or information, that the petitioning creditors constitute the required number, and that their debts constitute the required amount (Act 1867, § 39, as amended Act June 22, 1874, § 12).—In re Mann, Case No. 9,033; Perin & Gaff Mfg. Co. v. Peale, Id. 10,981.

The absence of an allegation as to the number and amount of the creditors joining in the petition is not supplied by an admission in writing of the debtor, not duly authenticated, and not shown to have been made in good faith.—In re Keeler, Case No. 7,638.

Where it appears that the claims of several of the petitioners are each less than $250 in amount, the petition is not thereby rendered invalid, where they have included in their petition the ordinary allegation that the petitioners constitute one-fourth in number, etc., and that the aggregate of their debts amounts to at least one-third of the provable debts, etc.—In re Hall, Case No. 5,923.

§ 110. —— Allegations as to indebtedness.

An allegation by petitioning creditors that there is due them by the alleged bankrupts $500 and upward is a sufficient statement of their debt to enable them to institute proceedings.—Ex parte Shouse, Case No. 12,815.

A rule of court requiring the petition to state the consideration or cause of indebtedness does not apply to a debt converted into a judgment.—In re Mott, Case No. 9,878b.

An allegation of the dissolution of a partnership between the petitioner and the alleged bankrupt, and of an indebtedness "for assets and money of said co-partnership," because of unsettled partnership transactions, will not warrant an adjudication.—Sigsby v. Willis, Case No. 12,849.

A petition alleging that the debtor owes a debt, but not alleging that it is owed to the petitioning creditor, is insufficient.—In re Western Savings & Trust Co., Case No. 17,442.

The nature of petitioners' debts should be so far stated in the petition that the court may see they are provable against the estate.—In re Hadley, Case No. 5,894.

An involuntary petition need not allege that petitioners' debts are unsecured, when it is alleged that they are provable debts.—In re Harmon, Case No. 6,078.

§ 111. —— Allegations as to acts of bankruptcy.

The petition in invitum must allege that the debtor was a trader when he committed the act of bankruptcy.—In re Bonnet, Case No. 1,632.

Fraudulent suspension and nonpayment need be averred only when the act of bankruptcy charged is that specified in Act 1867, § 39, cl. 9.—In re Nickodemus, Case No. 10,254.

A petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against a railroad company, on the ground that it had fraudulently stopped payment of its commercial paper, which fails to aver, in the terms of Act 1867, § 39, that the company was a "banker, broker, merchant, trader, manufacturer, or miner," is fatally defective; and, where no proof of such facts is offered, the petition should be dismissed.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 126.

An averment that the debtor, "being a merchant, has fraudulently stopped payment," etc., is a sufficient averment that he is a merchant, under Act 1867, § 39, cl. 9.—In re Nickodemus, Case No. 10,254.

The intent of the debtor in suspending payment of commercial paper should be alleged in an involuntary petition as a fact.—In re Orem v. Harley, Case No. 10,567.

Under the amendatory act of 1874, a general allegation that a debtor, "being a merchant and trader, fraudulently stopped payment," is sufficient, although it is not alleged that the stoppage was of commercial paper, as such act covers the fraudulent stoppage of the payment of debts generally.—In re Hadley, Case No. 5,894.

A petition founded upon the suspension of payment of commercial paper need not negative all the circumstances which might excuse the nonpayment.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,780.

An allegation in a petition that the debtor, being a trader, stopped payment of his commercial paper within a period of 14 days, is too indefinite to put the burden of proof upon the debtor concerning such alleged stoppage, and may be disregarded as immaterial.—In re Randall, Case No. 11,551.

The allegation of suspension of payment of commercial paper on a certain day, and that payment had been demanded at different times thereon, is equivalent to an allegation of demand on that day.—In re Chappel, Case No. 2,612.

When the act of bankruptcy charged is suspension of commercial paper, such paper should be described or identified.—Anonymous, Case No. 441.

A general reference in a voluntary petition to an assignment for creditors, where a copy is given, is sufficient.—In re Plimpton, Case No. 11,227.

The facts concerning an alleged act of bankruptcy should be stated in the petition with such certainty and detail as to inform the debtor of what he is required to make proof or explanation, as provided in Act 1867, § 41.—In re Randall, Case No. 11,551.

The allegations as to the existence of the debt or the commission of the acts of bankruptcy need not be made upon the personal knowledge of petitioner.—In re Muller, Case No. 9,912.

A petition which states that the debtor committed the alleged acts of bankruptcy, "within six calendar months next preceding the date thereof," and on or about a certain day therein, is sufficiently certain in this respect; and as to third persons, in collateral proceedings, the allegation is sufficient without the mention of a particular day.—In re Muller, Case No. 9,912.

In an involuntary petition a charge in the alternative that the debtor was insolvent, or in contemplation of bankruptcy, at the time of the act in question, is insufficient.—In re Hanibel, Case No. 6,023.

Where a preference is alleged, it is not necessary to state that such preference was in fraud of Act 1867 (14 Stat.), but the name of the person preferred should be set forth.—In re Hadley, Case No. 5,894.

§ 112. Depositions.

The allegations in proof of the act of bankruptcy should be made by separate deposition, and upon personal knowledge, and should make out a prima facie case.—In re Hadley, Case No. 5,894.

The depositions in proof of debt are intended to support the allegations of the petition, not to supply defects in them.—In re Hadley, Case No. 5,894.

The deposition of acts of bankruptcy, to authorize the making of an order to show cause, must be such as constitutes legal testimony.—In re Rosenfields, Case No. 12,061.

On a petition to have a person declared an involuntary bankrupt, an omission to file proof of an act of bankruptcy is substantial, and cannot be remedied.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,981.

A deposition to a proof of a claim in involuntary bankruptcy must show whether the claim is secured or unsecured.—Cunningham v. Cady, Case No. 3,480.

The depositions in support of an involuntary petition in reference to the debts of the petitioners must definitely describe the debts, and show that they were unsecured.—In re Harmon, Case No. 6,078.

In a petition in involuntary bankruptcy, an allegation that the debtors "have fraudulently stopped and suspended, and not resumed payment of their commercial paper for a period of 14 days," is insufficient, where no affidavit accompanied it to show that such stoppage was fraudulent.—In re Cone, Case No. 3,095.

A deposition to an act of bankruptcy, consisting of a fraudulent conveyance, must allege or show the fraudulent intent of the debtor in making the conveyance.—Cunningham v. Cady, Case No. 3,480.

A petition in involuntary bankruptcy will not be dismissed because the depositions in support thereof are defective, but the order to show cause will be set aside, and the petitioning creditor, on motion, will be allowed to file supplemental depositions, and a new order to show cause may be issued thereon.—Cunningham v. Cady, Case No. 3,480.

§ 113. Demurrer.

A demurrer is not the proper mode of objecting to irrelevant or immaterial allegations of a creditor's petition, or the mingling in one plea of distinct defenses, but such objection should be made by a motion to strike out.—In re Ouimette, Case No. 10,622.

The sufficiency of an averment in an involuntary petition as to the suspension of payment of commercial paper cannot be raised by demurrer.—In re Orem v. Harley, Case No. 10,567.

Where the overruling of a demurrer to an amended involuntary petition was without prejudice to an application for leave to answer on showing satisfactory cause, and such an application to answer is promptly and duly made, and the proposed answer is duly verified, and contains valid defenses, the leave to answer should be granted.—In re Morse, Case No. 9,851.

§ 114. Answer.

The debtor's answer to the creditor's petition, in order to entitle him to a hearing by the court, or a trial by jury, need not be in writing or verified. It is sufficient if he appear in court, and deny the truth of the facts set forth in the petition.—In re Heydette, Case No. 6,444. CONTRA, see In re Findlay, Case No. 4,789.

A paper simply denying the acts of bankruptcy charged, and demanding a trial by jury, is a proper response to a rule upon the debtor to show cause why he should not be declared a bankrupt.—Phelps v. Clasen, Case No. 11,074.

In a petition in an involuntary proceeding, the debt and the act of bankruptcy constitute the cause of action, and the defense thereto may go to either or both of these matters.—In re Ouimette, Case No. 10,622.

A debtor who has paid one creditor to the exclusion of others cannot be heard to say that he did not intend a preference. And, if his answer sets up no other defense than a denial of the intent, judgment may be given against him as upon failure to answer.—Silverman's Case, Case No. 12,855.

Pleadings in the district court in bankruptcy cases must be special, and a mere general denial of the intent with which an alleged act of bankruptcy is averred to have been done is insufficient; respondent must allege and prove with what intent he did the act.—Silverman's Case, Case No. 12,855.

Where a debtor denies the allegation of a creditor's petition respecting his insolvency, he has made a sufficient answer thereto, and a further statement as to the value of his property, as compared with the amount of his indebtedness, is surplusage and is immaterial.—In re Ouimette, Case No. 10,622.

Distinct defenses to a petition in an involuntary proceeding should be separately pleaded.—In re Ouimette, Case No. 10,622.

In involuntary proceedings no replication to the denial by the debtors, according to Form No. 61, is necessary to raise an issue as to the acts of bankruptcy alleged in the petition.—In re Dunham, Case No. 4,143.

§ 116. Signature and verification.

If neither the petition nor the deposition of the act of bankruptcy is signed by the petitioner, in person, the defect is fatal.—Hunt v. Pooke, Case No. 6,896.

In an involuntary proceeding the failure of petitioners to subscribe the affidavit to the petition is an incurable defect.—Moore v. Harley, Case No. 9,764.

Where several petitioners join in separate and distinct rights, a verification by or on behalf of each is required.—In re Simmons, Case No. 12,864.

A verification of the petition by a person whose name is omitted from the body is ineffectual as to him.—In re Rosenfields, Case No. 12,061.

A petition may be signed and sworn to by an attorney of the petitioning creditor duly authorized.—In re Raynor, Case No. 11,597.

The signing of a petition by an attorney who was not admitted to practice in the district court is no ground for dismissing the proceedings—In re O'Halloran, Case No. 10,463.

The signing and verification for all the signers may be done by one agent.—In re California Pac. R. Co., Case No. 2,315.

The authority under which an agent of a petitioning creditor acts need not be set forth, even though both signing and verification have been done by him.—In re California Pac. R. Co., Case No. 2,315.

Where the petition is signed and verified by an agent, proof of his agency, or of express authority, is necessary.—In re Rosenfields, Case No. 12,061.

Where a petition in bankruptcy is verified by attorney, he must show his authority for making such verification.—In re Sargent, Case No. 12,361.

A petition in an involuntary proceeding is defective in not setting out the special authority of the president of a bank, who is one of the petitioning creditors, to sign and verify the same on behalf of the bank, his general authority as an officer not being sufficient.—Roche v. Fox, Case No. 11,974.

Supplementary proof may be received nunc pro tunc, in the discretion of the court, to establish the authority of the agent to sign and verify the petition.—In re Rosenfields, Case No. 12.061.

Where a petition is verified by an attorney, the nonresidence of his principal should be directly alleged, and not by way of recital.—In re Hadley, Case No. 5,894.

Where the petitioners, constituting one-fourth in number and one-third in value of the creditors, are less than five, it is unnecessary for a person verifying the petition as agent to state the residence of his principals. (Act June 22, 1874, § 12.)—In re Simmons, Case No. 12,864.

Where a petition is filed by a corporation it may be verified by an agent who is not an officer thereof, but the authority of such agent must be established, and it is not sufficient that it is stated by the way of recital following his name.—In re Hanibel, Case No. 6,023.

Where, in an involuntary proceeding under Act 1867, as amended by Act June 22, 1874, it is stated in the petition upon belief, without averring either knowledge or information, that the required creditors in number and amount have joined, the oath to such petition may be in the form prescribed in Form No. 54.—In re Mann, Case No. 9,033.

The debtor's answer need not be verified.—In re Heydette, Case No. 6,444; In re Gebhardt, Id. 5,294. CONTRA, see In re Findlay, Case No. 4,789; In re Hymes, Id. 6,986.

A statement of creditors filed by the debtor on denial of bankruptcy must be verified. (Act June 22, 1874.)—In re Hymes, Case No. 6,986; In re Steinman, Id. 13,357.

Objections by the debtor to the verification of the petition are waived by taking issue thereon and demanding a jury trial.—In re McNaughton, Case No. 8,912.

The defect in the verification is waived by the debtor when he calls a meeting for composition; and, in the absence of fraud, the dissenting creditors cannot take advantage of it.—Ex parte Jewett, Case No. 7,303.

Evidence of acts of bankruptcy must be confined to those alleged in the petition.—Ex parte Potts, Case No. 11,344; Ex parte Shouse, Id. 12,815.

A refusal to pay commercial paper at a date prior to that stated in the petition cannot be given in evidence.—In re Sykes, Case No. 13,708.

Petitioners must support their allegations by proof where the facts charged are formally denied by answer. (Act 1841.)—In re Scudder, Case No. 12,563.

Under the issue made by the denial of bankruptcy, the debtor may prove that, at the time of the trial, he does not owe the amounts necessary to give the court jurisdiction.—In re Skelley, Case No. 12,921.

The creditor will be compelled to make out his case as in any other issue.—Brock v. Hoppock, Case No. 1,912.

Act 1867, § 41, allows the debtor to disprove on the trial all the material allegations of the petition.—In re Skelley, Case No. 12,921.

Where it is alleged in an involuntary petition that a claim is due, and the proof shows that it was not due, this is not a fatal variance, as it was not necessary to aver that the demand was due.—Linn v. Smith, Case No. 8,375.

When two distinct matters are alleged conjunctively, each of which contains a good cause for the debtor to be declared a bankrupt, it is enough if either of them be satisfactorily proved.—In re Drummond, Case No. 4,093.

Where the acts of bankruptcy are denied, though insolvency is admitted, a decree will not be entered until an act of bankruptcy alleged is proven.—In re Safe Deposit & Savings Inst., Case No. 12,211.

§ 118. Defects and objections.

The corporation, after appearing and answering, cannot afterwards object that the petition does not allege that it is a moneyed, business, or commercial corporation. Case No. 10,559, reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

§ 119. Amendments—Power to allow.

The bankruptcy court under Act 1867, on trial before a jury as to the facts of bankruptcy may permit amendment of the creditor's petition.—In re Bininger, Case No. 1,420.

The bankruptcy court may allow amendments where defective averments in the petition resulted from misapprehension of counsel.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,485.

The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction when a petition is filed, notwithstanding the insufficiency of the verification, and therefore power to allow the same to be amended.—In re Simmons, Case No. 12,864.

The allegation as to number and amount of creditors is an allegation of a jurisdictional fact, and, where the petition does not clearly show that the proper proportion has joined, the court has not jurisdiction, and it is not subject to amendment.—In re Rosenfields, Case No. 12,061. CONTRA, see Ex parte Jewett, Case No. 7,303.

A petition which shows, in contradiction of its general allegation, that the provable debts of some of the petitioners do not amount to $250, is demurrable, but the court may allow an amendment to remedy the defect.—Roche v. Fox, Case No. 11,974.

Where, in involuntary bankruptcy, the affidavits to the petition, or the depositions as to indebtedness and acts of bankruptcy, are insufficient, the court has power to allow supplemental affidavits or proofs to be filed.—In re Hanibel, Case No. 6,023.

In an involuntary proceeding the deposition of a witness to acts of bankruptcy cannot be amended, as it is the proof upon which the rule to show cause issues, and without which the whole proceeding is defective.—May v. Harper, Case No. 9,333.

§ 120. —— Objections.

A creditor who has joined in the petition cannot object to an amendment thereof which is necessary to the prosecution of the same to final effect.—In re Sargent, Case No. 12,361.

§ 121. —— Grounds.

An affidavit to an involuntary petition, being defective in form, may, on motion, be amended so as to conform to the law.—In re Sargent, Case No. 12,361.

A substantial amendment nunc pro tunc going to the foundation of the proceeding, under Act 1867, § 39, will not be allowed.—In re Craft, Case No. 3,317.

In cases pending at the time of the amendment of June 22, 1874, the petitions will not be dismissed because they do not contain the allegations required by the amendment, but the petitioners must insert the allegations as to number and amount of petitioners by amendment to the petition.—In re Scammon, Case No. 12,427; Id. 12,430; In re Scull, Id. 12,568.

Petitioners in an involuntary proceeding will not be allowed to amend the petition, to show jurisdiction, after an unexcused delay of nearly a year.—In re Freudenfels, Case No. 5,112a.

An amendment to the petition will not be allowed as to jurisdictional facts not required by law.—In re Wood, Case No. 17,935.

An amendment to the petition in involuntary proceedings will be allowed to cover the case made by the evidence where there is no surprise on the debtor.—In re Craft, Case No. 3,316.

The petitioners in an involuntary proceeding will not be allowed to amend their petition so as to allege new acts of bankruptcy.—Stern v. Schonfield, Case No. 13,377.

In an involuntary proceeding leave will not be granted to amend the petition so as to set up new causes or acts of bankruptcy, unless the debtor consents thereto.—In re Leonard, Case No. 8,255.

The bankruptcy court will not exercise its power of amendment, where the amendments proposed will introduce into the petition entirely new acts of bankruptcy, founded on facts not stated or referred to in the original petition.—Reed v. Cowley, Case No. 11,644.

Where the proofs disclose acts of bankruptcy not averred in the petition of the creditor the petition may be amended so as to conform to the proofs.—In re Gallinger, Case No. 5,202.

Where, in an involuntary proceeding, the petition fails to allege that the suspension of payment is fraudulent, leave will be granted to amend it in this particular.—In re Jersey City Window-Glass Co., Case No. 7,292.

Where the name of a creditor is stated in the petition, asserting a claim by a proper averment, but omitting the amount, the claim may be amended by adding the amount, if done in good faith.—In re Blair, Case No. 1,481.

Where it appears that the claims of creditors alleged to exceed $250 each do not amount to such sum, the petition is defective, but may be amended to conform to the facts.—In re McKibben, Case No. 8,859.

Where a petition avers that acts were committed by bankrupt in contemplation of bankruptcy and insolvency, and evidence of insolvency only is given, the petition may be amended accordingly.—In re Haughton, Case No. 6,223.

The petition in involuntary proceedings may be amended nunc pro tunc by averring that the act was done by a debtor "while insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency," where such facts are shown in the petition, and by evidence to which no objection is made by the debtor. Case No. 3,316 affirmed.—In re Craft, Case No. 3,317.

An amended petition in an involuntary proceeding cannot include a note indorsed by the debtor which did not fall due until after the original petition was filed.—In re Morse, Case No. 9,851.

An amended petition, filed by leave of court after the petitioner had assigned his demand, will be dismissed.—In re Western Savings & Trust Co., Case No. 17,442.

§ 122. —— Effect.

Amendments to a petition relate back to the time of the filing of the original petition, and have the same force and effect as though included in the petition itself.—Sherman v. International Bank, Case No. 12,765.

An amendment of a petition in bankruptcy to bring it within the amendment of June 22, 1874, is retroactive, and gives effect to action of the court taken on the original petition.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,700.

6. PROCEDURE AND ADJUDICATION.

§ 123. Service of order to show cause.

Where a corporation is chartered in four states, and in proceedings in bankruptcy against it in one of the states an order to show cause is served by delivering a copy to the superintendent of the company in another one of said states, such service is not sufficient, under Act 1867, § 40, providing that "if such debtor cannot be found," or his place of residence ascertained, service shall be made by publication, for the fact that it was chartered in four states did not make it one corporate body on which service could be made at its residence in any one of those states.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 126.

Service of the petition and order to show cause is made upon a corporation under Act 1867, which provides that service shall be made at the "usual place of abode" of the debtor or by delivering a copy to its principal officers at its principal place of business.—In re California Pac. R. Co., Case No. 2,315.

Jurisdiction of an insolvent banking corporation in the hands of a receiver of a state court is obtained by service of an order to show cause on its cashier on the day before a judgment of dissolution is entered.—Platt v. Archer, Case No. 11,213.

Service of an order to show cause upon the cashier of an insolvent banking corporation, who has given the keys of the bank to a receiver of its property appointed by a state court, and had become his clerk, on a salary, and ceased to act as cashier, but who is not displaced from his official relation to the corporation as cashier, is sufficient to give the district jurisdiction.—Platt v. Archer, Case No. 11,213.

Where an insolvent corporation has been dissolved, and a receiver appointed in a proceeding brought by the attorney general, in an involuntary proceeding against it, service of the order to show cause may be made by publication, as such case is one where the debtor cannot be found. — In re Washington Marine Ins. Co., Case No. 17,246.

§ 124. Default.

The register has power to make a valid adjudication in an involuntary case where the alleged bankrupt has made default.—In re De Ford, Case No. 3,744.

A motion to set aside the debtor's default on the ground that petitioner's debt, being based upon the sale of intoxicating liquor, was not provable, is too late where no excuse is shown for his default or delay.—In re Neilson, Case No. 10,090.

§ 125. Adjournment of hearings.

By the consent of parties, on the return day of an order to show cause in an involuntary proceeding, when an adjournment is applied for, it may be ordered that the adjourned day is to be with like effects, in all respects, as if such adjourned day were the return day of the order.—In re Pupke, Case No. 11,468.

§ 126. Termination of proceedings—In general.

The bankrupt cannot acquire a right to have involuntary proceedings dismissed by voluntarily surrendering himself to a sheriff, who has an order for his arrest, but with instructions not to proceed under it.—In re Merkle, Case No. 9,458.

In proceedings in invitum, the want of an adjournment to a day certain, after issue joined as to acts of bankruptcy, does not terminate the proceedings.—In re Buchanan, Case No. 2,073.

Proceedings for adjudication of bankruptcy in invitum can be discontinued only by an order of the bankruptcy court on special application.—In re Buchanan, Case No. 2,073.

The bankrupt court has full equitable discretion, and can allow a case to be withdrawn if without prejudice to any party.—In re Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co., Case No. 7,023.

§ 127. —— Death of debtor.

The proceedings abate by the death of the debtor between the time of serving the rule to show cause and the adjudication.—Frazier v. McDonald, Case No. 5,073.

A proceeding in bankruptcy will not be discontinued by the death of the bankrupt between the time of the entry of the order of adjudication and the physical "issuing of the warrant," under Act 1867, § 12.—In re Litchfield, Case No. 8,385.

After a petition has been filed against partners, the decease of one partner prior to any adjudication upon the question of bankruptcy is not legal cause for dismissing the petition.—Hunt v. Pooke, Case No. 6,896.

See, also, post, § 538.

§ 128. —— Withdrawal by creditor.

After an adjudication has been made, it is too late to make a motion to dismiss the proceedings and settle with the debtor.—In re Sherburne, Case No. 12,758.

The petitioning creditor may discontinue proceedings, and have his petition dismissed before adjudication, without giving notice to other creditors.—In re Camden Rolling-Mill Co., Case No. 2,338.

A motion, on the return day of the order to show cause, by the petitioning creditor, on receiving payment, to dismiss the petition, will be denied where another creditor has intervened and prays that the cause may proceed.—In re Mendenhall, Case No. 9,424.

The proceedings will be dismissed before the choice of an assignee when this is desired by the petitioning creditor, the bankrupt, and all creditors who have proved their debts.—In re Miller, Case No. 9,553.

A bankruptcy court will not set aside a stipulation discontinuing the bankruptcy proceedings given upon a release procured by fraud until relief is sought in a court having jurisdiction to set aside the release for fraud, or to award damages.—In re Bieler, Case No. 1,394.

§ 129. —— Dismissal.

A petition in involuntary bankruptcy will not be dismissed on the ground that a suit at law has been commenced and prosecuted to judgment by the petitioner against the debtor since the filing of the petition.—Van Kleeck v. Thurber, Case No. 16,861.

If the petitioner does not appear before the register at the time fixed in the order of reference, or within a reasonable time thereafter, excusing his delay, the petition may be dismissed.—In re Hatcher, Case No. 6,210.

When, on the day to which the proceedings for a hearing on the petition were adjourned, the petitioning creditor does not "appear and proceed," and the understanding with the debtor is that such failure to appear shall be equivalent to a dismissal, and no other creditor appears to be substituted, under Act 1867, § 42, the proceedings are at an end.—In re Camden Rolling-Mill Co., Case No. 2,338.

The other creditors must file a new petition, or appear on the adjourned day and petition to be substituted, under Act 1867, § 42.—In re Camden Rolling-Mill Co., Case No. 2,338.

The bankruptcy court will dismiss proceedings on petition filed by one member of a firm solely for the purpose of vexing and harassing the other partner.—In re Hamlin, Case No. 5,994.

The bankruptcy court considers a petition in bankruptcy as the joint act of all the petitioners, and willful falsehood in one petitioner's verification will cause a summary dismissal of the petition as the fraud of all, and an injunction issued therein will be vacated, and no co-petitioner's prayer for an amendment will be heard.—In re Keiler, Case No. 7,647.

A bankrupt cannot acquire the right to have involuntary proceedings dismissed, by surrendering himself to an officer who has an order for his arrest, issued by a state court, but with instructions not to proceed thereunder.—In re Merkle, Case No. 9,458.

Where the only debt on which an adjudication may be entered is that of the petitioner, the bankrupt may have the petition dismissed on its payment, with costs.—In re Sheehan, Case No. 12,738.

Where a bankrupt can settle all but a few contested claims, the bankruptcy court may, on consent of creditors, dismiss the proceedings on security being given to the nonassenting creditors.—In re Great Western Tel. Co., Case No. 5,739.

Where stockholders of bankrupt railroad purchase all outstanding floating indebtedness save minor claims held by petitioners, they may have proceedings dismissed on securing payment to them, as the bankruptcy court has full equitable discretion, and can allow a case to be withdrawn if without injury to any party.—In re Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co., Case No. 7,023.

§ 130. Evidence—Presumptions and burden of proof.

Neither an order to show cause, nor an order of seizure, injunction, or arrest, will be granted where the petitioner does not make a prima facie case.—In re Leonard, Case No. 8,255.

In a case of involuntary bankruptcy, the burden of proof is on the petitioning creditor. Case No. 10,559 reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

The burden is upon the debtor to disprove the facts set forth in the petition in an involuntary proceeding for an adjudication. (Act 1867, § 41.)—In re Price, Case No. 11,411.

Full and complete proof by the petitioning creditor of insolvency is not required, but proof tending to show insolvency casts the burden on the debtor to explain the evidence. Case No. 10,559 reversed.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

The burden of proving that the debtor's submission to judgment, etc., was with intent to give a prohibited preference, is on the petitioning creditor.—In re King, Case No. 7,783.

A farmer is not prima facie insolvent because unable to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business, and the burden of proof of insolvency is on petitioner. (Act 1867.)—Miller v. Keys, Case No. 9,578.

The giving of a confession of judgment does not of itself raise a presumption of insolvency.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,884.

§ 131. —— Competency and sufficiency.

On the trial of the issues in involuntary bankruptcy proceedings, it is proper to admit evidence as to negotiations between the petitioning creditors and the respondents, preceding the consummation of a compromise, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not an arrangement was made.—In re Jelsh, Case No. 7,257.

Letters written by a debtor to a third person, admitting the payment of a claim, interposed by attaching creditors in favor of another alleged creditor to defeat adjudication, are admissible in evidence in a contest upon such claim between the attaching and petitioning creditors.—In re Hatje, Case No. 6,215.

Where it is doubtful whether or not the intention of a transfer of property was such as to make it an act of bankruptcy, evidence will be received to prove the true circumstances of the whole transaction.—Ex parte Potts, Case No. 11,344.

The intent to prefer is to be proven as a fact by direct evidence, or as the necessary and certain consequence of other facts clearly proved.—Morgan v. Mastick, Case No. 9,803.

The admission of a fact from which a fraudulent intent will be inferred will be given full effect, though it be coupled with a denial of such fraudulent intent.—In re Sutherland, Case No. 13,638.

The oath of the petitioning creditor to his debt, without further proof, is not sufficient, where the debtor offers prima facie evidence that it is not due.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,959.

Where the only proof of an act of bankruptcy is the statement of the bankrupt, such statement must be accepted, in its entirety, as true.—In re Franklin, Case No. 5,053.

Under Act 1841, the proof of mere insolvency of the partners, without evidence of any fraudulent acts on their part, is not sufficient to sustain a petition against them in an involuntary proceeding.—Ex parte Hull, Case No. 6,856.

§ 132. —— Production of books and papers.

The district court has power to order the production of books and papers at the summary hearing on the return day of the order to show cause why such books and papers should not be produced.—In re Mendenhall, Case No. 9,423.

§ 133. Trial and new trial.

A demand for a trial by jury, where an application for the benefit of Act 1841 is dismissed, must be made at the term in which the decision is made.—In re Hunter, Case No. 6,902.

In a proceeding in invitum, where the insolvency is denied by the debtor, a jury trial will be granted if demanded, but not in a case where the debtor denies only the acts of bankruptcy alleged in the petition.—In re Grady, Case No. 5,654.

Where the debtor, in cases of involuntary bankruptcy, does not appear on return day of rule, he cannot demand a trial of issues by a jury.—In re Gebhardt, Case No. 5,294.

Where a debtor does not demand jury on return day after continuance he cannot afterwards demand jury. (Act 1867, § 41.)—Clinton v. Mayo, Case No. 2,899.

When the existence of the debt is denied, and the petitioning creditor desires a trial by jury, the bankruptcy court may grant it upon a proper issue framed for the purpose of ascertaining whether the debt is due or not; but, if the petitioning creditor does not desire it, the court may or may not, in its own discretion, order a trial by jury.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,959.

The bankruptcy court has power to summon a jury to try the issue of bankruptcy during the vacation of the district court proper.—Lehman v. Strassberger, Case No. 8,216.

The bankruptcy court may in its discretion issue a special venire and impanel a jury to try the issue at any time, without waiting for a regular term.—In re Findlay, Case No. 4,789.

In an involuntary proceeding the respondents have the right to open and close the case on a trial on the issue of bankruptcy.—In re Jelsh, Case No. 7,257.

In an involuntary proceeding, if the nature of the debt is set forth in the petition, which avers that the debt is provable under Act 1867, the question whether it is so provable is to be determined as a question of law, and not of fact.—Sigsby v. Willis, Case No. 12,849.

A proceeding to have a debtor adjudged bankrupt is a civil, and not a criminal, proceeding; and the federal district court has the same power over verdicts rendered in bankruptcy cases, whether for or against the debtor, as courts of common law, and may, on proper cause shown, set them aside and order a new trial.—In re Corse, Case No. 3,254; In re De Forrest, Id. 3,745.

§ 134. Adjudication—Form and entry.

In making an adjudication, the bankruptcy court need not formally determine whether the requisite proportion of creditors in number and amount have joined in the petition, where no direct issue is made on this point by the pleadings.—Lastrapes v. Blanc, Case No. 8,100.

The entry of an order constitutes the adjudication. A mere memorandum of the judge on the petition directing an order to be entered does not complete it; and the order cannot be entered nunc pro tunc where the amendatory act of June 22, 1874, imposing new conditions, has meanwhile taken effect.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,484.

§ 135. —— Persons and matters concluded.

An adjudication in bankruptcy is in the nature of a judgment in rem, and binding upon all the world.—In re Wallace, Case No. 17,094.

A creditor not appearing to the petition in bankruptcy is not estopped from denying the acts of bankruptcy charged so far as they affect him with notice.—In re Thomas, Case No. 13,891.

Where the record of the bankruptcy on its face shows jurisdiction, the decree adjudicating a debtor to be a bankrupt is conclusive as to the jurisdiction of the court in all collateral proceedings.—In re Ives, Case No. 7,115.

An adjudication of bankruptcy, had after due service by publication, is final, and will not be set aside on petition of the bankrupt and creditors disputing the allegations of the petition in bankruptcy, when no fraud or collusion is shown.—In re McKinley, Case No. 8,864.

The judgment of the bankruptcy court that the requisite number and amount of creditors have petitioned is final, and the matters so adjudged are not thereafter re-examinable, except in cases of fraud and imposition practiced on the court.—In re Duncan, Case No. 4,131; In re Funkenstein, Id. 5,158.

While an adjudication in bankruptcy stands unrevoked, all inquiry by a creditor who claims adversely to the assignee into the validity of the debt of the petitioning creditor in the involuntary proceedings is precluded.—In re Fallon, Case No. 4,628.

It is too late, after parties have been declared bankrupts as partners, to allow objections to be filed disputing their being partners at the time of their application.—In re Gilbert, Case No. 5,411.

§ 136. —— Vacating and setting aside.

An attaching creditor may move to set aside an adjudication of bankruptcy, though no party to the bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Bergeron. Case No. 1,342.

Mortgagees in a chattel mortgage given by an infant may petition to vacate an adjudication in bankruptcy against the mortgagor, made in proceedings on a petition filed before the mortgagor came of age.—In re Derby, Case No. 3,815.

Where an adjudication is had, and an assignee regularly appointed, the proceedings will not be set aside on the application of a creditor showing a prior filing of the petition against the bankrupt in another district.—In re Harris, Case No. 6,111.

An adjudication entered upon a confession of the acts of bankruptcy charged cannot be set aside after the death of the bankrupt on the application of a creditor who has proved his debt.—In re Thomas, Case No. 13,891.

That the bankrupt caused an involuntary petition to be prepared and presented to creditors, who signed and verified it without inquiry, shows a prima facie case of collusion, warranting a reference to take proofs, under a petition to set aside the adjudication.—In re Lalor, Case No. 8,001.

Where the adjudication of a corporation is made upon the waiver of important rights by its attorney, and the stockholders do not move to have the adjudication set aside until six months after it was made, and a large amount of the assets have been collected for distribution, and until they are themselves sued for their liability on unpaid stock, they are chargeable with laches, and their application will be denied.—In re Republic Ins. Co., Case No. 11,706; Leiter v. Republic Fire Ins. Co., Id. 8,227.

The proceedings may be set aside on motion, if made within a reasonable time, where an adjudication is had upon a waiver of important rights of the alleged bankrupt made by his attorney. Leiter v. Republic Fire Ins. Co., Case No. 8,227, affirmed.—In re Republic Ins. Co., Case No. 11,706.

Where a creditor seeks to vacate an adjudication he must make his application with due diligence on being informed of the facts, and where a creditor who opposed the bankrupt's discharge delays for nearly a year to apply for an order vacating the adjudication he is chargeable with laches.—In re Meade, Case No. 9,370.

There is no presumption that a creditor who is a party to the proceedings knows of the fraud of the bankrupt in procuring the petition in invitum to be signed by creditors, etc., and a delay by such creditor of two months and a half, after discovering that the proceedings were instituted by collusion, is not necessarily laches, which will prevent him from moving to set aside the adjudication.—In re Lalor, Case No. 8,001.

A default and an adjudication in involuntary proceedings will be set aside on petition of the bankrupt showing that he was non compos mentis at the time the alleged debts were contracted and the proceedings instituted.—In re Murphy, Case No. 9,946.

The fact that the debtors solicited creditors to join in the petition for involuntary bankruptcy furnishes no ground for setting aside an adjudication.—In re Duncan, Case No. 4,131.

It is no ground for setting aside the adjudication in involuntary bankruptcy that in some parts of the petition, owing to a clerical error, the amount of the debts was not filled in.—In re Duncan, Case No. 4,131.

The fact that the debtors, who have admitted by affidavit the acts of bankruptcy alleged, and that the requisite creditors have joined in the petition, may be able to obtain a discharge in the proceedings without paying any percentage on their debts, or proving the assent of creditors, is no ground for setting aside the adjudication.—In re Duncan, Case No. 4,131.

An adjudication will not be set aside after default merely to permit the bankrupt to contest the allegations in the petition as to the number and amount of petitioning creditors.—In re Le Favour, Case No. 8,208.

There is no legal fraud in the bankrupt's procuring an adjudication on involuntary proceedings to avoid the necessity of procuring the assent of the necessary number of creditors in the case of a deficiency of assets, unless it should be followed by a discharge which could not be had in voluntary proceedings.—In re Matot, Case No. 9,282.

The order of adjudication will be vacated upon proof being made of the assent of all known creditors that it may be vacated and publication of the notice of the application for annulment.—In re Magee, Case No. 8,941.

An application to set aside an adjudication on the ground of a prior agreement of compromise with the petitioning creditor, will be denied, where it is doubtful whether such agreement was not made for benefit of all the creditors.—In re Bush, Case No. 2,222.

Notice must be given to the bankrupt of an application to annul the adjudication in an involuntary proceeding, as the bankrupt has an interest in the continuance of the proceeding which may result in his discharge.—In re Bush, Case No. 2,222.

The question of want of jurisdiction, because of the insufficiency of the petition, cannot be raised on an application to set aside the adjudication on that ground.—In re Penn, Case No. 10,926.

§ 137. —— Conclusiveness and effect in general.

Involuntary proceedings cannot be impeached by the fact that the petition was delayed until the assignee was barred from attacking certain transfers.—In re Duncan, Case No. 4,131.

In the absence of all fraud the original adjudication must be considered as final and conclusive upon all the creditors, and cannot be disputed upon the question of granting a discharge.—In re Ordway, Case No. 10,552.

The adjudication of a firm in one district does not prevent a subsequent adjudication in another district of a firm in part composed of the same persons. Case No. 7,306 affirmed.—In re Jewett, Case No. 7,307.

The rights of the parties are fixed at the date of adjudication in bankruptcy.—In re Kerr, Case No. 7,729.

An adjudication in bankruptcy relates back to the filing of the original petition, and not to the time of an ancillary petition filed to correct an irregularity, and the levy after the filing of the original petition gives no lien.—In re Bear, Case No. 1,177.

Objections which might have been urged to show that a decree ought not to have been granted will be considered waived after the court have declared the petitioner a bankrupt.—In re Banks, Case No. 958.

The verification of a petition before a notary public is irregular, but does not affect the jurisdiction, and is cured by the adjudication.—In re Getchell, Case No. 5,371.

The absence of depositions from the files is a matter of practice and regularity, and not of jurisdiction, and is cured by the adjudication.—In re Getchell, Case No. 5,371.

An order adjudicating a debtor a bankrupt, made after the return day, but upon a petition of a creditor, and after notice to and appearance by the debtor, though it may be irregular, is not void, and cannot be collaterally assailed by his assignee under a previous voluntary assignment.—Hobson v. Markson, Case No. 6,555.

An adjudication without the appointment of an assignee and the issue of a warrant does not devest the bankrupt of the title to his property, and a mortgage given on a compromise with his creditors is valid as against the assignee, in subsequent proceedings in bankruptcy.—Robinson v. Hall, Case No. 11,952.

The verdict on a question as to whether an act of bankruptcy has been committed will not affect the question of the right to recover back the property transferred, or a right to a discharge.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,884; Harmanson v. Bain, Id. 6,072.

An adjudication of bankruptcy, in invitum, is not conclusive evidence as against such execution creditor as to the allegations in the petition for adjudication, found to be true by such decree.—In re Dunkle, Case No. 4,160.

§ 138. Collusive proceedings.

The motive of petitioners and of one of debtors co-operating will not be considered where the acts of bankruptcy are established.—In re Bininger, Case No. 1,420.

A bankrupt who procures a fraudulent petition to be filed by his creditors with intent to procure a discharge, which he could not obtain by voluntary proceedings, is in contempt of court in every movement based thereon.—In re Lalor, Case No. 8,001.

(D) WARRANT AND EXECUTION THEREOF.

§ 139. Provisional warrant — When granted generally.

The warrant provided for in Act 1867, § 40, may issue against the person and property of the debtor, or either of them.—In re Muller, Case No. 9,912.

§ 140. —— Seizure of property.

An order to show cause is not a preliminary requisite to the issuing of an injunction and warrant.—In re Muller, Case No. 9,912.

Injunctions and warrants may be allowed and issued under section 40 (Act 1867), without notice to the adverse party.—In re Muller, Case No. 9,912.

The bankruptcy court, in an involuntary proceeding, has no authority, under a provisional warrant, to order the seizure of property from the possession of a person to whom the debtor transferred it before the filing of the petition.—In re Harthill, Case No. 6,161; In re Holland, Id. 6,605; In re Manahan, Id. 9,003.

Where property is taken on a provisional warrant from the custody of a voluntary assignee, it will be restored to him on petition, only on condition of his releasing the marshal from all damages, and his agreeing not to dispose of the same except with the approval of the bankrupt court.—In re Manahan, Case No. 9,003.

Where the marshal in bankruptcy proceedings has seized property that the bankrupt had conveyed, and the grantee of such property appeared for the purpose of contesting the warrant for such seizure, he does not thereby become a party to the proceedings, so that the validity can be tried in the bankruptcy proceeding.—In re Harthill, Case No. 6,161.

Where a surviving partner is adjudged bankrupt on an act of bankruptcy committed in administering the partnership assets, the messenger will take possession of the joint assets in his hands, and also of his separate property.—In re Stevens, Case No. 13,393.

A finding by a jury that the debtor committed an act of bankruptcy in transferring certain property to a creditor authorizes the marshal to take possession thereof.—In re Miller, Case No. 9,551.

The marshal, under a warrant issued under Act 1867, § 40, may take possession of the bankrupt's property, wherever found, and, if indemnified, he has no option.—In re Briggs, Case No. 1,869.

The marshal is responsible for seizing property not belonging to the bankrupt, and the petitioning creditors who have indemnified him are bound to defend a suit by the claimant, and the bankruptcy court will not enjoin such suit at the instance of the assignee in bankruptcy who claims the property.—In re Marks, Case No. 9,095.

Under a warrant to take possession of the property of a debtor, the messenger is authorized to take such property in whosesoever hands he may find it; and if, by mistake or otherwise, he should take property not belonging to the debtor, it is no ground for discharging the warrant or vacating the order for its allowance, but the party aggrieved by such wrongful seizure has his remedy against the officer making it.—In re Muller, Case No. 9,912.

A provisional warrant in voluntary proceedings, on proof by affidavit of its necessity, will not be vacated, where such facts are not disproved, and it appears that the purpose of the bankrupts in making the motion to vacate is to deprive the marshal of his fees.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,811.

The taking possession by a marshal, under warrant in bankruptcy, of alleged property of a bankrupt, of which plaintiffs in replevin had obtained possession, is not a case of conflict between the marshal and the officers of the state court, and summary relief will not be granted.—In re Davidson, Case No. 3,598.

The federal circuit court has power to enjoin the prosecution of an action of trover in a state court against the marshal, for seizing the property of a third person under his warrant in bankruptcy.—Hudson v. Schwab, Case No. 6,835.

§ 141. —— Forthcoming bonds.

On breach of the condition of a bond given, pursuant to an order of the bankruptcy court, for the forthcoming of property, which the bankrupt is allowed to retain, the court has jurisdiction to proceed against the sureties by summary petition.—Case No. 9,353 affirmed.—In re Mayo, Case No. 9,353a.

Such a proceeding is not barred by the fact that the assignee previously brought a suit at law on the bond, resulting in a verdict for defendant, which was set aside and a new trial granted. Case No. 9,353 affirmed.—In re Mayo, Case No. 9,353a.

Where a forthcoming bond has been given for the release of goods under seizure, the bankruptcy court may summarily order the goods, or the value thereof, to be brought into court by the parties to the bond.—Rosenbaum v. Garnett, Case No. 12,053.

§ 142. —— Arrest of debtor and bail.

A provisional warrant will be granted where the bankrupt remained in possession of his assets, and disposed of a portion of them, and expressed an intention of going abroad to adjust his foreign accounts.—In re Hale, Case No. 5,911.

On application for a provisional warrant and order of arrest of the debtor under Act 1867, § 40, a separate petition, supported by affidavits of persons having knowledge of the facts, should be filed, where the facts are not stated in the petition of the petitioner's own knowledge.—In re McKibben, Case No. 8,859.

An action of debt lies upon a bond given by a bankrupt conditioned for his appearance in court from day to day agreeable to its order.—Marble v. Fulton, Case No. 9,059.

What amounts to a breach of the condition of such bond, and the damages recoverable thereon.—Marble v. Fulton, Case No. 9,059.

In the assessment of damages in a suit on a bail bond in bankruptcy proceedings, the pleadings are not regarded.—Marble v. Fulton, Case No. 9,059.

A charging in execution held to relate back to a prior surrender in exoneration of bail on arrest on mesne process.—Hazleton v. Valentine, Case No. 6,287.

A bankrupt, surrendered by his bail, during the time allowed for his examination, will not be committed in execution under the bankrupt law of 1800.—Foxall v. Levi, Case No. 5,015.

The court will not commit a bankrupt for want of bail who has surrendered to the commissioners, and whose examination is not closed, although the 42 days have expired.—Lingan v. Bayley, Case No. 8,370.

§ 143. Notices—Form.

The notices published and served on the creditors of a bankrupt by the marshal are not defective for an immaterial variance between them and the notices contained in the warrant, when such variance is not calculated to mislead.—In re Pulver, Case No. 11,466.

It is not a valid objection to proceedings that in the notices to the creditors objecting there is a variance in the middle letter of the bankrupt's name, provided they have not been misled thereby.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,481.

A notice in bankruptcy addressed to "Levley, New York," is insufficient as notice to Lawrence J. Levley, residing in New York.—In re Archenbrown, Case No. 504.

§ 144. —— Service.

Under rule 5 of the general orders in bankruptcy, a register may order publication of notice to creditors in newspapers out of the district, and he is not prohibited from doing so by rules 5 and 21 of the district court for the Southern district of New York.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,936.

The direction in the warrant for service, "either by mail or personally," does not confer discretionary power upon the marshal, who must serve all by mail, unless the warrant directs him to serve personally certain specified persons.—Anonymous, Case No. 458.

Notices of the first meeting of creditors must be served, and the publication completed, before the commencement of the 10 days immediately preceding the return day of the warrant. (Act 1867, § 11.)—In re Devlin, Case No. 3,841.

The clause in Act 1867, § 11, concerning service of notice on creditors by mail, refers to creditors residing out of the United States as well as those residing within.—In re Heys, Case No. 6,447.

Publication "once a week for three successive weeks" means publication once in every seven days, the interval between the last publication and any proceeding dependent upon the publication, as well as the intervals between the publications, being not less than seven days.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,266.

§ 145. —— Return or certificate of service.

The return of the marshal of the service of the warrant and order of adjudication may be made wholly on the warrant, or separately on the warrant and order of adjudication.—In re Kennedy, Case No. 7,699.

A return of the marshal that he had "sent written or printed notices to the creditors named on the schedules, and herewith returned, which schedules were made up by him on the best information he could obtain in respect thereto, after diligent search," is sufficient.—In re Adams, Case No. 41.

Under Act 1867, § 12, and general order 13, a marshal's return is defective, where, in a proceeding in invitum, he returns to the warrant that he has sent notices to the creditors named on a schedule delivered to him by the attorney for the petitioning creditor.—In re Ferris, Case No. 4,748.

The return of the marshal as to service of notice on creditors is not conclusive.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,481.

The marshal's return to the warrant, though not conclusive, is sufficient to authorize the register to proceed, if it shows due service and publication.—In re Pulver, Case No. 11,466.

The clerk's certificate under seal, that notices "were duly mailed to each creditor," will prevail, though it appear that a notice was mailed by the clerk to one of the creditors, naming a different day than that fixed.—In re Townsend, Case No. 14,116.

§ 146. —— Defective or insufficient service or proof.

Under Act 1867, § 40, service of a copy of the order of adjudication by publication is a right personal to the bankrupt, and delay therein should not retard the general course of proceedings where he has made default.—In re Kennedy, Case No. 7,699.

If the marshal undertakes the service of the warrant, the service of the order of adjudication is a necessary incident thereto, though not embraced within the command of the writ.—In re Kennedy, Case No. 7,699.

Where notice of the issuing of the warrant and the first meeting was duly published and served by mail, the regularity of the proceedings is not affected by the failure of the creditor to receive it.—In re Stetson, Case No. 13,381.

The proceedings will be set aside for the omission to publish notice of the first meeting of creditors in one of the papers designated, and for irregularities in, and false return to, the warrant of the register.—In re Hall, Case No. 5,922.

Where, on the return day of a warrant in involuntary bankruptcy, there is no proof of service of notices, the register should adjourn the meeting, and direct new notices to be served; but where, instead thereof, he certifies the facts to the court, a new warrant must issue.—In re Schepeler, Case No. 12,452.

Where a warrant states that the residence of a creditor is unknown, and gives his former residence, it is correct for the marshal in his notice to state that his residence is unknown, and the failure to serve him with notice is not error.—In re Pulver, Case No. 11,466.

§ 147. Enjoining transfer, disposition, or interference with debtor's property—Power to grant injunction.

The bankruptcy court may enjoin the debtor and any other person, pending involuntary proceedings, from conveying away, disposing of, or interfering with any property once owned by the debtor, and claimed to have been fraudulently transferred by him and concealed, upon prima facie proof of the fraud.—In re Abbott, Case No. 10; In re Holland, Id. 6,605.

The bankruptcy court may enjoin a receiver appointed in partnership dissolution proceedings in a state court from disposing of partnership assets, or from any interference with them, until the question whether or not the firm is bankrupt can be tried.—In re Hathorn, Case No. 6,214.

The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court to enjoin third persons from interfering with the goods of the debtor, or to issue a warrant to take provisional possession of them, does not depend upon the service on the debtor of a proper order to show cause why he should not be adjudged a bankrupt, but upon the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against such debtor.—In re Muller, Case No. 9,912.

Where a debtor takes advantage of a state insolvent law after Act 1841 has gone into operation, and an assignee is duly appointed in pursuance of the insolvent law, and subsequently such debtor petitions for the benefit of Act 1841, an injunction will be granted by the bankruptcy court against the assignee, under the state insolvent law, restraining him from intermeddling with the property of the debtor. — Ex parte Eames, Case No. 4,237.

Where there is a covinous connivance between the bankrupt and others to embezzle the estate for the benefit of the bankrupt and his preferred creditors, the court will interpose by injunction, upon adequate security to cover probable losses, and will not compel creditors to await the remedies of suits by the assignees at some future day and against parties of questionable responsibility.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,993.

A mere possibility of waste or misapplication of the bankrupt's estate by assignee in insolvency against whom an adverse decree is sought will not justify an injunction.—Ex parte Nightingale, Case No. 10,263.

An injunction will be granted by the bankruptcy court to restrain the bankrupt and other parties from disposing of the bankrupt's property until the further order of the court.—In re Camp, Case No. 2,346.

An injunction will be granted by the federal circuit court to restrain persons from collecting rents from real estate in which the bankrupt has an interest, and a receiver of the rents will be appointed.—Keenan v. Shannon, Case No. 7,640.

On proceedings in bankruptcy against a savings institution, an injunction to restrain its officers from collecting any rents from real estate in which the institution has any legal or equitable estate may be granted, it appearing that the principal executive officer was speculating with the funds of the institution for his own benefit, and that nearly all of its securities are mortgages held in his name, or in the names of persons previously associated with or controlled by him.—Keenan v. Shannon, Case No. 7,640.

On petition of creditors after an adjudication and before the appointment of an assignee, an injunction may be issued restraining interference with the property of the bankrupt.—In re Ulrich, Case No. 14,328.

An assignee for benefit of creditors may be enjoined from interfering with the debtor's assets even before an adjudication is had.—In re Skoll, Case No. 12,926.

§ 149. —— Application and notice.

An application for an injunction should contain a description of the property sought to be protected by a decree, together with the appropriate allegations of the danger or loss impending.—Blackburn v. Stannard, Case No. 1,468.

A bill by creditors to restrain an alleged fraudulent transferee of the debtor from disposing of the property, filed before a petition in bankruptcy, held to be an application under the bankrupt act.—In re Fendley, Case No. 4,728.

The federal circuit and district courts can exercise the power of granting injunctions in cases of bankruptcy ex parte, and without notice to the adverse party or his attorney.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,994.

Notice of an application for an injunction in bankruptcy need not be given unless specially directed, the provision in Act March 2, 1793, not being applicable.—In re Wallace, Case No. 17,094.

Injunction will be granted, pending petition restraining debtors from collecting and disposing of their assets, but will not be extended to persons not served with notice of application.—In re Calendar, Case No. 2,308.

§ 150. —— Form of injunction.

When a petition for injunction against third parties is united with a petition in involuntary bankruptcy, the injunction will be only provisional until the debtor is adjudged bankrupt, and a bill must then be filed against such third parties.—In re Kintzing, Case No. 7,833.

§ 151. —— Hearing.

On an application for an injunction, it is not competent for the respondents, by reciting an original petition in bankruptcy, and concluding in demurrer, to test the sufficiency of the original petition in bankruptcy, that being collateral.—Blackburn v. Stannard, Case No. 1,468.

A sale of a stock of goods, not made in the usual and ordinary course of business, is prima facie evidence of fraud. Act 1867, § 35.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,700.

Presumptions are against a person who withholds his books of account.—In re Abbott, Case No. 10.

§ 152. —— Violation.

A bankrupt who receives money from his debtor after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy and service of the injunction is guilty of contempt; but where he afterwards turns over to the assignee all his assets the contempt is purged, even though he may have spent part of the money thus collected.—In re Hayden, Case No. 6,257.

An involuntary bankrupt, who swore that he had sold certain notes and spent the proceeds before an injunction was served on him, and whose testimony was utterly discredited, may be ordered to turn over the amount within five days, on pain of attachment for contempt.—In re Kempner, Case No. 7,689.

Contempt proceedings against a third person for disobedience of an injunction issued in aid of the writ of bankruptcy must be distinct from those against the bankrupt.—Creditors v. Cozzens, Case No. 3,378.

§ 153. —— Dissolution of injunction.

An injunction, under Act 1867, § 40, upon third persons to refrain from interfering with the debtor's goods, does not extend beyond the time of making the adjudication, and any proceedings to punish parties for contempt in violating the injunction after adjudication will be dismissed.—In re Moses, Case No. 9,869.

An injunction to restrain the bankrupts from a transfer of their property issued under Rev. St. § 5024, will cease to operate when the adjudication is made, notwithstanding it contains the words "until the further order of the court."—In re Irving, Case No. 7,073.

An adjudication of bankruptcy does not necessarily dissolve injunctions granted after the commencement of the proceedings, restraining the bankrupt from disposing of his property.—In re Fendley, Case No. 4,728.

Act 1867, § 40, relating to the effect of the adjudication, only refers to such injunctions as were granted simultaneously with the order to show cause.—In re Fendley, Case No. 4,728.

That property is perishable is no ground for dissolving the injunctions which enjoin execution sales thereof prior to the adjudication.—In re Metzler, Case No. 9,512.

A judgment by default is prima facie fraudulent, and creditors petitioning for vacation of an injunction issued by the bankruptcy court against a sale thereunder must negative all circumstances under the statute making the transfer void.—In re Binns, Case No. 1,422.

On a motion to dissolve an injunction against third persons, such persons cannot be heard to object to the sufficiency of the petition, or the proof of debt or acts of bankruptcy.—In re Muller, Case No. 9,912.

Injunctions against execution sales of the debtor's property will not be dissolved on motion when such sales constitute the alleged acts of bankruptcy, and the debtor has taken issue thereon and demanded jury trial.—In re Metzler, Case No. 9,512.

§ 154. Custody and control of bankrupt's property—By bankrupt.

In voluntary petitions the rights of the bankrupt to the disposition of his property cease on the filing of the petition, but in involuntary petitions only upon the adjudication.—In re Dillard, Case No. 3,912.

The bankrupt, after filing his petition, has no right to sell any of his property, even to raise money to pay lawful fees.—In re Thompson, Case No. 13,938.

A bankrupt retail merchant has no right to sell any of his stock, after petition and schedule filed, without leave of court, though the goods are perishable.—In re Pryor, Case No. 11,457.

One borrowing money from the bankrupt after petition filed, and before adjudication, is liable therefor to the assignee.—Crompton v. Conkling, Case No. 3,407.

A transfer of promissory notes by the payee, pending bankruptcy proceedings against him which result in an adjudication and an injunction against disposing of his property, vests no title in the purchaser, though he had no actual notice of the proceedings. The purchaser takes with constructive notice, as all the world is bound to take notice of bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Lake, Case No. 7,992.

The voluntary bankrupt is intrusted with the care of his estate before an assignee is chosen, as a sort of trustee, and he has no right to buy of the marshal a stock of goods ordered by the court to be sold as likely to deteriorate, and such sale will be set aside on motion of the assignee, without proof that the price was inadequate or that there was any fraud in fact intended.—March v. Heaton, Case No. 9,061.

Where a note is given in payment of a book account, after a petition in bankruptcy is filed against the payee, but before the adjudication, and the note at maturity is paid to a bank which holds the same, this is a discharge of the maker, and the assignee in bankruptcy cannot maintain a suit against him for the amount of the note.—Galvin v. Boyd, Case No. 5,208.

A bankrupt indorser may waive demand and notice upon a note maturing before the choice of an assignee.—Ex parte Tremont Nat. Bank, Case No. 14,169.

§ 155. —— Powers of court or register.

All the property and assets of the bankrupt are considered in custodia legis from the filing of the petition. (Act 1867).—Davis v. Anderson, Case No. 3,623.

On a voluntary petition the bankruptcy court has power to take possession of the bankrupt's property pending the publication of notice and election of an assignee.—The Ironsides, Case No. 7,069.

The possession by the bankrupt of leased premises after petition filed is the possession of the bankrupt court, and any interference therewith, except by leave of that court, is in contempt of its authority.—In re Steadman, Case No. 13,330.

Where a debtor is adjudged a bankrupt upon his own petition, it is the duty of the register to take his property into his custody by the intervention of an agent or other proper means.—Zeiber v. Hill, Case No. 18,206.

On the adjudication, the register is authorized and required to receive the surrender of the bankrupt's estate, and to keep the property safely until it can be turned over to the assignee.—In re Hasbrouck, Case No. 6,189.

§ 156. —— Possession and care of property by messenger.

In involuntary proceedings the bankrupt is not authorized to surrender his property to the register, nor is the register authorized to receive it. The marshal alone is authorized, as messenger, to seize and retain the custody of the bankrupt's property until the assignee is appointed.—In re Howes, Case No. 6,787.

Where the marshal, as messenger, has taken possession of a bankrupt's property, but without any order of court, his possession is not that of the court in bankruptcy.—The Ironsides, Case No. 7,069.

Property in the custody of a United States marshal, as messenger in bankruptcy, may be insured under the direction of the register.—In re Carow, Case No. 2,426.

§ 157. —— Appointment of receiver or provisional assignee.

After adjudication, and before selection of the assignee, a temporary receiver may be appointed under special circumstances.—Lansing v. Manton, Case No. 8,077.

Where there is delay in the prosecution of proceedings in bankruptcy, a receiver may be appointed to conserve the estate.—In re Cooke, Case No. 3,167.

A receiver may be appointed in bankruptcy proceedings against a savings institution, where the apparent titles to property are such on their face that the marshal cannot act efficiently under the usual warrant.—Keenan v. Shannon, Case No. 7,640.

A receiver appointed to care for the property, until the selection of an assignee, cannot sue to recover property fraudulently transferred; and if he commence such suit, the assignee will not, on motion, be admitted to prosecute it.—Lansing v. Manton, Case No. 8,077.

A provisional assignee will not be appointed unless the bankruptcy court is satisfied that it is necessary for the protection of the property, and that it will inure to the benefit of all the creditors.—M. & M. Nat. Bank of Pittsburg v. Brady's Bend Iron Co., Case No. 9,018.

§ 158. —— Effect of failure of debtor to account for or surrender property.

The bankrupt may be ordered to surrender or satisfactorily account for property which he has failed to turn over or account for, under penalty of being committed for contempt.—In re Salkey, Case No. 12,253.

Where debtors have been adjudged bankrupts on their own petition, but delay to surrender their assets to the register, an order will be issued for the immediate surrender thereof to the register, and the appointment by him of a proper custodian.—In re Shafer, Case No. 12,694.

Disobedience of an order of a register to the bankrupts to hand over funds in their hands to his custodian is a contempt, for which attachment will issue from the court.—In re Speyer, Case No. 13,239.

The bankrupt may be committed where the court is satisfied that he has not fully disclosed the facts concerning his property (Act 1867, § 26).—In re Salkey, Case No. 12,254.

§ 159. —— Sale of property.

A sale under Act 1867, § 20, cannot be ordered by the bankruptcy court until an assignee is appointed, but such court may permit the sale of securities by the pledgee, reserving the right of the court to ascertain and liquidate his lien without prejudice of the rights of the assignee to be appointed, and requiring the pledgee to file a sworn statement of the sale.—In re Grinnell, Case No. 5,830.

The district court has power to order the sale of the whole or any part of the property of the bankrupt by his consent, even before the declaration of bankruptcy.—In re Vila, Case No. 16,941.

The creditors must have due notice of any application for a sale, so that they may appear and show cause against such sale, or for a postponement thereof.—In re Vila, Case No. 16,941.

A sale by the marshal, as messenger, under a special order, prior to the appointment of an assignee, will be considered as in the nature of a sale made by a provisional assignee.—In re Hitchings, Case No. 6,542.

Where the marshal prior to the appointment of the assignee sells, as movables, articles which really passed on a prior sale to another, as fixtures, the purchaser may file a claim therefor against the assignee.—In re Hitchings, Case No. 6,542.

The court cannot sell property of the debtor as perishable, pending trial by jury of the issue on the acts of bankruptcy, unless it is in possession of the messenger.—In re Metzler, Case No. 9,512.

III. ASSIGNMENT, ADMINISTRATION, AND DISTRIBUTION OF BANKRUPT'S ESTATE.

(A) APPOINTMENT, QUALIFICATION, AND TENURE OF ASSIGNEE.

Provisional assignee, see ante, § 157.

1. ELECTION.

§ 160. Time of meeting.

The time for the first meeting is a matter of discretion with the register (Act 1867, § 11), and sixty days from the date of the warrant for the first meeting of creditors was a reasonable time, where all the creditors resided in Germany.—In re Heys, Case No. 6,447.

Proceedings at a meeting of creditors held on Thanksgiving day will not be set aside where it appears that no one was injured thereby.—In re McGlynn, Case No. 8,804.

§ 161. Adjournment of meeting.

Where a register, prevented by prevalence of yellow fever from attending, attempts to adjourn the meeting by letter, the meeting wholly fails, and a new warrant must issue appointing another meeting, as a register can only adjourn a meeting of creditors by attending it at the time and place designated for its assembling.—In re Dickinson, Case No. 3,895.

Where there was no proper publication and service of notice of the first meeting of creditors, the register may adjourn the meeting, from time to time, to permit the same.—In re Devlin, Case No. 3,841.

§ 162. Conduct of election.

A meeting to prove debts and choose an assignee should be organized at the hour designated in the notice, and kept open until an assignee is chosen, or it is ascertained that no choice can be made.—In re Phelps, Case No. 11,071.

The first meeting of creditors should be kept open for one hour, and where the meeting is appointed for 10 o'clock, and certain creditors appear and vote for an assignee, and the register declares the polls closed at half past 10, and other creditors appear and vote before 11 o'clock, the last votes must be counted.—In re Gilley, Case No. 5,438.

Debts may be proven at any time during the sitting of the court on the day for showing cause, and are not restricted to the hour fixed in the notice.—In re Gaylor, Case No. 5,282a.

No particular manner is prescribed of voting for an assignee. It may be by ballot, viva voce, by calling the name of each creditor, or by calling upon the persons representing them to name their choice.—In re Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railroad & Iron Co., Case No. 7,997.

Registers should in no manner interfere with or influence the choice of an assignee by the creditors.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,971.

The cause will be sent to another register upon a petition therefor by creditors, alleging that the register had interfered in the choice of an assignee.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,971.

The vote for assignee will not be postponed to allow other creditors to prove their claims, unless by consent of those who have already proved.—In re Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railroad & Iron Co., Case No. 7,997.

No creditor has a right to be heard in opposition to any of the proceedings until he has proved his debt.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,481.

§ 163. Who may vote—In general.

A debt assigned, after being proved, must be voted upon by the actual owner, and he will not be entitled to more than one vote.—In re Frank, Case No. 5,050.

The managing officers of a bankrupt corporation, when bona fide creditors, have the same rights to vote for assignee as any other claimant.—In re Northern Iron Co., Case No. 10,322.

Creditors proving claims filed after election of assignee cannot vote to change the result of an election appealed from.—In re Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railroad & Iron Co., Case No. 7,997.

Without a special order of court the register has no power to inquire into the rights of creditors to vote at a first meeting, except for the purpose of postponing proof of claims until the choice of an assignee.—In re Noble, Case No. 10,282.

The register should ordinarily demand the same degree of proof before admitting a creditor to vote for assignee, as is required in a trial at law or a hearing in equity.—In re Northern Iron Co., Case No. 10,322.

An unliquidated claim for damages which a bankrupt proposes to set off against a claim of a creditor must be wholly disregarded in the proceedings for the choice of an assignee.—In re Orne, Case No. 10,581.

§ 164. —— Amount of claim.

Interest may be added to the claim to the day of the adjudication where the debt was due before such day, but interest is to be deducted from such time where the debt is not payable until thereafter.—In re Orne, Case No. 10,581.

A joint creditor can vote the full amount of the debt, without the consent and authority of the other creditor, only in the case of partnership.—In re Purvis, Case No. 11,476.

§ 165. —— Agent or attorney.

The mere fact that a creditor is absent from the state, or from the locality where the proof is to be made, does not warrant resorting to proof by an agent.—In re Jackson, Case No. 7,123.

An agent of the creditor who proved the claim cannot vote for the assignee without a power of attorney, even though such agent be an attorney at law.—In re Purvis, Case No. 11,476.

One member of a firm, on behalf of the firm, may execute a power of attorney authorizing him to vote for the firm in the choice of assignees.—In re Barrett, Case No. 1,043.

If a power of attorney is given to a firm, and not to either member, one alone is not authorized to vote upon it in the choice of an assignee.—In re Frank, Case No. 5,050.

A notary public cannot take the acknowledgment of a creditor to a power of attorney to vote for the assignee. General order No. 34.—In re Higgins, Case No. 6,467.

A power of attorney which authorizes an agent to sign the principal's name to any paper or writing proper or necessary for the purpose of collecting and receiving any debt due to the principal, is sufficient to authorize the agent to vote in behalf of the principal for an assignee in bankruptcy, although such power of attorney is dated prior to the passage of Act 1867.—In re Knoepfel, Case No. 7,892.

§ 166. —— In proceedings against partners.

Where a separate adjudication is made against a bankrupt who is, or has been, a member of a firm, the separate creditors have a right to vote for the assignee.—In re Falkner, Case No. 4,624.

A joint creditor, on the separate bankruptcy of one member of a firm, may vote for assignee.—Wilkins v. Davis, Case No. 17,664; In re Webb, Id. 17,317. CONTRA, see In re Purvis, Id. 11,476.

Where co-partners are adjudged bankrupts, the partnership creditors only can participate in the election of assignees.—In re Phelps, Case No. 11,071; In re Scheiffer, Id. 12,445.

§ 167. —— Preferred or secured creditors.

A preferred creditor may surrender his preference at the first meeting, and vote for assignee, when the preference is of such a nature as to be effectually destroyed by such surrender.—In re Saunders, Case No. 12,371.

The mortgagee of a homestead may vote on the choice of an assignee on his whole claim.—In re Stillwell, Case No. 13,448; In re Tertelling, Id. 13,842.

A creditor holding security, although he has proved his debt as provided in Act 1867, § 22, cannot vote in the election of assignee.—In re Davis, Case No. 3,614.

A secured creditor may vote for assignee on so much of his debt as is unsecured, where the security applies only to a specific portion of his debt.—In re Parkes, Case No. 10,754.

A creditor holding a mortgage as security, who, in his proof of the debt, states, upon information and belief, that the mortgage is worth less than the amount of the debt, is not entitled to vote on the difference between its value, as stated by him, and the amount of his debt.—In re Hanna, Case No. 6,027.

A mortgage creditor, who, after the adjudication, sells the mortgaged premises, and himself becomes the purchaser, cannot vote on the deficiency as an unsecured creditor.—In re Hunt, Case No. 6,884.

§ 168. Postponement of proof of claim—Power of register.

Under Act 1867, § 23 (14 Stat. 528), which authorizes the judge, at the first meeting of creditors before the election of an assignee, to postpone proof of any claim which he regards as doubtful, the register may exercise the same discretion.—In re Bartusch, Case No. 1,086.

A postponement of proof of a claim until an assignee is chosen is entirely within the discretion of the register. Act 1867, § 23.—In re Jacoby, Case No. 7,166.

A register has power to postpone the proof of a claim until an assignee is chosen, if a case is made out for such postponement under the rules of court, but he has no power to institute an inquiry under the last clause (Act 1867, § 22), where certain creditors object to the votes of other creditors being received for a choice of an assignee.—In re Herrman, Case No. 6,426.

Where, at the first meeting of creditors, claims are objected to which the register regards as clearly valid, he can neither admit them as valid, nor postpone the proof merely because they are objected to, but he must apply to the court if the objections are not withdrawn. Act 1867.—In re Bartusch, Case No. 1,086.

§ 169. —— What claims postponed.
Such claims as are of questionable or doubtful character may be postponed until after an assignee is appointed. Act 1867.—In re Jones, Case No. 7,447.

The register may postpone, until the choice of an assignee, the proof of a debt, in respect to the validity of which a doubt has arisen on the ground of a preference.—In re Stevens, Case No. 13,391.

Taking property on attachment or execution is receiving a preference, but merely recovering judgment is not.—In re Stevens, Case No. 13,391.

Reasonable substantial doubt only of the validity of a claim in the mind of the register, and of the creditor's right to prove it, is sufficient to justify postponement of proof until after election of an assignee. Rev. St. § 5083. —In re Jackson, Case No. 7,123.

The surrender of a fraudulent preference can only be made to the assignee, and pending his appointment and qualification the proof of debt must be postponed and the offer of the preferred creditor to vote for assignee be denied. —In re Parham, Case No. 10,712.

Where it appears probable that a confession of judgment to a creditor was taken with knowledge of the debtor's insolvency, the proof of the creditor's claim will be postponed until after the choice of an assignee.—In re Walton, Case No. 17,128.

That proofs presented at the first meeting of creditors are in the names of persons not named in the schedule raises a doubt of their validity, and requires postponement until after election of the assignee. Rev. St. § 5083.—In re Milwain, Case No. 9,623.

Though proof of a debt has been regularly filed and accepted as satisfactory, the register may receive proof of fraud in relation thereto before election of assignee.—In re Frank, Case No. 5,050.

On proceedings for the choice of assignee the register must receive evidence from the bankrupt impeaching the consideration of a draft proved as a debt.—In re Orne, Case No. 10,581.

§ 170. —— Review.
The bankruptcy court will not review the action of the register in postponing proof of a claim until after the election of the assignee, where no objection is made until after the assignee is appointed.—In re Jackson, Case No. 7,123.

Creditors whose proofs of claims have been postponed, and who have not been allowed to vote for assignee, may have the proceedings certified to the court; and, if the postponement be held erroneous, the choice may be set aside, and a new vote taken.—In re Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railroad & Iron Co., Case No. 7,997.

§ 171. —— Effect.
Postponement of proof of claims affects no right of the creditor, except the right to vote for assignee.—In re Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railroad & Iron Co., Case No. 7,997.

§ 172. Counting votes.
Where a single creditor appears at the first meeting of creditors, and proves his debt, he may choose the assignee.—Anonymous, Case No. 458; In re Haynes, Id. 6,269.

A person to be elected assignee must receive a majority of the votes of all who have proved claims, and not simply a majority of the votes cast.—In re Purvis, Case No. 11,476; In re Scheiffer, Id. 12,445.

Where a firm is a creditor, and the vote of the firm for assignee is cast by one member thereof, in computing the number of votes such vote can be counted only as one, and each member of the creditor firm cannot be counted as a creditor who has voted.—In re Purvis, Case No. 11,476.

§ 173. Change of vote.
A creditor may change his vote as often as he sees fit, until he has signed the certificate of choice of assignee.—In re Pfromm, Case No. 11,061.

A creditor cannot change his vote after the meeting has adjourned, and thereby cause a failure to elect. If a mistake occurs he may make his objection to the judge.—In re Scheiffer, Case No. 12,445.

§ 174. Disapproval or confirmation.
When the register is satisfied that any reasons exist why an assignee elected or appointed should not be approved by the judge, it is his duty to state such reasons fully in submitting to the judge the question of approval.—In re Bliss, Case No. 1,543.

The discretion reserved to the court to approve or disapprove the creditors' election of an assignee (Act 1867) is a legal discretion, and a disapproval must be based upon sound reasons, and not upon rumors which, upon investigation, cannot be traced to any facts justifying them.—In re Funkenstein, Case No. 5,157.

Where an assignee is chosen by the greater part in value and number of the creditors who have proved their claims, and there is no imputation either upon his capacity or integrity, he is assignee by virtue of law, and the judge is not competent to interfere.—In re Grant, Case No. 5,692.

The bankruptcy court in a state in which the bankrupt corporation held property and carried on business will decline to approve the election of assignees in another jurisdiction, where its state is not given a representative.—In re Boston, H. & E. R. Co., Case No. 1,680.

The election of an assignee will be disregarded where it was secured by his agreeing to pay certain creditors their claims in full, if they would give him their powers of attorney. —In re Haas, Case No. 5,884.

The election of an assignee at his suggestion by one creditor, who alone appeared at first meeting of creditors, will not be sanctioned.—In re A. B., Case No. 2.

The court will not sanction the election of an assignee who makes it a regular business to solicit creditors' votes.—In re Doe, Case No. 3,957.

The bankruptcy court will decline to approve the election of an assignee selected by, or in the interest of, the bankrupt.—In re Bliss, Case No. 1,543; In re Wetmore, Id. 17,466.

The court will refuse to confirm the election of an assignee who was the bookkeeper of one of the bankrupts, where it appears that a large number of creditors could not be represented at the meeting, although the election was almost unanimous.—In re Wetmore, Case No. 17,466.

An election of a near relative of the bankrupt as assignee will be set aside, and the appointment by the register according to the rules of the district will be confirmed.—In re Zinn, Case No. 18,216.

The appointment of an assignee by the register after an informal vote or expression of choice, although not objected to at the time, will be set aside as irregular.—In re Pearson, Case No. 10,878.

A bankrupt has a standing in court to object to the confirmation of assignees of his estate.—In re McGlynn, Case No. 8,804.

An opposition to the appointment of a particular assignee, made at the first meeting, will be considered as continuing at adjourned meetings, where it does not appear to have been withdrawn.—In re Norton, Case No. 10,348.

The bankruptcy court will not set aside an election of assignee on account of any irregularity in admitting a claim, when it appears that its exclusion would not affect the result of the election.—In re Jackson, Case No. 7,123.

The election of assignee will not be sent back because of a corrupt vote, where the result would not be changed by excluding the vote.—In re Pfromm, Case No. 11,061.

§ 175. Failure of choice.

When no creditor who has proved his debt appears at the time and place appointed for the first meeting of creditors, the judge, or, if there be no opposing interest, the register, is to appoint one or more assignees.—In re Cogswell, Case No. 2,959.

"Opposing interest," as used in Act 1867, § 13, does not mean opposition to the appointment of any particular person as assignee, but to the exercise of the appointing power by the register.—In re Jackson, Case No. 7,123.

Upon failure to elect an assignee by the creditors, the register may appoint one, if specific objections are not made. Rev. St. § 5034. —In re Jackson, Case No. 7,123.

Where no creditors have proved their debts, and no assets are shown, an assignee should, nevertheless, be appointed, since creditors may appear and assets may be found.—Anonymous, Case No. 457.

Where a majority of creditors proving claims by attorney vote for one person, and a majority of those proving in person vote for another person, as assignee, there is no election, and the court may appoint an assignee.—In re Portsmouth Sav. Fund Soc., Case No. 11,297.

§ 176. New election.

Where the judge refuses to approve the appointment of the assignee elected by the creditors, he may order a new election, under Act 1867, § 13, cl. 4.—In re Scheiffer, Case No. 12,445.

Where, after an assignee has been appointed, a creditor has been added to the schedules, no new choice of assignee is necessary.—In re Carson, Case No. 2,460.

2. APPOINTMENT, QUALIFICATION, AND REMOVAL.

§ 177. Who may be appointed.

The son of the bankrupt will not be appointed assignee where he will be obliged to investigate the claims of other members of the family. —In re Bogert, Case No. 1,600.

A person residing out of the district is disqualified to act as assignee.—In re Clairmont, Case No. 2,781; In re Havens, Id. 6,231.

A person residing without, but having a fixed place of daily business within, the judicial district, may be appointed assignee.—In re Loder, Case No. 8,459.

A person who has a direct interest adverse to that of the creditors generally, or who is the attorney of such person, is disqualified.—In re Clairmont, Case No. 2,781.

An attorney for a general creditor may be assignee of the bankrupt's estate.—In re Clairmont, Case No. 2,781; In re Lawson, Id. 8,150; In re Barrett, Id. 1,043.

A general creditor may be assignee of the bankrupt's estate.—In re Clairmont, Case No. 2,781.

An attorney of the bankrupt, in matters not connected with the bankruptcy, is not necessarily ineligible as assignee.—In re Clairmont, Case No. 2,781.

A person related to the bankrupt is ineligible.—In re Powell, Case No. 11,354.

A new election will be ordered where the assignee was a director of the bank to which the bankrupt had shortly before confessed judgment.—In re Powell, Case No. 11,354.

§ 178. Notice of appointment.

In publishing notice of the appointment of an assignee, under Act 1867, § 14, at least seven days must intervene between each publication.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,266.

§ 179. When appointment takes effect.

The assignee, whether elected by the creditors or appointed by the register, has no power to act until the judge's approval is certified.—In re Scheiffer, Case No. 12,445.

§ 180. Bonds.

A chosen assignee may, on application of a creditor, be required to give security.—In re Fernberg, Case No. 4,743.

The register may, upon request, in writing, of a creditor who has proved his claim, require the assignee to give bond.—In re Bininger, Case No. 1,421.

An assignee must give a special bond in each case where a bond is required; a general bond is not authorized by Act 1867.—In re McFaden, Case No. 8,785.

§ 181. Effect of failure to qualify.

Unless an assignee who has been appointed under a general order qualifies especially as required by Act 1867, § 13, in each particular case, he cannot be treated by the court as assignee in any such case.—Ex parte Bryan, Case No. 2,061.

An act of an assignee appointed under a general order and who has not qualified as required by Act 1867, § 13, is binding, so far as his competency is concerned, when, as to such act, he is treated by the court as assignee.—Ex parte Bryan, Case No. 2,061.

Where the register requires an assignee to file a bond, but specifies no time within which it must be filed, and one is not filed for 13 days, the assignee is not in default, and he must be removed before another can be appointed.—In re Sands, Case No. 12,301.

§ 182. Removal.

The bankruptcy court may exercise a judicial discretion in affirming or refusing to affirm the action of creditors in the removal of an assignee. Act 1867, § 18.—In re Dewey, Case No. 3,849.

An assignee cannot be removed except upon an application made for that purpose, under section 18, Act 1867, general order No. 23, and form No. 41.—In re Schapter, Case No. 12,438.

A motion by the bankrupt to set aside the appointment of an assignee can only be entertained by the district judge upon notice, and not by the register.—In re Stokes, Case No. 13,475.

Assignees will not be removed on the vote of majority creditors who were all parties to transactions which the assignees were seeking to impeach.—In re Dewey, Case No. 3,849.

An assignee, clerk of the bankrupt's attorney, who is charged with mismanagement, and whose removal is asked by the creditors, will be removed, but he will be protected against costs of the proceeding for removal, where it appears that he acted in entire good faith.—In re Mallory, Case No. 8,990.

An assignee will be removed if requested by a vote of a majority of those who have proved their debts; but he will not be removed if a majority vote against removal.—In re New York Mail S. S. Co., Case No. 10,209.

Involving the estate in unnecessary litigation, if caused through erroneous legal advice, is no ground for removal of the assignee.—In re Blodget, Case No. 1,552.

The assignee will not be removed for unsuccessfully attacking mortgages given by the bankrupt, where it appears that such action was justifiable.—In re Sacchi, Case No. 12,201.

The assignee must disclose to the creditors, upon inquiry, all facts relating to the condition and assets of the bankrupt's estate.—Ex parte Perkins, Case No. 10,982.

A failure by the assignee to inform creditors in regard to their rights and the condition of the assets, where the suppression of facts was made in the interest of one class of creditors, is good cause of removal.—Ex parte Perkins, Case No. 10,982.

An assignee will be removed on petition at his own cost for neglecting to take proper measures to secure the bankrupt's property, and for allowing it to be sold for taxes.—In re Morse, Case No. 9,852.

Where an assignee fails to deposit funds in his hands belonging to the estate, and suffers the foreclosure of a mortgage, neglecting an opportunity to purchase it at less than its face, and is guilty of a similar neglect in regard to a judgment, and pays 7 per cent. interest, while he is loaning moneys belonging to the estate at 6 per cent., and fails to comply with the directions of the register, as required by Act 1867, and rules of court, an order will be issued to show cause why he should not be removed from his trust.—In re Price, Case No. 11,409.

A register may be directed to employ counsel to represent the estate of the bankrupt at the hearing of the order to show cause why the assignee should not be removed.—In re Price, Case No. 11,409.

§ 183. Additional assignee.

Upon a petition to the bankruptcy court showing sufficient reasons, an additional assignee may be appointed to act in conjunction with the one previously appointed.—In re Overton, Case No. 10,625.

(B) ASSIGNMENT, AND TITLE, RIGHTS, AND REMEDIES OF ASSIGNEE IN GENERAL.

1. Property and Rights Passing to Assignee.

§ 184. In general.

All property and rights of property of the bankrupt at the date of adjudication pass to the assignee for distribution among creditors. Act 1841.—Ex parte Newhall, Case No. 10,159.

Whether the bankrupt obtains a certificate of discharge or not, the property passes to the assignee, and is distributed among his creditors.—In re Cheney, Case No. 2,636.

Assignees in bankruptcy, except in cases of fraud, take only such rights and interest as the bankrupt himself had, and could himself claim and assert, at the time of his bankruptcy; and they are affected with all the liens and equities which would affect the bankrupt himself, if he were asserting those rights and interests.—Mitchell v. Winslow, Case No. 9,673; Ex parte Newhall, Id. 10,159; Fletcher v. Morey, Id. 4,864; Winsor v. McLellan, Id. 17,887; Winsor v. Kendall, Id. 17,886; Ex parte Dalby, Id. 3,540; Potter v. Coggeshall, Id. 11,322, affirmed in Case No. 2,955; Williamson v. Colcord, Case No. 17,752.

The assignee takes only the bankrupt's interest, and he has no control over the interest of others except as expressly given by law to protect the bankrupt's interest for the benefit of the general creditors.—Goddard v. Weaver, Case No. 5,495.

The assignee is estopped where the bankrupt would be estopped, except in cases of fraud, or of attachments of less than four months' standing.—In re Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co., Case No. 11,978.

Property in the possession of the bankrupt after the appointment of the assignee is considered as in the possession of the assignee, and it cannot be taken therefrom by a mortgagee under a valid mortgage.—In re Rosenberg, Case No. 12,055.

An assignee in bankruptcy is not bound to take property which may be onerous to the estate, or burden instead of benefit it. If he does not take it, it remains in the bankrupt, and the latter's title is good as against all the world.—Smith v. Gordon, Case No. 13,052; Amory v. Lawrence, Id. 336.

The right to recover back usurious interest paid given by the Vermont law is a "right of property" which passes to the assignee.—Moore v. Jones, Case No. 9,768.

A right of action in tort for fraud and deceit is not an asset which will pass to the assignee. Act 1867, § 14.—In re Crockett, Case No. 3,402.

§ 185. As affected by date of bankruptcy.

The fact that a petition in bankruptcy was attested "nine days before presented" affords no bar to its presentation; and the decree dates back to the application, and property acquired after verification, and before presentation, passes as assets to the assignee.—In re Abrahams, Case No. 20.

An adjudication relates back to the time of filing the petition, and carries to the assignee title to all property which the bankrupt then had.—Ex parte General Assignee, Case No. 5,305; McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Id. 8,885; McLean v. Rockey, Id. 8,891; In re Rust, Id. 12,171; In re Lake, Id. 7,992; Sicard v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. R. Co., Id. 12,831.

The assignment relates back to the date of filing the petition, and property subsequently acquired does not pass thereunder, regardless of amendments to the petition or schedules afterwards attached. Act 1867, § 14.—In re Patterson, Case No. 10,815.

Crops planted by a bankrupt after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, under Act 1867 (14 Stat. 517, c. 176), do not pass to the assignee as assets for the use of creditors.—In re Barnett, Case No. 1,024.

A divorce obtained by a wife prior to the discharge in bankruptcy of her husband gives his assignee no claim in land held by the husband and wife in entirety at the time of the adjudication.—In re Benson, Case No. 1,328.

§ 186. Property in hands of assignee under assignment for creditors.

Where a person made a voluntary assignment with preferences, and subsequently took the benefit of the insolvent laws of Pennsylvania and made another assignment to the previous assignee, as required thereby, and afterwards was declared a bankrupt on his own motion, by the bankruptcy court, held, that the assignee in bankruptcy could not recover from the assignee, who had acquired the property by the previous assignments.—Sullivan v. Hieskill, Case No. 13,594.

An assignee under a general assignment under a state law which is avoided by proceedings in bankruptcy must turn over all the property and proceeds to the assignee in bankruptcy, and cannot deduct compensation for his services or his expenses.—In re Stubbs, Case No. 13,557.

An assignee is not vested, by mere force of the adjudication in bankruptcy and his appointment, with title to the property assigned by the bankrupt for the benefit of creditors.—Belden v. Smith, Case No. 1,242.

§ 187. Claims for spoliation.

A claim of a bankrupt against Spain for spoliation of his property does not pass to his assignee, and where they have received the amount of such claim awarded to them, since the assignment in bankruptcy, by commissioners, under the treaty of February 22, 1819, between Spain and the United States, they will be held liable to the bankrupt therefor in an action for money had and received.—Vasse v. Comegys, Case No. 16,893.

A claim for the destruction of a vessel for which an allowance is made under the Geneva award will pass to the assignee.—Williamson v. Colcord, Case No. 17,752.

§ 188. Conditional title.

A conveyance of land on condition of the payment of an annual sum to the grantor during life gives the grantee a title which will pass to his assignee.—Atwood v. Kittell, Case No. 641.

An agreement that the seller shall have possession of the property, so that he may apply its rent to the reduction of the purchase money, does not prevent full title vesting in the purchaser's assignee.—Hall v. Scovel, Case No. 5,945.

A bankrupt holding a bond for a deed of land, the condition of which he had broken, acquired no title to timber he had cut thereon without the consent of the owner of the land, and none passed to his assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Gregg, Case No. 5,796.

The purchaser of land by deed will take a fee as against the assignee of a bankrupt, who held before his bankruptcy a bond for a deed of the same from the purchaser's grantor, the conditions of which the bankrupt had violated, unless the owner of the land, who gave the bond, had so conducted and dealt with the bankrupt as to have waived the breach of the bond.—In re Gregg, Case No. 5,796.

The fee-simple title in a street, subject to the public easement, is "property," which vests in the assignee under the act of 1841; and where the street terminates in a lake, the right to subsequent accretions passes with the title, to such assignee's grantees.—Kinzie v. Winston, Case No. 7,835.

A usufruct in property, not capable of being transferred by sale, except with the owner's permission, does not pass to the assignee on the bankruptcy of one who has such usufruct.—In re O'Dowd, Case No. 10,439.

Chattels do not pass to the assignee, where they may be recovered from the bankrupt by their vendor for nonperformance of the contract of sale; the assignee will be ordered to deliver the same to the vendor upon the latter's petition.—In re Pusey, Case No. 11,477.

The assignee may, if he deem it to the interest of creditors, pay a balance due from the bankrupt under a conditional sale, and thereby acquire the title.—In re Lyon, Case No. 8,644.

§ 189. Interest under contract.

Where, under contract for a speculation in real estate, the bankrupt is to have a certain per cent. interest and a division of the profits, his interest in the assets growing out of the operation will pass to the assignee.—Sherman v. International Bank, Case No. 12,765.

Compensation for services rendered by the bankrupt under a contract will be apportioned between the assignee and the bankrupt, in proportion to the value of the services rendered before and after the bankruptcy, where payment was not contingent upon full performance of the services.—In re Jones, Case No. 7,448.

Where the bankrupt bank acts as agent of another bank for clearing-house purposes, the deposits made by the latter from time to time on its account are not a trust fund, and will pass to the assignee.—Phelan v. Iron Mountain Bank, Case No. 11,069.

The relation between a bank and its depositors is that of debtor and creditor only, and is not fiduciary, and a note deposited for collection, if passed to the credit of the depositor in his general account, and then withdrawn, becomes the property of the bank, which becomes indebted to him for the proceeds, and upon the bankruptcy of the bank the proceeds are assets available to the general creditors, and the fact that the account was made good by other deposits, before collection of the note, makes no difference.—In re Bank of Madison, Case No. 890.

A check deposited with a bank for collection, against which the depositor is not allowed to draw until payment, does not become the property of the bank, where it suspended before payment; and where the owner of such check brings suit against the assignee in bankruptcy in a state court, and recovers judgment for the amount of the check and costs, the bankruptcy court will, upon petition of the plaintiff in such suit, order the assignee to pay the amount of such check, but not the interest, or costs in the state court, the loss of which was the result of plaintiff's misfortune in having his funds mingled with the insolvent bank and his delay in applying to the bankruptcy court for relief.—In re Havens, Case No. 6,230.

The widow of a bankrupt dying after the issuing of the warrant is entitled to dower in land owned by him at the time the petition was filed, where the state statute theretofore passed restored the common-law right of dower on repealing the statutory provision.—In re Hester, Case No. 6,437.

The wife of a bankrupt is not entitled (in North Carolina) to claim dower in land owned by the bankrupt when he filed his petition, he being still alive.—Kelly v. Strange, Case No. 7,676.

The right to dower in land revives where a conveyance of such land is set aside as an illegal preference under the bankrupt law, or is surrendered by the creditor under Act 1867, § 23.—In re Detert, Case No. 3,829.

The wife is not estopped to claim dower by having joined in the execution of the deed. Case No. 3,309 reversed.—Cox v. Wilder, Case No. 3,308.

The bankruptcy court will allow the wife a reasonable support, in preference to the husband's creditors, out of rents and profits of realty conveyed by her husband to her through a third person, without consideration, where they are her only means of support.—In re Brandt, Case No. 1,811.

§ 192. Interest in life policy.

Under Rev. St. § 5045, and Rev. St. Me. 1871, c. 40, § 65, a paid-up policy of life insurance is not exempt to the assured, but passes to his assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Sawyer, Case No. 12,393.

In Maine the assignee has a lien on a life policy of the bankrupt for so much of two years' premiums as exceeds a certain sum, even though the assured borrowed the money to pay such premiums by pledging the policy therefor.—In re Sawyer, Case No. 12,393.

A claim against the wife of a bankrupt for payments made by him when insolvent, on a policy for the benefit of his wife, may be sold by the assignee, and will pass to the purchaser a contingent right in the proceeds of the policy.—In re Bear, Case No. 1,178.

Where the husband insures his life for the benefit of his wife, the legal title to the policy is in her; so that, upon his becoming bankrupt, it is not necessary that he should surrender such policy or list it in his schedule of assets.—In re Bear, Case No. 1,178.

The assignee has no right to the proceeds of a policy taken out by the wife of the bankrupt on her life for the benefit of the husband, where she pays the premiums out of her separate estate, and dies after the adjudication in bankruptcy.— In re Murrin, Case No. 9,968.

The lapsing of a life policy for nonpayment of premiums due after the commencement of bankrupt proceedings does not defeat the title of the assignee.—In re Sawyer, Case No. 12,393.

§ 193. Leased property.

The assignee is entitled to the exclusive possession of the property of the bankrupt, though a part is held by the bankrupt as lease for years. —Wildman v. Taylor, Case No. 17,654.

Rights of joint occupants of leased premises on the bankruptcy of one of them, who was in debt to the others for his share of the rent.— In re Hotchkiss, Case No. 6,715.

The right of bankrupt tenants to the removal of machinery from the leased building passes to the bankruptcy court.—In re Breck, Case No. 1,822.

§ 194. Membership in exchange or board of trade.

Where a seat in a stock exchange can be transferred only on approval of the board, subject to payment of the claims of other members on the bankruptcy of the holder, his assignee has a right only to the surplus after paying such claims.—Hyde v. Woods, Case No. 6,975.

A certificate of membership in a board of trade is not an asset which would pass to the assignee.—In re Sutherland, Case No. 13,637.

§ 195. Mortgaged lands.

A bona fide deed of trust to secure a debt devests title, so that an assignee in bankruptcy cannot maintain ejectment. He is entitled only to the surplus, and purchasers from him can claim nothing more.—Lyall v. Miller, Case No. 8,613.

A mortgage of personal property being (in Wisconsin) ineffectual to pass after-acquired property, the assignee in bankruptcy is entitled to such property as against the mortgagee.—In re Eldridge, Case No. 4,330.

Under Act S. C. 1791, relating to the rights of mortgagees in lands of which the mortgagors are out of possession, the register's assignment to an assignee in bankruptcy of mortgaged lands places the mortgagee out of possession, and gives him the same rights, as to rents and profits, which he could have acquired by actual entry. —In re Bennett, Case No. 1,313.

After the appointment of an assignee, a receiver will not be appointed of a bankrupt's mortgaged land, as the assignee is clothed with like functions to those of a receiver.—In re Bennett, Case No. 1,313.

The assignee in bankruptcy of a mortgagor, under the Indiana law, is entitled to rents of the property, for the benefit of the unsecured creditors, until the mortgagee takes steps to have them applied to his debt, for insufficiency of the security.—Hunter v. Hays, Case No. 6,906.

§ 196. Partnership and individual assets.

Where a decree of bankruptcy is awarded against a member of a firm under Act 1841, the partnership is thereby dissolved and the partnership effects are vested in the assignee and the solvent partner as tenants in common.—Ex parte Norcross, Case No. 10,293; Forsaith v. Merritt, Id. 4,946.

In the case of the bankruptcy of an individual partner the bankruptcy court will not take possession of the firm property unless necessary to make a final settlement of all claims.—Parker v. Muggridge, Case No. 10,743.

Where one partner becomes bankrupt, his assignee can take that portion of the partnership assets, only, which would belong to the bankrupt after payment of all the partnership debts. —Parker v. Muggridge, Case No. 10,743.

Where a member of an insolvent firm has been adjudicated a bankrupt, under Act 1841, his assignee takes all the effects of the firm.—McLean v. Johnson, Case No. 8,883.

In a separate bankruptcy of one member of a partnership, under Act 1841, where the firm or the other partners are solvent, the bankruptcy court will order an account to be taken, and leave the property in the possession of the solvent partners; but where such partnership is insolvent, and also all the partners, although some may not be in bankruptcy, such court will order the joint property to be placed in the hands of the assignee of the bankrupt partner to be administered.—Ayer v. Brastow, Case No. 682.

All members of a co-partnership must be adjudged bankrupt, under Act 1867, to enable the assignee to deal with the joint property. An assignee appointed upon the adjudication of a member of a firm upon his individual petition, whether the firm be existing or dissolved, acquires no title to its property.—In re Shepard, Case No. 12,754; Hudgins v. Lane, Id. 6,827; Crompton v. Conkling, Id. 3,407. CONTRA, see In re Shanahan, Case No. 12,701; Wilkins v. Davis, Id. 17,664.

Where a continuing partner agreed to pay the debts of the firm and has so mingled the new stock with the old that they cannot be separated, the entire stock will be considered his individual assets on his bankruptcy.—In re Montgomery, Case No. 9,727.

An agreement of dissolution between partners is ineffectual where no notice is given thereof, and the business is continued under the old firm name, and the assets will be held to be firm assets.—In re Tomes, Case No. 14,084.

Oral evidence is admissible to show that the factory building in which the bankrupt firm carried on its business was a part of the capital stock contributed to the business.—In re Farmer, Case No. 4,650.

§ 197. Payments.

Payments made mala fide to a debtor after petition in bankruptcy filed against him are void as against assignee.—Babbitt v. Burgess, Case No. 693.

One who pays a debt to the bankrupt, in the usual course of business, after the petition is filed, but before the adjudication, and without actual notice or knowledge of the pendency of the proceedings, is liable to the assignee therefor. Act 1867.—Howard v. Crompton, Case No. 6,758.

An executor and trustee, who is chargeable with notice of bankruptcy proceedings against remainder-man, is liable to the assignee for money paid over to such remainder-man.—Beecher v. Gillespie, Case No. 1,224.

The assignee is entitled to the money on a judgment recovered by the bankrupt or a third person in his right for a debt or claim due the bankrupt, and belonging to his assignee; and a court of equity will prevent its diversion.—Moore v. Jones, Case No. 9,768.

The payment to private bankers, after they have suspended business, made in good faith, without reasonable cause on the part of the one paying to believe that the bankers intended to make therewith any fraudulent payments or preferences, is valid, and he is not liable to the assignee in bankruptcy, under Act 1867, § 35.— Borland v. Phillips, Case No. 1,661.

§ 198. Powers.

A power of revocation and a power of appointment by deed or will, reserved to the grantor in a deed of realty to his wife, does not pass to his assignee.—Jones v. Clifton, Case No. 7,457.

§ 199. Property acquired by fraud.

The property of a bankrupt in his actual possession at the time of filing the petition passes to his assignee, and a person who has sold property to the bankrupt cannot recover the same by process in replevin in a state court on the ground that, because of fraud, the title to it has not passed.—In re Vogel, Cases Nos. 16,982, 16,983.

The seller of goods purchased by an insolvent without intent to pay therefor may recover them as against the purchaser's assignee, if he can identify them, and exercises his right within a reasonable time.—Donaldson v. Farwell, Case No. 3,983.

A loan made to a bankrupt, through his agent, after his failure, but without notice thereof, where the money never came to his possession, and it appeared that he never intended to pay the note given as evidence thereof, will not vest title in the bankrupt.—Purviance v. Union Nat. Bank, Case No. 11,475.

§ 200. Property fraudulently conveyed.

A bill of sale, with a lease back to the seller, containing an agreement by him to buy back the property at a fixed price, being unrecorded, held fraudulent as to creditors of the seller, and the property will pass to his assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Gurney, Case No. 5,873.

§ 201. Property passing by succession or will.

A legacy to the bankrupt's wife dependent on her surviving another person, being a mere possibility, does not pass to the assignees of the husband. Act 1800.—Krumbaar v. Burt, Case No. 7,944.

Property coming to a voluntary bankrupt by descent or distribution between the filing of his petition and the adjudication passes to the assignee as assets. (Act 1841.)—Ex parte Newhall, Case No. 10,159.

Where a devise has been made to a bankrupt, and accepted by him, it is a fraud upon his creditors for him to disclaim or renounce it, and the court will compel him to do all acts necessary to perfect his title to the devised estate.—Ex parte Fuller, Case No. 5,147.

Where an estate is devised unconditionally to two persons, and after the death of the testator, but before the probate of the will, one of such devisees is declared a bankrupt in a voluntary proceeding, the estate so devised becomes the property of the bankrupt's assignee, and the latter may sell and convey the same as part of the estate.—Ex parte Fuller, Case No. 5,147.

§ 202. Property held in trust for bankrupt.

Where a testator gives to his trustees an estate for the benefit of his son, but with the directions that they shall hold it and its accumulations until the son shall reach the age of 26 years, and the latter is adjudged a bankrupt at the age of 24, the assignee in bankruptcy, as against the bankrupt, is entitled to the property held by the trustees.—Sanford v. Lackland, Case No. 12,312.

Where income is devised, to cease on the insolvency or bankruptcy of the devisee, and then to go to his wife or children, or in default thereof to accumulate in augmentation of the principal fund, the devisee, on his bankruptcy, has no interest which the assignee can reach.—Nichols v. Eaton, Case No. 10,241.

Where an income is bequeathed to cease on the insolvency or bankruptcy of the beneficiary, and the will provides that the trustees thereunder may, in their discretion, but without its being obligatory upon them, pay to such beneficiary, upon the incomes being forfeited, so much of the income to which he would have been entitled had the forfeiture not occurred, no right vests in the bankrupt beneficiary to any portion of the income which he cannot enforce in any court, and no right thereto passes to his assignee, in bankruptcy.—Nichols v. Eaton, Case No. 10,241.

The assignee of a bankrupt does not take the income of a trust fund which was to be applied to the support of the bankrupt and his wife and children, nor any part thereof.—Durant v. Hospital Life Ins. Co. of Massachusetts, Case No. 4,188.

Lands held for a bankrupt upon a trust resulting upon the payment of the price by him before Act 1841 was passed belonged to the assignee.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,435.

Lands conveyed to a third person by the bankrupt, without any consideration, upon a secret parol trust in his favor, for the purpose of defrauding creditors, pass to the assignee, although the conveyances were made before the passage of Act 1841.—Carr v. Hilton, Case No. 2,436.

Property on which the bankrupt had carried on business for years, together with the outstanding credits of the business and its good will, are available as assets, though the nominal legal title has for years stood in the names of others, under secret trusts to preserve it for the benefit of the bankrupt.—In re Long, Case No. 8,477.

Where a factor becomes bankrupt his principal may recover from the assignee any goods remaining unsold, or any proceeds of sale of such goods which the assignee has sold, or which can be specifically distinguished from the property of the bankrupt.—Nutter v. Wheeler, Case No. 10,384.

§ 203. Property held in trust by bankrupt.

Property held in trust by a bankrupt passes to the assignee, and is held by him until a new trustee is appointed.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,435.

Where a bankrupt trustee has deposited trust money in his own name, with his own, in a bank, his cestui que trust, or he as representing him, may have a trust declared in the trust moneys.—Ex parte Hobbs, Case No. 6,549.

Money given by a reinsuring company to the original insurer, for delivery to the insured, who had suffered a loss, and retained by the assignee in bankruptcy of the original insurer, may be reached by a bill in equity charging the assignee as the trustee of an express trust.—Hosmer v. Jewett, Case No. 6,713.

Where a husband has, by fraud or mistake, been invested with the title in fee-simple of real estate inherited by his wife, equity will treat him as a trustee of his wife, and a court of bankruptcy will refuse to subject the land to liens of the creditors of the husband, who is a bankrupt.—In re Anderson, Case No. 351.

Where pending change of form of investment of wife's separate estate, the husband becomes bankrupt, with the title of the newly-acquired property in his name, the bankruptcy court will decree a settlement upon the wife of such property.—In re Campbell, Case No. 2,348.

A married woman who consents to the purchase of property with her means, by her husband in his own name, cannot afterwards reclaim the property as against his creditors, whose debts accrued while the property was so held by him.—Keating v. Keefer, Case No. 7,635.

Hides purchased by a tanner with the proceeds of drafts drawn on a person for whom he contracted, to manufacture them into leather, as well as the manufactured article, are the property of such person, and the title does not pass to the assignee in bankruptcy of the tanner.—Safford v. Burgess, Case No. 12,213.

§ 204. Property of wife.

Under Act 1841 the assignee of the husband cannot claim jewelry given to the wife before marriage, or gifts from the husband of personal ornaments or attire compatible with his circumstances when they were made.—In re Ludlow, Case No. 8,599.

Property accumulated by the skill and energy of the husband, in engaging in real estate transactions in the wife's name, with her money, will pass to his assignee in bankruptcy.—Muirhead v. Aldridge, Case No. 9,904.

The assignee is not entitled to a chose in action of the bankrupt's wife, where there is no evidence to show that the bankrupt ever asserted his marital right thereto, or made any attempt to reduce it into possession.—In re Snow, Case No. 13,142.

The choses in action of the wife not reduced to possession of the husband do not pass to his assignee.—Wickham v. Valle, Case No. 17,613.

§ 205. Stockholders' liability.

The right to enforce the liability of stockholders for unpaid subscriptions passes to the assignee (Act 1867).—Payson v. Stoever, Case No. 10,863.

The individual liability of stockholders for corporate debts to the amount of their shares imposed by a state constitutional provision is not an asset which can be enforced by the assignee of the corporation.—Dutcher v. Marine Nat. Bank, Case No. 4,203.

§ 206. Miscellaneous cases.

A bankrupt's interest in a cemetery vault held by virtue of a certificate from a corporation which had been dedicated to a pious use by a state enactment, does not pass to the assignee.—Ex parte General Assignee, Case No. 5,306.

The franchise of a bankrupt railroad company is property of such company subject to sale in the bankruptcy proceedings.—Sweatt v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co., Case No. 13,684.

Where a private banker, who is prohibited by the state law from establishing another private bank, for the purpose of evading such law forms a joint-stock bank under the agreement with the stockholders that he is to have the only interest therein, and he is subsequently declared a bankrupt, and such bank fails and a receiver is appointed under the state law, the assignee in bankruptcy of the banker cannot sustain a bill in equity against the receiver for the delivery of the assets of the bank for distribution in bankruptcy, as the filing of the certificates of the organization of such bank, and the acts of user under them, are sufficient to establish the existence of the bank as a corporation as against the associates and third persons, whatever may be the right of the state by quo warranto proceedings, founded upon the frauds alleged, to end its corporate existence.—Goodrich v. Remington, Case No. 5,546.

The property of minor children accumulated by their sole exertions with their father's consent which has always stood in their names does not pass to his assignee.—Ex parte Tebbets, Case No. 13,816.

2. Assignment, and Rights and Remedies of Assignee, in General.

See, also, post, §§ 337-367.

§ 207. Assignment.

The adjudication is an essential prerequisite to an assignment of the estate to the assignee (Act 1867, § 14).—Wright v. Johnson, Case No. 18,082.

A register has the right to convey the estate to the assignee when there is "no opposing interest," although the title to the property is in dispute (Act 1867, § 14).—In re Wylie, Case No. 18,109.

Under Act 1867, § 14, the clerk of the bankruptcy court must record the original deed of assignment.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

It is not essential to the title of the assignee that the assignment to him by the register should be recorded within six months from its date. His title takes effect by relation from the commencement of the proceedings.—Davis v. Anderson, Case No. 3,623.

An assignee under Act 1800 (2 St. 19) cannot deny the authority of the commissioners under whom he received the property of the bankrupt.—Gulick's Ex'rs v. McIver, Case No. 5,865.

The assignment takes effect by operation of law from the commencement of the proceedings, uncontrolled by any mistake by the register in stating the time from which the deed should operate.—In re Pierson, Case No. 11,153.

An assignment by a register in bankruptcy to an assignee under the bankrupt law is within the meaning of a clause in an insurance policy declaring the same void, if assigned without the consent of the company. Case No. 13,308 reversed.—Starkweather v. Cleveland Ins. Co., Case No. 13,309.

A certificate of a clerk of the federal court to a copy of the deed of assignment in bankruptcy is sufficient to admit it to probate without complying with the state laws in reference to such proof (Act 1867, § 14).—In re Neale, Case No. 10,066.

A copy of the record containing the assignment is admissible in evidence to prove the assignment, although it does not purport to be a copy of the whole record, for bankruptcy proceedings do not constitute an integral record, and a copy of each proceeding may be authenticated separately, and is competent presumptive evidence of the facts therein stated.—Michener v. Payson, Case No. 9,524.

§ 208. Rights and remedies in general.

Where personal property of the bankrupt has been attached, the assignee in bankruptcy can take advantage of any remedy which would have been open to a subsequent attaching creditor, since the assignee represents the creditors of the bankrupt as well as the bankrupt himself.—Beers v. Place, Case No. 1,233.

The assignee may take advantage, in behalf of creditors, of any preference or other acts of the bankrupt, in violation of the bankrupt law.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

Under the Wisconsin statute concerning usury (Taylor's Ed. c. 61, § 4), the power to institute proceedings to obtain a forfeiture is a privilege conferred upon the borrower only, and an assignee in bankruptcy is not within the meaning of the statute.—Bromley v. Smith, Case No. 1,922.

The bankrupt act does not grant any power or right to the assignee to institute proceedings by petition for the recovery of a statutory forfeiture not claimed by the bankrupt, either before or after the proceedings in bankruptcy.—Bromley v. Smith, Case No. 1,922.

§ 209. Remedies to recover bankrupt's property.

An assignee in bankruptcy is bound to institute a search in respect to any interest the bankrupt may have in the estate of any of his ancestors, if it is not maintained in the schedules, nor indicated to the assignee or any of the creditors.—In re Mott, Case No. 9,878a.

The assignee must exercise his election in respect to taking possession of property rights within a reasonable time, and unreasonable delay will be considered an election in respect to rights or liens subsequently acquired by others. —Smith v. Gordon, Case No. 13,052.

The lapse of 50 years after an assignment in bankruptcy will be a bar to proceedings to discover assets not disposed of by the assignee. —In re Pintard, Case No. 11,170.

The bankrupt will be required to account for a deficit in his assets shown by his books, or pay the amount to the assignee.—In re Peltasohn, Case No. 10,912.

The assignee may proceed in a summary manner by petition to collect the bankrupt's assets. —In re Marks, Case No. 9,095.

A summary petition by the assignee, and not a plenary suit, is the proper remedy against the bankrupt to recover property illegally withheld by him.—In re Swearinger, Case No. 13,683; In re Thompson, Id. 13,938.

A bankrupt may be compelled, by summary petition, to pay the assignee moneys of the estate collected by him, and not accounted for; and payment of such moneys, after the filing of the petition, for interest on mortgages, will not be allowed him in his account, unless shown to be for the benefit of the estate.—In re Ettinger, Case No. 4,543.

A proceeding to compel the bankrupt to deliver to the assignee a policy of insurance on his life, which he claimed to have transferred to his son before the bankruptcy, must be by plenary bill.—In re Stevens, Case No. 13,390.

A note given to a bankrupt in his own name for rent of a house belonging to his wife cannot be obtained by the assignee upon his application to the court for an order directing the bankrupt to deliver the note, and upon such application the question as to whether the house was fraudulently conveyed to the wife cannot be determined.—In re Westervelt, Case No. 17,445a.

Where a bankrupt, after the decree of bankruptcy, has brought an action in his own name in the state court, without his bankruptcy being pleaded by defendant, the bankruptcy court has power, upon petition of the assignee while the judgment remains unpaid, to order the amount paid to the assignee.—Moore v. Jones, Case No. 9,768.

The bankrupt court has power to order a bankrupt to pay over to the assignee sums which apparently are in his hands.—In re How, Case No. 6,747.

A bankrupt will be committed for contempt in failing to pay over to the assignee money returned in his schedule as "cash on hand."—In re Dresser, Case No. 4,077.

On a petition by the assignee for the possession of property which the bankrupt had given to his wife when insolvent, an affidavit that the property is in possession of the wife is not a sufficient answer.—In re Pierce, Case No. 11,139.

A bankrupt had a permit from the comptroller of a city, which was revocable at the pleasure of the comptroller and could not be transferred without permission, and he placed a certain value on it in a statement of his assets as a basis for credit to a creditor who afterwards became his assignee in bankruptcy, and the bankruptcy court on petition of such assignee ordered that the bankrupt execute a transfer to the assignee of a right to the permit, and a request to the comptroller to consent to such transfer. On petition by the bankrupt for a review, claiming that the permit was not property which passed to his assignee in bankruptcy, held, that the bankrupt was estopped from making such assertion, and that the order of the district court was proper.—In re Gallagher, Case No. 5,192.

A petition to compel the payment of the judgment of a state court to the assignee in bankruptcy will be granted only on condition of the payment of the reasonable expenses for obtaining the judgment, but no charges will be required to be paid for services of a bankrupt's attorney in opposing the motion of the assignee to be allowed to enter and prosecute the claim in the original suit.—Moore v. Jones, Case No. 9,768.

Where the assignee petitions that the bankrupt pay to him the proceeds of a mortgage which was fraudulently transferred, the bankrupt will be allowed to retain from the proceeds the amount paid counsel for preparing his petition and schedules, and the amount determined by the assignee for the temporary support of himself and family, but not the probable expenses of procuring his discharge.—In re Thompson, Case No. 13,938.

§ 210. Adverse claims to property.

Where the bankrupt has possession of property claimed by the assignee as part of the assets of the bankruptcy, and the bankrupt claims to hold them, not as a bankrupt, but under an independent title, as the agent of a third person, he is simply a person claiming an adverse interest, and the circuit court has jurisdiction under Act 1841, §§ 6, 8.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,434.

If the assignees are satisfied that property received by them did not belong to the bankrupt, they should return it immediately; but if they are in doubt, the claimant must seek his remedy in the state courts.—In re Noakes, Case No. 10,281.

The assignee represents both the bankrupt and his creditors, and he can contest claims and rights of property which the bankrupt cannot contest.—In re Gurney, Case No. 5,873.

A judgment creditor claiming money adversely to the assignee cannot enforce the same by motion and on notice to the assignee. He must file a petition therefor, setting forth the facts relied on, and asking specific relief.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,984.

A fund in the hands of the bankrupt court will be detained pending suits to determine adverse claims to its ownership.—In re Sabin, Case No. 12,195.

§ 211. Rights as to pending suits.

Where the writ, in an action for use and occupation, was sued out before the bankruptcy of plaintiff, it was not abated by substituting the assignee, on his appointment, as plaintiff in his place.—Wise v. Decker, Case No. 17,907.

A decree in proceedings to which an assignee in bankruptcy is not a party does not bind him. —Atkinson v. Farmers' Bank, Case No. 609.

Where a bill by a creditor against the bankrupt and his trustee for discovery and relief is pending at the appointment of the assignee, the latter may take control of the suit for the benefit of the estate, on indemnifying the complainant for reasonable expenses of the suit, and becoming responsible for costs.—Smith v. Gordon, Case No. 13,052.

If the assignee elect not to take control of a suit, and the complainant procures a decree, this will give him a prior right against the property in question.—Smith v. Gordon, Case No. 13,052.

Where a creditor has proved his debt against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, and also brought suits at law against the drawers and attached their property, and the assignee in bankruptcy has paid the claim of such creditor, he may prosecute such suits at law at the expense and for the benefit of the estate, such assignee being subrogated to all the rights of the creditor.—In re Babcock, Case No. 696.

Where a homestead is set apart to the family of a debtor, by the judgment of a state court, a few days prior to proceedings in bankruptcy, from which an appeal is taken, which appeal suspends, but does not vacate, the judgment, the assignee will be directed to become a party to the proceedings in the state court, and therein first determine his right to the possession of the property.—In re Moseley, Case No. 9,868.

§ 212. Property in hands of state court officers.

The possession of a sheriff under a levy made before proceedings in bankruptcy were commenced cannot be disturbed by the bankruptcy court, as the possession of the sheriff is the possession of the court of which he is the officer.—Goddard v. Weaver, Case No. 5,495; Townsend v. Leonard, Id. 14,117; In re Shuey, Id. 12,821.

The assignee in bankruptcy cannot maintain an action in the federal court to take from a state sheriff property of the bankrupt which he has taken upon attachment duly issued to him out of the state court before the proceedings in bankruptcy were commenced.—Johnson v. Bishop, Case No. 7,373.

Where the debtor's estate has been conveyed to a receiver appointed on a creditors' bill before the petition in bankruptcy was filed, the assignee in bankruptcy must apply to a court of chancery for delivery over of the property.—Ex parte Waddell, Case No. 17,027.

A receiver in possession of property under a state court decree at the time the bankruptcy proceedings were commenced cannot be deprived of possession by the bankruptcy court, unless for some cause rendering his title impeachable under the bankruptcy act.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,798; Alden v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co., Id. 152; Davis v. Railroad Co., Id. 3,648.

Where, prior to the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, a receiver is appointed, in an action in a state court, to foreclose a mortgage, property in his possession cannot be taken by the assignee without discharging the mortgage debt.—Davis v. Railroad Co., Case No. 3,648.

A receiver appointed on a prior creditors' bill by a state court may be compelled to transfer the property to the assignee in bankruptcy, subject to all prior liens.—In re Whipple, Case No. 17,512.

A decree of bankruptcy overrides all rights sought to be acquired by appointment of a receiver in a state court after the filing of the petition.—Smith v. Buchanan, Case No. 13,016.

Under Act Feb. 13, 1873, only those orders of state courts for the ratable distribution of assets of an insolvent corporation are valid which are passed before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy.—Watson v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, Case No. 17,279.

Where the appointment of a receiver in supplemental proceedings was not formally made, as required by law, prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, held, that the bankrupt's property was not vested in the receiver.—In re Nolan, Case No. 10,289.

§ 213. Power of state courts.

A state court cannot, by its process, take property surrendered by a bankrupt from the possession of his assignee in bankruptcy.—Hewett v. Norton, Case No. 6,441.

Funds in the hands of an assignee in bankruptcy are not subject to garnishment.—In re Cunningham, Case No. 3,478.

Where property in possession of an assignee as part of the estate is taken in replevin issued by a state court in a proceeding to which he is not a party, the district court will see that his possession is not forcibly displaced.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,802.

Suits in a state court against the marshal and assignee, as trespassers in taking property found to have been transferred by way of preference, will be enjoined.—In re Miller, Case No. 9,551.

(C) PREFERENCES AND TRANSFERS BY BANKRUPT, AND ATTACHMENTS AND OTHER LIENS.

1. Preferences and Transfers in General.

See, also, ante, §§ 62–78; post, §§ 594–601.

§ 214. What transfers are preferences within the bankruptcy acts in general.

Preferences to certain creditors to the exclusion of others are within the prohibition of Act 1841, although the bankrupt originally offered to compromise with all his creditors at a fixed and equal ratio. Case No. 336b affirmed.—Amory v. Leeds, Case No. 336c.

Preferences of certain creditors, to the exclusion of others, are not exempted from the prohibition of Act 1841, because obtained through the urgent demands of such creditors, or by means of threats to bring actions for their claims. Case No. 336b affirmed.—Amory v. Leeds, Case No. 336c.

The preference of a creditor is not the payment of one in the ordinary course of business, or under threats or suits, but voluntarily selecting one, as a friend or relative, or settling with him before due, or on the eve of bankruptcy.—Ashby v. Steere, Case No. 576.

The doctrine of pressure by a creditor to force the giving of security for the payment of a debt is not applicable under Act 1867; and it is no answer, when a debtor mortgages his property to secure such a debt, to say that he was "pressed to do it."—Rison v. Knapp, Case No. 11,861.

Conveyance may be an act of bankruptcy, and yet valid as to grantee.—In re Beck, Case No. 1,205.

A deed of property executed within six months before his adjudication in pursuance of a decree of a state court by the bankrupt, who had misappropriated trust funds, which had been finally invested in such property in his own name, is not avoided by his bankruptcy.—In re Myers, Case No. 9,984.

The transfer of merchandise by warehousemen after their insolvency in place of goods previously abstracted by them is a fraudulent preference.—Sharp v. Philadelphia Warehouse Co., Case No. 12,709a.

It is not giving a preference to a creditor within the meaning of Act 1867, when the debtor, peaceably and for convenience, assents to the doing by the creditor of what the latter, if objection and collusion arose, could lawfully do, notwithstanding the objection.—In re Foot, Case No. 4,907.

Creditors receiving from an insolvent a larger per cent. of their debts than the apparent assets would give to all are bound to be careful that they do not obtain preferences.—Clark v. Skilton, Case No. 2,834.

A creditor releasing the goods of a debtor from an execution, and taking other assets, when the debtor is insolvent, obtains illegal preference under Act 1867.—Clark v. Iselin, Case No. 2,825.

The taking of a bill of sale of logs purchased with money furnished by the creditor is not a preference, unless it appears that such bill of sale included more than the creditor was entitled to.—In re Bousfield & Poole Mfg. Co., Case No. 1,703.

The taking of sawed lumber, in settlement of a claim on a conditional sale of logs to an insolvent mill owner, in excess of the claim, creates a fraudulent preference.—Bailey v. Henderson, Case No. 737.

A person who furnishes money to the bankrupts for the purchase of stock, the title to which the bankrupts take in their own name without his knowledge, and subsequently hypothecate as security for a loan, is not entitled to the proceeds of securities which were deposited with a third person on the day of their failure to release the hypothecated stock.—Ungewitter v. Von Sachs, Case No. 14,343.

An unrecorded bill of sale of fixtures and furniture given by a tenant as security for past-due rent, within two months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, is void as an attempt to create a preference, under Rev. St. § 5128.—In re Eckenroth, Case No. 4,265.

Rev. St. § 5084, must be construed in connection with the clause of § 5021 prohibiting certain creditors from proving their debts.—In re Clarke, Case No. 2,843.

Question of insolvency of a Virginia society which was a bank of discount, deposit, and circulation, and had suspended during the Civil War, and thereafter undertook no other business than the liquidation of its affairs, should not be considered as if the society had been a trader, merchant, or bank, but with reference merely to whether its liabilities could meet its assets.—Harmanson v. Bain, Case No. 6,072.

Papers in the form of checks on such bank, bought and sold in the public market, and used for the purpose of set-off, are not checks in the commercial sense, but are mere evidences of the assignment of a chose in action in the form of a deposit.—Harmanson v. Bain, Case No. 6,072.

Persons who sell such papers are not responsible to the assignee of the society for the amounts stated in dollars on their face.—Harmanson v. Bain, Case No. 6,072.

The transfer to creditors of stocks of goods and real estate after the debtors' paper had gone to protest, and some of their establishments were seized for alleged violation of the internal revenue laws, is a fraudulent preference under Act 1867, § 39, as the debtors were insolvent at the time the transfer was made.—In re Louis, Case No. 8,527.

A fraud upon the bankrupt act is not necessarily what is popularly known as a "fraudulent act," but one by which its provisions are evaded or avoided.—Webb v. Sachs, Case No. 17,325.

§ 215. "Insolvency" defined.

The inability to meet engagements and pay debts as they mature in the ordinary course of business, as persons in trade usually do, constitutes insolvency, within the meaning of Act 1867, without reference to the value of the debtor's property.—In re Black, Case No. 1,457; Graham v. Stark, Id. 5,676; Scammon v. Cole, Id. 12,433, affirmed in Case No. 12,432; Wilson v. Brinkman, Case No. 17,794; Driggs v. Moore, Id. 4,083; Martin v. Toof, Id. 9,167; Campbell v. Traders' Nat. Bank, Id. 2,370; Jackson v. McCulloch, Id. 7,140; Sawyer v. Turpin, Id. 12,410, affirmed in Case No. 12,409; Stranahan v. Gregory, Case No. 13,522; Warren v. Tenth Nat. Bank, Id. 17,202, reversing Case No. 17,200; Mayer v. Hermann, Case No. 9,344; Webb v. Sachs, Id. 17,325; In re Hauck, Id. 6,219.

An innkeeper who keeps a bar is a trader, and, when unable to pay his debts as they mature, is insolvent, although his property exceeds in value the amount of his debts.—In re Ryan, Case No. 12,183.

A person will be held insolvent only when he fails to meet his debts according to the general custom of the place of his business.—Hall v. Wager, Case No. 5,951.

Insolvency which renders a transfer void under Act 1867, § 35, is a condition of fact, not of belief.—Hall v. Wager, Case No. 5,951.

The question of insolvency is one of fact, and depends in part upon the usage and understanding which prevail in the locality with reference to which the question arises.—Driggs v. Moore, Case No. 4,083.

The word "insolvency," as used in the currency act of 1864, is synonymous with the same word as used in the bankrupt act, and it is only necessary that insolvency should be in contemplation by the bank making transfers of its assets.—Case v. Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, Case No. 2,489.

See, also, ante, §§ 66, 77.

§ 216. What constitutes "contemplation of bankruptcy."

Under the provision of Act 1841, respecting a transfer by a debtor "in contemplation of bankruptcy," at the time of such transfer, it is sufficient that the insolvent contemplated becoming insolvent and being compelled to wind up his business, and it is not necessary that he contemplated being declared a bankrupt under such act.—Arnold v. Maynard, Case No. 561; Atkinson v. Farmers' Bank, Id. 609; Everett v. Stone, Id. 4,577; Ashby v. Steere, Id. 576; McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Id. 8,888. CONTRA, see Lonergan v. Fenlon, Case No. 8,475.

Payments made, or securities given, by a party knowing himself to be insolvent, are not in contemplation of bankruptcy, if, at the time, he fully expected to continue his business and retrieve his losses.—Atkinson v. Farmers' Bank, Case No. 609.

A mortgage of a stock in trade and of nearly all of the real estate of the debtor on the same day that a petition in bankruptcy was verified is made in contemplation of bankruptcy (Act 1841), and it is immaterial that the grantee did not know that a preference was intended, it having been actually given.—Morse v. Godfrey, Case No. 9,856.

Where an insolvent debtor transfers all of the goods in his store to pay a creditor, such transfer will be regarded as a preference and an act of bankruptcy, where it appears that such goods constitute the greater part of his property, and that he was pressed by execution creditors at the time the assignment was made.—In re House, Case No. 6,735.

§ 217. Knowledge and intent of parties in general.

Both an intention to dispose of property in fraud of Act 1867, and a knowledge of such intention by the transferee, are necessary to entitle the assignee to recover personal property transferred on the eve of bankruptcy.—Dickinson v. Adams, Case No. 3,896.

Transfers of property are not void under Rev. St. § 5128, where it is proved affirmatively that the persons who effected them with the debtor had no intention of obtaining a preference, or the debtor of giving it.—Harmanson v. Bain, Case No. 6,072.

The payment by the maker of a promissory note to an indorser, the maker knowing his insolvency at the time, and the indorser receiving such payment having reasonable cause to believe the maker to be insolvent, is a fraudulent preference of such indorser, within the meaning of Act 1867, § 35, and the assignee in bankruptcy may sue for and recover the amount so paid, for the benefit of all the creditors.—Ahl v. Thorner, Case No. 103.

A mortgage of all the bankrupt's property, more than four and less than six months before the filing of the petition, to secure bona fide debts and liabilities, is good as against the assignee, unless it is shown that the mortgagor was insolvent, or in contemplation of insolvency; that the mortgagee had reasonable cause to know his insolvency; and that the mortgagor designed to prevent, delay, or impair the operation of the bankrupt law.—Sidener v. Klier, Case No. 12,843.

Where a party contributes a certain sum and his personal service, at a stipulated price, to the business of another, and holds himself out as a partner, it is a fraud upon the partnership creditors for him, after both parties have become insolvent, to release to his associate all interest in the assets of the business, and receive for such release the notes of the latter for the amount contributed by such party payable to a third person, who, having knowledge of all the facts, had loaned the same to such party to invest in the business, and a part of such notes being indorsed by a fourth person secured therefor by a mortgage upon the firm assets, and the assignee in bankruptcy of the firm may in equity have such transaction set aside as fraudulent and void.—Mattocks v. Rogers, Case No. 9,300.

The intent on the part of an insolvent debtor to give and of a creditor to secure an illegal preference may be inferred from circumstances.—Vanderhoof v. City Bank of St. Paul, Case No. 16,842.

A security given out of the usual course of business is valid where the creditor did not know of the insolvency of the debtor, or have reasonable cause to believe him insolvent.—Lee v. Franklin Ave. German Sav. Inst., Case No. 8,188.

§ 218. Debtor's knowledge of insolvency.

A person, not knowing himself to be insolvent, may pledge his property to another whose money he has unlawfully used, without violating the prohibition against giving preferences, and money paid to redeem such property cannot be recovered by the assignee (Act 1867).—Jenkins v. Mayer, Case No. 7,272.

A merchant knowing that he cannot pay his debts in the ordinary course of business must be held to have knowledge of his insolvency.—Martin v. Toof, Case No. 9,167.

Where a trader mortgages his whole stock, of the value of about $5,000, to a creditor to secure him in a certain sum, the debtor owing debts to the amount of $5,000 then overdue, and the whole amount arising from the sale of his stock is less than $5,000, the debtor will be regarded, as a matter of law, to have known at the time of making such mortgage that he was insolvent, and must stop business by reason thereof.—Arnold v. Maynard, Case No. 561.

§ 219. Intent of debtor.

A conveyance of property in contemplation of a state of insolvency is void under the bankrupt law.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,885.

Any mortgage or other lien which is intended to give a preference to one or more creditors over others is void. (Act 1841.)—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,885.

A mortgage by an insolvent corporation to secure a loan is not affected by the fact that it was intended as an unlawful preference, if such intent was not carried out.—Corbett v. Woodward, Case No. 3,223.

An intent to prefer individual creditors over persons who might charge the debtor with the statutory liability for the debts of a corporation is not an intent to defraud creditors.—Cookingham v. Ferguson, Case No. 3,182.

An act which directly tends to defeat the purposes and policy of Act 1867, and which was done in contravention of, and with intent to defeat, such purposes and policy, is fraudulent and void.—Beattie v. Gardner, Case No. 1,195.

If the legal effect of a transfer is to prefer a creditor, as a person is presumed to intend the necessary consequences of his acts, the intent to give a preference will be presumed.—Rison v. Knapp, Case No. 11,861; Driggs v. Moore, Id. 4,083; Martin v. Toof, Id. 9,167; Campbell v. Traders' Nat. Bank, Id. 2,370; Catlin v. Hoffman, Id. 2,521.

Where an insolvent debtor does an act which operates as a preference, he is presumed to have intended the preference, until the contrary appears.—In re Black, Case No. 1,457; Sawyer v. Turpin, Id. 12,410; Webb v. Sachs, Id. 17,325.

A payment made in the establishment of an insolvent firm out of its funds and by their recognized agent, without their objection, which has the effect to produce a preference, will be regarded as having been made by such firm with the intention of giving a preference.—Sedgwick v. Sheffield, Case No. 12,624.

§ 220. Transfers by solvent debtors.

A mortgage given to secure a prior loan by an embarrassed debtor, three months before his assignment, where there is no reason to suppose that the debtor will not meet his liabilities, is not a fraudulent preference.—Nash v. Le Clercq, Case No. 10,021.

A conveyance by a solvent grantor to his wife through a third person, where there was no intention to defraud creditors, will not be set aside on behalf of subsequent creditors.—Sedgwick v. Place, Case No. 12,620.

§ 221. Knowledge of insolvency by creditor.

The pendency of proceedings in bankruptcy is sufficient constructive notice to all grantees of property proceeding from the bankrupt.—Morse v. Godfrey, Case No. 9,856.

The taking of a mortgage by a bank from its debtor does not show that the bank considered him to be insolvent, nor that the mortgagor contemplated bankruptcy.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

A request by the bankrupt of a creditor, on the giving of the mortgage in pursuance of a previous agreement to secure a pre-existing debt, to permit him to secure other creditors in such instrument, is notice of the existence of such creditors, and the bankrupt's inability to pay them.—Lloyd v. Strobridge, Case No. 8,435.

A request by a bank of a depositor, who had always before been prompt in his payments, for small demand notes to cover matured paper, and other paper about to mature, which he had made no arrangements to meet, and a further loan, will be regarded as made with a knowledge of the debtor's insolvency.—Loudon v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 8,525.

Repeated failures by a debtor to fulfill promises to pay a claim of the creditor, with knowledge of other debts, charges such creditor taking a mortgage to secure his claim with notice of insolvency, and that he is receiving a preference.—In re Armstrong, Case No. 539.

Proof that the bankrupt, while insolvent, paid or secured defendant in full, without making adequate compensation to his other creditors, casts upon defendant the burden of showing that he did not know at the time that the bankrupt was insolvent.—Stobaugh v. Mills, Case No. 13,461.

Judgments are not to be set aside as fraudulent and void, as having been procured with knowledge of the debtor's insolvency, merely because the plaintiff has exacted a high rate of interest of the debtor, especially when, at the time of entering of the judgments, valuable collateral securities were surrendered to the debtor by plaintiff for a large part of said judgments.—Shaffer v. Fritchery, Case No. 12,697.

A judgment is fraudulent and void if the plaintiff knew, at the time it was entered up, that the debtor had executed a deed of assignment to said plaintiff and another party.—Shaffer v. Fritchery, Case No. 12,697.

Debtors with knowledge of insolvency are bound to know whether such condition continues, and a mistaken belief that all other creditors have settled will not justify a transfer which in fact operates as a preference.—Curran v. Munger, Case No. 3,487.

Testimony of neighbors as to a person's reputation for solvency is entitled to but little weight to negative the knowledge of a mortgagee who was informed that the mortgagor could not pay his debt, which had long been overdue.—Hurley v. Smith, Case No. 6,920.

§ 222. "Reasonable cause to believe" insolvency or intent.

"Reasonable cause" to believe insolvency means a state of facts which would put a prudent man upon inquiry as to the condition of the person with whom he is dealing.—Rison v. Knapp, Case No. 11,861; In re McDonough, Id. 8,775; Webb v. Sachs, Id. 17,325.

A creditor who has knowledge of transactions by the debtor out of the ordinary course of trade is put upon inquiry as to his solvency.—Scammon v. Hobson, Case No. 12,434.

A creditor who knows that his debtor cannot pay all his debts in the ordinary course of business has reasonable cause to believe the debtor to be insolvent.—Wilson v. Brinkman, Case No. 17,794.

Knowledge of the nonpayment of the commercial paper of a merchant at maturity furnishes reasonable cause to believe that he is insolvent. Case No. 17,200 reversed.—Warren v. Tenth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,202.

Creditors who have to resort to legal measures for the collection of accounts long overdue will be held to have reasonable cause to believe the debtor insolvent. — Stranahan v. Gregory, Case No. 13,522.

A creditor, who has obtained a mortgage from his debtor as security, has reasonable cause to believe that his debtor is insolvent, where he has knowledge that for two years such debtor has paid only a small portion of an overdue debt, has sold out the stock of goods for which the account of the creditor was made, has transferred a part of the paper received therefor, has applied for extensions and has been refused, has previously declined to execute a mortgage on the ground that it would injure his credit, and that he has been pressed by other creditors.—Hall v. Wager, Case No. 5,951.

When a creditor to whom a preference was given obtained such preference because he suspected the solvency of his debtor, and the latter proves to be insolvent, such creditor has reasonable ground to believe that his debtor was insolvent, within Act 1867, §§ 35, 39.—Campbell v. Traders' Nat. Bank, Case No. 2,370.

The existence of a financial crisis constitutes reasonable cause to believe persons otherwise in doubtful circumstances to be insolvent.—In re Clarke, Case No. 2,843.

Where it appears that overdrafts were made by a merchant in collusion with a defaulting teller, for which a deed of preference is given to the bank one month prior to a default decree in bankruptcy against the merchant, the deed is void, as such facts constitute a reasonable cause for the bank to believe that the bankrupt was insolvent, and made the deed to defeat the bankrupt law. — Alderdice v. State Bank of Virginia, Case No. 154.

That property of a debtor is sold under execution is evidence that the creditor has reasonable cause to believe that the debtor is insolvent and contemplates bankruptcy.—Mayer v. Hermann, Case No. 9,344.

That a merchant, having no defense to debts maturing in his current business, submits to be sued for them, is strong evidence of insolvency.—Mayer v. Hermann, Case No. 9,344.

Knowledge that a party is embarrassed in carrying out his business for want of means is not sufficient to fix on a grantee in a trust deed knowledge of his insolvency, if he fully believed that his property was more than sufficient to pay all his debts.—In re Wynne, Case No. 18,117.

The fact that a person doing business obtains renewals of his commercial paper, or under special circumstances pays a large discount, is not notice of insolvency to a creditor, where it is shown that such commercial paper was selling at equal rates in the market.—Golson v. Niehoff, Case No. 5,524.

A bank which takes the checks of an insolvent firm is put upon inquiry by their nonpayment.—Warren v. Tenth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,200.

Circumstances which would be reasonable cause for belief in insolvency or fraud in a commercial community may have less significance in a rural district.—Lakin v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 7,999.

In a rural community the mere nonpayment of a note at maturity is not sufficient evidence of insolvency to put a creditor dealing with him on inquiry.—Shaffer v. Fritchery, Case No. 12,697.

Act 1867, before the amendment of June 22, 1874, did not require the creditor receiving a preference to know that reasonable cause existed for believing the debtor insolvent, in order to render such preference invalid, but only that reasonable cause should exist. — In re Clarke, Case No. 2,843.

It is immaterial what the creditor thought or knew or believed about the debtor's intentions in giving the preference, where he had reasonable cause, at the time of taking it, to believe the debtor insolvent.—Hall v. Wager, Case No. 5,951; Webb v. Sachs, Id. 17,325.

Ignorance of the law cannot avail creditors who, knowing of facts showing insolvency, yet receive from their debtor property in satisfaction of their debts.—Martin v. Toof, Case No. 9,167.

A creditor who, at the time of taking a security, has no reasonable cause to believe the debtor insolvent, will be allowed to hold it, as against the assignee.—Rankin v. Third Nat. Bank, Case No. 11,568.

A seller who, suspecting insolvency of the buyer, induces him to give up goods in greater part purchased from others, in full satisfaction of the buyer's claim, is liable for their amount to the assignee.—Anonymous, Case No. 466.

A creditor accepting a security is conclusively presumed to know what appears upon its face, and to have reasonable cause to believe it was intended to accomplish what must be its ordinary and necessary effect.—Graham v. Stark, Case No. 5,676.

Where it appears that the creditor had a reasonable cause to believe the debtor insolvent, and that the debtor knew of his insolvency, it is sufficiently proved that the creditor had a reasonable cause to believe that the debtor intended to prefer him.—Stobaugh v. Mills, Case No. 13,461.

The mere fact that debtors had some time previously compromised with creditors at 45 cents on the dollar is not reasonable cause to believe that they intended, by suffering execution to be levied, to give the creditor a preference. Case No. 17,200, reversed.—Warren v. Tenth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,202.

§ 223. Knowledge of grantee necessary to defeat transfer.

Act 1841, § 2 (5 Stat. 440), does not render void a contract or conveyance made two months before the bankruptcy, whatever may have been the intention of the bankrupt, if the other party acted fairly and had no notice of his intentions.—McLean v. Lafayette, Case No. 8,888.

A creditor will not be held to be unduly preferred by a bankrupt unless he understands at the time that he is dealing with a bankrupt or with his avowed agent for security or payment out of the funds of the bankrupt.—Winsor v. Kendall, Case No. 17,886.

The payment of a due bill to induce the holder to become a party to a general assignment in favor of creditors which never took effect, made by a person who either did not act as agent for the debtor, or, if he did, concealed such agency from the creditor, is not a fraudulent preference.—Winsor v. Kendall, Case No. 17,886.

A debtor known or believed to be embarrassed is not disabled from making a fair and honest sale of his property with a view to keep out of bankruptcy. Case No. 3,572, affirmed.—Darby v. Lucas, Case No. 3,573.

A payment, conveyance, or security given to a creditor within four months of the bankruptcy proceedings is valid, unless the creditor had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent, and that a fraud upon the act was intended.—Wadsworth v. Tyler, Case No. 17,032; Babbitt v. Walburn, Id. 694; Sedgwick v. Sheffield, Id. 12,624; Castle v. Lee, Id. 2,506.

A payment made within four months of the petition in bankruptcy may be recovered back if the creditor had reasonable cause to believe that it was made in contemplation of insolvency and to give him a preference, though he had no reasonable cause to believe the debtor then to be insolvent. (Act 1867, § 35.)—Paige v. Loring, Case No. 10,672.

The word "knowledge" in Act 1867, § 35, as amended (Act June 24, 1874), means actual knowledge, as contradistinguished from constructive knowledge.—In re Hauck, Case No. 6,219.

The insertion of the words "know," etc., in Act 1867, §§ 35, 39, by the amendment of June 22, 1874, was a material change from the words "reasonable cause to believe"; and congress intended thereby to affect only transactions evidently mala fide. Case No. 12,899, affirmed.—Singer v. Sloan, Case No. 12,898.

To defeat a conveyance, since the amendment of 1874, it must be shown that the grantee had reasonable cause to believe the grantor insolvent, and that he knew that a fraud upon the bankruptcy act was intended.—Gattman v. Honea, Case No. 5,271.

A creditor taking security upon all his debtor's property, knowing it to be insufficient to pay his own debt and the other creditors in full, is chargeable with knowledge that the transaction is "in fraud of the bankrupt act." (Act June 22, 1874.)—Robinson v. Tuttle, Case No. 11,968.

Notice of facts sufficient to put mortgagees on inquiry as to an insolvent's condition and intention will charge them with the knowledge which an investigation would have developed.—Burpee v. First Nat. Bank of Janesville, Case No. 2,185.

A person having notice of such a state of facts in regard to the financial affairs of the bankrupt as in law constitute insolvency must be presumed to have actual knowledge that a transfer to him is a fraud upon Act 1867.—In re Hauck, Case No. 6,219.

Mortgages on the stock and real estate of a bankrupt, taken at a time and in a form which must necessarily break up his business, to secure a debt a year and a half overdue, are fraudulent and void. Act 1867.—Graham v. Stark, Case No. 5,676.

A creditor of a banker who receives payment of his debt after knowledge that the debtor has suspended payment and closed his doors secures an illegal preference, and is liable to the assignee for the amount received.—Markson v. Hobson, Case No. 9,099.

Security taken by a creditor on the dismissal of his suit on negotiable paper, in which the debtor made no defense, after knowledge that he was obliged to ask extensions, may be recovered by the assignee if taken within the time designated within the act.—Dunning v. Perkins, Case No. 4,180.

A payment, transfer, or security given by the debtor and accepted by the creditor after knowledge or notice of insolvency is void, under Act 1867, as a fraudulent preference.—In re Palmer, Case No. 10,681; Foster v. Hackley, Id. 4,971; In re Gregg, Id. 5,797; Woodsum v. Bray, Id. 17,998.

A payment, transfer, or security given within the time prescribed by the bankruptcy acts, by a debtor, when insolvent, to a creditor who had reason to believe him to be so, and that a fraud upon the act is intended, is void.—Merchants' Nat. Bank of Hastings v. Truax, Case No. 9,451; In re McDonough, Id. 8,775; Driggs v. Moore, Id. 4,083.

The conveyance of real estate, without consideration, by an insolvent debtor to his wife, she giving a mortgage thereon to creditors who know the debtor to be insolvent, is a preference, under Act 1867, and such conveyance will be set aside at the suit of the assignee.—Gibson v. Dobie, Case No. 5,394.

Money paid to the indorser, or by his procurement or arrangement to the holder, by the maker, with intent to give a preference, the indorser having reasonable cause to believe the maker insolvent, is a fraudulent preference, under Act 1867, if paid within four months of the bankruptcy proceedings.—Thomas v. Woodbury, Case No. 13,916.

A creditor receiving payment, with "cause to believe" his debtor insolvent, is presumed to know that such debtor thereby intended a fraud upon the act.—Brooke v. McCraken, Case No. 1,932.

Under Act 1867, notice to a creditor of an act of bankruptcy does not affect a transfer to him, except as tending to show that he had reason to believe the transfer was in fraud of the bankrupt law.—Catlin v. Hoffman, Case No. 2,521.

A mortgagee who takes a conveyance from the mortgagor under circumstances apparently for the latter's relief must have actual notice that it is in fraud (Act 1867).—Boothe v. Brooks, Case No. 1,650.

§ 224. Effect of knowledge of agent or attorney.

Where the creditor's agent has reasonable cause to believe the debtor insolvent, with knowledge that the transaction is in fraud of the bankrupt law, the effect is the same as if the creditor himself had taken part therein with the same cause to believe and the same knowledge.—Sage v. Wynkoop, Case No. 12,215.

The knowledge of an attorney, who takes a judgment note in his own name and enters judgment thereon, of the insolvency of the debtor, is imputed to his principal.—Vogel v. Lathrop, Case No. 16,985.

Knowledge by an attorney, who sues to recover a debt, of facts which will make the collection of the debt a preference, is imputable to his client.—Mayer v. Hermann, Case No. 9,344.

The acts, knowledge, and intentions of a husband managing his wife's business, in reference to the business, must be held to be her acts, knowledge, and intentions.—Graham v. Stark, Case No. 5,676.

An attorney, with knowledge of the debtor's insolvency, defended a suit on a just debt, and he also obtained, as attorney for another creditor, a judgment by default against such debtor in a suit brought later, before judgment could be obtained in the prior suit. Held, that the attorney had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor intended to give a preference to the creditor in the later suit, and his knowledge was to be imputed to his client.—Wight v. Muxlow, Case No. 17,629.

§ 225. Payment of present consideration for transfer.

A bona fide conveyance by an insolvent for an adequate consideration, made more than two months before petition filed, to one who had no notice of a previous act of bankruptcy or of intention to take the benefit of the act, is not void. (Act 1841.)—Dennett v. Mitchell, Case No. 3,789.

The preference of creditors prohibited by Act 1867 is a preference to secure or pay a pre-existing debt.—Casey v. La Société de Credit Mobilier, Case No. 2,496.

The mere giving of security, on a loan of money, is not an illegal preference, under Act 1867.—Clark v. Iselin, Case No. 2,825.

A sale by the bankrupt will not be set aside where the purchaser paid adequate consideration in cash, at the time of the sale.—In re Pusey, Case No. 11,478.

Advances made in good faith to a debtor carrying on business upon security taken at the time do not violate either the terms or the policy of the bankrupt act.—Wadsworth v. Tyler, Case No. 17,032.

A person who is insolvent may borrow money, and give a valid security therefor on his property, if no fraud in fact be intended, and no fraud on Act 1867 is effected.—Gaffney's Assignees v. Signaigo, Case No. 5,169.

The taking of security on making a bona fide loan to an insolvent, if without participation in any intent to defraud creditors or defeat the bankrupt act, is valid.—Darby v. Boatman's Sav. Inst., Case No. 3,571.

A transfer with intent to defraud creditors is void, notwithstanding adequate consideration paid.—Alexander v. Todd, Case No. 175.

A mortgage given to secure a loan of actual value, in good faith, within the periods specified in Act 1867, § 35, and after the amendment of June 22, 1874, § 11, is not invalid, unless the mortgagee knew that it was intended as a preference, and such knowledge will not be presumed.—Campbell v. Waite, Case No. 2,374.

A mortgage given to secure a loan made in good faith, to one who had knowledge of the mortgagor's insolvency, is valid. (Act June 22, 1874, § 11.)—In re Montgomery, Case No. 9,732.

A mortgage given by a retailer on his stock of goods, within four months of bankruptcy, to obtain money with which to prefer a creditor, is void as against the assignee if the mortgagee could, by inquiry, have discovered the purpose.—Ex parte Mendell, Case No. 9,418.

A deed to a purchaser for value will not be avoided unless it is shown that he had reasonable cause to believe that the vendor intended to contravene the bankrupt act. Case No. 3,572 affirmed.—Darby v. Lucas, Case No. 3,573.

A sale by a debtor will not be avoided because the purchaser was aware of the intention of the seller to prefer certain of his creditors by the use of the proceeds of the sale.—Van Kleeck v. Miller, Case No. 16,860.

Where solvent debtors sell a part of their stock of groceries in trade at a low price, to one who is not engaged in the grocery business, about a month before they suspend payment, with an intent to raise sufficient funds to meet their maturing obligations, and not in contemplation of insolvency, such sale is valid, and, upon their becoming bankrupt a few days after suspension of payment, it will not be set aside at the suit of the assignee. Act 1867, § 35.—Sedgwick v. Lynch, Case No. 12,615.

The sale and transfer, by the bankrupt, of property at a fair price, before insolvency, in good faith, and not in contemplation of insolvency, for the purpose of curtailing his business, cannot be impeached on the ground of fraud.—Sedgwick v. Wormser, Case No. 12,626.

A temporary loan at exorbitant interest upon the conveyance of the insolvent borrower's whole assets will be regarded as made to defeat the object and impede the operation and effect of Act 1867.—Brooks v. Davis, Case No. 1,950.

Where a corporation sells the stock of a store, and receives in payment mortgages amounting to $10,000, and the vice president, under the authority of the trustees, effects a sale of such mortgage for $7,000, and the corporation is declared a bankrupt within six months, such transaction will be upheld where it does not appear that the purchasers of such mortgages had reasonable cause to believe that the transfer was made for the purpose of preventing the property from being distributed, under Act 1867.—Judson v. Kelty, Case No. 7,567.

A pledge of part of the assets of a national bank to secure a loan made by one who knows its embarrassed condition is not a preference.—Casey v. La Societe De Credit Mobilier, Case No. 2,496.

Where a mortgage is for money advanced at the time, and the mortgagor assures the mortgagee that the money is to be used in his business, and there is no evidence that these statements were false, the mortgage will be held valid, though it was given out of the ordinary course of the trader's business.—Ex parte Packard, Case No. 10,650.

A mortgage given while the debtor was solvent, and not in contemplation of insolvency, and with no intent to defeat Act 1867, within six months of his bankruptcy, to secure credit for supplies and materials used in fitting up an establishment, is not fraudulent, and is valid as against the assignee. Case No. 11,322 affirmed.—Coggeshall v. Potter, Case No. 2,955.

Shipments of cotton, after the insolvency of the shipper, to commission merchants who made advances thereon, are not a preference, but in effect a sale of so much cotton to procure the necessary means to realize upon his assets.—Harrison v. McLaren, Case No. 6,139.

Where the bankrupt sells 6 out of 20 specific bonds of like character and value, in the hands of a bailee, and receives pay therefor before the bankruptcy, the rights of the purchaser of the 6 bonds are superior to those of the assignee of the vendor, as such assignee takes the property of the bankrupt subject to all rights existing in favor of third persons at the time of the bankruptcy.—Hamilton v. National Loan Bank, Case No. 5,987.

A sale by a bankrupt at a fair price of property to raise money to defray expenses of contemplated bankruptcy proceedings is not invalid, provided the sum so raised is reasonable in amount.—In re Keefer, Case No. 7,636.

The sale of the furniture and fixtures of a business office by the insolvent, and a lease of such office to a person who knew of the insolvency, is voidable at the suit of the assignee upon his being declared a bankrupt, as such sale deprived him of his means of continuing business, and was a sale out of the ordinary course of business.—Brooks v. D'Orville, Case No. 1,951.

See, also, ante, § 68.

§ 226. Payment of part consideration.

A mortgage upon a stock in trade, made within four months of the petition in bankruptcy, may be good in so far as it was given to secure advances then made, and invalid in so far as it was given to secure a pre-existing debt.—In re Stowe, Case No. 13,513.

A mortgage which is in part a preference will be held good in equity as to the valid portion, where the holder thereof is not guilty of actual fraud.—In re Whipple File Co., Case No. 17,522.

Where the legal and the illegal considerations which entered into a mortgage are clearly separable, it will be held void only in part.—Corbett v. Woodward, Case No. 3,223; Cramton v. Tarbell, Id. 3,349.

A mortgage to secure, among other things, a loan to a bankrupt, made to enable the mortgagee to get possession of attached goods, and hold them as a preference over other creditors, is void to the extent of such loan, but will not taint the security as to other advances made in good faith.—Cramton v. Tarbell, Case No. 3,349.

The fact that valid considerations entered into a conveyance will not prevent its being fraudulent, if one of the motives was to hinder and defeat creditors.—Burrill v. Lawry, Case No. 2,199.

A mortgage taken by a creditor with knowledge of the debtor's insolvency, given in part to secure a pre-existing debt and in part for a credit given at the time of its execution, is void in toto.—Tuttle v. Truax, Case No. 14,277.

An assignment of notes and mortgage by an insolvent debtor, with intent to give a preference to a creditor who has reasonable grounds to believe that a preference was intended, about a month before an adjudication of bankruptcy, as assignee for pre-existing indebtedness and a small additional loan, is void under Act 1867, § 35.—Grannis v. Beardsley, Case No. 5,688.

Where a conveyance is made in fraud of the bankrupt act, the fact that a part of the consideration was cash will not prevent the assignee from recovering the entire property.—Scammon v. Hobson, Case No. 12,434.

A mortgage given by an insolvent within four months of the bankruptcy proceedings in payment of a pre-existing debt, and to secure a loan, to be used in giving an unlawful preference, all the parties having knowledge, is void under Act 1867, § 35.—Bucknam v. Goss, Case No. 2,097.

§ 227. Validity of transfer or payment as affected by time—In general.

A conveyance, to be fraudulent within the bankruptcy act (section 29), must be made within four or six months before the filing of the petition by or against the debtor, as required by section 35.—In re Freeman, Case No. 5,082.

Under Act 1867, § 35, where the transaction by the insolvent is with a creditor, the four-months limitation applies, but where the transaction is with a general purchaser the six-months limitation governs.—Babbitt v. Walbrun, Case No. 694; Bean v. Brookmire, Id. 1,168.

All transactions to prefer a bona fide creditor come within the four-months clause Act 1867 (Rev. St. § 5128). The six-months clause applies to other creditors.—In re Bousfield & Poole Mfg. Co., Case No. 1,703.

An action by the assignee of a firm to set aside an assignment by a member for the benefit of his individual creditors is not limited to four months, under Act 1867, § 35.—Barnewall v. Jones, Case No. 1,027.

Act 1867, § 35, does not apply to a bona fide preference by the bankrupt of one of his creditors, made more than four months before the proceedings in bankruptcy. Case No. 11,322 affirmed.—Coggeshall v. Potter, Case No. 2,955.

The preference to a creditor, to be void under either section 35 or section 39, Act 1867, must be made within four months of the filing of the petition.—Collins v. Gray, Case No. 3,013.

Act 1867, § 35, applies to transfers to a creditor or persons having claims against the bankrupt, or who is under a liability for him and receives property by way of preference, and applies also to the purchase of the property of a bankrupt by any person who has no claim against him and is under no liability for him.—Bean v. Brookmire, Case No. 1,168.

A mortgage executed by the bankrupt more than four months before the filing of the petition cannot be set aside at the suit of the assignee, on the ground that it operates as a preference.—Hall v. Hayner, Case No. 5,933.

The payment of a joint debt by joint property is not a voidable preference unless both debtors become bankrupt within the time limited by the statute. This rule applies to partnership transactions.—Forsaith v. Merritt, Case No. 4,946.

The limitation within which a preference may be set aside at a suit of the assignee is four months in voluntary, and two months in involuntary, cases.—In re Schoenenberger, Case No. 12,473.

Where a petition is filed on March 14, 1874, a payment theretofore made on November 14, 1873, will be held to have been made more than four months before the bankruptcy.—Warren v. Garber, Case No. 17,196.

Where the purchaser makes a payment for stock on being notified that it is about to be transferred, and the seller, later in the day, fails, without making the transfer, a subsequent transfer through a debtor of the seller is not in fraud of the bankrupt act. Act 1867.—Sparhawk v. Richards, Case No. 13,205.

A preference to a creditor cannot be set aside unless an adjudication in bankruptcy is had within the time limited by Act 1867.—In re Hamlin, Case No. 5,994.

The rule of the local statute that the limitation does not begin to run till the fraud is discovered has no application to such case.—In re Hamlin, Case No. 5,994.

Several creditors may, with the aid of their debtor, conspire to get an advantage over other creditors by a voluntary preference, if the means used are not unlawful, and the preferences are made more than two months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy (Act 1874).—Van Kleeck v. Miller, Case No. 16,860.

The assignee cannot recover money paid by the bankrupt to a bona fide creditor more than four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. Act 1867, § 35.—Hubbard v. Allaire Works, Case No. 6,814; Shearman v. Bingham, Id. 12,732.

Where a creditor holds notes of a debtor, and exchanges some of them for notes of less amount of a firm in which such debtor was a partner, if made in contemplation of bankruptcy, it is a fraud on joint creditors, but such transaction cannot be set aside, where the bankruptcy of the firm occurs more than four months afterwards. Act 1867, § 35.—In re Lane, Case No. 8,044.

A sale to a creditor 13 months before filing petition, if bona fide and without knowledge of contemplated bankruptcy, though it may prevent the discharge of the bankrupt, is valid as to the creditor.—Ashby v. Steere, Case No. 576.

§ 228. —— Incomplete transfers.

The four-months limitation, in the case of a secret deed of trust intended as a preference, does not begin to run against the assignee until the deed is recorded.—Harris v. Exchange Nat. Bank, Case No. 6,119.

A transfer of property by deed will be held to have taken place at the time of the actual execution and delivery of the deed, and not at its date in determining whether the transfer was within six months of bankruptcy (Act 1867, § 39).—In re Rooney, Case No. 12,032.

Where the security given by a creditor consists of a trust deed executed by an officer of a corporation more than four months before proceedings in bankruptcy, which act was ratified by the corporation within the four months, the validity of the deed must be determined by the circumstances existing at the time of the ratification, and not by those of the time of the original execution.—In re Kansas City Stone & Marble Co., Case No. 7,610.

Where a debtor within one month of his bankruptcy conveys real and personal property that he had previously sold and received payment for, and surrendered to the purchaser, but had not conveyed, such conveyance is valid, although the debtor knew that he was insolvent, as the title to such property was held by him in trust for the purchaser.—Steadman v. Caswell, Case No. 13,330a.

The purchaser of goods previously paid for takes a good title as against the assignee in bankruptcy though they were delivered by the manufacturer after the purchaser knew of his insolvency.—Scammon v. Bowers, Case No. 12,431.

A mortgage given for a loan whose execution the lender has unlawfully delayed stands as if executed at the time agreed.—In re Montgomery, Case No. 9,732.

Where a creditor obtains in good faith as security a receipt for coal in the debtor's yard not separated from the common mass, he may take possession after discovering the insolvency of the debtor.—Sherman v. Traders' Nat. Bank, Case No. 12,770.

The delivery of possession, subsequent to the failure of the bailee, of property, whose title was in the person who made advances thereon, is not invalidated by Act 1867.—Sharp v. Philadelphia Warehouse Co., Case No. 12,709a.

Where the contract of sale is not complete, through the default of the seller, before the bankruptcy of the purchaser, he is entitled to have the goods returned, where they have not been accepted and paid for.—In re Pusey, Case No. 11,477.

Advances made in good faith, which are part of the money agreed to be secured by a mortgage, which is being prepared, will be protected, though there is a change of the debtor's circumstances after the money was advanced and before the mortgage was delivered.—Ex parte Ames, Case No. 323.

§ 229. Effect of prior promise to give security or make transfer.

A transfer in execution of a contract made when there were no circumstances to impeach it as an intended fraud upon the bankrupt law will be protected.—In re Wood, Case No. 17,937.

An advance will be considered a present consideration for a conveyance made within a reasonable time thereafter and in pursuance of the prior agreement.—Gattman v. Honea, Case No. 5,271.

A conveyance made within four months of the bankruptcy, in pursuance of an agreement made when the bankrupt was solvent, and on an adequate consideration, will not be set aside.—Post v. Corbin, Case No. 11,299.

The removal of the debtor's goods in fulfillment of an existing contract, made long before the commencement of the proceedings, is not fraudulent within the meaning of Act 1867.—M. & M. Nat. Bank v. Brady's Bend Iron Co., Case No. 9,018.

Where a mortgage is given by an insolvent in contemplation of bankruptcy, preferring a creditor, it makes no difference as to the character of the act that the mortgage was given voluntarily or upon request of the mortgagee, or in accordance with a verbal agreement made in general terms when the debt was contracted, which such mortgage is given to secure.—Arnold v. Maynard, Case No. 561.

A security given as a preference is none the less void because given in pursuance of a promise made when the debt was contracted.—Graham v. Stark, Case No. 5,676.

A security, given when insolvent, under an agreement made when solvent, and when the debt was contracted, where its execution was omitted by mistake, is not voidable as against creditors.—Stover v. Kennedy, Case No. 13,510.

A promise to give security made at the time of the loan must contemplate the giving of a specific and definite security, such as could be enforced by bill in equity for specific performance to sustain a mortgage otherwise invalid as a preference.—In re Jackson Iron Mfg. Co., Case No. 7,153; Nash v. Le Clercq, Id. 10,021.

An oral promise, made at the time the debt is contracted, to give security, if required, cannot be executed after the debtor has become insolvent.—In re Connor, Case No. 3,118; Lloyd v. Strobridge, Id. 8,435.

A mortgage given in pursuance of a parol agreement to give security, if required, is not valid as against the assignee in bankruptcy, if the act of giving the mortgage would have been a preference at the time it was given, if the agreement had not been made.—Ex parte Ames, Case No. 323.

§ 230. Transfers out of usual and ordinary course of business.

A sale made by a person contemplating bankruptcy is not ipso facto void; but if made without the usual course of trade, or is unusual in the time, or price, or character, or quantity of the goods sold, such facts, as against the vendee, are held to be prima facie evidence of the fraud.—In re Hunt, Case No. 6,881; In re Krum, Id. 7,943.

The presumption of fraud arising out of a transfer made out of the usual and ordinary course of business must be overcome by proof that the purchaser took the proper steps to find out the pecuniary condition of the seller.—Brooks v. Davis, Case No. 1,950.

Regard must be had to the nature of the property sold in determining whether a transfer is made out of the usual and ordinary course of business, under Act 1867, § 35.—Judson v. Kelty, Case No. 7,567.

A sale by a manufacturer of chairs of a large quantity of black walnut logs, which he used in his business, is not one in the usual and ordinary course of business.—Schrenkeisen v. Miller, Case No. 12,480.

A sale of an entire stock of goods is presumably fraudulent, and the purchaser must show that he used all reasonable means to ascertain that the sale was an honest one.—Main v. Glen, Case No. 8,973.

The sale of the debtor's entire stock in trade and notes on hand to a creditor in payment of the indebtedness, the grantee assuming other obligations of the debtor, is a transfer out of the ordinary and usual course of business.—North v. House, Case No. 10,310.

A mortgage of an entire stock in trade to secure a pre-existing indebtedness is not a transfer in the usual and ordinary course of business, and is prima facie evidence of fraud.—Rison v. Knapp, Case No. 11,861; Graham v. Stark, Id. 5,676; Hurley v. Smith, Id. 6,920.

The sale of a stock of goods with the fixtures to a creditor, he giving his notes for the balance above his claim, with notice of the insolvency of the debtors, is not made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and is void. Act 1867, § 35.—In re Kahley, Case No. 7,593.

A sale by a trader of a stock of goods at 10 o'clock at night, without invoice, for cash, is a sale not made in the ordinary course of business, within Act 1867, § 35.—Davis v. Armstrong, Case No. 3,624.

A confession of judgment, which enables the creditor to seize the debtor's stock in trade and close out his business, is not a transaction in the usual and ordinary course of business, and is prima facie evidence of fraud.—Webb v. Sachs, Case No. 17,325.

A mortgage on a stock of goods is only prima facie fraudulent as being out of the usual and ordinary course of business, and its validity may be established by proof.—Moore v. Young, Case No. 9,782.

The knowledge only that the bankrupts were a little short of money on the day in question, and wished the creditor to substitute a note secured by bond and mortgage for a currency check, is not sufficient to show that the creditor had reasonable cause to believe the debtor to be insolvent.—Collins v. Bell, Case No. 3,010.

The prima facie evidence of fraud in the case of a mortgage of an entire stock of goods, except the portion previously mortgaged to another, is not overcome by the testimony of defendant that he did not know of other outstanding indebtedness, where it appears that he was clerk for the debtor and had access to his books of account, and knew of the debtor's inability to pay debts as they matured.—Wilson v. Stoddard, Case No. 17,838.

§ 231. Exchange of property or securities.

For a debtor to make over to a secured creditor property, in fair exchange, for the security, is not contrary to the bankrupt law.—Hallack v. Tritch, Case No. 5,956.

The exchange of goods covered by a warehouse receipt in the warehouse of the vendor for others of equal or less value within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy is not contrary to Act 1867.—Sharp v. Philadelphia Warehouse Co., Case No. 12,709a.

An exchange by an insolvent of $500 worth of wheat for a wagon and team, with a view of claiming them as exempt, is void, and the title to the wheat vests in the assignee. Rev. St. §§ 5129, 3046.—In re Parker, Case No. 10,724.

Where, on an exchange of property, the creditor receives property of much greater value than that surrendered by him, the transaction will be deemed a preference if an original transaction would, under the circumstances, be so treated.—Waring v. Buchanan, Case No. 17,176.

A mortgage given within four months in exchange for a deed of the property given more than four months before the petition was filed is valid, as a change of securities. Case No. 12,410 affirmed.—Sawyer v. Turpin, Case No. 12,409.

Where a creditor who has a mechanic's lien upon property of his debtor receives a deed of trust upon the same property, the transaction is merely a change of securities, and is not a fraudulent preference of such creditor.—In re Weaver, Case No. 17,307.

A new bill of sale of a merchant's stock in trade taken by the managers of a bank to secure overdrafts which the cashier had secretly allowed and secured by a prior bill of sale is a valid security, where the prior bill of sale was given four months before the commencement of proceedings, as the transaction took effect by relation to the first bill of sale.—In re Doran, Case No. 4,000.

The substitution and registry of a chattel mortgage, correcting a mistake in a prior unrecorded mortgage, is not an illegal preference, but simply an exchange of securities. Case No. 11,224 affirmed.—Player v. Lippincott, Case No. 11,223.

Where one deed of trust is executed as a substitute for a preceding one, the former will at once cease to have any validity or effect.—In re Wynne, Case No. 18,117.

A conveyance by an insolvent debtor to his creditor, of property on which the creditor had a lien exceeding the value of the property, does not violate Act 1867, § 35.—Catlin v. Hoffman, Case No. 2,521.

See, also, ante, § 69.

§ 232. Payments.

Where a bank, which acts as agent of another bank for clearing-house purposes, pays, upon the day of its failure, to the latter, which had knowledge of its insolvency, deposits which had been made on its general account to meet checks in the clearing house, held, that such payment might be recovered by the assignee as an illegal preference.—Phelan v. Iron Mountain Bank, Case No. 11,069.

Payment to depositors by insolvent bankers is not made good by the fact that the debtors acted under advice of counsel to save a criminal prosecution.—Strain v. Gourdin, Case No. 13,521.

Charging notes or other obligations as they become due to a banker against the obligor's deposit account, as customary, may become an unlawful preference on the bankruptcy of the depositor.—In re Warner, Case No. 17,177.

An attorney to whom the insolvent has in good faith paid a fee for necessary services rendered at the time is not liable to refund it.—Triplett v. Hanley, Case No. 14,179.

Fees paid an attorney by a bankrupt for services in opposing a petition in bankruptcy may be recovered back where inconsistent with a due regard for the interests of the general creditors.—Triplett v. Hanley, Case No. 14,179.

Payments by husband on policy on his life for benefit of wife after he becomes insolvent are fraudulent, and may be recovered from wife out of proceeds of policy, when paid, with interest.—In re Bear, Case No. 1,178.

Where a creditor recovers a judgment against a debtor, which became a lien on real estate of sufficient value to satisfy the same, and the debtor subsequently assigns all his property for the benefit of creditors, preferring such judgment creditor, and the trustee upon the assignment makes payments on the judgment out of the personal property, and the debtor is declared a bankrupt, and his assignee brings action against the judgment creditor to recover the property paid to him, such action cannot be maintained, as no fraudulent preference can be predicated upon the payments made on the judgment, as the lien was saved, and such payments became a matter of legal right.—Livingston v. Bruce, Case No. 8,410.

Creditors who receive warehouse receipts as security, but subsequently turn over the goods to the assignee of the debtor under a general assignment, and receive payment from him as preferred creditors, are liable to the assignee in bankruptcy for the amount of such payments, but not for the property covered by the warehouse receipts.—Jones v. Kinney, Case No. 7,473.

See, also, ante, § 71.

§ 233. Compromises and compositions.

The receipt, by certain creditors of an insolvent partnership, of money and other assets on a composition and compromise of their claims, and in full discharge thereof, is a preference, within the prohibition of Act 1841, § 3 (5 Stat. 440, c. 9), when it appears that other creditors got nothing, and that the settlement was made after January 1, 1841, and prior to the passage of the act, with the general authority and concurrence of both partners, though no particular acts are proved against one of them. Case No. 336b affirmed.—In re Amory & Leeds, Case No. 336c.

Where negotiations are pending between a debtor and his creditors, a note extorted from the debtor by the agent of one of the creditors, by means of a threat to put an end to the compromise, is void in the hands of such agent, the payee.—Bullene v. Blain, Case No. 2,124.

A secret arrangement by one of the creditors entering into a composition for an advantage over other creditors, is fraudulent, and a payment made thereunder may be recovered by the assignee subsequently appointed, though the composition never became binding.—Bean v. Amsinck, Case No. 1,167.

A note and mortgage given to creditors to induce them to come into a composition on apparent equality with other creditors is a fraudulent preference and may be avoided by the assignee. —Howell v. Todd, Case No. 6,783.

See, also, ante, § 76.

§ 234. Persons under liability for debt.

Where partners in embarrassed circumstances make an assignment of all their property to certain of their creditors, to secure them against certain debts and liabilities as sureties, and previous to their bankruptcy the personal property assigned is sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of such debts, such assignment is void, under Act 1841, as having been made in contemplation of bankruptcy and as a preference of creditors, and the proceeds of the personal property sold and applied to the payment of such debts may be followed by the assignee, and made assets in bankruptcy.—Everett v. Stone, Case No. 4,577.

Under section 35, Act 1867, the liability contemplated is absolute, and not contingent, and a surety on a bond for performance, prior to its forfeiture, is under no liability for his principal, within said act.—Corbett v. Woodward, Case No. 3,223.

Where a note is paid by one who guarantied it after maturity, it is not a payment for the benefit of the indorser as a creditor, within section 35, Act 1867.—Corbett v. Woodward, Case No. 3,223.

The payment of a note at maturity by an insolvent maker, without knowledge or procurement of accommodation indorsers, is not fraudulent, under Act 1867, § 35.—Bean v. Laflin, Case No. 1,172.

Where an indorser receives from the maker of a note an amount sufficient to pay part thereof, and loans him the balance sufficient to pay it, he will not be chargeable with taking a preference beyond the amount actually paid to him by the maker.—Thomas v. Woodbury, Case No. 13,916.

The payee and indorser of a note paid by the maker in the usual course of business to the holder within four months of the bankruptcy proceedings against the maker is not chargeable with taking a preference where he had nothing to do with the payment, although he knew of the maker's insolvency.—Thomas v. Woodbury, Case No. 13,916.

Where the obligor on a bond, in order to indemnify his sureties, obtains securities from one of his debtors, and turns them over to his sureties, the transaction is a preference and the four months limitation applies. (Act 1867, § 35).—Smith v. Little, Case No. 13,072.

A mortgage given to secure a surety or indorser as to pre-existing debts, made within four months of the petition, for the express purpose of giving a preference, where the mortgagee had reasonable cause to believe that the mortgagors were insolvent, is void (Act 1867, § 35). Case No. 12,433 affirmed.—Scammon v. Cole, Case No. 12,432.

§ 235. Equitable assignments.

An agreement that a bank, as security for a loan to a company, should collect the calls for unpaid subscriptions to stock, partly executed, is an equitable assignment of the calls, which was not defeated by the subsequent bankruptcy of the company.—Farmers' & Drovers' Sav. Bank v. Kansas City Pub. Co., Case No. 4,652.

Where a bankrupt, nearly a year before the petition is filed, places a note with his attorney for collection, and draws orders on him for the proceeds, the holders of the orders are entitled to payment out of such proceeds in preference to the assignee.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,992.

A draft drawn by the bankrupt, not payable out of any particular fund, is not an assignment of the money in the hands of the drawee before acceptance.—Dickey v. Harmon, Case No. 3,894.

The fact that the drawee had funds of the drawer when he refused to accept the draft will not give the holder priority over other creditors of bankrupt drawer.—Bank of Commerce v. Russell, Case No. 884.

A purchaser of the check of one bank upon another who fails to present it until the drawer has been adjudged a bankrupt is not entitled to priority, although the drawee had sufficient funds at the time the check was presented.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,990.

§ 236. Transfers fraudulent at common law—In general.

See, also, ante, § 70.

The federal court will follow the state law and the precedents of the state courts in determining the validity of a transfer of property alleged to be fraudulent as against the creditors of the bankrupt for want of a transfer of possession to the purchaser.—Howard v. Prince, Case No. 6,762.

Any lien or incumbrance which would be void for fraud as against creditors if no petition had been filed or assignee appointed will be equally void against creditors represented by the assignee.—In re Wynne, Case No. 18,117; In re Morrill, Id. 9,821; Smith v. Ely, Id. 13,044.

A security otherwise valid is not avoided because taken in the form of an absolute deed instead of a mortgage (Act 1867).—Gaffney's Assignee v. Signaigo, Case No. 5,169.

The fact that a conveyance by the bankrupt was made more than six months before the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy will not prevent its being set aside where it was fraudulently made and intended to cheat and hinder creditors (Act 1867).—Hyde v. Sontag, Case No. 6,974; Cady v. Whaling, Id. 2,285.

A transfer according to the vote of directors by an insolvent corporation to a partnership of which one of the directors is a member, made more than six months prior to bankruptcy proceedings against the corporation, as a payment of or security for a debt due the partnership from the corporation, will be set aside, and the assignee in bankruptcy of the corporation may recover the property so transferred.—Bradley v. Farwell, Case No. 1,779.

Where a firm is insolvent, and the silent partner conveys all his interest in the joint property to the active partner, who, on the same day mortgages the whole stock in trade to secure pre-existing debts of separate creditors of each, the transaction is fraudulent under Act 1867.—In re Waite, Case No. 17,044.

A mortgage given by a firm is not fraudulent as to creditors because it, in terms, adopts a debt incurred by one of the partners in behalf of the firm, and includes that in the mortgage.—Wait v. Bull's Head Bank, Case No. 17,043.

A conveyance by a solvent grantor of his entire property, on an agreement that the grantee shall pay his debts and support him for life, is not, per se, fraudulent and void as to creditors. Case No. 3,250 affirmed.—In re Cornwall, Case No. 3,251.

A transfer of "all the goods and merchandise" in a certain store does not render the conveyance per se fraudulent as to creditors, and is a sufficient description to transfer the title where immediate possession is given.—Jones v. Sleeper, Case No. 7,496.

A chattel mortgage of machinery and other things which are trade fixtures, as between landlord and tenant, will give the mortgagee a valid lien as against the assignee in bankruptcy, although as to a prior mortgagee of the realty the fixtures would be real estate, if it appears that such prior mortgagee makes no claim to the fixtures.—Ex parte Ames, Case No. 323.

A chattel mortgage of a stock of goods, which allows the mortgagor to retain possession and sell the goods, and buy others, is void as an illegal hindrance to creditors.—In re Forbes. Case No. 4,922; Smith v. Ely, Case No. 13,044.

A parol gift, of a claim bona fide made prior to the Geneva Award, for the destruction of a vessel by a Confederate cruiser, is good as against subsequent creditors.—Williamson v. Colcord, Case No. 17,752.

A mortgage given by a railroad company to an association of which its president and vice president were secret members, considering the trust relation between the parties, is constructively fraudulent; but the mortgagee will be allowed to prove its advance to the railroad company as an unsecured debt.—Kappner v. St. Louis & St. Joe R. Ass'n, Case No. 7,612.

§ 237. —— Transfers to relatives.

Notes given by a father-in-law on a sale of a stock in trade of his insolvent son-in-law were cashed by the father-in-law, and the proceeds paid to his son, as mortgagee, in discharge of a mortgage on the property of the wife of the insolvent. Held a fraudulent transfer.—Lawrence v. Graves, Case No. 8,138.

An insolvent's transfer of his property to his sister, who had lived with him for many years, upon the consideration of her services, which were rendered gratuitously at the time, and were the foundation of no indebtedness, and upon the further consideration of her money, which he had several years before invested in his own name, she having regarded him as absolute owner of the same, no books of account having been kept between them, will be regarded as fraudulent, and will be set aside at the suit of the insolvent's assignee in bankruptcy.—Bartlett v. Mercer, Case No. 1,078.

A gift by an insolvent debtor to his wife, living with him, of furniture and other personal property in the house, is void as against creditors.—In re Pierce, Case No. 11,139.

Where the bankrupt, in building a house on land which he had within six months before his bankruptcy fraudulently conveyed to his wife, procures lumber on the representation that it is his property, from one who, after discovering the true condition, takes a mortgage thereon, such mortgage is void as to the assignee in bankruptcy, as the mortgagee does not occupy the position of a bona fide purchaser without notice.—Odell v. Flood, Case No. 10,428.

Where a husband residing in Mississippi gives a promissory note to the trustee of his wife, for an alleged balance of account stated between them, growing out of the use of the separate estate of the wife, both real and personal, and executes a deed of trust on his lands to secure payment of the note, before the filing of his petition in bankruptcy, such conveyance will be regarded as fraudulent upon a suit by the assignee as to creditors existing at the time it was made, where it appears that the husband had used such property of the wife for seven years without a previous accounting, and the creditors' debts were contracted upon the faith of such usage.—Gillespie v. McKnight, Case No. 5,435.

A conveyance by a debtor, when in embarrassed circumstances, in trust for his wife, in alleged consideration of indebtedness for lands and personal property belonging to her, will be held fraudulent, where sole power was reserved to the debtor to sell the land.—Fisher v. Henderson, Case No. 4,820.

Where a bankrupt free from debt, and not contemplating bankruptcy, conveys to his wife for her separate use, and free from his control, without intervention of a trustee, real property, reserving to himself full powers of revocation and appointment, the settlement will be upheld as against the assignee, and neither the property itself nor the powers pass to him.—Jones v. Clifton, Case No. 7,457.

A voluntary settlement in favor of an illegitimate child, made by a father, while in trade and indebted, but clearly solvent at the time, is valid against subsequent creditors, the settlement having been made without a fraudulent intent.—Anonymous, Case No. 474.

A voluntary settlement upon his wife and children, made by a member of a firm financially embarrassed, may be set aside as fraudulent, although the debts of the firm existing at the time were subsequently paid in due course of business, where they were met by contracting other obligations, which resulted in bankruptcy.—Antrim v. Kelly, Case No. 494

Conveyances to a wife under articles of separation, subsequently rescinded, except as to a provision for a separate estate in the wife, on the parties again living together, are void as voluntary, as against creditors, and the subsequent as well as antecedent creditors may share pro rata in the proceeds of the property conveyed.—Smith v. Kehr, Case No. 13,071.

Where a voluntary settlement by one who is indebted results in the payment of the debts and contingent liabilities existing at the time of the conveyance, by means of contracting other obligations, which afterwards result in insolvency, such settlement is fraudulent and void.—Spaulding v. McGovern, Case No. 13,218.

Where an insolvent, more than four months before the commencement of proceedings against him, furnishes from his own property, towards building a homestead upon premises which his wife had contracted to purchase and which were subsequently conveyed to her, a sum greatly in excess of the amount of property allowed as a homestead under the state law, such transaction is a fraud upon his creditors, and the assignee is entitled to a conveyance of the husband's interest in such homestead, less the amount he was authorized by law to invest in it.—Johnson v. May, Case No. 7,397.

§ 238. Mortgages to secure future advances or claims for services.

A mortgage made in good faith to secure future sales of goods to the mortgagor is valid to the extent of the advances actually made, and to such extent is protected by Act 1867.—Marvin v. Chambers, Case No. 9,179.

A mortgage to secure future advances is operative as to all advances made in good faith more than two months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, and as to those made in good faith within that time.—Cramton v. Tarbell, Case No. 3,349; Schulze v. Bolting, Id. 12,489.

An insolvent trader may mortgage his stock and tools for present and future advances to continue his business, and also past advances already, though inadequately, secured.—Ex parte Ames, Case No. 323.

A mortgage will not be considered for future advances because the notes secured by it are delivered to the mortgagor temporarily to prove in a partnership accounting in a state court.—In re Freyvogel, Case No. 5,115.

A mortgage purporting to be given to secure existing indebtedness, but in fact given to secure possible future loans and debts already secured by other mortgages, as to which no definite agreement is made, is fraudulent and void as to creditors, and will be set aside at the suit of the assignee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor.—Todd v. Townsend, Case No. 14,075.

A mortgage given to lawyers to secure their fees for preparing a petition and schedules in bankruptcy is invalid, under Act 1867, § 35, but the claim may be proved as unsecured.—In re Evans, Case No. 4,552.

A mistake in the description of the premises in a mortgage may be corrected as against the assignee to the same extent as would have been allowed against the mortgagor.—Schulze v. Bolting, Case No. 12,489.

§ 239. Mortgage of after-acquired property.

A mortgage of all the property of a railroad company, then in its possession or thereafter acquired, includes another railroad subsequently leased to the mortgagor, and the title to such leased roads is good in the hands of the trustees under the mortgage, as against the subsequent assignees in bankruptcy of the mortgagor.—Barnard v. Norwich & W. R. Co., Case No. 1,007.

An indorsement by the mortgagor upon a chattel mortgage, subjecting chattels acquired after the date of the mortgage to its operation, such indorsement, being made in fraud of the bankrupt act, is invalid, but it does not invalidate the mortgage.—In re Baker, Case No. 762.

§ 240. Conveyances fraudulent or void under state laws.

Transfers of personal property, void as to creditors under the statute of frauds of the state where the transactions occur, are void as to the assignee.—Edmondson v. Hyde, Case No. 4,285.

The district court in bankruptcy will follow the state decisions declaring a mortgage void as to creditors becoming such between the giving and filing of the mortgage.—In re Oliver, Case No. 10,492.

If a mortgage given by the debtor is void under the state law, the property passes to the debtor's assignee in bankruptcy.—Platt v. Preston, Case No. 11,219; Wait v. Bull's Head Bank, Id. 17,043.

Creditors who have not, by judgment and execution, obtained a specific lien, cannot attack a chattel mortgage as not accompanied by delivery and change of possession of the property mortgaged (3 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 222, § 9), and the assignee in bankruptcy has no greater right.—In re Collins, Case No. 3,007.

A trust deed of land in another state, made by a bankrupt who remained in possession thereof until filing his petition in bankruptcy, will not be set aside on petition of the assignee, unless the petition states that the lands were conveyed by the bankrupt in fraud of creditors, under the laws of such state, or facts showing that they were so conveyed and passed to the assignee under Act 1867, § 14.—In re Broome, Case No. 1,966.

An agreement to give a chattel mortgage to secure rent, and to renew it, and that it shall be a continuing lien, gives the mortgagee no priority over other creditors, where the mortgage is void for failure to observe technical requirements.—Platt v. Stewart, Case No. 11,220.

§ 241. Effect of failure to record conveyance.

An assignee has the rights of a judgment creditor as against a chattel mortgage not properly recorded.—Miller v. Jones, Case No. 9,576.

The assignee in bankruptcy will receive the benefit of the state statute avoiding all deeds of trust as to creditors except from the time of recording them.—In re Wynne, Case No. 18,117.

Where, under the local law, a deed does not take effect as to creditors and subsequent purchasers until it is recorded, a deed recorded within six months of the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, irrespective of the time when it was executed, is a transfer within six months.—Thornhill v. Link, Case No. 13,993.

A mortgage is not fully made in Vermont as against the assignee in bankruptcy until it is recorded, and the fact that it was executed more than two months before the petition was filed does not render it valid.—Bostwick v. Foster, Case No. 1,682.

Where a bill of sale is recorded in the clerk's office at one place under Laws Vt. 1872, upon a representation of the bankrupt that he resided there, it will bind the assignee as against the holder of the bill of sale, although the bankrupt actually resided at another place.—Allen v. Whittemore, Case No. 241.

In the absence of actual fraud, a chattel mortgage made by a resident of Massachusetts is good against the assignee in bankruptcy, though it had not been duly recorded at the date of the bankruptcy.—In re Dalby, Case No. 3,540.

If a deed of trust is actually delivered to the trustee, with power to record it when he deems proper, it is valid as against the assignee in bankruptcy, although it is not recorded until after the grantor's failure.—National Bank of Fredericksburg v. Conway, Case No. 10,037.

A chattel mortgage, though not recorded, as required by the state law, is good against the assignee in bankruptcy, in the absence of actual fraud.—Ex parte Dalby, Case No. 3,540; Coggeshall v. Potter, Id. 2,955, affirming Case No. 11,322; In re Collins, Case No. 3,004.

A chattel mortgage, made in good faith and for a present and valid consideration though not filed for record until the day before the petition is filed, is a valid lien as against the assignee in absence of other proof to show that a fraud on Act 1867 was intended.—In re Perrin, Case No. 10,995.

A chattel mortgage not filed, as required by the state law, before filing of the petition, but filed prior to the appointment of an assignee, there being no judgments against the bankrupt, is sufficient to give a lien upon the mortgaged property which will be recognized by the bankruptcy court.—In re Collins, Case No. 3,004.

A chattel mortgage given for the purchase price of property, when not refiled within 12 months, as required by the New York law, is void as against creditors, and as against the assignee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,234.

Such refiling is necessary, though the title of the mortgagee became absolute, as between the parties, by forfeiture on default of payment of the mortgage debt.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,234.

Chattel mortgage for a present consideration, made more than 60 days prior to bankruptcy, but not filed for record until within that time, is valid, as against the claim of the assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Barman, Case No. 999.

A chattel mortgage taken by a retiring partner on all the firm goods in stock or to be acquired, by agreement kept from the record, is fraudulent and void as to subsequent creditors.—In re Stephens, Case No. 13,365.

In Iowa an unrecorded chattel mortgage, where the mortgagor retains possession, is valid as against attaching creditors with notice of its existence any time before levy; and, as the assignee in bankruptcy has the same right as such creditors to defeat a mortgage on record when the bankruptcy proceedings were commenced, he must show that debts were created, without notice of it, before it was recorded.—Cragin v. Carmichael, Case No. 3,319.

A chattel mortgage which embraces subsequently acquired property constitutes a lien on such property protected by section 2, Act 1841, where possession is taken of the same under the mortgage before a petition in bankruptcy is filed.—Mitchell v. Winslow, Case No. 9,673.

Where a chattel mortgage contains an authority for the mortgagee to take possession of after-acquired property, and possession is so taken within four months before proceedings were commenced against the mortgagor, the time that possession was taken of the after-acquired property will be regarded as the date of its transfer. Act 1867, § 35.—In re Eldridge, Case No. 4,330.

A delay on the part of the mortgagee in a chattel mortgage in taking possession after maturity is fatal to his rights, as against an assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Forbes, Case No. 4,922.

The assignee cannot maintain trover to recover the value of mortgaged personal property which the mortgagee has taken possession of, and appropriated to his own use, before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings.—Jones v. Miller, Case No. 7,482.

An assignee cannot recover the value of mortgaged chattels where the mortgagee took possession before the bankruptcy, although the mortgage was invalid against creditors because not properly recorded.—Miller v. Jones, Case No. 9,576.

A chattel mortgage invalid as against creditors, under the state law, under which the mortgagee took possession within the time limited by Act 1867 and at a time when he had reasonable cause to believe the debtor insolvent, is invalid as against the assignee.—Harvey v. Crane, Case No. 6,178; Kane v. Rice, Id. 7,609.

Where goods were sold under a bill of sale, the price payable in installments, with a reservation that if a default is made in payment of any installment the seller may take possession of the goods and satisfy the whole debt by a sale thereof, and at the same time the purchaser gives a mortgage on such goods containing the same terms, which is not filed according to the state law, and where the purchaser makes a default in payment, and the seller takes possession under the reservation in the bill of sale, seven days before a petition was filed against the purchaser, who is afterwards declared a bankrupt, no fraud being alleged in the transaction, or that the purchaser was insolvent when he received the bill of sale and gave the mortgage, such transaction is valid as against the assignee, upon a suit brought by the assignee against the seller and mortgagee.—Field v. Baker, Case No. 4,762.

See, also, ante, § 75; post, §§ 260–264.

Where a bankrupt suffered his property to be taken on legal process in favor of one of his creditors, under an execution issued against him, the bankrupt intending thereby to give a preference to such creditor, and the creditor having reasonable cause to believe, at the time, that the bankrupt was insolvent, the transaction was void under Act 1867, and no valid lien was acquired in favor of the creditor under the execution.—In re Ballou, Case No. 818.

A preference will be adjudged void, and will be annulled, where the proofs show, although by circumstantial evidence, that the creditor, who was a brother of the bankrupt, obtained it by means of a seizure by execution, apparently hostile, but in fact conducted through collusion of the bankrupt.—In re Baker, Case No. 763.

Procurement to take in execution may be inferred from such relationship and apparent concert of action between the debtor and creditor as would ordinarily be incompatible with any other intention than to give a preference.—In re Dunkle, Case No. 4,160.

The purchase of goods, in order that they may be taken on execution on judgments on notes given by the bankrupt, subjects the bankrupt to the penalty of suffering his property to be seized on execution.—Sage v. Wynkoop, Case No. 12,215.

Where the debtor and another person, between whom suits are pending in the state court, the day before a petition is filed against the debtor, enter into an agreement, the effect of which is to enable such person to enforce a lien by attachment, such agreement is in fraud of Act 1867.—Samson v. Burton, Case No. 12,285.

§ 244. —— Taking judgment by default.

A judgment entered after the adjudication, on a default entered before petition filed, without surprise, mistake, or fraud, where the bankrupt had no defense, will not be set aside. Act 1841.—Fiske v. Hunt, Case No. 4,831.

Where the holder of notes exacts small demand notes in substitution for older and larger ones, some of which have matured, as a condition for a further loan, but with knowledge of the maker's insolvency, upon which the payee is enabled more easily to obtain judgment and seize and sell the debtor's property, such transaction is fraudulent and void. (Act 1867).—Loudon v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 8,525.

Judgments obtained against a debtor, at the time insolvent, by creditors having no reason so to believe him, are enforceable in the bankruptcy court.—In re Wright, Case No. 18,071.

A preference obtained by inaction of the debtor in permitting a judgment and levy of execution, where the debtor contributed nothing to the success or completion of the creditor's act, is not fraudulent, though the debtor was insolvent at the time the suit was brought, and the creditor then had reasonable cause to believe it, and knew that the debtor had committed an act of bankruptcy.—In re Schnepf, Case No. 12,471; Partridge v. Dearborn, Id. 10,785; Britton v. Payen, Id. 1,906; In re Price, Id. 11,412. CONTRA, see Haskell v. Ingalls, Case No. 6,193; Smith v. Buchanan, Id. 13,016; Vanderhoof v. City Bank of St. Paul, Id. 16,842; Warren v. Delaware, L. & W. Ry. Co., Id. 17,194; Anderson v. Strassburger, Id. 364; Warren v. Tenth Nat. Bank, Id. 17,202, reversing Id. 17,200; Catlin v. Hoffman, Id. 2,521.

A fraudulent transfer takes place when an insolvent debtor suffers property to be taken on legal process, with intent to give a preference, and the creditor takes the same with reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent and intended a preference. (Act 1867).—Kohlsaat v. Hoguet, Case No. 7,919.

Where a debtor utterly insolvent, and without reasonable prospects of being able to pay his debts, passively permits certain creditors to appropriate all his assets to their debts, an action will lie by the assignee against the creditors to recover the amounts received.—Hyde v. Corrigan, Case No. 6,968.

Judgments obtained by service of process on absconding bankrupt, who secretly returned to permit such service, are void under Act 1867, § 35.—Beattie v. Gardner, Case No. 1,195.

Where it appeared that an insolvent firm wished to secure a brother of one of the partners, and the brothers went to an attorney for advice, who declined to advise both of them, but sent away the partner and brought suit against the firm, the summons being served upon the brother alone, and judgment by default was entered, such constituted an act of bankruptcy by the firm, under Act 1867, §§ 35, 39.—In re Black, Case No. 1,457.

Where a debtor is sued for a just debt, and interposes a groundless defense in such manner that another creditor, who brings suit later, is enabled to obtain a prior judgment and the appointment of a receiver, an intent to give a preference to the creditor in the latter suit must be inferred.—Wight v. Muxlow, Case No. 17,629.

§ 245. —— Judgments by confession.

The bankrupt act, being within the powers of congress, is superior to state laws on the subject; and judgments confessed in contravention of such bankrupt law are void.—Atkinson v. Purdy, Case No. 616.

A warrant of attorney to confess judgment, executed by an insolvent within 60 days of filing a petition in bankruptcy, is void, and proceedings founded thereon are of no effect (Act 1841).—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,885.

A judgment entered on a judgment bond given more than two months before bankruptcy cannot be assailed unless the judgment creditors, at the time the judgment bond was given by the debtor, had notice of a prior act of bankruptcy, or of the intention of the bankrupt to take the benefit of the act of 1841.—Lonergan v. Fenlon, Case No. 8,475.

The giving of a note payable one day after date, with cognovit to confess judgment, to a creditor, with knowledge of insolvency, to secure an antecedent debt, is a fraudulent preference, and the judgment and all proceedings thereunder are nullities. (Act 1867, § 35).—Fitch v. McGie, Case No. 4,835; Haughey v. Albin, Id. 6,222; Zahm v. Fry, Id. 18,198.

A judgment obtained against the bankrupt within four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy is void, where the judgment debtor was insolvent and confessed judgment with intent to give a preference, and the judgment creditor had reasonable cause to believe that such confession of judgment was made in fraud of Act 1867; and where the judgment creditor has received the fund, less the costs of his action, he is liable for the whole amount.—Street v. Dawson, Case No. 13,533.

A judgment confessed within two months before filing the petition, where the bankrupts had broken up their business, and all proceedings under it, are void.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

Proper procedure to restrain proceedings under an execution issued on a judgment by confession, which operates as a fraudulent preference.—Irving v. Hughes, Case No. 7,076.

A creditor who, with reasonable cause to believe the debtor insolvent, takes a judgment note more than six months before the petition is filed to secure an antecedent indebtedness cannot obtain a preference by the entry of a judgment and the levy of an execution on the debtor's stock of goods within such time.—In re Terry, Case No. 13,835.

Warrants of attorney given to a creditor for antecedent debts with knowledge that the debtor is insolvent are fraudulent, though given more than two months before petition filed. (Act 1874.)—In re Herpich, Case No. 6,418.

The fact that the judgment was entered upon a warrant of attorney does not invalidate the lien if the creditor did not know of the failing circumstances of the debtor, and if it was not entered up "in contemplation of bankruptcy or insolvency."—In re Weeks, Case No. 17,350.

A judgment taken contrary to Act 1867 is not void unless a petition in bankruptcy is filed by or against the debtor within six months from its entry.—In re Fuller, Case No. 5,148.

Where a warrant of attorney to confess judgment or a judgment note is given for full consideration, and not for an antecedent debt, to one who had no knowledge of the debtor's insolvency, the creditor may enter judgment and enforce the same after knowledge of the debtor's insolvency if not assisted by the debtor, irrespective of the time when the warrant or judgment note was given.—Armstrong v. Rickey, Case No. 546; In re Wright, Id. 18,071; Vogel v. Lathrop, Id. 16,985; Piper v. Baldy, Id. 11,179; Stern v. Schonfield, Id. 13,377; Blabon v. Hunt, Id. 1,455; Shimer v. Huber, Id. 12,787. CONTRA, see Golson v. Niehoff, Case No. 5,524; Hood v. Karper, Id. 6,664; In re Lord, Id. 8,503; Clark v. Iselin, Id. 2,825; Ford v. Keys, Id. 4,933; Zahm v. Fry, Id. 18,198.

The time to be taken at which to test the condition of the bankrupt, and the knowledge of the creditor, is the time when a confession of judgment was issued to enforce the claim; and where it does not appear that the bankrupt was insolvent at the time the judgment was entered, the execution will be upheld, notwithstanding the debtor's insolvency at the time it was issued, and the creditor's knowledge thereof.—Field v. Baker, Case No. 4,762.

A judgment confessed within four months of the filing of the petition by an insolvent debtor to a creditor having reason to believe him insolvent, though in consideration of a pre-existing debt, is in fraud of the act. Act 1867, § 35.—Vogel v. Lathrop, Case No. 16,985.

A confession of judgment, followed by a seizure of the debtor's property upon execution, if made by an insolvent with a view to prefer the creditor, is an unlawful preference.—Webb v. Sachs, Case No. 17,325.

The taking of a judgment upon a power of attorney is not the confession of a judgment, within the meaning of Act 1867.—Stern v. Schonfield, Case No. 13,377.

See, also, ante, § 74.

§ 246. Adjustment of mutual debts.

A deposit of goods under a contract which will result in a debt brings the goods within the mutual credit laws of Act 1867 so that the bailee can set off his debt against the value of the goods.—Ex parte Caylus, Case No. 2,534.

Where a bank holding the note of the bankrupt received from him, in payment, with knowledge of his insolvency, a check on the bank, covering the amount of his deposit and a payment in cash, only the payment in cash is a fraudulent preference, as the transaction as to the check was a mere adjustment of mutual debts.—Hough v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 6,721.

Where a bank holding a note against the bankrupt, and also a deposit account in his favor, receives a check against the account to pay the note, with knowledge of the depositor's insolvency, it is not a fraudulent preference, but an adjustment of mutual debts, within Rev. St. § 5073.—Robinson v. Wisconsin Marine & Fire Ins. Co. Bank, Case No. 11,969.

If a bank, after the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, collects money upon drafts deposited with it by the bankrupt before that time, it may apply the money towards the payment of a note of the bankrupt held by it.—In re Farnsworth, Case No. 4,673.

A deposit of securities by a customer of a bank, who had overdrawn his account, for the purpose of a loan from the bank to keep the account good, made a few days before bankruptcy proceedings were commenced against such customer, held not in violation of the act.—French v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 5,100.

Where a new account is opened with a debtor by a creditor knowing the debtor to be in failing circumstances, under an agreement to account for goods sent for sale by turning over cash or notes received therefor, the creditor cannot set off the amount due by him under such account against the amount due him on the old account.—In re Troy Woolen Co., Case No. 14,203.

§ 247. Transfer of partner's interest.

A transfer of assets of an insolvent firm to one member will not be sustained under Act 1841, § 2, where its effect is to give a preference to one class of creditors.—Collins v. Hood, Case No. 3,015.

A bona fide transfer of partnership effects by one member of the partnership to another vests the title in the transferee as his separate estate.—In re Byrne, Case No. 2,270.

Where one partner transfers his interest in the partnership effects to his co-partner, upon the promise of the transferee to pay the firm debts, and the latter buys no new stock or makes no effort to continue business, and files his petition in bankruptcy five days after such transfer, it will be regarded as having been accepted in contemplation of the transferee filing his petition, and is void as a fraud on the creditors of the partnership.—In re Byrne, Case No. 2,270.

Under Act 1867, the conveyance of the joint assets of an insolvent firm to a continuing partner is a fraudulent preference, and if made within four months of a petition in bankruptcy it may be set aside by the joint creditors; but, where the continuing partner has assumed the joint debts, such creditors may assent to the conveyance after petition, and come in with the separate creditors, and prove their debts against his estate.—In re Johnson, Case No. 7,369.

A sale by one partner to his copartner when the firm is insolvent and on the eve of bankruptcy will be set aside in favor of firm creditors. Act 1867, § 35.—In re Cook, Case No. 3,150.

Where property of an insolvent firm is sold within a month of the commencement of the proceedings, and the proceeds divided, and one partner, with his share, purchases property exempt by the state laws, such property is not exempt, but will be regarded as partnership assets.—In re Melvin, Case No. 9,406.

Where one partner was sued by a creditor, and the other partner procured a delay of execution, and bought his partner's interest in the firm, without taking account of stock or debts, and the money paid therefor was returned to the buyer, who put it in the safe, from which it was drawn by the seller from time to time, such sale is invalid, and will be set aside at the instance of the assignee in bankruptcy, although such buyer claims that his purpose was to discontinue business with his partner and protect himself.—Burrill v. Lawry, Case No. 2,199.

Where partners, more than four months before the commencement of the proceedings, transfer in good faith all their separate and joint property to one partner, who undertook to pay the firm debts, all the assets will be treated as the separate assets of that partner.—In re Collier, Case No. 3,002.

§ 248. Sale or mortgage by fraudulent vendee.

A sale out of the usual course of business of all one's stock in trade to a person with knowledge of the seller's insolvency is prima facie void, and a second purchaser with knowledge has no better title.—Babbitt v. Walbrun, Case No. 695.

A second purchaser, who had knowledge of the bankrupt's failure, and that the seller held the goods under mortgage from the bankrupt, does not get a good title.—Rison v. Knapp, Case No. 11,861.

A bona fide purchaser, without notice, from a fraudulent vendee of the bankrupt, takes a good title as against his assignee.—Jarrell v. Harrell, Case No. 7,222.

When it is sought to affect a second vendee with fraud, such fraud must be shown, and the mere fact, without more, that he knew that the sale by the bankrupt to the first vendee embraced all of the stock of the seller, will not make the purchase of the second vendee fraudulent in law.—Babbitt v. Walbrun, Case No. 694.

The mortgagee of a fraudulent transferee, in possession without notice, will be protected to the extent of his mortgage.—Brooks v. D'Orville, Case No. 1,951.

§ 249. Assignments for benefit of creditors—In general.

See, also, ante, § 73; post, § 599.

An assignment by an insolvent for the benefit of such creditors only as should sign a compromise agreement is void as against the assignee.—In re Broome, Case No. 1,967.

An assignment in trust, by an insolvent, with power to sell within two years for the benefit of creditors who will accept 60 per cent. of their claims, with a reservation in favor of the grantor of all property remaining after such settlement, is void at common law, and under Act 1867, as having been made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors.—In re Beadle, Case No. 1,155.

An assignment by an insolvent for benefit of certain creditors is void where the assignee has good reason to believe that the assignor is insolvent, and in contemplation of bankruptcy.—In re Meyer, Case No. 9,515.

A general assignment for creditors with preferences, if made within the prescribed time, is void under the bankruptcy acts.—Jackson v. McCulloch, Case No. 7,140; Stobaugh v. Mills, Case No. 13,461.

A general assignment for creditors, though without preferences, free from moral fraud, and valid under the state law, if made within the prescribed time, is void under the bankruptcy acts.—Barton v. Tower, Case No. 1,085; McLean v. Johnson, Id. 8,883; Same v. Meline, Id. 8,890; Windsor v. Whiting, Id. 17,868; Hobson v. Markson, Id. 6,555; Barnewall v. Jones, Id. 1,027; Globe Ins. Co. v. Cleveland Ins. Co., Id. 5,486; MacDonald v. Moore, Id. 8,763; In re Temple, Id. 13,825; In re Beisenthal, Id. 1,236; Harding v. Crosby, Id. 6,050; Platt v. Preston, Id. 11,219. CONTRA, see Anonymous, Case No. 467; Sedgwick v. Place, Id. 12,622; Farrin v. Crawford, Id. 4,686; In re Kintzing, Id. 7,833; Langley v. Perry, Id. 8,067; Barnes v. Rettew, Id. 1,019; In re Wells, Id. 17,387; In re Marter, Id. 9,143.

A general assignment for creditors, either with or without preferences, if valid under the state law, and made beyond the prescribed time, is not avoided by the bankruptcy acts.—In re Arledge, Case No. 533; In re Kimball, Id. 7,770.

§ 250. —— Rights and liabilities of general assignee.

Moneys received under a voluntary assignment adjudged to be valid, by a receiver appointed by the bankruptcy court, should be distributed by him, and not by the assignees.—Sedgwick v. Place, Case No. 12,623.

Where a trustee under a general assignment for creditors is chosen as assignee in subsequent bankruptcy proceedings, his acts as trustee, performed in accordance with the deed of assignment before the bankruptcy, must be approved.—In re Walker, Case No. 17,063.

The assignee under a general assignment for creditors with preferences is not liable to the assignee in bankruptcy for money paid out in good faith by him under the assignment.—Jones v. Kinney, Case No. 7,473.

An assignee for creditors who receives the assigned property before proceedings in bankruptcy is not liable in trover where he sells the same, and pays over the proceeds under order of the state court, before suit brought against him by the assignee in bankruptcy.—Cragin v. Thompson, Case No. 3,320.

Where an assignee for the benefit of creditors notifies a sheriff, who has levied upon the property, of his claim, he has done all that he was bound to do to protect the property and is not liable to account for the property sold on execution to a subsequent assignee in bankruptcy, where the assignment to him is subsequently set aside as in contravention of Act 1867.—Linder v. Lewis, Case No. 8,362.

Upon setting aside, in bankruptcy proceedings, an assignment for creditors made in good faith, the assignee may be allowed reimbursement of his expenses; but he cannot be awarded compensation for services, except so far as the bankruptcy court can see that the estate will not be subjected to a double charge.—In re Kurth, Case No. 7,948.

An assignee under a general assignment under a state law, which is avoided by proceedings in bankruptcy, will not be allowed compensation or expenses out of the fund.—In re Stubbs, Case No. 13,557; In re Cohn, Id. 2,966. CONTRA, see Clark v. Marx, Case No. 2,830; MacDonald v. Moore, Id. 8,763; In re Lains, Id. 7,989; In re Kurth, Id. 7,948.

Such assignee is entitled to expenses incurred in making sales of the property under orders of the bankruptcy court.—Clark v. Marx, Case No. 2,830.

2. Liens.

See, also, post, §§ 300–303.

§ 251. Liens in general.

The proviso in Act 1841, § 2, embraces all liens, equitable and legal, which are valid by the lex loci contractus, and is not restricted to such as can be enforced by state laws.—Fletcher v. Morey, Case No. 4,864.

The word "lien" (Act 1841, § 2) embraces equitable as well as legal liens, and its meaning and application are to be ascertained by the laws of the several states.—Ex parte General Assignee, Case No. 5,305.

The assignee's title relates back to the date of filing the petition, and no creditor can thereafter acquire a lien by attachment, judgment, levy, or otherwise on the property of the debtor belonging to him at the time of filing the petition.—McLean v. Rockey, Case No. 8,891; In re Dey, Id. 3,870; Sicard v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. Ry. Co., Id. 12,831; In re Tifft, Id. 14,034.

Where, in the case of a statutory lien, the statutory requisites are not complied with until after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, it is not valid as against the assignee.—In re Sabin, Case No. 12,194.

A lien which derives its existence from a state statute, a continuance of which is dependent upon the institution of a suit within a prescribed period in the state court, is not preserved by proceedings in bankruptcy, no suit having been commenced in the state court, and no steps having been taken in the bankruptcy court equivalent to a suit within the time limited by the statute.—In re Brunguest, Case No. 2,055.

The claim of a broader lien than the facts warrant will not affect the actual lien of the creditor.—McKinsey v. Harding, Case No. 8,866.

§ 252. Amount of lien.

The federal court will not take jurisdiction where the liens on the bankrupt's property will more than absorb it.—McLean v. Rockey, Case No. 8,891.

The assignee need take no proceedings in respect to personal property of the bankrupt mortgaged beyond its value, and he has nothing to do but designate the exempt property.—In re Lambert, Case No. 8,026.

When a parcel of the bankrupt's land is wholly absorbed by the first lien, the assignee is under no duty to ascertain the validity of subsequent liens.—Mattocks v. Farrington, Case No. 9,298.

§ 253. Lien by creditors' suit.

A creditors' bill to subject to plaintiff's judgment property of defendant not liable to execution at law creates a lien, where process was served before petition was filed to declare defendant a bankrupt.—Ex parte General Assignee, Case No. 5,305; Clarke v. Rist, Id. 2,861. CONTRA, see Ex parte Waddell, Case No. 17,027; Smith v. Gordon, Id. 13,052.

The mere filing of a creditors' bill against a bankrupt, without the service of an injunction, gives the complainant no such lien as will prevail over the rights of the assignee.—Case of Smith, Case No. 12,997.

Until a receiver is appointed in a creditors' suit, there is no lien as against chattels which are subject to levy and sale on execution, which can be upheld as against an assignee in bankruptcy.—Johnson v. Rogers, Case No. 7,408.

§ 254. Lien for rent.

The lien given a landlord for rent already due by the law of South Carolina is undisturbed by a decree declaring the tenant a bankrupt.—Watson v. Lemar, Case No. 17,287.

The creditors cannot object to the enforcement of such a lien on the ground that it will sacrifice the tenant's goods.—Watson v. Lemar, Case No. 17,287.

The landlord's right to enforce the lien is not affected by the fact that he was preferred in a voluntary assignment by the tenant, and that he has expressed a willingness that the assignee should sell, and pay him his rent.—Watson v. Lemar, Case No. 17,287.

Chattels of a bankrupt remaining, after the decree, on the premises which the bankrupt occupied, are liable to distress, even though the rent fall due after the decree.—In re Leppein, Case No. 8,265.

The landlord's lien given by Code Va. c. 128, § 12, is independent of proceedings by distress warrant or attachment, and such lien is not made void by Act 1867 upon the bankruptcy of the tenant.—In re Wynne, Case No. 18,117.

An agreement to pay in crops for rent of land and property purchased of the landlord will not give him a lien as against general creditors of the tenant.—Brock v. Terrell, Case No. 1,914.

Where the bankrupts, before petition filed, rented a storehouse, and the lessor, as each quarter's rent became due, demanded the same, and forebore to distrain upon the request of the lessees, and with the understanding that the goods of the lessees should be kept upon the premises so as at all times to be liable to distress, the lessor's claim for such rent is entitled to preference, where it appears that he has in no manner waived his right to have his lien enforced.—In re Rose, Case No. 12,043.

A lien for rent due, or which may have accrued to the landlord, under the state law, is enforceable in bankruptcy (Act 1867).—In re Dunham, Case No. 4,145.

The granting of the certificate of amount due, and not the levying of the distress warrant, before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, gives the landlord a perfected lien. (Gross' St. Ill. 1871, p. 412.)—In re Joslyn, Case No. 7,550.

A landlord has no lien or preference over other creditors of the bankrupt in Pennsylvania, unless there has been before petition filed a seizure for rent, as required by the statute of such state. Act 1867.—In re Butler, Case No. 2,236.

The right to distrain for rent is a "lien," within Act 1867; and in Mississippi the landlord is entitled to a preference for rent out of proceeds of sale of property on demised premises, subject to his attachment made after the tenant became a bankrupt. Case No. 664 reversed.—Austin v. O'Reilly, Case No. 665.

A landlord has a lien, in South Carolina, on the personal property of the tenant, which is good for one year as against execution and other creditors and as against an assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Trim, Case No. 14,174.

A landlord has no authority under a lease containing a covenant, constituting the rent a lien or mortgage upon all goods, etc., on the premises, where such lease is void as to the creditors of the tenant, it not having been filed pursuant to the state law regulating chattel mortgages.—In re Dyke, Case No. 4,227.

A lien given by an express provision in a lease on specified property on the demised premises is valid against the lessee's assignee in bankruptcy.—McLean v. Klein, Case No. 8,884.

Where the state law gives a landlord a lien upon the goods and chattels upon the demised premises for rent, he can have no lien upon the assets of a bankrupt for rent to accrue after an adjudication and the surrender of the premises by an assignee, and such a claim cannot be proven against the estate. Act 1867.—Bailey v. Loeb, Case No. 739.

A stipulation in an unrecorded lease for a lien for rent upon all the fixtures and furniture in the store is binding as against the lessee's assignee only as to the goods, etc., in the store at the time the lease was made.—In re Eckenroth, Case No. 4,265.

§ 255. Lien on pledged property.

Persons paying drafts drawn for the price of goods shipped to the drawer, under an agreement that the goods should be pledged as security therefor, have a lien as against the assignee in bankruptcy of the purchaser.—Fletcher v. Morey, Case No. 4,864.

The assignment, transfer, and delivery of a lease by the lessor, to secure a debt created at such time, is valid as against the lessor's assignee in bankruptcy.—Meador v. Everett, Case No. 9,376.

Where the pledge of property to secure a debt is not prohibited by Act 1867, § 35, the rights of the parties will be determined under the general rules in equity.—In re Peebles, Case No. 10,902.

The lien of a factor for his advancements and commissions is protected by the amendment to Rev. St. § 5128, which provides that nothing in that section shall be construed to invalidate securities taken in good faith upon the making of a loan.—In re Roseberry, Case No. 12,052.

A creditor having two distinct debts, and holding property in pledge for one of them with power of sale existing at the date of the bankruptcy, may apply the surplus proceeds after paying the first debt to the payment of the second.—Ex parte Whiting, Case No. 17,573.

The creditor who, without fraud, receives as security a policy of insurance, and pays premiums thereon, is entitled to a pro rata value of the policy.—In re Shoenberger, Case No. 12,802.

Where the assignee has received or collected securities pledged, the bankruptcy court may, on petition by the pledgee, direct the assignee to apply the proceeds for the benefit of the pledgee.—In re Wiley, Case No. 17,655.

A creditor holding security has not an absolute power over his securities, and the court will, on application of the assignee, restrain the creditor from selling them.—The Skylark, Case No. 12,929.

A creditor applying to the bankruptcy court for an order to sell collaterals need not ascertain their value before proving his claim, but must prove his claim before the order to sell will be granted.—In re Bigelow, Case No. 1,396.

The assignee is bound by the bankrupt's acquiescence in a sale of stocks by a secured creditor only where made before the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy.—Sparhawk v. Drexel, Case No. 13,204.

A sale by a lien holder of property in his possession, belonging to the bankrupt, with knowledge that bankruptcy is imminent, will not be disturbed, if untainted by fraud, and a fair price is obtained.—In re Roseberry, Case No. 12,052.

A bailee who agrees with the bailor that he will hold the goods for a certain time, and afterwards sell, and pay his claim against the bailor, has a right to sell after such time, though the bailor had in the meanwhile become bankrupt.—Ex parte Caylus, Case No. 2,534.

One to whom stock is pledged to secure call loans need not upon the bankruptcy of the pledgor obtain leave of court to sell the same, but he acts at his own risk.—In re Grinnell, Case No. 5,829; Id. 5,830.

The bailee of an insolvent debtor's goods, who bestows labor upon them, knowing that the debtor has committed an act of bankruptcy in making the bailment, is entitled to a credit for the value of such services as against the claim of the assignee in bankruptcy for the goods or their value.—Catlin v. Foster, Case No. 2,519.

The assignee takes the bankrupt's property subject to a maritime lien existing when the petition was filed, and such lien may be enforced by process in admiralty against the vessel after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy by its owner, and the bankruptcy court will accept the determination of the admiralty court as to the validity and amount of the lien.—The Ironsides, Case No. 7,069. CONTRA, see In re People's Mail S. S. Co., Case No. 10,970.

§ 257. Liens on bank stock.

A bank whose by-laws provide that stock of stockholders shall be liable for their debts to the bank, has a lien upon the stock of a member of a bankrupt firm for either individual or firm indebtedness.—In re Bigelow, Case No. 1,395.

A bank, under a by-law prohibiting a transfer of stock by one indebted thereto, has a lien on stock to secure notes and general indebtedness of a stockholder.—In re Morrison, Case No. 9,839.

Where a national bank has a lien under its by-laws on stock for the liabilities of the stockholder to the bank, it need not transfer the stock to his assignee in bankruptcy, as such lien was not defeated by the adjudication.—In re Dunkerson, Case No. 4,156.

§ 258. Mechanic's lien.

The lien given by the local act to mechanics or material men is not opposed to the terms or policy of Act 1867, as it in no way prefers one creditor at the expense of another, or diminishes the general assets of the debtor otherwise applicable to the payment of his general creditors.—In re Coulter, Case No. 3,276.

A mechanic's lien given by the state law will be protected by the bankruptcy court, but only after discontinuance of proceedings in the state court.—In re Cook, Case No. 3,151.

A lien attaches, under the New Jersey mechanic's lien law, as of the time the labor is performed or materials furnished, which will be enforced by a court of bankruptcy, though the claim therefor is not filed until after the bankruptcy proceedings were commenced. Case No. 3,870 reversed.—In re Dey, Case No. 3,871.

A mechanic's lien, under the Oregon statute, attaches from the time the work is done, or materials are furnished, conditioned upon filing the notice of such lien within three months from the completion of the building, and the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings between the time the work is done or materials are furnished and the filing of such notice does not affect the right of the lien creditor.—In re Coulter, Case No. 3,276.

A mechanic's lien given by law, though not perfected by the filing of the account when the petition in bankruptcy was filed, may thereafter be enforced as provided by law.—Sabin v. Connor, Case No. 12,197.

§ 259. Equitable liens.

A covenant in a mortgage to keep the mortgaged premises insured for the benefit of the mortgagee creates a specific equitable lien upon the insurance money, which is valid as against the assignee.—In re Sands Ale Brewing Co., Case No. 12,307.

A written agreement for the entry of judgment, filed in court, in a suit in which defendant's property was attached, constitutes an equitable lien against the property in the hands of his assignee, on his subsequent bankruptcy.—Parker v. Muggridge, Case No. 10,743.

§ 260. Attachment liens — Under Act 1841.

All attachments of the property of the bankrupt upon mesne process, after the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, are avoided by the decree of bankruptcy; the property of the bankrupt being devested out of him, and vested in the assignee, when appointed, by mere operation of law.—In re Cheney, Case No. 2,636.

A lien by attachment is preserved by the act of 1841, equally with the lien by judgment.—Downer v. Brackett, Case No. 4,043.

Pending proceedings in bankruptcy, either before or after the decree, a prior attaching creditor cannot proceed in his suit to trial and judgment.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960; Everett v. Stone, Case No. 4,577.

Where an attaching creditor, who knows that the proceedings in bankruptcy have been instituted, proceeds in his suit against the bankrupt to judgment before an assignee is appointed, it is a fraud upon the law, and, if such creditor obtains satisfaction of his judgment, he will not be allowed to retain the proceeds.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

Pending proceedings in bankruptcy, the bankruptcy court will enjoin further proceedings by an attachment creditor, but will allow such proceedings to be continued until the discharge is obtained.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

An attachment on mesne process, before commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, is ineffectual to control the bankruptcy court, and further proceedings in the suit will be enjoined.—In re Bellows, Case No. 1,278.

An attachment of property on mesne process, bona fide made, before a petition filed in bankruptcy by the debtor, is not a lien or security upon the property, within the intendment of Act 1841, § 2, c. 9.—In re Bellows, Case No. 1,278.

The lien given by an attachment on mesne process, if perfected by judgment and levy, is protected, though the judgment was not obtained before the bankruptcy proceedings. (Act 1841).—In re Reed, Case No. 11,640. CONTRA, see Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

An attachment on mesne process, made before petition filed, where judgment was recovered and execution issued after petition filed, but before the decree in bankruptcy, constitutes a valid lien. (Act 1841).—Haughton v. Eustis, Case No. 6,224.

The lien of an attachment in Massachusetts is not an absolute lien, entitled to protection, but is contingent upon the creditor obtaining a judgment in the suit. (Act 1841).—In re Cook, Case No. 3,152.

In the absence of fraud or collusion, a sale on execution of property seized before the filing of the petition which had been attached before the alleged acts of bankruptcy by mesne process will not be restrained. (Act 1841).—Downer v. Brackett, Case No. 4,043.

Whether, if the bankrupt fail to obtain his discharge, the attachment would be gone by the mere operation of the bankrupt act, or whether a judgment in personam may be rendered against him, quære.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

§ 261. —— Under Act 1867.

To constitute an attachment of personal property, the officer must actually take it into his custody and control; the mere taking of a receipt for certain property, followed by a return that he had attached it more than four months before the bankruptcy proceedings, though it would estop the receiptors from denying that there was an attachment, is not enough to create a lien as against the assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Ashley, Case No. 581.

A creditor attaching lands of the bankrupt in a state court over four months before commencement of the proceedings may proceed to judgment and execution unless the assignee intervenes.—Mattocks v. Farrington, Case No. 9,298.

Where a garnishment in a state court of defendant's credits in a bank is discharged by his giving a bond required therefor by statute to satisfy the judgment, and the money is drawn by him from the bank, and deposited with a third person as indemnity to the sureties of his bond, the assignee appointed in proceedings in bankruptcy commenced against him more than a year after the garnishment is not entitled to an injunction against further proceedings in the suit in the state court, nor to the money so deposited, as assets of the estate; as the lien of the attaching creditor, acquired more than four months before the bankruptcy proceedings, was not destroyed by the giving of the bond.—In re Albrecht, Case No. 145.

Attachments in state courts of the property of the bankrupt, brought within four months of the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, are dissolved by the decree in bankruptcy as from the date of the petition.—In re Ellis, Case No. 4,400; In re Housberger, Id. 6,734; Pennington v. Lowenstein, Id. 10,938; In re Davis, Id. 3,616; Beers v. Place, Id. 1,233; Zeiber v. Hill, Id. 18,206; In re Preston, Id. 11,394; Bracken v. Johnston, Id. 1,761; Robinson v. Tuttle, Id. 11,968; McCord v. McNeil, Id. 8,714; In re Peck, Id. 10,886.

An attachment by trustee process, being a lien, under the Vermont laws, on the funds in the hands of the trustee, although without notice to the principal debtor, is a lien under mesne process, saved by Act 1867.—In re Peck, Case No. 10,886.

Attachment execution in Pennsylvania is final process, and, as such, is not dissolved by section 14, Act 1867.—Wilbur v. Wilson, Case No. 17,637.

A sale of property under an attachment brought within four months before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy gives the creditors no greater interest than if the property remained in specie, and money arising from the sale of household furniture belongs to the bankrupt, such property being exempt.—In re Ellis, Case No. 4,400.

The creditor is liable to the assignee in such case for the proceeds of the attachment sale, though the assignee did not appear or defend the suit, or make any attempt to arrest the attachment proceedings.—Bracken v. Johnston, Case No. 1,761.

In such case the assignee's right is superior to that of the attaching creditor, although the property was sold before commencement of the proceedings, and the proceeds paid over after the adjudication, but prior to the deed of assignment.—McCord v. McNeil, Case No. 8,714.

A sheriff who, after the filing of an involuntary petition, sells, as perishable, goods of the bankrupt attached in an action in the state court, before the filing of the petition, is liable for conversion, though he had no notice of the bankruptcy proceedings, and sold under order of court.—Long v. Conner, Case No. 8,479.

A sheriff who, in good faith, pays over the proceeds of an attachment sale, after proceedings in bankruptcy are commenced, is not liable to the assignee in trover.—Bradley v. Frost, Case No. 1,780.

Prior attachments are not discharged by Act 1867, in favor of a subsequent judgment and levy on the property already subject to the attachment to its full value, and such judgment creditors have no security.—In re Klancke, Case No. 7,864; In re Steele, Id. 13,345.

The dissolution of an attachment by an adjudication does not affect the priority of the attaching creditor who has prosecuted the suit to judgment and made an execution levy, and his lien thereunder will be considered as prior in time to that of creditors who have levied attachments intermediate the attachment and execution levy.—In re Steele, Case No. 13,345.

The lien of process issued upon a judgment obtained in attachment proceedings relates back to the service of the process, as between judgment creditors, and Rev. St. § 5044, has no application thereto.—Hudson v. Adams, Case No. 6,832.

In case of attachment of the bankrupt's property, the assignee can take advantage of any remedy open to subsequent attachment creditors.—Beers v. Place, Case No. 1,233.

As against attaching creditors assignee has no right to attach moneys, released on giving bond and deposited to indemnify bondsmen.—In re Albrecht, Case No. 145.

Attachments are dissolved by the proceedings without reference to the property on which they are levied, and an officer in possession under the attachment cannot retain the property until payment of his fees.—In re Stevens, Case No. 13,392.

In the case of an attachment dissolved by the bankruptcy law there is no lien for the costs or disbursements.—In re Davis, Case No. 3,616; In re Preston, Id. 11,394; In re Ward, Id. 17,145.

The sheriff who has attached goods of the bankrupt has a lien for fees accruing up to the time of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.—In re Housberger, Case No. 6,734.

§ 262. Judgments—Validity in general.

See, also, ante, §§ 243–245.

A judgment obtained bona fide before the petition is filed is a valid lien. (Act 1841, § 2).—McLean v. Rockey, Case No. 8,891.

A judgment upon property attached in Massachusetts is a lien (Act 1841, § 2), wholly unaffected by the proceedings in bankruptcy when regularly obtained before petition, decree, or discharge in bankruptcy.—In re Cook, Case No. 3,152.

Where, according to a state law, a judgment becomes a lien on real estate by docketing the same, and the judgment is so docketed before petition is filed against the judgment debtor, the lien thereby acquired is within the saving clauses of Act 1867, §§ 14, 20.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,973.

A judgment obtained by default by a creditor, on a debt not yet payable, will be set aside at the suit of the assignee, though the circumstances do not prove a prohibited preference.—Partridge v. Dearborn, Case No. 10,785.

A lien on real estate lawfully obtained under a valid judgment by a creditor before the commencement of the proceedings against the judgment creditor is good against the assignee.—Webster v. Woolbridge, Case No. 17,340.

Execution liens under judgments for just debts, obtained against the active and unjustifiable opposition of the debtor, before his bankruptcy, will be upheld against the assignee.—Platt v. Stewart, Case No. 11,220.

A judgment obtained against a debtor after an active contest and a levy upon his entire stock in trade, where the creditor has knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent, is a fraudulent preference.—Linkman v. Wilcox, Case No. 8,374.

A judgment, which is in fraud of Act 1867, taken by confession as collateral for the aggregate of several other valid judgments, does not affect their validity.—Vogel v. Lathrop, Case No. 16,985.

The assignee is not bound by the amount found due the ward of the bankrupt in a suit in the chancery court commenced after the adjudication, to which he was not a party.—Bourne v. Maybin, Case No. 1,700.

§ 263. —— Of state courts.

The federal court, in a suit by the assignee of a bankrupt, will not examine into the validity of a judgment confessed by the bankrupt in a state court, the jurisdiction of which is not denied.—Atkinson v. Purdy, Case No. 636.

A judgment of a state court cannot be assailed in the bankrupt court, but the assignee and creditors must resort to the state court, to test its validity.—In re Burns, Case No. 2,182.

Judgments rendered in a state court cannot be corrected or annulled on petition in the bankruptcy court.—In re Dunn, Case No. 4,172.

The district court cannot go behind a judgment of a state court and inquire into the consideration of the debt upon which it was founded.—McKinsey v. Harding, Case No. 8,866.

The district court in bankruptcy may declare the lien of a judgment of a state court void as against general creditors if it is an unlawful preference under Act 1867.—In re Mallory, Case No. 8,991.

The district court in bankruptcy has no jurisdiction on petition to set aside, as procured by fraud and collusion, a judgment against the bankrupt rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter.—In re Lodi Land & Lumber Co., Case No. 8,461.

Sufficiency of evidence to show fraud or collusion in the obtaining of a judgment under which execution was levied before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Moulton, Case No. 9,885.

§ 264. —— Property subject to lien.

Property held by purchasers from the bankrupts in fraud of Act 1867 (14 Stat. 517), at the time of the judgment, is subject to the judgment lien, for the legal title has not passed, and the proceeds of such property in the hands of the assignee are alike liable.—In re Badenheim, Case No. 716.

Property which the bankrupt held after the rendition of the judgment, and before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, and which might at the time have been levied upon and sold for the payment of the judgment, is subject to the judgment lien.—In re Badenheim, Case No. 716.

A lien obtained by a judgment or levy of execution on property fraudulently assigned is valid as against the assignee in bankruptcy of the debtor where they are obtained before the commencement of the proceeding.—Johnson v. Rogers, Case No. 7,408.

An assignee taking property from a trustee, who held under a void assignment for creditors, takes subject to the liens of judgment creditors accruing subsequently to the assignment, and before the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Beadle, Case No. 1,155.

Liens of judgments obtained after the execution of a general assignment, valid by the state laws or at common law, which is set aside at the instance of the assignee in bankruptcy as in contravention of the bankruptcy act, are not valid against him where they would not have attached had the assignment been allowed to stand.—In re Beisenthal, Case No. 1,236; In re Walker, Id. 17,063; Belden v. Smith, Id. 1,242; In re Temple, Id. 13,826; In re Croughwell, Case No. 3,440.

An assignee in bankruptcy who procures an assignment to be set aside as in contravention of the bankruptcy statutes takes title from the assignee under the general assignment, and an adjudication in favor of a sheriff at the suit of such general assignee, that an assignment of property, levied on by the sheriff under execution, was fraudulent and void, binds also the assignee in bankruptcy appointed on petition of the creditors of the assignor, and the sheriff is entitled to enforce his lien as against the assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Beisenthal, Case No. 1,235.

The commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy does not, of itself, dissolve an attachment granted within the time prohibited by law. The adjudication alone has that effect, and the deed of assignment relates back and vests the title of the property in the assignee, as of the date of filing the petition, and there is no time at which the lien of a judgment, rendered subsequent to the attachment, can attach to such property.—In re Badenheim, Case No. 716.

Where, in a suit commenced by attachment, a judgment and an order of sale have been obtained before petition filed in bankruptcy, the judgment lien is not invalidated, though no execution has issued.—Shelley v. Elliston, Case No. 12,750.

The dissolution of an attachment on the property of the bankrupt, by proceedings in bankruptcy, does not enlarge the liens of judgments or change their place as to the order in which they are to be satisfied.—In re Nelson, Case No. 10,100.

Where judgments have been obtained against each of two partners in trade, by a separate creditor of each, before the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, and the firm property is sold under execution issued on the separate judgments and purchased by an agent of the plaintiff in the separate suits, neither he nor his assignee is entitled to hold the property as against the assignee in bankruptcy of the firm.—Osborn v. McBride, Case No. 10,593.

A creditor who is precluded from assailing an assignment as fraudulent cannot obtain a lien on the property which will be valid as against the assignee in bankruptcy.—Johnson v. Rogers, Case No. 7,408.

§ 265. Lien under execution—Validity in general.

An execution levied previous to an act of bankruptcy, if real and bona fide, gives a lien.—Barnes v. Billington, Case No. 1,015.

A bona fide entry of judgment and levy of execution before proceedings in bankruptcy are instituted is not affected thereby. (Act 1867).—In re Bernstein, Case No. 1,350.

Judgment creditors, obtaining an advantage by execution and levy, will be protected, although at the time they may have had doubts as to the debtor's solvency.—In re Kerr, Case No. 7,728.

An honest execution, levied before petition is filed in bankruptcy, is unaffected thereby, and the sheriff may proceed thereunder.—Goddard v. Weaver, Case No. 5,495.

A fraudulent preference is created where an insolvent debtor suffers his property to be seized on execution by a creditor who has reasonable cause to believe the debtor to be insolvent at the time, with intent to give a preference, and the assignee may recover the value of the property seized.—In re Ballou, Case

No. 818; Haskell v. Ingalls, Id. 6,193; Christman v. Haynes, Id. 2,703.

Executions are valid if the creditor had no reasonable cause to believe the debtor insolvent when they were taken out.—In re Black, Case No. 1,458.

A lien acquired by judgment, execution, and levy before the bankruptcy is enforceable against the proceeds of the property, where an appeal taken by the bankrupt did not operate as a stay, the bankrupt not having executed the necessary bond.—In re Gold Mountain Min. Co., Case No. 5,515.

The right of an execution creditor or a landlord, upon a warrant of distress, is paramount to that of the assignee, where the execution or warrant of distress was issued before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy.—Wilson v. Childs, Case No. 17,796.

§ 266. —— What property subject to levy.

Where a mortgagee takes possession of chattels on a default in payment of the mortgage, the mortgagor has no interest therein subject to levy on execution.—In re Wrisley, Case No. 18,103.

Upon the avoidance of a general assignment as in violation of the bankrupt law which was valid under the state law, the title of the assignee in bankruptcy dates back to the time of the voluntary assignment, and cuts off the levies of judgment creditors after such time.—In re Beisenthal, Case No. 1,236; In re Walker, Id. 17,063; Linder v. Lewis, Id. 8,362; Waring v. Buchanan, Id. 17,176. CONTRA, see McLean v. Meline, Case No. 8,890; MacDonald v. Moore, Id. 8,763.

A judgment creditor is entitled to take on execution only what belongs to his debtor, and the property in his hands is subject to all the equities to which it was liable in the hands of the debtor.—Everett v. Stone, Case No. 4,577.

§ 267. —— Necessity of levy.

Where, before an involuntary petition is filed, a sheriff has levied one execution, and receives another for levy, there is a constructive levy under the second, so that a valid lien is acquired under each.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,974.

Where, under the local law, an execution in the hands of the sheriff is a lien on the debtor's personal property for 90 days, if a petition is filed within such time the lien is transferred to the property in the hands of the assignee.—In re Weeks, Case No. 17,350.

A direction by the execution to the sheriff "to hold the execution, but not to levy for a few days, or until further orders," does not impair the lien.—In re Weeks, Case No. 17,350.

An execution in the hands of the sheriff in New York before voluntary petition filed, though not levied, binds leviable personal property as against the assignee.—In re Paine, Case No. 10,673; In re Stockwell, Id. 13,464; In re Wheeler, Id. 17,490. CONTRA, see In re Rust, Case No. 12,171.

Where the goods of a debtor are in the possession of the sheriff under an attachment, an execution in favor of another is a lien thereon from its delivery to the sheriff as against the assignee in a subsequent bankruptcy, though the attachment be vacated by the bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Hull, Case No. 6,857.

The lien of a prior unlevied execution is devested by a seizure of goods by a marshal under warrant in bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Tills, Case No. 14,052.

§ 268. —— Time of levy.

The petitioner's property in a voluntary proceeding remains subject to execution until the adjudication. (Act 1841).—Ex parte Bennet, Case No. 1,309; Dudley's Case, Id. 4,114.

A sale of the debtor's land on an execution levied after, though the judgment was entered before, the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, will not pass title as against the assignee under Act 1867.—Pennington v. Sale, Case No. 10,939; Davis v. Anderson, Id. 3,623; Russell v. McCord, Id. 12,157.

The issuing of a writ of fi. fa. upon a judgment recorded against the defendant in 1861 does not create such a lien upon his real estate in North Carolina as will be enforced by the bankruptcy court, when the defendant has been subsequently declared a bankrupt so late as 1868.—In re McIntosh, Case No. 8,826.

On the question of priority between a petition in bankruptcy and an execution, both marked as filed at the same hour, held, that the actual time of filing might be shown by parol.—In re Roberts, Case No. 11,896.

The fact that plaintiff sued out his execution immediately upon the rendering of the judgment, and defendant filed his bankruptcy on the same day, will not affect the lien of the execution where there was no collusion.—Witt v. Hereth, Case No. 17,921.

§ 269. —— Validity of levy.

The validity of a levy which is valid under the state law, being a matter of record, is conclusive, and cannot be inquired into in bankruptcy proceedings, and, if it is false, the officer must answer for the same in an action by the proper party.—Armstrong v. Rickey, Case No. 546.

Levy of execution on bankrupt's personalty will be declared void on petition of assignee where not in conformity to state laws under which it was made.—Beers v. Place, Case No. 1,233.

A levy upon the stock of goods in the bankrupt's store, where the sheriff puts a custodian in charge, but does not close the store, is valid.—In re Hughes, Case No. 6,843.

§ 270. —— Waiver of levy.

A levy which has been relinquished before the filing of the petition creates no lien upon the property, as against the assignee.—Sage v. Wynkoop, Case No. 12,215.

§ 271. Supplementary proceedings.

A judgment creditor does not acquire a lien protected under the bankrupt law by commencing proceedings supplementary to execution. Until the appointment of a receiver, his right is not a lien, within the meaning of the bankrupt law.—In re Wheeler, Case No. 17,490.

§ 272. Miscellaneous cases.

Where the bankrupt, after filing his petition and before adjudication, became entitled to property as heir of one to whom he was indebted, the assignee should receive the same diminished by the amount of such debt. (Act 1841).—Ex parte Newhall, Case No. 10,159.

Where contractors for prison labor file a petition in bankruptcy, owing a debt to the prison agent under a contract containing a provision, in accordance with the state law, that any debt which may become due shall be a lien in favor of the state upon the machinery used in the performance of the contract upon the prison premises, and that such lien shall continue during the contract, and until any debt owing thereunder shall be paid, the claim of the prison agent to such a lien is valid.—In re Burt, Case No. 2,209.

A creditor who has advanced money to raise a valid attachment, made more than four months prior to the bankruptcy proceedings, retains a lien therefor, although such advances were a part of a consideration for a conveyance which was a fraudulent preference.—Robinson v. Tuttle, Case No. 11,968.

An assignment of a permit to cut timber, and a conveyance of the timber by the bankrupt, to secure advances made before petition filed, gives a valid lien.—In re Gregg, Case No. 5,796.

Otherwise as to advances made after the petition was filed, but in ignorance thereof.—In re Gregg, Case No. 5,796.

One who advances money to drive the logs to market on the security of the assignment is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the assignee under such assignment.—In re Gregg, Case No. 5,796.

3. Remedies of Parties.

§ 273. Waiver of lien.

A creditor, by filing a petition for an adjudication in bankruptcy without reference to a lien held by him, waives such lien.—In re Bloss, Case No. 1,562.

A lien on land is not affected by the taking of a mortgage on personal property to secure the same claim.—In re Hutto, Case No. 6,960.

A person's rights as mortgagee of a stock of goods are not impaired by a sale to him which is void under section 35, Act 1867.—In re Kahley, Case No. 7,593.

The fact that an attorney, in drawing the bankrupt's inventory, includes certain notes in his possession, does not estop him from claiming a lien thereon for legal services.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,984.

Where a creditor to whom the fraudulent preference has been made by a default judgment submits himself to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, the court will control the proceeds of sale on execution by summary process.—In re Black, Case No. 1,457.

§ 274. Remedies of general creditors.

A creditor has a right to sue to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt only where the assignee refuses to do so.—Freelander v. Holloman, Case No. 5,081.

Creditors may impeach for fraud or irregularity a judgment obtained against the bankrupt before petition filed, where the judgment debt is offered for proof.—Ex parte O'Neil, Case No. 10,527.

A bill by creditors to restrain defendant from disposing of goods charged to have been fraudulently transferred to him by the bankrupt may be sworn to by an agent.—In re Fendley, Case No. 4,728.

§ 275. Reimbursement of fraudulent transferee.

One compelled to surrender to the assignee property purchased with knowledge that it was fraudulently conveyed is not entitled to reimbursement for improvements, or for money advanced to reduce incumbrances.—In re Mead, Case No. 9,365.

§ 276. Remedies of lien creditors in general.

Where a lien, or equitable claim, constituting a charge in rem, is a matter of agreement, it will be enforced in equity, not only upon real estate, but also upon personal estate, or money, in the hands of a third person; and against the party himself, or his personal representatives, or persons claiming under him, or assignees in bankruptcy.—Fletcher v. Morey, Case No. 4,864.

A creditor holding security cannot enforce his security after the commencement of the proceedings, until he first prove his debt, and receive permission of the bankruptcy court; and where he proceeds without authority of court the sale will be set aside, or, upon application, for good cause, the court may confirm the sale upon terms after the debt is properly proved.—Lee v. Franklin Ave. German Sav. Inst., Case No. 8,188.

A lien creditor cannot be required to surrender the property pledged until his liability or debt is discharged.—In re Buse, Case No. 2,221; Cadmus v. Beman, Id. 2,281.

A creditor secured by mortgage may apply to the bankruptcy court to have the property sold and the proceeds applied on his debt. If insufficient to extinguish it, he may prove for the unpaid part.—In re Stewart, Case No. 13,418.

A mechanic's lienor cannot proceed in the state court, after petition in bankruptcy is filed, without leave of the bankruptcy court.—In re Cook, Case No. 3,151.

§ 277. Power of state court.

Where the creditor commences suit in the state court to foreclose the mortgage before the assignee files a suit to set it aside as a fraud upon the law, the state court will have the right to decide the matter, to the exclusion of the federal courts.—Yeadon v. Planters' & Mechanics' Bank, Case No. 18,130.

A lien under the state law may be enforced by the state court, but the state court has no jurisdiction of a suit by the assignee in bankruptcy to set aside such a lien for fraud in its creation.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,885.

The state court out of which an attachment has issued is not bound to take judicial notice that the debtor has been adjudicated a bankrupt.—Johnson v. Bishop, Case No. 7,373.

§ 278. Ascertainment, adjustment, and liquidation of liens.

A receiver will be appointed for property incumbered by liens before the court for adjustment, although the bankrupt has relinquished possession to a prior incumbrancer.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,887.

A prior lien gives a prior claim, and the district court in bankruptcy may ascertain and liquidate such a lien.—In re Winn, Case No. 17,876.

Where, under an agreement of the execution creditor, the property levied on passes into the hands of the assignee in bankruptcy without prejudice to such prior lien, under the levy, as may be sustainable, the assignee and the register will, at the instance of the execution creditor, expedite the proceedings for such a decision, but such proceedings cannot be conducted on ex parte affidavits.—In re Beck, Case No. 1,205.

The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to determine the question of lien, on petition by a chattel mortgagee, though he has not proved his debt in bankruptcy.—In re High, Case No. 6,473.

Property levied on under execution was, by order of the bankruptcy court, delivered to the assignee, and by him sold subject to the determination as to the validity of the lien claimed by the creditor, and the assignee filed a petition praying that the lien be declared void, and the creditor's answer prayed that it might be held valid. Held that, as the matter was brought up by petition instead of by bill in equity, the proceedings were irregular and void.—In re Ballou, Case No. 818.

In the case of vendor's liens on the bankrupt's real estate and liens attaching prior to the title of the vendor, resort must be had to a proceeding in equity to determine the title and rights of the parties.—Ex parte Drewry, Case No. 4,081.

When incumbrances have been paid upon a particular parcel of land for the benefit of subsequent grantees of different interests in the same, the sum so paid is chargeable, in the inverse order of alienation, to the most recently acquired interest.—In re Longfellow, Case No. 8,486.

The remedy to have an unrecorded mortgage of the bankrupt's property declared and enforced as a prior lien is by action or suit, and not by petition.—Barstow v. Peckham, Case No. 1,064.

§ 279. Marshaling of assets and securities.

A mortgage given on both land and personalty will be enforced as to the land first, where there are other liens on the personalty.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,889.

An assignment of a fund deposited by a foreign insurance company as required by the statute of Mississippi, though made within four months of an adjudication in bankruptcy, held not void as to foreign creditors.—Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Hemingway, Case No. 4,797.

A lien which is attached to the proceeds of sale of two classes of debtors' property, and which is superior to all other liens, will be paid as far as possible out of the fund on which it is the only lien.—In re Bowler, Case No. 1,735.

In the case of a creditor having several securities, the bankruptcy court may so marshal the assets as to require such creditor to foreclose a mortgage, which was one of the securities, before resorting to the general fund.—In re Sauthoff, Case No. 12,379.

§ 280. Foreclosure of mortgage—In general.

On the bankruptcy of the mortgagor, where the mortgagee was given a power to sell, the bankruptcy court has exclusive jurisdiction to determine the rights of the parties.—Lockett v. Hill, Case No. 8,443.

The bankruptcy of the mortgagor will not devest the state court of the jurisdiction of a foreclosure suit already at issue, and it may proceed to decree a sale; and where the property is clearly of less value than the lien the federal court will order the assignee to sell the same.—In re Irving, Case No. 7,073; Getz v. First Nat. Bank of Washington, Id. 5,374.

A suit in the state court to foreclose a mortgage given by the bankrupt, commenced after the adjudication, without permission of the bankruptcy court, is not a contempt of its authority, and the proceedings are not void.—In re Moller, Case No. 9,700, affirming Case No. 9,699; In re O'Malley, Id. 10,507a.

The foreclosure of a mortgage on bankrupt's estate is not within summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, under Act 1867, § 1.—In re Casey, Case No. 2,495.

A bankrupt court, which first takes jurisdiction by ordering a sale of mortgage premises discharged of liens, thereby ousts the state courts of jurisdiction to foreclose the mortgage.—In re Devore, Case No. 3,847.

A junior mortgagee, purchasing at a foreclosure sale, is not entitled to rents collected by the assignee of the mortgagor pending the foreclosure, or to reimbursement of the amount paid by him for taxes. In re Foster, Case No. 4,963, affirmed.—Foster v. Rhodes, Case No. 4,981.

A decree of foreclosure against one adjudicated a bankrupt, where his assignee was not made a party, will not extinguish the right of redemption, and a purchaser under sale by order of the bankruptcy court is entitled to redeem, notwithstanding title by possession and payment of taxes under state law.—Barron v. Newberry, Case No. 1,056.

Where a foreclosure suit is commenced in the state court after petition in bankruptcy is filed, and proceeds to a decree before the assignee is appointed, the assignee's right of redemption is cut off.—Sedgwick v. Grinnell, Case No. 12,612.

The lien of a mortgage creditor on the real property of a bankrupt is not lost by his failure to prove his debt, so that after the end of the proceedings in bankruptcy he cannot enforce his lien.—Wicks v. Perkins, Case No. 17,615.

§ 281. —— Leave to foreclose.

After proceedings in bankruptcy commenced, a mortgagee cannot take possession of property under his mortgage, or foreclose the same in the state court, where the assignee objects.—Hutchings v. Muzzy Iron Works, Case No. 6,952.

Though notes secured by a deed of trust mature before the adjudication, the bankruptcy court has custody of the estate, and the trustees cannot foreclose or sell without its consent.—Dooley v. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Case No. 3,998.

A sale of the bankrupt's property in proceedings to foreclose a mortgage commenced in the state court after petition in voluntary proceedings was filed, with knowledge thereof, and without obtaining permission of the bankrupt court, is a nullity.—Phelps v. Sellick, Case No. 11,079.

A sale by the trustee under a trust deed of property of the bankrupt on direction of the creditor, without permission of the bankruptcy court, will be set aside on application of the assignee.—In re Davis, Case No. 3,618.

A mortgagee cannot apply for leave to foreclose his mortgage in another court without proving his debt in bankruptcy as a secured claim.—In re Sabin, Case No. 12,193.

The petition in such case must be full and explicit, and signed and verified in the manner usual in other cases.—In re Sabin, Case No. 12,193.

A petition for leave to foreclose a mortgage will be dismissed where it is not shown that the assignee was given notice, and the debt has not been proved.—In re Frizelle, Case No. 5,133.

A mortgagee will not generally be permitted to foreclose in a state court, but should invoke the summary power of the bankrupt court to sell the property, or, where the validity of the mortgage is denied, should proceed by bill in the district or circuit court.—In re Sacchi, Case No. 12,200.

Where the validity of a mortgage given by the bankrupt is not questioned, and the premises are worth less than its amount, the bankruptcy court may properly allow the mortgagee to foreclose.—In re Iron Mountain Co., Case No. 7,065.

Where the value of the bankrupt's property mortgaged exceeds the mortgage, or where its validity or amount is disputed, the bankrupt court will refuse to permit foreclosure in the state court.—In re Iron Mountain Co., Case No. 7,065.

§ 282. —— Restraining foreclosure and sale.

Proceedings in a foreclosure suit begun in a state court after adjudication of the bankruptcy of the mortgagor, and the appointment of an assignee, are void, and a final injunction will be granted by the bankruptcy court restraining the same.—In re Brinkman, Case No. 1,884.

An assignee cannot have an injunction against foreclosure in a state court of a mortgage against the bankrupt where he appeared, and permitted the proceedings to final adjudication, and no injury is done thereby to the bankrupt estate.—Augustine v. McFarland, Case No. 648.

Foreclosure suits in the state court will be enjoined by the bankruptcy court at the suit of the assignee, who denies the right of a national bank, the mortgagee, to make the loan in question, though the expenses of litigating the question will be greatly increased.—In re Duryea, Case No. 4,196.

In a bankruptcy proceeding an injunction was issued staying the foreclosure of a mortgage given by the bankrupt, and the mortgagee applied to set aside the stay, that the property might be sold under decree in the foreclosure suit. Held, that the register would be appointed special custodian of the property to sell the same, and receive the proceeds, subject to the order of the court.—In re Hanna, Case No. 6,026.

The circuit court of one district, in a suit by an assignee appointed by a district court in another state, cannot enjoin a suit to foreclose a mortgage in the state court of a third state.—Markson v. Heaney, Case No. 9,098.

On petition by mortgagees in a foreclosure proceeding to set aside an injunction issued by the bankruptcy court, the register will be authorized to sell the property free of incumbrances, and receive the proceeds subject to order of court.—In re Hanna, Case No. 6,026.

A suit commenced in a state court, after adjudication, to enforce mortgages on property in possession of the assignee, may be enjoined. Case No. 7,725 affirmed.—In re Kerosene Oil Co., Case No. 7,726.

An injunction issued to stay a mortgage foreclosure in the state court will be dissolved where it appears that the property is of no value beyond the admitted incumbrances.—In re O'Malley, Case No. 10,507a.

Where the purchaser of property of the bankrupt under a power of sale in a mortgage before the adjudication refuses to complete the purchase, and the property is thereafter, and after the adjudication, offered for sale, the bankruptcy court may enjoin the sale.—Whitman v. Butler, Case No. 17,579.

§ 283. Sale on execution.

A sale by an execution creditor, without leave of court, after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, passes no title.—The Skylark, Case No. 12,929.

A sale of the bankrupt's property made after the petition was filed, but under an execution levied before the petition was filed, may be set aside or confirmed, in the discretion of the bankruptcy court.—In re Hufnagel, Case No. 6,837.

A purchaser at sheriff's sale, after proceedings commenced in bankruptcy, where the levy was made prior thereto, will acquire a good title, notwithstanding that the judgments under which the sale took place are afterwards declared void as in fraud of the act.—Zahm v. Fry, Case No. 18,198.

A sheriff who levies an execution upon and sells property of the bankrupt after petition filed is liable to the assignee for the proceeds, though he pay them over to the creditor before receiving notice of the bankruptcy.—Miller v. O'Brien, Case No. 9,586.

The fact that the sheriff had seized the property, and held it, or its proceeds, under an attachment made a few days before the proceedings were instituted, will make no difference in the rule to be applied, as the attachment was dissolved by Act 1867, and the assignee's title vested as of the time of the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings.—Miller v. O'Brien, Case No. 9,586.

A party holding a judgment entered in an action for tort after commencement of the proceedings need not apply to the bankruptcy court for leave to enter execution.—Black v. McClelland, Case No. 1,462.

Where a person mortgaged his property, waiving all his homestead rights and his right to a discharge in bankruptcy, and his assignee in voluntary bankruptcy left the property in such person's hands as custodian until he could procure the schedules and administer, but before getting actual possession the mortgages were foreclosed and executions levied, the waiver could not be enforced until the property was designated and allotted to the bankrupt by the assignee; and such levy is a contempt of court, and is not justified by the ignorance of the mortgagees and the sheriff, it appearing that they could have easily obtained knowledge of the bankruptcy.—Byrd v. Harrold, Case No. 2,269.

A sheriff, where not restrained by the bankruptcy court, may proceed to sell after the adjudication under a levy and advertisement of sale made before the adjudication.—Thames v. Miller, Case No. 13,860.

§ 284. Restraining enforcement of liens —In general.

Where a lien has been acquired before petition in bankruptcy was filed, enforcement of such lien in state court will not be enjoined, unless fraud is charged.—Clarke v. Rist, Case No. 2,861.

Where the enforcement of a lien in the state court will have the effect to draw to its jurisdiction the administration of the bankrupt law, the federal circuit court will interpose by injunction.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,885.

Where other courts have taken full jurisdiction of property on which liens are asserted, the bankruptcy court will not in general interfere.—In re Taliafero, Case No. 13,736.

A district court has, under Act 1867, power to prohibit any proceeding in a state court by a creditor to enforce a lien on the property of a bankrupt, who has been adjudged a bankrupt by such court. Samson v. Burton, Case No. 12,286, affirmed.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,801.

Where the property affected by a lien has passed to the assignee, summary proceedings in the bankruptcy court to restrain the enforcement of the lien are proper. Samson v. Burton, Case No. 12,286, affirmed.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,801.

The plenary proceeding common to suits in equity is not necessary in the exercise of the equity power of the district court in bankruptcy.—In re Wallace, Case No. 17,094.

The district courts in bankruptcy are authorized by summary proceedings to administer all the relief which a court of equity could administer under the like circumstances upon regular proceedings. (Act 1867).—In re Wallace, Case No. 17,094.

The enforcement in a state court of a valid lien attaching before the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy will not be restrained by the bankruptcy court on the ground of a probable sacrifice of the property under judicial proceedings for its enforcement in the state court.—Ex parte Donaldson, Case No. 3,981.

Creditors holding an order obtained before bankruptcy on a general fund will be restrained, after bankruptcy, from prosecuting their suit in the state court against the managers of the fund.—Walker v. Seigel, Case No. 17,085.

§ 285. —— Execution and attachment liens.

In the absence of fraud or collusion, a sale on execution of property seized before the filing of the petition, which had been attached before the alleged acts of bankruptcy by mesne process, will not be restrained. (Act 1841).—Downer v. Brackett, Case No. 4,043.

The levy of an execution on property mentioned in the schedule will be restrained at any time after the petition is filed, unless it be shown that the petition was not bona fide. (Act 1841).—In re Mellor, Case No. 9,402.

A federal district court in bankruptcy may restrain the sale of the bankrupt's property on the process of a state court levied before the bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Lady Bryan Min.

Co., Case No. 7,980; Beattie v. Gardner, Id. 1,195; In re Mallory, Id. 8,991.

A creditor levying on personalty under a judgment recovered more than six months before the filing of a voluntary petition on bill by a creditor in the circuit court may be enjoined from selling until the assignee is appointed.—Eastburn v. Yardley, Case No. 4,252.

A petition to enjoin enforcement of a judgment against the bankrupt's property can be filed, before the appointment of assignees, only by the bankrupt, and, after such appointment, only by the assignees.—In re Bowie, Case No. 1,728.

A sheriff has no right to make a levy under process of the state court after commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy until the question of bankruptcy is disposed of.—Jones v. Leach, Case No. 7,475.

The bankruptcy court may prohibit creditors of the bankrupt from taking out execution in a state court, and levying it on attached property, until the assignee shall have time to discharge the attachment liens.—Samson v. Burton, Case No. 12,285.

Where a sheriff has made a bona fide levy under an execution before proceedings were commenced, the bankruptcy court will interfere only where the interest of the general creditors will be materially affected, or the validity of the judgment is questioned.—Goddard v. Weaver, Case No. 5,495.

Where an execution creditor, under a levy prior to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy, has been delayed by an injunction under such proceedings, he is entitled to a summary hearing at any stage, after the execution of the assignment.—In re Hafer, Case No. 5,897.

An injunction against a sale on execution on levies made prior to the petition in bankruptcy, where the judgments were valid, will be dissolved, where it does not appear that any advantage would result to the bankrupt estate by continuing them.—In re Wilbur, Case No. 17,633.

An injunction restraining proceedings on execution under a judgment against the bankrupt will be dissolved, where the assignee has taken no measures to recover the property levied upon and the bankrupt declares that the property does not belong to him.—In re Olcott, Case No. 10,478.

Creditors of a bankrupt cannot purge themselves of contempt in violating an injunction restraining attachment proceedings in state courts by showing that the proceedings were continued by assignees of their firm, unless they show that the assignment was prior to the injunction, or that they endeavored to stop the suit.—United States v. Bancroft, Case No. 14,513.

In such a case, a fine to the amount of the value of the attached property, with interest, and the expense of the contempt proceedings, including a proper counsel fee, will be imposed upon such creditors.—United States v. Bancroft, Case No. 14,513.

Pending proceedings in bankruptcy, either before or after the decree, a prior attaching creditor cannot proceed in his suit to trial and judgment.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

In such case, the bankruptcy court will enjoin further proceedings in the attachment suit, but will allow it to be continued until the discharge is obtained.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

A creditor enforcing an execution on a state court judgment, in defiance of an injunction of the bankruptcy court, in which the debtor has filed a voluntary petition, is guilty of contempt.—In re Atkinson, Case No. 606.

§ 286. Restraining suit by fraudulent vendee.

A bill by a sheriff to restrain an action of trover by the fraudulent vendee of a debtor for attached property, which he had delivered to the assignee in bankruptcy, must be filed in the district court as a distinct suit, and not as a petition in the bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Evans, Case No. 4,551.

A sheriff who delivers, to the assignee in bankruptcy, property attached before the bankruptcy, as that of the debtor, has a good defense at law in an action in trover by the fraudulent vendee of the debtor, and the district court will not enjoin the suit on his petition.—In re Evans, Case No. 4,551.

The bankruptcy court will retain the bill as against the fraudulent vendee for an account of the property converted by him, though it refuse to enjoin the suit against the officer, on the ground that he has an adequate remedy at law.—In re Evans, Case No. 4,551.

Where a suit is brought by the assignee in the federal court to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, the bankruptcy court may restrain the prosecution of a suit in the state court against a marshal by the alleged fraudulent transferee for seizing property as that of the bankrupt pending the suit by the assignee.—Kellogg v. Russell, Case No. 7,666.

(D) ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATE.

1. In General.

§ 287. Powers of assignees in general.

The assignee in bankruptcy of an insurance company has no power to waive the performance of conditions by the insured.—In re Firemen's Ins. Co., Case No. 4,796.

The assignee, without authority of court, cannot employ an attorney to conduct a suit, for a contingent compensation.—In re Brinker, Case No. 1,882.

An agreement by two of three assignees is not binding upon the absent assignee in the absence of previous authority or ratification.—Blight v. Ashley, Case No. 1,541.

Suppression of material facts by the assignee while obtaining authority from the court to make a contract to pay counsel one-half the gross recovery in a cause makes the contract invalid, but a reasonable sum will be allowed.—Maybin v. Raymond, Case No. 9,338.

An assignee is in contempt if he takes any steps in a state court without authority from the bankruptcy court.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,978.

§ 288. Instructions of court or register.

Where no question of disputable right exists, assignees cannot obtain the instruction of the bankruptcy court whether to do a proposed act, which, if proper on their part, would be within their own discretion and power on the administration of their trust.—Estate of Franklin Sav. Fund Soc., Case No. 5,058.

An assignee will be held to the strictest account where he fails to attend a reference ordered to obtain the necessary information upon which to base directions which have been applied for by the assignee.—In re Schapter, Case No. 12,438.

Neither the court nor register is the general adviser of the assignee in his dealings with the assets.—In re Sturgeon, Case No. 13,564.

§ 289. Care and custody of property.

The court may order the assignee to expend money in finishing goods for sale, where beneficial to the estate.—Foster v. Ames, Case No. 4,965.

The assignee is liable for proper charges for the care and custody of the bankrupt's property from the commencement of the proceedings.—Gardner v. Cook, Case No. 5,226.

If the assignee has taken possession of packing-boxes, policies of insurance, &c., procured by the sheriff, he must pay for the cost of them.—In re Fortune, Case No. 4,955.

Where an assignee of the mortgagor takes possession of harvested crops and timber which had been removed from the premises with notice from the mortgagee, after condition broken, that he claimed such property under his mortgage, the expenses of securing the property will be allowed the assignee which must be paid by the mortgagee, as the assignee is considered as having taken possession in behalf of the mortgagee.—In re Bruce, Case No. 2,045.

Property in the hands of the assignee, subject to a lien, is chargeable with the cost of keeping and selling it, and the assignee's fees, but not for attorney's fees in contesting the lien.—In re Peabody, Case No. 10,866.

An assignee in bankruptcy who refuses to deliver mortgaged chattels to the mortgagee has no lien for rent, thereafter accruing, of the place in which they were kept.—In re Pierce, Case No. 11,140.

§ 290. Compromise of claims.

The assignee is not empowered to compound all doubtful debts with the consent and approbation of a committee of creditors.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,885.

An assignee, jointly interested with others in certain judgments for a lien upon a building, is allowed to compromise his claim upon receiving a pro rata share, and not otherwise.—In re Furbish, Case No. 5,159.

Where the proof of loss was not submitted until after petition filed by an insolvent insurance company, the assignee cannot make an adjustment or agreement upon which an action can be maintained.—In re Firemen's Ins. Co., Case No. 4,796.

§ 291. Redemption of property.

The assignee may redeem property of the bankrupt sold on execution without discharging the claim of the judgment creditor, who has purchased at the sale, for the unsatisfied balance of his judgment.—Lloyd v. Hoo Sue, Case No. 8,432.

The assignee in bankruptcy may redeem a chattel mortgage made in Massachusetts.—Foster v. Ames, Case No. 4,965.

§ 292. Assessments on corporate stock.

Upon the bankruptcy of a corporation the court is vested with all the powers belonging to the officers and stockholders as to the making of assessments or calls.—Upton v. Hansbrough, Case No. 16,801.

The district court in bankruptcy has power to make a call and assessment against the stockholders in a bankrupt insurance company, on unpaid stock held by them.—In re Republic Ins. Co., Case No. 11,704.

The court has power to make such an assessment, to return unearned premiums and all claims properly provable against the company, and to pay the expense of closing up its affairs.—In re Republic Ins. Co., Case No. 11,704.

The court also has jurisdiction of the equalization of payments between stockholders, and it may also allow interest on claims proven.—In re Republic Ins. Co., Case No. 11,704.

The assignee of a bankrupt corporation has no power of his own motion, and without order of court, to make an assessment of unpaid balances or installments on the corporate stock.—Payson v. Brooke, Case No. 10,857. CONTRA, see Myers v. Seeley, Case No. 9,994.

An order of the court requiring each stockholder of a bankrupt corporation to pay a call on his stock within a specified time is binding upon all the stockholders, whether they receive actual notice or not.—Upton v. Burnham, Case No. 16,799.

The failure of the company to make assessments regularly from month to month, as provided in the policy, cannot be retrieved by an assessment by the court on the bankruptcy of the company.—In re Protection Life Ins. Co., Case No. 11,444.

The word "nonassessable," written across the face of a stock certificate, is not binding as against the assignee in bankruptcy of the company.—Upton v. Burnham, Case No. 16,799.

§ 293. Liability for rent.

Where a lease of premises made by the bankrupt is not accepted by the assignee, he is not liable thereunder; but if he continues to use the premises the estate will be held liable for the value of such use as part of the expense of administration.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,973a; In re Appold, Id. 499; In re Rose, Id. 12,043; In re Butler, Id. 2,236; In re Walton, Id. 17,131; In re Hamburger, Id. 5,975; In re Fowler, Id. 4,997; In re Wheeler, Id. 17,490; In re Ives, Id. 7,116.

Where the rate named in the lease is reasonable, such rate will be allowed.—In re Breck, Case No. 1,822.

Where the assignee removes the bankrupt's goods from a leased store without making any sales therein, and without having actual or constructive possession thereof, the estate is liable only for use and occupation as a place of storage.—In re Lucius Hart Mfg. Co., Case No. 8,592.

The assignee is liable for full rent of premises occupied by him under an unexpired lease by the bankrupt, and the landlord has a lien on the goods on the premises.—In re Commercial Bulletin Co., Case No. 3,060.

The assignee is liable for the payment of expenses incurred in the settlement of the bankrupt's estate after the commencement of the proceedings, and the use and occupation of the rented premises by the marshal for storage and sale of the bankrupt's property is such an expense.—In re Dunham, Case No. 4,145.

A landlord's claim for use and occupation of premises used by the marshal for keeping and storing the goods, and costs on reference to adjust the amount, are to be paid as expenses of administration.—In re Hoagland, Case No. 6,545.

If the assignee occupy leased premises after the day of adjudication, he, and not the estate, is liable for the rent. When, however, his occupancy is for the benefit of the estate, he will be credited by the rent he is obliged to pay.—In re Webb, Case No. 17,315.

The assignee is not bound for the rent in a lease of premises used for the storage of the bankrupt's goods of which he had no knowledge.—In re Washburn, Case No. 17,211.

An assignee does not accept the premises and become responsible for rent merely by leaving some goods thereon, mingled with some other goods which had been mortgaged by the bankrupt to the lessor.—In re Yeaton, Case No. 18,133.

The assignee is not liable for rent accruing after the adjudication unless he elects to accept a lease, and occupation of leased premises by the assignee independently of the lease, where he pays for such occupation, is not evidence of such an election.—In re Ten Eyck, Case No. 13,829.

There must be some positive and unequivocal act of acceptance by the assignee before he will be held liable on a lease of the bankrupt, as the mere acceptance of the trust by the assignee does not make him the assignee of such lease.—In re Washburn, Case No. 17,211.

An assignee taking charge of a stock of goods in a store occupied by the bankrupt under a verbal lease for a certain period can be required to pay rent only at the contract rate, and for the time he actually used the store.—In re Merrifield, Case No. 9,465.

Where the marshal takes possession of the bankrupt's goods in a rented store, the landlord is not entitled to the price stipulated in the lease to the bankrupt, but only to reasonable compensation for use and occupation, though he had demanded rent of the marshal, and asked him to vacate.—In re Metz, Case No. 9,509.

Where a marshal, under a warrant, takes possession of the bankrupt's goods on premises occupied by the latter under a lease, and they remain in the possession of the marshal until the appointment of an assignee, and the landlord testifies that he leased the premises to another party, who was to take possession at a time subsequent to the removal of the goods from his premises, and he makes no application for rent until they are removed, he is not entitled to be paid for such occupation out of the estate.—In re McGrath, Case No. 8,808.

The assignee should pay from the assets the rent of a store occupied by him, from the filing of the petition to the date of surrendering possession.—In re Hufnagel, Case No. 6,837.

Rent for a store occupied by the bankrupt, and subsequently by his assignee, will be paid in full, up to the surrender of the property, where there were sufficient goods to satisfy the rent on distress.—Longstreth v. Pennock, Case No. 8,488.

Where the assignee elects to take a term belonging to the bankrupt under a lease, he must pay the accrued rent.—Ex parte Faxon, Case No. 4,704.

§ 294. Liability for torts of assignee.

The estate of the bankrupt is not liable for torts of the assignee.—Adams v. Meyers, Case No. 62.

§ 295. Superseding bankruptcy proceedings by arrangement (Act 1867, § 43).

It is a substantial objection to the approval of a resolution of creditors, under section 43, Act 1867, appointing a trustee and committee to supervise his action, that the committee is composed of only two, one of whom is the trustee.—In re Stillwell, Case No. 13,447.

Creditors desiring confirmation of resolution appointing trustees are the moving parties and should serve their papers on opposing parties.—In re American Water-Proof Cloth Co., Case No. 318.

A resolution appointing a trustee, under the terms of which, and by prior agreements, the interests of the nonsigning creditor were to be sacrificed for the benefit of the signers and the bankrupt, will not be approved.—In re Vetterlein, Case No. 16,928.

The creditors at a meeting held after the appointment of an assignee may make an arrangement by trust deed to have him removed, and a trustee appointed.—In re Jones, Case No. 7,447.

After the resolution of creditors for the appointment of a trustee has gone into effect, a creditor cannot prove his claim before the register, under § 22.—In re Trowbridge, Case No. 14,191.

A person is not disqualified as trustee, or as a member of a committee of creditors, because related to the bankrupt or a creditor or a proposed member of the committee of creditors.—In re Zinn, Case No. 18,215.

The president of a bank, which claimed to be entitled to a preference, is not a proper person to be a member of the committee of creditors.—In re Stuyvesant Bank, Case No. 13,581.

A receiver appointed in proceedings in a state court, which were one of the grounds upon which the adjudication was made, is not a proper person for trustee.—In re Stuyvesant Bank, Case No. 13,581.

The trustees, under direction of the committee, can wind up the estate, or they may be restricted to the more limited powers and duties of ordinary assignees.—In re Darby, Case No. 3,570.

The trustees as well as the creditors and court, are bound to accept the direction of the committee as conclusive, in the absence of fraud.—In re Cooke, Case No. 3,169; Id. 3,171.

When a committee is appointed to assist the trustee in the management of the bankrupt's estate, unanimity of action by them is not required, but the act of a majority, where all have the right to be heard, is the act of the committee.—In re Baxter, Case No. 1,122.

Amount of payment to counsel for services is discretionary with committee.—In re Baxter, Case No. 1,122.

A member of the committee appointed under Rev. St. § 5103, is not entitled to compensation for preparing the bankrupt's stock for sale, and in effect settlement of litigation, as such services were not such as the trustee could not call on the committee to perform in the ordinary course of their duty.—In re Bonnett, Case No. 1,634.

The approval of the committee cannot affect or cure positively unlawful applications of the fund, nor inequality of distribution.—In re Baxter, Case No. 1,122.

Equity will entertain a bill by trustees in bankruptcy to recover an excess of interest paid on a contract stipulating for a greater rate of interest than allowed by law.—Darby v. Boatman's Sav. Inst., Case No. 3,571.

A petition to the bankruptcy court by trustees of the estate against a co-trustee for the recovery of securities belonging to the estate is not a proper remedy, but the petitioners must proceed by a bill in equity.—In re Grambo, Case No. 5,680.

The committee of creditors are entitled to reasonable compensation for their services although the statute makes no provision for it.—In re Treat, Case No. 14,160.

See, also, ante, § 159.

§ 296. Jurisdiction and power.

The bankruptcy court possesses no power under Act 1867, § 25, to summarily order a sale of property claimed for the bankrupt, but in the actual possession of a third person claiming absolute title.—Knight v. Cheney, Case No. 7,883.

Disputed interests of the bankrupt cannot be sold under Act 1867, § 25, except upon a public sale by an order of the court, after personal notice to the adverse claimants. Such order cannot be made by the register.—Ex parte Bryan, Case No. 2,061.

The bankruptcy court cannot order the sale of an entire tract on the ground that the title is in dispute, when the title to an undivided half only is disputed. Rev. St. § 5063.—In re Ludwigson, Case No. 8,601.

The jurisdiction of the district court in bankruptcy to sell real estate and pay off liens is not exclusive.—In re Bowie, Case No. 1,728.

No order of court is necessary to authorize the assignee to sell unincumbered assets of the bankrupt.—In re White, Case No. 17,531.

An assignee who fails or refuses to sell real estate of the bankrupts for the benefit of creditors is personally responsible.—In re Jackson, Case No. 7,127.

§ 297. Power to sell incumbered property.

Where a creditor is secured by a mortgage which is valid under the state law and the bankrupt act, the court has no jurisdiction to order a sale of the property, unless the creditor comes into the bankruptcy proceeding.—Yeadon v. Planters' & Mechanics' Bank, Case No. 18,130.

The court has full power to order the sale of incumbered assets in such manner as it chooses to direct.—In re Columbian Metal Works, Case No. 3,039.

The assignee may sell incumbered property without an order of the court. Act 1867, § 20. —In re McClellan, Case No. 8,694.

But if the debt of the secured creditor is not admitted by the assignee, and cannot be agreed between them, then the assignee should resort to the proper court to ascertain it, and for a sale of the property.—In re McClellan, Case No. 8,694.

The district court will not restrain trover in the state court by the mortgagee of property sold by the assignee without an order of court. —In re Cooper, Case No. 3,190.

A sale by the assignee without an order of court is subject to all lawful incumbrances.—In re Mebane, Case No. 9,380.

It is not the duty of the assignee to petition the court respecting the sale of incumbered property, unless he believes it will produce a fund in excess of the incumbrances.—In re Mebane, Case No. 9,380.

Where it appears that property subject to valid liens will bring more at a private sale by the assignee, he may sell it, with leave to the lien creditors to apply for an order for the direction of the application of the proceeds.—In re Schnepf, Case No. 12,471.

The provision of Rev. St. § 5075, that mortgaged property shall be sold in such manner as the bankruptcy court shall direct, is for the benefit of the unsecured creditors represented by the assignee, and he may waive it. Case No. 9,699, affirmed.—In re Moller, Case No. 9,700.

§ 298. When sale of incumbered property ordered in general.

The court will not order the assignee to sell property incumbered for more than its value.—In re Bowie, Case No. 1,728.

Application to sell real estate incumbered to its full value refused, with liberty to renew it if a sale was not effected, in a reasonable time, in a suit pending in the state court on a prior lien.—In re Hahnlen, Case No. 5,901.

The bankruptcy court should not order the sale of land because the title is in dispute, when the liens thereon exceed its value.—In re Ludwigson, Case No. 8,601.

An order for the sale of chattels covered by a mortgage will not be made where the mortgagee's rights will be injuriously affected, as where the goods have no market value, or not more than the amount of the mortgage.—Foster v. Ames, Case No. 4,965

§ 299. Notice of sale.

A mistake in judgment by the assignee as to the proper place and notices of a sale will not invalidate the sale, in the absence of fraud or collusion.—Hills v. Alden, Case No. 6,507.

Under Act June 22, 1874, notices of all public sales must be published for three consecutive weeks, whether the assignee or other officer proceeds under the power given him by statute or under special order of the bankruptcy court, and such court or judge thereof has no power to change this requirement.—In re Hunter, Case No. 6,903.

The register has authority, under Act 1867 (14 Stat. 517), as amended by Act 1874 (18 Stat. 178), to designate the newspaper that shall contain notices of sales, by the assignee, of the unincumbered real estate of the bankrupt.—In re Burke, Case No. 2,157; Hills v. Alden, Id. 6,507.

§ 300. Notice to incumbrancers.

An order should not be made authorizing a private sale of land on credit, or for less than the amount claimed by an incumbrancer, without the latter's consent, or a submission of the terms of sale to the bankruptcy court, on notice to him.—In re Kirtland, Case No. 7,851.

A sale of real estate under an order of the bankruptcy court is void, as to the creditors who had a lien on the property, and to whom no personal notice of the sale was given, and where it appears that no inquiry and report of liens and their priorities was made before the sale. —Ex parte Drewry, Case No. 4,081.

A sale of incumbered land free of the incumbrances, without notice to the lien creditors, may be set aside by the court on petition of such creditors and notice to the purchasers.—In re Major, Case No. 8,981.

A sale, free of incumbrances, of the bankrupt's real estate, subject to the lien of valid judgments, made on the ex parte petition of the assignee, is absolutely void, and will be set aside on subsequent petition of the lien creditors.—In re Rowland, Case No. 12,096.

Lien creditors are not bound by the sale of lands which were subject to their liens, where their priorities were not first definitely ascertained on personal notice to them.—In re Taliafero, Case No. 13,736.

A sale by the assignee of property free from incumbrances, without notice to the holder of a mortgage thereon, or of the application for the order of sale, will be sustained, where the mortgagee was present at the sale, and had ample opportunity to apply to the courts for redress, but does not do so, and it appears that the court has retained a sufficient sum from the proceeds of the sale to discharge the mortgage on application.—Giveen v. Smith, Case No. 5,467.

§ 301. Manner and conduct of sale.

The court will authorize a private sale of land, with power to make good title, but will hold the assignee responsible for negligence in not obtaining the best value.—In re Knott, Case No. 7,893.

An assignee need not adjourn a sale to give a bidder time to search the title.—Hills v. Alden, Case No. 6,507.

§ 302. Sales subject to liens.

A lien creditor, after sale of the property in bankruptcy, subject to the lien, may have relief in equity in the district court to enforce the lien against the purchaser.—Bucknam v. Dunn, Case No. 2,096.

§ 303. Sales free from incumbrances.

An assignee in bankruptcy has no power to sell real estate which is subject to liens, free of incumbrances, without a special order of the bankruptcy court.—In re Addison, Case No. 76.

Under Act 1867, § 20, the bankruptcy court may order a sale of the bankrupt's lands free from incumbrances, irrespective of their amount, and the proceeds will stand as a substitute for the lands for the benefit of those holding liens thereon, and the surplus will be held for the benefit of the general creditors.—In re Barrow, Case No. 1,057; In re Salmons, Id. 12,268; Foster v. Ames, Id. 4,965; In re Kahley, Id. 7,593; Giveen v. Smith, Id. 5,467; Anonymous, Id. 456; Davis v. Anderson, Id. 3,623; In re Rhodes, Id. 11,746; In re Dillard, Id. 3,912; In re Kirtland, Id. 7,851; In re National Iron Co., Id. 10,045.

The power of the bankruptcy court to order chattels in the hands of the assignee, upon which there is a mortgage, to be sold free from incumbrances, may be exercised notwithstanding the mortgagee has, by his contract, a right of immediate possession of the goods, and desires to avail himself of that right.—Foster v. Ames, Case No. 4,965.

An order for a sale free from incumbrances will be denied when it does not appear who are the incumbrancers, and whether they have had notice of the application.—Anonymous, Case No. 456.

On review of an order for the sale of the bankrupt's property incumbered by valid liens exceeding its value, such order will not be set aside as void for want of jurisdiction, although it may be vacated as an improper exercise of the court's discretion.—In re Dillard, Case No. 3,912.

Where property is sold free from mortgage lien, the bankruptcy court has no authority to adjust the rights between the trustee under the mortgage and his cestui que trust.—In re Blue Ridge R. Co., Case No. 1,570.

A sale by the assignee free from all liens will not devest liens of judgments not specified in the petition of the assignee or the order of sale.—In re McGilton, Case No. 8,798.

Nor does the presence of the judgment creditor at the sale estop him, where there was no authority to sell clear of his judgment.—In re McGilton, Case No. 8,798.

Where the assignee has sold real estate discharged of liens, he should allow interest on the liens to the date of making up his report of distribution.—In re Devore, Case No. 3,847.

Persons holding mechanics' liens on property of the bankrupt are not bound to renew or continue them to preserve their rights against the proceeds of the property, after a sale by the bankruptcy court, free of liens.—Moran v. Schnugg, Case No. 9,786.

§ 304. Execution of transfers.

A motion of assignee and creditors to order bankrupt to execute release deeds should be made to the judge, and not to the register.—In re A. B., Case No. 3.

Trustees, to whom the assignee is directed to make conveyances under the register's direction, "subject to the approval of the court," have no standing in court until such approval is obtained. —Potter v. Wright, Case No. 11,343.

A special order for leave to execute assignments of certain mortgages sold under order of court will be granted, though the court considers it unnecessary.—In re Franklin Sav. Fund Soc., Case No. 5,059.

§ 305. Confirmation.

An order for the sale of disputed interests of the bankrupt, made by the register, being void, a sale thereunder cannot be affirmed or validated.—Ex parte Bryan, Case No. 2,061.

Where a public sale of the real property has been made by the assignee under order of court, the sale is subject to the approval of the court, which has a discretion to refuse to confirm it for mere inadequacy of price, and it is not necessary that there should be fraud, or such gross inadequacy of price as to be evidence of fraud. —In re O'Fallon, Case No. 10,445.

It is not the practice in the first circuit to confirm sales by assignees, as the rights of third parties are liable to be compromised thereby.—Case of Donnell, Case No. 3,986a.

A simple confirmation by the court is not a ratification of the act of the assignee in excess of his authority, where it does not appear that the excess of power exercised was brought to the knowledge of the court.—In re McGilton, Case No. 8,798.

An ex parte order approving a report of sales, made on the day it is filed, is irregular, and will be set aside at any time during the pendency of the proceedings, if the creditor acts with reasonable diligence after notice.—In re Peabody, Case No. 10,866.

A mere indorsement of the report of sale "Approved," signed by the judge, held not an order of confirmation.—Ex parte Bryan, Case No. 2,061.

§ 306. Vacating and setting aside.

The district court has jurisdiction to summarily set aside a conveyance by the assignee, where made improvidently, irregularly, or without due authority, where rights of third persons have not intervened.—In re Mott, Case No. 9,878.

A sale of a bankrupt's estate made to a solicitor of the assignee, retained generally in the bankruptcy, will be set aside as against public policy.—Citizens' Bank v. Ober, Case No. 2,731.

Where the assignee has not obtained the highest price offered, as required by the order directing the sale, the sale will be set aside, and a resale ordered.—In re Ryan, Case No. 12,182.

A sale of stock held by a creditor as collateral security at two-fifths of its value set aside, and a resale ordered.—In re Bousfield, Case No. 1,702.

Where the bankruptcy court, under a mistake of facts, has ordered a sale of land as being without value, and to clear the title, such court, on petition of the injured owners, will direct a sale to be set aside and the deeds canceled.—In re Conant, Case No. 3,085.

Creditors who have full notice cannot complain, where they failed to exercise proper diligence to protect their interest.—Hills v. Alden, Case No. 6,507.

Where property is unlawfully taken from the possession of a state court receiver, a sale by the assignee will be set aside as against one having notice of the illegality, and the purchase money ordered refunded.—Davis v. Railroad Co., Case No. 3,648.

A petition to have the amount paid on a contract of conveyance refunded will be denied where the contract was not delivered up to be canceled, and it did not appear that it was made in good faith.—In re Mott, Case No. 9,879.

Where a person intends to bid at a cash sale of a bankrupt's estate, he may agree to sell on credit to another, when he has no notice that such person has an intent to bid at the sale or has the means to make his bid good.—Citizens' Bank v. Ober, Case No. 2,731.

A sale at auction by the assignee of a large amount of property will be set aside where the purchase was made by a combination of creditors, and other creditors were ignorant of the fact of sale.—In re Troy Woolen Co., Case No. 14,201.

A creditor who, with full knowledge of the circumstances of a sale, accepts a dividend from the proceeds, and silently allows the purchaser to sell the property, cannot avoid the sale for fraud and collusion.—Hills v. Alden, Case No. 6,507.

On a petition by a subsequent assignee for the purpose of annulling an order of sale made by the register, the same being null and void, the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to so declare it against the purchaser from the former assignee, and persons to whom such purchaser has assigned his interest, if they have been brought in by petition.—Ex parte Bryan, Case No. 2,061.

Creditors, upon whose application and offer to bid a larger sum a sale by the assignee was set aside, held would be required to fulfill their offer.—In re Troy Woolen Co., Case No. 14,201.

§ 307. Expenses of sale.

Creditors who failed to obtain a review of an order directing a private sale of the bankrupt's property cannot object to the incidental expenses attending the sale.—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,424.

§ 308. Rights and remedies of purchasers.

The federal district court for the district of Maine does not confirm sales of assignees in bankruptcy, but leaves the purchaser to establish his title where occasion may require it.—In re Alden, Case No. 151.

A person claiming title under a deed from commissioners under the bankrupt law (Act 1800) must show their authority, and that their proceedings were regular.—Thomas v. Cruttenden, Case No. 13,895.

The bankruptcy court will not interfere to vindicate the title of a purchaser under an assignee's sale.—Briggs v. Stephens, Case No. 1,873.

The sale of a fraudulent judgment at an auction sale of the effects of the bankrupt debtor does not confer upon the innocent purchaser the right to enforce it.—Noyes v. Willard, Case No. 10,374.

The purchaser of property on a sale by the assignee without order of court is entitled to rents and profits from the day of sale, and not from the date of its confirmation.—Hall v. Scovel, Case No. 5,945.

A sale of land free from incumbrances does not pass to the purchaser the bankrupt's right to any portion of the growing crops stipulated to be paid him as rent.—In re Bledsoe, Case No. 1,533.

Where a wife's right of dower is established by the decisions of the court against the assignee, an exception to the confirmation of the sale of certain real estate, by the purchaser, on the ground that such sale was subject to the dower right, will be sustained, when it was stated at the sale that the property would be conveyed free from all incumbrances.—In re Angier, Case No. 388.

Where the homestead of the bankrupt has been sold, pursuant to an order of the bankruptcy court, to satisfy a debt secured upon it by a deed of trust or mortgage, such court has jurisdiction to order the bankrupt to deliver up possession of the property to the purchaser.—In re Betts, Case No. 1,371.

After the lapse of 16 years a sale under a judgment will not be set aside at the instance of the vendee of the assignee in bankruptcy.—Lonergan v. Fenlon, Case No. 8,475.

§ 309. Distribution of proceeds.

Assets from the sale of incumbered land should be applied to extinguish the incumbrances, in order of their priority.—In re Longfellow, Case No. 8,486.

An assignee selling property held by bankrupt under conditional sale must account for the proceeds to the holder of the notes which are secured by such sale.—Allen v. Whittemore, Case No. 241.

A lienor whose lien expires by limitation between the order of sale of realty discharged of liens and the actual sale is still entitled to share in the proceeds of sale.—Davis v. Stitzer, Case No. 3,654.

The circuit court has original jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of persons in a fund received by the assignee from a sale of incumbered property, and held to abide a decision of the court.—Giveen v. Smith, Case No. 5,467.

A judgment creditor in North Carolina in 1867 issued execution, but obtained no levy, because enjoined by the military commandant. Junior judgment creditors afterwards made a levy, and, the debtor having become bankrupt, the land was sold by the assignee free of incumbrances, pursuant to an agreement with the sheriff. Held, that the senior judgment creditor had no lien by which he could claim part of the proceeds.—In re Mebane, Case No. 9,380.

Where lands are sold by the assignee free of incumbrances, pursuant to an agreement with a sheriff who had levied executions thereon, the execution creditors are entitled to payment from the proceeds.—In re Mebane, Case No. 9,380.

Where property subject to a chattel mortgage is sold by the assignee without objection from the mortgagee, he is not entitled to be paid the full amount of his debt out of the estate, as privileged, where there is a deficiency on the sale.—In re Purcell, Case No. 11,469.

Senior mortgagee on sale of property in bankruptcy is entitled to payment of his mortgage in full, together with costs and expenses.—In re Bartenbach, Case No. 1,068.

3. Appointment, and Powers and Duties of Register in General.

§ 310. Appointment.

The books and papers in the register's office must be open to inspection at the local seat of justice.—In re Sherwood, Case No. 12,774.

A register cannot fulfill the duties of his appointment for any county in which the business in bankruptcy must wait upon his convenience, or in which he cannot hold sessions whenever business may require them, or cannot continue them at convenient intervals.—In re Sherwood, Case No. 12,774.

§ 311. Powers.

The register's power is limited only by express exceptions in Act 1867.—In re Bank of North Carolina, Case No. 896.

Wherever it is provided in the bankrupt law that the court may exercise a power, the register to whom a case in bankruptcy has been referred may exercise that power, unless some person having some interest in the estate of the bankrupt shall make some objection to the exercise thereof. Act 1867.—In re Bank of North Carolina, Case No. 896.

The register's acts are the acts of the courts, and he is vested with all the powers of the district courts in relation to all matters about which there is no contest. He is also to give their opinions upon all questions, points, and matters arising before him upon which there is a contest, which opinions will be final unless the parties litigant request the question, point, or matter contested to be certified to the district judge.—In re Gettleston, Case No. 5,373.

He has power to direct a sale of debts and choses in action belonging to the estate if creditors do not object.—In re Bank of North Carolina, Case No. 896.

In a case referred to the register under the rules of the court, he has the powers of the district judge in all uncontested administrative matters.—In re Lanier, Case No. 8,070.

He may, of his own motion, inquire into delays, and indicate steps for a speedy settlement.—In re Bank of North Carolina, Case No. 896.

The discretion of the bankruptcy court to exercise jurisdiction to liquidate liens on bankrupt's realty cannot be delegated to or assumed by the register.—In re Addison, Case No. 76.

Applications by assignees to settle controversies under section 17, Act 1867, or to sell property under section 25, must be made to the court, and not to a register.—In re Graves, Case No. 5,709.

Where the bankrupts surrender their property to the register, who appoints a watchman to guard and keep it, and submits a report of his action to the judge for approval, the latter will order a commissioner to take testimony as to the facts.—In re Bogert, Case No. 1,599.

§ 312. Contempts.

Refusal by a bankrupt to obey the register's order to produce his books and papers is a contempt.—In re Allen, Case No. 208.

A party who seeks to review an act of a register must do so in a respectful manner.—In re Breck, Case No. 1,823.

§ 313. Charges against register.

On trial of charges against a register, the creditor may offer evidence to contradict the register as to facts called out by his examination.—In re Bank of North Carolina, Case No. 896.

§ 314. Adjournment of question into court.

Pending decision on a question adjourned in the court under Act 1867, § 4, it is not necessary to adjourn further proceedings in the matter.—In re Levy, Case No. 8,296.

On the adjournment into court of the question of granting a new trial, the whole case must be brought fully before the court.—In re Marsh, Case No. 9,108.

§ 315. Certifying questions.

In the event of a controversy, the question raised before the register must be certified to the judge for his opinion.—In re Brandt, Case No. 1,812.

A question, in order to be properly certified to the judge, must arise regularly in the course of proceedings before the register, and between the parties having the legal right to raise it.—In re Wright, Case No. 18,069.

Questions which are not upon any point or matter which has arisen in the course of any proceedings before the register cannot be certified for the opinion of the court. (Act 1867, § 6, subd. 1.)—In re Bray, Case No. 1,818; In re Peck, Id. 10,887.

Registers can certify to the court only questions which actually arise, and not those which are likely to arise.—In re Pulver, Case No. 11,466.

Abstract questions which do not arise in the course of the proceedings, certified to the bankruptcy court in behalf of a person who is not a party, will be returned without decision.—In re Haskell, Case No. 6,191.

No opinion will be given on abstract questions certified to the judge by the register.—In re Sturgeon, Case No. 13,564.

4. EXAMINATIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

§ 316. Jurisdiction and power to order.

The register has authority to allow an order for the examination of the bankrupt under Act 1867, § 26.—In re Lanier, Case No. 8,070.

The register has power to make the order, under section 26 (Act 1867), requiring the bankrupt or a witness to appear and be examined.—In re Pioneer Paper Co., Case No. 11,178.

§ 317. Who may require examination.

The debtor, at the instance of creditors who contest an involuntary petition, may be subjected to an examination in relation to his indebtedness to the petitioning creditor.—In re Heusted, Case No. 6,440.

Creditors whose claims have been protested against, if duly proved, will be entitled to an order for the examination of the bankrupt under Act 1867.—In re Belden, Case No. 1,241.

Only a creditor who has proved his claim under Act 1867, § 26, or who has tendered proof of a debt which has not been allowed under section 22 of such act, may apply to examine the bankrupt.—In re Ray, Case No. 11,589.

A bankrupt summoned at the instance of a creditor who has proved his claim cannot refuse to be sworn and examined on the ground that the claim is not valid, unless such invalidity has been proved.—In re Winship, Case No. 17,878.

Where a resolution of composition has been adopted and confirmed by the requisite number of creditors, the right of a creditor to examine the bankrupt under Rev. St. § 5086, is suspended.—In re Tifft, Case No. 14,032.

An execution creditor, who has received no satisfaction for his debt other than the lien acquired by the issue of an execution, and any right or title which said creditor may have under an alleged assignment for the benefit of creditors, and the said liens, if any exist, are not security for the full amount of the debt, and the amount and value are unknown, and who has proved his claim, is entitled to an examination of the debtors in composition proceedings.—In re Schwab, Case No. 12,499.

§ 318. Second examination.

The assignee must see that the examination of the bankrupt is thorough and complete. A second order is not granted except for cause.—In re Gilbert, Case No. 5,410.

The examination of a bankrupt by one creditor, under Act 1867, § 26, does not bar his examination by other creditors, but the bankrupt must be protected from annoyance as far as possible.—In re Adams, Case No. 40.

Where the bankrupts have been examined by the assignees, a new examination will not be ordered on the application of creditors opposing a discharge, unless reason is shown therefor.—In re Isidor, Case No. 7,105.

§ 319. Who may be examined.

The wife of the bankrupt is competent as to facts affecting his estate.—In re Anderson, Case No. 351.

The bankrupt's wife must attend before the register, and submit to an examination, the same as any other witness, under Act 1867, § 26; and she may be punished for contempt, under § 7, if she refuses to answer.—In re Woolford, Case No. 18,029.

A receiver appointed by a state court, against whom a suit by the assignee is pending for the possession of the bankrupt's books, is not privileged to refuse to produce the books and testify before the register. Act 1867, § 26.—In re Hulst, Case No. 6,864.

The assignee may be subpœnaed to testify in the same manner as other witnesses, and the register has authority to make the requisite order.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,988.

The assignee is not subject as of course to examination by any creditor at his pleasure, but will be protected against unnecessary annoyance by refusing an examination, except upon issues regularly referred to the register.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,988.

Any one possessing information may be examined concerning the same matter in reference to which the bankrupt may be examined.—In re Blake, Case No. 1,492.

The bankrupt cannot object to the examination as a witness of one who has been enjoined from disposing of property transferred to him by the bankrupt on petition filed by the assignee, on the ground that the witness has been made a party to the bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Feinberg, Case No. 4,716.

A summons to a witness to attend before a register in bankruptcy may be served outside the district but within 100 miles of the place where the witness is required to attend.—In re Woodward, Case No. 18,000.

§ 320. Time of examination.

The bankrupt cannot be examined as a witness, either to support the petition in bankruptcy or to defeat it. Act 1842.—In re King, Case No. 7,785.

The petitioner for a decree is deemed a bankrupt from the time of his application, and he may be examined before a commissioner prior to the adjudication. Act 1841.—Ex parte Lee, Case No. 8,178.

The examination of the debtor before adjudication may be ordered under act 1867, § 26, though he denies both the indebtedness and the act of bankruptcy.—In re Salkey, Case No. 12,252.

A creditor who has proved his claim may apply for an examination of the bankrupt before the first meeting of creditors. Act 1867.—In re Patterson, Case No. 10,814.

An order for examination may be granted a creditor (Act 1867, § 26), notwithstanding the election of a trustee and committee of creditors under § 43.—In re Cooke, Case No. 3,168.

A witness may be examined prior to the examination of the bankrupt, and though there be no question in controversy to be settled by testimony. Act 1867, § 26.—In re Fredenberg, Case No. 5,075.

The time for an examination of a bankrupt does not expire with the making of the application for his discharge.—In re Solis, Case No. 13,165.

An order for an examination of the bankrupt's wife will be refused where applied for by the assignee after neglecting to make his report on the return day of the order to show cause why a discharge should not be granted, where it appears that such application was not made in good faith, but merely for the purpose of delay.—In re Selig, Case No. 12,641.

The fact that the bankrupt has received his discharge more than two years before is not a good objection to his being examined in accordance with the requirements of Act 1867, § 26.—In re Heath, Case No. 6,304. CONTRA, see In re Witkowski, Case No. 17,920. See, also, In re Jones, Case No. 7,449.

A bankrupt can be examined more than two years after his discharge, in aid of any prosecution to be commenced by the assignee against a third person, but not for the purpose of instituting or aiding a proceeding to vacate the discharge, or extorting a settlement of stale claims against the bankrupt.—In re Dole, Case No. 3,965.

§ 321. Place of examination.

If a nonresident creditor, whose claim is contested, cannot personally appear, without hardship, an order will be made for his examination before a register of the district in which he resides.—In re Kyler, Case No. 7,956.

§ 322. Application.

The assignee's application for examination of the bankrupt, under Act 1867, § 26, need not be verified by affidavit, or specify the reasons therefor, or the matters to be inquired into.—In re Lanier, Case No. 8,070.

Application by a creditor to a register for an order for examination of the bankrupt must be on affidavit or verified petition showing cause.—In re Adams, Case No. 39.

Third persons are required to submit to examination only on cause shown by affidavit.—In re Gilbert, Case No. 5,410.

After an examination pursuant to an order has been commenced, the order will not be vacated, on motion of the bankrupt, because not founded on an affidavit.—In re McBrien, Case No. 8,665.

§ 323. Form and sufficiency of order.

Orders for examination are summonses under Act 1867, § 26, and may be issued by blank forms, signed by the clerk.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,266.

An order made by the register for the examination of a bankrupt, reciting that it was made upon the application of F. & Co., parties claiming to be interested in the estate, "and who have duly proved their debt herein," is in proper form. Such order need not recite that it was made upon a verified application in writing.—In re Vetterlein, Case No. 16,926.

§ 324. Notice of examination.

No notice need be given the bankrupt of the examination of a witness called by the assignee.—In re Levy, Case No. 8,295.

§ 325. Intervention.

Where creditors conducting an examination of a debtor in apparently earnest opposition to a composition suddenly cease without apparent cause, the register may allow another creditor to continue the examination.—In re Vanderhoef, Case No. 16,840.

Creditors cannot interpose to prevent the examination of the bankrupt summoned at the instance of another creditor.—In re Winship, Case No. 17,878.

On the examination of a witness respecting the bankrupt's estate on the application of a creditor, other creditors have no right to intervene and object to questions asked.—In re Stuyvesant Bank, Case No. 13,582.

A creditor is not entitled to interfere or be represented by counsel, not being a "party" to the proceeding.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,080.

§ 326. Matters subject to inquiry—In general.

The bankrupt or witness may be examined fully, substantially as under a reference upon a creditors' bill, or in proceedings supplementary to execution.—In re Pioneer Paper Co., Case No. 11,178.

On an examination of the bankrupt any questions are proper which elicit an answer tending to show an interest of the bankrupt in property at the time the petition was filed.—In re Carson, Case No. 2,461.

A bankrupt must answer questions put to him in relation to property in which it is shown that he might possibly have an interest.—In re Bonesteel, Case No. 1,628.

A bankrupt cannot be examined as to property acquired or business done after the date of filing his petition, where he states that the same has no connection with or reference to his estate or business prior to that date.—In re Rosenfield, Case No. 12,059.

Upon the examination of the bankrupt, he may be compelled to answer questions relating to matters transpiring prior to the time when the creditor's debt was contracted.—In re Craig, Case No. 3,322.

It is the duty of the bankrupt to disclose whatever the parties interested may be concerned to know regarding his debts, business, or estate.—In re Cooke, Case No. 3,168.

On the examination of the bankrupt, a creditor who has filed proof of a debt, claiming that it was contracted by fraud, cannot inquire as to the facts constituting the fraud. Act 1867, § 33.—In re Wright, Case No. 18,065.

The question whether a debt is fraudulently contracted, and therefore not affected by a discharge, can only be raised and determined in a suit to collect the debt in which the discharge is set up as a bar.—In re Wright, Case No. 18,065.

A bankrupt having testified that he is not the owner of certain property, questions relating to the identity of the owner, duration, extent, and character of the ownership are irrelevant.—In re Van Tuyl, Case No. 16,880.

It is proper upon an examination by the assignee to ask the bankrupt questions tending to show that, within a short time after filing his petition, he had money in his possession not acquired by the transaction of any business subsequent to such filing.—In re McBrien, Case No. 8,666.

The bankrupt may be examined to show that the debt of the examining creditor was fraudulently contracted.—In re Koch, Case No. 7,916.

A witness cannot rightfully object to being sworn or refuse to be examined upon any matters which are within the subjects mentioned in Act 1867, § 26.—In re Blake, Case No. 1,492.

Upon an examination of a witness respecting the estate of the bankrupt, upon the application of a creditor, he may be compelled to answer questions respecting his transactions with the bankrupt.—In re Stuyvesant Bank, Case No. 13,582.

A witness must answer all proper questions relating to his trade and dealings with the bankrupt prior to bankruptcy, and, if necessary, produce any book containing the transactions with the bankrupt.—In re Earle, Case No. 4,244.

The bankruptcy court cannot question the validity of a judgment of a state court of competent jurisdiction, and a judgment creditor may refuse to be examined in relation to a question of usury in a debt for which the judgment was rendered.—McKinsey v. Harding, Case No. 8,866.

A witness cannot refuse to answer questions concerning his dealings, etc., with the bankrupt on an examination in bankruptcy, on the ground that his answer may furnish evidence against him in a civil case, by the assignee.—In re Fay, Case No. 4,708.

A witness examined before a commissioner in bankruptcy proceedings cannot refuse to answer a question which may subject him to no other injury than one of a civil nature.—In re Danforth, Case No. 3,560.

A witness who purchased claims against the estate, being examined before a register as to where he obtained the money paid therefor, and having answered that it did not come from the bankrupts, is bound, on pain of contempt, to state where he did obtain it.—In re Lathrop, Case No. 8,106.

A witness cannot be compelled to answer as to the original consideration for a negotiable bond issued by the bankrupt, where the creditor is a bona fide holder for value.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,229.

The bankrupt's wife may be required to testify to all facts and transactions to which she was either a party or a witness, but not to mere confessions or admissions of her husband concerning his dealings with third persons.—In re Gilbert, Case No. 5,410.

Questions asked the bankrupt's wife as to the incumbrances upon her property which she apparently held for the benefit of her husband, are pertinent and proper.—In re Craig, Cases Nos. 3,323, 3,324.

Questions relating to the amount of and derivation of the property of the bankrupt's wife, which she apparently held for her husband, are pertinent and proper.—In re Craig, Cases Nos. 3,323, 3,324.

Where the wife of a member of a bankrupt firm claims certain estate standing in her name, the bankrupt may be examined as to what property the wife owns, and the amount of money that she had at any time.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,805.

The assignee may inquire into all the facts and circumstances of the transaction of the purchase of a house by the bankrupt, where the title is taken in the wife's name.—In re Schonberg, Case No. 12,477.

§ 327. —— Incriminating matters.

The bankrupt may decline to answer, if the answer would incriminate himself.—In re Koch, Case No. 7,916.

The bankrupt may decline to answer a question as to the disposal of his property which is broad enough to cover the time subsequent to the filing of the petition, the answer to which might subject him to criminal punishment. Act 1867, § 44.—In re Patterson, Case No. 10,816.

A bankrupt cannot refuse to answer questions as to his having lost money at gaming on the ground that they would criminate or degrade him.—In re Richards, Case No. 11,769.

A witness need not answer a question which does not relate to any matter of fact in issue, or to any matter contained in his direct testimony, where a truthful answer would tend to degrade him.—In re Lewis, Case No. 8,312.

The keeper of a gambling house, in which the bankrupt was alleged to have lost a large sum of money, is privileged from testifying as to his residence at the time the money was alleged to have been lost by the bankrupt, on the ground that such testimony would tend to criminate him.—In re Graham, Case No. 5,659.

One who appeared as counsel in an equity suit brought by the assignee against the bankrupts and others, may be compelled to testify as a witness for the creditors in proceedings in opposition to the discharge.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,232.

A witness who claims to have acted as counsel for a bankrupt cannot, on that ground, refuse to be sworn as a witness in the bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Woodward, Case No. 17,999.

Since the passage of Act Feb. 25, 1868, the bankrupt cannot refuse to testify on the ground that his answer might criminate himself; but the privilege of communication between client and solicitor is still protected.—In re Krueger, Case No. 7,942.

The attorney of the bankrupt cannot add to his oath as a witness a reservation as to privileged communications.—In re Adams, Case No. 42.

Counsel for bankrupt cannot be required to disclose information as to affairs of bankrupt obtained from him or persons referred to by him.—In re Aspinwall, Case No. 591.

Counsel for bankrupt, when examined as a witness, is required to answer all questions, except those which require him to disclose information as to the affairs of the bankrupt which he received, as such counsel, from the bankrupt, or from persons to whom he was referred by the bankrupt for the purpose of obtaining information.—In re Aspinwall, Case No. 591.

Where, in a bankruptcy proceeding, an attorney is called as a witness, he is not entitled to reserve in the oath which he takes the right to refuse to answer any question on the ground of privilege, as the attorney of the bankrupt.—In re Adams, Case No. 42.

§ 329. —— Powers of register.

The register will pass upon questions objected to, and, exceptions being taken, will, at the close of the testimony, entertain motions to strike out answers or admit excluded questions, and certify the questions to the court.—In re Levy, Case No. 8,298; In re Lyon, Id. 8,643.

A register conducting an examination should declare his opinion upon questions arising thereon, and, on exceptions, should certify the questions to the court.—In re Reakirt, Case No. 11,614.

The register has no power to decide upon the competency and materiality or relevancy of any question, and when required he must take and report the testimony which he deems inadmissible.—In re Levy, Case No. 8,296; In re Patterson, Id. 10,818; In re Koch, Id. 7,916; In re Rosenfield, Id. 12,059; In re Bond, Id. 1,618.

The register has no power to limit in advance the time for the conclusion of the examination of the bankrupt.—In re Tift, Case No. 14,036.

The register cannot fix a time at which an examination of the bankrupt shall terminate or limit the inquiries so long as they are relevant.—In re Waitzfelder, Case No. 17,047.

The register may refuse to suspend the examination which is pending until the questions which have arisen in the proceeding, and have been certified to the judge for decision, have been decided, where no creditor at that time is entitled to priority.—In re Tifft, Case No. 14,030.

Where an attorney appears to examine the bankrupt on behalf of a creditor, and it appears that his power of attorney has been revoked, it is not error for the register to refuse the attorney the right to examine the bankrupt as to the circumstances under which the revocation of his power of attorney had been obtained.—In re Tifft, Case No. 14,030.

A person summoned as a witness in an examination before the register is not entitled to be attended by counsel.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,080; In re Feeny, Id. 4,715; In re Fredenberg, Id. 5,075; In re Schonberg, Id. 12,477; In re Stuyvesant Bank, Id. 13,582.

The bankrupt's attorney may attend the examination, and object to improper questions put to the bankrupt, but the latter has no right, without consent of the magistrate, to consult his attorney before answering.—In re Tanner, Case No. 13,745.

The register has discretionary power to allow a bankrupt under examination to consult with his counsel, and the question whether the bankrupt should be allowed to consult, upon his examination, must be determined by the register, according to the circumstances of each particular case.—In re Patterson, Id. 10,815; In re Collins, Id. 3,008; In re Judson, Id. 7,562; In re Lord, Id. 8,502.

§ 331. Certifying questions to court.

The certificate of a register on certifying a question put to the bankrupt must show the preceding question where necessary for a decision by the court.—In re Patterson, Case No. 10,820.

The question whether an examination is so far completed as to be admissible in evidence is not one which can properly be certified to the court for decision by the register taking the examination.—In re Noyes, Case No. 10,370.

The only parties to bankrupt proceedings are the bankrupt and the creditors, and a witness cannot take the opinion of the judge on a certificate by the register.—In re Fredenberg, Case No. 5,075.

A certificate by a register stating a question objected to on an examination, and that he excluded the question, is not a "special case," under Act 1867, § 6.—In re Levy, Case No. 8,296.

§ 332. Adjournment into court.

The objection of the bankrupt to the granting of an order for examination before the first meeting raises an issue of law which the register must adjourn into court. (Act 1867, § 4).—In re Patterson, Case No. 10,814.

But the argument of the question before the register waives the right to such adjournment, and it cannot be made after decision by the register.—In re Patterson, Case No. 10,814.

A question put to a bankrupt or other witness on an examination before a register, even though objected to in proper form, does not raise an issue of law which can be adjourned into court. Act 1867, § 4.—In re Levy, Case No. 8,296.

§ 333. Effect of failure to appear or answer interrogatories.

The proper practice, where a bankrupt's wife fails to appear before the register in bankruptcy, upon the usual order and subpœna to appear and testify, is to obtain an order to show cause why an attachment should not issue against her for contempt.—In re Bellis, Case No. 1,276.

The bankrupt cannot be attached for contempt for the disobedience of an order for examination served on him without the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.—In re Hodges, Case No. 6,562.

The bankrupt will not be adjudged in contempt for disobeying an order for examination under Act 1867, § 26, issued after his discharge was granted, where the discharge had not been set aside.—In re Jones, Case No. 7,449.

The circuit court in a state to which a commission issued by a bankrupt court in another state is sent may compel a witness to testify, or punish for a refusal.—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,423.

A nonresident creditor becomes subject to the jurisdiction by proving his debt, and is bound to obey an order to appear for examination touching the same, and in case of disobedience his claim may be stricken out.—In re Kyler, Case No. 7,956.

A bankrupt cannot refuse to be sworn merely by reason of claiming that he has an offset which extinguishes the debt of the creditor at whose instance the order for examination was issued, and that he desires to file a petition for re-examination of the claim.—In re Kingsley, Case No. 7,818.

The bankrupt will be compelled by the court to answer all proper questions propounded.—In re Holt, Case No. 6,646.

Where the bankrupt declines, under the advice of counsel, to answer a question, the creditor may apply to the district judge to punish him for contempt.—In re Rosenfield, Case No. 12,059.

On an application for attachment of witnesses for contempt in not making answers on examination under a commission, the attachment will be refused, where no written interrogatories accompanied the commission, and no information is furnished as to the particular inquiry.—In re Glaser, Case No. 5,476.

Failure of a bankrupt to attend on the adjourned day of his examination cannot be punished as a contempt.—In re Carpenter, Case No. 2,427.

An excuse of a bankrupt for failure to attend an adjourned meeting in composition proceedings, that he had already been subjected to an exhaustive examination, and that his business required his constant attendance, is sufficient to terminate the bankrupt's examination, so far as that meeting is concerned, where the creditors, by a vote more than sufficient to pass the resolution of composition, resolve that the cause assigned was satisfactory to the meeting.—In re Tifft, Case No. 14,029.

A bankrupt who refuses to be sworn and examined under the advice of counsel will not be punished for contempt or amerced in costs other than those of the certificate.—In re Winship, Case No. 17,878.

It is not a sufficient excuse for not answering a question put to the bankrupt that he has already replied to it at a former examination, held at the instance of some other creditor or the assignee.—In re Vogel, Case No. 16,984.

§ 334. Production of books and papers.

On the application of a creditor who asserts that his debt has been created in a fiduciary capacity the court will direct the debtor to produce, even before time for a decree, all books and papers having relation to the debt.—In re Parker, Case No. 10,722.

§ 335. Right to witness fees.

The wife of a bankrupt is not bound to appear and be examined unless she is paid the usual and proper witness fees.—In re Van Tuyl, Case No. 16,881.

A bankrupt is bound to appear and submit to an examination when ordered, without being paid witness' fees.—In re O'Kell, Case No. 10,474.

§ 336. Conduct of examination in general.

Where the creditor fails to appear on the day appointed for the examination of the bankrupt, it may be adjourned.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,942.

The examining party has the right to have the examination reduced to writing and sworn to and subscribed by the witness.—In re Jackson, Case No. 7,128.

The bankrupt cannot require the register to have his testimony taken down in longhand when the assignee furnishes a stenographer.—In re Frey, Case No. 5,114.

Where an examination is abruptly terminated by the failure of the assignee's counsel to appear, and an order for a new examination is taken, the bankrupt cannot refuse to testify.—In re Van Tuyl, Case No. 16,881.

The examination of a witness called by the assignee may be proceeded with, without reference to the examination of the bankrupt which is being had on behalf of the creditors.—In re Levy, Case No. 8,295.

The proceedings are under the control of the register, and should proceed without unreasonable delay.—In re Hyman, Case No. 6,984.

The bankrupt is to be examined and cross-examined like any other witness.—In re Levy, Case No. 8,296.

The bankrupt cannot be cross-examined by his counsel on matters opened by the examination, but may, on the advice of counsel, explain and correct his statement (Act 1841).—In re Bragg, Case No. 1,799.

The bankrupt may be cross-examined by his own counsel (Act 1841).—In re Leachman, Case No. 8,157.

A bankrupt, on examination by a creditor, is entitled to explain any matters as to which he has been examined, and to this end may be questioned by his counsel. He is not bound to pay the register's fees for such testimony.—In re Noyes, Case No. 10,370.

A general order requiring meetings to be held before a register held prospective in its operation, and not to affect a pending meeting presided over by the deputy clerk.—In re Holmes, Case No. 6,632.

The bankrupt's examination, taken before a master in chancery, may be admitted in evidence, so far as it elucidates his affairs.—In re Bragg, Case No. 1,799.

(E) ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST ASSIGNEE.

See, also, ante, §§ 208–213.

§ 337. Jurisdiction—District court.

The district courts have original jurisdiction of all cases and controversies between third persons and an assignee in bankruptcy, as such.—Bachman v. Packard, Case No. 709.

The district court has full power, as a court of equity, to settle all controversies between the bankrupt and his creditors.—Fowler v. Dillon, Case No. 5,000.

The district court has exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies between the assignee and the bankrupt, depending on his relation as such.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,434.

District courts have jurisdiction, under Rev. St. § 4979, of a suit by or against an assignee, whenever he is a necessary and proper party, although other persons may be joined.—Olney v. Tanner, Case No. 10,506.

The federal district courts have jurisdiction of a suit to set aside a contract upon grounds created by the bankrupt law, and will entertain jurisdiction to prevent their officers being placed in unreasonable jeopardy.—Main v. Glen, Case No. 8,973.

The district court has jurisdiction of an action by an assignee to recover a balance due from a principal to the bankrupt as factor at the time of the presentation of his petition in bankruptcy.—Kelly v. Smith, Case No. 7,675.

The district court has jurisdiction, under Rev. St. § 4970, of a suit by creditors against the assignee of a bankrupt member of a firm to procure an adjudication of their debts and their right of priority as against individual creditors, and may give complete relief therein.—Swann v. Sanborn, Case No. 13,675.

The district court has jurisdiction of a controversy as to the ownership of a fund in the hands or under the control of the assignee, without regard to the residence of the parties in interest.—In re Sabin, Case No. 12,195.

Where the bankrupts collect from their undertenants rent accruing before the bankruptcy, and secured by a lien upon crops, the district court has jurisdiction of a petition filed by the landlord to recover such fund.—Wylie v. Smith, Case No. 18,110.

§ 338. —— Circuit courts.

The circuit court has jurisdiction, concurrent with the district court, of all cases arising under Act 1841.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,885.

The circuit courts have jurisdiction in all cases in which suit is brought by or against the assignees, and he cannot be compelled to go into the state courts to assert his right as such.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,885.

The circuit courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of all actions by an assignee against persons claiming an adverse interest in the estate of a bankrupt.—Hallack v. Tritch, Case No. 5,956.

The circuit court will exercise jurisdiction over distinct interests and parties, on allegations of fraud, in order to adjust liens and make distribution of assets.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

The federal circuit court has jurisdiction of an action to set aside a general assignment by the bankrupt, and distribute the property among the lien and general creditors.—McLean v. Meline, Case No. 8,890.

The assignee may sue in the circuit court on a note of which the bankrupt is payee (Act 1841).—Pritchard v. Chandler, Case No. 11,436.

The circuit court has jurisdiction to determine the validity of conveyances alleged to be in fraud of the bankrupt act.—Giveen v. Smith, Case No. 5,467.

The concurrent jurisdiction conferred upon the federal circuit court and the federal district court by Act 1867, § 2, is limited to cases where there is a controversy concerning the right to, or some interest in, some specific thing between the assignee and a third person, and does not include an action to collect a simple debt.—Bachman v. Packard, Case No. 709.

The circuit court has not jurisdiction of suits brought by the assignee of the bankrupt, simply to collect the assets.—Woods v. Forsyth, Case No. 17,992; Same v. Jackson Iron Mfg. Co., Id. 17,993.

Suits may be brought by an assignee in bankruptcy in the federal circuit courts to collect assets due the estate, without reference to amount or value in controversy.—Payson v. Coffin, Case No. 10,858.

A bill will lie in the circuit court to enjoin enforcement of a fraudulent judgment obtained by an assignee in bankruptcy against an alleged debtor of the bankrupt, though all parties are citizens of the same state.—Noyes v. Willard, Case No. 10,374.

Suits by an assignee in bankruptcy are excepted from the general rule that the federal courts have no jurisdiction of controversies between citizens of the same states, and this exception includes a suit by such assignee against a person not a party to the proceedings in bankruptcy.—Atkinson v. Purdy, Case No. 616.

The circuit court has no jurisdiction of a bill by the assignee of a bankrupt firm against a member thereof and his assignee, where both are citizens of the same state, to require such assignee to pay complainant a surplus after individual creditors are satisfied. Act 1867, § 2.—Stevens v. Appleton, Case No. 13,394.

The federal circuit court has jurisdiction of a bill filed by an assignee in bankruptcy in the nature of a creditors' bill to reach assets in the hands of third parties, where the amount in dispute exceeds $500, and the controversy is between citizens of the state where it was brought and the citizens of another state.—Spaulding v. McGovern, Case No. 13,217.

The circuit court will entertain a bill by an assignee against several mortgagors and other lienholders to ascertain the amounts due, and sell all the property free from incumbrances.—Sutherland v. Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railroad & Iron Co., Case No. 13,643.

The federal circuit court has jurisdiction of a bill by an assignee to recover money or property of the bankrupt preferentially or fraudulently conveyed.—Flanders v. Abbey, Case No. 4,851.

The federal circuit court has full jurisdiction over a bill brought to set aside a transaction impeached as fraudulent under Act 1867, § 35, to declare the same void, and to enjoin the parties temporarily and perpetually from pursuing proceedings touching the same transaction in state courts.—Little v. Alexander, Case No. 8,393.

The action given to the assignee by Act 1867, § 35 (14 Stat. 534), to recover property, or the value thereof, transferred contrary to such section, is within the jurisdiction conferred upon the circuit court by section 2 of said act prior to the amendment of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat. 178).—Brooke v. McCraken, Case No. 1,932.

A suit by an assignee to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, after the discharge, of property concealed prior thereto, is not a suit to annul the discharge, and may therefore be brought in the circuit court.—Nicholas v. Murray, Case No. 10,223.

§ 339. —— Dependent on locality.

An action by an assignee to recover a sum of money due the bankrupt, under a written contract, is not local.—Babbitt v. Burgess, Case No. 693.

The district court of the United States, in a district other than that in which the bankruptcy proceedings are pending, has no jurisdiction of a suit by an assignee to recover assets of the bankrupt or moneys paid in violation of the bankruptcy acts.—Shearman v. Bingham, Case No. 12,733; Jobbins v. Montague, Id. 7,330; Lamb v. Damron, Id. 8,014. CONTRA, see Moore v. Jones, Case No. 9,768; Sherman v. Bingham, Id. 12,762; Goodall v. Tuttle, Id. 5,533.

The circuit court has jurisdiction of an action against a resident of the district, brought by an assignee appointed in another state to recover a preference or to collect assets.—Hunt v. Jackson, Case No. 6,893; Post v. Rouse, Id. 11,300; Gindrat v. Dane, Id. 5,455. CONTRA, see Lathrop v. Drake, Case No. 8,109.

The circuit court has jurisdiction of a common-law or equity suit by an assignee in bankruptcy appointed in another district, in a case of diverse citizenship, where the amount in dispute exceeds $500.—Payson v. Dietz, Case No. 10,861.

Under Act 1867, § 2, a circuit court has jurisdiction of a cross bill, filed by an assignee in bankruptcy in a district other than that in which the decree in bankruptcy was made, to redeem mortgaged property in which the complainant has the legal title to the equity of redemption.—Barnard v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co., Case No. 1,003.

The jurisdiction acquired by a circuit court sitting in equity, by virtue of the character of the complainant as assignee in bankruptcy, is not lost merely because the complainant has parted with all his title pendente lite; and the court also has jurisdiction of a cross bill filed by a new defendant, irrespective of his residence.—Barnard v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co., Case No. 1,003.

Where the assignee brings an action in a district other than that where the proceedings are pending, an appearance and answer by defendant does not preclude him from raising the question of jurisdiction.—Jobbins v. Montague, Case No. 7,330.

§ 340. —— State courts.

It seems that state courts are not deprived of jurisdiction in ordinary common-law and equity suits simply because brought by an assignee in bankruptcy.—Mitchell v. Great Works Mill. & Mfg. Co., Case No. 9,662.

The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court of a suit brought by the assignee to recover property fraudulently mortgaged or conveyed is not exclusive of the state courts, and the court which first obtains jurisdiction will have the right to decide the matter.—Yeadon v. Planters' & Mechanics' Bank, Case No. 18,130.

Where the rights of assignees are not regarded in the state court, their remedy is under section 25 of the judiciary act.—Johnson v. Bishop, Case No. 7,373.

No suit by an assignee for a sum exceeding $500 can be prosecuted in a state court under Act June 22, 1874, § 2.—Hallack v. Tritch, Case No. 5,956.

The assignee may sue in a state court to recover back money paid by the bankrupt in violation of Act 1867, § 39, and the bankruptcy court will not restrain such suit upon petition of the defendant therein.—In re Central Bank, Case No. 2,547.

A judgment in a state court against an assignee in bankruptcy, directing payment out of the assets in the assignee's hands, does not, alone, furnish legal grounds to the district court, as a court of bankruptcy, for directing payment by the assignee.—In re Central Bank of Brooklyn, Case No. 2,549.

An agreement between the bankrupt and a part of his judgment creditors cannot bind his estate, unless signed by the assignee. An assignee has no power to give consent to a decree of the state court, rendered in accordance with the terms of a written agreement, and the bankruptcy laws do not give him power to become defendant to a suit in a state court commenced after the adjudication.—In re Anderson, Case No. 351.

§ 341. —— Service of process.

A subpœna to appear and answer in a suit in equity brought by an assignee to restrain the foreclosure of a mortgage is an original process in a civil suit, within the judiciary act of 1789 (section 11), and cannot be served on the defendant in another district, as no authority for such service appears in Act 1867.—Jobbins v. Montague, Case No. 7,329.

The district court in equity has no jurisdiction over a citizen of another state, neither found within nor having property within the district, to relieve from a preference in fraud of the bankrupt act at the suit of an assignee in bankruptcy appointed in the district.—Paine v. Caldwell, Case No. 10,674.

The recovery of a judgment in the state court, and its collection in fraud of the bankrupt act, will not give the federal district court jurisdiction upon service of process upon the attorney in the suit.—Paine v. Caldwell, Case No. 10,674.

§ 342. Right of action by assignee—In general.

The assignee is not entitled to any greater rights in respect to recovering back money or other property, under section 39, than under section 35, Act 1867. The two sections are to be construed together.—Hubbard v. Allaire Works, Case No. 6,814.

The assignee may impeach a transfer by the bankrupt, though it may be held valid and binding as against the bankrupt.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,435; Allen v. Massey, Id. 231; In re Collins, Id. 3,007, affirming Case No. 3,004.

Where a preference is obtained through a judgment and a levy, an assignee may proceed by a suit in equity to set aside the lien, and may make the sheriff, as well as the creditor, a party, if the proceeds of the execution be still in the hands of the sheriff. Case No. 17,200 reversed.—Warren v. Tenth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,202.

A suit in equity cannot be maintained by an assignee to recover real estate, purchased by the defendant in good faith, from the bankrupt's assignees in insolvency, appointed several years before under the state law, for a nominal consideration, where it has no market value, within a month before proceedings in bankruptcy, although the property has since increased in value.—Goldsmith v. Hapgood, Case No. 5,522.

A bill in equity will lie by the assignee to recover shares of stock purchased by a third person with funds of the bankrupt, fraudulently put into his hands.—Hyde v. Cohen, Case No. 6,967.

A bankrupt in possession of realty at the time of its sale by the assignee, who thereafter agreed with the purchaser to vacate on a certain day, holds as tenant under the purchaser, and a petition will not lie by the assignee for delivery of possession.—In re Hale, Case No. 5,912.

The assignee may file a bill against all incumbrancers to ascertain the validity, priority, and amount of incumbrances.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,886; Id. 8,888.

In equity, an assignee cannot maintain a bill against a mortgagee of the chattels of the bankrupt to avoid the mortgage as a fraudulent preference, after having sold the chattels without order of court for the sale of incumbered property, under Act 1867, § 25, when the mortgagee, by answer, repudiates all claim to the funds received from the sale, and acquits the assignee from all liability.—Giveen v. Smith, Case No. 5,466.

A suit by the assignee to set aside certain transfers as in fraud of Act 1867 is maintainable, notwithstanding the property is in his possession after seizure by the marshal.—Kellogg v. Russell, Case No. 7,666.

A bill by the assignee for an accounting in respect to goods purchased by defendants from the bankrupt's employés, in pursuance of an alleged fraudulent scheme, is not maintainable, where the assignee shows no injury to himself by the fraud, and where it is shown that the goods have been seized by the marshal under a provisional warrant, and turned over to the assignee, whose possession of the goods for the benefit of the estate is undisputed.—Smith v. Claflin, Case No. 13,026.

A creditor receiving the proceeds of a sale on attachment, after proceedings in bankruptcy, may be compelled to pay the amount to the assignee, by an action in the federal court.—Bradley v. Frost, Case No. 1,780.

A conveyance by the bankrupt alleged to be fraudulent as to creditors will not be set aside at suit of the assignee, when there are no provable debts, as the estate, after satisfying the claims against it, belongs to the bankrupt.—Nicholas v. Murray, Case No. 10,223.

The clauses in Act 1867 which give the power to an assignee to sue for and recover the amount of unlawful preferences are not subject to the rule of construction applied in cases of repeal of penal statutes. Case No. 16,849 affirmed.—Tinker v. Van Dyke, Case No. 14,058.

A transferee of stock in a bankrupt company is liable to the assignee in bankruptcy in respect to such stock; but, where the transfer was not accepted by the transferee, the transferror alone is liable.—Wilbur v. Stockholders, Case No. 17,636.

The word "nonassessable," written across the face of a stock certificate, is not binding as against the assignee in bankruptcy of the company.—Upton v. Burnham, Case No. 16,799.

§ 343. —— As representing creditors.

The assignee of a bankrupt corporation represents both the interests of the creditors and of the bankrupt, and as against stockholders he can recover for unpaid subscriptions, so far as the question touches on the validity of the stock, as if solely acting in the interests of creditors.—Upton v. Jackson, Case No. 16,802.

The assignee represents the whole body of creditors, and he may sue to set aside a transfer, or to recover back property, or to contest the validity of any security given contrary to the bankruptcy act.—Everett v. Stone, Case No. 4,577; Bradshaw v. Klein, Id. 1,790; In re Metzger, Id. 9,510; In re Leland, Id. 8,230.

To entitle the assignee to sue in such cases, it is not necessary that any creditor have a specific lien on the property conveyed.—Barker v. Barker's Assignee, Case No. 986; Beecher v. Clark, Id. 1,223; In re Duncan, Id. 4,131.

As the assignee represents all the creditors, he may assert any right which they might assert as to conveyances fraudulent or otherwise invalid as to them under the general or local law, and he may sue in every case where they might have sued had the debtor not become bankrupt.—Bradshaw v. Klein, Case No. 1,790; Moore v. Young, Id. 9,782; Pratt v. Curtis, Id. 11,375; Verselius v. Verselius, Id. 16,925; Mitchell v. McKibbin, Id. 9,666; In re Leland, Id. 8,234; In re Werner, Id. 17,416.

When a conveyance is attacked for fraud, outside the bankrupt act, the assignee represents the rights of general creditors, and may for such fraud avoid the instrument, though he has no specific lien on the property thereby conveyed.—Cragin v. Carmichael, Case No. 3,319.

The assignee is the proper party plaintiff to impeach a deed given by the bankrupt, though only one class of creditors is interested to set it aside.—Pratt v. Curtis, Case No. 11,375.

The assignee of a bankrupt corporation does not represent its creditors in respect to a claim against an officer under a statute making him personally liable for the corporate debt.—Bristol v. Sanford, Case No. 1,893.

§ 344. —— As representing the bankrupt.

The assignee may maintain an action in a court of justice for the recovery of the property of the bankrupt.—Johnson v. Bishop, Case No. 7,373.

An assignee in bankruptcy may sue on a written contract entered into between the bankrupt and the defendant, to recover a debt alleged to be due the bankrupt thereunder.—Babbitt v. Burgess, Case No. 693.

The assignee of a corporation for the purposes of a suit to recover back a dividend wrongfully declared stands precisely in the position of the corporation.—Main v. Mills, Case No. 8,974.

A decree in mortgage foreclosure made after the filing of the petition in bankruptcy in a suit commenced before such filing will bar the right of the assignee of the mortgagor to raise the question of usury.—Cutter v. Dingee, Case No. 3,518.

The assignee in bankruptcy, of one of two joint makers of a note and mortgage, cannot (in Wisconsin) maintain a petition to declare the securities void for usury.—Bromley v. Smith, Case No. 1,922.

Action by assignee to recover usury, see "Banks and Banking," § 20.

§ 345. —— Foreign assignee.

Where an assignment, by an operation of law, is not sufficient to enable the assignee to maintain an action in his own name in the courts of a certain state, the assignee of the bankrupt in England cannot maintain an action at law in his own name against the debtor of a bankrupt in such state, but it must be brought in the name of the bankrupt.—Blane v. Drummond, Case No. 1,531.

The assignees of a British bankrupt cannot maintain a suit in their own names, in Maryland, against a debtor of the bankrupt.—Perry v. Barry, Case No. 11,000.

§ 346. —— In partnership cases.

The assignee of a firm may sue to recover property standing in the name of one of the partners, purchased with firm funds, and conveyed by him in fraud of Act 1867.—Patrick v. Central Bank, Case No. 10,803.

The assignee in bankruptcy of one partner cannot set aside a conveyance made by both partners with intent to prefer a joint creditor, where the other partner does not also become bankrupt within the time limited by Act 1867.—Forsaith v. Merritt, Case No. 4,946.

Property transferred by an insolvent partnership to a partnership creditor, by way of preference or otherwise, where the firm has never been declared bankrupt, cannot be recovered by an assignee of the surviving partners after the death of one of them.—Withrow v. Fowler, Case No. 17,919.

The assignee may recover at law or in equity, as the nature of the case requires, from a solvent partner what is due from him by the articles of copartnership.—Wilkins v. Davis, Case No. 17,664.

Where a partner in an insolvent firm executes a composition deed with the firm creditors, referring to them as "his creditors," and, in pursuance thereof, signs compromise notes in the firm name, and makes payments from the firm's funds in fraud of the rights of such creditors, and is afterwards declared a bankrupt, his assignee can, in the interest of the firm creditors, recover the sums so paid in fraud of their rights.—Bean v. Amsinck, Case No. 1,167.

On the bankruptcy of the general partner in a limited partnership, where, under the local law, the special partner is liable for all sums drawn out by him, with interest, the assignee can recover from the solvent special partner the sums withdrawn by him during the continuance of the firm.—Wilkins v. Davis, Case No. 17,664.

§ 347. Right of action against assignee.

A receiver, appointed in supplementary proceedings prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor, may sue the assignee in bankruptcy and a prior voluntary assignee in the district court to set aside an assignment to the latter as void in fact and under the statute.—Olney v. Tanner, Case No. 10,506.

§ 348. Limitations of actions—Limitations applicable to particular actions.

The two-years limitation for suits by or against the assignee under Act 1841, § 8, has no reference to suits growing out of dealings of the assignee with the estate after it comes into his hands, but only to suits having reference to rights existing prior thereto.—In re Conant, Case No. 3,086.

The bar prescribed by Act 1867, § 2, applies to causes of action which had accrued to the bankrupt before his bankruptcy as well as to those which accrued to the assignee after the bankruptcy.—Norton v. De La Villebeuve, Case No. 10,350.

All transactions, illegal or fraudulent by the common law, the statute law, or by rules of law, other than the special limitations in Act 1867, § 35, are governed by the limitation of two years of section 2.—Bean v. Brookmire, Case No. 1,168.

A suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt, whether brought by the assignee or by a creditor upon the refusal of the assignee, is within the limitation of two years. Act 1867, § 2.—Freelander v. Holloman, Case No. 5,081.

The two-years limitation provided by Act 1841, and by Act 1867, § 2 (Rev. St. § 5057), applies to suits by assignees to collect the debts and assets of the estate as well as to suits relating to specific property.—Mitchell v. Great Works Mill. & Mfg. Co., Case No. 9,662; Norton v. Barker, Id. 10,349; Miltenberger v. Phillips, Id. 9,621; Payson v. Coffin, Id. 10,858; Id. 10,859; Walker v. Towner, Id. 17,089; Scovill v. Shaw, Id. 12,552. CONTRA, see Pritchard v. Chandler, Case No. 11,436; Sedgwick v. Casey, Id. 12,610; Davis v. Anderson, Id. 3,623; In re Krogman, Id. 7,936; Smith v. Crawford, Id. 13,030.

The two-years limitation provided by Act 1867, § 2, applies to a petition filed by the assignee in the bankruptcy court to recover assets, as well as to a formal action at law or suit in equity.—In re Krogman, Case No. 7,936.

An action by the assignee of a bankrupt bank, to recover counsel fees paid, without authority, by third persons acting as liquidators under a state law, is barred in two years. Rev. St. § 5057.—Miltenberger v. Phillips, Case No. 9,621.

The two-years limitation (Rev. St. § 5057) applies to an action by the assignee to enforce against stockholders the payment of their unpaid shares.—Walker v. Towner, Case No. 17,089; Payson v. Coffin, Id. 10,859; Scovill v. Shaw, Id. 12,552.

Rev. St. § 2027, limiting the time for the commencement of suits, at law and in equity, by or against assignees, to two years, does not apply to a proceeding to review a bill in equity.—Wilt v. Stickney, Case No. 17,854.

The limitation of two years applies only to controversies over which the federal circuit court would have jurisdiction.—Sedgwick v. Casey, Case No. 12,610.

§ 349. —— Accrual of cause of action.

Where property fraudulently conveyed by the bankrupt is levied upon and sold after proceedings in bankruptcy are commenced, the cause of action of the assignee against the purchaser to set aside the sale does not accrue until such purchaser acquires title under the judgment and execution sale.—Davis v. Anderson, Case No. 3,623.

In the case of a transfer of property to hold in trust for certain uses, and to become absolute under certain conditions, held, that the limitation did not commence to run until the title became absolute.—Haskill v. Frye, Case No. 6,195.

The two-years limitation, in the case of an action by the assignee to enforce against stockholders' payment of their unpaid shares, begins to run from the date of the assignment to the assignee, and not of the date of the assessment on the shares by the bankruptcy court.—Payson v. Coffin, Case No. 10,859.

The cause of action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover a payment made by the bankrupt of money, the title to which was in an assignee under a general assignment, does not accrue, under Rev. St. § 5057, until he has become vested with the title of such assignee under a decree setting the assignment aside as void under the bankrupt act.—Tappan v. Whittemore, Case No. 13,750.

§ 350. —— Effect of absence of defendant.

Where the bankrupt was a nonresident at the time the cause of action accrued, and it does not appear when he became a resident of the state, or that he had resided more than three years in the state since the cause of action accrued, as required by the state act, the statute of limitations does not apply as a defense by the assignee, although the creditor was a corporation of another state.—Capelle v. Trinity M. E. Church, Case No. 2,392.

§ 351. —— Effect of ignorance, fraud, or concealment of cause of action.

Where property has been conveyed by the bankrupt upon a secret trust to defraud his creditors, the cause of action does not accrue to the assignee under Act 1841, § 8, until the fraud has been discovered.—Carr v. Hilton, Case No. 2,436.

Where the bankrupt and the promisor of a note fraudulently conceal the cause of action from the assignee, from the moment when his title accrues, the two-years limitation in Act 1841 does not begin to run, but a fraudulent concealment after the assignee's title accrues is not sufficient to prevent the running of the statute.—Pritchard v. Chandler, Case No. 11,436.

The limitation of two years under Act 1867, § 2, for an action against the assignee does not apply to a case of fraud by the bankrupt upon his wife, except from the time of its discovery.—In re Anderson, Case No. 351.

The fact that the assignee did not discover his right to certain property of the bankrupt until after the expiration of two years from the time an action accrued to him therefor does not remove the bar prescribed by Act 1867, § 2.—Norton v. De La Villebeuve, Case No. 10,350.

A suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, made after discharge, of property concealed prior thereto, may be brought by the assignee within two years from the discovery of the fraud.—Nicholas v. Murray, Case No. 10,223.

A statute of limitations of two years will not bar an action, where the facts attending a fraudulent transfer by the bankrupt were concealed by the parties, and not brought to the attention of the assignee, until within three months of bringing suit.—Tyler v. Angevine, Case No. 14,306.

The statute of limitations does not begin to run against the assignee in the case of property concealed until the fraud is discovered.—Fullings v. Fullings, Case No. 5,151a.

A suit brought 7 years after the assignee's appointment to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, the bankrupt having continued in possession, is barred by the statute of limitations (Act March 2, 1867, § 2) for want of due diligence in discovering the fraud.—Andrews v. Dole, Case No. 373.

§ 352. —— Commencement of action.

Where the action was commenced within two years, but the assignee directed the clerk not to issue the summons, and it was not issued or served until more than two years from the time the cause of action accrued, the action is barred.—Walker v. Towner, Case No. 17,089.

§ 353. —— Pleading.

A bill of discovery by an assignee in bankruptcy to recover property fraudulently concealed 10 years prior thereto, alleging that the facts only came to complainant's knowledge "within the past year," held sufficient.—Forbes v. Overby, Case No. 4,928a.

§ 354. Form of remedy—Actions generally.

Where goods seized by the marshal were delivered to a purchaser from the bankrupt on his giving a forthcoming bond and a decree setting aside the sale as fraudulent is finally affirmed in the supreme court, the purchaser being insolvent, the assignee may proceed either upon the forthcoming bond or one of the appeal bonds, and without first enforcing the same against the estate of the purchaser.—Storrs v. Engel, Case No. 13,494.

Secret preferences paid as inducements to signing composition deeds may be recovered either at law or in equity.—Bean v. Brookmire, Case No. 1,169; Id. 1,170.

Trover by an assignee for property belonging to the bankrupt lies in the circuit court against the bankrupt and one claiming title.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,435.

Trover will not lie by the assignee against judgment creditors to recover the value of the bankrupt's property, sold on execution, prior to the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings. —Gaytes v. American, Case No. 5,286.

A sale by a debtor of all his real and personal property to a creditor, within a week of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, with knowledge of the debtor's insolvency, is in fraud of Act 1867, and trover will lie by the assignee to recover the value of the personal property.—Foster v. Hackley, Case No. 4,971.

An assignee may bring trover for property converted before his appointment, if the conversion took place after the filing of the petition, as his title relates back to the commencement of the proceedings. Act 1867, § 14.—Mitchell v. McKibbin, Case No. 9,666.

§ 356. —— Suits in equity.

Money paid as a fraudulent preference under Act 1867 may be recovered by the assignee in equity, although the same might also be recovered in an action at law.—Goodenow v. Milliken, Case No. 5,535.

Where money has been fraudulently paid by a bankrupt to certain creditors to induce them to sign a composition agreement, the assignee in bankruptcy may recover it back, and equity will entertain such a bill, although he might have maintained an action at law.—Bean v. Brookmire, Case No. 1,169.

A bill in equity by the assignee is not demurrable on the ground that he has a complete remedy at law, where the facts show that questions of fraud, trust, and partnership are all involved in the case at issue.—Taylor v. Rasch, Case No. 13,801.

Ignorance of the precise amount of goods transferred in fraud of Act 1867 will not give the assignee the right to claim a discovery in equity, as he can obtain a full disclosure on examination of the preferred creditor, under section 26 of such act.—Garrison v. Markley, Case No. 5,256.

Where assets are alleged to belong to the bankrupt, and are held by the defendants under claims of different rights, a suit in equity by the assignee in the form of a creditors' bill is the proper remedy to recover the same.—Stotesbury v. Cadwallader, Case No. 13,498.

The fact that there are other creditors of defendant is no objection to the assignee's bringing a suit to recover assets in the form of a creditors' bill.—Stotesbury v. Cadwallader, Case No. 13,498.

A suit in equity cannot be maintained by an assignee to obtain possession of a vessel alleged to belong to the estate of the bankrupt. The remedy is at law.—In re Oregon Iron Works, Case No. 10,562.

Neither will an injunction be allowed in such case upon the petition of the assignee to restrain the person in possession of such vessel from removing it beyond the jurisdiction of the court. The remedy is replevin.—In re Oregon Iron Works, Case No. 10,562.

A court of equity will take jurisdiction of a bill charging the constructive fraud contemplated by Act 1867, § 35, even though the suit, except in the form of the bill, is nothing more than an action for money had and received. But all persons concerned must be made parties.—Harmanson v. Bain, Case No. 6,072.

§ 357. —— Summary proceedings.

The assignee may petition summarily to set aside a mortgage given after the commencement of proceedings. Resort to a bill in equity is unnecessary.—In re Sims, Case No. 12,888.

The assignee may proceed by summons or petition upon a forthcoming bond, and need not resort to a plenary suit.—Storrs v. Engel, Case No. 13,494.

An assignee in bankruptcy can proceed against an adverse claimant of property only by action at law or plenary bill in equity.—Ferguson v. Peckham, Case No. 4,741.

Where the vendee purchased from the vendor before he was adjudged a bankrupt, in good faith, without knowledge of the bad faith of the vendor, and is financially responsible, the bankruptcy court will not settle the question of the validity of the sale upon motion by the assignee, but he must proceed in equity by bill. —In re Hunt, Case No. 6,881.

The bankruptcy court, against the protest of a receiver appointed by a state court, will not summarily order a sale of property forcibly taken by the marshal from his possession, the title to such property having vested in the receiver, but the rights of the assignee must be enforced by plenary suit.—In re Hulst, Case No. 6,863.

A suit by an assignee against a third person to recover assets claimed to belong to the bankrupt should be commenced by a bill in equity or a suit at law, and not by summary proceedings by petition, and a decree in such proceedings will be set aside for irregularities on petition of the defendant to the circuit court, under Act 1867.—In re Bonesteel, Case No. 1,627.

The question as to the validity of an execution lien on bankrupt's property attacked as a preference cannot be settled by petition and answer, but only by bill in equity or suit at law. —In re Ballou, Case No. 818.

A proceeding by the assignee to have a mortgage declared invalid, and a state court enjoined from foreclosing the same, should be by formal bill rather than by mere petition.—In re Kerosene Oil Co., Case No. 7,726.

The assignee can obtain possession of books of account transferred by the bankrupt before petition filed only by proceeding by a bill in equity or action at law, in which the validity of the conveyance can be tested, and not by a petition.—Rogers v. Winsor, Case No. 12,023.

Property fraudulently disposed of by a bankrupt in proceedings by or against him may be recovered by the assignee upon petition in the bankruptcy court, proceedings upon which may be of a summary character.—Bill v. Beckwith, Case No. 1,406.

Where mortgaged personalty of an absconded bankrupt is sold by agreement, under order of court, and the proceeds paid into court, the right thereto, as between the mortgagee and assignee, must be determined by a petition for distribution, and not by suit.—In re Masterson, Case No. 9,268.

Property held by the bankrupt to secure him as surety for another cannot be reached by the creditor by summary petition against the assignee, but only by a plenary suit.—Hurst v. Teft, Case No. 6,939.

The district court has no power to determine by summary proceedings the validity of the title of a general assignee for the benefit of creditors.—In re Marter, Case No. 9,143.

The objection that the relief sought to set aside a transfer by the bankrupt must be obtained by bill instead of on petition is waived where not taken by pleading.—In re Ulrich, Case No. 14,327.

A petition by an assignee against an alleged fraudulent transferee and his sureties in a bond for possession of goods seized by the marshal, who were not otherwise parties to the bankruptcy proceedings, where in substance a bill, may be remanded to the rules, and proceeded in as a bill in equity.—Lisberger v. Garnett, Case No. 8,383.

The bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction of a summary petition by a mortgagee for the sale of mortgaged property in the hands of receivers appointed by the state court, not parties to the petition.—Bradley v. Healey, Case No. 1,781.

§ 358. Defenses.

Adjudication of bankruptcy on a petition charging fraudulent conveyance does not estop the grantee from claiming that the conveyance is valid as to him.—In re Marter, Case No. 9,143.

A bankrupt is liable at the suit of the assignee for a tort committed on the bankrupt's property when he went into bankruptcy, and it is no defense in such an action that he has no property of his own with which to respond.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,435.

An objection by the assignee to a contract made by the bankrupt corporation with one of its officers will not be entertained in a court of equity, unless he offers to return the consideration received.—Miller v. Halsted, Case No. 9,572.

It is no defense to an action by an assignee to recover a debt due the bankrupt that said debt has been claimed by the bankrupt as a set-off in a pending suit.—Miller v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., Case No. 9,566.

Where a firm holds a large claim against an insolvent corporation of which a member of the firm is a director, and at a meeting of the creditors, at which such member was present, measures were taken to pay and secure the claim, and such corporation becomes bankrupt, upon the assignee bringing a bill against the firm it will be enjoined from setting up any right by virtue of the votes of the directors which were in fraud of the assignee.—Bradley v. Converse, Case No. 1,776.

It is no defense to an action to recover secret preferences paid to obtain signatures to a composition deed that the composition deed was invalid, because not signed by all the creditors, pursuant to its terms, it appearing that the greater part of the creditors believed that the composition had been signed by all the creditors in good faith.—Bean v. Brookmire, Case No. 1,170.

Where a discharge is granted after opposition on specifications held not to have been proved, the court will not direct the assignee, who had previously commenced suit in the state court, to discontinue it, on the ground that the allegations in the bill of complaint were the same as those of the specifications in opposition to the discharge.—In re Penn, Case No. 10,928.

In an action by the assignee of an Illinois corporation against a stockholder to recover the amount unpaid on his stock, it is not a sufficient defense that the corporate proceedings have not been strictly in accordance with the statute.—Upton v. Hansbrough, Case No. 16,801.

The fact that a call for unpaid subscriptions to stock was for more than was necessary to pay the debts of the company cannot be tried in an action by the assignee in bankruptcy against an individual stockholder.—Upton v. Hansbrough, Case No. 16,801.

Ignorance of the condition of the company at the time the subscription was made is no defense to a suit by the assignee in bankruptcy for an assessment.—Payson v. Withers, Case No. 10,864.

The action of the bankrupt court in making an assessment upon stockholders of the bankrupt corporation cannot be collaterally assailed in suits to enforce collection of the assessment.—Payson v. Stoever, Case No. 10,863.

An order of assessment by the bankruptcy court, upon the premium notes of a bankrupt insurance company, does not bind the maker of such a note, so as to preclude him from disputing its validity when sued thereon by the assignee.—Lamb v. Lamb, Case No. 8,018.

An assessment by the court on unpaid subscriptions to the stock of a bankrupt corporation is conclusive, and not impeachable collaterally.—Michener v. Payson, Case No. 9,524.

§ 359. Parties.

In a chancery attachment against a British bankrupt, the federal circuit court will permit the assignees of such bankrupt, on giving security and producing a copy of the proceedings of the commissioners certified by a notary public, at Liverpool, in England, who is certified to be such by the American consul at Liverpool, to be made parties to defend the suit, and to release the attached effects.—Wilson v. Stewart, Case No. 17,837.

All suits in relation to the bankrupt's estate should be brought in the name of the assignee. To a suit in the name of the bankrupt, defendant may plead the appointment of the assignee in abatement.—Cook v. Lansing, Case No. 3,162.

The assignee is entitled to be made a party to suits pending in the state court by or against the bankrupt, and the bankrupt will be enjoined from interfering with them.—Samson v. Burton, Case No. 12,285.

The bankrupt is a proper party to a bill to set aside a sale by him as fraudulent or illegal under the bankrupt law.—Verselius v. Verselius, Case No. 16,925.

The bankrupt is not a necessary party to a suit by the assignee against the voluntary assignee of the bankrupt to set aside a conveyance made by the latter.—Harding v. Crosby, Case No. 6,050.

The fact of nonjoinder of a person jointly liable with defendant is available only by plea in abatement. Case No. 16,849. affirmed.—Tinker v. Van Dyke, Case No. 14,058.

Where an assignee, who has brought a suit in equity, and has entered an appearance in a suit brought against him, has absconded, no further proceedings can be taken until proceedings have been taken to bring the co-assignee in, and compel him to elect whether he will be made a party.—Fenton v. Collerd, Case No. 4,731.

Where the assignee is made a party to a suit, he must come in and assert his rights, or he will be barred by decree on default, as any other party.—Turner v. Indianapolis, B. & W. Ry. Co., Case No. 14,259.

The assignee may embrace in one suit all such matters and causes of action as might be included by the creditors in a creditors' bill.—Spaulding v. McGovern, Case No. 13,217.

A bill by the assignee to set aside a chattel mortgage, a sale thereunder, and an assignment for creditors as fraudulent against creditors, and to recover the property, is not multifarious, the object of the bill being to recover the estate and clear it of incumbrances, and all the acts of the defendants having been done with a common purpose.—Platt v. Preston, Case No. 11,219.

§ 361. Pleading.

An assignee in an action of trover, in alleging title to property, must allege an adjudication in bankruptcy.—Wright v. Johnson, Case No. 18,082.

A bill by an assignee in bankruptcy to recover notes alleged to have been transferred in violation of Act 1867 need not directly allege an adjudication of bankruptcy, where it sets out the filing of the petition, the appointment of the assignee, and the assignment to him.—Lakin v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 7,999.

A bill to set aside a conveyance made by a bankrupt for the benefit of his wife and children, alleging that he was much embarrassed at the time, is good on demurrer, though it did not aver that he was then insolvent.—Pratt v. Curtis, Case No. 11,375.

The declaration in an action by the assignee to set aside a transfer as in violation of the act must set out the facts to show its illegality. —Hallack v. Tritch, Case No. 5,956.

In an action by the assignee to recover the value of goods transferred by the bankrupt, contrary to Rev. St. § 5128, the complaint must either allege actual conversion of the property, or a demand by the assignee and a refusal to deliver it, as the receipt of such goods by the creditor is not tortious, and does not of itself amount to a conversion of the property.—Shuman v. Fleckenstein, Case No. 12,826; Brooke v. McCraken, Id. 1,932.

Where the petition in bankruptcy was filed before the amendment of June 22, 1874, shortening the time within which a preference may be attacked as fraudulent, and requiring that the creditor should have knowledge that it was made in fraud of the act, a bill thereafter filed is sufficient to make a case within the statute as it existed before the amendment.—Warren v. Garber, Case No. 17,196. CONTRA, see Grey v. Thomas, Case No. 5,806.

In a suit to set aside a sale as fraudulent under Rev. St. §§ 5128, 5129, as amended June 22, 1874, knowledge by defendant that the sale was in fraud of the act must be averred and proved. —Crump v. Chapman, Case No. 3,455.

An assignee who sues to recover the value of property alleged to have been conveyed by the bankrupt as an illegal preference under Act 1867, § 35, cannot recover, on the ground that the conveyance was void at common law or under the state statute.—Cragin v. Carmichael, Case No. 3,319.

Under an allegation that the bankrupt did "transfer, assign, and convey" to defendant, plaintiff is not limited to proof of technical assignment under state laws.—Andrews v. Graves, Case No. 376.

§ 363. Evidence.

The assignee, suing as such, must produce the commission and proceedings and deed of assignment.—McIver v. Moore, Case No. 8,831.

Possession by the bankrupt, when his property was assigned, and a removal and sale of it, in connection with another person afterwards, is prima facie evidence of conversion.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,435.

The assignee, to maintain his title to sue in trover, need prove only the decree of bankruptcy and his appointment. This is prima facie evidence of his title under the law, without producing the bankrupt's petition to be declared a bankrupt.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,434.

In an action of trover by an assignee against a third person and a bankrupt, the explanations and schedules attached to the latter's petition cannot be used in his favor.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,435.

In an action of trover by an assignee against a third person and the bankrupt, the declarations of the latter are competent evidence against him.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,435.

A party who has caused a deposition to be taken before a register to be used as evidence in a cause cannot thereafter object to such use. —Lawrence v. Graves, Case No. 8,138.

Creditors who receive an illegal preference are liable to the assignee. The intent of the debtor to give, and of the creditor to secure, an unauthorized preference, may be shown by circumstances.—Giddings v. Dodd, Case No. 5,405.

In a suit by an assignee the proceedings in bankruptcy are admissible to show the appointment of the assignee, and the introduction of the record of such proceedings up to the time of his appointment, no use being made of them because the insolvency was admitted, is not a ground for error.—Babbitt v. Walbrun, Case No. 695.

In a suit by the assignee to recover the value of the property alleged to have been fraudulently transferred by the bankrupt, every declaration of the bankrupt in relation to defrauding his creditors and acts on his part showing the nature and extent of the fraudulent scheme are admissible, where a prima facie case of conspiracy is made out.—Tyler v. Angevine, Case No. 14,306.

In an action by the assignee of a corporation to collect unpaid subscriptions to stock, evidence of misrepresentations by an agent of the corporation at the time of subscription is inadmissible. —Michener v. Payson, Case No. 9,524.

The exemplification of a record offered in evidence is not admissible to prove a decree of the bankruptcy court authorizing an assessment by the assignee of the bankrupt corporation, where it appears that parts of the proceedings which culminated in such decree are not certified, and there is no offer to prove their contents.—Payson v. Brooke, Case No. 10,857.

In order to prove a particular proceeding in a bankrupt case, the whole record of such proceeding must be produced, but it is not necessary to produce the whole record of the case.— Payson v. Brooke, Case No. 10,857.

Declarations of a bankrupt are properly admitted in evidence on the trial of a suit between his assignee and a third person as to title to certain property.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,802.

The bankrupt is a competent witness where his assignee is a party, as he can have no legal interest in the decision of the case.—Wright v. Rogers, Case No. 18,090.

Where, within two months before commencement of proceedings, the bankrupt mortgages his stock of goods to raise money to pay a creditor pressing for satisfaction, and the mortgagee is a party to the negotiations, the burden is on the latter to show good faith and actual value. Rev. St. § 5128.—In re Sims, Case No. 12,889.

Defendants must contradict and explain every fact tending to cast suspicion upon the conveyance.—Alexander v. Todd, Case No. 175.

§ 364. Trial.

In summary proceedings by the assignee to recover property fraudulently disposed of, the bankruptcy court may order issues of fact to be tried by a jury.—Bill v. Beckwith, Case No. 1,406.

In a suit by the assignee in involuntary proceedings to set aside a transaction as fraudulent, the federal circuit court may refer the question of bona fides to a jury, where the bankrupt has not had the privilege of a jury.—Little v. Alexander, Case No. 8,393.

In trover to recover the value of property alleged to have been fraudulently sold by the bankrupt, it is error to instruct the jury that if the sale of the property by the bankrupt was not in the usual and ordinary course of business it was fraudulent, as such fact is only prima facie evidence of fraud.—Babbitt v. Walbrun, Case No. 694.

A charge to the jury that they are to give a verdict for the assignee in bankruptcy if they find that a certain sale by the bankrupt was fraudulent, and that the second buyers participated in it or had reasonable cause to know of the fraud, is sufficient, without a separate charge that the participation in the fraud was essential to recover.—Babbitt v. Walbrun, Case No. 695.

In determining the question as to whether the transferee had knowledge of the insolvency of the assignor, it is not error for the court to direct the attention of the jury to the distinction between "reasonable cause to believe" and "actual belief."—Lawrence v. Graves, Case No. 8,138.

§ 365. Injunctions and receivers.

On a bill filed by the assignee in bankruptcy to set aside a general assignment by the bankrupt, where the voluntary assignees were restrained from interfering with the property, held, that a receiver should be appointed by the bankruptcy court.—Sedgwick v. Place, Case No. 12,619.

An assignee who brings a suit under Act 1867, against a person claiming title to property, is not entitled to an injunction pending the suit restraining such person from intermeddling with the property which is in the latter's possession, and to a receivership thereof, unless the assignee shows some emergency or some peril of loss which the court will be unable to redress.—Beecher v. Bininger, Case No. 1,222.

Where an insolvent corporation, before its bankruptcy, has obtained the appointment of a receiver in a state court, to whom its property is transferred, and an action is brought by its assignee in bankruptcy against the receiver to set such transfer aside, the bankruptcy court will grant an injunction restraining the receiver from executing the trusts of the receivership, and will appoint a receiver of the property and its proceeds pending suit.—Platt v. Archer, Case No. 11,213.

An injunction against the sale on execution of property which the assignee sues to recover will not be dissolved on an answer and affidavit denying the merits of the bill.—Platt v. Dickenson, Case No. 11,216a.

§ 366. Compromise.

Where an assignee brings action against the attorneys of the bankrupt to recover money paid and property assigned to them by him before filing his petition, in payment and as security for their services rendered and to be rendered in the bankruptcy proceedings, and after issue is joined the assignee applies for leave to compromise the suit, such leave will not be granted, as such suit is not a proper one for compromise of disputed claims under general order No. 20.—In re Rowe, Case No. 12,092.

The expense and delay of a litigation will not justify a compromise in a case where public interests and the due administration of the bankrupt law require the settlement of the questions of law involved by the judgment of the court.—In re Rowe, Case No. 12,092.

§ 367. Recovery and decree.

Where an assignee sells property free from incumbrances, and the holder of a mortgage thereon is present at the sale, and a bill in equity is brought by the assignee against the mortgagee and purchasers of the property to determine their respective rights against the mortgagee, who threatens an enforcement of his mortgage, it is competent for the court to determine the validity of the mortgage, although the holder repudiates all claim to a fund in court retained for the purpose of paying the same, and disavows all liabilities of the assignee to himself by reason of such sale; and, if found to be a fraudulent preference, its cancellation may be decreed, and its enforcement against the property and the purchasers thereof enjoined.—Giveen v. Smith, Case No. 5,467.

A bill for an account and a receiver filed by an assignee of two insolvent partners against a solvent partner, may be retained until the receiver has reported a settlement of all other demands against the firm.—Cory v. Clark, Case No. 3,260.

In the case of a joint purchase in fraud of Act 1867, each purchaser is liable for the full value of the property, though they were interested in different proportions.—Schulenburg v. Kabureck, Case No. 12,487.

Where a transfer of property by the bankrupt is held void under Act 1867, as against the assignee, the transferee will be regarded as a trustee for the assignee, and will be held to account as such, where it appears that the transferee has disposed of the property.—Schrenkeisen v. Miller, Case No. 12,480.

A decree annulling a voluntary assignment to creditors made within six months before the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings must contain a direction for a conveyance by the voluntary assignee to the assignee in bankruptcy, and no subsequent account in a state court should be had unless some extraordinary reason requires a distribution, under the laws of the state, for the benefit of the general body of creditors.—Burkholder v. Stump, Case No. 2,165.

A creditor who has taken an unlawful preference by execution and seizure of the bankrupt's property is liable for its value, and is only to be allowed, on the accounting, credit for the actual expenses of sale, not including the officer's fees.—Sedgwick v. Millward, Case No. 12,618.

On awarding to the assignee the proceeds of an unlawful preference obtained by judgment and levy of execution, the sheriff will be allowed his legal fees and costs of the suit, which were charged on the creditor. Case No. 17,200 reversed.—Warren v. Tenth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,202.

In an action by the assignee to recover property fraudulently transferred, the value of such portion as is exempt from execution must be deducted before judgment.—Grow v. Ballard, Case No. 5,848.

A mere general allowance in the decree of the reasonable charges and expenses of the voluntary assignee will not include expenses of a proposed account in the state court.—Burkholder v. Stump, Case No. 2,165.

The defendant in an equity suit must account, before a master, for property received by him. Orders of reference to a master will be settled on notice.—Benjamin v. Graham, Case No. 1,301.

An assignee suing for the value of goods fraudulently transferred may recover damages for their detention, including profits made out of them, or injuries received by them, while in possession of the creditor.—Shuman v. Fleckenstein, Case No. 12,826.

A decree declaring a conveyance void at the suit of the assignee, and directing defendant to convey to the assignee, does not establish title in the assignee under such defendant, nor any privity between them.—McFarland v. Goodman, Case No. 8,789.

A recovery on a wife's chose in action by the assignee, substituted in place of the husband who had become bankrupt pending suit, inures to the benefit of the creditors.—In re Boyd, Case No. 1,745.

(F) CLAIMS AGAINST AND DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE.

Presentation and proof of claims on election of assignee, see ante, §§ 163–171.

1. Provable Debts and Demands.

§ 368. In general.

Any debt which may be proved by complying with any of the provisions of the bankrupt act is a provable debt.—Rankin v. Florida, A. & G. C. R. Co., Case No. 11,567.

§ 369. Time of accrual.

Only such debts as exist at the time of filing the petition are provable, and a debt which exists at the time of the actual adjudication, but not existing at the time the petition was filed, is not provable.—In re Crawford, Case No. 3,363. CONTRA, see Downer v. Brackett, Case No. 4,043; In re Hennocksburgh, Id. 6,367.

Where an absolute transfer is given to secure a debt on an extension of time to the debtor, the creditor, before the expiration of such time, has an existing indebtedness provable in bankruptcy.—Ecfort v. Greely, Case No. 4,260.

The election of the United States to take judgment upon a bond given to secure a claim against a vessel will prevent them from proving it as a debt due from the bankrupt obligor; and such debt is not affected by the discharge previously obtained.—In re Mansfield, Case No. 9,049.

Where a claim evidenced by a bond, given by a claimant for property seized by the United States, as liable to forfeiture for violation of the rules of war, is not reduced to judgment until after the adjudication of the bankruptcy of such claimant and a final dividend has been determined, it is not provable against the bankrupt estate, and is not barred by the discharge.—United States v. The Rob Roy, Case No. 16,179.

§ 370. Contingent demands and liabilities.

One who has been garnished and defaulted, and subsequently declared a bankrupt, is not a debtor of the garnisher, so as to make his claim provable as that of a creditor.—Ex parte Columbian Ins. Co., Case No. 3,037.

The statute liability of stockholders of a corporation for its debts is not a claim provable in bankruptcy against them.—Bristol v. Sanford, Case No. 1,893; James v. Atlantic Delaine Co., Id. 7,179.

§ 371. Claims of indorsers, sureties, etc.

No debt, but such as is due and owing at the time of the bankruptcy, can be proved under the commission. Therefore an indorser or acceptor of a bill of exchange, drawn by the bankrupt, who has not paid it before the bankruptcy, cannot prove the debt.—Marks v. Barker, Case No. 9,096. CONTRA, see Baker v. Vasse, Case No. 784.

Where the holder of a note fails to prove the same against the maker's estate, the indorser may prove it, and receive dividends, though he has not paid the note.—In re Ellerhorst, Case No. 4,381.

The right of an indorsee of a note to prove the same in bankruptcy is controlled by the law of the state where the contract of transfer is made.—In re Shelbourne, Case No. 12,745.

Where the proceeds of an accommodation note made by the agent of a company go to the use of his bankrupt firm, and an indorser pays the same and proves the claim in bankruptcy, and recover judgment against the company, the company cannot also prove the claim.—In re Morse, Case No. 9,853.

Proof of a claim as indorser upon a note made by the bankrupt will be disallowed where it appears that, after the adjudication of bankruptcy, a new note had been given, and the first note taken up.—In re Montgomery, Case No. 9,730.

A surety of the bankrupt whose individual note is expressly received in payment may prove his claim. (Act 1867, § 19.)—In re Morrill, Case No. 9,821.

The pledgee of notes, held to secure a debt in a smaller amount, may prove them against the maker's estate to their full amount, and receive dividends to the extent of his debt, though they are invalid in the hands of the pledgor.—Bailey v. Nichols, Case No. 741.

§ 372. Claims against indorser of a note or drawer of bill of exchange.

Where a bankrupt agreed to furnish money to a person to take out a patent and to pay the expenses, and receive an interest in the same, and a note thereafter is made by such person and indorsed by the bankrupt, and given to a chemist for work done on the patent, the latter may prove such note as a valid claim against the estate of the bankrupt.—In re Bruce, Case No. 2,044.

A mere covenant by a creditor not to sue an accommodation acceptor does not prevent him from proving against the drawer's estate.—Downing v. Traders' Bank, Case No. 4,046.

In the case of negotiable paper, where the makers have been declared bankrupts, and have offered notes for composition payments, the creditor may prove for the whole amount against the indorser, as nothing short of actual payment, or a present right to receive a dividend, from the maker's estate, will operate to reduce the creditor's right to prove against the indorser's estate.—In re Hicks, Case No. 6,456.

§ 373. Claims barred by limitation.

A debt barred by the statute of limitations of the state in which the bankrupt resides and where the petition is filed cannot be proved.—In re Kingsley, Case No. 7,819; In re Reed, Id. 11,635; In re Doty, Id. 4,017; In re Hardin, Id. 6,048; In re Noesen, Id. 10,288; In re Cornwall, Id. 3,250.

A debt barred by the New York statute of limitations (which affects the remedy only) may be proven.—In re Shepard, Case No. 12,753.

A debt, barred by the statute of limitations in the state where the bankrupt resides, is not provable in bankruptcy against his estate by a creditor resident in another state, even though not barred by the statutes of that state.—In re Hardin, Case No. 6,048.

A debt, to be barred by limitation so as not to be provable, must be shown to be barred throughout the limits of the United States.—In re Ray, Case No. 11,589; In re Shepard, Id. 12,753. CONTRA, see In re Hardin, Case No. 6,048; In re Reed, Id. 11,635.

A state statute of limitations is suspended by the bankruptcy proceedings, and if the debt is not barred at such time it may be proved, though at the time of proof it would be otherwise barred.—In re Eldridge, Case No. 4,331; In re Wright, Id. 18,068; In re Maybin, Id. 9,337. CONTRA, see Nicholas v. Murray, Case No. 10,223.

The suspension of the statute by the filing of the petition continues so long as there is a fund to distribute.—In re Maybin, Case No. 9,337.

The entry of a debt upon the schedule by the bankrupt is not such an acknowledgment or new promise as will revive a debt which is barred by the statute.—In re Hardin, Case No. 6,048; In re Kingsley, Id. 7,819. CONTRA, see In re Hertzog, Case No. 6,433.

§ 374. Equitable demands.

Equitable debts are provable on the same footing as legal debts.—Sigsby v. Willis, Case No. 12,849; In re Blandin, Id. 1,527; In re Buckhause, Id. 2,086.

§ 375. Unliquidated demands.

Losses suffered by a broker in disposing of goods purchased for the bankrupt, which he failed or refused to receive, are unliquidated claims, and not provable.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,975.

Where a cause of action has arisen by the bankrupt's breach of an absolute contract, it is no objection to assessing and proving the damages in bankruptcy by the injured party that they may be difficult of estimation.—Ex parte Pollard, Case No. 11,252.

On a contract under which the parties have a mechanic's lien not completed when petition was filed, a pro rata allowance only will be made. For work done afterwards nothing is allowed.—In re Cook, Case No. 3,151.

A contract of employment with a corporation is ipso facto dissolved by the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, and the employé may have his damages assessed, and prove the amount.—Ex parte Pollard, Case No. 11,252.

A claim by retired partners for unliquidated damages, by reason of their liability, under the provisions of a lease, to the firm, that, in case of failure to perform, the lessors may re-enter and relet the premises at the risk of the lessees, who should remain liable for the rent and be credited with the sums actually realized, cannot be proved against the estate of their former partners.—Ex parte Lake, Case No. 7,991.

§ 376. Claims arising out of torts.

A debt created by fraud is provable under Act 1867, §§ 19, 33.—In re Rosenberg, Case No. 12,054; In re Rundle, Id. 12,138.

Damages for a tort are not provable until they have been assessed.—In re Bailey, Case No. 729.

The claim of a bank for fraudulent overdrafts of a customer, made by collusion with its cashier, may be proven directly against the estate in bankruptcy of a company, of which the customer was the principal shareholder, to which the checks were given, to the exclusion of the assignee in bankruptcy of the customer.—In re Eureka Mfg. Co., Case No. 4,550.

A claim against a partner for false representations as to the credit of his firm, inducing a person to purchase their paper, is a claim for damages for a tort, and is not provable before judgment obtained thereon.—In re Schuchardt, Case No. 12,483.

§ 377. Rent and damages for breach of covenants in lease.

A demand for rent accruing after the bankruptcy is not provable.—In re May, Case No. 9,325; In re Hufnagel, Id. 6,837; In re Commercial Bulletin Co., Id. 3,060.

Where, in eminent domain proceedings, a tenant has been paid a certain amount on a basis of his obligation to pay rent, the landlord can prove a claim for rent of the balance of such amount on the bankruptcy of the tenant.—In re Clancy, Case No. 2,782.

Where tenants are put into bankruptcy pending summary proceedings to eject them, and afterwards such proceedings are enjoined by the bankruptcy court, the landlord is not entitled to rent under the lease from the service of the injunction to the adjudication of bankruptcy, he is only entitled to a proper allowance, and the same rule applies after adjudication.—In re Lynch, Case No. 8,634.

The loss of rent after the bankruptcy of the lessee, on a reletting by the landlord, who terminated the tenancy under the terms of the lease, for a breach of covenant, cannot be proved.—Ex parte Houghton, Case No. 6,725; In re Croney, Id. 3,411; In re Hufnagel, Id. 6,837.

Where a bankrupt, before his adjudication, hired premises and sold out his business to his brother, and surrendered such premises to him, but continued to pay the rent, and afterwards directed the landlord to relet them, and agreed to account for the rent until they were relet, proof of the debt for the rent until the premises were relet is valid.—In re Bruce, Case No. 2,044.

A claim against the bankrupt by his lessee for prospective profits of the business at a stand on the bankrupt's premises on breach of the lease by the bankrupt cannot be proved.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,233.

§ 378. Assigned claims.

One who has in good faith bought a debt against the bankrupt after the commencement of the proceedings may prove it.—In re Murdock, Case No. 9,939.

A person who in good faith purchases claims against a bankrupt with the intention of stopping proceedings and giving him time may prove them.—In re Pease, Case No. 10,880; In re Strachan, Id. 13,519.

Where there are assets in the hands of the assignees in bankruptcy exceeding the amounts of unpaid debts, proved and unproved, claims purchased by the bankrupt's agents may be allowed to the extent of the sums paid therefor by the purchasers, who will be subrogated to the rights of the creditors whose claims they bought.—In re Lathrop, Case No. 8,104.

§ 379. Claims against several bankrupts.

The holder of a bill of exchange is entitled to prove his debt in bankruptcy against the drawer, the acceptor, and the payee, and to receive a dividend from all their estates until his full debt is paid; and, if one only be bankrupt, he may prove his debt against such bankrupt, and also proceed against the others at law. Act 1841.—In re Babcock, Case No. 696.

The bona fide holder for value of an accommodation bill is entitled to prove as to all parties against whom he could have supported an action on the bill.—Downing v. Traders' Bank, Case No. 4,046.

A joint debtor, having security on the separate estate of one of the creditors, may prove his entire claim against both estates, but is not entitled to greater dividends than, in the aggregate, amount to his debt.—In re Howard, Case No. 6,750.

An indorsed note held as security for the debt of the indorser in a less amount, evidenced by a note, may be proved, to the amount of the debt, against the estate of the indorser in bankruptcy, and also against the estate of the bankrupt maker.—Ex parte Farnsworth, Case No. 4,672.

§ 380. Want of consideration.

A person to whom notes are sent for discount, who fails to pay drafts drawn against the proceeds in favor of an indorser of the notes, cannot prove his claim on the notes against the bankrupt payee of the drafts; for, he having failed to pay the drafts, he has no right to retain the notes, and is not a holder for value.—In re Howard, Case No. 6,751.

Brokers holding stocks on a margin at a profit when the petition was filed, who hold for an unreasonable time, and sell on a decline, without notice, cannot prove a claim for differences.—In re Daniels, Case No. 3,566.

A holder of notes, who was not a bona fide holder, sought to prove them against the estate of a bankrupt who had indorsed the same, the latter having received them to secure himself as an accommodation indorser of other notes for the maker of the notes in question. Held, that the notes were not provable, as they were without consideration between the maker and the bankrupt, the latter not having been called upon to pay the said notes upon which he was an accommodation indorser.—In re Hook, Case No. 6,672.

§ 381. Claims arising out of illegal transactions.

The bankrupt court may pass upon the legality of a claim, though it has no jurisdiction to enforce a penalty imposed by the state law on account of an act making such claim illegal.—In re Pittock, Case No. 11,189.

Notes given by the bankrupt for the excess of bonus over legal interest are not provable, and must be surrendered to the assignee.—Shaffer v. Fritchery, Case No. 12,697.

A debt contracted in whole or in part for spirituous liquors in violation of a law of the state is not provable.—In re Paddock, Case No. 10,657.

A claim for the price of spirituous liquors lawfully sold in New York to a citizen of Maine who intended them for sale in Maine, in violation of law, is provable in bankruptcy in Maine, though it could not be recovered in the courts of the state.—In re Murray, Case No. 9,954.

A note payable "in current money of the state" in which it is made is provable, though the state, at the time of its maturity, is in rebellion.—In re Whittaker, Case No. 17,598.

Confederate treasury notes, although not "bills of credit" issued by a state, are nevertheless illegal, and a promissory note given in consideration of such notes is void for illegality of consideration, and is not a debt provable in bankruptcy.—Bailey v. Milner, Case No. 740.

Money actually paid on "puts" and "calls," which are void as wager contracts, may be proved as claims against the estate of the party from whom they are taken.—Ex parte Young, Case No. 18,145.

A speculative option, where the object of the parties is not a sale and delivery of goods, but a settlement in money of differences, commonly called a "put," is void as a wagering contract, and is not a provable debt in bankruptcy.—In re Chandler, Case No. 2,590.

Where a savings bank, in violation of its charter and the laws of the state, discounts notes of the bankrupt, neither the notes nor a claim for money loaned thereon can be proved.—In re Jaycox, Cases Nos. 7,237, 7,238, 7,241.

§ 382. Taxes.

A tax collector will not be allowed to prove, against the bankrupt's estate, taxes which have been deducted from the value of property taken by creditors under attachments valid, as against the assignee, at the time of appraisal.—Foster v. Inglee, Case No. 4,973.

§ 383. Claims under insurance policies.

The terms and conditions of an insurance policy remain binding upon the insured after adjudication of bankruptcy of the insurance company to the same extent as before.—In re Firemen's Ins. Co., Case No. 4,796.

A clause in an insurance policy, limiting the right of action to one year from the loss, is valid, and binding even after bankruptcy of the company; but proof of the debt in bankruptcy is equivalent to the commencement of a suit.—In re Firemen's Ins. Co., Case No. 4,796.

An adjustment of the loss before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy is a settlement and a waiver of the limitation clause.—In re Firemen's Ins. Co., Case No. 4,796.

Policy holders in a bankrupt fire insurance company are not entitled to the return of any part of the premiums paid for the unexpired term, or to any deductions on outstanding premium notes.—In re Western Ins. Co., Case No. 17,435.

A claim against a bankrupt insurance company, founded upon a covenant to repay part of the premium on cancellation of the policy, is provable.—In re Independent Ins. Co., Case No. 7,019.

A waiver of conditions, made in good faith by the company while solvent, is binding upon its assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Firemen's Ins. Co., Case No. 4,796.

A fire policy is a "contingent liability" of the insurance company, entitling the insured to share in dividends where the loss occurs before the order for final dividends.—In re American Plate Glass Ins. Co., Case No. 314.

§ 384. Claims of wife.

The fact that a wife allows her husband to have and use her money in his own business indefinitely does not affect a claim by her as against other creditors after he becomes bankrupt.—Van Kleeck v. Miller, Case No. 16,860.

Under the Massachusetts statutes, the bankrupt's wife may prove as a creditor against his estate in bankruptcy for money realized by him out of property which she had as her separate estate, if the evidence clearly shows that the transaction was intended to be a loan, and not a gift.—In re Blandin, Case No. 1,527.

Where a wife received money, and placed it in her husband's hands with the verbal understanding that it should be returned upon demand, and she afterwards draws all but $700, and it appears that the husband had at various times given her furniture, etc., and had taken out life insurance policies for her benefit, upon the husband's being declared a bankrupt seven years after the receipt of such money the wife is entitled to prove her $700 claim, without interest, as a debt against her husband's estate.—In re Bigelow, Case No. 1,398.

§ 385. Deficiency on mortgage foreclosure.

Where the assignee permits a pending mortgage foreclosure to proceed to decree, and a sale of the property, he agrees to such mode of ascertaining the value of the property, and the deficiency is a provable claim.—In re Stansfield, Case No. 13,294.

A judgment for deficiency against the bankrupt on a sale under foreclosure in the state court, permitted by the bankrupt court, cannot be proved by the mortgagee, where leave was not given for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the security.—In re Herrick, Case No. 6,421.

A mortgagee who, without leave of court or notice to the assignee, sells mortgaged property at public auction for less than the amount of the mortgage, will not be allowed to prove for the balance.—In re Miller, Case No. 9,555.

The bankruptcy court may allow to be proved as a debt a deficiency arising on a sale under a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage in a suit in a state court commenced after adjudication in bankruptcy without permission of the bankruptcy court. Case No. 9,699 affirmed.—In re Moller, Case No. 9,700.

§ 386. Alimony.

A claim for alimony, whether accruing before or after commencement of proceedings, is not a provable debt, and enforcement thereof cannot be stayed by the bankruptcy court.—In re Lachemeyer, Case No. 7,966.

§ 387. Claims of cestuis que trust.

An indebtedness to a cestui que trust is provable.—In re Blandin, Case No. 1,527.

§ 388. Judgments and claims put in judgment.

A claim to have a judgment in favor of the claimant against the bankrupt set aside on account of fraud, whereby it was rendered for a smaller sum than was actually due, and to recover what is still due under the contract on which the judgment was rendered, is a debt provable under the bankrupt law.—In re Van Buren, Case No. 16,833.

A judgment rendered against the bankrupt in a state court, from which he has appealed before the filing of his petition, is conclusive on the presentation of the same as a debt.—In re Leszynsky, Case No. 8,278.

A writ of error and supersedeas of execution leave the judgment intact, and it is provable.—In re Sheehan, Case No. 12,737.

The commissioners of a bankrupt's estate cannot allow a judgment debt, which has slept for 30 years, to be proved before them, unaccompanied by sufficient reasons for the neglect to prosecute it.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

Judgments in actions, whether arising ex delicto or ex contractu, are provable debts, under Act 1841.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,073.

A suit and judgment against a bankrupt on a fiduciary debt does not preclude the creditor from proving it.—Bourne v. Maybin, Case No. 1,700.

A claim of the United States for the value of goods forfeited for violation of the customs laws is provable, though the United States has recovered a judgment for such value.—In re Vetterlein, Case No. 16,929.

A creditor may prove a debt, though he has recovered a judgment for the same before a justice of the peace prior to the adjudication.—In re Vickery, Case No. 16,930.

The costs and interest in the case of a debt put into a judgment before the petition was filed may be proved with the debt.—Ex parte O'Neil, Case No. 10,527.

A judgment extinguishes the debt upon which it was founded, and constitutes a new debt. A judgment obtained after an adjudication of bankruptcy is not provable against estate of bankrupt.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,705.

A claim founded on a judgment recovered after commencement of the proceedings, without leave of the bankruptcy court, is not provable.—In re Maybin, Case No. 9,337.

A simple contract debt existing before the filing of the petition, on which a judgment has been rendered after such filing, is provable, within the meaning of Act 1867.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,975; In re Crawford, Id. 3,363; In re Stansfield, Id. 13,294.

It is not necessary, for creditors who have recorded judgments against a bankrupt, after the adjudication to vacate their judgments in order to prove claims on which the judgments were rendered.—In re Stevens, Case No. 13,391.

A judgment entered in an action for tort after commencement of bankruptcy proceedings upon a verdict previously rendered is not provable.—Black v. McClelland, Case No. 1,462.

A judgment for a fine obtained in a criminal proceeding is not a provable debt.—In re Sutherland, Case No. 13,639.

That there is usury in a judgment sought to be proved, and that the bankrupts did not defend against it on that ground, is not available to the assignee, where no fraud or collusion therein is alleged.—In re Kitzinger, Case No. 7,861.

§ 389. Costs and expenses in pending suits in general.

Where a suit has been commenced bona fide, and the defendant becomes a bankrupt, the actual costs are to be paid out of the estate, but no subsequent costs.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

A debt must be proved or allowed before the costs made prior to the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy can be allowed.—In re Preston, Case No. 11,393.

Compensation for services of an attorney and counsel of receiver of insolvent corporation will be allowed where it appears that they benefited the estate.—Platt v. Archer, Case No. 11,214.

Compensation for services of attorney and counsel of the receiver of an insolvent corporation in resisting proceedings by assignee to recover the property will not be allowed.—Platt v. Archer, Case No. 11,214.

A creditor is not entitled to reimbursement for expenses and costs of a suit in a state court to compel a voluntary assignee to distribute the estate, where the suit was not beneficial to the creditors, the estate having been placed in the hands of the assignee in bankruptcy under a composition.—In re Dumahaut, Case No. 4,126.

Attorney's commissions and costs, stipulated to be paid on foreclosure, will not be allowed by the register, upon the bankruptcy of the mortgagor before the mortgage was foreclosed, when the proceedings to foreclose are invalid.—In re Devore, Case No. 3,847.

A creditor not allowed to apply to a state court for an order directing the payment, out of the estate in the hands of a voluntary assignee, of referee's fees incurred in an action in the state court.—In re Dumahaut, Case No. 4,125.

§ 390. Fees and disbursements on levy on bankrupt's property.

Where a sheriff, before the bankruptcy proceedings, has seized the bankrupt's property under a judgment which is afterwards set aside, and he has had the custody of the property, and has preserved the same, and has incurred expense in so doing, he is entitled to be reimbursed out of the estate.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,705.

The sheriff is entitled to reasonable compensation for levies and services under executions issued before bankruptcy proceedings commenced, but no compensation will be allowed in respect to executions issued subsequent to the filing of the petition.—Platt v. Stewart, Case No. 11,221.

A sheriff who has, in good faith, levied upon property of a debtor afterwards adjudged a bankrupt is entitled to his poundage out of the proceeds in the hands of the assignee, without regard to the validity of the judgment.—In re Welch, Case No. 17,367.

§ 391. Costs, fees, and disbursements in attachment proceedings.

The expenses of an attachment made for the sole purpose of securing the creditor's debt, within four months of the bankruptcy proceedings, are not allowable as a claim against the estate.—In re Davis, Case No. 3,616; In re Archenbrown, Id. 503.

Where the original debt has been proved and allowed, costs of an attachment made in good faith before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings may be proved as a general debt against the estate and without knowledge of the debtor's insolvency.—In re Preston, Case No. 11,393.

Where it appears that the attachment which was dissolved by the bankruptcy proceedings was merely auxiliary to such proceedings, the costs and expenses thereof will be allowed.—In re Ward, Case No. 17,145.

The omission of the attachment creditors to commence proceedings in bankruptcy is not sufficient to rebut the positive averment in their petition that the attachment proceedings were not taken to defeat the operation of Act 1867.—In re Ward, Case No. 17,145.

Costs of an attachment dissolved by the bankruptcy proceedings will not be allowed out of the fund unless the attachment was designed to aid the bankruptcy proceedings, and of benefit to the general creditors.—In re Irons, Case No. 7,067.

Unless an attachment dissolved by bankruptcy could not have been effectual to preserve the property for the general creditors, the costs may be paid out of the fund.—Ex parte Holmes, Case No. 6,631.

The reasonable expenses of creditors in attachment proceedings held should be paid out of the fund, where such proceedings contributed to preserve the property.—In re Schwab, Case No. 12,498.

A claim by a sheriff for fees and expenses in attachment proceedings, begun within four months prior to the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, will be allowed, where it is conceded that the attachment conserved the property and benefited the general creditors.—In re Jenks, Case No. 7,276.

Costs incurred by a sheriff for insurance, packing, etc., of goods on an attachment which has been dissolved by the proceedings in bankruptcy, where beneficial to the estate, will be ordered to be paid by the assignee.—In re Fortune, Case No. 4,955.

The costs of an attachment, laid by the wife of the bankrupt in a libel for divorce, are not provable, and are not an equitable charge against the assets.—In re Foye, Case No. 5,021.

Where a flock of sheep belonging to the bankrupt were taken on attachment prior to the filing of the petition, held that the officer was entitled to compensation from the assignee for keeping such sheep until claimed and received by the assignee.—Zeiber v. Hill, Case No. 18,206.

An attaching creditor of the bankrupt who pays liens upon the attached goods, to save his attachment, must be repaid such amounts by the assignee of the debtor, such attachment having become void upon the bankruptcy of the debtor.—In re Baker, Case No. 762.

The charges of a deputy sheriff for attempting to arrest the debtor, for which there was no apparent necessity, disallowed.—In re Ward, Case No. 17,145.

2. The Right to Prove as Affected by Acts of Creditors.

§ 392. In general.

An attachment by a creditor of the property of his insolvent debtor is not a fraud upon the bankrupt act.—In re Baker, Case No. 762.

Taking property on attachment or execution is receiving a preference, but merely recovering judgment is not.—In re Stevens, Case No. 13,391.

Where a creditor has attempted to obtain a preference over other creditors, by fraudulently increasing the amount of his claim, the whole claim will be rejected.—In re Elder, Case No. 4,326; Marrett v. Atterbury, Id. 9,102.

A judgment in favor of the bankrupt, in a suit commenced by him before the bankruptcy, but tried after the adjudication therein, where the defendant offered no evidence in support of a claim set up in defense as a distinct cause of action, is not an estoppel against proof of the claim by defendant in bankruptcy.—In re People's Safe-Deposit & Savings Inst., Case No. 10,971.

If the guarantors of a note participate in the act by which their principal forfeited his claim against the bankrupt estate, they occupy no better position and cannot prove the same.—In re Ayers, Case No. 685.

Where the holder of a note has forfeited his claim against the estate of the bankrupt maker by taking a preference, the guarantors of such note have no right to prove it against such estate, their liability having been discharged by the principal.—In re Ayers, Case No. 685.

The fact that certain creditors have made a champertous agreement with a third party for the collection of their debts from the bankrupt furnishes no ground for the disallowance of such claims, on petition of a creditor.—In re Lathrop, Case No. 8,103.

A claim for money loaned to a debtor to aid him in the commission of an act of bankruptcy cannot be included among his provable debts.—In re Hatje, Case No. 6,215.

Where a foreign creditor seeks to prove against the bankrupt estate a claim, part of which has been collected in the foreign country by judgment and execution, he must account to the assignee for the property so collected before proving the balance of his claim, where it appears that had such judgment and execution been issued in this country the proceedings would have been stayed, as a foreign creditor cannot claim under the comity of nations to be more favored than the citizens of this country.—In re Bugbee, Case No. 2,115.

Seizure of part of a shipment of goods under the right of stoppage in transitu does not prevent proof of claim as to those delivered.—Bearse v. Ropes, Case No. 1,192.

§ 393. Receiving preference—What constitutes a preference.

A deed of mortgaged land to the mortgagee, where the mortgage amounts to more than its value, cannot be a preference; and the mortgagee, in giving up the deed, is entitled to prove the balance of his debt.—Coxe v. Hale, Case No. 3,310.

The surrender of a policy of insurance under a stipulation giving such right, with a return of part of the premium, is not a preference to the insured.—In re Independent Ins. Co., Case No. 7,019.

A payment or other disposition of property by a debtor, after the petition is filed, is not a preference which will prevent proof of the debt without a surrender.—In re Randall, Case No. 11,552.

An adjustment of accounts between an insolvent debtor and creditor, not followed by any actual change or transfer of property, rights, or credits, to the prejudice of other creditors, is not contrary to the bankrupt act, but it is not binding on the assignee.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,079.

The assignee under a general assignment for creditors without preferences is not prohibited from proving his debt in bankruptcy.—In re Horton, Case No. 6,707.

A judgment taken with an intention to receive the entire estate for an equal distribution among the creditors, by a creditor who held overdue paper of the debtor, and was informed that they were hard pressed, is a fraudulent preference.—Harrison v. McLaren, Case No. 6,139.

§ 394. —— Effect upon right to prove debt.

A transfer of property by an insolvent trader to a person who had reasonable cause to believe such insolvency, when made with intent to give a preference, precludes the transferee from proving his debt.—Cookingham v. Morgan, Case No. 3,183; Bingham v. Richmond, Id. 1,415.

The knowledge by a creditor, to whom an accommodation note was indorsed by the debtor, that the latter could not pay his debts as they matured, is reasonable cause to believe him insolvent.—In re Shoenberger, Case No. 12,802.

An execution creditor, knowing that his debtor is unable to pay his debts at maturity, is chargeable with knowledge of his insolvency.—In re Forsyth, Case No. 4,948.

A creditor, having before him what the statute declares to be prima facie evidence of fraud, will be deemed to have reasonable cause to believe in the existence of such fraud, until the presumption is overborne by opposing evidence.—In re Kingsbury, Case No. 7,816.

An act which the statute declares shall be prima facie evidence of fraud must be deemed contrary to its provisions, unless the presumption is repelled by opposing proofs.—In re Kingsbury, Case No. 7,816.

The testimony of the parties to an alleged preferential transaction as to their intention is entitled to little weight against the proof of the transaction itself.—Oxford Iron Co. v. Slafter, Case No. 10,637.

The fact that the preference was taken to preserve the bankrupt's assets, and with the intent of making a distribution of the proceeds of the property pro rata among all the creditors, does not give the creditor a right to prove his claim.—In re Walton, Case No. 17,130.

An attempt to gain a preference which entirely failed will not subject the creditor to the penalty of the statute as one who knowingly receives a preference.—In re Bousfield & Poole Mfg. Co., Case No. 1,703.

A creditor who receives money and goods from his debtor, knowing him to be insolvent, is guilty of obtaining a fraudulent preference, and, if he contests the right of the assignee, he cannot prove his claim.—In re Forsyth, Case No. 4,948.

The holder of a note with security therefor given by the maker to the indorser, the holder having taken it as an incident to the note, which security is rejected as within the prohibition of Act 1867, § 35, will nevertheless be permitted to prove his claim upon the note.—In re Kansas City Stone & Marble Mfg. Co., Case No. 7,610.

A debtor suffers his property to be taken on legal process when he allows it to be seized in execution on a judgment obtained by default.—In re Forsyth, Case No. 4,948.

A second mortgage on a stock of goods, given in place of a mortgage executed two years prior thereto, held to supersede the prior lien, and to be a fraudulent preference.—In re Jordon, Case No. 7,529.

A creditor who, having reason to believe that his debtor could not pay his debts in the ordinary course of business, secured from him goods and accounts against third persons to be applied on his debt, and indorsed on his notes sums so received under false dates, and who failed to surrender the property to the assignee, is not entitled to prove his debt, having secured a preference contrary to the provisions of Act 1867.—In re Kingsbury, Case No. 7,816.

Where the transferee of an insolvent has not acted in good faith, he will not be allowed amounts which he paid to obtain the benefit of the transfer.—Cookingham v. Morgan, Case No. 3,183.

The restriction of the proof of a debt of a preferred creditor to a moiety is limited to cases of actual fraud, and not to cases of mere knowledge that a preference was intended. (Act June 22, 1874, § 12).—In re Black, Case No. 1,459.

A mere fraud on the bankrupt law, by accepting a preference in violation of its provisions, is not an "actual fraud," which will prevent proof of the debt, under Act June 22, 1874, § 12.—In re Riorden, Case No. 11,852.

An effort to secure an honest debt from a failing creditor is not an actual fraud, within the meaning of section 5021.—In re Bousfield & Poole Mfg. Co., Case No. 1,703.

Only a moiety of the debt can be proved where the creditor received a preference with knowledge of his debtor's insolvency, and that a fraud on Act 1867 was intended, except in cases of constructive fraud, where he voluntarily restores the preference.—In re Schoenenberger, Case No. 12,473.

A preferred creditor cannot prove his debt, or any part of it, until he has voluntarily or by compulsion surrendered his preference.—In re Currier, Case No. 3,492.

Where there is a surplus in the hands of the assignee after paying all other creditors in full, he cannot object to proof of a claim by a judgment creditor from whom the assignee had recovered as a fraudulent preference the amount collected, before the bankruptcy of the debtor, on the judgment.—In re McGuire, Case No. 8,813.

§ 395. —— Surrender of preference.

Under Act 1867, § 23, a creditor, who voluntarily surrenders to the assignee a preference received contrary to section 39 of such act, may prove his debt.—In re Drummond, Case No. 4,094; In re Montgomery, Id. 9,728; In re Reece, Id. 11,633; In re Scott, Id. 12,518; Coxe v. Hale, Id. 3,310; In re Clarke, Id. 2,843; Zahm v. Fry, Id. 18,198. CONTRA, see In re Colman, Case No. 3,021; In re Princeton, Id. 11,433; In re Walton, Id. 17,130; Bingham v. Frost, Id. 1,413; In re Israel, Id. 7,112.

A mere repayment by a preferred creditor to the debtor, after a petition in bankruptcy is filed, does not take the place of a surrender to the assignee.—In re Currier, Case No. 3,492.

A creditor who has made a full surrender of a fraudulent preference before suit brought against him may prove his claim. After suit brought, and before a recovery, it is discretionary with the court to permit proof of the claim.—In re Stephens, Case No. 13,365.

A preferred creditor may surrender (Act 1867, § 23) at any time before judgment against him in a suit brought by the assignee, and his right to prove his debt will not be affected by the commencement or pendency of such suit.—In re Kipp, Case No. 7,836. CONTRA, see Phelps v. Sterns, Case No. 11,080.

A preferred creditor who surrenders his preference after suit brought by the assignee, and the taking of proofs therein, and a finding against him but before judgment, and pays the taxable costs of the suit on its dismissal, may prove his claim.—Burr v. Hopkins, Case No. 2,192; In re Riorden, Id. 11,852.

There can be no surrender by a creditor of a preference under section 23, after there has been a recovery of the property by the assignee under section 35 or section 39 (Act 1867).—In re Stephens, Case No. 13,365; In re Leland, Id. 8,230; Id. 8,235, affirming Case No. 8,231; In re Cramer, Case No. 3,345; In re Lee, Id. 8,179.

The payment by the creditor of the judgment obtained against him by the assignee does not revive his right to prove against the estate.—In re Davidson, Case No. 3,599; In re Richter's Estate, Id. 11,803; In re Tonkin, Id. 14,094; In re Ayers, Id. 685.

An adjudication which does not give the assignee possession of the mortgaged property, but declares against the validity of the lien of a mortgage, is a recovery by the assignee, within the meaning of Act 1867, § 39, which will prevent the creditors who have received a preference under it from proving their debts.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,230.

Under the amendment of June 22, 1874, § 12, providing that the person receiving a preference with knowledge that a fraud on the act was intended, if a creditor, shall not be allowed to prove for more than a moiety of his debt, a preferred creditor, after recovery against him by the assignee, can prove no part of his debt under any circumstances.—In re Cramer, Case No. 3,345; In re Stein, Id. 13,352; In re Black, Id. 1,459; In re Daken, Id. 3,539.

Under such statute, notwithstanding a recovery against the preferred creditor by the assignee, the creditor may prove his entire debt if he has not actively assisted in the fraud and has paid the judgment.—In re Newcomer, Case No. 10,148; In re Kaufman, Id. 7,627.

Where such creditors have actively assisted in the fraud he may still prove a moiety of his claim.—In re Kaufman, Case No. 7,627. CONTRA, see In re Cramer, Case No. 3,345; In re Dakin, Id. 3,539.

A decree, in a contest between the assignee and the claimant, on a reference as to surplus proceeds of a foreclosure sale, declaring claimant's mortgage to be in fraud of the act, is binding in the bankruptcy proceedings, and the fact that the claimant's mortgage was declared invalid upon such proceedings does not give the claimant the right to prove his claim, as this did not amount to a voluntary surrender by him.—In re Dakin, Case No. 3,539.

Creditors recovering judgment after the adjudication need not vacate their judgments in order to prove the claims on which they were rendered.—In re Stevens, Case No. 13,391.

A creditor, who has been compelled to repay the amount received as a condition of consenting to a composition, the composition having failed, is entitled to prove his claim, and receive dividends.—Brookmire v. Bean, Case No. 1,942.

§ 396. —— Effect on other claims not preferred.

A creditor receiving a fraudulent preference from the firm of A., B. & C. is not barred from proving another debt against the firm of B. & C.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,079.

Where a preferred creditor has two separate claims, and receives a preference on one of them alone, he may prove the other without a surrender of the preference.—In re Richter's Estate, Case No. 11,803; In re Holland, Id. 6,604; In re Lee, Id. 8,179.

The fact that an insolvent has preferred a creditor by transferring property to him in satisfaction of a claim due at that time will not debar such creditor from proving other claims against the estate of the bankrupt which were not due at the time of such transfer, and were not in any way secured thereby.—In re Arnold, Case No. 551.

A creditor who secures a preference by obtaining property applicable to his whole debt, and indorses the payment as made only on part of the notes held by him, will nevertheless be prevented from proving his whole debt, and not merely the notes upon which the payment was indorsed.—In re Kingsbury, Case No. 7,816.

An open, running account, for merchandise sold, consisting of various items of charges and credits at different times, is but a single claim, and the receiving of a preference upon such account, which is not surrendered according to Act 1867, § 23, will disentitle the creditor to a dividend on any part thereof.—In re Richter's Estate, Case No. 11,803.

Where a creditor of a bankrupt proved a claim composed of a merchandise account and an accommodation note, and subsequently received payments from the bankrupt on account of the accommodation note, the creditor cannot divide the proofs into two parts, after objection by the bankrupt's assignee that such creditor had received a preference.—In re Barnes, Case No. 1,013.

A retiring partner who receives a fraudulent preference may be allowed to prove such partnership debts as he has paid.—In re Stephens, Case No. 13,365.

3. Rules Applicable to Secured Claims.

§ 397. Who are secured creditors.

A mortgage given by a debtor before his bankruptcy to indemnify a surety will be held by the bankruptcy court to inure to the benefit of the creditors to whom the surety became bound.—In re Pierce, Case No. 11,140.

A banker has no lien upon the moneys of a depositor for any separate debt which the depositor may be owing him, and he must prove his debt with the other creditors.—In re Warner, Case No. 17,177.

The claim of a bank arising out of commercial paper taken by the bankrupt firm, and discounted by it, is not a secured claim, and is not reduced by collections from the makers, not in excess of the balance due after payment of dividends from the bankrupt estate.—In re Weeks, Case No. 17,349.

The joint note of a husband and wife, secured by a deed of trust of the wife's property, should be allowed as a secured claim against the estate of the husband, although the wife may have died leaving heirs. Act 1867.—In re Hartel, Case No. 6,157.

A creditor who has never accepted a deed of trust made to a third person for his benefit, and who disclaims all interest in it, may prove his claim as unsecured.—In re Saunders, Case No. 12,371.

§ 398. Right and duty to prove claims.

As regards proof of debts, secured and unsecured creditors stand upon the same footing.—In re Bowie, Case No. 1,728.

A creditor may be required to prove his debt, reciting the security and setting forth the consideration, and the assignee may contest the claim for any usurious surplus.—Bromley v. Smith, Case No. 1,922.

Where a creditor has a mortgage upon the bankrupt's homestead, he may be required to exhaust that remedy, before he can enforce his other remedies against the bankrupt's estate.—In re Sauthoff, Case No. 12,379.

In the case of obligations loaned by third persons to the bankrupt as security for debts, the creditor will not be required to first exhaust his remedy on them.—In re Sauthoff, Case No. 12,379.

Where a policy of insurance on the bankrupt's life, payable to his wife, is given to a creditor as security for a debt, he will not be required to exhaust his remedy on such policy before resorting to the general fund, as the rights of the wife are superior to those of the assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Sauthoff, Case No. 12,379.

The creditors of a bankrupt having security, whether by judgment, mortgage, or otherwise, must prove their debts against the bankrupt and foreclose their liens under the authority of the bankruptcy court, or they may be barred of their debt and lose the benefit of their securities.—Davis v. Anderson, Case No. 3,623; In re Davis, Id. 3,618.

A secured creditor cannot enforce his security after commencement of bankruptcy proceedings without first proving his debt, and receiving permission of the bankruptcy court.—Lee v. Franklin Ave. German Sav. Inst., Case No. 8,188.

§ 399. Surrender of security.

Creditor holding security from a third person may prove his debt without surrendering it, but otherwise with security from the bankrupt.—In re Babcock, Case No. 696.

Security given by the bankrupt to a surety must be surrendered or applied before he proves his debt against the assets of the principal.—In re High, Case No. 6,473; In re Holbrook, Id. 6,588.

A debt guarantied may be proved as unsecured, without surrendering the guaranty under Act 1867.—In re Anderson, Case No. 350.

Creditors holding notes or bills secured by a mortgage to an accommodation indorser have a lien for securing their payment, and must release their lien before they will be allowed to prove their claims for the whole amount as unsecured. (Act 1867, § 20.)—In re Jaycox, Cases Nos. 7,240, 7,242.

A creditor receiving a negotiable bond from his debtor as security for a loan cannot set up want of title in the debtor and prove its whole debt without surrendering the bond.—In re Norris, Case No. 10,303.

A creditor holding security on property which never belonged to the bankrupt may prove his whole debt without first disposing of the security. (Act 1867, § 20.)—In re Dunkerson, Case No. 4,157.

The amount of a debt, after deducting the value of real estate mortgaged to secure it, and the value of chattels acquired from foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, may be allowed.—In re Cram, Case No. 3,343.

§ 400. Waiver of lien or security by proving claim.

Proof of a judgment debt waives the lien.—Briggs v. Stephens, Case No. 1,873.

A creditor, ignorant of his legal rights, will not be held, in the absence of proof of fraud, to intend what his innocent acts imply, particularly if acting in a fiduciary capacity.—In re Brand, Case No. 1,809.

Where a mortgage, pledge, or lien is given by a principal debtor to secure his surety, and both become insolvent, and the holders of such debts prove in full against both estates and vote under both bankruptcies, they thereby waive their security.—Ex parte Morris, Case No. 9,823.

An existing lien upon specific property may be preserved by proving the claim in bankruptcy, and having the lien allowed.—Bucknam v. Dunn, Case No. 2,096.

§ 400a. Proof of deficiency.

Security held by a creditor may be taken by him at its value as found by the bankruptcy court, and his claim proved for the balance, or it may be sold under order of such court. This is a matter resting within its discretion.—In re Grant, Case No. 5,690.

A creditor having a lien on property is admitted as a creditor only for the balance of the debt after deducting the value of the property.—In re Winn, Case No. 17,876.

A creditor, who has a security for his debt, may prove his claim for the overplus, without abandoning the security, but must set forth the value of the security.—In re Bolton, Case No. 1,614.

One owning a debt secured by an insurance policy on the life of the bankrupt is entitled to prove the amount of the debt less the surrender value of the policy.—In re Newland, Case No. 10,170.

Where an insurance policy for $4,000 on the life of the bankrupt is set forth in his lists of debts as security for a debt of $4,000, upon which $550 has been paid before the bankruptcy, and the debt is proved for $3,450, and the surrender value of the policy at the time is credited on the debt by order of court, and a dividend is subsequently paid, and the holder of the policy keeps it alive by paying premium, and before another dividend is paid the bankrupt dies, the debt must be charged at its original amount, without deducting the surrender value, with interest, and the payments must be credited with interest, and the amount received on the policy must be applied to extinguish the balance due on the debt, the creditor having credit for all premiums paid by him after the petition in bankruptcy was filed, and out of the balance, if any, the assignee must be refunded the $550 and the dividend, with interest.—In re Newland, Case No. 10,171.

Where the bankrupt has given a mortgage to secure accommodation notes and indorsements by the mortgagee, the holders of the paper are entitled to prove the balance of their debt after sharing pro rata in the proceeds of the mortgaged property.—Ex parte Dalby, Case No. 3,540.

§ 401. Proof of debt as unsecured.

Where the proof of a debt states that the sum claimed is the amount of the judgment, setting forth the particulars of the judgment, and states that its consideration is goods sold, and that for the sum claimed no security has been received, but the proof does not state that the judgment is a lien upon real estate, when in fact it is, the debt is not proved as unsecured, and the security of the lien of the judgment is not surrendered to the assignee.—Sedgwick v. Stewart, Case No. 12,625.

A mortgage securing a note is not extinguished by proving the note as unsecured, but the assignee is subrogated to the rights of the holder.—Hiscock v. Jaycox, Case No. 6,531.

A creditor proving a claim as unsecured will be required to relinquish all security held by it.—In re Granger, Case No. 5,684.

A creditor proving his whole debt as unsecured, without disclosing the security, waives his lien.—In re Brand, Case No. 1,809.

Where a creditor, without any fraudulent intent, has, in ignorance of his rights, proved a secured claim as unsecured, he will be allowed to amend by setting up his security.—Ex parte Harwood, Case No. 6,185; Ex parte Lapsley, Id. 8,083; In re Clark, Id. 2,806; In re Hope Min. Co., Id. 6,681; In re Jaycox, Id. 7,242; In re McConnell, Id. 8,712.

A secured creditor proving his claim as unsecured will be allowed to amend, after receipt of dividend, only in the case of mistake or ignorance, in the absence of fraud, where all persons can be placed in statu quo.—In re Parkes, Case No. 10,754.

Creditors who are also debtors to the bankrupt in an amount less than their claim will be allowed to withdraw their proof, pay back a dividend received, and file new proof of their claim as secured, to the extent of the amount due from them, after a suit brought by the trustees to recover the amount due from such creditors, on their averring that they had never intended to claim any more than the difference.—In re Kaufman, Case No. 7,626.

§ 402. Proof of debt secured.

A creditor secured by a deed of trust, who has caused the property to be sold after petition filed, may thereafter prove his debt as a secured debt.—In re Ruehle, Case No. 12,113.

A bank having lien under its by-laws on stock for indebtedness of a stockholder should prove its debt as secured, and obtain leave to sell the stock to apply thereon.—In re Morrison, Case No. 9,839.

A creditor holding a trust deed to another as security must prove his debt as a secured debt, and obtain permission of the court to sell the property.—In re Needham, Case No. 10,081a.

4. AMOUNT.

§ 403. How determined in general.

The creditor and the bankrupt cannot submit to arbitration the question of the amount due from the bankrupt's estate.—In re Ford, Case No. 4,932.

§ 404. As affected by date of accrual.

A note which falls due after the filing of the petition is not a provable debt for its face value at the date of such filing.—In re Riker, Case No. 11,833.

§ 405. Demand note, etc., purchased at discount.

The father of the bankrupt, being assignee of his estate, under a voluntary assignment, cannot purchase debts owing by the bankrupt, at a discount, with the trust funds, and hold them, as against other creditors, for their face value.—In re Houghton, Cases Nos. 6,727, 6,728.

An agent of the bankrupts who purchases their note from creditors for less than its face cannot prove for the balance.—In re Lathrop, Case No. 8,103.

A settlement between the pledgee and the insolvent pledgor, by which notes are taken as payment for a certain sum, will not prevent proving them for their face value against the estate of the bankrupt makers.—Ex parte Kelty, Case No. 7,681.

An indorsee before maturity of a negotiable note, without notice of existing equities in New York, can only prove against the estate of the maker the amount paid therefor.—In re Shelbourne, Case No. 12,745.

Where a mortgage is given to indemnify the mortgagee for his advances, and he loans his acceptances to the mortgagor, and after the bankruptcy of the latter buys up the paper at a discount, he can charge against the mortgaged property only what he paid in cash to take up the acceptances.—Ex parte Ames, Case No. 323.

§ 406. Interest on claim.

The amount proved should not include interest beyond the day of adjudication.—In re Bugbee, Case No. 2,115; In re Haake, Id. 5,883.

A secured creditor may, however, apply the proceeds of his security to the satisfaction of his debt, principal and interest, up to the time of payment, when so stipulated in his contract.—In re Haake, Case No. 5,883.

Claims purchased for the purpose of stopping proceedings against the bankrupt should be proven as of the date of adjudication, but may draw interest to date of actual payment.—In re Strachan, Case No. 13,519.

Creditors, who have proved their claims against the estate of a bankrupt, are entitled to interest on their claims from the filing of the petition to the date of payment, if the bankrupt's estate is sufficient to pay the same to all.—In re Hagan, Case No. 5,898; In re Town, Id. 14,112; In re Bank of North Carolina, Id. 895, reversing Case No. 894.

Separate creditors are not entitled, as against firm creditors, to be paid interest on their debts subsequent to the adjudication.—In re Berrian, Case No. 1,351.

A claim upon the judgment obtained by the United States against the bankrupt, after the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, will be allowed, together with the costs and interest to the date of payment.—In re Bousfield & Poole Mfg. Co., Case No. 1,704.

Interest will not be allowed where the debt depends upon a new promise.—In re Reed, Case No. 11,635.

The rule in Illinois that, where a debt is usurious, the creditor forfeits all the interest, will be enforced in the bankruptcy court, when a creditor offers such debt for proof.—In re Prescott, Case No. 11,389.

§ 407. Part payment of claim.

The holder of a note may prove the entire amount against the maker's estate, though he has been partly paid by the indorser.—In re Ellerhorst, Case No. 4,381.

The holder of a note made by the bankrupt, who received from an indorser part payment in release of his liability, must prove the whole note, as he is a trustee for the indorser.—In re Souther, Case No. 13,184.

The receipt of partial payment from an accommodation acceptor after the bankruptcy of the drawer does not prevent the holder from proving the full amount due at the time of the adjudication.—Downing v. Traders' Bank, Case No. 4,046.

Holder of a draft may prove for whole amount against drawer's estates, though he has been paid in part by acceptor whom he has released, and who in turn released drawer.—In re Baxter, Case No. 1,120.

The holders of a note, who have received a dividend from the estate in bankruptcy of the maker, can prove only the balance against the estate in bankruptcy of the indorser.—In re Howard, Case No. 6,750.

The holder of a note, who receives payment from the maker before submitting proof against the estate of the indorser, can only prove for the balance; otherwise where he receives payment after the affidavit is filed.—Ex parte Harris, Case No. 6,109.

A surety who pays the debt of a bankrupt principal can only prove the difference between the debt and the amount realized on securities held by him as indemnity.—In re Baldwin, Case No. 796.

A creditor selling a note of the bankrupts to their agent for less than its face, intending to compromise his claim, cannot prove for the balance.—In re Lathrop, Case No. 8,103.

§ 408. Note held as pledge.

A pledgee in good faith and for value before maturity of promissory note can receive dividends from the estate of the bankrupt makers only for the amount for which he holds them in pledge, where the equities between the original parties would prevent the pledgor from proving them.—Ex parte Kelty, Case No. 7,681.

5. SET-OFF.

See, also, post, § 492.

§ 409. When allowed in general.

The acceptor or indorser of a bill of exchange, who pays it after the bankruptcy of the drawer, may offset the same against the bankrupt's assignees, if the debt was subsisting when the action was brought.—Marks v. Barker, Case No. 9,096.

Nothing can be set off, under Rev. St. § 5073, against the principal of a debt due a creditor, except a debt due from the creditor to the bankrupt.—In re Purcell, Case No. 11,470.

A set-off cannot be allowed in the case of a fiduciary relation between the bankrupt and a creditor.—Scammon v. Kimball, Case No. 12,435.

A note which is subject to an offset for a larger amount is not a provable debt.—In re Ford, Case No. 4,932.

In the case of accommodation notes given by the bankrupt to a creditor, and afterwards proved against the estate by the holders, the dividend paid upon the notes may be set off against the dividend due such creditors.—In re Purcell, Case No. 11,470.

Where bankrupts, as agents of a corporation, consign goods to a firm for sale, and prior to the receipt of the goods such firm has accepted and paid drafts of the bankrupts to an amount exceeding all their consignments, such transaction is not a payment which will discharge the firm from liability for the proceeds of the goods, as such firm could not apply such proceeds of the goods of the corporation to the payment of a debt due to them from the bankrupts.—In re Baxter, Case No. 1,119.

Where no notice is taken of a seller's letter refusing to deliver goods on credit as agreed unless an old debt were paid, and the buyer goes into bankruptcy, and his assignee does not offer to complete the contract, the notice does not constitute such a repudiation of the contract as will authorize its value being set-off against the seller's old debt.—In re Wheeler, Case No. 17,488.

A debtor of a bankrupt who accepts a transfer of the bankrupt's note, without any stipulation concerning the terms of such transfer, holds the same merely as a trustee, and cannot set it off against the debt due by him to the bankrupt.—In re Lane, Case No. 8,043.

The bailee of an insolvent's goods, who, before a petition in bankruptcy was filed, employed the debtor to assist in the management of the goods, is entitled to a credit for the amount paid therefor, as against the assignee in bankruptcy.—Catlin v. Foster, Case No. 2,519.

A court of equity may disallow a set-off of a claim against the bankrupt, when it would work injustice (Act 1867, § 20).—Hitchcock v. Rollo, Cases Nos. 6,535, 6,536.

An order expunging a claim against the bankrupt, where the creditor did not appear before the register, is not such an adjudication thereof as to prevent the creditor from pleading it as a set-off in an action by the assignee.—Catlin v. Foster, Case No. 2,519.

A claim for a loss under an insurance policy may be set off against an indebtedness to the bankrupt insurance company under Act 1867, § 20, though such set-off gives a preference, as the rights of the parties are to be determined by the business relations of the parties at the time of the loss, and, where the indebtedness is not due, a bill in equity will lie to establish the set-off.—Drake v. Rollo, Case No. 4,066.

A claim against an insolvent insurance company for loss under its policies cannot be set off against an unpaid subscription to its capital stock, where it is insolvent.—Sawyer v. Hoag, Case No. 12,400; Scammon v. Kimball, Id. 12,435.

Stockholders of an insolvent corporation who are also creditors cannot be allowed to deduct the amount due them from their respective proportions of the unpaid capital.—Wilbur v. Stockholders, Case No. 17,636.

A defendant cannot, under the bankrupt law of 1800, set off a debt due to him from a partnership against a claim by the assignee of one of the firm who became bankrupt.—Oxley v. Tucker, Case No. 10,638.

A creditor who has proved his claim in bankruptcy may withdraw the same, and plead it as an offset, in a suit brought by the assignee against him. (Rev. St. §§ 5073, 5105.)—Harmanson v. Bain, Case No. 6,073.

A creditor collecting money for his debtor, and failing to pay it over, has no priority over other creditors.—Bank of Commerce v. Russell, Case No. 884.

§ 410. Bank deposits.

A deposit in a bank becomes, upon the bankruptcy of the depositor, a security for, and payment pro tanto of, his liabilities to the bank, by the operation of the law of mutual credits.—Hough v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 6,721; Ex parte Howard Nat. Bank, Id. 6,764.

A bank holding an indorsed note may set off the same against the general deposit account of the maker, under Act 1867, § 20.—Blair v. Allen, Case No. 1,483.

A bank has the right to set off, against a deposit account of the bankrupt, a draft of the bankrupt maturing after his failure, and before he was declared a bankrupt.—In re Petrie, Case No. 11,040.

But a liability as indorser, where the principals are solvent, cannot be set off against such deposit.—Ex parte Howard Nat. Bank, Case No. 6,764.

§ 411. Claims purchased.

One who purchases a negotiable note after a commission of bankruptcy has issued may prove the same, subject to all legal set-offs existing at the time of the bankruptcy.—Humphreys v. Blight's Assignees, Case No. 6,870.

A bond due from a bankrupt to defendant cannot be set off against defendant's note to a third person, assigned to the assignee in bankruptcy after commission issued.—McIver v. Wilson, Case No. 8,833.

A claim against the bankrupt purchased before the filing of the petition, but with full notice of insolvency, and with intent to use the same as a set-off, is available for that purpose to the purchaser, under Act 1867, § 20.—In re City Bank of Savings, Loan & Discount, Case No. 2,742; Hovey v. Home Ins. Co., Id. 6,743. CONTRA, see Hitchcock v. Rollo, Cases Nos. 6,535, 6,536; Sawyer v. Hoag, Id. 12,400.

The amendment of June 22, 1874, § 6, providing that, in case of compulsory bankruptcy, no offset shall be allowed of a claim purchased or transferred after the act of bankruptcy in respect of which the adjudication shall be made, and with a view of making such set-off, does not apply to voluntary bankruptcy; and a claim purchased with full knowledge of insolvency of the bankrupt, and with intent to use the same as a set-off, is available in a voluntary proceeding.—Lloyd v. Turner, Case No. 8,436.

Under such amendment, equity will not aid a person indebted to the bankrupt to set off against his indebtedness a demand which he bought after knowledge of the general suspension of commercial paper, though the purchaser denies that he bought the same with intention of using it as a set-off—Hunt v. Holmes, Case No. 6,890.

Under such amendment, a debtor buying a claim against the bankrupt before bankruptcy proceedings are commenced against him, but with knowledge of insolvency and contemplated bankruptcy, cannot set off the same against his debt.—Mattocks v. Lovering, Case No. 9,299; Rollins v. Twitchell, Id. 12,027.

A debtor of the bankrupt who has purchased negotiable notes of the bankrupt, after his insolvency, but without notice thereof, and before the filing of an involuntary petition against him, may, under such amendment, set off such notes against his debt.—Mattox v. Cady, Case No. 9,301.

One purchasing a grain-storage receipt issued by an insolvent milling company, without knowledge of the insolvency, and who is refused delivery of the grain on presenting his receipt, is entitled to set off the value of the grain thus converted, in an action against him by the assignee to recover assets.—McCabe v. Winship, Case No. 8,668.

One to whom a bankrupt is indebted for money advanced, and who, before the bankruptcy, has purchased a note of the bankrupt, having in his possession at the time of the bankruptcy goods of the bankrupt, consigned to him for sale, may sell the goods, and, as against a claim for the proceeds, set off his claims against the bankrupt, under Rev. St. § 5073, as amended by Act 1874.—Goodrich v. Dobson, Case No. 18,297.

§ 412. Amount of set-off.

Where a negotiable note is payable in greenback currency, and the payee's other debtors are in the habit of paying in the payee's depreciated certificates of indebtedness, the rate at which the maker may set off such certificates, held by himself, is their market value at the time the note matured.—Harmanson v. Bain, Case No. 6,073.

6. PROCEDURE.

§ 413. Power of register in general.

Where a question of law or fact is raised in respect to the sufficiency of proof of a debt, it must be certified for the decision of the judge.—In re Bogert, Case No. 1,598.

A claim by petitioning creditors for counsel fees incurred before adjudication must be first presented to the court by petition.—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,886.

Assignee ordered to furnish bankrupt a list of creditors who have proved debts.—In re Blaisdell, Case No. 1,488.

Form of relief of creditors of a corporation, where the bankrupts hold its unpaid stock, and the corporation has not made assessments thereon.—Gibson v. Lewis, Case No. 5,398.

§ 414. Before whom proof to be made.

The clerk of the district court, who is a standing commissioner, cannot take proof of debts, under Act 1841.—In re Gaylor, Case No. 5,282a.

Although the bankruptcy proceedings have been stayed, having been superséded by arrangement under Act 1867, § 43, the sole power to admit claims against the bankrupt's estate is not vested in the trustees under the arrangement, but they should be proved before the register.—In re Bakewell, Case No. 788.

Debts due to creditors residing within the district where the proceedings are pending must be proved before a register of the district. A commissioner of the circuit court cannot take such proof under Act 1867.—In re Strauss, Case No. 13,532; In re Haley, Id. 5,918.

Under the amendment of July 27, 1868, a debt may be proved before a United States commissioner, whether the creditor resides in the district where the proceedings are pending or another district.—In re Shepard, Case No. 12,753; In re Merrick, Id. 9,463.

The deposition of a creditor residing in another district must be taken before a register in that district; and, where residing in a foreign country, before a minister, consul, or vice consul of the United States, under Act 1867.—In re Strauss, Case No. 13,532.

Proof of debt in a foreign country can only be taken before one of the officers named in Rev. St. § 5079, and not before a consular agent.—In re Lynch, Case No. 8,635.

Proof of claim cannot be made before a notary.—In re Strauss, Case No. 13,532.

Proofs of debt taken before the attorney of the creditor are not admissible.—In re Nebe, Case No. 10,073.

Proof taken before a notary public, who is the attorney and solicitor of record for the bankrupt, will not be allowed to be filed.—In re Keyser, Case No. 7,748.

§ 415. Time of making proof.

In involuntary proceedings, the petitioning creditors on whose motion an order to show cause has been issued need not prove their debts anew.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519.

Proof of claims may be filed after an order discharging the assignee has been set aside and the assignee ordered to proceed.—In re Maybin, Case No. 9,337.

A creditor may prove a debt and receive dividends at a fourth general meeting of creditors, called five years after the bankrupt's discharge, for the purpose of declaring a dividend from assets unexpectedly realized.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,941.

§ 416. Form and sufficiency of deposition.

Creditors must prove their debts absolutely, without any protest or qualification or reservation.—Dutton v. Freeman, Case No. 4,210.

A claim is not duly proved, and must be rejected, unless it appears from the statement of the deponent thereto that a debt exists which the creditor has a present right to have paid out of the bankrupt's estate.—In re Walton, Case No. 17,129.

Proof of debt founded on a promissory note must set forth the consideration of the note, and whether any payments have been made on it.—In re Loder, Case No. 8,456.

A bona fide holder of commercial paper acquired before maturity may prove the same on showing that he paid a valid consideration, without showing the consideration between the original parties (Act 1867, § 22).—In re Lake Superior Ship-Canal, Railroad & Iron Co., Case No. 7,998.

In proving a claim founded upon a note in which only the initials of the Christian names are given the full names must appear.—In re Valentine, Case No. 16,812.

A lien creditor must disclose the particular character of his lien.—In re Bridgman, Case No. 1,866.

The particulars of the consideration must be stated in the deposition.—In re Elder, Case No. 4,326.

A demand by its terms payable in gold coin should be proved according to its terms.—In re Elder, Case No. 4,326.

A deposition filed by a creditor, setting forth a claim for breach of contract, but not asking for assessment of the alleged damages, is not due proof of the debt.—In re Clough, Case No. 2,905.

Proof of a debt in the case of a bankrupt firm should show with reasonable certainty whether it was contracted by the firm or the individual partners.—In re Walton, Case No. 17,129.

A nonnegotiable chose in action may be proved by the deposition alone of the assignee thereof, but such deposition should show the name of the original creditor to enable the assignee in bankruptcy to compare the debt with the books of the bankrupt.—Ex parte Davenport, Case No. 3,586.

A deposition by the debtor that he believes the account against him to be correct is admissible.—Cambioso v. Maffet, Case No. 2,330.

Depositions to prove claims must contain the averments required by Rev. St. § 5077, and must be made by the party authorized, and conform substantially to the prescribed forms.—In re Port Huron Dry Dock Co., Case No. 11,293.

A proof of debt in the mode required by the statute establishes a prima facie case, though it is subject to objection and counter proof.—In re Saunders, Case No. 12,371.

Informality in proofs will not avail where the creditor, as a witness, has sworn positively of his own knowledge.—McKinsey v. Harding, Case No. 8,866.

§ 417. Who may make deposition.

A person who has transferred a claim against the bankrupt cannot prove it for the true owners.—In re Ford, Case No. 4,932.

A member of a bankrupt firm cannot represent claims against the estate.—In re Mitteldorfer, Case No. 9,674.

Claims against the bankrupt estate may be proved by attorney.—In re South Boston Iron Co., Case No. 13,183.

A creditor cannot prove by an attorney testifying upon information and belief, unless he is prevented from giving the affidavit, as provided by Act March 2, 1867, § 22.—In re Barnes, Case No. 1,012.

The absence of a claimant, which will render a proof of debt by an agent admissible, must be "from the United States"; nor will the oath of an agent that he is better acquainted with the facts than his principal render the deposition of the agent alone admissible as proof of debts.—In re Whyte, Case No. 17,606.

Proof of debt may be made by an agent who has had exclusive charge and control of the same, and knows personally all the facts required to be sworn to in proving it, the creditor himself having no personal knowledge of the facts.—In re Watrous, Case No. 17,270.

Officers of corporations, to make proof of debts due from a bankrupt, must receive special appointment for that purpose, under Act 1841.—Albany Exch. Bank v. Johnson, Case No. 133.

The fact that the president of a corporation had ceased to be a stockholder cannot be raised as an objection to proof of a claim by him in favor of the corporation against his estate in bankruptcy, under Act 1867.—In re Morgan, Case No. 9,797.

The receiver of the property of a creditor is an assignee of a debt due to such creditor, and may prove the debt, supported by the deposition required by general order No. 34.—In re Mills, Case No. 9,612.

Claims of a corporation may be proved by a receiver appointed by the state court on its dissolution.—In re Republic Ins. Co., Case No. 11,705.

A receiver of a bankrupt corporation can prove a debt due the corporation against a bankrupt in a bankrupt court in another state.—Ex parte Norwood, Case No. 10,364.

§ 418. Signatures and authentication.

The omission of the commissioner who took the deposition in proof of debts to sign the jurat may be supplied.—In re McKibben, Case No. 8,859.

Proof of debt taken before a notary must be authenticated by his official seal, which must be sufficient to prove itself.—In re Nebe, Case No. 10,073.

§ 419. Receiving and filing.

All proofs of debts must be sent to the assignee for him to register, as required by Act 1867, § 22, and thereafter returned to the register, and filed in the clerk's office with the other papers, under general order No. 7.—Anonymous, Case No. 461.

The bankruptcy court cannot refuse to receive a proof which appears on its face to have been taken by a proper officer, and to be correct in form and substance.—In re Merrick, Case No. 9,463.

A register need not file a deposition for proof of debt taken and certified to before another register, which does not appear to him to be in conformity with law, but should adjourn the issue into court, under section 4, Act 1867.—In re Loder, Case No. 8,456.

The debt is not considered as proven where the creditor retains possession of his deposition.—In re Shepard, Case No. 12,753.

Receiving and filing a proof confers jurisdiction over the claim, but concludes nothing, and the court may still revise, correct, or reject it.—In re Merrick, Case No. 9,463.

It is not the duty of the register to notify the bankrupt or his attorney of the filing of proof of any claim before the first meeting of creditors.—In re Patterson, Case No. 10,814.

§ 420. Amendment of proof.

A creditor may correct clerical errors in his proof of claim at any time before final dividend.—In re Myrick, Case No. 10,000.

Where a creditor filed his proof of debt on May 28, 1869, and in October, 1869, was examined by the assignee, and he afterwards applied to amend his proof, his application was granted, although it was opposed by the assignee on the ground that the application was too late.—In re Montgomery, Case No. 9,729.

An application to amend proof of claims on two notes so as to show that a new note had been given in settlement will be denied, as a new claim may be proved on the new note.—In re Montgomery, Case No. 9,731.

§ 421. Withdrawal of proof.

The register cannot order or permit the withdrawal of proof of a debt after he has passed upon it, and allowed, certified, and transmitted the claim to the assignees.—In re McIntosh, Case No. 8,826.

A creditor cannot withdraw his proof of debt, though he can have leave to withdraw the instrument by which it is evidenced. Act 1867, § 24.—In re Emison, Case No. 4,459.

Where proof of a debt was made under a mistake of law or fact, the creditor will be permitted to withdraw it, but only where all parties will be restored to their original position.—In re Hubbard, Case No. 6,813.

When the proof of debt made by a creditor against a bankrupt contains mistakes, the proof cannot be withdrawn, but the creditor will be allowed and required to amend his proof.—In re Lowerre, Case No. 8,577.

After leave has been granted to creditors to amend their proofs of debt, they cannot be withdrawn by such creditors.—In re Hallie, Case No. 5,960.

The court will not grant leave to withdraw a proof merely for the purpose of allowing a creditor to continue an arrest of the bankrupt which was made before commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy.—In re Wiener, Case No. 17,620.

§ 422. Expunging proof.

Where it appeared that the amount and nature of the claim were incorrectly entered upon the books, though the proof itself and the dividend sheet correctly stated it, and a dividend had been paid upon due notice, a motion to expunge the proof of such claim on the grounds of such incorrect statement, and that it was barred by the statute of limitations, will be denied, as the inaccuracy of the record in regard to the claim was not a sufficient ground, and the statute of limitations did not apply.—In re Alden, Case No. 151a.

A claim founded upon notes indorsed by a bankrupt will not be expunged where it appears that they were negotiated for the bankrupt's sole benefit, notwithstanding they were made payable "in gold, or Canada currency."—In re Granger, Case No. 5,684.

Where a debt founded on a judgment is offered against the estate of a bankrupt, and it appears that, subsequent to the presentation of the proof of such debt, the court in which the judgment was entered had set it aside, the proof of such debt will be expunged.—In re Bruce, Case No. 2,044.

A claim may be expunged where proved after the determination by the district court, in a proceeding to which the creditor was a party, that he had received a fraudulent preference, and was disabled to prove any part of his debt. Case No. 8,231 affirmed.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,235.

Where a debtor, holding the legal title to a note as trustee, deducts a debt due from himself to the bankrupt, and proves for the remainder, the proof may be expunged without prejudice to his proving the whole note as trustee.—In re Lane, Case No. 8,043.

On motion to expunge a proof of debt and to establish a set-off, personal judgment cannot be rendered against the creditor for money in his hands.—In re Forbes, Case No. 4,922.

The register has no power to expunge or diminish the claim of a creditor if the creditor objects, but must require the parties to form an issue to be certified to the court (General Order No. 34).—In re Muldaur, Case No. 9,906.

The bankruptcy court may refer to the register a petition of a creditor praying that the proof of claim of another creditor be expunged on account of matters occurring since the claim was proved.—In re Loring, Case No. 8,512.

Where the testimony of the bankrupt is desired on a motion to expunge proof, he should be summoned as a witness.—Canby v. McLear, Case No. 2,378.

On the hearing of a motion to expunge a proof, the moving party is entitled to open and close. —Canby v. McLear, Case No. 2,378.

The answer to a petition to expunge proofs cannot be used as evidence in the proceeding. —Canby v. McLear, Case No. 2,378.

Papers annexed to an answer to a petition to expunge proofs must be proved in the usual manner, to be used as evidence.—Canby v. McLear, Case No. 2,378.

§ 423. Objections.

Before one creditor can be admitted to examine the rights of another creditor, he must prove his debt. If the proof is not sufficient, it is amendable.—Dutton v. Freeman, Case No. 4,210.

Creditors who have proved their debts may serve on the register a protest against the proof of any claims by certain other creditors, and request to be notified if any such claims are pending.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,971.

One creditor may, without the consent of the assignee, intervene and oppose the allowance of the claim of another alleged creditor.—In re Joseph, Case No. 7,532. CONTRA, see In re Randall, Case No. 11,552.

An application to contest a claim against bankrupt's estate will be allowed upon a petition and affidavits stating fully and in detail the grounds upon which such application is based. —In re Overton, Case No. 10,625.

Objections to proof of a claim must be made by written allegations, specifying with reasonable certainty the ground of such objection.—In re Walton, Case No. 17,128.

A proof of debt is not open to objection because it appears that the statute of limitations, if set up, would be a bar.—In re Knoepfel, Case No. 7,892.

The assignee may set up the defense of usury against a creditor of the estate.—In re Moore, Case No. 9,752.

The order to show cause why the proof of debt should not be vacated on objection by a creditor must be made by the court, and not by register.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,071.

On a trial of a claim upon a judgment, matters which were available to the bankrupt as a defense in the original suit cannot be set up.—Stillwell v. Walker, Case No. 13,451.

The objections to the claim of a creditor will be considered as admitted where he fails to appear and submit to an examination under an order therefor given in accordance with general order 34.—In re Lount, Case No. 8,543.

A proof of a claim, which has been postponed by the register until after the election of an assignee, is then to be treated as if it had not been tendered before the election of the assignee.—In re Herrman, Case No. 6,425.

The remedy of the assignee in the case of a usurious contract is to require the creditor to prove his debt in the usual form, reciting the security and setting forth the consideration, when he may contest the claim for any usurious surplus.—Bromley v. Smith, Case No. 1,922.

§ 424. Evidence and witnesses.

A claim founded upon accounts current between the bankrupt and his creditors, and upon a comparison of those accounts current and the correspondence and books of the bankrupt, by the agent of the latter who kept those books, is provable.—In re Stanton, Case No. 13,295.

A note evidencing a debt must be produced when required by the assignee, register, or the bankrupt. Not so, however, if the note has been merged in a judgment.—In re Knoepfel, Case No. 7,892.

Promissory notes cannot be properly proved without their production or proof of their loss.— In re Jaycox, Case No. 7,240.

To prove a claim by the United States for the value of goods forfeited for violation of the customs laws, books and papers of the bankrupts, seized under a warrant issued under Act 1867, § 2, are admissible.—In re Vetterlein, Case No. 16,929.

In bankruptcy proceedings the United States laws, and not the state laws, apply with respect to excluding a witness on the ground of interest.—In re Merrill, Case No. 9,466.

Under Rev. St. § 858, state laws in force prior to December 1, 1873, are rules of decision in the federal courts as to the competency of witnesses, and a bankrupt may testify to support a claim of his wife against the estate, where such testimony would be competent under Act Pa. April 15, 1869.—In re Bean, Case No. 1,166.

A creditor, though the wife of the bankrupt, is a competent witness to support her claim.—In re Richards, Case No. 11,770.

The testimony of a bankrupt husband will not be admitted to prove a claim by his wife against his estate for a sum loaned to him out of her separate estate.—In re Bechtel's Case, Case No. 1,204.

A creditor is a competent witness to prove a contract under which his claim arose, though the bankrupt has since died; and such witness cannot be excluded on the ground of interest, under Rev. St. § 858, as the proof of a debt is a proceeding in rem, and is not an action against the bankrupt or his personal representatives.— In re Merrill, Case No. 9,466.

A bankrupt is a competent witness where a claim against his estate is contested, though the creditor is dead, and the claim is presented by his executor.—In re Moore, Case No. 9,752.

§ 425. Hearing and determination.

When written objections to a proof are filed with a register, and testimony is taken, he must, if requested by either party, certify the same to the district judge for decision.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,808.

Claims previously determined by courts having jurisdiction cannot again be tried in the bankruptcy court, under Act 1867, § 1.—The Ironsides, Case No. 7,069.

Where, on a reference to take proof of a claim, it appears that the claim has already been proven, and not objected to, the reference should not proceed.—In re Baldwin, Case No. 795.

On a claim by one member of a syndicate of banking firms against the estate of a bankrupt member, the court will examine into the accounts of all the members, in order to make a definite allowance against the bankrupt's estate.—In re Cooke, Case No. 3,170.

Where proof of an indebtedness has been disallowed, a retransfer by the creditors of collaterals which secure such indebtedness will not be ordered.—Dallas v. Flues, Case No. 3,544.

The submission of a claim by stipulation to the register to hear and determine does not make his decision final, as a reference under the New York Code.—In re Ford, Case No. 4,932.

The wife may submit voluntarily to the adjudication by the bankruptcy court of her specific claim to a settlement out of the bankrupt's estate, and the assignee and creditors who had opportunity to present evidence and arguments before the register, and to file exceptions, must be held to have had their day in court, and they have no right to insist that the wife should have a plenary proceeding in another court.—In re Campbell, Case No. 2,348.

§ 426. Re-examination of claim.

An order of the district court for the payment of a claim, made without notice to the assignee, will be reversed to allow him to contest the claim.—In re Mitteldorfer, Case No. 9,674.

The register has no power, against objection of parties, to require issues framed as to the re-examination of a claim until it appears that the claim ought to be expunged or diminished.—In re Aspinwall, Case No. 590.

An order for re-examination of claims made by the register without objection cannot be revoked by him upon its return.—In re Aspinwall, Case No. 590.

Creditors are in a position to ask the register to permit a re-examination of claims until a petition for such re-examination has been filed in compliance with the provisions of general order No. 34.—In re Tifft, Case No. 14,029.

On the re-examination of a claim, proof of which has once been certified as satisfactory, the creditor makes out a prima facie case by offering himself for examination and if the assignee wishes to contest the proof he must introduce opposing evidence.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,938.

A creditor who has required the re-examination of a claim will not be heard to object that the counsel for the bankrupt also appears as counsel for the claiming creditor.—In re Morgan, Case No. 9,798.

The right of a corporation to continue its existence cannot be determined on the re-examination by the register of its claim against the estate of its bankrupt president.—In re Morgan, Case No. 9,797.

Where a receiver is allowed to amend his proof of claim by producing a deposition of an officer of the corporation, a deposition of the treasurer, taken on re-examination of the claim, may be filed by leave of the court with the same effect as if originally made as a deposition under general order No. 34.—In re Baxter, Case No. 1,121.

§ 427. Rehearing or review.

The district court has power upon petition of a contesting creditor to reverse the decision of an assignee rejecting his claim.—In re Mitteldorfer, Case No. 9,674.

A reargument or rehearing in the district on the report of a referee allowing the claim of a creditor will not be granted after separate exceptions and appeals by a contesting creditor and the assignee have been decided against them.—In re Troy Woolen Co., Case No. 14,200.

The filing of a statement of the claim within 10 days after giving notice of appeal from the decision rejecting the claim, under general order No. 26, is not a jurisdictional requisite.—Fellows v. Burnap, Case No. 4,721.

7. PRIORITIES AND DISTRIBUTION.

§ 428. Priorities in general.

When property passes to an assignee in bankruptcy, it is appropriated to the use of the bankrupt's creditors, as between them and creditors having equal equities therein before it passed to such assignee.—Aiken v. Edrington, Case No. 111.

The bankruptcy court has no power to discriminate between different classes of debts of the same legal character. (Rev. St. § 4972.)—In re Merriman, Case No. 9,479.

Agreement by assignees to give a preference when valid.—Blight v. Ashley, Case No. 1,541.

The rights of creditors, after a surrender of the assets to the assignee in bankruptcy by the assignee, under a state law, are to be determined under the provisions of the bankrupt law.—In re Bousfield & Poole Mfg. Co., Case No. 1,704.

§ 429. Lien creditors.

An assignment to attorneys of a portion of a claim for their compensation will be enforced in the bankruptcy court.—Clarke v. Clarke, Case No. 18,279.

Act 1867, § 28, does not operate to give to the five classes of creditors therein named any priority over secured creditors.—In re McConnell, Case No. 8,712.

The proceeds of goods levied on by execution under judgments whose validity is not disputed, and afterwards seized by the marshal under the warrant in bankruptcy, must first be applied to such judgments.—Swope v. Arnold, Case No. 13,702.

The rights of lien creditors to the proceeds of the sale of real estate after deducting the cost of proving the lien is superior to the lien for costs, fees, and general expenses in bankruptcy.—In re Hambright, Case No. 5,973.

The assignee must recognize any valid lien as a preferred claim, though for costs of attachment, if made a lien by the state law.—Gardner v. Cook, Case No. 5,226.

Attaching creditors held entitled to only a ratable part of their debt with the other creditors, under Act 1800, § 31.—Harmon v. Jamesson, Case No. 6,079.

In the distribution of the assets of the bankrupt derived from the collection of a promissory note, a creditor whose claim is in judgment has no priority.—In re Erwin, Case No. 4,524.

A judgment creditor who had failed for 13 years to record his lien in the county in which the land was located, and to prove his judgment in bankruptcy until the proceeds of the land were distributed, will not be heard thereafter to assert his priority.—In re Dunn, Case No. 4,172.

A judgment obtained in Georgia is not entitled to priority where there was a failure to make levy for seven consecutive years after 1860.—In re Cozart, Case No. 3,313.

The landlord's lien for rent, under a state statute, on goods seized by the marshal, is valid.—In re Hoagland, Case No. 6,545.

Maritime liens will be accorded the preference which they would have in the admiralty. In re Scott, Case No. 12,517, affirmed.—The Ironsides, Case No. 7,070.

The rent of mortgaged premises received by the assignee must be distributed to the general creditors. The mortgagee cannot have the rent applied to his lien unless he shows the insufficiency of his security, and actually intercepts it. In re Foster, Case No. 4,963, affirmed.—Foster v. Rhodes, Case No. 4,981.

The right to intercept the rent ceases with the completion of the foreclosure.—Foster v. Rhodes, Case No. 4,981.

Money paid to procure release of dower in mortgaged premises should be apportioned between the mortgagees.—In re Bartenbach, Case No. 1,068.

A purchaser of a mortgage given by a debtor before his bankruptcy to indemnify a surety, who has knowledge of the trust, for the benefit of creditors by such mortgage inuring for their benefit, and is himself a creditor under it, has no priority over other creditors.—In re Pierce, Case No. 11,140.

The attachment act of South Carolina is not affected by a commission of bankruptcy in England.—Harrison v. Sterry, Case No. 6,144.

§ 430. Debts due to United States.

The preference of the United States, and the right of preference for satisfaction of debts due the United States, are excepted from the general operation of the bankrupt law of 1800. —Mott v. Maris, Case No. 9,880.

Act 1800, § 62, in relation to the preference of the United States, does not give a preference to the United States, but merely saves the right of the United States in cases where such a preference has by law been previously granted.—United States v. Fisher, Case No. 15,103.

A surety who pays bonds for customs duties has a preference over other creditors. (Act March 2, 1799, § 65.)—Harrison v. Sterry, Case No. 6,144; Mott v. Maris, Id. 9,880.

The surety who has paid a bond for duties is not entitled to the same rights and privilege of priority that are given to the United States under Act 1800.—Pollock v. Pratt, Case No. 11,256.

A surety who has paid money for a bankrupt in discharge of a customs duty bond has not the right of the United States to proceed against the person of the bankrupt, but only against his effects. (Act 1800.)—Kerr v. Hamilton, Case No. 7,731.

The United States are not bound by the general equity rule for marshaling assets, nor by the rule prescribed by the bankrupt act in conformity thereto, any further than as that rule is founded in the particular case on the lien of the several parties inter sese.—In re Strassburger, Case No. 13,526.

The United States may enforce their right of priority without first exhausting securities which they may hold.—United States v. Lewis, Case No. 15,595.

If the United States have a demand against a firm some of whose partners reside in a foreign country, they are entitled to priority out of the separate estate of the resident partners. —United States v. Lewis, Case No. 15,595.

An agent of the United States in England cannot, by conforming to the bankrupt laws there, lessen the priority established in favor of the United States here.—Harrison v. Sterry, Case No. 6,144.

The United States are entitled to priority in the separate estate of the partners, although the demand is against the firm.—United States v. Lewis, Case No. 15,595.

A United States revenue officer, paying to the government the amount of a dishonored check received by him from a government debtor, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the United States against such debtor.—In re McBride, Case No. 8,662.

One purchasing imported goods, and being compelled, in order to obtain possession thereof, to pay duties which the importer was to pay, is entitled, on the importer's bankruptcy, to be substituted to the priority of the United States, although he has proved his claim as unsecured.—In re Kirkland, Cases Nos. 7,843, 7,844.

The penalty prescribed by the internal revenue acts for selling unstamped packages is incurred at the time of the sale; and a judgment therefor recovered by the United States after the adjudication in bankruptcy, with the exception of costs, is a provable debt, and entitled to priority of payment.—In re Rosey, Case No. 12,066.

United States, recovering a judgment upon a claim accruing after the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, is entitled to priority, and no proof of claim need be made.— In re Bousfield & Poole Mfg. Co., Case No. 1,704.

A judgment obtained by the United States against persons composing a bankrupt firm, though for a debt on which one of the partners was liable as principal and the other as surety, is entitled to priority over all partnership creditors.—In re Strassburger, Case No. 13,526.

The United States need not prove their debt in bankruptcy before filing a bill to enforce their priority of payment.—United States v. Lewis, Case No. 15,595.

The complainant, as collector of internal revenue, held not entitled, by way of subrogation, to the rights of the United States as a preferred creditor.—Wilkinson v. Babbitt, Case No. 17,668.

§ 431. Debts due to a state.

A state is entitled to a preference over private creditors under Act 1867 (Rev. St. § 5101). —In re Dodge, Case No. 3,949.

The state has no claim to priority against a bankrupt bank in which the warden of a penitentiary deposits funds in his own name, he being liable to the state on his bond. Case No. 3,243 reversed.—In re Corn Exch. Bank, Case No. 3,242.

A claim by the warden of a state prison for the price of property of the state sold as the state's agent to the bankrupt is entitled to priority as a debt due the state.—In re Mellor, Case No. 9,401.

A claim of the state upon a contract for the employment of convicts is entitled to preference, under Rev. St. § 5101.—In re Southwestern Car Co., Case No. 13,192.

A judgment in favor of the people of the state of New York against a surety on a bail bond given for the appearance of a person indicted for a crime is a debt to the state, and is entitled to priority under Act 1867, where such surety has filed a petition in voluntary bankruptcy, and, without being adjudged a bankrupt, instituted proceedings for a composition.—In re Chamberlin, Case No. 2,580.

§ 432. Taxes and assessments.

A lien of a state on realty for taxes has priority over all other claims.—In re Brand, Case No. 1,809.

Taxes and assessments levied upon incumbered property before bankruptcy proceedings, and water taxes while the property is in the assignee's possession, must be paid by him. Case No. 9,699 affirmed.—In re Moller, Case No. 9,700.

The claim of lessors of a bankrupt lessee for the amount of taxes paid by them, which the lessee had covenanted to pay, is not entitled to preference. (Act 1867, § 28.)—In re Parker, Case No. 10,719.

Debt due to foreign state for taxes not entitled to preference.—In re Ambler, Case No. 271.

§ 433. Wages of operatives, clerks, etc.

An apprentice is an "operative" (Act 1841, § 5), and is entitled to priority.—Ex parte Steiner, Case No. 13,354.

A claim for money loaned to pay wages of operatives employed by the bankrupt is not a privileged claim under Act 1841, § 5.—In re Paulson, Case No. 10,849.

The assignee of a claim of $50 for labor is entitled to priority in payment under Act 1867, § 27, though the assignee paid for the claim only $10.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,973a.

The claim of a father for the services of his minor son, to the extent of $50, is entitled to a preference under Act 1867, § 28.—In re Harthorn, Case No. 6,162.

A person employed for a temporary service, in adjusting the books and accounts of a bankrupt, within six months before the bankruptcy, has a privileged debt for services as clerk, to the extent of $50. (Rev. St. § 5101.)—Ex parte Rockett, Case No. 11,977.

Under Rev. St. § 5101, an employé is not allowed priority in payment of wages for an unexpired term of employment, where he was wrongfully discharged.—In re Pevear, Case No. 11,053.

A claim for a balance of laborer's wages in the hands of one who advanced a part thereof, taking an assignment as security, held entitled to a preference.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,974.

§ 434. Claims preferred by state laws.

Under the laws of New Jersey, landlords and factory operators are entitled to pro rata payment of one year's rent and one month's wages, respectively, as secured claims; neither being superior to the other.—In re McConnell, Case No. 8,712.

Act N. Y. April 15, 1853, providing that the assets of an insolvent bank, after payment of its circulating notes, shall be first applied to payment of sums deposited with it by savings banks, gives a saving bank no prior lien, but it must share pro rata with ordinary creditors. —Sixpenny Sav. Bank v. Estate of Stuyvesant Bank, Case No. 12,919.

§ 435. Fees and expenses in bankruptcy proceedings or pending suits.

Solicitors of a voluntary bankrupt, who advance expenses to enable him to obtain his discharge, are not entitled to relief, for such expenses or their services, against his assets.—Ex parte Hale, Case No. 5,910.

A person advancing money for the fees in bankruptcy has a first lien on the estate for its repayment, and a mortgage given to secure the same gives no additional security.—Whiston v. Smith, Case No. 17,523.

Attorneys rendering services to the bankrupt prior to the adjudication, such as defending suits, giving advice, and preparing petition and schedules, are not entitled to priority under Act 1867, § 28.—In re Hirschberg, Case No. 6,530; In re Jaycox, Id. 7,239; In re Gies, Id. 5,407; In re Handell, Id. 6,017.

The urban landlord has no priority or preference, under Act Tex. April 4, 1874, concerning rents and advances, over the general creditors.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,944.

Where the owner of yarn in possession of a bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, for manufacture into cloth, obtains a judgment in trover against the assignee therefor, his claim is entitled to no priority over the assignee's claims for expenses and commissions. —In re Oberhoffer, Case No. 10,396.

In the absence of a lien created by the state law the costs and charges against a bankrupt for caring for his property prior to filing the petition, however incurred, are not a preferred claim.—Gardner v. Cook, Case No. 5,226.

§ 436. Cestui que trust.

Where property delivered to the bankrupt in trust does not remain in specie, and cannot be traced, the cestui que trust must come in pari passu with the other creditors.—In re Janeway, Case No. 7,208.

A consignor whose property was sold before the bankruptcy of the consignee, and the proceeds mingled with the general assets, has no lien.—In re Coan & Ten Broeke Mfg. Co., Case No. 2,915.

Money deposited with a banker to pay a note and mortgage of the depositor when they should be sent to him is not held by the banker in a fiduciary capacity.—In re Hosie, Case No. 6,711.

A fund recovered by the assignee in virtue of the rights of the bankrupt's creditors generally, under Act 1867, § 35, must be distributed to them generally, and not given to one. The assignee does not hold such fund subject to the equities which attached to it in the hands of the bankrupt in favor of a particular creditor before it was fraudulently transferred. —White v. Jones, Case No. 17,550.

The equities of the creditors of a bankrupt in a secret fraudulent trust fund are at least equal to those of creditors of the owner of such fund.—Aiken v. Edrington, Case No. 111.

A sister of the bankrupt, who for years handled her funds and securities, is entitled to be considered holder of a mortgage which the bankrupt took up with the proceeds of her government bonds, sold without her knowledge.— Dewey v. Kelton, Case No. 3,850.

Where a bailee, prior to his bankruptcy, mixes the bailor's wheat, without the latter's consent, with his own, so that the identical property cannot be distinguished, the bailor can only prove as a general creditor and share pro rata against the estate in bankruptcy.—Adams v. Meyers, Case No. 62.

§ 437. Separate funds or accounts.

Depositors who became such after suspension of payments by a bank under an advertisement by the bank to keep the old and new accounts separate are not entitled to preference on its subsequent bankruptcy.—In re Mutual Building Fund Society & Dollar Sav. Bank, Case No. 9,976.

Where the bankrupts carried on a brokerage business, keeping the accounts and funds therein separate from their other business, the owners of bonds sold will be entitled to payment in full out of the brokerage account as against creditors in the other business.—Voight v. Lewis, Case No. 16,989.

A claim founded upon a note given under the terms of a composition proceeding in bankruptcy will not be postponed to new claims in subsequent bankruptcy proceedings. — In re Merriman, Case No. 9,479.

§ 438. Ownership of claim.

One taking an assignment of a proved claim as security for an antecedent liability of the assignor, who is apparently, though not really, the owner thereof, is not a purchaser for value, and cannot hold the claim against the true owner.—In re Sime, Case No. 12,861.

§ 439. Meetings of creditors.

The register has no discretion to refuse to call a second general meeting of creditors requested by the assignee after three months from the adjudication.—In re Rosey, Case No. 12,065.

A third meeting of creditors, not the last meeting, should not be called except for cause shown, and, if the register be satisfied that no such cause exists, he is justified in refusing to grant the order for such meeting.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,807.

Notice to creditors that a meeting will be held at a specified time and place for the purposes named in Act 1867, § 27, and that a final dividend will be declared, is sufficient to authorize such meeting to make final disposition of the estate.—In re Merchants' Ins. Co., Case No. 9,442.

The notice of the second meeting of creditors (Act 1867, § 27) and the order (Form No. 28) are to be sent to all known creditors, whether they have proved their debts or not.—In re Mills, Case No. 9,610.

Where notice of a meeting of creditors is addressed to a creditor by a wrong name, though there is no time to remedy the defect before the meeting, the creditor is not bound by the proceedings at such meeting.—Anonymous, Case No. 457.

The bankrupt is not required to attend any meeting of the creditors but the first one.—In re Wronkow, Case No. 18,105.

Creditors' meetings are properly guided by the rules and usages of parliamentary bodies in absence of specific provisions of law.—In re Merchants' Ins. Co., Case No. 9,442.

At the second meeting of creditors when due notice has been given, the whole fund in the assignee's hands, less necessary expenses, may be distributed.—In re Mills, Case No. 9,610.

The register cannot refuse to permit claimants who have made due proof to vote at a second meeting of creditors, where their claims are contested, as he has no power to expunge the proofs.—In re Jaycox, Case No. 7,240.

An execution creditor enjoined by the circuit court from further proceedings may have his claim of priority of payment out of proceeds of the property determined at a general meeting of creditors, under Act 1867, § 27, subject to exceptions to the district court.—In re Dunkle, Case No. 4,160.

A third meeting of creditors which is not a final meeting should not be called except for cause shown.—In re Son, Case No. 13,174.

§ 440. Powers of state court.

The distribution of the assets of a bankrupt cannot be interfered with by process of a state court.—In re Bridgman, Case No. 1,867.

The state court is the proper tribunal to pass upon the distribution by an executor of moneys received by him from a bankrupt's estate.—In re Major, Case No. 8,981.

§ 441. Dividends—Who entitled to in general.

A single creditor proving his debt is entitled to be paid in full; the surplus, if any, being distributed among creditors admitted by the bankrupt, but who have failed to prove their debts.—In re Haynes, Case No. 6,269.

A debt not proved until after order of distribution and designation of the day for making the dividend cannot share therein.—In re Miller, Case No. 9,556.

§ 442. —— Interest on dividends.

Where, upon appeal from an order allowing interest at 7 per cent. on a creditor's dividend, the creditor procures an order directing the trustee to deposit the money with a trust company pending the appeal, it does not constitute a warrant of his right to full interest; it is merely a change of investment by the trustee for the greater security of the creditor.—In re Kitzinger, Case No. 7,863.

Where interest becomes due to a creditor on a dividend, in consequence of delays attributable to the assignee or other creditors, the rate will be the legal rate in the state, where the assignee has not applied to have the money set aside or invested pending re-examination of the claim.—In re Kitzinger, Case No. 7,862.

Where payment of a dividend to a creditor has been delayed, through objections by other creditors or the trustee to the claim, interest should be allowed from the time it became payable.—In re Kitzinger, Case No. 7,862.

§ 443. —— Withholding payment.

The assignee may withhold dividend to creditor who is also debtor to a member of the bankrupt firm until determination of a suit by the assignee to recover the debt.—Atkinson v. Kellogg, Case No. 613.

The share of the dividend which a member of a bankrupt firm is entitled to as a member also of a firm of petitioning creditors will be retained by the assignee to await the action of his individual creditors.—In re Ellis, Case No. 4,399.

The payment of a dividend on a judgment proved in bankruptcy will be suspended pending a writ of error therefrom in the state court.—In re Sheehan, Case No. 12,737.

If the declaration of a dividend on a particular claim was unauthorized, the assignee may withhold its payment.—In re Herrick, Case No. 6,420.

Countersigning checks by the register is a judicial duty.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,810.

§ 444. —— Reopening and setting aside.

A dividend, when made pursuant to proper notice and filed in court, becomes virtually a judgment of the court, and cannot be distributed, except for some error committed by the register, apparent from his memoranda and papers on file, existing at the time or prior to making the dividend.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,989.

A register cannot vacate or reopen a dividend to pay a claim not proved and filed, or presented, prior to the dividend meeting.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,989.

A register cannot reopen a dividend to pay a claim for services rendered to the assignee, which was not presented at the dividend meeting.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,989.

Motion to vacate an order for a dividend may be made by any person interested on proper papers and notice.—In re New York Mail S. S. Co., Case No. 10,212.

Where a motion is made to set aside a dividend, and there is not sufficient evidence before the judge for him to determine the question presented, a reference will be ordered to the register to examine the proofs of the debt upon which the dividend was declared, and the assignee and the register will be enjoined from taking other proceedings until further order of the court.—In re New York Mail S. S. Co., Case No. 10,212.

§ 445. —— Unclaimed dividends.

Unclaimed dividends will not be awarded to a bankrupt's administrator after many years when opposed by creditors whose claims were not paid in full.—In re Blight's Estate, Case No. 1,540.

§ 446. Effect of proof of claim on rights of creditor.

Section 21, Act 1867, in so far as it declares that a creditor who proves his debt shall be deemed to have waived thereby all right of action and suit against the bankrupt, and that all proceedings already commenced, or unsatisfied judgments already obtained thereon, shall be deemed to be discharged and surrendered thereby, does not apply to or include a debt which is by section 33 excepted from the operation of the discharge.—In re Wright, Case No. 18,065.

By proving their debts, creditors waive all right of action against the bankrupt in other courts, and such suits thereafter commenced will be enjoined.—In re Meyers, Case No. 9,518.

Where the resident partners of a firm, having a partner residing abroad, prove a debt in bankruptcy, the firm becomes a party to the bankruptcy proceedings, and the resident partners will be restrained from prosecuting proceedings abroad to collect the claim.—In re Schepeler, Case No. 12,453.

No consequences can be allowed, under Act 1867, § 21, to flow from proving a debt, which are inconsistent with the provisions of section 33; and so much of section 21 as imposes a penalty for proving a debt cannot be construed as applying to a debt which, by section 33, is not dischargeable.—In re Rosenberg, Case No. 12,054.

A judgment which, because it is for a debt fraudulently contracted, will remain, by force of Act 1867, § 33, unaffected by a discharge in bankruptcy, is not subject, when proved in bankruptcy proceedings, to the provisions of section 21 of such act.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,939.

Creditor whose debt was created by fraud of bankrupt does not, by proving claim and taking a dividend, waive his right to sue for the balance.—In re Clews, Case No. 2,891.

Certificates of deposit are dishonored after the bankruptcy of the maker, and, after they are proved as claims, no longer possess the qualities of negotiable paper.—In re Sime, Case No. 12,861.

Proving a debt in bankruptcy does not operate as a satisfaction thereof, and, where the bankrupt's discharge is refused, the creditor who has proved his debt is remitted to his former rights and remedies. — Dingee v. Becker, Case No. 3,919.

8. Partnership and Individual Claims and Assets.

See, also, post, § 493.

§ 447. Individual assets.

Where a partner sues for a dissolution, and bankruptcy proceedings are begun against the firm, the amount claimed by the partner on dissolution is his individual property, which will pass to the assignee for the payment of his separate debts.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,798.

The "separate estate" of partners, under the Act of 1867, means that in which each partner is separately interested at the time of the bankruptcy.—In re Lowe, Case No. 8,564.

The assets of the firm become the separate property of the continuing partner, where, in good faith and for valuable consideration, they are transferred to him on the dissolution of the firm.—In re Long, Case No. 8,476.

The nature of the title to real estate held by partners cannot be changed to the prejudice of the rights of separate creditors by their classification thereof in their schedule.—In re Zug, Case No. 18,222.

Where property once belonging to a partnership has, by a bona fide contract, ceased to be partnership property, and become the separate property of one of the partners, who afterwards becomes a bankrupt, the partnership creditors are not entitled to any preference over the bankrupt's individual creditors in relation to such property.—In re Wiley, Case No. 17,656.

Where all the property of a partnership belongs to one member, and the others have no interest in the gains and profits, such property will be liable, in the first instance, to the individual debts of the person owning it.—In re Talbot, Case No. 13,727.

§ 448. Partnership assets.

A purchase of land for speculation by several persons, where a part of the lots were sold, and others built upon, and debts incurred, held a partnership adventure, and on the bankruptcy of one party the other would be protected, as to the partnership debts, as against individual creditors of the bankrupt.—Thrall v. Crampton, Case No. 14,008.

Real property purchased with partnership funds is to be treated as personalty, and is charged with the debts of the partnership in the first instance; and judgment creditors who have obtained judgment against those partners only in whose names the real property is held have no prior lien thereon.—Marrett v. Murphy, Case No. 9,103.

The trade assets of a partner, who after formal dissolution continues to carry on the business under the firm name, with the consent of his copartner, should be treated as joint assets.—In re Morse, Case No. 9,854.

One copartner, as between himself and the firm creditors, cannot estop himself by any dealings with the other partner from claiming partnership assets.—In re Gorham, Case No. 5,624.

Where a person guaranties the notes of a firm, and contracts for an interest in the firm property after payment of its indebtedness, he takes it subject to the rights of the creditors; and the crediting up by the firm to each member of his interest does not affect the right of the creditors to the funds in the hands of the assignee in bankruptcy of the firm.—In re Shanahan, Case No. 12,701.

A petition will not lie in bankruptcy by creditors of a firm not in bankruptcy, on the bankruptcy of a member, to recover a fund from the estate of a deceased partner not in bankruptcy.—In re Frazier, Case No. 5,070.

§ 449. Claims against firm.

The mortgagee in a chattel mortgage of a stock of goods cannot prove his claim against a partnership formed after the making of a mortgage, and before its maturity.—In re Forbes, Case No. 4,922.

Where an agent converts negotiable paper, and procures its indorsement by his firm for whose use it was discounted, both the original owner of the paper and the bank which discounted it may prove claims in bankruptcy against the firm.—In re Morse, Case No. 9,853.

A note given by the firm as an accommodation to a partner to raise his share of the firm's capital may be proven against the firm, but securities pledged by the individual partner must first be applied to its payment.—In re Norris, Case No. 10,302.

An accommodation indorser of partnership notes drawn by one partner, and fraudulently used in payment of his individual contribution of capital, held, on the evidence, chargeable with notice of the fraud barring him from proving them against the partnership estate in bankruptcy.—In re Dunkle, Case No. 4,161.

A claim on a bond signed individually by partners, but not for a firm obligation, is not entitled, as against the firm creditors, to be paid from the partnership assets.—In re Roddin, Case No. 11,989.

An agreement between traders to unite their stocks and capital, and that their separate business debts shall be considered joint debts of the firm, will not entitle a separate creditor, who has not consented to the arrangement before bankruptcy, to prove his claim as a joint creditor.—In re Isaacs, Case No. 7,093.

A judgment against partners and others jointly is a several claim, as against the bankrupts, and cannot receive a dividend from the joint estate.—In re Herrick, Case No. 6,420.

A joint and several note, signed individually by three partners, and by others as sureties, cannot be proved against the joint assets of the firm.—In re Holbrook, Case No. 6,588.

A joint and several note, given for money borrowed by a firm, and signed in the firm name, with other names following, may be proved against the joint assets of the firm.—In re Holbrook, Case No. 6,588.

A judgment procured against three persons as partners may be proved against the estate of two, regarding the other as a surety, where the third has been held, in the bankruptcy proceedings, not a partner.—In re Kitzinger, Case No. 7,861.

A note given by the bankrupt firm to a member for his contribution to the capital stock, and by him turned over to his wife, who furnished the money, is evidence only of the individual debt of such member, and not provable against the firm.—In re Frost, Case No. 5,135.

A protest and notice of dishonor are not necessary to entitle the holder of a note made by a partner, and indorsed by the bankrupt firm, maturing after their bankruptcy, to prove it against the joint assets.—Ex parte Russell, Case No. 12,148.

The holder of a note, signed by a partner and indorsed by the firm, may prove the same against the assets of the firm without first applying to its payment securities pledged by the partner to secure it.—In re Norris, Case No. 10,302.

A creditor of a firm holding security from one partner may prove against the joint estate without surrendering, selling, or valuing his security.—In re Holbrook, Case No. 6,588; In re Thomas, Id. 13,886.

A firm note given by one partner without authority, after dissolution, to pay a firm debt, received under a mistake of facts, may be surrendered, and the original claim proved.—In re Golder, Case No. 5,510.

§ 450. Claims against individual members.

A joint and several obligation by partners under seal is provable as a several obligation against one of the parties.—Ex parte Miller, Case No. 9,550.

Upon the bankruptcy of one member of a firm, a joint creditor has a right to prove his joint debt.—Wilkins v. Davis, Case No. 17,664; In re Webb, Id. 17,317.

A creditor who has proved a joint and several claim against the bankrupt members of a firm separately, and not against the firm, is entitled to dividends out of the several assets of the individual bankrupts.—In re Bigelow, Case No. 1,397.

Separate proofs of same debt to its full amount may be filed against individual members of a firm.—In re Beers, Case No. 1,229.

Creditors holding individual obligations of the members of a firm, although given for a consideration moving to the firm, are entitled to a dividend out of the individual estates.—In re Bucyrus Mach. Co., Case No. 2,100.

The solvent partner in a firm of four partners, two of whom were insolvent, and the other bankrupt, who pays the firm debts out of his separate estate, is entitled to prove half the amount against the separate estate of the bankrupt.—In re Dell, Case No. 3,774.

The claim of a firm against one of its bankrupt members, who acted as treasurer under the articles of copartnership, may be proved against his separate estate.—Brown v. Curtis, Case No. 2,000.

Where a surviving partner converts the property of the deceased partner to his own use, and the administrators of the latter consent, they may prove a claim therefor against the estate of the former in bankruptcy.—In re Mills, Case No. 9,611.

The bankrupt partner's proportion of the debts of the firm cannot be proved by his co-partner unless it appear that the latter had paid such debts.—Hester v. Baldwin, Case No. 6,438.

The assignee cannot prove against the separate estate of a partner for moneys withdrawn by the latter from the firm without fraud against his co-partners, though such moneys were withdrawn with knowledge of insolvency of the firm.—In re May, Case No. 9,328.

Money advanced by a firm to a member beyond his share of the capital is a separate debt of the firm against such member, and the assignee of the firm may prove it.—In re McLean, Case No. 8,879.

A debt due by one partner for money advanced to him by the firm cannot be enforced against the estate of such partner for the use of the creditor co-partners until all the joint creditors are fully satisfied, though provable as a separate debt of the firm.—In re McLean, Case No. 8,879.

No proof can be made between the joint and separate estates of partners in respect of money drawn out without fraud by one partner, or of goods sold to him by the firm, though he was to sell them again.—In re Lane, Case No. 8,044.

When a debt from one partner to a bankrupt firm was incurred by the consent or privity of the other partners, proof of the joint creditors against the separate estate will not be admitted.—In re McEwen, Case No. 8,783.

A decree against a firm upon a suretyship obligation was paid from the firm assets. The firm having been dissolved, a balance was due from one partner to the other, but the amount was not ascertained by judgment. The partner owing the balance afterwards went into bankruptcy. Held, that the solvent partner had no right of subrogation to the rights of the creditor who obtained the decree against the firm.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,991.

Copartnership debts may be proved in proceedings instituted by a single partner, on an individual petition, whether there are any assets of the copartnership or not.—In re Frear, Case No. 5,074.

§ 451. Claims against both firm and individual members.

Proof of a debt against a partnership should not be joined with proof of a debt against an individual partner.—In re Walton, Case No. 17,129.

A holder of different notes, all made for partnership debts, but some executed by the firm, and indorsed by the partners, and others made by individual partners, may prove the former against the firm, and the latter against the individual, assets.—Mead v. National Bank of Fayetteville, Case No. 9,366.

A note made by a firm, and indorsed by one of the partners individually, may be proved against both the estate of the firm and the individual estate of the indorser.—In re Farnum, Case No. 4,674; In re Bradley, Id. 1,772; Emery v. Canal Nat. Bank, Id. 4,446; Stephenson v. Jackson, Id. 13,374.

The form of the contract or obligation of the maker and indorser of a note will not prejudice the legal rights of a creditor claiming distribution of assets in bankruptcy.—In re Bradley, Case No. 1,772.

The beneficiaries of a trust fund, invested by the executor in his partnership business with the knowledge and consent of his copartner, may prove their claim against the partnership, although they have proved it against the estate of the executor.—In re Tesson, Case No. 13,844.

Where there are individual creditors, and a partnership creditor has a lien on both the partnership and the individual assets, he must first exhaust the partnership fund, before resorting to the individual fund.—In re Lewis, Case No. 8,313.

A firm creditor, whose debt is secured by pledge of individual property, is bound, on request of the individual creditors, to prove his whole debt against the joint assets.—In re May, Case No. 9,327.

§ 452. Separate firms composed in whole or in part of same members.

Where the same partners carry on the same business at different places, under different partnership names, there are not two distinct firms. The assets of both nominal firms are equally applicable to the payment of all the creditors of both.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,707.

In the case of bankrupts doing business in different places under different firm names, the two firms are to be treated as one, and no notice will be taken of the indebtedness of the one to the other.—In re Vetterlein,, Case No. 16,927.

Where all the members of one firm are partners in another, they cannot prove its debt against the latter.—In re Savage, Case No. 12,381.

Where a member of a bankrupt firm is also a member of another firm, his partner, as the remaining member of the latter firm settling its affairs, may prove a debt against the bankrupt firm.—In re Buckhause, Case No. 2,086.

A draft drawn by a firm upon one who is a partner with its members in another firm cannot be proved against the joint estate on the bankruptcy of the latter firm.—In re Savage, Case No. 12,381.

The fact of the identity of partners in firms of different names and different localities does not operate to give the claims by one firm against another firm the character of individual, as distinguished from partnership, demands against the others.—In re Stanton, Case No. 13,295.

Where a bankrupt partner is a member of two firms, the assets of the bankrupt firm should be applied to the payment of the firm debts, and any surplus of the individual assets that may remain, after paying the individual debts in full, distributed pro rata among the creditors of both firms.—In re Dunkerson, Case No. 4,159.

A bank holding a draft drawn by one firm, and accepted by another, where both are adjudged bankrupts, cannot share equally with the individual creditors in the separate assets of one who was a partner of both firms.—In re Dunkerson, Case No. 4,158.

§ 453. Liability of firm for act of partner.

Where a member of a firm, which is general agent of a corporation, misappropriates funds thereof to the uses of the firm, which is known by the firm, both are liable, and proof may be made against both estates.—In re Baxter, Case No. 1,119.

The holder of notes drawn by one partner in the firm name, apparently in the course of the firm business, who has no knowledge of the want of authority or intended misapplication, is entitled to their allowance against the bankrupt estate of the firm.—Bush v. Crawford, Case No. 2,224.

A note given in the firm name in an individual transaction of one member in no manner for the benefit of the firm is not provable against the joint estate.—In re Forsyth, Case No. 4,948.

A firm note given by one partner of an insolvent firm without the assent of the others, is a fraud upon the firm creditors, and cannot be proved against the firm assets.—In re Golder, Case No. 5,510.

§ 454. Effect of assumption of debts by continuing partner.

A continuing partner, having authority to collect debts due the firm, debited a debtor with the amount, and continued his account. Held, on his bankruptcy, that the balance due did not belong to the new firm.—Oxley v. Willis, Case No. 10,639.

A firm note proved against the estate of continuing partners, who agreed to pay the firm debts, may be proved for any balance due against the estate of the retiring partner.—In re Pease, Case No. 10,881.

When partners dissolve, and one assumes the debts and subsequently becomes bankrupt, the other is thereafter only a surety, and cannot make proof for the respective differences between the total amount of the firm debts and the dividend which the firm will pay thereon, as a contingent debt, under Rev. St. § 5068, when he has not paid any part of such differences.—In re Phelps, Case No. 11,070.

The joint creditors of a firm will share pro rata with the individual creditors of the partner who bought out the other members, agreeing to pay the firm debts, and failed a few months thereafter, without showing that they have exhausted the individual estates of the retiring partners.—In re Rice, Case No. 11,750.

In proceedings against a firm which has been dissolved, and all the property sold to the continuing partner, who agreed to pay the firm debts, Act 1867, § 36, applies even though there was no joint property.—In re Long, Case No. 8,476.

Where a member of a co-partnership, upon the dissolution of the firm, takes the assets and agrees to pay the firm debts, on the subsequent bankruptcy of the firm, the firm creditors may, at their election, prove as separate creditors of the estate of the liquidating co-partner, and share pari passu with the individual creditors.—In re Long, Case No. 8,476.

Individual creditors and partnership creditors share equally in the estate of a partner who, on dissolution of the firm, purchased all the assets of the firm, and agreed to pay all the debts, where both partners are individualy put into bankruptcy.—In re Downing, Case No. 4,044.

The taking out of the amount of firm notes, which had been issued by one partner to pay his individual obligations, from such partner's interest on an agreement of dissolution, is not a ratification, but an assumption of such notes as a separate debt by the other partner.—In re Dunkle, Case No. 4,161.

§ 455. Priorities of firm and individual creditors.

Provisions of Act 1841, § 14, relating to the settlement and distribution of assets in cases of partnership, are in affirmance of the principle on which equity proceeds,—that the firm creditors are entitled to have their debts paid out of the firm funds before the private creditors of any partner.—Collins v. Hood, Case No. 3,015.

The individual and firm creditors have the primary right to resort to the respective estates, and neither class has a right to go on the funds primarily belonging to the other, until the creditors having priority are fully satisfied.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,702; Collins v. Hood, Id. 3,015; In re Warren, Id. 17,191; In re McLean, Id. 8,879.

Partnership assets must be applied to partnership debts, without reference to any disproportion between the interests of the individual partners therein.—In re Lowe, Case No. 8,564.

On an adjudication against a member of a firm, where both joint and separate assets come to the assignee's hands, the separate and joint creditors must be paid out of the different funds.—In re Ingalls, Case No. 7,032.

Where there are both joint and separate debts, proved on a separate petition, the separate creditors must first be paid in full.—In re Byrne, Case No. 2,270.

Where there are partnership assets, the firm creditors cannot share in the individual estate until the individual creditors are paid in full.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,987.

If there is any joint fund, however small, even if purposely created by separate creditors by purchasing worthless partnership assets, partnership creditors cannot prove against the separate estate concurrently with separate creditors.—In re Marwick, Case No. 9,181.

A firm creditor cannot share in the assets of a bankrupt partner until his creditors are paid if the other partners are solvent, even if there be no firm assets.—In re Dunham, Case No. 4,144.

Where there are no partnership assets and no solvent partner, both partnership and individual debts may be proved, and the estate distributed pari passu.—In re Knight, Case No. 7,880.

Firm and individual creditors are paid pari passu out of the separate estates of the partners, where the joint estate is all expended in payment of costs.—In re McEwen, Case No. 8,783; In re Slocum, Id. 12,951, affirmed in Case No. 12,950.

The rule that the joint estate must be applied to the joint debts, and the separate estate to the separate debts, is only applicable where both the estates are before the court for distribution.—In re Downing, Case No. 4,044; United States v. Lewis, Id. 15,595; In re Pease, Id. 10,881.

Where partners file separate petitions, the firm creditors must be postponed to the separate creditors in the distribution of the separate estate, whether there are joint assets or not.—In re Morse, Case No. 9,854.

Partnership creditors are entitled to be paid pari passu with individual creditors where the individual assets consist principally of goods purchased from the partnership on its dissolution, in the original purchase of which the partnership debts originated.—In re Jewett, Case No. 7,304.

A partner who has taken notes on the sale of his interest to his copartner cannot receive a dividend from the estate of the latter in bankruptcy until all partnership debts have been paid.—In re Jewett, Case No. 7,309.

Debts arising out of internal revenue bonds, signed by the members of a firm as sureties, are not entitled to the priority of the United States out of the firm assets, but only against individual assets.—In re Webb, Case No. 17,313.

If the United States have a demand against a firm, some of whose partners reside in a foreign country, they are entitled to priority out of the separate estate of the resident partners. —United States v. Lewis, Case No. 15,595.

A judgment creditor of firm is not entitled to dividends out of separate estate of each member on an equal footing with separate creditors.—In re Berrian, Case No. 1,351.

Individual creditors of partner who contributed most of the property to the firm, which was all of his property, held entitled to share equally with firm creditors.—In re Goedde, Case No. 5,500.

A lien acquired before bankruptcy by execution on the individual property of a member of a bankrupt firm, under a judgment against the firm, will not yield to the equities of the separate creditors of such partner.—In re Sandusky, Case No. 12,308.

§ 456. Priorities between creditors of old and creditors of new firm.

Where a firm failing without assets resumed business under the name of one of its members as "agent," and again failed, the debts contracted under the former name were not entitled to share in assets of the second failure. (Rev. St. § 5121.) Case No. 10,268 reversed.—In re Nims, Case No. 10,269.

The fact that a member and his share of property of an old firm went into a new firm, which became bankrupt, does not give the old firm creditors a right to payment out of the assets until after the new firm creditors are satisfied and the accounts are adjusted between the partners.—Crane v. Morrison, Case No. 3,355.

Where a partner carries on the business with the consent of the administrators of the deceased partner, upon the surviving partner being adjudged a bankrupt, there is no priority of payment between debts contracted before, and those contracted after, the death of the partner. —In re Mills, Case No. 9,611.

(G) ACCOUNTING AND DISCHARGE OF ASSIGNEE.

§ 457. Liability to account.

The assignee of a bankrupt partner in possession of firm assets must account to the creditors of the firm for the proceeds.—Jones v. Newsom, Case No. 7,484.

Assignees are chargeable with interest on all moneys which they have collected, if not paid into the registry within 60 days after it is received. Act 1841.—In re Thorp, Case No. 14,002.

An assignee is accountable only to the court appointing him.—In re Bowie, Case No. 1,728.

§ 458. Compelling accounting.

Under Act 1800, the district courts are not invested with exclusive jurisdiction over the entire execution of the law, and the circuit court has jurisdiction of a bill to compel the assignees to account.—Lucas v. Morris, Case No. 8,587.

Before the bankruptcy court can take action on the failure of an assignee to make a report of funds received, it must be shown, at least by prima facie evidence, that he has received funds.—In re Goodwin, Case No. 5,550.

The register may make the order requiring the assignee to file the account required by section 28, Act 1867.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,266.

The register can order an assignee to furnish him with all necessary information as to funds in his hands.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,807.

§ 459. Investigating accounts.

The district judge has jurisdiction to investigate the condition of the assignee's accounts on petition of a creditor to ascertain what, if any, dividends are due and payable. Act 1800. —Sands' Case, Case No. 12,302.

Neither the act of 1800 nor the judiciary act of 1789 confers jurisdiction upon the circuit court in bankruptcy cases, and it cannot enjoin parties to a proceeding from seeking an investigation of the assignee's accounts in a summary manner by petition to the district court. —In re Sands' Case, Case No. 12,302.

§ 460. Notice to creditors.

A register may properly refuse to audit the accounts of the assignee filed at a second meeting, where no notice of such auditing had been given to the creditors, as required by Act 1867, § 28.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,809.

§ 461. Auditing and settling accounts.

The accounts of the assignee must be presented at the second meeting of the creditors, and audited by the register, under Act 1867, § 27.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,799.

Creditors' meetings have no power over the accounts or fees of the assignee, but, if submitted to them by the register, their action thereon will be sanctioned by the court, unless there are grave reasons to the contrary.—In re Merchants' Ins. Co., Case No. 9,442.

The final meeting of creditors may, by vote, dispense with the reading and exhibition of the assignee's accounts and vouchers, where the same have been on file for a reasonable time.—In re Merchants' Ins. Co., Case No. 9,442.

Money paid by an assignee to his counsel should be included in his account, and submitted to the meeting of the creditors, and audited as a part of the assignee's accounts.—In re Hubbel, Case No. 6,820.

On the auditing of an assignee's accounts, an attorney's bill is evidence of the services and disbursements, but must be supported by evidence of the occasion, necessity, and value of such services.—In re Staff, Case No. 13,273.

In such case the register is charged with the duty of ascertaining what sum, in fairness, ought to be allowed.—In re Staff, Case No. 13,273.

The register should examine and regulate the charges and expenses of assignees and counsel, whether any creditor objects to the account or not.—In re Sawyer, Case No. 12,396.

Where all of the assignee's attorney's bill, except four items amounting to about one-fifth of the bill, have been presented to a third meeting of the creditors, and no objection made thereto, and as to these four items the court has ordered a reference, and the register reports in favor of their payment if the assignee makes no objection, the court will refuse to pass upon them, but will order a general meeting of the creditors to be called for them to act thereon.—In re Hubbel, Case No. 6,820.

The bankruptcy court, being always open, and having no separate terms, may vacate orders and decrees if no vested rights are disturbed.—Boutwell v. Allderdice, Case No. 1,708.

§ 462. Objections by creditors.

Misconduct of the assignee in respect to the estate is a proper subject for examination on application by him for a discharge.—In re Peabody, Case No. 10,866.

Every fact which is relied on by a creditor to establish fraud in the assignee should be distinctly stated and verified.—In re Peabody, Case No. 10,866.

A creditor raising an issue of fraud should distinctly state and verify the facts, and should give security for costs.—In re Peabody, Case No. 10,866.

Creditors need not object to the assignee's account, except at the meeting called under section 28, Act 1867.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,810

§ 463. Compensation and expenses of assignee.

Under Act 1867, § 47, the assignee is entitled to his disbursements and a reasonable compensation for his services, and he may retain the amount allowed out of any funds which he has in his hands.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

The assignee is entitled to make a charge for recording the assignment.—In re Pegues, Case No. 10,907.

An attorney, in performing the ordinary duties of the assignee, cannot claim from the estate compensation as for professional services.—In re Drake, Case No. 4,058.

An assignee is entitled to a charge for publishing his notice of appointment.—In re Pegues, Case No. 10,907; In re Tulley, Id. 14,235.

And also for advertising and posting handbills.—In re Pegues, Case No. 10,907.

But a charge by the assignee for making a deed of conveyance is unauthorized, and will not be allowed.—In re Tulley, Case No. 14,235.

A charge by the assignee of court fees in drafting an order of compromise is proper where such fees were actually paid.—In re Davenport, Case No. 3,587.

The assignee can only properly charge commission on the amount of debt canceled by compromise with a lienholder.—In re Davenport, Case No. 3,587.

Special charges by the assignee for making sale of real property and making out his report are not authorized, but a reasonable compensation will be allowed.—In re Tulley, Case No. 14,235.

The assignee has no authority to make specific charges for drafting a certificate of exempted property, for drafting the acceptance and notice of appointment, for drafting petition for sale of property, or for drafting application for order of compromise; but for such acts and services the court may allow reasonable compensation in its discretion.—In re Davenport, Case No. 3,587; In re Pegues, Id. 10,907; In re Tulley, Id. 14,235.

A charge by the assignee of $42 for six days' services in collecting notes and accounts will be disallowed, but he is entitled to a reasonable compensation for such services.—In re Pegues, Case No. 10,907.

A charge by an assignee of $14 for two days' services in examining papers will be allowed, provided the services are actual, and not constructive.—In re Pegues, Case No. 10,907.

A charge by an assignee of $7 for one day making out a report, and $7 for one day making application for order of court to obtain the sale, are excessive, but a reasonable compensation will be allowed.—In re Pegues, Case No. 10,907.

Legal charges for printing advertisements for sale of real estate by order of the bankruptcy court are to be computed as follows: Each square of eight lines, first time, one dollar; each subsequent insertion, 50 cents per square.—In re Downing, Case No. 4,045.

The assignee must act as salesman unless leave of court is obtained to employ an auctioneer; and, where he employs the latter without authority, he will not be allowed a charge made for the amount paid for such services.—In re Pegues, Case No. 10,907.

The assignee will not be allowed for auctioneer's charges in making a sale, unless he show affirmatively a necessity for his services.—In re Sweet, Case No. 13,688.

The assignee must apply to the court for authority to incur expenses for professional services and clerk hire.—In re Noyes, Case No. 10,371.

The assignee's accounts for professional and clerical services not duly authorized must be allowed by the court on separate application, on which the assignee is subject to examination.—In re Noyes, Case No. 10,371.

The "expenses" provided for by Act 1867, § 28, of an examination of the bankrupt, do not include any compensation to the assignee.—In re Hughes, Case No. 6,841.

Both actual attention to the business of the trust and the necessity therefor must be shown to entitle the assignee to the per diem allowance. (Act 1867, § 17.)—In re Jones, Case No. 7,451.

Assignees intending to charge for services beyond the fees mentioned in rule 30 must notify creditors of their intention in the notices of the meeting at which their account is to be presented.—Ex parte Whitcomb, Case No. 17,529.

The allowance of reasonable compensation to the assignee for his services is discretionary with the bankruptcy court. Rev. St. § 5099.—Ex parte Whitcomb, Case No. 17,529.

The assignee cannot be allowed anything in addition to disbursements and the commissions provided for in Rev. St. § 5100, except for services, and at the rates set forth in general order No. 30 of April 12, 1875.—In re Muldaur, Case No. 9,905.

General order No. 30, as amended, does not alter the compensation to the assignee in an ordinary case, where the remuneration seems insufficient, but provides for an extra allowance to the assignee in a small class of cases where great care and exertions are shown, and a special inadequacy of compensation appears.—In re Many, Case No. 9,053.

Where the assignee is directed to join in a sale made by a trustee of mortgaged property, and no money is realized by the assignee thereunder, he is not entitled to commissions on the purchase price.—In re Slevin, Case No. 12,942.

§ 464. Allowance for counsel fees.

Counsel fees will not in general be allowed to the assignee where the services were rendered prior to his appointment.—In re New York Mail S. S. Co., Case No. 10,210.

Where two assignees are jointly appointed and employ competent counsel, a charge for professional services by another counsel, the son of one of them, will be disallowed as tending to abuses, where no necessity is shown for his employment.—In re New York Mail S. S. Co., Case No. 10,210.

An assignee has a right to seek professional advice and to employ counsel in necessary and proper cases, but a charge of $75 for counsel fees in simply compromising an inconsiderable debt with a lien creditor, under an order of court, will not be allowed.—In re Davenport, Case No. 3,587.

An assignee is not allowed an amount for attorney's fees unless the necessity of hiring an attorney appears; and, where he is an attorney at law, no allowance will be made, as he does not, as assignee, employ himself as attorney.—In re Muldaur, Case No. 9,905.

The compensation of the assignee's attorney must be reasonable, and proportioned to the value of the estate.—In re Drake, Case No. 4,058.

Suppression of material facts by the assignee while obtaining authority from the court to make a contract to pay counsel one-half the gross recovery in a cause makes the contract invalid, but a reasonable sum will be allowed.—Maybin v. Raymond, Case No. 9,338.

The bankruptcy court has power to determine the question in a summary manner as to the proper allowance of fees to an attorney employed by the assignee, and to order the attorney to pay over any amount in excess of that regarded by the court as reasonable which has been paid him by the assignee.—In re Brinker, Case No. 1,882.

Where a suit was brought for the joint benefit of two parties, and the assignee in bankruptcy of one of them is permitted to withdraw, and assign all his interest in the litigation to the other party, the counsel are only entitled to payment from the assignee for their services and disbursements after the assignee stipulated to be substituted; and the other party, by taking his interest, assumes all its burdens, and has no equity to demand reimbursement from the assignee.—In re Litchfield, Case No. 8,386.

Under general order No. 30, no allowance can be made to an assignee for fees of counsel for services in defending suits pending against the bankrupt, unless under employment by the assignee, although the same were proper and necessary to be rendered on the procurement of the bankrupt, and beneficial to the creditors and the assignee.—In re Hamburger, Case No. 5,974.

§ 465. Discharge.

The court may set aside a discharge of the assignee, which has inadvertently found its way into the court files, and order him to proceed.—Maybin v. Raymond, Case No. 9,338.

IV. COMPOSITION.

§ 466. When authorized.

Corporations, as well as natural persons, have the right to avail themselves of the provisions of the bankrupt law pertaining to composition.—In re Weber Furniture Co., Case No. 17,330.

A debtor can make a composition under Act June 22, 1874, § 17, though, by reason of preference or otherwise, he would not be able to obtain his discharge.—In re Haskell, Case No. 6,192.

To authorize proceedings for a composition, a case in bankruptcy must be pending.—In re Reiman, Case No. 11,673.

A valid composition may be proposed and made, though the verification of the petition be defective.—Ex parte Jewett, Case No. 7,303.

The pendency of a petition to review an order refusing a discharge does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for a composition.—In re Odell, Case No. 10,427.

§ 467. Petition and proposition for composition.

Act June 22, 1874, does not require a written proposition from the bankrupt preceding the notice to creditors, to lay the foundation for their acceptance or rejection of a composition.—In re Haskell, Case No. 6,192.

The petition for a composition must set forth its nature and terms, and the belief of its acceptance by two-thirds in number and one-half in value of the creditors.—In re Holmes, Case No. 6,632.

§ 468. Meeting of creditors—Notice.

A meeting will be reopened where creditors did not receive their notices in time, if prompt application is made, and it appear that their presence might affect the result of the vote.—In re Spencer, Case No. 13,229.

§ 469. —— Who entitled to vote.

The word "creditors" in the provisions of the bankruptcy act relating to composition means all whose debts are provable in bankruptcy.—Ex parte Trafton, Case No. 14,133.

Wards whose money has been loaned to a firm, from which their guardian, a member, took notes to himself as guardian, on coming of age, are entitled to vote in favor of a composition by the bankrupt firm.—In re Bailey, Case No. 729.

Only those creditors who prove their claims are competent to take part in proceedings at a composition meeting.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519; In re Keller, Id. 7,654; In re Mathers, Id. 9,274; In re Bryce, Id. 2,069.

The creditors on whose motion an order to show cause has been issued need not prove their debts anew.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519.

A creditor who has an attachment issued within four months before the filing of the petition cannot vote at a composition meeting.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519.

A creditor buying up enough debts to prevent the acceptance of a resolution, and publicly offering to take all other debts at the same rate, may vote upon debts so bought.—Ex parte Jewett, Case No. 7,303.

Where, after a decision by the register between two parties as to the right to vote upon a claim, the person aggrieved allows the vote to be taken without further objection, he cannot again reopen the question.—In re Spencer, Case No. 13,229.

Affidavit of husband that he had given his wife authority to vote in favor of a composition is a ratification and estoppel, validating the wife's act.—In re Bailey, Case No. 729.

A person acting under a power of attorney from creditors to accept composition to pay in twelve months from Feb. 16 cannot make composition to pay in twelve months from March 16. —In re Alexander, Case No. 159.

§ 470. —— Disputed claims.

The register who presides at a composition meeting may examine and pass upon a disputed claim, subject to review by the court.—In re Keller, Case No. 7,654.

§ 471. —— Number and value of consenting creditors.

A resolution signed by the debtors, and by two-thirds in number of the creditors, representing one-half in value of the debts, is sufficient.—In re Reiman, Case No. 11,673.

Creditors whose debts do not exceed $50 are to be disregarded in computing the majority who must pass a resolution of composition, as well as in ascertaining the number of those who are required to sign the confirmatory statement.—In re Wald, Case No. 17,054.

Creditors whose debts do not exceed $50 are counted in determining the value, but not the number of creditors.—In re Gilday, Case No. 5,422; In re Spades, Id. 13,196.

Damages for a tort not assessed cannot be considered in ascertaining the proportion of creditors voting for a composition.—In re Bailey, Case No. 729.

A creditor whose claim is more than offset by claims of the bankrupt against him cannot vote at a meeting in composition.—In re Purcell, Case No. 11,470.

§ 472. —— Secured creditors.

Secured creditors are those who hold a lien upon property which otherwise would go into the general fund, not those who have personal security; and the latter may vote in a composition proceeding as an unsecured creditor. — In re Spades, Case No. 13,196.

Secured creditors need not be reckoned in computing the portion who must join in a composition.—In re Van Auken, Case No. 16,828.

A creditor who considers himself fully secured, when in fact he is not, and is ready to renounce all claim, will not be counted as a creditor to defeat a composition.—In re Snelling, Case No. 13,140.

Privileged creditors, whose claims will be paid in full to the extent of $50, there being sufficient assets for the payment of them, should be permitted to vote for a composition only on the excess of their debts over $50.—In re O'Neil, Case No. 10,528.

§ 473. —— Conduct of meeting.

A vote should not be taken so long as creditors are prosecuting inquiries to aid in determining whether the composition proposed shall be accepted.—In re Holmes, Case No. 6,632.

A creditor who has regularly appeared at the first meeting, but is not present when the vote is taken, is to be counted as voting against the resolution, unless he has clearly indicated his intention not to be counted.—In re Richmond, Case No. 11,798.

The presiding officer at the meetings has power to regulate the form and order of proceedings, and to decide questions that arise subject to review by the court.—In re Holmes, Case No. 6,632.

The meeting to consider the debtor's offer of a composition must be kept open one hour, at the expiration of which time, if the register has not appeared or been heard from, any party may have the meeting adjourned.—In re Ewing, Case No. 4,587.

§ 474. —— Inquiries and examinations.

The right of a creditor present at a composition meeting to an examination of the bankrupt is waived by moving for a vote.—In re Little, Case No. 8,392.

Every creditor authorized to vote at a meeting for composition has a right to make suitable inquiries of the debtor.—In re Jewett, Case No. 7,303.

At the meeting of creditors called to take action on a resolution of composition, the register has no authority to require any person to testify except the debtor.—In re Dobbins, Case No. 3,943.

A bankrupt may be compelled to appear with his books before the register for examination as to a composition.—In re Ash, Case No. 571.

On an inquiry by creditors to aid in determining whether the composition should be accepted, the debtor's books must be produced, if desired, and a reasonable time allowed for their examination.—In re Holmes, Case No. 6,632.

The proceedings must be recorded, and the examination of the debtor should be conducted like that of a witness in court.—In re Holmes, Case No. 6,632.

The debtor, though present, may, by a vote of the creditors present, be excused from examination on account of illness.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,785.

The debtor may be excused by the creditors from answering inquiries, even though he is present at the meeting of creditors.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,781.

The register has power to conduct the inquiries to be made of the debtor, and to take down the substance of his answers, but not to conduct a written examination upon things in general, as in bankruptcy.—In re Proby, Case No. 11,439.

§ 475. —— Adjournment.

A register has power to adjourn a meeting of its creditors when, in his judgment, the interest of the whole body of creditors, or of sound policy, requires it.—In re Cheney, Case No. 2,637.

§ 476. —— Second meeting.

A second composition meeting will be ordered where the object of the first one failed by reason of the mistakes or misinstructions of attorneys for creditors.—In re McDowell, Case No. 8,776.

Where a composition providing for giving indorsed notes is defective in not naming the indorser, an additional resolution providing for such security may be adopted at another meeting of creditors, and presented to the court in the same way as the original resolution.—In re Reiman, Case No. 11,673.

No second meeting of creditors, as such, is necessary to confirm the resolution of composition.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519.

The debtor is not required to be present at a meeting of creditors called to consider a resolution to vary a composition which has been accepted.—In re Dumahaut, Case No. 4,124.

At a second meeting either party may furnish competent testimony on the question whether the composition is for the best interests of all concerned.—In re Keller, Case No. 7,654.

§ 477. Signing composition.

It is only necessary that the confirmatory signatures should be attached at or before the hearing for a ratification of the resolution.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519.

§ 478. Extra inducement to sign composition.

Payment of larger sum to one creditor or his agent, as a condition of accepting a compromise is void.—Bullene v. Blain, Case No. 2,124.

A promise to pay an agent, whose principal was a creditor and was to be paid a larger amount than others as a condition of accepting a compromise, a certain sum as services to urge the compromise on the ground of the general interest of all creditors is valid.—Bullene v. Blain, Case No. 2,124.

Where a bookkeeper is the person actually employed to obtain the assent of creditors to a composition, the bankrupt is chargeable with what he did in the matter, without having actual knowledge thereof.—In re Bennett, Case No. 1,312.

Where a bookkeeper of a bankrupt, without the latter's knowledge, made an offer to induce the consent of a creditor to a composition, but such creditor refused, and it appears that the bookkeeper paid money to another creditor who did assent, with no explanation other than the denial of the bookkeeper that it had any relation to the matter of composition, such evidence is sufficient to warrant the inference that unfair advantage has been offered to induce the creditors to assent to the composition, and for that reason it must fail.—In re Bennett, Case No. 1,312.

Payment to induce consent will impeach a composition, though the requisite number of creditors signed without counting the one to whom payment was made.—In re Bennett, Case No. 1,312.

Creditors who join a composition cannot complain of a payment to one of their number to induce him to join out of a fund reserved, and not included in the schedule.—National Park Bank v. People's Bank, Case No. 10,049.

A signature of a creditor to a resolution of composition obtained upon the promise of another creditor to give him the promisor's trade in the future will invalidate the resolution.—In re Shine, Case No. 12,788.

Where the holder of the bankrupt's note was induced to sign the resolution of composition by an undefined expectation of advantage held out by the indorser, the composition will be set aside, though it does not appear that the bankrupt had anything to do with it.—In re Sawyer, Case No. 12,395.

A resolution of composition is avoided by the fact that a creditor was paid to give up a threatened opposition though a sufficient number of creditors had accepted it, and there was no evidence that their action was influenced thereby, or that the debtor procured the payment to be made.—In re Sawyer, Case No. 12,395.

Secret preferences, paid as inducements to obtain signatures to composition deeds, can be recovered by the debtor or by injured creditors or by the assignee.—Bean v. Brookmire, Case No. 1,170.

A composition will not be set aside after two years, as procured by preferences to certain creditors, where the debtor has entered into new business relations and contracted new debts, and the creditors have failed to move promptly after knowledge of the wrong.—In re Herman, Case No. 6,405.

§ 479. Effect of irregularities.

Irregularities which are the effects of mistake, and not of fraud, are not fatal to the validity of composition proceedings.—In re Henry, Case No. 6,370.

Creditors will be held bound by the proceedings had in the pursuance of the resolution of composition, though they are irregular as regards other parties.—In re Rodger, Case No. 11,992.

§ 480. Schedule of bankrupt.

Under the amendatory act of June 22, 1874, in cases of composition, a schedule of assets, such as is required in bankruptcy proceedings, is a sufficient statement.—In re Haskell, Case No. 6,192.

A contingent liability as stockholder in a failed savings bank need not be scheduled where it does not appear that the bank will not pay in full.—In re Greenebaum, Case No. 5,769.

The failure to schedule all debts will not prevent confirmation of a composition, for the discharge will only operate as to debts scheduled.—In re Greenebaum, Case No. 5,769.

A concealment of assets or a failure to name all the creditors does not necessarily render the proceedings void.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519.

A mistake without fraud in the statement of the amount due a creditor will not vitiate the composition.—Ex parte Trafton, Case No. 14,133.

The fact that the schedules stated the real estate of the bankrupt as of unknown or uncertain value is not a good objection to a composition.—In re Welles, Case No. 17,377.

The schedule cannot be corrected on motion to record a resolution of composition, so as to show that the requisite number of creditors joined, but confirmation will be denied, with leave to renew the motion.—In re Asten, Case No. 594.

§ 481. Reference to register.

After a motion to confirm a compromise has been brought on for final hearing, the judge has power to refer the matter back to the register to report all the facts of the case touching the proposed compromise.—In re Walshe, Case No. 17,118.

Where an order refers a proposition of compromise to a register, it should require him to report as to whether the resolution of composition has been legally passed at the first meeting, and whether it has been confirmed by the required signatures, and whether the terms as to the composition are for the best interests of all concerned.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519.

On application to confirm a proposed composition, the report of the register must be taken to be full and true.—In re Spencer, Case No. 13,229.

§ 482. Terms and provisions—In general.

Any composition is allowable which is satisfactory to the requisite majority of the creditors, and which is for the best interests of all concerned. Act 1867.—In re Purcell, Case No. 11,470.

A provision in a composition agreement, that it is not to be binding on any one unless signed by all creditors, includes secured as well as unsecured creditors.—Kinsing's Assignee v. Bartholew, Case No. 7,831.

A provision of the agreement that the proceedings may be discontinued at any time without notice to the creditors is not binding on the court.—In re McNab & H. Mfg. Co., Case No. 8,906.

A provision of the resolution of composition that upon delivery of the composition notes the assignee shall deliver all the property in his hands to the bankrupt, and be wholly discharged, is nugatory, and is not validated by a confirmation by the court.—In re Hyman, Case No. 6,985.

A resolution proposing composition of 70 cents, to be paid within 30 days, on condition that all the bankrupt's property be surrendered and all pending suits discontinued, is proper.—In re Cavan, Case No. 2,528.

§ 483. —— Amount and form of payment.

The decision of the majority creditors is conclusive as to the amount of the compromise where their judgment is exercised in good faith, and there is nothing to indicate fraud, accident, or mistake.—In re Weber Furniture Co., Case No. 17,331.

A composition agreement, whereby creditors accept payment in notes, is defective, and will not be ratified, though payment by installments secured by notes would be valid.—In re Langdon, Case No. 8,058.

A composition of 20 per cent. in money, secured by time notes, leaving certain realty in the hands of the assignee, to be converted into money, and paid to the creditors, is a lawful composition.—In re Wronkow, Case No. 18,105.

It is no valid objection to a composition that it is unsecured and payable in installments, and that the property of the debtor is restored to him, to be dealt with at his pleasure.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,781.

A composition is none the less payable in money because the payment is postponed to a future day by giving notes.—In re McNab & H. Mfg. Co., Case No. 8,906.

§ 484. —— Time of payment.

The question as to the time for the payment of the composition is one for the creditors to settle, and their judgment will not be reversed except for valid reasons.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,785.

§ 485. —— Security for payment.

A composition agreed upon under the provisions of Act 1867, providing that payment should be made in indorsed promissory notes, will be sustained, as such transaction is a payment of money under the statute.—In re Hurst, Case No. 6,925.

A composition for a payment of a certain sum on the dollar in installments—the first in cash, and the others secured by notes indorsed by persons named—is valid. Act June 22, 1874.—In re Reiman, Case No. 11,673; Id. 11,675, affirming Case No. 11,674.

A resolution of composition providing for the giving of notes "satisfactorily indorsed" is defective in not naming the indorser, or providing for his being named.—In re Reiman, Case No. 11,673.

A resolution accepting a composition on condition that payment shall be guarantied by the giving of a satisfactory bond, in a penalty named, to a committee appointed by the creditors, will be confirmed.—In re Lewis, Case No. 8,314; In re Louis, Id. 8,528.

Security for the payment of the composition is not always essential to its validity. This is merely one of the facts to be considered in light of all the other facts on the question as to whether the composition is for the best interests of all concerned.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,785.

The fact that security provided for a composition does not certainly secure the full payment of the composition does not make the composition uncertain.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,785.

§ 486. —— Possession by debtor pending payment.

It is no ground for refusing to ratify a composition that the debtor retains possession of his assets, and that there is a provision that he may so retain possession.—In re Van Auken, Case No. 16,828.

The confirmation of the resolution of composition which provides that, upon a certain amount being paid, the property should revert to the debtor, will be denied where it appeared that the debtor, who was given possession of the creditor's property, had misappropriated the same, as a person proved once to have misappropriated funds of another is incompetent to be trustee of property for the benefit of creditors.—In re Bloch, Case No. 1,551.

The confirmation of a resolution of composition for 75 per cent., the last installment payable in three years, with no other security than the notes of the debtor corporation, will be refused where it appears that the president has been retained after his defalcation as treasurer has been discovered, and that the trustees have manifested no disposition to punish him or compel him to make restitution.—In re McNab & H. Mfg. Co., Case No. 8,906.

The bankruptcy court will refuse to confirm a composition under which all the property of the bankrupts is to be restored to them on their giving their individual notes, unsecured and unindorsed, for 75 per cent. of their debts.—In re Janeway, Case No. 7,207.

§ 487. Objections to confirmation of resolution.

Objections can be presented at the hearing for the ratification of a resolution of composition, as to the legality of its passage, as to the confirmatory signatures, etc., but only unsecured creditors can make such objections.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519.

Objections that the claim of a creditor voting for the composition is fictitious or invalid cannot be raised for the first time upon motion for confirmation.—In re Bloch, Case No. 1,551.

The refusal of the register to proceed with the examination of the debtor until his fees are paid or secured is no ground of opposition to the recording of a resolution of composition.—In re Tifft, Case No. 14,033.

The refusal by the register of permission to take a copy of the inventory, which is at all times accessible to the creditor, is not prejudicial to him, and is no ground of opposition to the recording of a resolution of composition.—In re Tifft, Case No. 14,033.

A resolution of composition will not be recorded where a creditor's right to make suitable inquiries of the debtor has been denied or postponed by a vote of the meeting.—Ex parte Jewett, Case No. 7,303.

Mere delay, without laches, in obtaining requisite number of signatures to a composition, is not ground for refusing to record it.—In re Cavan, Case No. 2,528.

The objection that the estate could pay more will not avail unless very clearly made out, and the disparity is evident.—In re Welles, Case No. 17,377.

The satisfaction by the bankrupt of claims at large discounts, and the purchase by his brother of other claims, where the transactions are open, is no reason for refusing confirmation of the composition where two-thirds in number and amount of the other creditors consent to the composition.—In re Walshe, Case No. 17,118.

The court will not refuse to confirm, nor will it set aside, a composition, because certain property, located in another state, claimed by the bankrupt, was not reckoned, where the bankrupt had been advised by counsel that his claim was baseless, and it appeared that it could not be recovered, except by a long and expensive litigation. Case No. 11,674 affirmed.—In re Reiman, Case No. 11,675.

The court may confirm a resolution of composition in cases of voluntary bankruptcy, although the bankrupt has by his own acts and conduct deprived himself of the right to obtain a discharge.—In re Troth, Case No. 14,188.

The mere fact that a bankrupt has been refused a discharge on a specification of objection is not an absolute bar to a composition. A composition is not a discharge.—In re Odell, Case No. 10,427.

The presence and vote of a creditor who is not lawfully to be counted as such, in favor of a composition, will not nullify the proceedings unless the absence of his vote would change the result.—In re Walshe, Case No. 17,118.

Where the requisite majority of creditors agree to a composition, the mere fact that some of that majority signed in a representative capacity, as assignees in bankruptcy, administrators, etc., is not a valid objection to the composition.—In re Greenebaum, Case No. 5,769.

The omission of the court in a voluntary case to adjudicate the debtor a bankrupt does not defeat a composition made before such adjudication.—In re Van Auken, Case No. 16,828.

A composition to pay more than the estate is able to pay, where the balance is made up by friends, is not evidence of fraud.—In re Snelling, Case No. 13,140.

The bankruptcy court will interfere where the vote would have been otherwise had the facts been honestly and fairly laid before the creditors.—In re Keiler, Case No. 7,648.

§ 488. Hearing and determination.

Though there are indicia of fraud in composition proceedings, the court should not refuse to record the resolution without giving the debtor and majority creditors an opportunity to be heard.—In re Weber Furniture Co., Case No. 17,331.

Any creditor may testify that he has been induced to sign the resolution of composition by the false statements or evil practices of the debtor.—In re Keller, Case No. 7,654.

In deciding whether a composition should be approved or rejected, it should be compared with what the creditors would receive through an assignee, not with what the debtor might possibly be able to pay them.—In re Whipple, Case No. 17,513.

In deciding a motion to confirm a resolution of compromise, the court will take into account the relations of the creditors favoring the compromise to the debtor, and the relative number of creditors whose individual opinions are expressed in person by the resolution, as compared with those who dissent.—In re Weber Furniture Co., Case No. 17,330.

A resolution of compromise which is palpably opposed to the best interests of all concerned will not be confirmed.—In re Weber Furniture Co., Case No. 17,330.

Upon the submission of a resolution of composition duly accepted and confirmed by the requisite number of creditors, the bankruptcy court is not limited to the determination of the mathematical result.—In re Jacobs, Case No. 7,159.

The court will not confirm a composition duly accepted by the requisite number of creditors where fraudulent preferences to some of the creditors have not been taken into consideration.—In re Jacobs, Case No. 7,159.

Where it appears that a creditor will not receive any more under the ordinary administration, the composition will be confirmed, in the absence of proof of collusion.—In re Keiler, Case No. 7,648.

Where the requisite number of creditors consent to a composition in bankruptcy, and it appears that the composition is advantageous to the creditors, it must be confirmed, though the proceeding in bankruptcy was fraudulently brought about by the bankrupts, and though they will profit by the composition.—In re Allen, Cases Nos. 209, 210.

In accepting a composition of creditors all the court requires is to be satisfied that the creditors have been fully and honestly advised of the true condition of the debtor's affairs, so that the creditors have acted intelligently and understandingly in full view of the facts, and with a knowledge of their own rights in the premises.—In re Greenebaum, Case No. 5,769.

The composition should be accepted if made by the necessary quorum of creditors, acting intelligently, and without undue influence.—In re Greenebaum, Case No. 5,769.

A resolution of composition cannot be defeated on the mere ground that by such defeat some peculiar benefit may accrue to the objecting creditor.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,519.

The bankruptcy court will withhold its assent to the composition, if satisfied from evidence that the proceedings are collusive, although there is only one dissenting creditor.—In re Keiler, Case No. 7,648.

Resolution of composition passed by the requisite number of creditors, but opposed by two creditors, who, prior thereto, successfully opposed a discharge, will not be confirmed, where it appears that the composition is not for the best interests of the creditors who defeated the discharge.—In re Hannahs, Case No. 6,033.

The absence of the debtor is no ground for refusing to confirm the proceedings, where it does not appear that creditors' rights were injuriously affected by his absence.—In re Dumahaut, Case No. 4,124.

In confirming a composition the court may order the bankrupt to pay the expenses and disbursements of a creditor in successfully opposing a prior application for a discharge.—In re Odell, Case No. 10,427.

§ 489. Change of composition.

A composition ratifying an assignment under the state law may be varied by creditors at a subsequent meeting by providing for distribution of the assets in bankruptcy, where no creditors are prejudiced thereby.—In re Dumahaut, Case No. 4,124.

§ 490. Conduct of bankrupt's business by committee.

Where, during the continuance of the bankrupt's business under the direction of a committee, as provided in the resolution of composition, such committee writes, without authority, to one who afterwards sold goods to the firm, that it was understood that all debts incurred after the composition should be paid in full before any payments should be made on the old indebtedness, but that the committee were not to be personally liable, no new assets being acquired under the arrangement, the new debts will not be paid in full in preference to the old creditors, as the action of such committee did not work an estoppel as to such creditors.—In re Brightman, Case No. 1,879.

§ 491. Dividends and payment.

Creditors receiving their respective shares of a composition are not bound to see that other creditors receive their shares. — Ex parte Hamlin, Case No. 5,993.

Where, in composition proceedings, the amount of the claim of one of the creditors is disputed by the debtor, and the estimate is made to be used merely as showing on what sum said creditor is entitled to vote, such estimate does not estop the debtor from questioning the amount of the claim on which the percentage of the composition shall be calculated in paying said composition.—In re Holmes, Case No. 6,632a.

A creditor who is entitled to performance under Rev. St. § 5101, can have priority in payment only out of the assets that should go to the debtor's assignee, as the composition statute does not impose on the debtor, as a condition precedent to a composition, that he shall pay in full all claims entitled to priority under such section.—In re Chamberlin, Case No. 2,580.

Where notes given upon a composition settlement fall due pending action upon a petition to review the order of confirmation, and petitioners refuse to receive payment, the money must be paid into court, or the bankrupt will be liable to a summary order for payment.—In re Reynolds, Case No. 11,725.

The court will not suspend or deny a creditor's right to receive his composition, except in favor of one who claims a specific lien thereon, or who has procured the appointment of a receiver to take the creditor's title.—In re Kohlsaat, Case No. 7,918.

Moneys payable under a composition cannot be attached, or their payment obstructed, by proceedings of another court for the security of a suitor therein.—In re Kohlsaat, Case No. 7,918.

One who advanced money with a mere understanding that it was not to be pressed for payment held entitled to share in the debtor's estate under a composition deed in the usual form.—In re Lane, Case No. 8,044.

The court may provide for an unliquidated claim in composition cases by permitting the prosecution of a pending suit in the state court, or by ordering an inquiry in the matter at the bar of the bankruptcy court.—Ex parte Trafton, Case No. 14,133.

A creditor who knows that a composition is being carried out, and that the creditors are being paid, and makes no effort to obtain his own share, will be estopped to object to these payments.—Ex parte Hamlin, Case No. 5,993.

§ 492. Set-off.

In composition cases, in which no assignee has been appointed, the debtor stands in the position of the assignee, in respect to set-off.—Ex parte Howard Nat. Bank, Case No. 6,764.

A creditor who receives a composition with full knowledge of all facts cannot afterwards require a set-off to be enforced against the debtor by a court of equity, which he had opportunity to assert at the time the composition was made.—Hunt v. Holmes, Case No. 6,890.

Where a manufacturer consigns goods to factors who advance him their notes to an amount larger than is ultimately realized on the goods, which notes are indorsed by him and discounted, and both parties become bankrupt, and the factors, employing the goods then in their possession, make a composition with their creditors, including the holders of the notes, who reserve the right to prove in full against all other parties to them, such creditors, in proving against the estate of the manufacturer, will not be required to give credit for the full amount received by them on the composition, but will be required to abate their proof by giving credit for the property of such manufacturer so employed by the factors, which might, upon their application, have been applied towards paying their debts.—Ex parte Harris, Case No. 6,109.

§ 493. In case of partnerships.

In the case of individual and partnership creditors, there can be a general composition only in the absence of objection by a creditor.—In re Spades, Case No. 13,196.

Where creditors of a bankrupt firm accepted their proposition with the knowledge that the members had received a sum out of the partnership fund, the resolution will not be set aside.—In re South Boston Iron Co., Case No. 13,183.

Individual creditors cannot participate in a meeting of partnership creditors held to determine whether an offer of compromise by the bankrupt firm shall be accepted.—In re South Boston Iron Co., Case No. 13,183.

Refusal or neglect to sign a petition for a composition by one of the partners, unless fraudulent, will not render the proceeding invalid as against the other partners.—In re Henry, Case No. 6,370.

One member of a firm which has been adjudicated bankrupt may submit a proposition of composition to the creditors of the firm and his individual creditors.—Pool v. McDonald, Case No. 11,268.

§ 494. Operation and effect.

Provable debts created by fraud are bound by a composition.—In re Shafer, Case No. 12,695.

Fiduciary debts are not discharged by a composition in bankruptcy, as the latter is not included in "proceedings in bankruptcy" mentioned in Rev. St. § 5117.—In re Rodger, Case No. 11,991.

A bankrupt is discharged by a composition accepted and approved only from claims of creditors whose names, addresses, and debts are placed on the statement produced at the meeting of creditors, but, as to the claims of the creditors whose names do so appear, a discharge granted by the court is neither necessary nor proper.—In re Becket, Case No. 1,210.

The confirmation of a composition between the bankrupt and his creditors, and the bankrupt's compliance with its conditions, suspend the functions of the assignee as to the administering of the estate; and the delivery of any property to the bankrupt, pursuant to the terms of the composition, discharges the assignee from further liability therefor, since the creditors have waived their right to call him to account for it as long as the composition remains in force.—In re August, Case No. 645.

A ratified composition confines a secured debtor to his security, and discharges the debtor from personal liability for the debt.—In re Lytle, Case No. 8,650.

Where, in a composition proceeding, the statement of liabilities represents a claim as being fully secured, and the creditor is in attendance, but does not participate in the proceedings, nor raise any objection to such representation, the claim is not discharged by the composition; but the creditor is entitled to the percentage agreed upon in such proceeding on the deficit left unpaid on realizing such security, whenever ascertained.—Paret v. Ticknor, Case No. 10,711.

A composition agreement, where no assignee is appointed, will bind creditors in another state whose names were entered on the schedule, but will not affect their rights in rem against property attached.—McGehee v. Hentz, Case No. 8,794.

A composition under the bankrupt law, without an adjudication and assignment, does not operate to displace or dissolve an attachment in a state court, levied within four months of the proceedings in bankruptcy, as against a creditor who took no part in the composition proceedings.—In re Clapp, Case No. 2,785; In re Scott, Id. 12,519; In re Shields, Id. 12,784.

A resolution of composition is not effectual to discharge the debtor until the dividend is in fact paid to the creditor.—In re Hurst, Case No. 6,925.

An adjudication will not be made, at the instance of creditors, in opposition to debtor in voluntary proceedings, after he has begun proceedings for composition under Act June 22, 1874.—In re Alsberg, Case No. 260.

In a voluntary proceeding in which a composition has been agreed upon for payment of 30 per cent. in cash, a discontinuance and restoration of the property will not be decreed on petition of the bankrupts joined in by a majority of creditors until the terms of the composition have been carried out.—In re McKeon, Case No. 8,858.

The bankruptcy court may enjoin creditors from harassing the debtor by proceedings at law while his composition proceeding is pending, except as to proceedings to enforce a valid security.—In re Hinsdale, Case No. 6,526.

Pending the composition the court may enjoin a creditor from suing on an unsecured debt; otherwise after the time for paying the composition has passed.—In re Hinsdale, Case No. 6,526.

After the discharge of a debtor by recording the resolution of composition, the court loses all control over his property, and cannot, by injunction, protect it from seizure by a secured creditor through the instrumentality of state courts.—In re Lytle, Case No. 8,650.

An injunction to restrain creditors from interfering with the bankrupt cannot be granted after lapse of the time provided by the terms of a composition, not even where the bankrupt put in his answer to a suit in a state court before the composition could be set up as a defense, and had to apply to set up the composition by supplemental answer, provided he had time to apply for an injunction during the composition proceedings.—In re Nebenzahl, Case No. 10,074.

§ 495. Effect of failure to perform composition.

The dismissal of proceedings in bankruptcy will not be vacated on the failure of the debtors to perform the agreement of composition, where the rights of third parties have intervened.—In re Ewing, Case No. 4,588.

The debtor's default under the composition does not entitle the creditor to the dissolution of an injunction against his judgment, obtained pending the bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Bayly, Case No. 1,144.

Delay in paying composition notes, occasioned by legal or other difficulties, does not ipso facto avoid the composition, nor does failure to pay one creditor according to the composition forfeit the bankrupt's rights as to creditors punctually paid.—In re Kohlsaat, Case No. 7,918.

Where, in bankruptcy proceedings, a composition is arranged and confirmed, the case is not thereby taken out of the jurisdiction of the court; and, where the debtor fails to carry out the terms of the composition, a creditor cannot thereupon claim the right to proceed against him for the collection of the whole debt. The bankruptcy proceedings are still pending, and his remedy is to be sought therein.—In re Bayly, Case No. 1,144.

§ 496. Enforcing composition.

A party interested is not entitled, as matter of right, to ask the summary enforcement of a composition by order of court.—In re Remsen, Case No. 11,698.

The performance by the bankrupt of an ex parte order after default will not be compelled, where there is no proof of service in a manner required.—In re Remsen, Case No. 11,698.

An order will not be made, directing the bankrupt to comply with the terms of composition after default by him, where it does not appear that the creditors are willing to proceed with the composition.—In re Remsen, Case No. 11,698.

One who has agreed to become a surety on a composition will not be summarily compelled to give security, where it appears that the bankrupt has abandoned the composition, and has not given the notes agreed.—In re Remsen, Case No. 11,698.

The bankruptcy court will not enforce the provisions of a composition in favor of the debtor, and as against a creditor who has obtained a judgment by default in the state court (the bankruptcy proceeding not being set up as a defense) upon a debt contracted by fraud.—In re Tooker, Case No. 14,096.

A creditor cannot be compelled summarily to take money and notes provided for by the composition, as a bankruptcy court can enforce in a summary manner only the executory provisions of the composition, under Act June 22, 1874, § 17.—In re Hinsdale, Case No. 6,526.

The bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction, under its summary power to enforce compositions, to take cognizance of and determine questions of title between the debtor and persons not parties to the proceedings.—In re Waitzfelder, Case No. 17,048.

§ 497. Vacating and setting aside composition.

When an application is made to set aside a composition once recorded, and to proceed in bankruptcy, notice should be given to all the creditors, as well as to the debtor.—Ex parte Hamlin, Case No. 5,993.

When a composition, partly carried out, is set aside, all acts which have been regularly done in pursuance of the resolutions are valid, and the assignment to an assignee should contain a proviso to that effect.—Ex parte Hamlin, Case No. 5,993.

The fraud of a member of a firm in effecting a composition with creditors cannot be alleged by him as ground of proceedings in bankruptcy after the firm is dissolved, but such composition can be set aside only by the creditors who are wronged.—In re Hamlin, Case No. 5,994.

On a petition to set aside a composition for alleged greater payments to other creditors, testimony will be ordered to be taken on notice to all creditors and the debtor, stating the time and object of the meeting.—In re Diggles, Case No. 3,905.

§ 498. Action by bankrupt.

An order made in composition proceedings appointing the bankrupts custodians of their property does not permit them to maintain a suit under Rev. St. § 4979.—McGehee v. Hentz, Case No. 8,794.

§ 499. Payment of surplus to bankrupt.

Where a composition between a bankrupt and his creditors has been confirmed, and its terms complied with, any question as to what amount the assignee should pay over to the bankrupt as the balance in his hands should be determined by the register under a special order of the court, and not upon a final accounting or creditors' meeting pursuant to Rev. St. § 5096.—In re August, Case No. 645.

V. RIGHTS, REMEDIES, AND DISCHARGE OF BANKRUPT.

(A) RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF BANKRUPT IN GENERAL.

§ 500. Privilege from arrest.

Under Act 1841 the bankrupt is privileged from arrest on execution for a debt pending the bankruptcy proceedings.—Anonymous, Case No. 450; United States v. Dobbins, Id. 14,971; In re Winthrop, Id. 17,900.

Under Act 1841 the bankruptcy, until after the decree and certificate of discharge, cannot release the bankrupt from arrest or imprisonment for a debt which is provable, but has not been proved against his estate, where the bankrupt was arrested before the petition in bankruptcy was filed.—In re Cheney, Case No. 2,636; In re Comstock, Id. 3,073; Ex parte Hoskins, Id. 6,712.

Where a party is arrested on a process from a state court, and is released on giving bonds to apply to be discharged under the state insolvent laws, and files a petition in bankruptcy, and is decreed a bankrupt, the bankruptcy court, before his discharge, will not enjoin the proceedings in the state court.—Ex parte Rank, Case No. 11,566.

The freedom from arrest granted to bankrupts "during the pendency of the proceedings in bankruptcy" by Act 1867, § 26, does not relieve them from arrests existing at the commencement of the proceedings.—Hazleton v. Valentine, Case No. 6,287; In re Walker, Id. 17,060; Minon v. Van Nostrand, Id. 9,641, affirming Case No. 9,642.

A stay of proceedings, subsequent to final judgment, for the purpose of putting in motion the remedy of arrest which is reserved to the creditor, is not allowable under Rev. St. §§ 5106, 5107.—In re Whitney, Case No. 17,581.

Where a bankrupt is arrested under mesne process in New Brunswick and gives bail, and, after judgment is entered up against him, is surrendered in exoneration of his bail and imprisoned, and subsequently files a petition in bankruptcy in Massachusetts, and still later is charged in execution in accordance with the laws of New Brunswick, such charging in execution is not an arrest during the pendency of the proceedings in bankruptcy under Act 1867, § 26.—Hazleton v. Valentine, Case No. 6,287.

Where a bankrupt is under arrest under process from a state court, he should make application to that court before coming into the court of bankruptcy to obtain his release.—In re O'Mara, Case No. 10,509.

The district court has jurisdiction to enforce the protection from arrest given the bankrupt (Act 1867, § 26), by releasing him from imprisonment by habeas corpus.—In re Glaser, Case No. 5,474.

A bankrupt cannot be held in the custody of the sheriff of the county on account of a judgment obtained against him for costs in an action in a state court.—In re Borst, Case No. 1,665.

The bankrupt, pending proceedings against him, may be held under arrest in a civil action founded on a debt or claim from which his discharge in bankruptcy would not release him, though the same is provable in bankruptcy.—In re Seymour, Case No. 12,684; In re Glaser, Id. 5,474; In re Alsberg, Id. 261.

An order of arrest by a state court, at the instance of a creditor whose debt is alleged to have been fraudulently contracted, cannot be vacated by the bankruptcy court; but the state court's proceedings may be stayed until the question of discharge is determined.—In re Migel, Case No. 9,538.

A judgment based upon a fraud of the bankrupt or upon a debt contracted by fraud is not affected by a discharge in bankruptcy (Act 1867, § 33), and the bankrupt is not exempt from arrest on an execution issued thereon.—In re Devoe, Case No. 3,843; In re Patterson, Id. 10,817; In re Pettis, Id. 11,046; In re Whitehouse, Id. 17,564; In re Pitts, Id. 11,190.

A bankrupt is not entitled to be discharged from arrest under process of a state court where the claim there sued for was created by defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity. Case No. 7,768 affirmed.—In re Kimball, Case No. 7,769.

Money collected by an agent under an agreement to account and pay over the proceeds monthly to his principal is not a debt created in a "fiduciary character."—Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co. v. Clinton, Case No. 5,845.

An agent who fails to remit the proceeds of flour, according to an agreement with his principal that he would remit the same, less his commissions, may be arrested in an action founded on the transaction, although he has been adjudged a bankrupt, the debt having been created by his defalcation while acting in a fiduciary character, within the meaning of Act 1867, § 33.—In re Kimball, Case No. 7,769.

A claim for the proceeds of goods consigned to the bankrupts as factors would be discharged by a discharge in bankruptcy; and hence, if the bankrupt is arrested therefor in a state court, he will be released by the bankruptcy court.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,976. CONTRA, see In re Seymour, Case No. 12,684.

A bankrupt arrested under a ca. sa. issued upon such a judgment will be released by this court, even though the state court had refused so to do.—In re Wiggers, Case No. 17,623.

The question whether a bankrupt can be discharged from arrest under Act 1867, § 26, depends upon the case presented on which the arrest was made.—In re Kimball, Case No. 7,769.

Where a bankrupt is arrested on an order issuing out of a state court, the bankruptcy court, on habeas corpus, can only inquire whether or not the papers on their face are sufficient to show that the debt was one created by fraud or in a fiduciary capacity.—In re Valk, Case No. 16,814.

In determining whether the arrest of the bankrupt on process of a state court after adjudication of bankruptcy was founded on a debt or claim from which his discharge would not release him (Act 1867, § 26), the court can only look to the affidavits on which the order for arrest was granted, and not to a complaint which was not before the state court at that time. Case No. 7,768 affirmed.—In re Kimball, Case No. 7,769.

A bankrupt is not exempt from arrest under Act 1867, §§ 26, 33, exempting the bankrupt from arrest in certain cases, where the affidavits upon which an order for his arrest was issued in the state court show a fraudulent contract, although the complaint is simply for goods sold and delivered.—In re Kimball, Case No. 7,767.

Evidence cannot be received to contradict the declaration in the action in which the order of arrest was granted, and to show that no such cause of action really exists as is therein set forth.—In re Devoe, Case No. 3,843.

The federal court, on habeas corpus to release bankrupt arrested on process in state court, is not bound by a case made in state court as to whether debt sued on was contracted in fraud, but may consider all legal evidence brought before it.—In re Alsberg, Case No. 261.

A judgment against the bankrupt by default in a state court, recovered upon a complaint which showed that the debt was contracted by fraud, is conclusive upon that question.—In re Patterson, Case No. 10,817.

Proceedings in a suit against the bankrupt by creditors who have joined in the petition, in which he was arrested on the ground that the debt was fraudulently contracted, will be enjoined pending the discharge.—In re Goldstein, Case No. 5,523.

A bankrupt who is held in custody under orders of arrest made in actions in a state court, and against whom other actions are pending in the state court, will be discharged from arrest, and proceedings will be stayed by the bankruptcy court until the question of his discharge shall be passed upon by the bankruptcy court, and a referee will be appointed to take testimony as to whether such actions are for claims that will be discharged in bankruptcy.—In re Jacoby, Case No. 7,165.

A bankrupt, surrendered by his bail during the time allowed for his examination, will not be committed in execution.—Foxall v. Levi, Case No. 5,015.

§ 501. Supersedeas and stay.

A supersedeas may issue after a bankrupt has obtained his certificate.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

A district judge has power to supersede a commission of bankruptcy under Act April 4, 1800, without express grant of such power therein.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

The effect of a supersedeas, lawfully ordered, is to annihilate a commission of bankruptcy, and to place the bankrupt, with his estate and effects, in the same situation they would have been in had it never existed.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

An order of supersedeas will annul a commission of bankruptcy without a formal writ being issued.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

A supersedeas of a commission in bankruptcy will not be revoked to allow petitioner to prove debts against which there is a prima facie presumption of payment, unless it appear that he has a reasonable expectation of rebutting such presumption.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

Where a certified bankrupt dies pending the commission, having devised all his property, and all that he might afterwards acquire, to his wife, who subsequently dies, devising her property to her daughter, and appoints her son executor, and real property of the bankrupt is afterwards discovered, the son has sufficient interest therein to entitle him to apply for a supersedeas.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

If a bankrupt files two petitions setting forth the same debts, and the first one is still pending, proceedings under the second one will be stayed. —In re Wielarski, Case No. 17,619.

Where bankrupt partners reside in different states, and proceedings are commenced in each state, the proceedings in one state will be stayed until further order.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,983.

§ 502. Transactions and property acquired after adjudication.

The bankrupt, after the adjudication, may enter into business, and hold property, subject to the contingency of obtaining a discharge. Act 1841.—In re Grant, Case No. 5,693.

Whether property subsequently discovered will pass under a general devise by a certified bankrupt, query.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

Property recovered after the bankrupt's discharge, by means of a suit in which the assignee was substituted as plaintiff more than two years after his appointment, cannot be claimed by the bankrupt on the ground that the action was barred.—Maybin v. Raymond, Case No. 9,338.

§ 503. Delay of proceedings.

Act 1800 requires extraordinary promptness on the part of the creditors to bring the proceedings to a close, and countenances no neglect or delay.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

§ 504. Surplus funds.

The surplus funds in the hands of the assignee after settlement of the estate are to be paid to the bankrupt on his petition on oath showing that further debts will not be proved. —In re Hoyt, Case No. 6,806.

See, also, ante, § 499.

(B) ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST BANKRUPT.

See, also, ante, § 498.

§ 505. Right to maintain in general.

No lien can be acquired or enforced by any proceeding in a state court commenced after petition is filed in bankruptcy, though, in cases where jurisdiction has been previously acquired by state courts of a suit brought in good faith to enforce a valid lien upon property, such jurisdiction will not be devested.—In re Wynne, Case No. 18,117.

After the bankruptcy of defendant, against whom a decree has been obtained in a state court operating as a lien upon his property, plaintiff cannot proceed under a state statute for a discovery of assets.—Ex parte Taylor, Case No. 13,773.

A general creditors' bill in a state court filed after proceedings in bankruptcy commenced gives no jurisdiction, nor can jurisdiction be conferred by consent of the assignee.—In re Anderson, Case No. 351.

A creditor who has not received notice of the proceedings, nor any dividend, nor proved his debt, cannot sue on his debt pending the discharge. His remedy is to oppose the discharge. Act 1867.—In re Archenbrown, Case No. 504.

Irregularities in the bankruptcy proceedings do not deprive the court of its jurisdiction over the bankrupts and their estate, nor justify creditors in proceeding in the state courts.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,700.

When the United States courts, under the bankrupt act, have acquired jurisdiction of the bankrupt's estate, the state courts lose jurisdiction of all claims against him provable under Act 1867.—Woolfolk v. Murray, Case No. 18,028.

An assignment under the bankrupt law, and the appointment of an assignee, may be pleaded in abatement to a suit brought in the name of the bankrupt, upon a demand which passes to his assignee.—Cook v. Lansing, Case No. 3,162.

§ 506. Effect of bankruptcy on pending suits.

A judgment in a state court against a bankrupt, which has been duly appealed from by him, is not a final judgment (Act 1867, § 21). and the creditor cannot proceed therein after petition filed.—In re Metcalf, Case No. 9,494.

A motion to compel the bankrupt to furnish new security on such appeal is within the prohibition of section 21.—In re Metcalf, Case No. 9,494.

The prohibition of "further proceedings" under Act 1867, § 40, last clause, applies only to the direct proceedings upon the petition, and not to collateral proceedings by or against third persons, or even the debtor.—In re Muller, Case No. 9,912.

The jurisdiction of ordinary tribunals over suits against the bankrupt is not impaired by an adjudication in bankruptcy, and their judgments are valid in the absence of interference by the bankruptcy court.—In re Davis, Case No. 3,620.

A suit commenced in a state court before bankruptcy, in which title to property surrendered by the bankrupt is in controversy, will not be abated by the bankruptcy proceedings.—Hewett v. Norton, Case No. 6,441.

The bankruptcy of the patentee pending suit for infringement will not abate the suit, and the assignee need not be brought in if he reconveys the patent to the patentee pending the suit.—Gear v. Fitch, Case No. 5,290.

Where, during the pendency of a suit, one of the defendants is released under the bankrupt law, the suit abates as to him, and the assignee should be made a party.—Fellows v. Hall, Case No. 4,723.

The jurisdiction of the district court of condemnation proceedings against a distillery is not defeated by the subsequent bankruptcy of the owners of the distillery.—United States v. Mackoy, Case No. 15,696.

In equity, the bankruptcy of the complainant and appointment of an assignee, pending a suit on a patent, would not abate the suit, but would only necessitate the filing of a supplemental bill making the assignee a party; and the reconveyance of the patent to the complainant, pending suit, would render such a proceeding unnecessary.—Gear v. Fitch, Case No. 5,290.

§ 507. Leave to continue suit.

It is not necessary to obtain leave of the bankruptcy court to continue to judgment a suit for assault and battery commenced before the petition in bankruptcy was filed, as the claim was not provable until the judgment was obtained. (Act 1867, § 21)—In re Hennocksburgh, Case No. 6,367.

Where the amount due a creditor is in dispute in the state court, the bankruptcy court may allow the suit to proceed for the purpose of ascertaining the amount due, but execution will be stayed if the debt is such as will be affected by the discharge.—In re Rundle, Case No. 12,138.

Where suit is pending against the bankrupt in the court of another state, the federal court may allow the debt to be proved provisionally, and authorize the suit to proceed for the purposes of liquidation; securing to the trustee of the creditors the right to resist the claim, either in the pending suit or by a proceeding in equity.—In re Cooke, Case No. 3,172.

Where leave has been granted (Rev. St. § 5106) to proceed in a pending cause, a judgment obtained therein is valid, although the assignee is not made a party.—In re Bousfield & Poole Mfg. Co., Case No. 1,704.

§ 508. Injunction—Power to grant.

Under the act of 1841, the district courts are possessed of the full jurisdiction of courts of equity over all subject-matters arising in bankruptcy.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

The federal district court sitting in bankruptcy has power by injunction to enjoin the prosecution of suits pending in the state courts against the bankrupt, during the pendency of bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Reed, Case No. 11,637; Sedgwick v. Menck, Id. 12,617; In re Citizens' Sav. Bank, Id. 2,735; Penny v. Taylor, Id. 10,957; Fowler v. Dillon, Id. 5,000; In re Whipple, Id. 17,512; In re Schwartz, Id. 12,502. CONTRA, see In re Dudley, Case No. 4,114; Campbell's Case, Id. 2,349; In re Burns, Id. 2,182.

The district court has the same power to restrain creditors in judgments at law against a bankrupt that a state court would have in case the debtor were not a bankrupt.—Fowler v. Dillon, Case No. 5,000.

Where a creditor has filed a creditors' bill in a state court, and obtained the appointment of a receiver, prior to the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, he may be enjoined from proceeding further in the state court, and the priority which he has acquired by his diligence will be determined by the bankruptcy court upon the distribution of the estate.—In re Whipple, Case No. 17,512.

An action in a state court to recover a provable debt may be stayed until a determination is had as to the discharge, though the debt be one that will not be discharged. Act 1867, § 21.—In re Rosenberg, Case No. 12,054; In re Schwartz, Id. 12,502; In re Van Buren, Id. 16,833. CONTRA, see In re Seymour, Case No. 12,684; In re Leibenstein, Id. 8,218.

A statement in the declaration filed in the state court of facts which would, if true, prevent the discharge of the debt in bankruptcy, is not binding upon the bankrupt court, nor does it prevent the full jurisdiction of that court over the person and estate of the bankrupt.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,700.

Charges of fraud in opposition to a discharge under the state poor debtor law, though filed after the bankruptcy of the debtor, do not make a new suit under Act 1867, § 21, which will enable the bankruptcy court to interfere. Case No. 9,642 affirmed.—Minon v. Van Nostrand, Case No. 9,641.

In proceedings in bankruptcy against a firm of partners, some of whom are foreigners, the members of the firm residing here may be restrained from prosecuting actions at the residence of the foreign members for the collection of debts.—In re Schepeler, Case No. 12,453.

A bankruptcy court, having no jurisdiction of divorce and alimony, will not interfere with a decree of a state court clothed with such jurisdiction, providing alimony to the bankrupt's wife, so as to increase, diminish, or in any direct way affect such alimony.—In re Garrett, Case No. 5,252.

The bankruptcy court has no authority to withdraw from the state court suits pending therein between the bankrupt and other parties, and compel their trial in the district court.—Samson v. Burton, Case No. 12,285.

The circuit or district court of the district in which the bankruptcy proceedings are pending, and only such courts, can enjoin the prosecution of a suit in a state court of another state, commenced after the bankruptcy proceedings are instituted.—Markson v. Heaney, Case No. 9,098; In re Richardson, Id. 11,774. CONTRA, see In re Tifft, Case No. 14,034.

The district court of a district other than that in which bankruptcy proceedings are pending may stay the enforcement of a judgment within its jurisdiction, obtained in an action in the state court, commenced after the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.—In re Tifft, Case No. 14,034.

The circuit court of a district other than that in which the bankruptcy proceedings are pending has not similar powers.—Tifft v. Iron Clad Mfg. Co., Case No. 14,035.

A district court of another district than that in which the original petition was filed may make all lawful orders and decrees in bankruptcy as to persons and property within the reach of its process and out of the reach of the process of the other court.—McGehee v. Hentz, Case No. 8,794.

The equity jurisdiction of the federal district court is not confined to cases originally arising in the particular court where the relief is sought; and, where a creditor living in Massachusetts commences suit in such state and in two other states against a party proceeded against as a bankrupt in Pennsylvania, an injunction will issue from the district court of Massachusetts against the creditor, within whose territorial jurisdiction he is, from prosecuting the suits in such state and in the other states.—Ex parte Martin, Case No. 9,149.

§ 509. —— When granted.

Contempt proceedings in a state court for failure to appear for examination on proceedings supplementary to execution will not be stayed by the bankruptcy court, under Act 1867.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,486.

Proceedings by the creditors on an appeal from a judgment against the bankrupt, taken by him before filing his petition, will be stayed.

pending the proceedings, on motion of the bankrupt to the bankruptcy court.—In re Leszynsky, Case No. 8,278.

The bankruptcy court will not interfere with the creditor who has obtained judgment after the process of the state court has been executed by a sale of the bankrupt's property.—In re Fuller, Case No. 5,148.

The jurisdiction acquired before proceedings in bankruptcy by a state court in proceedings for partition of an estate in which the bankrupt is interested will not be interfered with by the bankruptcy court.—In re Caldwell, Case No. 2,300.

Where, in the case of property claimed by both the bankrupt's wife and the trustees in bankruptcy, a suit is brought in the state court by the wife against the holders of the property for conversion, and the trustees, not being allowed to be substituted as defendants, bring a suit in a bankruptcy court to determine the ownership of the property, the prosecution of the suit in the state court will be enjoined pending determination of the suit in the bankruptcy court.—Wilkinson v. Barnard, Case No. 17,669.

A suit against the bankrupt in the state court by a creditor included in the composition will be enjoined pending completion of the composition.—In re Shafer, Case No. 12,695.

After 10 years from the entry of a judgment before the passage of Act 1867, in favor of a receiver appointed in a creditors' suit, adjudging an assignment to be fraudulent and void, the bankruptcy court will not interfere at the suit of an assignee in bankruptcy, though an appeal is still pending.—Sedgwick v. Menck, Case No. 12,616.

Where proceedings between a bankrupt and another in a state court are collusive, whereby such other is given an advantage over other creditors, the bankruptcy court will enjoin the parties from further proceedings therein. Samson v. Burton, Case No. 12,286, affirmed.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,801.

A debtor who has filed a voluntary petition, but objects to an adjudication, has no standing in the bankruptcy court on an application to enjoin a creditor from enforcing his claim by attachment.—In re Tifft, Case No. 14,031.

An action of replevin against a bankrupt in the state court, founded upon disaffirmance of a sale of goods for fraud, commenced after his adjudication, will be enjoined by the bankruptcy court pending his discharge.—In re Cohen, Case No. 2,961.

§ 510. —— Procedure.

For form of affidavit to stay proceedings in state court, see In re Glaser, Case No. 5,475.

§ 511. —— Violation of injunction.

An attachment for contempt lies against a state execution creditor for proceeding upon his execution in violation of an injunction issued by a federal court sitting as a court of bankruptcy.—In re Atkinson, Case No. 606.

The dismissal of the bankrupt's appeal in the state court by a judgment creditor for want of prosecution on its being called in its order, which would have been ineffectual, so far as the assignee is concerned, had it been successful, is not a violation of the order of the bankruptcy court forbidding further proceedings to enforce such creditor's claim.—In re Hirsch, Case No. 6,529.

No judgment can be rendered against a third person for contempt in disobeying an injunction issued in aid of the writ of bankruptcy, without proper proceedings taken against him, distinct from those against the bankrupt.—Creditors v. Cozzens, Case No. 3,378.

§ 512. —— Dissolution of injunction.

An injunction issued by the bankruptcy court, staying proceedings against the bankrupt in a state court until the question of final discharge should be determined, is ipso facto dissolved by the granting of the final discharge.—In re Thomas, Case No. 13,890.

Failure by a bankrupt for over a year to bring petition for a review to a hearing shows unreasonable delay in obtaining a discharge within the meaning of Act 1867, § 21.—In re Belden, Case No. 1,239.

§ 513. Leave to sue bankrupt.

The bankruptcy court may authorize a creditor to proceed in the usual way to collect his debt.—In re McGilton, Case No. 8,798.

Where a bankrupt has unreasonably delayed his application for a discharge, leave will be granted creditors, upon personal notice to the bankrupt of the application, to sue him in the same manner as if the proceedings had not been instituted.—In re Whiting, Case No. 17,574.

An application for leave to sue the bankrupt in a state court after the lapse of a year from the adjudication, where no discharge has been had by the bankrupt, must be on notice to him.—In re Scott, Case No. 12,520.

On application for leave to sue the bankrupt in the state court, the court will not inquire whether the debt be one from which the bankrupt would be relieved by his discharge.—In re Ghirardelli, Case No. 5,376.

§ 514. Evidence.

Where the defendant alleges in an action, as a defense, the bankruptcy of the plaintiff and an assignment of his effects, such facts cannot be proved by parol.—Moore v. Voss, Case No. 9,778.

In debt on a bond conditioned to prove plaintiff a bankrupt, evidence cannot be given to show that the commissioners of bankruptcy erred in their judgment.—Sutton v. Mandeville, Case No. 13,651.

(C) EXEMPTIONS.

§ 515. Constitutionality of acts.

The provision of the bankruptcy act of 1867 (section 14) adopting state exemption laws is uniform in its operations.—In re Beckerford, Case No. 1,209.

Act March 3, 1873 (17 Stat. 577), prescribing what property shall be allowed the bankrupt as exempt from the operation of the bankrupt law, is uniform and constitutional.—In re Smith, Cases Nos. 12,986, 12,996.

Act March 3, 1873, so far as it is declaratory of the meaning of Act June, 1872, is null and void, for to declare what a law is or has been is a judicial function.—In re Dillard, Case No. 3,912.

The provisions of a state constitution giving a homestead and other exemptions apply to contracts existing before the adoption of the constitution, and do not violate the obligation of contracts (Act June 8, 1872.)—In re Vogler, Case No. 16,986.

Act March 3, 1873, in so far as it attempts to exempt property specified in the state laws in a different manner or with different effect from that of the laws themselves, is in violation of the constitutional requirement of uniformity of the bankrupt laws throughout the United States.—In re Deckert, Case No. 3,728.

§ 516. Operation and effect of exemptions in general.

The right of exemption must exist, if at all, at the date of the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy.—In re Duerson, Case No. 4,117.

Assignees do not acquire title to the exempt property by assignment; it remains in the bankrupt, and at his death his widow is not entitled to such property, but it passes to his legal representatives.—In re Hester, Case No. 6,437.

A bankrupt against whom judgments were rendered before his bankruptcy upon debts contracted prior to the adoption of a constitutional provision granting a homestead exemption is not entitled to the exemption as against such judgment.—In re Shipman, Case No. 12,791.

§ 517. Wearing apparel.

Articles of jewelry belonging to the bankrupt do not come under the description of wearing apparel, and, if not set apart by the assignee, must be surrendered to him. Act 1841.—In re Kasson, Case No. 7,616.

A watch and breastpin of the bankrupt are not exempt as wearing apparel.—In re Ludlow, Case No. 8,599.

§ 518. Allowance of "other articles and necessaries."

The words "other articles and necessaries" in Act 1841, c. 9, § 3, are to be construed as permitting the allowance of necessary articles only. —In re Williams, Case No. 17,701.

A clock and silver watch are not such furniture, articles, or necessaries as the assignee may, in his discretion, allow to the bankrupt. Silver spoons and a cow may or may not be necessaries, according to circumstances.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,701.

A fowling piece, pistol, fishing tackle, paintings, etc., are not exempt, as necessaries, under the act of 1842; nor are a watch and breastpin exempt, either as necessaries or wearing apparel.—In re Ludlow, Case No. 8,599.

A pew in a church cannot be included in property set apart to the bankrupt as necessaries. —In re Comstock, Case No. 3,076.

The discretion of the assignee in setting apart property as exempt under act 1867, § 14, is limited to the "other articles and necessaries."—In re Feely, Case No. 4,714.

The assignee has a discretionary power, under Act 1867, § 14, in setting apart "other articles and necessaries," and his action will not be reversed unless an abuse of authority plainly appears.—In re Thiell, Case No. 13,882.

Real estate cannot be set apart as exempt under the head of "articles or necessaries."—In re Thornton, Case No. 13,994.

Real estate may be set apart as a portion of the bankrupt's exemption where it will not injure the sale of other real estate, or work adversely to the interest of the creditors.—In re Edwards, Case No. 4,293.

The exemption of "other articles and necessaries" cannot include manufactured articles kept for sale by the bankrupt. (Act 1867, § 14). —In re Thiell, Case No. 13,882.

A family sewing machine is properly exempt under Act 1867, § 14.—In re Graham, Case No. 5,660.

A watch, not being exempt by the statute of the state, does not properly come within the discretionary articles contemplated by Act 1867, § 14.—In re Graham, Case No. 5,660.

A bankrupt engaged in commerce is properly allowed a watch of a small value, as a necessary article. (Act 1867).—In re Steele, Case No. 13,346.

§ 519. Value of exemptions.

Exemptions to the amount of $300, under Act 1841, c. 9, § 3, are not allowed in all cases, but only where the family, circumstances, and condition of the bankrupt warrant it.—In re Williams, Case No. 17,701.

Exemption in favor of a bankrupt is not affected by the fact that his wife owns the household and kitchen furniture.—In re Cobb, Case No. 2,920.

Under Act 1867, § 14, the assignee, in addition to necessary household and kitchen furniture, can exempt, in favor of the bankrupt, "such other articles and necessaries" as he may think right, the whole exemption not to exceed $500. —In re Cobb, Case No. 2,920.

Household and kitchen furniture and other articles and necessaries, to the amount of $500, may be set apart as exemptions in Pennsylvania. (Act 1867, § 14).—In re Feely, Case No. 4,714.

Where the wife of a bankrupt is the owner of a house, not occupied as a homestead by the family, nor allowed to be so by the wife, such bankrupt is entitled to exemption of property to the value of $500, notwithstanding such ownership by the wife. Act 1867, § 14.—In re Tonne, Case No. 14,095.

§ 520. Allowance of money.

The assignee may make the bankrupt an allowance, not exceeding $300, and he may also allow him any reasonable sum for taking charge of the property.—In re Grant, Case No. 5,693.

Money cannot be set apart as "articles" and "necessaries," under section 14, unless it is the proceeds of specific things which ought to be set apart under such head.—In re Welch, Case No. 17,366. CONTRA, see In re Hay, Case No. 6,253.

Under Rev. St. § 5045, the assignee cannot set apart money which is not the proceeds of exempt property, or which is not necessary for temporary support where the bankrupt's family is entirely destitute.—In re Tucker, Case No. 14,215.

When the bankrupt and his family do not keep house, but are boarding, money may be allowed by the assignee for their temporary subsistence. (Act 1867).—In re Thornton, Case No. 13,994.

The assignee cannot set apart assets to take the place of property sold under execution and distress for rent, which might have been exempted.—In re Lawson, Case No. 8,149.

§ 521. Allowance to wife of bankrupt.

Jewelry acquired by the wife of the bankrupt either before or after her marriage, if suitable to her condition, may be retained by her. Act 1841.—In re Kasson, Case No. 7,616.

An allowance will be made to the wife out of property descended to her before the decree of bankruptcy against her husband, but not reduced to possession by him.—Shaw v. Mitchell, Case No. 12,722.

§ 522. Exemptions under state laws—In general.

The bankrupt, in addition to the exemption allowed by bankrupt act, is entitled to exemption under the law of his domicile, and he may select the property exempt under the state law. —In re Cobb, Case No. 2,920.

Where no property is claimed under the specific exemptions of Act 1867, the claim for an allowance must stand upon the exemption granted by the state laws.—In re Friend, Case No. 5,120.

Congress, in adopting the exemption laws of a state as part of the bankrupt law, cannot dispense with any of the limitations imposed by that law.—In re Duerson, Case No. 4,117.

A failure to comply with the requirements of the state law giving an exemption will prevent the exemption under the bankrupt act.—In re Farish, Case No. 4,647; In re Jackson, Id. 7,127.

The state exemption must be ascertained by the mode designated by the state law.—In re Feely, Case No. 4,714.

The state exemption laws, as interpreted and settled by the adjudication of its highest courts, are controlling on the bankruptcy court (Act June 8, 1872).—In re Wyllie, Case No. 18,112.

Property exempt by the laws of the state where the bankrupt resides and where the petition is filed will be secured to him, wherever it may be situated, and whether exempt by the law of its situs or not.—In re Stevens, Case No. 13,392.

Growing crops are exempted under Rev. St. Me. 1871, c. 81, § 59.—In re Hussey, Case No. 6,945.

Where the bankrupt elects to occupy his farm and cultivate the crops, which are exempt under the state law, until harvested, he must secure to the assignee a reasonable rental.—In re Hussey, Case No. 6,945.

In Indiana a judgment for the costs of the opposite party is not a debt growing out of a contract, express or implied, and as against such costs the Indiana statute does not allow exemptions.—In re Owens, Case No. 10,632.

A policy of life insurance exempt from execution under the state law is to the same extent exempted under the bankrupt act.—In re Sawyer, Case No. 12,393.

§ 523. —— As affected by time of passage of law.

The approval by congress of the new constitution of North Carolina did not operate as an amendment of the bankrupt law with respect to exemptions therein provided for.—In re McLean, Case No. 8,878.

The filing of a petition by a bankrupt under Act 1867, which expressly limits the exemptions to be allowed to bankrupts to those allowed by state laws in force in 1864, is an election to take the exemption allowed by the state law in force in 1864, and the setting apart by the wife of the bankrupt an exemption under a later state law is void.—In re Askew, Case No. 585.

Exemptions created by a state statute are void as to creditors whose debts were contracted previous to the passage of such statutes.—In re Hester, Case No. 6,437.

Where no homestead was allowed by the state laws at the date of the adjudication, none can be allowed under Act 1867, as the rights of parties are fixed at the date of the adjudication.—In re Kerr, Case No. 7,729.

Under the provision of Act March 3, 1873, permitting the exemption allowed by the state law "existing in the year 1871," where there was a change in the law during the year the statute existing at the close of the year will control all proceedings commenced after the change of the state law.—In re Baer, Case No. 723.

Act March 3, 1873, only allows the exemptions granted by state laws in 1871, as against judgments of state courts when such judgments are rendered after the passage of such act.—In re Dillard, Case No. 3,912.

The bankrupt is entitled to the exemption as allowed by the law of the state as existing in 1871, though subsequently, and before the proceedings in bankruptcy, such exemption was reduced. (Rev. St. § 5045.)—In re Cohen, Case No. 2,960.

§ 524. —— What property may be set apart.

A vested expectant interest of a bankrupt in a sum of money payable at his death, or at the death of another person, may, in Pennsylvania, be set apart for the use of the bankrupt, providing that its estimated present value does not exceed $300.—In re Bennett, Case No. 1,315.

§ 525. —— Amount of exemption.

The exemption under the state law of property of the value of a certain amount cannot include the same species of property as is named in Act 1867, § 14.—In re Feely, Case No. 4,714.

The bankrupt may retain all his necessary household and kitchen furniture exempted by the state law from forced sale. (Act 1867, § 14.)—In re Davis, Case No. 3,621.

Under Act 1868, art. 12, § 1, which exempts personal property to the value of $2,000, and Act 1867, § 14, as amended by Act June 8, 1872, a bankrupt is not entitled to claim, as exempt, property to the value of $2,000, in addition to his household and kitchen furniture.—In re Hezekiah, Case No. 6,448.

The exemption in Pennsylvania of property worth $300 is additional to the exemption of necessary household and other articles, not exceeding in value $500, allowed by Act 1867.—In re Ruth, Case No. 12,172.

In Ohio, a head of a family, who has no homestead, and all of whose personalty is covered by a chattel mortgage, is entitled to an exemption of $500, out of the proceeds of such personalty, after the satisfaction of the mortgage.—In re May, Case No. 9,326.

§ 526. Homestead exemptions — Nature and right of exemption.

The removal of the bankrupt out of the state after his adjudication does not defeat his right to the homestead.—In re Radway, Case No. 11,523.

The homestead of a debtor in Michigan is protected, though he has absconded, where his family still resides thereon.—In re Pratt, Case No. 11,370.

In Kentucky, an undivided interest in land on which there are no improvements, appurtenances, or dwelling houses, although the debtor has expressed an intention to make it a homestead, will not be allowed as exemption.—In re Duerson, Case No. 4,117.

In Kansas the title to property occupied by the bankrupt and his family as a residence at the time of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy does not pass to the assignee, and he cannot maintain a suit in relation thereto.—Rix v. Capitol Bank, Case No. 11,869.

The homestead secured to the head of a family by the state law, though not ascertained and set out, does not pass to the assignee, and is not subject to the jurisdiction of the bankrupt court.—In re Bass, Case No. 1,091.

Whether a claim for a homestead exemption under a state law is provable in bankruptcy can be determined only by the bankruptcy court.—Woolfolk v. Murray, Case No. 18,028.

The bankruptcy court will not entertain a petition by the bankrupt to have real estate set apart as a homestead, and for an injunction to restrain a creditor from selling the same on execution issued before the bankruptcy; the remedy, if any, being in the state court.—In re Hunt, Case No. 6,883.

Under Code Va. c. 183, §§ 1, 5, 16, 17, the homestead exemption is good against the lien of an execution on personal property, and will be allowed by the bankruptcy court.—In re Peebles, Case No. 10,902.

The right to a homestead in land revives, where the conveyance of such land is set aside as an illegal preference under the bankrupt law, or is surrendered by the creditor under Act 1867, § 23.—Bartholomew v. West, Case No. 1,071; Cox v. Wilder, Id. 3,308, reversing Case No. 3,309; McFarland v. Goodman, Case No. 8,789; Penny v. Taylor, Id. 10,957; In re Detert, Id. 3,829. CONTRA, see In re Graham, Case No. 5,660.

Where a deed of trust by a husband creating a separate estate in his wife is declared void as being voluntary, both as to antecedent and subsequent creditors, it is good as between the parties, and the wife is entitled to a homestead allowance out of the proceeds of the property.—Smith v. Kehr, Case No. 13,071.

The bankrupt cannot invoke the protection of the act of March 3, 1873, in favor of one to whom he sold a homestead, exempted under the state laws, before the filing of his petition.—In re Everitt, Case No. 4,579.

§ 527. —— Waiver of exemption.

A creditor holding a homestead-waiving bond or note may have payment thereof out of the homestead when it has been set apart without notice to him.—In re Judkins, Case No. 7,560.

The bankrupt is entitled to a homestead exemption in property occupied by him as a homestead, even though he had previously waived his homestead rights in favor of a particular creditor.—In re Poleman, Case No. 11,247.

The waiver of a homestead exemption only applies to persons claiming under the instrument in which it is made, and does not inure to the benefit of the assignee or other creditors.—In re Poleman, Case No. 11,247.

Homestead exemption, under the laws of Virginia, is a personal privilege which the landowner may waive, by a stipulation to that effect in an evidence of debt given by him; and such stipulation will be enforced in subsequent proceedings in bankruptcy.—In re Solomon, Case No. 13,166.

§ 528. —— Allotment of homestead.

Where homesteads have been duly allotted under the state law, in the absence of fraud, such allotment will be recognized, and allowed to the bankrupt.—In re Vogler, Case No. 16,986.

The bankrupt is not entitled to a homestead exemption in property taken in exchange for goods transferred in fraud of creditors.—Pratt v. Burr, Case No. 11,372.

The bankrupt is not entitled to the exemption of a homestead out of land mortgaged by him at the time of its purchase to secure the payment of the purchase money until the said mortgage is satisfied.—In re Whitehead, Case No. 17,562.

Though the vendor of land has recovered judgment on notes given by the bankrupt for the purchase price, his equitable lien on the land will be upheld by the bankruptcy court, and the property cannot be set aside as exempt.—In re Perdue, Case No. 10,975.

Exemption of a homestead allowed out of land mortgaged to secure the payment of borrowed money, prior to the time of claiming such homestead.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,980.

In granting an exemption, the court will order that it shall not affect or prejudice the wife's rights to alimony chargeable upon real estate claimed as homestead.—In re Garrett, Case No. 5,252.

The bankrupt court will not order a reassessment for mere excess of value, where a homestead has duly been laid off and allotted under the local law, and no fraud or irregularity is shown.—In re Hall, Case No. 5,921.

§ 529. When allowance to be made.

The application for the exemption allowed by the act can only be made before obtaining the discharge.—In re Kean, Case No. 7,630.

The exemption is not allowable until after the bankrupt has passed his last examination.—In re Mastbaum, Case No. 9,265.

§ 530. Selection, how made.

The assignee must select the property exempted under the bankrupt law, and should refuse to set apart articles of mere luxury.—In re Cobb, Case No. 2,920.

If the bankrupt has selected his furniture under the state law, there can be no second allowance. If he has selected real estate, the assignees may, in their discretion, make an additional allowance of furniture, etc., not exceeding $500 in value.—In re Noakes, Case No. 10,281.

In setting apart exempt property for the use of the bankrupt, the assignee is not obliged to designate articles on which there is no lien.—In re Preston, Case No. 11,394.

A register has no authority to set off exempt property to the bankrupt, nor to direct the assignee in the matter.—In re Peabody, Case No. 10,866.

If the bankrupt makes an erroneous claim to property mentioned in the schedule as being exempt from operation of the bankrupt act, it is the duty of the assignee to correct or disregard it.—In re Whetmore, Case No. 17,508.

§ 531. Report of exempt property.

The time to make a report of exempted property may be extended by the court.—In re Shields, Case No. 12,785.

The value of the articles should be stated in the list of exemptions.—In re Graham, Case No. 5,660.

The assignee should include the homestead in his report of exempt property.—In re Sinnett, Case No. 12,907.

Where the schedule of exempt property is not filed within 20 days after the assignment, creditors are not bound to except to it within 20 days after it is filed.—In re Peabody, Case No. 10,866.

§ 532. Exceptions to allowance or disallowance.

Where the bankrupt's application to the assignee for an exemption is refused, the proper way of bringing the matter up is by exception to his decision.—In re Thiell, Case No. 13,882.

Where the bankrupt is dissatisfied with the exemption allowed by the assignee, the only remedy is to except to his ruling, and have the question certified to the court.—In re Pryor, Case No. 11,457.

Where no exceptions are taken to the action of the assignee in setting apart property as exempt, such property passes to the bankrupt free from the jurisdiction of the bankrupt court; and, where the right to such exempt property is in dispute, the parties must resort to the state tribunal under whose laws the property was claimed.—In re Fetherston, Case No. 4,753.

Unauthorized exemptions of real estate are void, but, in the case of personalty, exception must be made to the allowance within the requisite time, under general order 19.—In re Gainey, Case No. 5,181.

An ex parte order approving the schedule of exemptions, made on the day it is filed, is irregular, and will be set aside at any time during the pendency of the proceedings, if the creditor acts with diligence after notice.—In re Peabody, Case No. 10,866.

§ 533. Sale of exempt property by assignee.

Where a bankrupt sets apart and claims specific goods as exempt under the law of Georgia, which exempts personal property to the value of $1,000, and the assignee mixes such goods with others, and sells all indiscriminately, and allots to the bankrupt $1,000 out of the proceeds, the assignee is in error, as all the bankrupt is entitled to under such circumstances is the proceeds of the specific goods claimed and set apart by him, which were not to exceed $1,000.—In re Friend, Case No. 5,120.

Where it is objected to the exemption of a homestead under the state laws that it exceeds in value the amount limited, the court will order it to be sold subject to the estate of the bankrupt.—In re Watson, Case No. 17,271.

Bankrupt held entitled to homestead exemption out of proceeds of equity of redemption of mortgaged farm, sold free of such right.—In re Beede, Case No. 1,226.

Where the equity of redemption (in Illinois) exceeds $1,000, the assignee may sell the property and pay over such amount to the bankrupt, where the situation of the property is such that a homestead cannot be set apart without injury to the rest of the estate.—In re Poleman, Case No. 11,247.

§ 534. Rights of purchasers and mortgagees from bankrupt.

A mortgage or sale of property which is excepted under section 14, Act 1867, is not in violation of the act.—Schlitz v. Schatz, Case No. 12,459.

An assignee cannot recover property excepted under Act 1867, § 14.—Schlitz v. Schatz, Case No. 12,459.

A purchaser of property improperly exempted to the vendor and sold by him without joining his wife, as required by the state law, takes no title, and will be required to relinquish the same to the assignee in bankruptcy.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,979.

The exemption from execution is a privilege which the bankrupt may waive; and, where a bankrupt does not choose to assert any claim to property that is exempted from execution under the law of the state where he resides, the bankrupt's mortgagee of that property cannot claim it as against the assignee in bankruptcy.—Edmondson v. Hyde, Case No. 4,285.

The bankrupt's homestead never comes within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, and a creditor may enforce his lien thereon pending the proceedings.—In re Sinnett, Case No. 12,907.

One taking a mortgage upon lot claimed as homestead after decree declaring it not exempt as such will be ordered summarily to release his security.—In re Boothroyd, Case No. 1,653.

§ 535. Execution against exempt property.

Property exempt, both by state and bankrupt law, from levy and sale, cannot be sold after the owner has filed his petition in bankruptcy, although then levied on by a United States marshal.—In re Griffin, Case No. 5,813.

A debtor is entitled to the full benefit of the exemptions allowed by the bankrupt act, even though an execution had become a perfected lien upon his property before the filing of the petition.—In re Owens, Case No. 10,632.

A bankrupt is entitled to an exemption of his household furniture and other necessary articles, although they were taken under an execution prior to the commencement of proceedings, and the sheriff will be ordered to pay into the bankruptcy court, for the benefit of the bankrupt, the money derived from the sale of such property.—In re Martin, Case No. 9,152.

§ 536. Exemptions in cases of partnerships.

An adjudication of bankruptcy against a partnership operates as a dissolution, and nothing can be set apart as exempt to the bankrupts as a firm.—In re Blodgett, Case No. 1,555.

The individual members of a partnership are not entitled to exemptions out of the partnership property under Act 1867, § 14.—In re Hafer, Case No. 5,896; In re Price, Id. 11,410; In re Blodgett, Id. 1,555; In re Handlin, Id. 6,018; In re Stewart, Id. 13,420; In re Tonne, Id. 14,095; In re Boothroyd, Id. 1,652; In re Corbett, Id. 3,220; In re Croft, Id. 3,404. CONTRA, see In re Rupp, Case No. 12,141.

Nor are they entitled to such exemption under the laws of Pennsylvania.—In re Hafer, Case No. 5,896.

Nor under the laws of North Carolina.—In re Jackson, Case No. 7,127.

Nor under the laws of Michigan.—In re Blodgett, Case No. 1,555.

Nor under the laws of Virginia.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,979.

Nor under the constitution of Arkansas of 1868.—In re Handlin, Case No. 6,018.

Nor under Code Ga. §§ 2002–2039.—In re Stewart, Case No. 13,420.

Nor under the laws of Ohio.—In re Tonne, Case No. 14,095.

Nor under Rev. St. Wis. c. 34, § 30, subd. 9.—In re Hughes, Case No. 6,842.

But they are entitled to exemptions out of the partnership assets under the laws of Missouri.—In re Young, Case No. 18,148; In re Richardson, Id. 11,776.

The right of exemption attaches, as against partnership creditors, to partnership property transferred to one of the partners after dissolution.—In re Bjornstad, Case No. 1,453.

A house built on the separate property of a member of a bankrupt firm, with funds of the firm, at a time when the firm is indebted to such member to an amount exceeding the cost of the house, and occupied by the partner as his home, is subject to exemption under the Michigan laws and Act 1867.—In re Parks, Case No. 10,765.

Where a partner takes notes belonging to the firm, and with these purchases a homestead three days before the bankruptcy of the firm, and with a knowledge of its insolvency, he is not entitled to retain the homestead as exempt.—In re Boothroyd, Case No. 1,652.

Assets withdrawn by a retiring partner are subject to the payment of the firm debts, where the remaining assets are insufficient, and may be reached for the benefit of the creditors, though invested in a homestead.—In re Sauthoff, Case No. 12,380.

Subsequent dealings of the creditors with the remaining partner, and sales and credits by them, do not estop them from enforcing their claim against the assets withdrawn.—In re Sauthoff, Case No. 12,380.

(D) RIGHT TO DISCHARGE IN GENERAL.

§ 537. In general.

A petitioner under the act of 1890 was discharged on taking the prescribed oath, after the making of an order that the clerk should execute an assignment in trust for the creditors generally of his interest in a certain legacy.—Case of Humphreys, Case No. 6,868.

Where the act has been complied with, a discharge can be refused only on some ground set forth in Act 1867, § 29.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,800; In re Elliott, Id. 4,391.

The trial of all questions relating to the discharge will be postponed until the hearing of the petition.—In re Brisco, Case No. 1,886.

The right to a discharge becomes fixed upon application, due notice given, and failure to object, though an order granting the discharge was not procured.—In re Fowler, Case No. 4,999.

§ 538. Death of bankrupt.

Under Act 1867, § 12, which provides that, "if the debtor dies after the issuing of the warrant, the proceedings may be continued and concluded," a discharge cannot be granted, where the bankrupt dies during the proceedings, without having taken the final oath prescribed by section 29.—In re Gunike, Case No. 5,868; In re Quinike, Id. 11,514; In re O'Farrell, Id. 10,446.

On the death of the bankrupt, after his uncontested application for a discharge had been submitted to the court, and a favorable report of the master had been made, the court has power to order the discharge to be entered nunc pro tunc.—Young v. Ridenbaugh, Case No. 18,173.

See, also, ante, § 127.

§ 539. Assent of creditors and amount of assets necessary in general.

An involuntary bankrupt is not entitled to a discharge unless his assets equal 50 per cent. of the proved debts, or he files the consent or a majority of creditors in number and value, as required by Act 1867, § 33, as amended Act July 27, 1868, and Act July 14, 1870.—In re Bunster, Case No. 2,136.

A partner who is in bankruptcy upon the petition of his co-partner cannot obtain his discharge without the assent of creditors or the amount of assets required in voluntary proceedings, as such proceeding by a partner against his co-partner is not an involuntary proceeding, within Act 1874, c. 390, § 9.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,784.

Under the amendment of 1874, in any case where there were no assets equal to 30 per cent., if the bankrupt secured the assent of one-fourth of his creditors in number, and one-third in value, he is entitled to his discharge, without regard to the time when the debts were incurred. Case No. 17,489 reversed.—In re Wheeler, Case No. 17,491.

§ 540. Consent of creditors necessary.

The only remedy of a bankrupt, where a majority of his creditors file their written dissent to his discharge, is to demand a trial by jury.—In re Lothrop, Case No. 8,518.

Preferences given by confession of judgments prior to passage of Act 1841 will prevent a discharge not assented to by a majority of unpreferred creditors, but the bankrupt will be given time to procure such assent, and need not come prepared with the same on the day to show cause.—Anonymous, Case No. 463.

A creditor may consent to a discharge by his attorney in fact or counsel in open court.—In re Balmer, Case No. 820.

The assent of creditors to the discharge (Act June 22, 1874, § 9) must be in writing, and it is sufficient if filed any time before the hearing of the application.—In re Derby, Case No. 3,816.

A consent by a creditor to a discharge, acted upon and filed, cannot be withdrawn, though the right be claimed on the day fixed for the hearing.—In re Brent, Case No. 1,832.

A discharge will be refused where the assent of a creditor has been influenced by the purchase of a debt of another creditor for more than its value by a relative of one of the bankrupts.—In re Whitney, Case No. 17,580.

The assent of a majority in number of creditors, whose debts were contracted since January 1, 1869, and in amount of such debts, is the only assent required, where the bankrupt pays 30 per cent.—In re Pierson, Case No. 11,154; In re Wheeler, Id. 17,489, reversed in Case No. 17,491.

A creditor whose debt was contracted before January 1, 1869, will not be allowed to vote on the question of a bankrupt's discharge as to debts contracted since January 1, 1869 (Act 1867, § 33, as amended Act July 17, 1870).—In re Parrish, Case No. 10,769.

§ 541. Amount and number of consenting creditors.

The one-fourth of creditors in number and one-third in value whose assent is necessary (Act June 22, 1874, § 9) are those to whom the bankrupt is liable as principal debtor, and who have proved their debts against the estate.—In re Derby, Case No. 3,816.

When a majority in number and value of the aggregate of both partnership and individual creditors who have proved their debts assent, a discharge should be granted, though such majority of either class do not assent.—In re Morrill, Case No. 9,820.

The existence of the proper number of creditors filing assent may be proved on the hearing, where the record does not disclose the fact.—In re Pierson, Case No. 11,154.

§ 542. Amount of debts, how computed.

A bankrupt member of a firm which indorses notes of a third person used by such third person in purchasing outstanding claims against the firm is not liable as a principal debtor, within Act 1867, § 33, as amended Act July 27, 1867, requiring the assets to equal 50 per cent. of the claims proved, etc.—In re Loder, Cases Nos. 8,457, 8,458.

None of the contingent liabilities mentioned in Act 1867, § 19, can be regarded as liabilities of a principal debtor, within § 33 of said act, until they have been put in judgment, or undergone some other change than merely becoming absolute and fixed, in contradistinction to being contingent.—In re Loder, Case No. 8,457.

An indorser does not become liable as a principal debtor by the mere fixing of his liability as indorser. (Act 1867, § 19).—In re Loder, Case No. 8,457.

§ 543. Time when debts were contracted.

Within the meaning of Act 1867, the liability of the principal to the surety must be considered as having been contracted when the instrument was signed, and not when the surety made payment.—In re Perkins, Case No. 10,983.

The debt of a surety of the bankrupt against whom a judgment is rendered after January 1, 1869, is "contracted" after such date, within the meaning of Act 1867, § 33.—In re Parrish, Case No. 10,769.

Where a renewal note is given each year for seven years, the debt will be considered as contracted when the last note is given.—In re Schumpert, Case No. 12,491.

In the case of a renewal note, the bankrupt may show when the debt originated; and if before January 1, 1869, it should be classed as a debt contracted before that date.—In re Perkins, Case No. 10,983.

In a case of a judgment obtained upon another judgment, which latter was obtained upon a note indorsed by the bankrupt, the date of the indorsement is the date when the debt was contracted under Act June 22, 1874, § 9.—In re Sheldon, Case No. 12,747.

A debt due from a bankrupt under an agreement made on the surrender of a lease for a term, that he would pay any deficiency arising on a reletting by the landlord, will be considered as contracted at the time of such agreement (Act July 14, 1870), and not at the time a judgment was obtained therefor.—In re Swift, Case No. 13,693.

§ 544. Amount of assets necessary.

To entitle a bankrupt to discharge, under Act 1867, § 33, without the assent of his creditors, the proceeds of his property to be delivered among his creditors must be equal to 50 per cent. of the amount of the claims proved against his estate, upon which he is liable as principal debtor at the time of the hearing of the application for the discharge before the register.—In re Freiderick, Case No. 5,092; In re Webb, Id. 17,314.

The bankrupt is entitled to a discharge without the assent of his creditors under Act July 27, 1868, if his gross assets equal 50 per cent. of proved debts, without deducting costs or expenses.—In re Kahley, Case No. 7,594.

Under Act July 14, 1870, the assets, after payment of valid liens, must equal 50 per cent. of proved debts contracted subsequent to January 1, 1869, to entitle the bankrupt to a discharge without consent of creditors.—In re Graham, Case No. 5,661.

In proceedings commenced after January 1, 1869, where the assets are not equal to 50 per cent. of the proved claims on which the bankrupt is liable as principal debtor, or where the requisite number of creditors have not assented, a discharge will be granted only from debts contracted prior to that date, although the assets equal 50 per cent. of the claims contracted after said date.—In re Shower, Case No. 12,816.

Under Rev. St. § 5112, the assets coming into the hands of the assignee in bankruptcy, exclusive of exemptions, must be equal to 30 per cent. of the claims proved against the bankrupt's estate, to entitle him to a discharge.—In re Cerf, Case No. 2,556; In re Wilson, Id. 17,782.

Under such statute, the bankrupt is not entitled to his discharge unless assets have come to the assignee's hands amounting to 30 per cent. of all claims proved at any time before the final hearing of the petition for discharge.—In re Longest, Case No. 8,485.

Under Act June 22, 1874, in voluntary cases, the assets must pay 30 per cent. of debts, regardless of when contracted, or when proceedings were commenced, in the absence of consent of creditors, to entitle the bankrupt to a discharge.—In re Gifford, Case No. 5,408.

Where the assets are not equal to 50 per cent. of the proved claims contracted since January 1, 1869, the discharge will be granted only as to all provable debts contracted prior to that time.—In re Seay, Case No. 12,597.

§ 545. Value of assets, how computed.

The word "assets," as used in Act July 14, 1870, amending Act 1867, § 33, requiring the same to be equal to 50 per cent. of the debts proved, does not mean the whole estate and effects of whatsoever nature before being reduced to money, but means money received by the assignee.—In re Van Riper, Case No. 16,874.

Assets in bankruptcy are the proceeds of the bankrupt's property which come into the hands of the assignee, and are applicable to the payment of his debts.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,782.

The amount actually realized by the assignee is to be taken as the value of the assets under Act 1867, as amended by Act July 27, 1868, requiring the written assent of a majority of the creditors in number and value, where the bankrupt's assets are not equal to 50 per cent. of the claims proved against the estate.—In re Borden, Case No. 1,654.

In determining the right to a discharge, the value of the bankrupt's assets at the time he filed his petition is to be considered. The fact that they subsequently sold at a less value will not prejudice the right to a discharge, for, after the appointment of an assignee, the bankrupt had no further control over the property or of its disposal.—In re Thompson, Case No. 13,937; In re Lincoln, Id. 8,353; In re Taggert. Id. 13,725.

Though the bankrupt's assets exceed the amount of the proved claims, if, after payment of costs and expenses, the amount remaining does not equal 50 per cent. of such claims, he is not entitled to a discharge, under Act July 27, 1868, without the assent of a majority in number and value of his creditors.—In re Vinton, Case No. 16,951.

Amounts paid to lien creditors are not to be deducted before ascertaining the requisite percentage of assets to entitle the bankrupt to a discharge.—In re Taggert, Case No. 13,725.

§ 546. Reference to ascertain amount of assets.

The debtor cannot have his assets appraised and determined as being in excess of 50 per cent. of provable claims, before debts are proved or an assignee appointed.—In re Freiderick, Case No. 5,092.

Where the register to whom the matter upon a proceeding for a discharge was referred to ascertain the extent of the assets did not make his report until after the passage of the amendment of July 14, 1870, the order of reference may be amended so as to comply therewith.—In re Rockwell, Case No. 11,987.

§ 547. Effect of irregularity.

The bankrupt is made responsible for the regularity of the proceedings, and is bound to see that all the necessary steps are regularly taken, or he cannot have his discharge.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,267.

Due notice of the appointment of the assignee is not essential to the debtor's discharge.—In re Littlefield, Case No. 8,398.

A discharge will not be refused for neglect of the assignee to have the deed recorded, where he knew that no property passed under the assignment, and he duly qualified.—In re Pierson, Case No. 11,153.

It is no objection to a discharge that the second and third general meetings of creditors were not held at the expiration of three months and six months, respectively, from the date of the adjudication (Act 1867).—In re Littlefield, Case No. 8,398.

Proper notice should be given by the assignee to creditors upon the settlement of his accounts, and the allowance by a bankrupt of the omission of such notice is a ground for refusing his discharge.—In re Bushey, Case No. 2,227.

§ 548. Effect of prior application or decision.

The refusal of a judge to discharge a debtor, if the proceedings were irregular, is no bar to his discharge upon a subsequent application.—Connelly's Case, Case No. 3,111.

The refusal of the court to grant a discharge, on the ground that the application was not made within a year of the adjudication, is no bar to a new proceeding.—In re Farrell, Case No. 4,680.

The pendency of a prior petition for discharge which was not seasonably made is no ground of objection to the jurisdiction of the court on a subsequent petition.—In re White, Case No. 17,533.

(E) APPLICATION AND PROCEEDINGS TO OBTAIN DISCHARGE.

§ 549. Time of application.

Under Act 1867, § 29 (Rev. St. § 5108), providing that, "at any time after the expiration of six months from the adjudication of bankruptcy, or if no debts have been proved against the bankrupt, or no assets have come to the hands of the assignee, at any time after the expiration of 60 days, and within one year from the adjudication," the bankrupt may apply for a discharge, the application for a discharge must be made within one year from the adjudication, whether or not debts are proved or assets received, and it is not discretionary with the court to grant a discharge applied for after such time where there are assets or debts proved.—In re Wilmott, Case No. 17,778; In re Martin, Id. 9,153; In re Sloan, Id. 12,945; In re Wood, Id. 17,936; In re Watson, Id. 17,275. CONTRA, see In re Canady, Id. 2,377; In re Greenfield, Id. 5,775, reversing Cases Nos. 5,773, 5,774; In re Vorbeck, Case No. 17,002; In re Donaldson, Id. 3,982; In re Holmes, Id. 6,634.

The bankrupt may apply for a discharge within 60 days after the adjudication, where debts have been proved, but no assets have come to the hands of the assignee.—In re Woolums, Case No. 18,034.

It is a case of "no assets" where the assignee 60 days after the adjudication has collected nothing on notes which constituted the bankrupt's entire assets.—In re Dodge, Case No. 3,947.

An order to show cause why a discharge should not be granted may be made after the expiration of sixty days, and within one year from the adjudication of bankruptcy, where it appears that the assets are absolutely worthless.—In re Solis, Case No. 13,165.

Where there are debts proved and assets, application for a discharge cannot be filed before the expiration of six months from the issue of the warrant of adjudication.—In re Bodenheim, Case No. 1,594.

Where there are no assets, bankrupt cannot be discharged, unless he applies after the expiration of sixty days and within one year from the adjudication.—In re Barrett, Case No. 1,044.

A discharge will be refused where the bankrupt failed to apply therefor within one year of the adjudication, where a small amount of assets has come into the assignee's hands, but no debts have been proved. Act 1867, § 29.—In re Schenck, Case No. 12,447.

Application of the provision in section 48 of the act of 1867, in respect to excluding from computation of time Sundays or holidays, when the last day falls thereon.—In re Lang, Case No. 8,056.

Application must be made before the final report and discharge of the assignee.—In re Cross, Case No. 3,427.

The application by a bankrupt for his discharge is too late when made after the assignee has been discharged from all liability as to any creditor. Act 1867, as amended by Act July, 1876.—In re Brightman, Case No. 1,878.

The failure of the assignee to make a return of "No assets" will not cure the laches of the bankrupt in applying for a discharge.—In re Potteiger, Case No. 11,320.

Where discharge was barred by limitation prior to the act of 1874, the bankrupt could not avail himself of the less stringent provisions of the latter act by alleging inability to procure the assent of sufficient creditors as an excuse for not applying for discharge under the old act.—In re Lowenstone, Case No. 8,576.

§ 550. Application by creditor.

A creditor, after a year, may require the bankrupt to have the question of his discharge determined.—In re Fowler, Case No. 4,999.

§ 551. Return by assignee.

The fact that the assignee has reason to expect that he may receive money for the estate is no ground of denying a return, under Form 35, when requested by the bankrupt.—In re Hughes, Case No. 6,841.

The assignee will not be ordered to amend his return when no reason is shown why the proposed amendment should be made.—In re Kingon, Case No. 7,815.

§ 552. Order to show cause.

A register has power to make the order to show cause, there being no opposition, if, under Act 1867, § 4, he is directed to make it by the judge, and the order referring the case to him may be considered as giving such direction.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,266.

Where no assets have come to the hands of the assignee, a return by him is not necessary before an order to show cause why a discharge should not be granted can be made under Act 1867, § 29.—In re Bellamy, Case No 1,266.

On a petition, according to form No. 51, Act 1867, the register to whom the case is referred may direct the making of the order.—In re Bellamy, Cases Nos. 1,266, 1,267.

The order to show cause (form No. 51) is to have the signature of the clerk and the seal of the court.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,268.

When a register directs an order to show cause (form No. 51) to issue, he is at once to transmit to the clerk a list of all the proofs of debt in the case, which have been furnished to the register or assignee, containing the names, residences, and post-office addresses of the creditors, with sufficient particularity to enable the notices to be served properly.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,268.

§ 553. Notice to creditors.

The words "other persons in interest," in Act 1841, to whom notice of the application for discharge is required to be given, apply to creditors who have ulterior or contingent claims against the bankrupt, and to cases in which the bankrupt stands under a liability to a party not amounting to a debt or coming within the class of claims authorized by such act to be proved as debts.—In re King, Case No. 7,784.

A creditor cannot be prejudiced by the loss from the files of his proof of debt. He is still entitled to notice of application for a discharge.—In re Friedlob, Case No. 5,118.

The clerk must mail the notices (form No. 52) when they are to be served by mail.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,268.

Where, at the time a bankrupt applies for his discharge, no creditors have proved their debts, and no assets have come to the hands of the assignee, notice to show cause why a discharge should not be granted must be by publication in such number of newspapers and for such length of time as the court may direct.—Anonymous, Case No. 457.

If the bankrupt does not apply for his discharge within three months from the time of his being adjudged a bankrupt, the notice need say nothing about the second or third meeting of creditors, which should be left to be regulated by Act 1867, §§ 27, 28.—Anonymous, Case No. 461.

On application after 60 days from the adjudication, the notice, form No. 52, need be served only on creditors who proved their debts, though containing a notice of the second and third general meetings of creditors.—In re McIntire, Case No. 8,822.

It is not necessary, in such case, that the request of the assignee, form No. 28, should be furnished the register.—In re McIntire, Case No. 8,822.

§ 554. Adjournment of proceedings.

The pendency of an examination of the bankrupt is good cause for an adjournment of the proceedings on an order to show cause why the bankrupt should not be discharged.—In re Mawson, Case No. 9,320; In re Thompson, Id. 13,935.

Proceedings under a petition for a discharge are terminated by an adjournment without day, unless a new order is issued.—In re Seckendorf, Case No. 12,600.

§ 555. Continuance.

Where there is no opposing party, the proceedings for discharge may be continued from day to day to suit the convenience of the bankrupt.—In re Sutherland, Case No. 13,640.

§ 556. Filing papers.

No discharge can be granted until all papers relating to the case are filed by the register in the clerk's office.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,267.

Where proofs of debts have been lost, they must be supplied under Rev. St. §§ 899, 900, before the bankrupt can be legally discharged.—In re Friedlob, Case No. 5,118.

§ 557. Reference to register.

Form No. 4 in bankruptcy is not a special order, but a "general order," under rule 5 of the general orders in bankruptcy.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,268.

Where there is no opposing counsel, on an application for discharge made more than two years after the adjudication, and after Act June 23, 1874, and the assent of majority creditors has not been obtained, the court will refer the case to a register to report as to all the facts.—In re Watson, Case No. 17,273.

Where the delay is not sufficiently accounted for, the application will be dismissed.—In re Watson, Case No. 17,274.

§ 558. Examination of bankrupt and others.

Manner of procuring examination of bankrupt before granting the discharge, and its conduct generally.—In re Brandt, Case No. 1,813.

A register has power to fill up a blank order for the examination of the bankrupt, issue the summons, and appoint the day and place.—In re Brandt, Case No. 1,812.

The filing of specifications in opposition to a discharge is not a necessary prerequisite to making of order for examination of bankrupt or other persons (Act 1867, § 26).—In re Baum, Case No. 1,116.

On filing specifications in opposition, the hearing upon the petition is at once transferred to the court, under Act 1867, § 4, and there cannot be any examination of the bankrupt by the creditors before a register, on the application by the bankrupt for a discharge.—In re Frizelle, Case No. 5,132.

A register has no authority to summon witnesses for the purpose of eliciting facts that may assist the creditors in preparing their specifications in opposition to the bankrupt's discharge, but it is proper to call the bankrupt to answer any questions regarding his bankruptcy.—In re Brandt, Case No. 1,812.

The bankrupt is not entitled to notice or an opportunity to attend and cross-examine a witness subpœnaed by a creditor pending application for a discharge.—In re Duncan, Case No. 4,132.

After ample opportunity for an examination of the bankrupt is afforded, and it is apparently full, further examination will be refused unless a specific defect or collusion is shown.—In re Frisbie, Case No. 5,131.

The bankrupt's discharge will not be refused on the ground that he did not procure an appointment from the register for the time and place for his examination, where it appears that he was ready to attend and be examined on due notice, for the duty of procuring such appointment from the register devolves upon the creditor.—In re Littlefield, Case No. 8,398.

§ 559. Hearing.

An unopposed petition for discharge is to be submitted upon the state of the case existing on the return day.—In re Seaman, Case No. 12,580.

§ 560. Oath of conformity.

The oath required by Act 1867, § 29, must be taken, and produced to the register, on the return day of the order to show cause, and he must then certify conformity or nonconformity, though the creditors ask time to file specifications of objections.—In re Pulver, Case No. 11,467.

The oath of conformity (Rev. St. § 5113) may be taken before any register or any court commissioner at any place within the district of such register or commissioner. Such oath is evidence, within Rev. St. § 5003.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,072.

The final oath of the bankrupt need not be made or filed until the hearing.—In re Sutherland, Case No. 13,640.

On withdrawal of specifications in opposition to his discharge, the bankrupt must take anew the oath required by Act 1867, § 29.—In re Machado, Case No. 8,819.

The presumption that the final oath required by Act 1867, § 29, was duly taken, is not overcome by the mere fact that such oath is not upon file.—Young v. Ridenbaugh, Case No. 18,173.

§ 561. Certificate of register.

The register must make his certificate as to examination, whether there be opposition to the discharge or not.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,267.

Certificate of conformity by the register is not conclusive on the court, and it may resort to other sources to ascertain whether or not the bankrupt has complied with the law.—In re Longest, Case No. 8,485.

§ 562. Order granting or refusing.

Where the bankrupt was about to lose all remedy by the repeal of the bankrupt law, the court permitted a default to be opened on terms.—In re Young, Case No. 18,146.

An order refusing a discharge may be entered nunc pro tunc where the parties have acted on the theory that the order was in force, and the rights of third parties will not be prejudiced. Case No. 4,090 affirmed.—In re Drisko, Case No. 4,086.

§ 563. Schedules.

In the case of involuntary bankruptcy, the bankrupt is not bound to file an inventory of his estate and effects, or a list of his creditors, in order to obtain a discharge, under Act 1841.—In re Ely, Case No. 4,429.

The bankrupt must amend his schedule so as to make it conform to the facts, and the filing of specifications does not deprive him of that right or release him from that duty.—In re Heller, Case No. 6,339.

A discharge will be denied until the amendment of the schedule so as to set out an interest in expectancy omitted by the bankrupt.—Connelly's Case, Case No. 3,110.

The case will be referred back to the register where the bankrupt has omitted from his schedule, as outlawed, claims of creditors who had no notice of the proceedings.—In re Cushman, Case No. 3,512.

(F) PROCEEDINGS IN OPPOSITION TO DISCHARGE.

§ 564. Powers and duties of register.

Where a creditor opposes the discharge, the register must make a certificate of his proceedings, and return the papers into court.—In re Hughes, Case No. 6,841.

Whether the bankrupt is entitled to a discharge is a question which cannot be certified, at the instance of a creditor, to the court by the register under Act 1867, § 6.—In re Mawson, Case No. 9,317.

A register has no authority to decide questions arising upon objections properly urged against a bankrupt's discharge. Whether objections are sufficient or insufficient, the register must, notwithstanding, proceed with the case.—In re Puffer, Case No. 11,459.

§ 565. Who may oppose discharge.

Any creditor whose debt is provable may oppose the discharge, although the debt has not been proved.—In re Butelle, Case No. 1,705; In re Shepard, Id. 12,750; In re Murdock, Id. 9,939; In re Smith, Id. 12,977. CONTRA, see In re Cohaus, Case No. 2,959b; In re King, Id. 7,784; In re Burk, Id. 2,156; In re Levy, Id. 8,297; In re Brisco, Id. 1,886.

No other persons can oppose the discharge.—In re Boutelle, Case No. 1,705.

Any one interested in the administration of the effects of the bankrupt may object, under Act 1841, though technically he is not a creditor.—In re Book, Case No. 1,637.

A creditor may come in at any time before the hearing of the petition for a discharge, to prove his claim and file objections.—In re Longest, Case No. 8,485.

Claims against a bankrupt cannot, as a matter of course, be proven to bar his discharge at any time subsequent to the day fixed for the creditors to show cause against the discharge.—Hester v. Baldwin, Case No. 6,438.

After time for hearing application for discharge is expired, and a creditor proves his debt, he cannot be heard in opposition to such discharge, or have his debt counted among the claims proved, so as to affect it.—In re Borst, Case No. 1,666.

Creditors who have not proved their claims until after the day fixed for showing cause against a discharge can then object to the discharge only on the ground of fraud.—In re Balmer, Case No. 820.

A debt proved in the firm name of A., B., C. & Co. cannot be the foundation of proceedings in opposition by B., C. & Co.—In re Palmer, Case No. 10,682.

Specifications in opposition filed by other than the attorneys appointed by the creditor, where there has been no lawful substitution, will be overruled.—In re Palmer, Case No. 10,682.

A creditor cannot oppose a bankrupt's discharge on the ground that the bankrupt, with intent to prefer such opposing creditor, made an assignment for his benefit, he having knowledge of such purpose, as such creditor cannot receive aid from his own wrong.—In re Jones, Case No. 7,452.

A former partner of the bankrupt cannot object to the latter's discharge on the ground that he failed to keep a cash account, except as to matters occurring after the dissolution of the partnership, where it appears that such creditor had knowledge of the manner in which the business of the partnership was run.—In re Sawyer, Case No. 12,394.

Creditors who have agreed that the bankrupt's property shall be transferred by the assignee to a certain person, to be distributed according to the terms of a previous general assignment for creditors, are estopped from setting up such assignment in bar of the discharge.—In re Schuyler, Case No. 12,494.

A conveyance by a merchant in failing circumstances to his wife will not ordinarily be supported on the ground that many years previously she, without security, advanced him money, under a verbal promise of repayment, which money he invested in his own name, and used to obtain credit in his business. But where, on a creditors' bill, brought in the name of a cashier of a bank, such conveyance was sustained by a state supreme court, the bank is estopped to oppose the discharge of the husband in bankruptcy on that ground.—In re Antisdel, Case No. 490.

A person having an equitable claim against the estate may oppose the discharge under Act 1841.—In re Tebbetts, Case No. 13,817.

A person having a contingent and unliquidated claim not capable of being proved as a debt comes within the class of "other persons in interest" (Act 1841, § 4), and may show cause against a discharge.—Ex parte Traphagen, Case No. 14,140.

A mortgagee of the bankrupt is entitled as a creditor to take part in the proceedings, notwithstanding an assignment of the mortgage to a third person to secure a debt, and a general assignment of all his property to a receiver appointed in suit against him.—In re Ely, Case No. 4,428.

Copartnership creditors, being entitled to the individual assets of one copartner, who has no individual creditors, may oppose his discharge.—In re Leavitt, Case No. 8,169.

A judgment recovered pending bankruptcy proceedings in a suit begun before, and based upon a provable debt, is released by a discharge; therefore a creditor holding such judgment has an interest in the question of discharge and a right to be heard thereon.—In re Stansfield, Case No. 13,294. CONTRA, see In re Gallison, Case No. 5,203.

Where a creditor, who has obtained judgment for his debt after an adjudication against his debtor, has proved his debt, and afterwards obtained an unconditional judgment, and takes out execution, and appeared to oppose the discharge, no one having moved to expunge his proof, he will be heard against the discharge on filing a stipulation to cancel his judgment if the discharge should be granted.—In re Gallison, Case No. 5,203.

Creditors of debts contracted before January 1, 1869, cannot oppose a discharge as to debts contracted since that date.—In re Pierson, Case No. 11,154.

§ 566. Contesting right to oppose discharge.

An exception to the competency of a creditor to present objections to the discharge, on the ground that he had not proved his debt, should be taken before the court when the objection was offered, and if presented for the first time to the commissioner he may disregard the same. (Act 1841).—In re King, Case No. 7,784.

Both the bankrupt and creditors who have duly come in under the law may contest the right of a creditor who has not proved his debt to oppose the bankrupt's discharge.—In re Cohaus, Case No. 2,959b.

§ 567. Intervention and substitution.

Creditors will not be allowed to intervene, after the return day, to prosecute specifications filed by a creditor whose claim was stricken out after the filing of such specifications.—In re McDonald, Case No. 8,753.

Where a creditor has duly filed specifications of opposition to the discharge, and is about to withdraw them, other creditors may be substituted and carry on the opposition.—In re Houghton, Case No. 6,730.

§ 568. Appearance of creditor.

A creditor cannot oppose the discharge unless he enter his appearance in opposition thereto within the day appointed for showing cause against the petition therefor.—In re Sutherland, Case No. 13,640; In re Smith, Id. 12,985.

An appearance for a creditor, entered on an adjourned day of the hearing on the order to show cause, after several previous adjournments, is not too late.—In re Seabury, Case No. 12,573.

§ 569. Specifications in opposition—Time to file.

No objection to any proceedings can be considered an opposition to the discharge until application is made for a discharge.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,481.

A creditor who has proved his claim may, at any time thereafter, and before the expiration of the time limited by rule 24 of the general orders in bankruptcy, file specifications of the grounds of his opposition to a bankrupt's discharge.—In re Baum, Case No. 1,116.

Creditors' specifications of grounds of opposition to a discharge, filed with the register on the day after the final hearing, are not filed in accordance with the provisions of Act 1867, and will not be considered.—In re Buxbaum, Case No. 2,259.

A creditor who has not entered his opposition and filed his specifications within a proper time and according to rule cannot oppose the discharge.—In re McVey, Case No. 8,932.

The district court has discretion to enlarge the time for entering appearance and filing specifications in opposition, as well after as before the expiration of the time allowed by rule 24.—In re Levin, Case No. 8,291; In re Jacobs, Id. 7,160.

The time to file objections to a discharge should be kept open by adjournments until full opportunity is given for the examination of the bankrupt and witnesses.—In re Seckendorf, Case No. 12,600.

In the case of an adjournment on the return day of the order to show cause why the bankrupt should not be discharged, the time to file specifications of objection will run from the adjourned day.—In re Tallman, Case No. 13,740.

Where creditors, against whose claim a protest has been filed by the bankrupt, apply to the register, on petition alleging fraud in the bankrupt's proceedings, for an order directing the examination of the bankrupt and of witnesses, and the extending of time to show cause against the discharge until the examination, such order should be granted, under Act 1867, § 26.—In re Belden, Case No. 1,238.

It is discretionary with the court to permit opposition to the discharge after the return day of the order to show cause, where the proceedings have been adjourned for other purposes.—In re Houghton, Case No. 6,730.

Specifications in opposition inadvertently omitted to be filed within 10 days after the return day to show cause may be filed nunc pro tunc.—In re Grefe, Case No. 5,794.

§ 570. —— Form and contents.

Objections filed against the decree of bankruptcy cannot, without an express order at the time, be continued and employed against the application for a discharge.—In re Livermore, Case No. 8,404.

Specifications of opposition to the discharge must be in writing, and must disclose the name of the opposing creditor or creditors.—In re Shoemaker, Case No. 12,799.

The strictness of common-law pleading is not required in specification opposing discharge, but the bankrupt is entitled to such particularity as will give him reasonable notice of what is intended to be proved against him.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,985.

Under Act 1867, allegations in opposition to discharge are not sufficient when they simply follow the words of the statute. They must be as exact as the specifications in an indictment.—In re Butterfield, Case No. 2,247.

No intendment will be made in favor of the pleader. The construction is more strict than in common-law proceedings.—In re Butterfield, Case No. 2,247.

Specifications of objections to a discharge furnish no ground for refusing it which are merely the language of Act 1867, § 29, and are so vague and general that it is impossible for the court or bankrupt to ascertain from them what specific acts or omissions are relied on by the opposing creditors.—In re Son, Case No. 13,174.

Vague and general specifications filed in opposition to a discharge, reciting fraud, etc., will be disregarded. The creditor must specify the particular matter of which he complains.—In re Hill, Cases Nos. 6,481, 6,482; In re Dreyer, Id. 4,082; In re Tyrrel, Id. 14,314; In re Hansen, Id. 6,039; In re Connell, Id. 3,110; In re Condict, Id. 3,094.

In order to enable an opposing creditor to obtain an order for trial under Act 1867, § 31, the specification of objections must be sufficiently definite to enable the court to see that there exists a fair question of fact necessary to the determination upon evidence outside of the paper.—In re Waggoner, Case No. 17,037.

Where an objection to a discharge rests on facts, there must be a specification, in order that the bankrupt may produce evidence for the purpose of the trial on the question of facts.—In re White, Case No. 17,533.

Specifications opposing a discharge must particularize facts constituting the grounds of opposition, setting forth time, place, person, etc.—In re Eidom, Case No. 4,314.

Specifications of opposition under Act 1867, § 31, and general order No. 24, must be as specific as the grounds for avoiding a discharge required by § 34 of such act.—In re Rathbone, Case No. 11,580.

False swearing, if alleged, must be charged to have been willful.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,985.

A specification alleging that the bankrupt fraudulently neglected, or willfully omitted, to include certain specified property in his schedules, is insufficient, without an accompanying allegation of willful false swearing.—In re Keefer, Case No. 7,636.

Specifications alleging concealment of property should specify the property, and that the omissions from the schedules were willful, fraudulent, or negligent.—In re Beardsley, Case No. 1,183.

An allegation that the bankrupt in May, 1865, removed a part of his property from the district, with intent, etc., is too vague and general.—In re Burk, Case No. 2,156.

A specification which simply charges that the bankrupt concealed his estate and effects, and concealed and removed, altered, and destroyed the books and writings relating thereto, is insufficient.—In re Condict, Case No. 3,094.

Specifications stating that the bankrupt has placed his property in the hands of his wife, and withheld his books, papers, and documents, are too general, unless intended to apply to all his property, books, papers, and documents.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,482.

Specifications of opposition merely charging concealment, transfer, etc., of property by the bankrupt, without specifying the property, are too vague.—In re Mawson, Case No. 9,318.

An allegation, in specifications of opposition to discharge, of destruction, mutilation, and falsification of papers and documents showing his business and financial transactions by the bankrupt, is defective, unless an intent to defraud creditors is averred.—In re Marston, Case No. 9,142.

Charges in a specification of objection to discharge, in general terms, of the destruction and removal of books and papers to defraud creditors, and of procurement of certain creditors' assent by pecuniary consideration, are too vague. —In re Freeman, Case No. 5,082.

A specification of opposition stating that the bankrupt procured the assent of certain creditors, without stating that he did so by means of a pecuniary consideration, is insufficient.—In re Mawson, Case No. 9,318.

In the specifications against discharge, where fraudulent payments are charged, it is not necessary to state that the persons receiving such payments were creditors.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,985.

§ 571. —— Issues and proof.

Until the bankrupt has made full and sufficient disclosure, the assignees or creditors cannot be required to specify objections, or definitely abide by objections which have been specified.—In re Long, Case No. 8,477.

A specification in opposition that the bankrupt concealed the title to land is not sustained by proof of the omission of an equity of redemption from his schedule.—In re Moore, Case No. 9,751.

An allegation that the bankrupt "is entitled" to certain real estate held sufficient to show that he was guilty, under section 29, of negligence, in delivering to the assignee property belonging to him.—In re Rathbone, Case No. 11,580.

The creditors cannot give proof of other payments than those mentioned in the specification, as alleged fraudulent preferences.—In re Rosenfeld, Case No. 12,057.

Specification averring want of proper books of account showing receipt and disposal of money will admit evidence of want of cash book.—In re Bellis, Case No. 1,275.

§ 572. —— Amendment.

The court has discretionary power to permit amendment of defective specifications.—In re Bellis, Case No. 1,275; In re Jacobs, Id. 7,160.

Leave to amend defective specifications will not be granted on application after lapse of a month from the granting of the discharge.—In re McIntire, Case No. 8,823.

§ 573. Demurrer and exceptions by bankrupt.

When the grounds of opposition are insufficient in law to prevent the discharge, the bankrupt may demur to the specification thereof.—In re Burk, Case No. 2,156.

All objections to specifications should be raised by the exceptions first filed.—In re Duncan, Case No. 4,133.

The sustaining of exceptions to specifications in certain respects will be deemed a disallowance of them in all other respects preventing their renewal, in the absence of an amendment making the specifications substantially different from the former ones.—In re Duncan, Case No. 4,133.

§ 574. Remedy on failure to prosecute petition.

A creditor who has duly appeared in opposition cannot move to dismiss the petition for want of prosecution, but should move to set it down for hearing.—In re Sutherland, Case No. 13,640.

§ 575. Taking testimony.

After specifications of objection are filed, further proof may be taken by either party if desired, by a reference to the register.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,482.

Where specifications have been filed, and the creditors move for leave to take testimony, the court will not on such motion pass upon the question whether the secret possession of property fraudulently assigned before the bankrupt act would amount to a fraud under Act 1867, § 29.—In re Moore, Case No. 9,749.

§ 576. Burden of proof.

The burden of proof is upon the opposing creditor to establish the grounds of opposition.—In re O'Kell, Case No. 10,475.

Where the bankrupt has taken the oath required by Act 1867, § 29, the creditor filing specifications has the burden of showing that he has forfeited his right to a discharge.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,482.

The burden is on the creditor to prove that a debt included in the schedule and not proved was false or fictitious.—In re Orcutt, Case No. 10,550.

Before the bankruptcy of one who had an interest in a business from which he received half of the profits as compensation, notes given by the owner were paid out of the proceeds of the business. Held, that the burden was on the creditors to show that the notes were paid out of the net profits, in which the bankrupt had an interest.—In re Beardsley, Case No. 1,184.

§ 577. Admissibility of evidence.

The bankrupt's sworn answer in chancery is evidence against him in bankruptcy.—Anonymous, Case No. 463.

Separate depositions made by bankrupt partners in an equity suit brought by the assignee against them and others are inadmissible against each other.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,232.

A deposition by the bankrupt in a suit by the assignee against him and others, and the decree therein, are admissible against the bankrupt upon a proceeding by him for his discharge.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,232.

Proceedings by the assignee in a suit against third persons are inadmissible as evidence against the bankrupts in proceedings for a discharge.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,232.

§ 578. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

A specification charging willful false swearing in the bankrupt's examination must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Evidence of verbal admissions is not sufficient.—In re Moore, Case No. 9,751.

Where 11 objections to a discharge are filed and pressed by opposing creditors, and under each an issue of fact is raised, and evidence and argument submitted, the opposing creditors having established a prima facie case of fraud, the petitioner is not entitled to his discharge. —In re Doyle, Case No. 4,052.

Where specifications in opposition to a discharge allege that the bankrupt has concealed property in the hands of his brother, and the only evidence in support thereof is the testimony of the bankrupt and his brother from which badges and indicia of fraud are deduced, and such testimony is not overborne by positive testimony, the specification will be sustained and a discharge refused.—In re Goodridge, Case No. 5,547.

A decree in a suit in a state court between a creditor and defendants, of whom the bankrupt was one, declaring a conveyance by the bankrupt void as in fraud of creditors, is not conclusive when such conveyance is set up by the creditor in bar of the discharge.—In re Sumner, Case No. 13,607.

§ 579. Trial by jury.

On trial by jury to determine the right of a bankrupt to a discharge and certificate, the opposing creditor has the affirmative of the issue, and has consequently the right to begin.—Anonymous, Case No. 464.

Creditors are entitled to a jury trial where they allege that the bankrupt, being insolvent, and in contemplation of bankruptcy, had made a fraudulent preference, without previously specially praying a jury trial.—In re Lawson, Case No. 8,151.

The trial of objections to the discharge of partners may be joint, but the verdicts and decrees must be several.—In re George, Case No. 5,325.

§ 580. Competency of witnesses.

Where the testator devised to the bankrupt the notes and obligations held against him, the executor must be considered as standing in the place of the bankrupt, and he may be a witness against him, if called by the objecting creditors upon a proceeding for a discharge.—In re Perley, Case No. 10,992.

A creditor of a voluntary bankrupt is a competent witness for other creditors opposing the bankrupt's discharge.—In re Day, Case No. 3,671a.

§ 581. Hearing and determination.

Hearing on specification of grounds of opposition is essentially different from hearing of application for discharge.—In re Borst, Case No. 1,666.

When the specifications are not sustained by the proofs, a discharge will be granted whenever the register shall certify that the bankrupt has conformed to the requirements of Act 1867. —In re Harris, Case No. 6,112.

§ 582. Waiver.

Strict diligence by the creditors will be enforced in supporting opposition to a discharge, and an omission to take the appropriate steps within a reasonable time will be deemed a waiver of the objections.—In re Livermore, Case No. 8,404.

(G) GROUNDS OF OPPOSING OR ACTS BARRING DISCHARGE.

§ 583. In general.

To make out a case against the bankrupt to justify the court in refusing him his discharge and certificate, under Act 1841, there must appear by indisputable evidence some act of fraud, willful concealment of property, etc., or facts from which such a deduction would be plain and palpable.—In re Banks, Case No. 958.

The acts enumerated in Rev. St. § 5110, are not in the nature of offenses or forfeitures of the right to a discharge, but are rather in the nature of violations of conditions precedent.—In re Seeley, Case No. 12,628.

Where creditors do not oppose discharge, the court will not of its own motion refuse it, notwithstanding commission of acts barring it.—In re Antisdel, Case No. 490; In re Clark, Id. 2,812. CONTRA, see In re Sohoo, Case No. 13,162; In re Wilkinson, Id. 17,667.

§ 584. Transactions before passage of bankruptcy acts.

Fraud consummated under an assignment for benefit of creditors before, and not in contemplation of, the passage of the act (1841), does not bar a discharge.—In re MacFarlan, Case No. 8,787.

A general assignment before the passage of Act 1841, with preference of fictitious debts, will not operate as a bar to the bankrupt's discharge.—In re Delavan, Case No. 3,758.

The second proviso, in Act 1841, § 2, is to be read as if pointed thus: "In case it shall be made to appear to the court, in the course of the proceedings in bankruptcy, that the bankrupt, his application being voluntary, has, subsequent to the first day of January last, or at any other time, in contemplation of the passage of a bankrupt law, by assignment or otherwise, given or secured any preference," etc., "he shall not receive a discharge," etc.—In re Irwine, Case No. 7,086.

Fraudulent transfers before the passage of the act (Aug. 19, 1841) are no bar to a discharge under §§ 2, 4.—In re Amory and Leeds, Case No. 336b.

Transactions occurring before the passage of Act 1867, unless otherwise specially limited by section 29, may be specified as grounds of opposition to a bankrupt's discharge.—In re Cretiew, Case No. 3,390. CONTRA, see In re Moore, Case No. 9,751; In re Keefer, Id. 7,636.

A fraudulent conveyance made, or a fraudulent preference given, before the passage of the bankrupt act, is a good ground for refusing a discharge under Act 1867, § 29.—In re Hussman, Case No. 6,951. CONTRA, see In re Hollenshade, Case No. 6,610; In re Rosenfield, Id. 12,058.

§ 585. Want of jurisdiction.

The application for a discharge in a voluntary proceeding may be opposed on the ground of want of jurisdiction by reason of the absence of jurisdictional averments in the petition.—In re Penn, Case No. 10,926.

The discharge cannot be opposed on the ground that the facts stated in the petition as to the length of petitioner's residence within the district are not true.—In re Ives, Case No. 7,115.

§ 586. False swearing—In general.

False testimony in the examination, and false statements in the schedule, must be alleged to have been willfully false, to bar a discharge.—In re Rathbone, Case No. 11,580.

Erroneous allegations in bankrupt's petition are not a sufficient objection to his discharge, unless sworn to with knowledge of their falsity. —In re Burk, Case No. 2,156.

Slight inaccuracies and a want of recollection will not warrant the belief of willful false swearing or false entries, where the bankrupt, a speculator in stocks, was obliged to rely mostly upon statements of his brokers.—In re Woodward, Case No. 18,001.

§ 587. —— As to property.

The bankrupt is only bound to set forth in his schedule such property as he has a right or interest in at the time of petitioning.—Ex parte Robertson, Case No. 11,921.

Property, the right or interest in which has passed out of the petitioner prior to petitioning, whether by negligence, extravagance, gaming, donation, or fraud, need not be set forth in the schedule.—Ex parte Robertson, Case No. 11,-921.

A voluntary conveyance by an insolvent prior to Act 1841, under circumstances rendering it fraudulent as to creditors, nevertheless devests the interest of the grantor, so that he need not set it forth in his inventory.—In re McCarty, Case No. 8,684.

The omission to schedule judgments obtained on notes of the bankrupt, sued on in the name of the third person, where fraudulently done, will defeat a discharge.—In re Perley, Case No. 10,992.

Interest in the business of another, which the bankrupt conducts in his own name, receiving half of profits as compensation, is not property to be set out in his inventory as a bankrupt.—In re Beardsley. Case No. 1,184.

The failure to schedule corporate stock standing in the name of another, in which the bankrupt had no interest, and the transfer of the same, made without collusion or fraud, will not prevent a discharge.—In re Penn, Case No. 10,-929.

Where the husband's equitable interest in his wife's property has been sold on execution, it is not a false swearing for him to state that he has no interest or estate in such property.—In re Hummitsh, Case No. 6,866.

The omission to schedule property purchased by the bankrupt's wife on execution sales (with her separate funds) by judgment creditors will not bar a discharge.—In re Pomeroy, Case No. 11,258.

The omission from the schedule of the amount of money in the hands of a receiver appointed in a state court suit for an accounting between the bankrupt and his partner is no ground for refusing a discharge.—In re Shoemaker, Case No. 12,799.

A failure to insert in the schedule property fraudulently conveyed is not a false swearing where a receiver of all the bankrupt's property has been appointed by the state court, as whatever title the bankrupt had in such property had passed to the receiver.—In re Freeman, Case No. 5,082.

A discharge will be refused, where the bankrupt has sworn that he has no assets, when he has concealed his property derived from profits in the firm by having his interest held in his wife's name.—In re Rathbone, Case No. 11,583.

A bankrupt doing business in his wife's name is guilty of fraud in placing property in her name, where it appears that she was without means when he married her, a few years before, and had inherited no property, and where he does not include such property in his inventory, which he has sworn to, his discharge will be refused.—In re Hill, Case No. 6,483.

Growing crops unmatured must be entered on the schedule of personal property.—In re Schumpert, Case No. 12,491.

The concealment of assets and false swearing in the affidavit connected with the schedule must appear to have been intentional, to preclude a discharge.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,783; In re Wyatt, Id. 18,106.

The bankrupt is not chargeable with false swearing or fraud in omitting from his schedule a judgment held by him which he honestly regards as worthless, or in unintentionally omitting a debt which he considers of value as an asset.—In re Winsor, Case No. 17,885.

An erroneous claim of certain articles mentioned as exempt does not affect the truth of the affidavit to the schedule which states that it contains a statement of all the bankrupt's estate.—In re Whetmore, Case No. 17,508.

§ 588. —— As to indebtedness.

The omission of a particular debt from the schedule, unless intentional and fraudulent, will not bar a discharge.—In re Tebbetts, Case No. 13,817.

The omission to include worthless debts in the schedule will not bar a discharge.—In re Pearce, Case No. 10,873.

A willful omission to state a debt due from the bankrupt in his schedule is ground for refusing a discharge.—In re Kallish, Case No. 7,599.

Where a bankrupt, in pursuance of an arrangement with a certain creditor, omits his debt from his schedule, such creditor will not be permitted to object to the bankrupt's discharge on that ground.—In re Whetmore, Case No. 17,508.

The omission from the schedule of the names of creditors who did not intend to take dividends with trade creditors will not bar a discharge.—In re Needham, Case No. 10,081.

§ 589. Concealment of property, etc.

The concealment denounced by Act 1867, § 29, embraces a concealment of title to property, as well as the hiding from view of the property itself.—In re Hussman, Case No. 6,951.

The bankrupt's omission to include all his property in the schedule is not of itself cause for refusing a discharge, but such omission must be for purposes of concealment or fraud.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,995.

Where a bankrupt, prior to the passage of Act 1841, causes notes to be sued in the name of a third person, and in his schedule makes no mention of the property, the court will consider such third party as trustee of the bankrupt, to the amount of his interest in the property.—In re Perley, Case No. 10,992.

The failure to schedule property in which the bankrupt did not at the time know that he had a substantial interest will not prevent a discharge. There must be an intention to conceal the property.—In re Parker, Case No. 10,720.

The absence of a certain note from the schedule is no ground of refusing a discharge, where it is doubtful if the bankrupt has any interest therein, and there is no concealment.—In re Murdock, Case No. 9,939.

A bankrupt is guilty of concealment in not including in his schedule property conveyed to him in fraud of the creditors of the grantor.—In re O'Bannon, Case No. 10,394.

Where a bankrupt has property in his possession, and has the use of it as his own, and willfully omits it from his schedules and keeps it from his assignee, it is not answer to a charge of concealment thereof that the property belonged of right to his assignees under an earlier assignment in insolvency, under the laws of the state of his residence.—In re Beal, Case No. 1,156.

Where the bankrupt's wife is made a partner in a business transacted without capital, by purchasing from a member an interest which he had previously purchased from the bankrupt, who all the time continues in the employ of the firm, receiving a percentage of profits in lieu of salary, the arrangement is fraudulent, and a discharge will be refused for concealment of the bankrupt's interest in the business.—In re Rathbone, Case No. 11,581.

It is a concealment, within Act 1867, § 29, for the bankrupt, having knowledge of the existence of his books, and of their place of deposit, to refuse to give them to his assignee, and to deny their existence.—In re Hammond, Case No. 5,999.

A bankrupt having actual possession of joint estate and joint books of account must disclose them to his separate assignees.—In re Beal, Case No. 1,156.

Declarations of a debtor, at the time of his failure, that he has means to pay all his debts, are not sufficient, by themselves, to show a fraudulent concealment of assets.—In re Delavan, Case No. 3,758.

The failure of a member of a bankrupt firm to file a schedule of his personal property is no ground of refusing a discharge to the other members.—In re Scofield, Case No. 12,509.

A discharge is not barred by the bankrupt's having concealed himself to avoid being arrested, such act not being of a fraudulent character. Act 1841.—In re Ely, Case No. 4,429.

§ 590. Waste.

A discharge will not be refused because the bankrupt has, before petition filed, misused and wasted his estate, and made fraudulent purchases.—In re Rogers, Case No. 12,001.

Bankrupts held not in complicity with uncle having entire charge of business, who wasted a capital of $120,000 in 22 months, and became their debtor to the amount of $640,000.—In re Beatty, Case No. 1,196.

§ 591. Procuring property to be seized.

Where property of a bankrupt is subject to an attachment upon mesne process at the time he filed his petition, it is no objection to his discharge that he consented to the personal property being sold upon mesne process, or that he confessed judgment in the suit, it appearing that the debt was bona fide.—In re Reed, Case No. 11,640.

The procurement of the appointment of a receiver in a state court suit held not to amount to a fraudulent transfer of property.—In re Shoemaker, Case No. 12,799.

Suffering an adjudication of bankruptcy by default is without prejudice to the right of discharge.—In re Lathrop, Case No. 8,105.

§ 592. Mutilation of account books.

A mutilation of books of account by a bankrupt may be explained, and, where it appears that such mutilation was done without fraud, a discharge will be granted.—In re Nooman, Case No. 10,291.

§ 593. Removal of property from district.

Removal of property from the district, with intent to defraud creditors, either before or since the passage of Act 1867, is good ground of opposition by one who was a creditor of the bankrupt at the time of such removal and could have been defrauded by it.—In re Burk, Case No. 2,156.

An allegation of a consignment to one out of the district, in contemplation of bankruptcy, and with intent to keep the property from the assignee, is a sufficient charge of a removal of the goods from the district with intent to defraud creditors.—In re Hammond, Case No. 5,999.

§ 594. Preferences—In general.

See, also, ante, §§ 62–78, 214–250.

A retiring partner of an insolvent firm, receiving payment for his interest, is not a creditor (Act 1841, § 2). Case No. 336b affirmed.—In re Amory and Leeds, Case No. 336c.

It is no objection to discharge of a bankrupt that, at the time of filing his petition, he executed a quitclaim deed of his real estate to a creditor, who had attached the same under a mesne process, it appearing that the real estate was previously incumbered to nearly its entire value.—In re Reed, Case No. 11,640.

"Fraudulent preference," as used in item 9 of section 29 (Act 1867), means only a preference in fraud of the bankrupt act; that is, contrary to its provisions.—In re Rosenfield, Case No. 12,058.

Only those preferences which are forbidden and made void by Act 1867, § 35, and the clause of § 29 which refers to preferences in contemplation of bankruptcy, are grounds for refusing the bankrupt's discharge.—In re Locke, Case No. 8,439; In re Pierson, Id. 11,153.

A fraudulent preference, under Act 1867, § 29, which will bar a discharge, is not the same as a fraudulent preference under §§ 35, 39.—In re Perry, Case No. 10,999.

A preference may be given which will subject the debtor to proceedings in bankruptcy, and yet be no bar to his discharge.—In re Pierson, Case No. 11,153.

Conveyances by an alien while residing abroad, made within six months of filing the petition, if they would be preferences under Act 1867 or if fraudulent at common law, will prevent a discharge.—In re Goodfellow, Case No. 5,536.

A fraudulent preference, given by one member of a copartnership without the knowledge, authority, or consent of his copartner, does not bar a discharge to the latter.—In re Leavitt, Case No. 8,169.

§ 595. —— Intent of debtor.

Not every payment made by an insolvent, aware of his insolvency, is an act of bankruptcy, under Act 1841; to make it so, it must be with the intention to give a preference to the particular creditor.—Ex parte Garwood, Case No. 5,258.

Mere insolvency is not sufficient to show a payment to have been made in contemplation of bankruptcy.—In re Rowell, Case No. 12,095.

A payment to be voluntary must originate with the debtor; the first step being taken by him, and not by the creditor.—In re Rowell, Case No. 12,095.

A voluntary conveyance by an insolvent in the ordinary course of business will not justify an inference that the transfer was made in contemplation of bankruptcy, without proof of facts justifying an inference that it was made with intent to defeat Act 1841.—In re Pearce, Case No. 10,873.

A voluntary payment or transfer by an insolvent debtor, made with the bona fide intention and expectation of preventing bankruptcy, is not an unlawful preference (Act 1841).—In re Pearce, Case No. 10,873.

Bona fide payment by an insolvent with no intention of giving a preference in satisfaction of judgment is not in fraud of Act 1841, if thereby the debtor is enabled to continue his business.—Ex parte Garwood, Case No. 5,258.

Preferences made in contemplation of the passage of Act 1841 will bar a discharge thereunder only when made with a view of getting the benefit of the act.—Ex parte Quackenboss, Cases Nos. 11,489, 11,490.

Where a debtor irretrievably insolvent has failed, and stopped business, and when, under the immediate apprehension of being committed to jail for debt by one of his creditors, he transfers a part of his property to another creditor, without any request or demand of the latter, to an amount exceeding his debt, and becomes a voluntary bankrupt shortly after such transfer, an unlawful preference is created which will deprive the bankrupt of his discharge. Act 1841.—In re Pearce, Case No. 10,873.

A discharge will be refused where a confession of judgment was voluntarily made by the bankrupt, contemplating bankruptcy in order to compel a creditor upon whose farm the bankrupt resided to reduce his rent, and, if not, to defeat the debt of such creditor.—In re Chase, Case No. 2,624.

The question of intent to give a preference is not conclusively decided by showing a known insolvency, though it may be inferred from such insolvency, in the absence of controlling evidence.—In re Locke, Case No. 8,439.

The bankrupt's mere denial of intention of filing a petition, at the time of making a general assignment, is not sufficient to repel such presumption arising from the fact of a petition being filed four days later.—In re Brodhead, Case No. 1,918.

If the necessary effect of an act is to prefer one creditor, the intent to prefer is presumed, though other motives co-operated to induce the act.—In re Batchelder, Case No. 1,098.

Transfer of whole stock and book accounts to one creditor, three weeks before filing petition, is a preference, though made under threat of legal process.—In re Batchelder, Case No. 1,098.

Discharge denied where bankrupt, with knowledge of his insolvency, took, for a note against a relative, property which became exempt under the state laws.—In re Leavitt, Case No. 8,169.

Payments by a merchant to creditors, to procure extensions, with the belief that he could keep afloat, is not in fraud of Act 1867, § 29.—In re Brent, Case No. 1,832.

A discharge will be refused in the case of a fraudulent preference, though the bankrupt had acted under advice of counsel, and the transferee had surrendered the goods without suit, it not appearing that the bankrupt had acted in good faith, believing he had a right to do what he did.—In re Finn, Case No. 4,795.

Where the property of a debtor was attached without his knowledge by a hostile creditor, his omission to have himself adjudged a voluntary bankrupt cannot have a retroactive effect, so as to supply an intent to give a preference by the attachment.—In re Belden, Case No. 1,240.

The design to give a preference must be established as a fact, and where a bankrupt testifies that the cause of his bankruptcy was an unforeseen increase of indebtedness, occurring after payment made in full to certain creditors, the fact that it is shown that he was insolvent at the time of such payment does not establish the fact that bankruptcy was then contemplated.—In re Chapman, Case No. 2,601.

Where members of a firm are also members of firms in a foreign country, which, being threatened with legal proceedings, mortgaged their property for advances to carry on their business and to secure payment of prior debts, held, that such transfers were not preferences.—In re White, Case No. 17,533.

Where the necessary effect of a transfer is to prefer a creditor, and there is no attempt to explain away the inference of an intent to prefer, though the same is denied, the presumption of such intent will be held conclusive as a matter of law.—In re Seeley, Case No. 12,628.

Where the circumstances tend to show that the party did not intend to prefer the creditor, the question of actual intent must be left to the jury, though he was insolvent, and the necessary effect of the payment was to prefer.—In re Seeley, Case No. 12,628.

§ 596. —— Knowledge of creditor.

The bankrupt must have designedly and intentionally given a preference; but the creditor receiving it need not have known that his debtor was insolvent.—In re Gay, Case No. 5,279.

A payment to a creditor out of the ordinary course of business, and within four months of filing the petition, by a debtor knowing himself to be insolvent, will prevent a discharge, although the preferred creditor had no knowledge or reasonable cause to believe the debtor to be then insolvent. Case No. 4,051 affirmed.—In re Doyle, Case No. 4,050.

§ 597. —— Insolvency.

A trader is insolvent, within Act 1867, when he is unable to pay his debts as they fall due, in the ordinary course of business.—In re Gay, Case No. 5,279; In re Doyle, Id. 4,050, affirming Case No. 4,051.

A transfer by a debtor, when solvent, of an estate greatly in excess of the debt, for which credit was given on the debtor's books, where a settlement was not had until after the insolvency of the grantor, is not a fraudulent preference.—In re Rosenfeld, Case No. 12,057.

A preference is committed when a trader, knowing or suspecting that he is insolvent, and must stop payment, pays or secures some creditors in full.—In re George, Case No. 5,325.

To bar a discharge for having given a preference, the bankrupt must have either contemplated bankruptcy or insolvency, or in fact have been insolvent, and knew it, or had good grounds for believing it, and have acted on such belief.—In re Gay, Case No. 5,279.

An assignment of a claim to secure a pre-existing indebtedness, made when insolvent, and forming no part of the transaction in which the indebtedness was created, is a fraudulent preference, barring a discharge.—In re Foster, Case No. 4,961.

A pledge, payment, transfer, assignment, or conveyance made when a debtor's liabilities exceed his assets, and he has ceased to meet his indebtedness as it falls due, is an act of bankruptcy, and a sufficient ground for refusing a discharge (Act 1867, § 29.)—In re Warner, Case No. 17,177.

§ 598. —— Payments.

The giving of instructions to a foreign agent to pay a particular creditor, not acted upon, is no ground for refusing discharge.—Ex parte Garwood, Case No. 5,258.

Payment of attorney's fees is not such a preference as will prevent a discharge.—In re Sidle, Case No. 12,844.

The payment by a bankrupt to counsel for services "rendered and to be rendered," without fraud, is no ground for refusing a discharge.—In re Rosenfeld, Case No. 12,057.

An insurance made upon house and furniture, in pursuance of covenants in lease, is not a fraudulent preference.—In re Rosenfeld, Case No. 12,057.

Where expenditures are incurred by a debtor while insolvent, in support of his family, and the evidence is silent as to their character, the court will not admit such expenditures as a ground for refusing a discharge.—In re Rosenfeld, Case No. 12,057.

It is no objection to a discharge that the wages of servants were paid after the passage of the act, where they were necessary family expenses.—In re Rosenfeld, Case No. 12,057.

Where one who has ceased to be a trader, and has disposed of all his property many years before Act 1867 was passed, but has not settled all his trade debts, and is living on his salary as a clerk, pays his rent and some other necessary expenses monthly, without intending to become bankrupt, such payments are not fraudulent preferences, within section 29 of said act, of which his trade creditors can take advantage in opposing his discharge, though made within four months of bankruptcy, and when the debtor knew himself to be insolvent.—In re Locke, Case No. 8,439.

Payments in full of certain debts, a short time before becoming bankrupt, appearing solely from the bankrupt's examination, will not prevent a discharge, where there is no evidence to show that they are fraudulent.—In re Burgess, Case No. 2,153.

Payments made in the course of business by debtors who were insolvent when they commenced business, and not in contemplation of bankruptcy, will not bar a discharge.—In re Perry, Case No. 10,999.

A payment by a surety of the bankrupt, without his knowledge, to an opposing creditor, held would not vitiate the discharge.—Ex parte Briggs, Case No. 1,868.

§ 599. —— General assignment.

A general assignment in trust to pay creditors without preference, made a few days before the filing of a petition against the bankrupt, will not bar a discharge under the act of 1841.—In re Ely, Case No. 4,429.

Creditors executing releases under terms of voluntary assignment are to be considered as preferred over other creditors, within meaning of provision denying discharge.—Aspinwall's Case, Case No. 592.

A general assignment for creditors without preferences, made 16 days before voluntary proceedings commenced, and when a creditor was about to obtain a judgment, in the absence of actual fraud, will not bar a discharge (Act 1867, § 29).—In re Pierce, Case No. 11,141.

A general assignment by an insolvent without preferences 10 months before filing petition in bankruptcy held to have been made in fraud of the bankrupt act, and to prevent a discharge. —In re Goldschmidt, Case No. 5,520.

A general assignment for the benefit of creditors without preferences is an act of bankruptcy, and will defeat the discharge, irrespective of the time when made.—In re Kasson, Case No. 7,617.

Where an assignee under a voluntary general assignment by partners sets apart a portion of the assets as exemptions to one of the partners, a discharge was refused such partner.—In re Croft, Case No. 3,404.

See, also, ante, §§ 73, 249, 250.

§ 600. —— Time of transfer, payment, etc.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors by debtors after the passage of the bankrupt law, but before it took effect, will not prevent their discharge under the act of 1841.—In re Chadwick, Case No. 2,569.

The act of suffering a default in a case in which an attachment was made prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy is not the granting of an unlawful preference. Act 1841. —In re Rowell, Case No. 12,095.

A conveyance made without concealment by the bankrupt to his wife more than 10 years before the bankrupt act will not prevent a discharge, unless it appear that the property is held on a secret trust for him.—In re Murdock, Case No. 9,939.

A fraudulent conveyance, within section 29, Act 1867, must be a conveyance made as required by section 35, within four or six months before the filing of the petition by or against the debtor.—In re Freeman, Case No. 5,082.

The fraudulent preference or transfer which will bar a discharge must be such as is denominated a fraud by the terms of the law, and particularly described in Act 1867, § 35.—In re Harper, Case No. 6,085.

A fraud at common law or under a state law will bar a discharge if committed so recently that it would affect any of the creditors who can come in under the bankruptcy.—In re Jones, Case No. 7,446.

A mere preference given without contemplation of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and more than six months before the filing of the petition, is no ground for withholding a discharge (Act 1867).—In re Jones, Case No. 7,446.

A discharge will be refused on specification of objections showing a transfer made in contemplation of bankruptcy more than 16 months before petition filed (Rev. St. 5128).—In re Hannahs, Case No. 6,032.

A conveyance constituting a preference made 14 months before the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings will not prevent a discharge, as it cannot be said to have been made in contemplation of becoming bankrupt.—In re Wolfskill, Case No. 17,930.

See, also, ante, § 67.

§ 601. —— Surrender of preference.

A preference cannot be set up in bar of the discharge where the creditor abandons his security, and is admitted to prove the debt (Act 1867, § 23).—In re Connor, Case No. 3,118.

A bankrupt, claiming want of knowledge of his insolvency at time of conveying property to his wife, four months prior to voluntary proceedings, who does not repair his error, is not entitled to discharge.—In re Adams, Case No. 43.

§ 602. Losses by gaming.

Loss of property by gaming will bar a discharge, though it was acquired by gaming.—In re Marshall, Case No. 9,123.

§ 603. Admission of false debt.

Putting a fictitious debt upon the schedules of the bankrupt is admitting the same, within the meaning of Act 1841.—In re Delavan, Case No. 3,758.

Under Act 1867, § 29, the including by the bankrupt of a false or fictitious debt in his schedule will prevent a discharge, though the debt is not proved.—In re Orcutt, Case No. 10,550.

In order to bar a discharge because of a false affidavit of indebtedness, it must appear that the bankrupt knew that the claim was false.— In re Blumenthal, Case No. 1,575.

§ 604. Failure to keep books of account —In general.

Under Act 1867, § 29 (Rev. St. § 5,110), providing that a merchant or tradesman who has not, subsequently to the passage of the act, kept proper books of account, shall not be entitled to a discharge, a merchant who has failed to keep proper books of account is not entitled to a discharge in bankruptcy, although the fault is wholly with his bookkeeper. The law puts upon the merchant the duty of seeing that the books are properly kept.—In re Hammond, Case No. 5,999.

A failure to keep proper books of account is no ground for denying discharge where the bankrupt carried on a cash business, and had no debts, assets, or capital outstanding.—In re Keach, Case No. 7,629.

A discharge will not be granted where the bankrupt, being a merchant or trader, has failed, since the passage of the act of 1867, to keep proper books of account.—In re Bound, Case No. 1,697.

Failure to keep an account of cash business and of dealings with creditors for more than a year prior to bankruptcy will prevent a discharge under Act 1867.—In re Archenbrown, Case No. 505.

The failure to keep proper books of account in a business which has been entirely closed out, there being no debts or assets arising out of such business, will not prevent a discharge. —In re Friedberg, Case No. 5,116.

Where a bankrupt has sold out his entire interest in a business before his bankruptcy, in which he kept no books of account, he cannot clear himself of the objection to his discharge that he did not keep such books, unless he shows that everything in relation to the business has been so fully ended that no account therein can in any way affect the interest of his creditors at the time of his bankruptcy.— Tyler v. Angevine, Case No. 14,306.

A discharge will not be prevented by the failure of the bankrupt to keep proper books of account prior to the passage of Act 1867.—In re Friedberg, Case No. 5,116.

Failure to keep proper books of account will prevent a discharge without any reference to intent or harmless result.—In re Archenbrown, Case No. 505; In re Solomon, Id. 13,167.

The failure to keep proper books of account will prevent the discharge of both partners, though the fault may be wholly that of one of them.—In re George, Case No. 5,325.

The want of proper firm books of account will bar a discharge to a partner in a firm of tradesmen.—In re Colcord, Case No. 2,970a.

§ 605. —— Who are merchants or tradesmen.

The mere purchase and sale of articles will not make a person a tradesman (Act 1867, § 29)

where the articles were not bought for the purpose of selling again.—In re Rogers, Case No. 12,001.

A person engaged in soliciting freight, who also occasionally buys and sells grain for gain, is a merchant and trader within the act.—In re O'Bannon, Case No. 10,394.

One engaged for a year prior to bankruptcy in buying and selling furniture on his own account, and having a shop where his goods are displayed, is a merchant or tradesman within the act.—In re Newman, Case No. 10,175.

A baker who buys flour, which he makes into bread and sells to daily customers, is a tradesman within the act.—In re Cocks, Case No. 2,933.

A stairbuilder who made stairs on order from his own material held a tradesman or merchant within the act.—In re Garrison, Case No. 5,254.

"Tradesmen," as used in Act 1867, § 29, does not mean "trader," as used in the large sense of the old bankrupt law, and a farmer, who occasionally buys and sells horses, cattle, and hay, is not bound to keep books as a tradesman, within such section.—In re Cote, Case No. 3,267; In re Ragsdale, Id. 11,530; In re Ruggsdale, Id. 12,123.

A speculator in stocks who is not a member of an exchange, and buys and sells stocks exclusively through brokers, is not a merchant or tradesman, within the act.—In re Marston, Case No. 9,142; In re Woodward, Id. 18,001; In re Moss, Id. 9,877.

A person who buys and sells apples, partly on his own account and partly on joint account with another, is a tradesman within the act.—In re Tyler, Case No. 14,305.

A saloon keeper, who sells cigars and liquors at retail for cash and on credit, bought in quantities partly on credit, is a merchant or tradesman, within the act.—In re Sherwood, Case No. 12,773.

A person who keeps in his stable horses belonging to other persons, and feeds such horses with food which he buys, and receives pay for the food which such horses consume in the amount paid for keeping the horses on livery, is a merchant or tradesman.—In re Odell, Case No. 10,426.

The fact that a firm carrying on business and borrowing money in connection with a farm is a large stockholder in a manufacturing corporation does not make its members merchants or tradesmen—In re Stickney, Case No. 13,439.

A bank cashier who buys paintings from time to time, and sells them at auction, is not a merchant.—In re Chapman, Case No. 2,601.

A tinsmith, who also keeps a small stock of hardware, is a trader.—In re Sawyer, Case No. 12,394.

§ 606. —— What are proper books of account.

The law only requires that the books of account shall be an intelligent record of the merchant's or trader's affairs, kept with that reasonable degree of accuracy and care which is to be expected from an intelligent man in the business. Casual mistakes will not prevent a discharge.—In re Winsor, Case No. 17,885.

The test as to whether books are proper books of account is whether a competent accountant could, from the books themselves, ascertain the debtor's financial condition.—In re Gay, Case No. 5,279; In re Bellis, Id. 1,275; In re Schumpert, Id. 12,491; In re Bartenback, Id. 1,068.

Proper books of account for a tradesman are such as disclose the real condition of his affairs, and need not be in any particular form.—In re Gay, Case No. 5,279.

A discharge cannot be granted to the members of a firm where their entries of receipts and disbursements in the cash books are unintelligible.—In re Mackay, Cases Nos. 8,837, 8,838.

Memorandum books from which the tradesman cannot tell the amount of his business or the particulars and consideration of his principal debts are not proper books of account.—In re Newman, Case No. 10,175.

An omission to write up books for a reasonable time while they are wanted in court, the accounts being kept on slips of paper ready to be inserted in their proper places, is not a failure to keep the books.—In re Hammond, Case No. 5,999.

A discharge will be refused for failure to keep proper books of account, where a large part of the cash account is kept on slips of paper, and not recorded on the account book.—In re Perry, Case No. 10,999.

Books showing only aggregate monthly purchases and sales are not "proper books of account."—In re Anketell, Case No. 394.

The pass book of another containing accounts with the bankrupt, entered daily by the owner's bookkeeper, but kept in possession of the bankrupt, is a proper book of account of the bankrupt.—In re Blumenthal, Case No. 1,576.

Where the books of a firm doing an extensive business do not show the state of accounts between the members, they are not entitled to a discharge.—In re Jorey, Case No. 7,530.

A bankrupt who is a tradesman is not entitled to a discharge under the bankrupt act if he has not kept an invoice or stock book.—In re White, Case No. 17,532.

An invoice book by a retail grocer is not necessary where he has so kept his invoice bills that a complete account of all goods received by him can be made out from them.—In re Reed, Case No. 11,639.

A discharge will be refused where the bankrupt has failed for 10 months to keep a cash book, resulting in inability to determine his financial condition when he suspended business.—In re Bellis, Case No. 1,275.

A discharge will be refused for the failure to keep a cash book, subsequently to the passage of Act 1867, notwithstanding the other books were kept by a skillful clerk.—In re Littlefield, Case No. 8,398.

The absence of a cash book is no ground of refusing a discharge where the cash receipts and payments may be shown from other books.—In re Hannahs, Case No. 6,032.

The absence of a cash book by partners engaged in lumber dealing will not bar a discharge, where each partner kept a bank account and an account book of receipts and expenditures.—In re Marsh, Case No. 9,109.

An entry of notes upon the fly leaf of the blotter is sufficient.—In re Winsor, Case No. 17,885.

A memorandum book with entries only of men's time, kept by a stair builder, who made stairs to order, being paid therefor a gross sum, where he furnished the materials and labor, is insufficient.—In re Garrison, Case No. 5,254.

What are proper books of account to be kept by merchants or tradesmen is a question of evidence in each case.—In re Newman, Case No. 10,175.

§ 607. —— What transactions to be entered.

A chattel mortgage given to secure a debt need not be entered upon the account books.—In re Winsor, Case No. 17,885.

Failure of the bankrupts to enter on their books several transfers of property, made about the time their affairs became embarrassed, will, in the absence of a sufficient excuse, prevent a discharge.—In re Grieves, Case No. 5,809.

If a tradesman kept true accounts of his business, and his books show how much he has drawn out for personal expenses, it is immaterial if he kept no account of his personal expenses.—In re McCarthy, Case No. 8,680.

The contents of account books kept by a trader before he becomes such need not be carried into the books which he keeps as a trader.—In re Winsor, Case No. 17,885.

The bankrupt must keep an account of dealings with another under an agreement to carry on his business, the same as dealings with customers.—In re Blumenthal, Case No. 1,575.

On a sale of firm assets to a new firm formed by taking in a new partner, the transaction must be entered upon the books of the old firm.—In re Colcord, Case No. 2,970a.

§ 608. —— Effect of errors and omissions.

The accidental omission of entries in a trader's book is not conclusive of his not having kept proper books of account.—In re Burgess, Case No. 2,153.

Where notwithstanding errors and erasures in books of account a competent accountant could gain a correct idea of the business, the discharge will not be refused.—In re Antisdel, Case No. 490.

§ 609. —— Evidence.

The bankrupt need not affirmatively show that he has kept proper books of account, etc., under Act 1841. It is for the creditor, impugning his right to a discharge and certificate, to make out, by satisfactory proof, such a case as will bar the bankrupt's right to an allowance thereof.—In re Banks, Case No. 958; In re Batchelder, Id. 1,098.

Where the creditor opposing the discharge has introduced in evidence the stump of a check in a check book, the detached check is admissible in evidence on behalf of the bankrupt, on the question as to whether the bankrupt has kept proper books of account.—In re Brockway, Case No. 1,917.

§ 610. Influencing acts of creditors.

Payment by the bankrupt of creditors' counsel fees does not show procurement of their assent by a pecuniary obligation, where such payment was not made a condition of their withdrawing further opposition, and they have previously announced that they would not oppose discharge.—In re Mawson, Case No. 9,319.

Where the assent of a creditor is procured by a pecuniary consideration moving from a third person with no conceivable motive but to benefit the debtor, there is a strong presumption that the payment was made in behalf of the bankrupt.—In re Whitney, Case No. 17,580.

A discharge will be refused where the consent of one creditor was purchased by the bankrupt, though after the required number had consented to the discharge.—In re Palmer, Case No. 10,678.

It is no objection to the discharge that the bankrupt paid the expenses of making proofs of claims against his estate.—In re Svenson, Case No. 13,659.

It is no objection to a discharge that the bankrupt requested his creditors to file the petition in bankruptcy, he having committed an act of bankruptcy.—In re Ordway, Case No. 10,552.

§ 611. Misdemeanors.

Any act of misdemeanor under Act 1867, § 44, may be set up in opposition to the discharge, though the bankrupt has never been tried criminally therefor.—In re George, Case No. 5,325.

§ 612. Debts contracted through fraud.

The fact that a debt was contracted by the bankrupt through fraud is no ground for refusing a discharge, as such debts are not affected by a discharge.—In re Bashford, Case No. 1,090; In re Clarke, Id. 2,844; In re Doody, Id. 3,995; In re Rathbone, Id. 11,580; In re Rosenfield, Id. 12,058; In re Stokes, Id. 13,476; In re Tallman, Id. 13,739; In re Wright, Id. 18,070.

See, also, post, § 627.

§ 613. Debts created in fiduciary capacity.

The existence of fiduciary debts, contracted by the bankrupt before the passage of the act of 1841, will not prevent his discharge under such act, as to all other debts not of a fiduciary character.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,979; In re Lord, Id. 8,501; In re Tebbetts, Id. 13,817; In re Young, Id. 18,147.

Misapplication of fiduciary funds after the passage of the act of 1841 deprives the bankrupt of all right to a discharge from any debts whatever.—In re Parker, Case No. 10,723; In re Tebbetts, Id. 13,817.

Debts due to persons arising out of the fact that the bankrupt, while register of the land office, converted to his own use money deposited with him by private parties for the purchase of public lands, are not discharged.—Ex parte Wright, Case No. 18,064.

Where the person to whom a debt of a fiduciary character is due from the bankrupt does not object to the discharge on that ground, other creditors cannot object under Act 1841.—In re Parker, Case No. 10,723.

It is no ground of opposition to a discharge, under Act 1867, that a debt was created by the bankrupt while acting in a fiduciary capacity, as such debts are not affected by the discharge.—In re Elliott, Case No. 4,391; In re Tracy, Id. 14,124.

See, also, post, § 626.

§ 614. Failure to submit to examination.

The penalty for disobedience of the wife to attend and be examined is visited upon the bankrupt by refusing him a discharge.—In re Van Tuyl, Case No. 16,881.

Where an order for the examination of the bankrupt's wife is served upon him, but not upon the wife, and she fails to attend, in order to obtain his discharge he must prove to the satisfaction of the court that he was unable to procure her attendance.—In re Van Tuyl, Case No. 16,879.

The fact that an answer would reveal the private business of the witness unnecessarily, and prejudice him in another suit pending, is not sufficient reason for his refusing to testify before the register to the actual consideration paid for his claim.—In re Trask, Case No. 14,141.

A departure of the bankrupt from the district before submitting to examination under an order will prevent a discharge until rectified by submission to examination.—In re Kingsley, Case No. 7,820.

§ 615. Acts done in composition proceedings.

No act done in composition proceedings, though of the description of the offense mentioned in Rev. St. § 5110, cl. 8, can be set up as a ground for preventing the bankrupt's discharge.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,824.

(H) OPERATION AND EFFECT OF DISCHARGE.

§ 616. In general.

The involuntary proceedings, under Act 1841, are not ex parte, and a decree and certificate of discharge, under Act 1841, are conclusive, unless fraud in obtaining them is averred.—Lathrop v. Stuart, Case No. 8,113.

Proceedings which affect only the assets in bankruptcy are of the nature of proceedings in rem, and bind all the world; otherwise where they affect property not embraced in the assets. —In re Judkins, Case No. 7,560.

§ 617. On pending contract.

Counsel employed by the bankrupt, prior to the proceeding, to carry on a suit at their own expense for a contingent fee of one-half their recovery, are entitled to such one-half, though they recover after the bankrupt's discharge.—Maybin v. Raymond, Case No. 9,338.

§ 618. As to third persons.

The liability of a person chargeable with the bankrupt for a debt as partner, joint contractor, indorser, surety, or otherwise, is not affected by any steps taken by the creditor in the bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Levy, Case No. 8,297.

§ 619. On rights in equity.

A plea of discharge in bankruptcy is not sustainable against a claim in equity to rescind a contract of sale on the ground of fraud.—Smith v. Babcock, Case No. 13,009.

§ 620. Jurisdiction over bankrupt.

The summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court over the person of the bankrupt ceases on the granting of the discharge.—In re Dole, Case No. 3,964.

§ 621. After-discovered assets.

A discharge does not bar the assignee's right to recover property afterwards discovered.—Maybin v. Raymond, Case No. 9,338.

§ 622. Liens on bankrupt's property.

A discharge obtained before judgment rendered in a suit in which property was attached before the bankruptcy proceedings were instituted may be pleaded as a bar to such suit.—Ex parte Foster, Case No. 4,960.

The lien upon a debtor's property and rights of action, created by an execution returned unsatisfied, and the commencement of a suit by judgment creditors' bill, is not devested by a subsequent discharge in bankruptcy.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

Liens of creditors cannot be enforced in a court of bankruptcy after the bankrupt has obtained his discharge (Act 1867).—In re Dean, Case No. 3,701.

The lien of a debt is not released by the discharge, and it may be enforced by a state court when the property does not form part of the assets in bankruptcy, and where such property does not form a part of the assets the bankruptcy court may enforce the lien when the property subsequently comes into possession of the bankrupt.—Dixon v. Barnum, Case No. 3,928.

§ 623. New promise.

A discharge under the terms of a composition agreement is a discharge by operation of law, and an indebtedness thus discharged is a sufficient consideration to support a new promise to pay.—In re Merriman, Case No. 9,479.

§ 624. Extraterritorial effect.

A debt contracted in one country cannot be discharged by the bankrupt laws of another country.—Green v. Sarmiento, Case No. 5,760.

The discharge will bar actions brought against the bankrupt by foreign creditors, though it might not be recognized as a bar against foreign creditors in courts of their own country.—Zarega's Case, Case No. 18,204.

§ 625. Debts discharged — Time when contracted.

A discharge granted on consent in writing by the majority in number and value of creditors whose debts were contracted after January 1, 1869, operates as to debts contracted both before and after that date.—In re Hershman, Case No. 6,430.

§ 626. —— Debts created in fiduciary character.

Under Act 1841, a fiduciary creditor is not affected by the discharge, whatever may be its terms, where he did not elect to come in and prove his debt.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,979: In re Tebbetts, Id. 13,817.

The debt of an auctioneer held to be one of a fiduciary character. (Act 1841).—In re Lord, Case No. 8,501.

Fiduciary debts are provable equally with other debts, and, if the creditor elect to prove such debts, they will be barred by a discharge. (Act 1841).—In re Tebbetts, Case No. 13,817.

Money collected by an agent under an agreement to account and pay over the proceeds monthly to his principal is not a debt created in a "fiduciary character."—Grover & Baker Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Clinton, Case No 5,845.

The default of a factor in not making payment to his principal is not a fraud, nor is the debt one created "while acting in any fiduciary character," within the meaning of Act 1867, § 33, excepting such debts from the operation of the discharge.—Owsley v. Cobin, Case No. 10,636; Keime v. Graff, Id. 7,650. CONTRA, see In re Seymour, Case No. 12,684.

Only technical or special trusts, as contradistinguished from those which the law implies from the contract, are within the meaning of Act 1867, § 33.—Keime v. Graff, Case No. 7,650.

The liability of a guardian to his ward is not affected by his discharge.—In re Maybin, Case No. 9,337.

A discharge under Act 1841 will release the bankrupt's liability as surety on a postmaster's bond, though the postmaster was a defaulter.—United States v. Davis, Case No. 14,929.

The obligation of a surety upon a guardian's bond is not a fiduciary obligation, within Rev. St. § 5117, and is released by the discharge of the surety in bankruptcy.—Ex parte Taylor, Case No. 13,773.

A discharge will release the liability of the bankrupt as surety on the bond of a deceased collector of internal revenue. (Act 1867, § 34.) —United States v. Throckmorton, Case No. 16,516.

See, also, ante, § 613.

§ 627. —— Debts created by fraud.

Where a person purchases goods with an intent not to pay for them either in whole or in part, he "creates a debt by fraud," within Act 1867, providing that as to debts so created a bankrupt shall not be entitled to a discharge.—In re Alsberg, Case No. 261.

Where the United States has seized and filed a libel against a steamboat and cargo, as liable to forfeiture for violation of the rules of war, and the claimant gives bond for the property and makes an unsuccessful defense against the libel, but sets up his discharge in bankruptcy as a defense to a judgment against him on such bond, the debt evidenced by the bond is not created by fraud, within the meaning of Act 1867, § 33, even though the claimant used the evidence of false witnesses and swore falsely himself in making the defense to the libel.—United States v. The Rob Roy, Case No. 16,179.

See, also, ante, § 612.

§ 628. —— Debts not proved.

A discharge under the act of 1841 frees the bankrupt from all debts provable under the act, whether actually proved or not.—Case of Johnson, Case No. 7,365a.

The debt of a creditor is barred by a discharge, under Act 1867, although his name was not placed on the schedule, it appearing that there was no fraud in the omission, and he received no notice of the proceeding in bankruptcy or of the petition for a discharge.—Lamb v. Brown, Case No. 8,011.

§ 629. —— Unliquidated demands.

The discharge of the defendant is not a bar to an action for injury to goods shipped, caused by his negligence, where the damages are not liquidated.—Dusar v. Murgatroyd, Case No. 4,199.

§ 630. —— Alimony.

A discharge in bankruptcy does not release a husband from the obligation to pay installments of alimony accruing after the petition was filed.—In re Garrett, Case No. 5,252.

§ 631. —— Debts due to United States.

Debts due the United States are not barred by a certificate of discharge. (Act 1800.)—United States v. King, Case No. 15,536.

A discharge under the act of 1841 bars a debt due to the government on account of customs duties.—United States v. Zerega, Case No. 16,786.

A discharge under Act 1867 does not discharge debts due the United States.—United States v. The Rob Roy, Case No. 16,179.

§ 632. —— Judgments.

A judgment obtained in an action of tort is a debt dischargeable under Acts 1841 and 1867.—In re Book, Case No. 1,637; In re Wiggers, Id. 17,623.

A judgment obtained on breach of promise to marry is a provable debt, and is barred by discharge.—In re Sidle, Case No. 12,844.

The discharge will release a judgment under which the body of the debtor was taken in execution, and a bond for jail liberties given, before the bankruptcy proceedings were commenced.—Long v. Dickerson, Case No. 8,480.

A discharge entitles the bankrupt to release from imprisonment under a judgment in trespass for malicious imprisonment and whipping.—In re Simpson, Case No. 12,879.

Where the record shows that an original demand or cause of action sprang from fraud, the judgment does not merge the fraud, and is not released by a discharge.—In re Pettis, Case No. 11,046; Warner v. Cronkhite, Id. 17,180.

A stipulation between the parties after judgment, by which plaintiff waived his right to execution against the body of defendant, does not affect the question of discharge.—Warner v. Cronkhite, Case No. 17,180.

§ 633. —— In partnership cases.

The discharge of a member of a firm, upon his individual petition, and without any proceedings by or against the firm, does not discharge such member from the partnership debts.—In re Little, Case No. 8,390; In re Noonan, Id. 10,292; Hudgins v. Lane, Id. 6,827; In re Plumb, Id. 11,231. CONTRA, see Wilkins v. Davis, Case No. 17,664.

A discharge on proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy against one partner alone will relieve him from payment of a firm debt only if there was no copartnership property at the time it was granted.—In re Abbe, Case No. 4; Crompton v. Conkling, Id. 3,407.

A discharge granted to one member of a partnership, after he alone had been adjudged bankrupt, is not a bar to an action against him and his copartner by a partnership creditor, where the creditor shows affirmatively that, at the time of the filing of the petition, there were partnership assets and partnership debts.—Crompton v. Conkling, Case No. 3,408.

Where two of three brothers, who are partners in business, and reside in the Southern district of New York, are also partners in business in the Northern district, an assignee on petition filed against the three in the Southern district takes the interest of the partners in business in the Northern district, and a discharge in such proceeding operates as to the entire indebtedness of both firms and discharges the members.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,228.

§ 634. Necessity of pleading discharge.

A discharge in bankruptcy must be pleaded both at law and in equity. The court is not bound to notice the defense of bankruptcy on motion founded upon an affidavit.—Fellows v. Hall, Case No. 4,722.

A discharged bankrupt, who allows a bill in equity against him to proceed until an opinion is obtained on the merits, without setting up his discharge in defense, cannot avail himself of such discharge.—Doggett v. Emerson, Case No. 3,962.

A discharge must be pleaded and it cannot be set up after judgment as a reason why the judgment should not be enforced.—Goodrich v. Hunton, Case No. 5,544.

The bankruptcy court cannot relieve a debtor who, being sued in another court on a debt arising before the adjudication, fails to plead his discharge, and judgment goes against him.—In re Ferguson, Case No. 4,738.

§ 635. Pleading discharge.

Although an attachment of property under mesne process bona fide made before a petition filed in bankruptcy may be a lien or security upon the property, within Act 1841, c. 9, § 2, preserving such liens, it will not entitle the creditor to proceed to judgment in the suit, if the debtor has, pending the suit, lawfully and bona fide obtained his discharge in bankruptcy, and the certificate thereof is pleaded as a bar to further proceedings in the suit.—In re Bellows, Case No. 1,278.

A plea of bankruptcy which sets out the certificate and discharge as required by Act 1841, § 4, is good.—White v. How, Case No. 17,549.

Where an attachment of property under mesne process is bona fide made before a petition is filed in bankruptcy, and a discharge subsequently obtained is pleaded in bar to further proceedings in the suit, it is not necessary for the district court to order the attaching officer to deliver the property to the assignee until the final decision in such suit, and where an order is so made it will be modified on appeal.—In re Bellows, Case No. 1,278.

Where, during the pendency of a suit, one of the parties is released under the bankrupt law, and the decree of bankruptcy is pleaded in abatement, plaintiff may show the invalidity of such decree.—Fellows v. Hall, Case No. 4,723.

A replication to a plea of discharge in bankruptcy is defective where it does not state that the debt sued for had been placed on the schedule.—Hood v. Spencer, Case No. 6,665.

Where a party sets up his discharge in an action brought against him, a general plea of fraud by the plaintiff is not sufficient to admit evidence of the same, where it appears that the bankrupt had been engaged in an extensive commercial business. He has a right to notice of the specific acts charged.—Lathrop v. Stewart, Case No. 8,112.

A plea setting up a judgment of discharge by a bankruptcy court having plenary jurisdiction is sufficient without averring the proceedings prior to discharge.—Lathrop v. Stuart, Case No. 8,113.

(I) VACATING AND SETTING ASIDE DISCHARGE.

§ 636. Who may make application.

Where a creditor, who neglected to file objections in due time, subsequently discovered fraud, he may require the bankrupt to take his discharge and then apply to annul it.—In re Fowler, Case No. 4,999.

The knowledge of fraud which will bar a right to annul the discharge must have been such as to have been available before the return day of the order to show cause why the discharge should not be granted.—In re Fowler, Case No. 4,999.

§ 637. Time.

The court has power to recall a final decree granting a discharge upon application at the term at which it was passed.—In re Dupee, Case No. 4,183.

A motion to vacate a discharge as inadvertently granted will be denied after the time has expired for a review by the circuit court, and the bankrupt has procured loans on the faith thereof.—In re Buchstein, Case No. 2,076.

A suit to set aside a discharge on the ground that it was fraudulently obtained must be brought within two years from the date of the discharge, and not two years from the discovery of the fraud. Act 1867, § 34; Rev. St. § 5120. —Pickett v. McGavick, Case No. 11,126; In re Brown, Id. 1,983.

§ 638. Grounds.

Where the clerk enters a decree in bankruptcy granting a final discharge, when the only decree authorized is the one declaring the objections by the creditors to be badly pleaded, such unauthorized decree should be set aside.—In re Amory and Leeds, Case No. 336a.

A final decree granting a discharge will be recalled upon application made during the term at which the decree was made, where it appears that the opposing counsel were prevented from attending the hearing by a sudden and overpowering accident, and it appears upon affidavit that the opposing creditors were prepared with evidence to substantiate the charges of fraud alleged by them.—In re Dupee, Case No. 4,183.

Any act which, if duly proved, would have prevented a discharge, will be ground for setting it aside, under Act 1867, § 34.—Ex parte Briggs, Case No. 1,868.

A discharge will be set aside, for concealment and false swearing, where deeds from the bankrupt to his wife, through a third person, made without consideration, were asserted to have been burned, and credit was procured on the faith of his ownership of the property, where such deeds were subsequently placed on record, and the property omitted from his schedules.—In re Rainsford, Case No. 11,537.

Discharge set aside within two years on petition of creditors alleging fraud in the bankrupt's omission of their names from his schedule, where they had no knowledge thereof until after the discharge was granted.—In re Herrick, Case No. 6,419.

§ 639. Hearing and determination.

A discharge will not be set aside for alleged fraudulent acts, where the only evidence offered is incompetent and inadmissible.—Marionneaux's Case, Case No. 9,088.

Upon a motion to set aside a discharge the bankrupt's wife cannot be required to testify as a witness against him.—Tenny v. Collins, Case No. 13,833.

Creditors moving to set aside a discharge cannot prove at the trial acts of the bankrupt not set forth in the specifications.—Tenny v. Collins, Case No. 13,833.

VI. COSTS AND FEES.

§ 640. Power to fix and award.

The power of the United States supreme court to fix officers' fees, etc., in cases of bankruptcy, is plenary, with the limitation that they shall not exceed the statutory rate for similar services in other proceedings. (Rev. St. §§ 4990, 5126, 5127.)—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,421.

The fee bill of 1853 does not interfere with the practice of courts of equity or bankruptcy to allow counsel fees as costs in certain cases.—Ex parte Jaffray, Case No. 7,170.

A claim by petitioning creditors in involuntary bankruptcy for counsel fees incurred by them in the proceedings before adjudication cannot be entertained by the register in the first instance, but must be presented to the court by petition. —In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,886.

A general order referring a case to the register is sufficient to authorize him to take testimony in respect to the compensation of the petitioning creditor.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,940.

The register has no authority to allow extra compensation to the assignee, even after a vote by a creditors' meeting, but the assignee must apply to the court for an extra allowance previous to the final meeting.—In re Merchants' Ins. Co., Case No. 9,442.

The register and messenger cannot resort to the fee bill of 1853 for services rendered by them, respectively, which are not directly provided for by Act 1867 and general orders.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

§ 641. Persons entitled—Prevailing party in general.

Costs are not awarded prevailing party unless the objections were frivolous or vexatious, or, on the other hand, the bankrupt is shown to have the means of paying costs.—In re George, Case No. 5,326.

Where an assignee sells at public sale mortgaged property, and the mortgagee has actual notice of the sale, but by mistake fails to attend, and upon his offering a higher bid a resale is ordered upon the condition that he deposit an amount in court to abide by an order of the court as to the amount which he must pay to the assignee and purchaser, upon a resale such purchaser is entitled for service of counsel in opposing the resale, but the assignee is not so entitled, it appearing plainly that a resale was for the interest of the estate.—In re Collins, Case No. 3,005.

Costs may be awarded the prevailing party in a proceeding to annul a discharge, brought under Rev. St. § 5120.—In re Holgate, Case No. 6,601.

§ 642. —— Petitioning creditors.

A creditor who successfully prosecutes proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy may be allowed his costs and reasonable expenses, including reasonable counsel fees, out of the estate.—In re O'Hara, Case No. 10,465; In re Williams, Id. 17,704; In re King, Id. 7,780; In re Mitteldorfer, Id. 9,675; In re Jaffray, Id. 7,170; In re New York Mail S. S. Co., Id. 10,208; In re Mead, Id. 9,364.

But such creditor has no right to contribution from the other creditors, where the assets are insufficient to pay the costs and expenses in full.—In re O'Hara, Case No. 10,465.

Such creditor is not entitled to compensation for his personal services.—In re Mead, Case No. 9,364.

Such creditor is not entitled to a preference out of the fund for expenses in attending court. —In re King, Case No. 7,780.

Where the adjudication has been resisted, costs may be recovered by the petitioning creditor which are allowed to a party recovering in a suit in equity (Act Feb. 26, 1853), but a special allowance for counsel fees cannot be made. —In re Sheehan, Case No. 12,738.

The amount allowed to the petitioning creditor as counsel fee in procuring the adjudication will be limited to the amount paid for the services rendered by him in the proceedings for the common benefit of all the creditors.—In re Mead, Case No. 9,364.

An allowance of $1,000 to counsel for petitioning creditors, who have obtained the adjudication and performed other services incident to the bankruptcy proceedings, where the assets of the bankrupt amount to $15,000, and such counsel have not in any way recovered property fraudulently conveyed, is excessive.—In re Sanger, Case No. 12,318.

An allowance of $50 to petitioning creditor for counsel fees in an uncontested case held proper and reasonable.—In re Jones, Case No. 7,451.

Petitioning creditors are not allowed retainers paid their attorneys or for services rendered after the adjudication.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,075.

A mortgage of $4,000, given on an advancement of $1,000, is prima facie evidence of fraud, and ground of proceeding in bankruptcy justifying an allowance of petitioner's costs and expenses.—In re Dumont, Case No. 4,127.

§ 643. —— Other creditors.

The expenses of creditors in attending the first meeting of creditors will not be allowed out of the estate.—In re Ward, Case No. 17,145.

Costs not allowed to a claimant where expense and delay in proof of claim was caused by his failure to make full disclosure of the transactions on which it was founded.—In re De Metz, Case No. 3,781.

The costs of a claimant upon a reference to have a claim declared and enforced are to be paid out of the balance remaining after payment of all the expenses of administration.—In re Hoagland, Case No. 6,545.

Where services of counsel are rendered for the benefit of a special fund of a class of creditors, and in opposition to the interests of the general creditors, a counsel fee will not be allowed out of the general fund in excess of the statutory allowance of $20.—In re Hope Min. Co., Case No. 6,682.

§ 644. —— Debtor.

Petitioners, for the benefit of Act 1841, are bound to discharge all expenses incident to the prosecution of their application. No petitioner is enabled by such act to conduct the proceedings forma pauperis.—In re Greaves, Case No. 5,744.

Where a voluntary petition is dismissed, the debtor is entitled to receive by law the attorney's fees on a hearing in equity,—$20. No fee can be taxed for petitioner's attorney.—Dundore v. Coates, Case No. 4,142.

Costs will not be allowed to the bankrupt where a discharge is granted after opposition, where it appears that there was good probable cause of objection.—In re Rowell, Case No. 12,095.

Where a creditor opposes a bankrupt's discharge, a case is created for trial in the court docket in which the creditor is plaintiff and the bankrupt is defendant, and the counsel fee of the bankrupt is a proper charge in taxing costs against the creditor.—In re Eidom, Case No. 4,315.

An involuntary bankrupt, equally with a voluntary bankrupt, is entitled to his disbursements in proceedings to obtain a discharge. (Act 1867, § 47.)—In re Dibblee, Case No. 3,887.

The bankruptcy court may allow a debtor the expenses including attorney's fees of his unsuccessful defense of the petition to be paid from the assets in the hands of the assignee.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,074.

Claim of bankrupt for extraordinary services cannot be allowed by the court, but may be allowed by creditors.—In re Barnes, Case No. 1,013.

§ 645. —— Assignee.

The assignee will be allowed costs in a suit to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, where the case was clear, and the creditor contested it to the end.—Warren v. Delaware, L. & W. Ry. Co., Case No. 17,194.

Where the assignee continues the defense of a suit, the estate is liable to expense thereof, if the creditors impliedly consented.—In re Babcock, Case No. 697.

§ 646. Persons, property, or funds liable —Claimants.

A claimant of a nonprovable debt will be required to pay the costs of proceedings to reject the same.—In re Paddock, Case No. 10,657.

Where a petition to establish a right to payment in full has assumed the form of a regular suit, costs and a docket fee will be taxed.—In re Bank of Madison, Case No. 890.

§ 647. —— Contesting creditors.

The creditor at whose instance the assignee contests the claim of another creditor is liable to the latter for costs, where the claim is allowed.—In re Troy Woolen Co., Case No. 14,203.

Costs of resisting opposition to a discharge will be decreed against the creditor where he filed 20 specifications, none of which were sustained.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,943.

§ 648. —— Assignee.

The dismissal of a bill by the assignee to set aside preferences as fraudulent, where the construction of the statute was doubtful, should be without costs.—Collins v. Gray, Case No. 3,013.

The assignee is chargeable personally with costs where he petitions to have an attachment dissolved, which covers property already set apart by him as exempt, for he is not a proper party to the petition, as he has no interest in the property which he has set apart as exempt.—In re Preston, Case No. 11,394.

An assignee, who fails to apply to enjoin mortgage foreclosure proceedings to which he was made a party until time of sale, will be chargeable personally with costs on dismissal of his petition for leave to sell.—In re Brinkman, Case No. 1,883.

Where the question presented to the court is one on which it is proper to ask its opinion, and the assignee in filing his bill acts under the advice of counsel, upon the assignee's failure to sustain such bill no costs will be allowed to the defendant.—Goodrich v. Remington, Case No. 5,546.

§ 649. —— In partnership cases.

Costs will be apportioned between the separate and joint estates where both come to the assignee's hands on adjudication against a member of a firm.—In re Ingalls, Case No. 7,032.

Where there are both firm and individual assets, each estate must pay its proportion of the entire expenses of administering the whole.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,987.

§ 650. —— Secured creditors and incumbered property.

A mortgagee in possession is not chargeable with any part of the costs in bankruptcy, or with the expenses of the sale of any of the property other than that on which his mortgage was a valid lien.—In re Eldridge, Case No. 4,330.

Where the assignee declined the mortgagee's offer to take the property for the debt, and on a sale the mortgagee bought it in for less than the debt, the mortgagee must pay the costs and expenses of such sale.—In re Ellerhorst, Case No. 4,380.

Where a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance is for the benefit of the secured creditors mainly, they should defray the expenses thereof.—Freelander v. Holloman, Case No. 5,081.

Where the estate of a bankrupt which is all incumbered is sold at the suggestion of his general creditors, and produces only enough to satisfy the liens, the proceeds are not chargeable with any costs in the bankruptcy proceeding except the costs of sale.—In re Blue Ridge R. Co., Case No. 1,570.

§ 651. —— Estate of bankrupt.

The expenses of a reference to contest a claim of a creditor before the appointment of an assignee, where the bankrupt is unable to pay any part of them, may be paid out of the estate.—In re Richardson, Case No. 11,775.

The costs, upon the petition for a discharge of involuntary bankrupts, the hearing, publication of notice, etc., must be paid out of the funds in the assignee's hands.—In re Olds, Case No. 10,484.

A fee for a letter or power of attorney by a creditor is not a charge on the fund.—In re Houghton, Case No. 6,729.

Where the fund is not more than sufficient for the privileged creditors, the assignee cannot spend any money in litigation for the benefit of the general creditors.—In re Sawyer, Case No. 12,396.

The register's fee for taking and certifying a deposition in proof of debt is $1, and is a charge on the fund.—In re Houghton, Case No. 6,729.

The fees of the register incident to a second general meeting called by a trustee appointed under Act 1867, § 43, are not chargeable against the estate, as the trustee has no authority to call such meeting.—In re Hinsdale, Case No. 6,525.

The necessary expenses and disbursements of the United States marshal and assignee must be taxed by the register and paid out of the estate.—In re Carow, Case No. 2,426.

§ 652. —— Costs of examinations.

On examination before a register, each party must pay for the direct examination of his own witnesses, and for such cross-examination as he may make of the witnesses of the adverse party.—Scofield v. Moorhead, Case No. 12,510.

A creditor applying for an order for the examination of the bankrupt must pay the register's fees for taking the bankrupt's depositions both on direct and cross examination.—In re Macintire, Case No. 8,821; In re MackIntire, Id. 8,867.

An assignee who examines the bankrupt under section 26 (Act 1867) must pay the register's fee, whether he has assets of the bankrupt or not.—In re Hughes, Case No. 6,841.

The bankrupt is liable for the costs of the register on an examination by contesting creditors on his proposal of a composition.—In re Griffin, Case No. 5,812.

On examination of the bankrupt, at the instance of a creditor, the bankrupt must pay the expense of taking down statements made in his own behalf, after the examination for the creditor is finished.—In re Mealy, Case No. 9,378.

The creditor must pay for such services performed by the register at his request as are in addition to those that the register would have been compelled to perform in the regular course of his duties.—In re Jackson, Case No. 7,128.

Charges for recording minutes of testimony of an examination of a bankrupt before a register, prior to the creditor's filing specifications in opposition to the discharge, are not properly taxed against the creditor, who was unsuccessful in opposing the discharge. The cost of the examination must be paid by the party upon whose application it was made.—In re Eidom, Case No. 4,315.

§ 653. Security or advances for costs.

Where a petitioner in bankruptcy has made advances as security for fees to the register, clerk, and marshal, he is not entitled to reimbursement therefor by the assignee out of the estate.—Anonymous, Case No. 457.

The assignee may be required to furnish security for costs when he is prosecuting an expensive litigation, and is without funds belonging to the estate.—Forman v. Campbell, Case No. 4,939.

The register may require that his lawful fees for conducting an inquiry instituted by a creditor should be paid or secured before entering thereon.—In re Tifft, Case No. 14,030.

If the examination is for the benefit of the creditors, under section 28, the expenses must be advanced or secured by the creditors.—In re Hughes, Case No. 6,841.

If the examination is one of the steps preliminary to the bankrupt's discharge, he must advance or secure the expenses.—In re Hughes, Case No. 6,841.

A petitioning creditor, who has advanced clerk's and marshal's fees, cannot have an order on the assignee for repayment; but the court may direct the assignee to pay the register's and marshal's fees out of the estate.—In re Smith, Case No. 12,972.

Rule 30 in bankruptcy provides that, where the debtor "makes proof to the satisfaction of the court" that he is unable to pay the costs prescribed by the act and rules, the judge may, in his discretion, direct that the costs shall be limited to the amount required to be deposited, and such an order will not be made upon the mere affidavit of the debtor that he is unable to pay the costs, as that is merely a statement of opinion, which may not be justified by the facts.—In re Anderson, Case No. 352.

An order limiting the fees and costs to the amount of the bankrupt's deposit should only be made after a personal examination of the bankrupt.—In re Redfield, Case No. 11,628.

Such order will not be made where it appears that the bankrupt has been depending for his subsistence on borrowed moneys, the indebtedness for which is not set out in the petition.—In re Redfield, Case No. 11,629.

Where a bankrupt is relieved by order of the court from further payment of fees, the $50 deposit will be distributed pro rata to the register, clerk, and marshal.—Costs and Fees, Case No. 18,282.

The sum, or such portion of it as may be necessary, may be appropriated to the register in the first place.—Costs and Fees, Case No. 18,282.

The sum of $50, deposited with the clerk, is not a fund in court for general distribution among creditors, but is to be disbursed under the supervision of the court.—Costs and Fees, Case No. 18,282.

A balance of the deposit of $50 remaining in the hands of a register at the close of a case in bankruptcy is a part of the assets, and should be paid to the assignee, and not to the bankrupt.—Anonymous, Case No. 457.

A balance of the bankrupt's deposits for fees paid over to the assignee after the bankrupt has obtained his discharge should be distributed among the creditors who have been returned by the bankrupt.—In re James, Case No. 7,175.

§ 654. Notaries' fees.

No fees are taxable as costs, and entitled to priority of payment, under section 28, Act 1867, to notaries for taking proofs of debt.—In re Nebe, Case No. 10,073.

§ 655. Clerks' fees.

For all necessary services performed by the clerk in bankruptcy proceedings, the fees which are not provided for by Act 1867 or general orders, but which are embraced in the fee bill of 1853, fees may be taxed under the latter.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

For searching for petitions in bankruptcy the clerk was allowed 15 cents for each name searched against, the compensation not being provided for in Rev. St. § 828.—In re Vermeule, Case No. 16,916.

The clerk is entitled to separate fees for a certificate of discharge and seal and the order of discharge.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

The clerk is entitled to 15 cents per folio for entering the certificate of the day and hour of filing on all papers filed in the proceeding.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

Warrant "form 45" is a process within general order No. 2 and the fee bill of 1853, and the clerk may charge accordingly for issuing the same.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

The clerk is entitled to 15 cents per folio for drawing the assignment, and 10 cents per folio for copying the same.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

A charge by a clerk of one dollar for "issuing order form 4" is not a proper charge, as such order is not a process, and only an order.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

A charge by a clerk for entering petition, schedules, and oaths as separate papers is proper, as for this purpose they are not regarded as one paper.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

The clerk of the bankruptcy court has no authority to make out or charge for a certified copy of the deed of assignment, unless such copy is demanded by the assignee.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

A charge "for clerk's certificate and seal to judge's signature to certificate or discharge" is proper, and should be paid by the bankrupt himself, and not out of the estate nor out of the amount deposited, under Act 1867, § 47.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

§ 656. Register's fees—In general.

A register, under general order No. 30 of the supreme court, is entitled to no fees except such as are provided by such order.—In re Carstens, Case No. 2,469.

A register is not bound to countersign a check unless the fee is first tendered to him.—In re Breck, Case No. 1,823.

§ 657. —— Per diem compensation.

A register is entitled, under general order No. 30, to charge five dollars a day, in all ordinary cases, for each day's service while actually employed under a special order of the court; but the court has power to fix the compensation at a smaller rate, if the circumstances of a particular case warrant it.—In re Hamberger, Case No. 5,971.

Where, under an order of the court, services are performed by the register not specially required by Act 1867 and general orders, and for which no compensation is provided, he will be allowed compensation therefor, under section 47 of said act, allowing him not exceeding five dollars for each day's service under special order of the court. But such order will not justify an increase of the fee for services at a creditors' meeting, fixed by section 47 of such act.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

Where an examination of a bankrupt is adjourned at the instance of the creditors, the register is not entitled to his per diem for that day.—In re Clarke, Case No. 2,842.

The register may, besides the charges for attendance, etc., specified in Act 1867, § 47, and in general order No. 30, make reasonable charges for his services in the business of the private sittings preceding the warrant, the business of the first public meeting of creditors, or its adjourned sittings, and the business of another public meeting after the application for a discharge.—In re Sherwood, Case No. 12,774.

A charge of five dollars by a register for "one day's services, under special order, form 4, examining papers," is improper, and will not be allowed.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

Where the register grants an order out of the ordinary course of proceedings, where he is required to render services not specifically enjoined on him by Act 1867 or the general orders, he is entitled, under section 47 of such act, to a fee of five dollars per diem.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

Where bankrupts surrender their property to a register, and thereafter, by order of the bankruptcy court, custodians are appointed, and are directed to sell certain goods at retail, paying over the proceeds to the register daily, which is done during 25 days, during which time $15,000 is received by the register, the latter is entitled to be paid five dollars per day, under Act 1867, § 47, and the percentage on the $15,000 allowed to assignees by section 28 of such act.—In re Loder, Case No. 8,455.

The register is entitled to five dollars per day for services under an order to show cause why the bankrupt should not be discharged, and for sitting in chambers on the return day of the order, and for certifying to the court whether the bankrupt has in all things conformed to his duty, under Act 1867, and has conformed to all the requirements of such act.—In re Bellamy, Case No. 1,267; In re Robinson, Id. 11,937.

A charge for an order to show cause in addition to such charge of five dollars per day will not be allowed.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,937.

§ 658. —— Meetings of creditors.

Under Act 1867, § 47, a charge by the register for the application for the first meeting of creditors will not be allowed.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,937.

Where it appears that there was but one application for both the second and third meeting of creditors, a charge for only one application will be allowed to the register. Act 1867, § 47.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699; In re Robinson, Id. 11,937.

A charge of three dollars per day allowed the register under Act 1867, § 47, is not an allowance for each meeting, but for each day in which any meeting is held, and where two meetings are held on the same day he is entitled to a charge of three dollars only.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,937.

The register is entitled to three dollars per day for attending second, third, and final meetings, under order 51.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

When it appears from the bankrupt's schedules that there is a certain amount of assets, sufficient to justify a creditors' meeting, and the application for such meeting is made more than a month before the assignee's report, a fee of three dollars should be allowed to the register for the meeting. Act 1867.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

§ 659. —— Certificates.

The register is entitled to 10 cents per folio for copying, and 15 cents for each certificate of one folio, for certified copies of schedules furnished the assignee.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,937.

The register is not entitled to a charge for examining the schedules and certifying that they are correct, as form No. 4 is not a special order, within the meaning of Act 1867, § 47. —In re Robinson, Case No. 11,937.

Under general order No. 30, a charge by the register for the certified copy of the adjudication, furnished to the bankrupt, will not be allowed; but, where the certificate consists of one folio or less, the proper charge is 15 cents, and not 25 cents, which was inadvertently stated as the amount to be allowed in such general order.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,937.

A separate charge for a certified list of creditors "for warrant" will not be allowed the register, as such charge is covered by the fee allowed for issuing the warrant.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,937.

A printed paper is to be taxed for as if it were written.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,937.

Notwithstanding the provision for the fee of the register in general order 30, he will be allowed only 15 cents per folio for the certificate to the order of adjudication furnished to the bankrupt, and for a certificate to a copy of memorandum forwarded to the clerk, according to the fee bill of 1853.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

Where no dividend has been ordered, the register is not entitled to a fee for furnishing a certified list of creditors, who have proved their debts, to the assignee, but a charge for furnishing such list to the clerk is proper, for without it the clerk cannot give notice to the proper creditors.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

A charge by a register for a copy of the schedules for the assignee will be allowed, as such schedules are papers within general order No. 30, and such copy is required to be furnished to the assignee under Act 1867, § 4.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

A register in bankruptcy is entitled to fees for certifying the date of the receipt of papers which come to his office.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

A certificate of the correctness of a petition and schedules in bankruptcy may be regarded as a question certified to the court under Act 1867, § 4, and, as such, the register has a right to charge a fee therefor as provided for by rule 30. Such rule, however, allows but one fee for both issuing an order of adjudication and certifying the same.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

Although rule 14 of the rules of bankruptcy requires the register to keep a docket of his proceedings in each case, yet there is no authority for his charging anything therefor, but he is entitled to fees for certifying copies of such proceedings to the clerk.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

§ 660. —— Affidavits and depositions.

The register is entitled to a fee for taking the marshal's affidavit on returning the warrant in bankruptcy, as for a deposition; and so as to an affidavit to an order calling a meeting of creditors and an affidavit to the assignee's report.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

The register is entitled to a charge for taking the deposition of the assignee upon his return, and it makes no difference that the register inserted the printed matter in a printed form. Act 1867, § 47.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,937.

The fee of the register for taking an ordinary proof of debt is $1.87½.—Fees for Registering, Case No. 18,295.

For examining and filing a proof of debt taken before any other officer, 50 cents will be allowed.—Fees for Registering, Case No. 18,295.

The register is entitled, under Act 1867, § 47, to 25 cents a folio for depositions taken upon the final examination of the bankrupt.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

§ 661. —— In composition cases.

In composition cases the register is entitled to five dollars for incidental expenses.—In re Spillman, Case No. 13,242.

For the meeting in such cases he is entitled to $3.—In re Spillman, Case No. 13,242.

In such proceedings he is entitled to five dollars per day when acting under a special order. —In re Spillman, Case No. 13,242.

He is entitled to 10 cents a folio for filing each paper in the composition proceedings, and 20 cents for each folio of the examination.—In re Spillman, Case No. 13,242.

For each affidavit in the proceedings he is entitled to 25 cents.—In re Spillman, Case No. 13,242.

For ordering an adjournment of a meeting in such proceeding he is entitled to one dollar.—In re Spillman, Case No. 13,242.

He is entitled to 10 cents for each folio of the report in such proceeding.—In re Spillman, Case No. 13,242.

The compensation of the register who has received a surrender of the bankrupt's property, and subsequently returned it on a composition by the bankrupt, is to be fixed by the court.—In re Portington, Case No. 11,294.

§ 662. —— Miscellaneous cases.

The register is entitled to a charge for taking a bond on the assignee with surety.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

When there is no opposition to a discharge, the register is entitled to a fee of two dollars for granting the same.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699; In re Robinson, Id. 11,937.

The register is not entitled to the fee of one dollar or to any fee for making an order for the examination of the petitioner in bankruptcy on application of a creditor.—In re MacIntire, Case No. 8,821; In re MackIntire, Id. 8,867.

A fee for making a transfer of the bankrupt's estate by the register to the assignee will not be allowed, as neither Act 1867 nor the general orders provide any compensation for such service.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

A charge by a register "for stationery, postage, and incidental expenses, rent, and clerk hire" will not be allowed, as there is no warrant for these charges, either under Act 1867 or the general orders.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699.

The traveling expenses of a nonresident register, when apportioned among the several cases before him, will be allowed, and he may in addition charge for the time consumed in making the journey.—In re Sherwood, Case No. 12,774.

§ 663. Fees of marshal.

The bankruptcy court has no power to make discretionary allowances to the marshal beyond the specific fees prescribed by Rev. St. §§ 829, 5126, and general order No. 30.—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,421.

The fees to be allowed to a marshal as messenger are those specifically enumerated by Act

1867, and such other fees as he shows himself to have earned, the items of which are determinable by analogy to the fees allowed the marshal for similar services.—Anonymous, Case No. 437.

Where a marshal sends a process by mail to his deputy in a distant county, he is entitled to be paid mileage on such process; but, where he sends a deputy from the court house to a distant county for service, he is entitled to the reasonable expenses of the deputy, but not to mileage.—Anonymous, Case No. 437.

A messenger cannot charge commission on his own cost bill.—Anonymous, Case No. 437.

Additional allowances should not be made to the marshal, under § 47, Act 1867, unless it appear that he performed something beyond his ordinary duties.—In re Hare, Case No. 6,063.

A charge by the messenger of a certain sum per folio for preparing notices to creditors is improper, as such charge is not designated in the act as a fee to which he is entitled. Act 1867, § 47.—In re Dean, Case No. 3,699; In re Talbot, Id. 13,727.

A charge by a messenger "for attendance" is unauthorized, and will not be allowed under Act 1867, § 47.—In re Talbot, Case No. 13,727.

The marshal, as messenger, when he collects moneys of a bankrupt's estate, under a warrant, is entitled to charge a commission on the amount collected.—In re Pfaff, Case No. 11,060.

Marshals are not entitled to per diem service for holding, constructively, possession of bankrupt property.—In re Pace, Case No. 10,640.

No allowance will be made for the custody of property by way of commissions on its value.—In re Burnell, Case No. 2,171.

In absence of other proof, a charge of one dollar per hour for personal attention to the bankrupt's property by the messenger must be supported by his own oath, showing the fact of such attention and the necessity thereof.—In re Hellmar, Case No. 6,342.

A marshal is entitled to commissions of 2 per cent. on disbursements. Rev. St. § 829.—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,421.

Two per cent. commissions for disbursing moneys (Rev. St. § 829) are not limited to expenses of court.—In re Burnell, Case No. 2,171.

The marshal is entitled to 10 cents a folio for the inventory furnished the assignee.—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,421.

No allowance to the marshal will be made for time spent in verifying the inventory with the assignee.—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,421.

A marshal is entitled, under general order No. 30, to one dollar an hour for the time occupied in making an inventory, and the time spent in such work by one who was at that time acting as the marshal's assistant as keeper of the property may be charged.—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,421.

For collecting money on drafts and checks, the marshal will be allowed the same fees as on an attachment in rem in admiralty.—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,421.

The marshal is not entitled to charge for constructive mileage in serving a warrant in bankruptcy. Actual personal service, under order of court, is necessary.—In re Alexander, Case No. 163.

The United States marshal, as messenger, is entitled to five cents per mile for the necessary travel for the purpose of making a return on the warrant.—In re Talbot, Case No. 13,727.

The marshal is entitled to separate fees for service of copies of petition and order to show cause, though made at same time.—In re Burnell, Case No. 2,171. CONTRA, see In re Hellmar, Case No. 6,342.

§ 664. Disbursements of marshal.

The marshal will be allowed for the custody of property only actual disbursements and for his personal attention.—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,421.

For the custody of the property the marshal is entitled to the amount necessarily and actually paid to a keeper, not exceeding $2.50 per day, and no charge by the marshal for custody fees by way of commissions on the value of the property will be allowed.—In re Johnston, Case No. 7,421.

A marshal can only be allowed a charge for a storekeeper, not to exceed $2.50 per day, on showing the necessity for his employment, the reasonableness of the price paid, and the actual payment to the storekeeper.—In re Lowenstein, Case No. 8,572; In re Comstock, Id. 3,075; In re Pace, Id. 10,640.

Bookkeeper of bankrupt not entitled to compensation for making schedules while in employ of marshal, and in receipt of his usual salary.—In re Barnes, Case No. 1,013.

The oath of the marshal is not conclusive as to the necessity of expenses charged in his account.—In re Pace, Case No. 10,640.

Marshals must present vouchers for items charged in their accounts, or produce satisfactory reason for their absence.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,075.

Register's decision disallowing a charge for a watchman, on the ground that no watchman was necessary, reversed.—In re Hare, Case No. 6,063.

§ 665. Fees of counsel for bankrupt.

Services rendered by attorneys in opposing involuntary petitions are not allowable as services to the assignee. Such services are rendered to the bankrupt and are provable against his estate.—In re New York Mail S. S. Co., Case No. 10,211.

An estate is not liable for counsel fees in opposing involuntary bankruptcy, and for drawing inventories, order of adjudication, etc.—In re Bigelow, Case No. 1,397.

On approval of the assignee, the counsel of a bankrupt may be paid from the estate for services in resisting the petition and settling conflicting claims.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,803.

Counsel for the debtor will not be allowed a fee for contesting the adjudication, where there was no question as to the insolvency of the debtor at the time.—In re Portsmouth Sav. Fund Soc., Case No. 11,298.

There is no authority under Act 1867 to allow a counsel fee to the bankrupt's attorney out of the assets.—In re New Lamp Chimney Co., Case No. 10,168.

Reasonable compensation to the solicitor of a voluntary bankrupt in preparing the petition and schedules will be allowed out of the assets in the hands of the assignee.—In re Kennedy, Case No. 7,700.

An application for such allowance will not be entertained after the filing of the assignee's account and an order for a meeting of creditors for final dividend.—In re Kennedy, Case No. 7,700.

The fee to be allowed counsel for the preparation of a schedule of a bankrupt is not to be determined by the amount of mere clerical labor performed,—the systematizing, arrangement, and condensation of the matter should be considered; and a fee of $100 for preparing a schedule numbering 40 pages of bankruptcy blanks was properly allowed.—In re Andrews, Case No. 370.

Compensation will be allowed attorneys employed by the bankrupts who procured the discharge of a warrant of arrest against one of the bankrupts and prepared the schedule and inventory required by Act 1867, § 41.—In re Mansfield, Case No. 9,048.

Attorneys for the bankrupt will not be allowed compensation for services rendered between the time of adjudication and the choice of an assignee, unless it appeared that they benefited the estate or were necessary to preserve it in the interest of the general creditors. —In re Jaycox, Case No. 7,239.

In an involuntary proceeding an attorney for the bankrupt will be allowed for his services on approval of his bill by the assignee, and certificate of the register that he has saved the estate considerable expense.—In re Montgomery, Case No. 9,726.

Where a petition in voluntary bankruptcy is filed against a firm, and an injunction issued preventing them from parting with their property, and a warrant of arrest is issued against one of them, under Act 1867, and the bankrupts employ attorneys who procure the discharge of such warrant, and upon adjudication being had they prepare the schedules and inventory required under such act, upon petition of such attorneys to the bankruptcy court to be paid for their services, they are entitled to compensation. The injunction having deprived the bankrupts of the means to employ counsel, such services are considered a part of the bankruptcy proceedings.—In re Mansfield, Case No. 9,048.

The bankrupt's attorney is entitled to an allowance for services in securing exemptions which were rejected by the assignee.—In re Comstock, Case No. 3,074.

The proper way to bring before the court the question of the compensation of and disbursements by the attorneys of the bankrupt is by petition, on which a reference will be ordered.—In re Rosenberg, Case No. 12,056.

§ 666. Docket fees.

The docket fee of $20 is taxable in cases of involuntary bankruptcy, where there is a "trial" by jury, and in those voluntary cases where, under Act 1867, § 31, the court is authorized to direct a trial upon specifications of objections to the bankrupt's discharge.—Gordon v. Scott, Case No. 5,620.

The docket fee of $20 is taxable in favor of the attorney for the successful party only in involuntary cases, and where there has been a trial by jury.—In re Mead, Case No. 9,364.

§ 667. Witness fees.

A bankrupt summoned by a creditor to appear as a witness is not entitled to witness fees.—In re McNair, Case No. 8,907.

A creditor who has proved his claim and appears for examination under order of the bankruptcy court is not entitled to witness fees.—In re Kyler, Case No. 7,956; In re Paddock, Id. 10,658.

The fees of a witness must be paid or tendered at the time of the service of the summons or subpœna. General Order No. 29.—In re Griffen, Case No. 5,810.

Witnesses are entitled to attendance fees for adjourned days, or to travel fees for going to and from home during adjournments.—In re Griffen, Case No. 5,810.

If the fees are not paid and the witness attends, the fees are to be collected as in ordinary actions, and according to the practice of courts therein.—In re Griffen, Case No. 5,810.

The wife of a bankrupt, attending under an order, and being examined as a witness, is entitled to witness and travel fees, calculated according to Act Feb. 26, 1853, § 3.—In re Griffen, Case No. 5,810.

A witness is entitled to fees only for the days of actual attendance, and not for the days on which he was ready to attend.—In re Crane, Case No. 3,352.

The party who serves the subpœna is entitled to recover for service and mileage.—Gordon v. Scott, Case No. 5,620.

§ 668. Taxation.

A regular taxation by the clerk should be made of all the fees and disbursements in each bankrupt case.—Costs and Fees, Case No. 18,282.

The standing auditor of the court has no power to tax a marshal's bill of costs.—In re Rein, Case No. 11,677.

The consent of the assignee held a sufficient ground for the taxation of the marshal's bill of fees and expenses, and the register must countersign a check drawn by the assignee for the amount.—In re Rein, Case No. 11,678.

If any question arises in respect to the register's fees, they must be taxed by the clerk, pursuant to general order No. 30, before they can be allowed, and an order therefor should be made on application of the bankrupts.—In re August, Case No. 645.

Where the bankrupt fails to raise the question at the proper time as to whether a supplemental warrant is necessary, the court will not determine the question upon the taxation of the fees of the register.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,937.

As to the charges of the register, and how questions in regard thereto are to be raised.—In re Sherwood, Case No. 12,774.

Counsel for assignee allowed $350 for services.—In re Warshing, Case No. 17,209.

The clerk's certificate is only prima facie evidence of attendance of witnesses before the register. The register's memoranda of entries may be used to prove the proceedings.—In re Crane, Case No. 3,352.

§ 669. On appeal.

Costs are not allowed to either party where, on new evidence, on appeal to the circuit court on a trial of objections to a discharge, the verdict is changed in favor of the bankrupt.—In re Guild, Case No. 5,860.

§ 670. Payment and remedies for collection.

The register has authority to make an order directing the assignee to pay fees to court officers.—In re Lane, Case No. 8,042.

Registers may take cognizance of uncontested petitions filed by attorneys against the assignee to compel the payment of their fees and disbursements.—In re Stafford, Case No. 13,274.

The court may, under Act 1867, § 47, and general order 29, direct the assignee to pay the register's and marshal's fees out of the estate, but not before they are properly taxed. —In re Smith, Case No. 12,972.

A register has a lien for his fees on the fund in court which has been awarded to a party.—In re Breck, Case No. 1,823.

The costs and expenses of the bankruptcy, proceedings are entitled to priority of payment out of the funds in court derived from the sale of the property.—In re Whitehead, Case No. 17,562.

§ 671. Set-off.

A petitioner in involuntary bankruptcy, whose petition is dismissed with costs, cannot set off his debt against the costs.—In re Lowenstein, Case No. 8,572.

VII. OFFENSES AGAINST BANKRUPT LAWS.

§ 672. Perjury.

The bankrupt's intentional omission to state a part of his property in his sworn schedule is perjury under the act of 1825.—United States v. Nihols, Case No. 15,880.

Under Act March 3, 1825, an intentional omission, by one applying for the benefit of the bankrupt law (Act 1841) to place any portion of his property upon a schedule, sworn to by him as containing a true account of all his effects, is perjury.—United States v. Nihols, Case No. 15,880.

Under an order of the district court, authorizing petitioners in bankruptcy to verify their petitions before the clerk of the county in which they reside, and appointing such county clerk commissioner to administer oaths to such petitioners, the clerk of one county has no power to administer such oath to a resident of another county.—United States v. Deming, Case No. 14,945.

A deputy clerk, being authorized to act the same as the principal, has the right to administer oaths in bankruptcy; and such oaths are presumed to be administered in the presence of the court, and by virtue of its authority.—United States v. Nihols, Case No. 15,880.

The bankrupt is not guilty of perjury in withholding certain items from his schedule under the advice of counsel to whom he had fairly submitted the facts in regard to his property.—United States v. Conner, Case No. 14,847.

Perjury committed in bankruptcy proceedings cannot be prosecuted under the general criminal law (§ 18) nor will an indictment lie at common law.—Anonymous, Case No. 475.

§ 673. Fraudulent conveyances.

An intent to defraud only the original seller of goods is not within Act 1867, § 44, punishing bankrupts who, within three months before their petition is filed, dispose of goods otherwise than in due course of trade, with an intent to defraud.—United States v. Clark, Case No. 14,806.

To sustain a conviction for a fraudulent disposal of goods, it is not necessary that such goods shall have been obtained within three months prior to the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,339.

A chattel mortgage is a disposition of property out of the usual course of business, and, where executed with an intent to defraud creditors, will subject the bankrupt to indictment, under Rev. St. § 5132.—United States v. Bayer, Case No. 14,548.

§ 674. Concealment of property or omission to schedule.

To sustain a conviction for concealing assets from the assignee, it is not necessary to prove a demand by the assignee.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,339.

The crime of fraudulently omitting property or effects from a bankrupt's schedule is complete when the false schedule is filed.—United States v. Clark, Case No. 14,806.

§ 675. Fictitious losses.

An indictment charging a conspiracy to have a bankrupt account for his property by falsely pretending that he had given a valid mortgage thereon to secure a consideration a part of which he should falsely pretend to have been stolen, sets out an offense under Rev. St. § 5440, as a conspiracy to attempt to account for property by fictitious losses.—United States v. Swett, Case No. 16,427.

§ 676. Obtaining goods with intent to defraud.

Under Rev. St. § 5132, cl. 9, making it a misdemeanor for a bankrupt to obtain goods on credit with intent to defraud, etc., it must be shown that the intent to defraud existed in the mind of the bankrupt against his creditors generally, and not against the particular creditor from whom the goods were obtained.—United States v. Penn, Case No. 16,025.

Under an indictment based upon Rev. St. § 5132, cl. 9, it must be shown that defendant falsely represented that he was carrying on business in the ordinary course of trade, and that such representations induced the seller to part with his goods.—United States v. Penn, Case No. 16,025.

A retailer who buys large quantities of goods under the pretense of needing them in his regular business, but ships them off and sells them at wholesale at a sacrifice, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Act 1867, § 44.—United States v. Frank, Case No. 15,159.

Where it appears from a hearing before a United States commissioner that an insolvent, within three months of his bankruptcy, obtained goods on credit from various parties, with intent to defraud, under the false color and pretense of carrying on business and dealing in the ordinary course of trade, he will be held to bail. Act 1867, § 44.—United States v. Geary, Case No. 15,195a.

§ 677. Accessories.

Under Rev. St. § 5440, a person who conspires with the bankrupt to commit the acts made criminal by § 5132, subds. 7, 10, may be indicted.—United States v. Bayer, Case No. 14,547.

§ 678. Indictment and information.

On a charge of perjury by a petitioner in bankruptcy, the indictment need not set out particularly or substantially the petition.—United States v. Deming, Case No. 14,945.

An indictment for perjury in a proceeding in bankruptcy is sufficient, in alleging the petition as made "to a judge sitting as a bankrupt court."—United States v. Deming, Case No. 14,945.

In an indictment for perjury, in not giving a true and full account of the property of the petitioner, the items on the schedule need not be stated in the indictment.—United States v. Chapman, Case No. 14,784.

The allegation in such indictment that the property was omitted to defraud a certain creditor named and others is sufficient, as all the creditors need not be named in the indictment.—United States v. Chapman, Case No. 14,784.

An indictment under Rev. St. § 5132, will lie before an order of adjudication in bankruptcy.—United States v. Myers, Case No. 15,848.

In an indictment under such act all matters necessary to constitute the offense as defined therein must be pleaded.—United States v. Prescott, Case No. 16,084.

The description of the goods should be as definite as in a declaration in trover.—United States v. Prescott, Case No. 16,084.

The word "feloniously" should be omitted, the offenses being indictable as misdemeanors.—United States v. Prescott, Case No. 16,084.

An averment that defendant was lawfully adjudged a bankrupt, is sufficient to admit the record in the bankruptcy proceedings, of which the examination of the bankrupt is a part.—United States v. Crane, Case No. 14,887.

An indictment which merely avers the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy pursuant to the act, without in any way describing the proceeding, except by the names of the creditors "pursuant to the act," and which does not state the name of the court, or the time or place where the proceedings were instituted, is insufficient.—United States v. Latorre, Case No. 15,567.

An indictment for omitting property and effects from the schedule need not allege that the bankrupt took the oath of allegiance prescribed by Act 1867, § 11.—United States v. Clark, Case No. 14,806.

The crime defined in Rev. St. § 5132, subd. 6, is not an infamous one, within the meaning of that term at common law and as used in the fifth amendment to the United States constitution, and the party committing it may be prosecuted by information.—United States v. Block, Case No. 14,609.

An indictment, under Act 1867, § 44, cl. 7, is sufficient where it alleges that defendant was lawfully adjudged a bankrupt; that after commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy he was required by the district court to submit to examination on oath as to the disposal and condition of his property; that the examination was held; that the bankrupt was sworn to make true his answers: and that he attempted to account for a certain item of property, with intent to defraud his creditors, by a fictitious loss.—United States v. Crane, Case No. 14,887.

An indictment for obtaining goods under false pretenses (Rev. St. § 5132, cl. 9) need not charge an intent to defraud creditors generally.—United States v. Myers, Case No. 15,848.

The negative averment that the accused was in fact not carrying on business and dealing in the regular course of trade when he obtained credit for goods on false pretenses is not necessary.—United States v. Myers, Case No. 15,848.

§ 679. Evidence.

The compulsory examination of a bankrupt under oath under § 26 (act 1867) cannot be given in evidence against him on a criminal proceeding under § 44.—United States v. Prescott, Case No. 16,085.

Where the question in issue is whether the defendant absconded, his declarations made while on his way from his place of residence, as to his intentions of returning, are competent evidence in his favor.—United States v. Penn, Case No. 16,025.

§ 680. Trial—Witnesses.

Defendants are not competent witnesses in their own behalf on their trial on indictment for violating § 44 of the bankrupt act of 1867.—United States v. Black, Case No. 14,602.

VIII. REVIEW.

§ 681. Appellate and revisory jurisdiction.

The circuit court has jurisdiction to revise, correct, and reverse rulings of the district court in bankruptcy (Act 1867).—Langley v. Perry, Case No. 8,067.

The circuit court has complete and unlimited control over proceedings in bankruptcy to review the whole case, or any particular question arising in it. (Act 1867, § 2.)—Ruddick v. Billings, Case No. 12,110.

Act 1867, as to revisory jurisdiction, excludes from the category of general superintendence and jurisdiction of the circuit court the appellate jurisdiction defined by section 8 of said act, and brings within that category all decisions of district court or the district judge at chambers, which cannot be reviewed upon appeal or writ of error, under the provision of such section.—In re Alexander, Case No. 160.

Act 1867, which gives the circuit court appellate jurisdiction in certain cases, and, among others, of appeals in equity cases decided in the district court under the jurisdiction created by the act, and of writs of error in cases at law decided in the exercise of such jurisdiction, comprises those suits of which concurrent jurisdiction is given to the circuit and district courts by such act.—In re Alexander, Case No. 160.

Under Act 1867, the appellate jurisdiction which is conferred upon the federal circuit courts is limited to controversies between assignees and the claimants of adverse interest, and to controversies between assignees and creditors touching the allowance of claims.—In re Alexander, Case No. 160.

The jurisdiction of superintendence conferred upon the federal circuit courts by Act 1867, § 2, is to be exercised over proceedings in bankruptcy already pending in the federal district court.—In re Alexander, Case No. 160.

The circuit court has no supervisory jurisdiction in the case of a suit brought by the assignee or a creditor pending the bankruptcy proceedings, or on the rejection or allowance of a claim, but has such jurisdiction in all other classes of cases.—York's Case, Case No. 18,139.

The jurisdiction conferred upon the circuit court by Act 1867, § 2, is revisory, and confers no power to execute the decrees of the district court or to assume primary exercise of jurisdiction conferred on the district court by section 1.—In re Bininger, Case No. 1,418.

Act Feb. 6, 1839 (5 Stat. 315) § 8, which vests the federal district court for the middle district of Alabama with the jurisdiction of the federal circuit court, except in cases of appeal and writs of error, does not deprive such circuit court in that district of jurisdiction to review an adjudication in bankruptcy by the district court, under Act 1867, § 2, giving the circuit court, within and for the district in which the proceeding is pending, a general superintendence and jurisdiction of bankruptcy proceedings.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 126.

§ 682. Nature and form of remedy.

The distinction between the methods of review in actions in law and suits in equity—one being by writ of error, and the other by appeal—is preserved by section 8 of the act of 1867.—Ruddick v. Billings, Case No. 12,110.

A summary proceeding by order to show cause, asking the assignee to be directed to pay a mortgage debt out of the estate, is not a suit, within Act 1867, § 8, relating to appeals.—In re Casey, Case No. 2,495.

An order made by the district court in the exercise of its summary jurisdiction may be reviewed in the circuit court by petition or on bill filed in a plenary suit in the circuit court, but it cannot be reviewed by appeal under section 8.—In re Casey, Case No. 2,495; Hurst v. Teft, Id. 6,939.

An appeal to the circuit court will not lie by the petitioning creditors from an order of the district court vacating, at the instance of another creditor, an order made at a previous term adjudicating the debtor a bankrupt. The remedy of the petitioning creditors in such case is under Act 1867, § 2, and not an appeal under section 8.—In re Hall, Case No. 5,920.

Where the issue of bankruptcy is tried by a jury, errors of the court in the progress of the trial can be reviewed only by writ of error, and cannot be reviewed by petition, under Act 1867, § 2.—Lehman v. Strassberger, Case No. 8,216; In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Id. 10,560.

A petition filed by the bankrupt after discharge, praying that certain money recovered for his estate since the discharge might be applied to his debts and the costs of the proceedings, and the balance paid to him, is not a bill in equity, but a petition, and a decree thereunder is reviewable by petition.—Maybin v. Raymond, Case No. 9,338.

The decision of the district court respecting a claim of a creditor can only be reviewed by an appeal taken as prescribed by Act 1867, §§ 8, 24, and rule 26.—In re Place, Case No. 11,200.

Questions arising in the progress of a case can be reviewed by the circuit court only by petition and not by appeal.—In re Reed, Case No. 11,638.

The proper process by which to remove to the circuit court an order granting or refusing a discharge is by petition under section 2, Act 1867.—Ruddick v. Billings, Case No. 12,110.

The review of an interlocutory decree of the district court in a suit to set aside an illegal preference can only be had by appeal under Act 1867, § 8, and cannot be had by petition for review under § 2 of such act.—Warren v. Tenth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,201.

§ 683. Decisions reviewable.

The removal of the assignee by the district court for a "cause which in its judgment renders such removal necessary or expedient" is not such a case or question as can be reviewed by the circuit court.—In re Adler, Case No. 82.

A resolution of composition is subject to review under the revisory power of the circuit court.—In re South Boston Iron Co., Case No. 13,183.

Under Act 1867, § 8, the appeal provided for can be taken only from a final order.—In re Casey, Case No. 2,495.

The power of the circuit court to review proceedings in bankruptcy is not limited by the amount involved.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,802.

The decision of the register, on submission of a claim to him by stipulation, is not final, but is subject to review of the court.—In re Ford, Case No. 4,932.

An appeal will lie to the supreme court from a decision of the circuit court in the exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction under the bankrupt law.—In re Fox, Case No. 5,007.

On the overruling of the opposition and allowance of a claim, the opposing creditor may take the question to the circuit court for review, by bill, petition, or other proper process. Rev. St. § 4986.—In re Joseph, Case No. 7,532.

An order for the sale of lands of the bankrupt free of incumbrances may be reviewed in the circuit court under section 2, Act 1867.—Markson v. Heaney, Case No. 9,098.

A proceeding in the district court to have proof of debt rejected, under Rev. St. § 5081, held appealable to the circuit court under section 4980.—Morris v. Brush, Case No. 9,828.

An appeal will not lie to the circuit court from an adjudication of bankruptcy.—In re O'Brien, Case No. 10,397.

A proceeding to have a debtor adjudged a bankrupt cannot be reviewed until after final judgment.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,560.

The circuit court has jurisdiction to review an order of the district court upon a trial before it without a jury, adjudicating the petitioner a bankrupt. (Act 1867, § 2.)—In re Picton, Case No. 11,136.

An appeal may be taken to the circuit court from a decree of the district court in a suit to recover alleged property of the bankrupt, where the amount in dispute exceeds $500.—Scammon v. Cole, Case No. 12,432.

In bankruptcy cases an appeal to the circuit court will be allowed upon final decrees of the district court in a suit in equity by or against an assignee, only where the sum in controversy exceeds $500.—In re Zug, Case No. 18,222.

The decision of the district court upon an application to confirm a sale of a bankrupt's estate is not within the general supervisory jurisdiction of the circuit courts. (Act 1867, § 2.)—York's Case, Case No. 18,139.

§ 684. Right of review.

A person not a party to the proceeding below cannot file petition for review.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 127.

Any lien creditor may appeal from a decree affecting his rights to the supervisory jurisdiction of the circuit court.—In re Taliafero, Case No. 13,736.

An objecting creditor cannot further contest the claim of another after a decision on its validity by the district court. Proceedings to review such decision must be taken by the assignee by appeal under § 8 (Act 1867).—In re Troy Woolen Co., Case No. 14,202.

A bankrupt seeking a review, and at the same time prosecuting suits in a state court to restrain proceedings in the district court, will not be required to elect.—In re Bininger, Case No. 1,419.

§ 685. Presentation and reservation in lower court of grounds of review.

Proceedings not passed upon in the district court cannot be availed of as error on review.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 127.

Where an assignee proceeded by petition to recover certain property as assets of the bankrupt, and the respondent answered without objection, the circuit court, on review, will not consider whether a more formal suit would have been proper.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,802.

The circuit court has no authority to entertain questions adjourned from the district court unless they are distinctly raised.—In re Grant, Case No. 5,690.

The objection that there was no direction from the bankrupt court to bring the suit cannot be first raised in the appellate court.—Hallack v. Tritch, Case No. 5,956.

On a review in bankruptcy, the circuit court cannot consider objections to a proceeding in composition that were not taken in the district court.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,781.

§ 686. Time of taking proceedings.

The provision of Act June 1, 1872, § 2, limiting the time to appeal from the district court to one year, does not apply to appeals under Act 1867.—Sedgwick v. Fridenberg, Case No. 12,611.

In a suit by an assignee in bankruptcy against a person claiming adverse interest no appeal lies before final decree from the interlocutory decree of the district court.—Clark v. Iselin, Case No. 2,824.

A petition for a revision by the circuit court of a final decree of the district court refusing a discharge may be entertained, although no proceedings were actually pending in the district court when the petition for revision was made (Act 1867, § 2).—Littlefield v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., Case No. 8,400.

In computing the time within which an appeal in bankruptcy must be taken, Sunday is to be counted, except when the last day would fall on Sunday.—York's Case, Case No. 18,139.

The federal circuit court has no jurisdiction on an appeal in any case under Act 1867, from the district court, unless it is claimed, and the bond is filed at the time it is claimed, and notice is given, as required by section 8 of said act, within 10 days after the entry of the decree or decision appealed from, or unless it is entered at the term of the circuit court first held, within the proper district, after the expiration of the 10 days from the time it was claimed.—In re Alexander, Case No. 160.

Where the appeal provided for in Act 1867, § 8, is not taken within 10 days after the decree is entered, the court acquires no jurisdiction.—Sedgwick v. Fridenberg, Case No. 12,611.

An appeal from the rejection of a claim will be dismissed for failure to file the statement and enter the appeal within the 10 days as required by Act 1867, §§ 8, 24, and rule 26.—In re Kyler, Case No. 7,957; In re Place, Id. 11,200, 11,201.

General order No. 26, in relation to the time of filing an appeal from the district court in the circuit court, is a rule of practice in the latter court, and, if disregarded, the appellee has prima facie ground on which to move to dismiss the appeal.—Morris v. Brush, Case No. 9,828.

A compliance with general order in bankruptcy No. 26, in relation to the filing of an appeal in the circuit court, is not necessary to give jurisdiction, but the court will hear such appeal where a satisfactory excuse is offered for the delay in filing.—Morris v. Brush, Case No. 9,828.

§ 687. Petition for review.

Statement of counsel that they are authorized by a corporation to file petition for review of proceedings is conclusive as to authority.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 126.

A petition for the review of law and fact must state specifically the errors complained of in the ruling or order of the district court.—In re South Boston Iron Co., Case No. 13,183.

The petition for revision under Act 1867, § 2, must distinctly state in what the error consists, whether it be of law or fact. An allegation that petitioner has conformed to the provisions of the act, and is aggrieved because the prayer of his petition for discharge was refused, is not sufficient.—Littlefield v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., Case No. 8,400.

Asking a review and reversal or modification of an order of the bankruptcy court in exercise of its summary jurisdiction and a mere notice of appeal is not "proper process" for invoking a review.—In re Casey, Case No. 2,495.

Service of petition for review on attorney for creditor filing petition below is sufficient.—Alabama & C. R. Co. v. Jones, Case No. 126.

§ 688. Bond.

An appeal cannot be allowed where a bond is not given within 10 days after the decree has been entered, as required by Act 1867, § 8.—In re Alexander, Case No. 160; Benjamin v. Hart, Id. 1,302.

A bond given on appeal under Act 1867, § 8, which has no statement of the court which rendered the decree, except by a reference to the title of the cause, and the cause being entitled in the circuit court, is not sufficient, and will not be approved.—Benjamin v. Hart, Case No. 1,302.

§ 689. Powers and proceedings in lower court on transfer of cause.

The district court may open the decree, and grant a rehearing, in case of newly-discovered evidence; and, pending application therefor, the circuit court will suspend action on the petition for review.—In re Great Western Tel. Co., Case No. 5,739.

§ 690. Stay of proceedings.

A stay of proceedings in the district court is in the discretion of the circuit court, and will not be granted where the debtor will not be seriously prejudiced by their continuation.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,560.

§ 691. Record.

The record on appeal from the disallowance of a claim in bankruptcy must show that appellant, within the time specified by the rules of court, made a statement in writing of his claim, and filed the same with the clerk.—In re Coleman, Case No. 2,979.

Appeals in equity cases, under Act 1867, from the district to the circuit court, are regulated by section 8 and general order No. 26, framed by the supreme court; and where, in an equity case, the record does not show that an appeal was claimed or notice given, and contains no bond, it will be dismissed by the circuit court.—Hawkins v. Hastings Nat. Bank, Case No. 6,245.

A transcript of the proceedings in the district court is not required to be filed within the 10 days allowed for filing an appeal in a circuit court, but it is sufficient if a statement of the appellant's claim, a brief account of what has been done in the district court, and the grounds of appeal, are filed. Rev. St. § 4984.—Morris v. Brush, Case No. 9,828.

The statements in a petition for review, like those in any other pleading, must be taken as true on demurrer, and, if sufficient, the decree below reversed. Case No. 9,923 reversed.—Curran v. Munger, Case No. 3,487.

§ 692. Dismissal.

A petition for review by the circuit court, under Act 1867, § 2, filed 50 days after the making of a final decree by the district court refusing the discharge, in the absence of a rule limiting the time, will not be dismissed on the ground of delay.—Littlefield v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., Case No. 8,400.

Proceedings for review instituted by a creditor whose interest was $6,000 out of $300,000 nearly five months after the discharge was granted is unreasonably delayed, where the bankrupt, on the faith of the discharge, aided by friends, had resumed his former business.—In re Murray, Case No. 9,953.

An appeal under Act March 2, 1867, § 8, will be dismissed for failure to comply with the provisions in regard to entering the appeal, or the provisions of general order No. 26 in regard to filing the appeal, and setting forth a statement in writing of the claim.—In re Coleman, Case No. 2,979.

§ 693. Hearing.

A bill or petition under Act 1867, § 2, for a review of an adjudication of bankruptcy may be heard by the circuit judge, in chambers at any place within the circuit, whether within or without the district where the bankruptcy proceedings are pending.—Markson v. Heaney, Case No. 9,098; Thornhill v. Bank of Louisiana, Case No. 13,992.

§ 694. Review.

The circuit court has power to review the findings, where the evidence is before it upon which the bankrupt was adjudged guilty of contempt in failing to disclose his property.—In re Salkey, Case No. 12,254.

In such case the circuit court may direct the district court to allow the bankrupt to be reexamined before the register, and, on the return of an attachment, the court will examine the bankrupt.—In re Salkey, Case No. 12,254.

When questions of policy and expediency have been fairly before the creditors, and disposed of by them, and their action has been approved by the register and the district court, such action will not be interfered with by the circuit court, on review.—In re Wilson, Case No. 17,781.

In a composition case the circuit court, in the exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction, will not interfere, except in a very clear case, where the district court has affirmed the action of majority creditors.—In re Wronkow, Case No. 18,105.

Where a composition has been approved by the creditors, the register, and the district court, the circuit court will not interfere, unless specific errors in the action of the creditors or the court below can be pointed out, which, if sustained, would change the judgment.—In re Wronkow, Case No. 18,105.

On petition for review of the finding of the district court on a matter of fact, the burden is on the petitioner to show that the evidence cannot support the finding. Case No. 11,322 affirmed.—Coggeshall v. Potter, Case No. 2,955.

The circuit court will not review an incidental question of practice in the district court.—In re Robinson, Case No. 11,939.

On review the decision of the district court on a question of fact will not be reversed unless it clearly appears that the court was in error. —In re Mooney, Case No. 9,748.

Where all the evidence in the district court on a trial without a jury is preserved by bill of exceptions and certified to the circuit court, the correctness of the order of the district court adjudicating the petitioner a bankrupt can be reviewed.—In re Picton, Case No. 11,136.

The circuit court will not set aside the appointment of an assignee by the district judge where the only error claimed is in holding that no election had been made by the creditors, there being no allegation against the fitness of the person appointed.—Woods v. Buckewell, Case No. 17,991.

On an appeal by a creditor from the decision of the district court rejecting his claim, where a declaration and plea are filed, the creditor has a right to a jury trial (Rev. St. §§ 4980, 4984). —Thistle v. Hamilton, Case No. 13,884.

Such right will not be held to have been waived where the appeal is inadvertently submitted, and decided as if the cause had been brought up by writ of error.—Thistle v. Hamilton, Case No. 13,884.

The circuit court will not, on petition for review, hear additional testimony. Its power is simply revisory.—In re Great Western Tel. Co., Case No. 5,739.

On a revisory petition to the circuit court the case will not be taken up de novo, but the error complained of must be particularly set forth.— In re Sutherland, Case No. 13,636.

The cause of action on appeal to the circuit court under Act 1867, § 24, from a rejection of proof of debt must be the same as that presented to the district court.—In re Jaycox, Case No. 7,237.

On an appeal by a creditor from a decision of the district court rejecting his claim the case is reconstructed in the circuit court, and the issues are made up and tried in the same way as if the case were originally commenced in such court. —Stillwell v. Walker, Case No. 13,451.

§ 695. Determination and disposition of cause.

In the case of an appeal, under Act 1867, § 8, from an order of the district court requiring the surrender of property belonging to the bankrupt, the order will be affirmed on the merits, where it clearly appears that the proceedings in granting such order were authorized, although there is a motion to dismiss the appeal as unauthorized by said section 8.—Samson v. Blake, Case No. 12,284.

The power to review conferred on a circuit court of the United States by Act 1867 (14 Stat. 518) is given to it as a court of equity; and it is not bound to reverse on strictly legal grounds, if satisfied that the facts are correctly found, and that no injustice has been done.—In re Clark, Case No. 2,802.

Liens on bank stock in bankruptcy, see "Bankruptcy," § 257.
Taxation of banks and bankers, see "Internal Revenue," § 29.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION IN GENERAL.

§ 1. What are banks.

A corporation engaged in loaning its own money upon note and mortgage is not a banking corporation.—Oregon & W. Trust Inv. Co. v. Rathburn, Case No. 10,555.

§ 2. Safety funds.

The safety-fund law of Michigan, which prohibited all banks subsequently established from issuing notes except they are payable on demand, and without interest, applies to a bank charter granted on the same day.—Weed v. Snow, Case No. 17,347.

II. BANKING CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

§ 3. Incorporation, organization, and incidents of existence.

The expiration of the charter of a bank indebted to the United States will prevent a remedy over against the debtors of the bank where there was no previous assignment.—United States v. Alexander, Case No. 14,428.

Debts due the late Bank of the United States were not extinguished by the expiration of its charter; and a note given after such expiration to one of its agents, in his own name, in renewal of a note previously due, is valid.—Smith v. Frye, Case No. 13,049.

Section 14 of the charter of the Bank of Columbia was repealed by Act March 2, 1821, § 8, except as to debts contracted before the repeal. —Smith v. Bank of Columbia, Case No. 13,011.

Notes given after the repeal, and discounted by the bank to pay debts previously due, are not within the exception.—Smith v. Bank of Columbia, Case No. 13,011.

A new bank, incorporated with the same name as an old bank, whose charter is about to expire, and with nearly the same stockholders, is not responsible for notes of the old bank. —Bellows v. Hallowell & Augusta Bank, Case No. 1,279.

The corporate name of the bank incorporated by Act March 3, 1817, § 23, is "The Central Bank of Georgetown and Washington," and not "The President and Directors of" said bank. —Central Bank v. Tayloe, Case No. 2,548.

§ 4. Capital stock and dividends.

A purchaser of bank stock becomes its legal owner on its full sale to him, without waiting the formal transfer on the books of the bank.—Hubbard v. Bank of United States, Case No. 6,815.

The court will compel a bank to permit a transfer of shares of its stock to be made upon the proper books to the rightful owner, regardless of the by-laws on that subject.—Hubbard v. Bank of United States, Case No. 6,815.

Where shares are transferable only at the bank, the bank is not liable to a purchaser who never applied for a transfer, where it permits their attachment as the property of the person in whose name they stand on the bank books.—Williams v. Mechanics' Bank of New Haven, Case No. 17,727.

A certificate reciting the ownership of bank shares "which are transferable at the bank in person or by attorney" means transferable only at the bank under cognizance of its officers.—Williams v. Mechanics' Bank of New Haven, Case No. 17,727.

The Bank of Potomac has a lien upon its stock in the hands of a stockholder whose notes are lying over, unpaid.—Burford v. Crandell, Case No. 2,150.

The private banking institution known by the name of the Union Bank of Alexandria had not, before it obtained its charter, any specific lien on the stock of its stockholders.—Neale v. Janney, Case No. 10,069.

Priority of claim of United States against dividends of deceased stockholder of Bank of Washington, as against debts due the bank.—Brent v. Bank of Washington, Case No. 1,834.

Where the charter of a bank gives it a general lien upon the shares of its stockholders for debts due the bank, the bank has such general lien on shares pledged with other securities to secure the payment of a particular note.—In re Peebles, Case No. 10,902.

The Bank of Washington may prevent a transfer of stock on its books until a debt of the holder to the bank is paid.—Pierson v. Bank of Washington, Case No. 11,155.

See, also, post, § 15.

§ 5. Stockholders.

Stockholders held liable, as principals, to redeem dishonored bank bills, under the charter provision that their persons and property shall be at all times bound for such redemption.—Hatch v. Burroughs, Case No. 6,203.

The fact that the holders of unpaid stock may have severally redeemed their share of the bills of the bank does not release them from liability for the amount due on their stock subscriptions. —Marsh v. Burroughs, Case No. 9,112.

Obligations contracted by a banking association organized under an unconstitutional law are not enforceable against the directors and stockholders, the transactions being illegal and the parties particeps criminis.—Nessmith v. Shelden, Case No. 10,125.

Construction of Acts Ind. May 28, 1852, and March, 1855, in relation to the liability of stockholders of banks.—Toucey v. Bowen, Case No. 14,107.

A declaration at law by a single bank creditor to enforce the charter liability of one stockholder, who owns nearly all the stock, for twice the amount of his shares, is not demurrable where it does not appear that there are any other creditors.—Marsh v. Charleston, Case No. 9,113.

Individual members of banking associations, who employed a laborer, held liable to a suit at law by him, irrespective of articles of association.—Davis v. Beverly, Case No. 3,627.

A state statute of limitations (New Hampshire), in effect a transcript of the English statute, does not apply to an action of debt against a stockholder to recover on a dishonored bank note.—Bullard v. Bell, Case No. 2,121.

See, also, post, § 16.

§ 6. Officers and agents.

A stockholder who has pledged his stock to the bank as collateral security for the payment of his notes not yet due may vote at the election of directors.—Scholfield v. Union Bank, Case No. 12,475.

Qualifications of directors of Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, D. C.—Gray v. Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, Case No. 5,723.

The directors are liable for all excess of debts above three times the amount of capital stock paid, and also for all deficits occasioned by the insolvency of the bank.—White v. How, Case No. 17,548.

Where the plaintiff seeks to make the directors liable for excess of loans, etc., the declaration must aver the amount of such excess.—White v. How, Case No. 17,548.

If a director protested against certain loans at the time they were made, he is not liable, as director, in his individual capacity for such loans.—White v. How, Case No. 17,548.

Under Act Mich. March 15, 1837, the directors are liable in their individual capacities in the first instance if the debts of the institution exceed three times the amount of stock paid.—White v. How, Case No. 17,548.

The proceeding by the bank commissioners under the statute is no bar to an action against the directors to make them personally liable.—White v. How, Case No. 17,549.

A plea to an action against the directors which avers the notes on which the action was brought were fraudulently put into circulation is no answer to the declaration.—White v. How, Case No. 17,549.

A bank president borrowed money for his personal use, on the security of shares of stock fraudulently issued to him. The money went into the assets of the bank. Held, that it was liable therefor.—Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Farmers' & Citizens' Nat. Bank, Case No. 9,024.

Bona fide indorsees before maturity of paper discounted by a cashier are not affected by the fact that it was unauthorized by the discounting committee of the bank, if the paper passed through the bank in the usual course of business. —Blair v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 1,485.

A cashier without special authority cannot bind his bank by an official indorsement of his individual note, and the onus is on the payee to show the cashier's authority.—West St. Louis Sav. Bank v. Shawnee County Bank, Case No. 17,462.

A cashier has authority by custom to assign or accept bills of exchange for the bank.—Lafayette Bank v. Bank of Illinois, Case No. 7,987.

A cashier of a bank has prima facie authority to indorse, on behalf of the bank, the negotiable securities held by it. If there be any restriction of his authority, it must be proved by the bank. —Wild v. Bank of Passamaquoddy, Case No. 17,646.

It is within the authority of a cashier to sign a blank transfer on a certificate of stock held as collateral, and deliver the certificate to the pledgor, on payment of the loan.—Matthews v. Massachusetts Nat. Bank, Case No. 9,286.

The cashier of a bank, as such, has no authority to settle an account by taking private notes and drafts, and giving a receipt in full.—Sandy River Bank v. Merchants' & Mechanics' Bank, Case No. 12,309.

The burden of showing authority to make such settlement is upon the party who alleges it.—Sandy River Bank v. Merchants' & Mechanics' Bank, Case No. 12,309.

The teller is not liable for losses during his absence.—Bank of the United States v. Johnson, Case No. 919.

An unauthorized discounting, by the president of a bank, of a note payable to the cashier, held to have been ratified by the bank in drawing for the proceeds, through its cashier, and in approving, by its cashier and vice president, a statement of the account sent to them by the discounting bank.—Kennedy v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 7,701a.

The bond of a teller of a branch Bank of the United States is not void because executed 14 days after he has entered upon his duties.—Bank of the United States v. Brent, Case No. 910.

The sureties on the bond of a cashier of a bank are liable for his acts pending the communication and carrying into effect of a resolution of suspension.—Bank of the United States v. Magill, Case No. 929.

Acceptance of an official bond of a bank officer can only be proven by the bank's record of the proceedings.—Bank of the United States v. Dandridge, Case No. 914.

See, also, post, § 17.

§ 7. Insolvency and dissolution.

On the failure of a bank to pay specie, it may be forced into liquidation.—Bank of Circleville v. Iglehart, Case No. 860.

The holders of notes for small amounts, payable to bearer, illegally issued by a firm of bankers, held entitled to preference on their insolvency.—Tucker v. Fowler, Case No. 14,219.

On the winding up of a bank, held, that stockholders who had paid their subscriptions in full were entitled to a return of the excess over what was paid by others, before ratable distribution, notwithstanding that dividends had been paid in proportion to the amounts paid in.—Krebs v. Carlisle Bank, Case No. 7,932.

The capital stock of a bank is a trust fund for the payment of the bank notes; and where any portion of it, before the expiration of the bank charter, is divided among its stockholders without providing funds which ultimately are sufficient to pay the outstanding bank notes, the fund may be followed into the hands of the stockholders.—Wood v. Dummer, Case No. 17,944.

A bill in equity for such purpose might be maintained by some of the holders of the bank notes against some of the stockholders, the impossibility of bringing all before the court being sufficient to dispense with the ordinary rule of making all parties in interest parties.—Wood v. Dummer, Case No. 17,944.

In such case the decree against the stockholders before the court should be only for their contributory share of the debt, in the proportion which the stock held by them bore to the whole capital stock.—Wood v. Dummer, Case No. 17,944.

See, also, post, § 23.

III. FUNCTIONS AND DEALINGS.

See, also, post, §§ 18–21.

§ 8. Banking franchises and powers, and their exercise in general.

Construction of Act Mich. March 15, 1837, to organize and regulate banking associations.—Falconer v. Campbell, Case No. 4,620.

Construction of special charters of certain Ohio banks.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

Power to receive special deposits is not conferred by a charter "to carry on the business of receiving money on deposit, and to allow interest thereon, giving to the person depositing credit therefor."—First Nat. Bank v. Citizens' Bank of Topeka, Case No. 4,802.

§ 9. Deposits.

While a state bank, under Act Aug. 6, 1846, cannot become a depositary of public money, it may lawfully contract with the secretary of the treasury to transmit a draft, or to draw on a fund at the place of payment and pay over the amount.—United States v. City Bank, Case No. 14,796.

A bank can justify its payment on the individual check of a member of a firm, of funds deposited in the name of the firm, only by showing that the money thus drawn was applied to the use of the firm.—Coote v. Bank of the United States, Cases Nos. 3,203, 3,204.

No title passes to savings bank on deposit of check representing moneys belonging to a third person where it has notice of his claim.—Beecher v. Gillespie, Case No. 1,224.

A bank holding an indorsed note may offset it against the maker's general deposit account.—Blair v. Allen, Case No. 1,483.

A banker has a lien for all securities of the debtor in his hands for the general balance of his account, where not inconsistent with the actual or presumed intention of the parties.—Kelly v. Phelan, Case No. 7,673.

A bank issuing a certificate of deposit to a person who cannot write his name is entitled to rely upon the identification of the payee by another bank, through whom it is collected on presentation by a person who stole it.—State Nat. Bank v. Freedmen's Savings & Trust Co., Case No. 13,324.

A bank which received a special deposit of a box for safe-keeping, though responsible therefor if it is delivered to a wrong person, or is lost or mislaid by the carelessness of an officer or employé thereof, in the course of business, is not responsible, proper care having been observed in the selection of officers and employés, if it is lost through any act of theirs not within the scope of their employment.—White v. Commonwealth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,544.

A bank which receives from a customer a box for safe-keeping, without any special compensation therefor, is liable for gross negligence only.—White v. Commonwealth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,544.

A bank which received a special deposit of a box for safe-keeping has the burden of showing that the loss thereof is not due to its fault.—White v. Commonwealth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,544.

One depositing in a bank without notice of its by-law that special deposits for safe-keeping shall be at the risk of the depositor is not bound thereby.—White v. Commonwealth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,544.

A note was deposited with a bank with the understanding that, in certain contingencies, it was to be handed back to the maker, otherwise to be delivered to the payee. Held a special deposit, and that the transaction was ultra vires.—First Nat. Bank v. Citizens' Bank of Topeka, Case No. 4,802.

§ 10. Collections.

The relation between a bank and its customer is not of a fiduciary character.—In re Bank of Madison, Case No. 890.

The relation of a branch of the Bank of the United States to another branch or to the parent bank which has forwarded paper for collection is simply that of principal and agent.—Bank of the United States v. Goddard, Case No. 917.

Where a bill of exchange is indorsed and delivered to a bank, to be transmitted to another bank for collection, the latter becomes the agent of the payee, and is answerable to him alone for breach of its duty.—Farmers' Bank of Virginia v. Owen, Case No. 4,662.

Bank to whom draft was sent "for collection and credit" held to be agent of sender until collection of certified check given by payee in payment; and money received thereon after its suspension is held in trust for the sender.—German-American Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, Case No. 5,359.

An undertaking by a bank to "collect" is not merely an undertaking to select a suitable agent, and transmit the paper to him, but to answer for any default of such agent.—Kent v. Dawson Bank, Case No. 7,714.

The relation of the bank and a customer as respects a specific sum of money, remitted by the bank at the request of the customer to another bank to pay a debt, is that of principal and agent, and not that of debtor and creditor. —St. Louis v. Johnson, Case No. 12,235.

A bank, acting as collecting agent of another bank, is liable for a loss caused by its failure to use reasonable diligence and care.—First Nat. Bank of Trinidad v. First Nat. Bank of Denver, Case No. 4,810.

A note deposited for collection and credited to depositor, is property of bank; and, on its bankruptcy, proceeds go to general creditors.—In re Bank of Madison, Case No. 890.

A bank acting as a collecting agent, in the absence of special authority or usage, has no right to receive in payment anything but money. Payment by check is not complete until the money is received thereon.—Levi v. National Bank of Missouri, Case No. 8,289.

A bank holding a check for collection, which accepts the certification of the bank upon which it is drawn, in lieu of payment, is liable to the owner for the amount thereof, with interest from the date of certification, though the drawee bank was without funds of the drawer.—Essex County Nat. Bank v. Bank of Montreal, Case No. 4,532.

A bank which, in the absence of instructions, surrenders to consignees bills of lading attached to drafts, on the mere acceptance of the drafts, is liable for a resulting loss.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. National Bank of Commerce, Case No. 9,446.

A bank receiving a draft from another bank for collection held liable for the amount thereof, where it transmitted the same directly to the drawee, its correspondent, and made no inquiry in regard thereto for one month, the drawee having failed in the meantime, and the draft having miscarried.—First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 4,810.

A bank receiving a sight draft from another bank, with directions to return without protest if not accepted, held liable to the former bank where there was delay which it did not explain, during which the former bank paid the amount to the drawer on the faith of a letter from the drawee, stating that he had paid the draft.—Merchants' & Manufacturers' Bank v. Stafford Nat. Bank, Case No. 9,438.

Where a draft is drawn on time, and is sent, together with the bill of lading for goods shipped to the drawee, to a bank at his place for collection, the bank is not liable for delivering the bills of lading to the drawee on the acceptance of the draft.—Woolen v. New York & E. Bank, Case No. 18,026.

A bank acting as a collecting agent for plaintiff received a check in payment, procured its certification, and suspended the same day, having previously credited plaintiff with the amount. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to the proceeds of the check.—Levi v. National Bank of Missouri, Case No. 8,289.

When banks receiving paper from other banks for collection are entitled, as against the real owners, to hold the same to secure a general balance due from the transmitting bank.—New England Bank v. Bank of the Metropolis, Case No. 10,152.

A bank undertaking to collect a draft for another bank is liable for the proceeds, although the agent selected by it to make the collection failed while the proceeds were in his hands.—Kent v. Dawson Bank, Case No. 7,714.

A bank receiving a note for collection is not liable in damages for failing to demand payment on Saturday where the last day of grace falls on Sunday, where its known and established method of business in such case was not to demand payment until Monday.—Patriotic Bank of Washington v. Farmers' Bank of Alexandria, Case No. 10,811.

Customs bonds left with a bank for collection, and paid with the proceeds of notes made by the principal, and bearing forged indorsements, will be held discharged, and the bank cannot enforce the priority of payment of the United States out of the assets of the principal.—United States v. Rousmaniere's Adm'rs, Case No. 16,200.

Where a bank received a draft from a bank in another state, credited the same to it, entered it for collection, and so advised the latter, held, that the contract to collect was governed by the law of the state of the collecting bank.—Kent v. Dawson Bank, Case No. 7,714.

The implied contract between the owner of a note and the bank with whom it is deposited for collection does not follow the note into the hands of a second bank, and the owner has no remedy against it.—Hyde v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 6,970.

§ 11. Loans and discounts.

A charter authorizing a bank to discount notes, etc., on banking principles, does not make void a contract or note reserving more than 6 per cent. interest.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

Where a bank accepts stock and notes which it was given as collateral security for a loan, it may sell the stock after the notes become due.—Canfield v. State Nat. Bank, Case No. 2,382.

The assignee, as collateral security for a note for money borrowed, of stock of the United States, has an equitable interest therein, enforceable as against the United States claiming as a creditor, though the same has not been transferred on the books as required by Act 1790, c. 61.—United States v. Cutts, Case No. 14,912.

Banks holding collateral security for the payment of loans must take the same care that good business men or persons or corporations of their class ordinarily take of such bonds.—Fleming v. Northampton Nat. Bank, Case No. 4,862a.

A bank with which stock is pledged by an executor is entitled to sell the same, in case of default, if it had no notice, actual or constructive, of a violation of trust, although the pledge was in fact for the executor's individual benefit. —Lowry v. Commercial & Farmers' Bank, Case No. 8,581.

A bank holding bonds as collateral security held not liable for a loss by robbers after the watchman had left, as was usual, at four o'clock in the morning.—Fleming v. Northampton Nat. Bank, Case No. 4,862a.

The Bank of Alexandria may, upon discounting notes, deduct the whole interest to become due.—Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, Case No. 850.

The burden is on the bank to show the assent of the partnership to charge up to its account the individual note of one of the partners.—Coote v. Bank of the United States, Case No. 3,204.

§ 12. Exchange.

A bank located in Columbus, Ohio, having power by its charter to deal in bills of exchange generally could deal in exchange through an agent in another city.—City Bank of Columbus v. Beach, Case No. 2,736.

A letter of credit held to be used within the terms of the agreement giving right to commissions, though bill issued thereunder was never presented.—Baring v. Lyman, Case No. 983.

§ 13. Circulating notes.

Notes issued in violation of the safety-fund law of Michigan are void.—Weed v. Snow, Case No. 17,347.

One bank demanding payment of the bank bills of another is not bound to receive its own bills in payment, but may demand specie.—Suffolk Bank v. Lincoln Bank, Case No. 13,590.

The holder of bank bills is entitled to be paid in specie, by weight, the amount of such bills, upon a demand within the usual banking hours of the bank.—Suffolk Bank v. Lincoln Bank, Case No. 13,590.

The bank is bound to keep its money counted or weighed, or to employ servants sufficient to count or weigh it, so as to pay all demands made within the usual banking hours.—Suffolk Bank v. Lincoln Bank, Case No. 13,590.

A bank is answerable for the acts of its agent; and it is immaterial how notes get into circulation, if they come into the hands of the holder bona fide.—White v. How, Case No. 17,549.

The Bank of the United States is bound to pay the full amount of a note which has been cut in two, and each part mailed separately to it, though but one part is received.—Martin v. Bank of the United States, Case No. 9,156.

A bill drawn by a bank in express violation of its charter cannot be set up by it in payment.—Davis v. Bank of River Raisin, Case No. 3,626.

Notes of a state bank or state banking association used for circulation, and paid out by it, whether previously issued or not, are liable to the tax of 10 per cent. (Rev. St. § 3412).—Deposit Sav. Ass'n v. Marks, Case No. 3,812; Same v. Mayer, Id. 3,813.

The tax upon the average amount of circulation "issued" (Rev. St. § 3408) applies both to the making of notes and the putting of them in circulation.—Deposit Sav. Ass'n v. Mayer, Case No. 3,813.

Persons taking notes of a bank are chargeable with notice of the powers of the bank, as granted in its charter.—Root v. Wallace, Case No. 12,039.

§ 14. Actions.

Congress has power to authorize the Bank of the United States to sue in the federal courts.—Bank of the United States v. Roberts, Case No. 934.

The act incorporating the Bank of the United States confers the right to sue in the circuit courts, irrespective of the question of citizenship.—Bank of United States v. Northumberland Bank, Case No. 931. CONTRA, see Bank of United States v. Deveaux, Case No. 916.

The issuing of an execution by the Bank of Columbia is the commencement of the action in regard to the statute of limitations.—Bank of Columbia v. Moore, Case No. 875.

Where a contract is made by a branch bank within the state of the plaintiff bank, the exception in favor of one "beyond the seas or out of the country" is not applicable.—Bank of United States v. McKenzie, Case No. 927.

The court will permit defendant upon return of execution to plead the statute of limitations.—Bank of Columbia v. Cook, Case No. 864: Same v. Sweeny, Id. 881.

Where a bank, having a large amount in bills of another bank, by agreement with it placed the same in the hands of a third party as collateral, and the other bank drew drafts on New York, also advancing additional collateral to pay possible expenses of protest, held, in an action on the drafts, that the agreement was not pleadable in bar, the drafts having been taken as payment.—Stickney v. Bank of Illinois, Case No. 13,440.

Payment of check is prima facie evidence of funds in an action for an overdraft.—Bank of Alexandria v. McCrea, Case No. 849; Bank of United States v. Washington, Id. 940; Same v. Wilson, Id. 943.

Bank of Alexandria may have its causes tried at the first term to which the writ was returnable.—Bank of Alexandria v. Henderson, Case No. 848; Same v. Young, Id. 857.

An order for an execution by the president of the Bank of Columbia is not a judgment.—Bank of Columbia v. Baker, Case No. 862.

Affidavit of president of Bank of Columbia on an order for an execution—Form and contents.—Bank of Columbia v. Cook, Case No. 864.

Execution issued on order of the president of the Bank of Columbia—Form and contents.—Bank of Columbia v. Bunnel, Case No. 863.

Form of execution issued by president of Bank of Columbia under Act Md. 1793, c. 30, § 14.—O'Kely v. Boyd, Case No. 10,476.

The suit is discontinued by failure to prosecute the execution.—Bank of Columbia v. Baker, Case No. 862.

Where the Bank of the United States recovers less than $500 in a suit in the circuit court, it cannot recover costs, and may be adjudged to pay all costs.—Bank of United States v. Roberts, Case No. 934.

No action can be maintained on notes of an association issued in violation of law, and the issuance and circulation of which is made subject to a penalty by statute.—Milne v. Huber, Case No. 9,617.

IV. NATIONAL BANKS.

Embezzlement by officer or agent, see "Embezzlement," § 1.
Judicial notice, see "Evidence," § 8.
Misapplication of funds, see "Indictment and Information," § 1.
Taxation, see "Taxation," §§ 5, 9, 14.

§ 15. Transfer of stock.

As between the seller and purchaser of national bank shares, the sale is complete when the certificate is delivered duly assigned, with power of transfer on the books of the bank, and payment received therefor.—Johnson v. Laflin, Case No. 7,393.

The directors of a national bank have no power to refuse to register a bona fide transfer of stock without some valid and sufficient reason therefor.—Johnson v. Laflin, Case No. 7,393.

The directors of a national bank have authority under the statute (Act June 3, 1864, § 8) to forbid any stockholder indebted to the bank, whether as principal or surety, to transfer his stock without the consent of a majority of the directors.—Knight v. Old Nat. Bank, Case No. 7,885.

A shareholder in a national bank, who sold his shares through a broker to the president of the bank, executing blank transfers, without knowledge of the real purchaser or the insolvency of the bank, and received in payment the broker's check on the bank, which was paid out of the bank's funds, held not liable for the amount to the receiver of the bank.—Johnson v. Laflin, Case No. 7,393.

A by-law of a national bank, declaring that no transfer of the stock by a shareholder indebted to the bank should be made without consent of the directors, is invalid, under Act June 3, 1864, § 35; and the bank has no lien on such stock as against a bona fide transferee.—Evansville Nat. Bank v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, Case No. 4,573. CONTRA, see In re Dunkerson, Case No. 4,156.

A national bank held bound, under the local law, to recognize a transfer of its stock by a foreign executor duly appointed in another state, when not in conflict with its by-laws or articles of association.—Hobbs v. Western Nat. Bank, Case No. 6,551a.

§ 16. Liability of stockholders for debts of the bank.

One holding shares in a national bank as trustee is personally liable for debts of the bank, unless his trusteeship appears on the bank's books.—Davis v. First Baptist Society, Case No. 3,633.

One to whom shares of national bank stock are transferred as collateral security, but under a transfer made absolute in due form on its books, is liable to its creditors as a stockholder.—Bowden v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, Case No. 1,714; Moore v. Jones, Id. 9,769.

A religious society purchasing national bank shares with a bequest of money is an ordinary stockholder, liable to assessment for debts.—Davis v. First Baptist Society, Case No. 3,633.

An insurance company, though forbidden by its charter from investing in national bank stock, after holding the stock and receiving dividends thereon, is estopped from setting up the unlawful acquisition to escape liability for an assessment on the subsequent insolvency of the bank, where the latter did not know in what manner the stock was acquired.—Strong v. O'Neill, Case No. 13,543a.

A letter from the comptroller of the currency is not sufficient evidence to establish the liability of a stockholder of a national bank to contribute the entire amount of his stock to meet its liabilities.—Bowden v. Morris, Case No. 1,715.

Individual liability for the debts of a national bank cannot be escaped by a transfer of stock to a person pecuniarily irresponsible, by a purchaser who remains the actual owner.—Davis v. Stevens, Case No. 3,653; Man v. Cheeseman, Id. 9,002a.

A transfer of national bank shares, with intent to relieve the transferror from liability to creditors, is void as against the creditors.—Bowden v. Santos, Case No. 1,716.

The estate of a stockholder of a national bank, who died prior to its insolvency, but whose stock had not been transferred at the date of the comptroller's order making an assessment, is liable therefor. Rev. St. § 5152, does not affect such liability.—Davis v. Weed, Case No. 3,658.

Liability of stockholders of national bank is several, and a suit at law is the proper remedy to enforce a specific assessment ordered by the comptroller.—Bailey v. Sawyer, Case No. 744.

The right of the receiver of a national bank to recover an assessment laid on the stockholders for the purpose of paying debts grows out of Rev. St. § 5234, and the state statute is inapplicable as a rule of decision.—Stanton v. Wilkeson, Case No. 13,299.

Such action is properly brought by the receiver in his own name.—Stanton v. Wilkeson, Case No. 13,299.

The receiver may in such case proceed against the separate stockholders to recover the amount due from each.—Stanton v. Wilkeson, Case No. 13,299.

Stockholders of an insolvent national bank are bound by the action of the comptroller in making an assessment against them, and have no right to examine the accounts of the receiver as to the assets or debts of the bank.—Man v. Cheeseman, Case No. 9,002a.

It is no defense to a suit by the receiver of a national bank against a stockholder to recover the amount of an assessment made by the comptroller of the currency that the assessment was not needed by the receiver.—Strong v. Southworth, Case No. 13,545.

§ 17. Officers.

The officers of a national bank may borrow money of the bank the same as other persons.—Blair v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 1,485.

General authority from the directors to draw bills and sign notes is sufficient if the bills and notes relate to the business of the bank, but not if they relate to the private business of the officer.—United States v. Johnson, Case No. 15,483.

The cashier of a national bank in Boston held to have no authority to certify checks, either by usage or otherwise.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, Case No. 9,449.

The making of false entries by a clerk in a national bank by direction of the president constitutes the latter a principal in the offense of making false entries.—In re Van Campen, Case No. 16,835.

§ 18. Contracts and dealings in general.

A national bank cannot repudiate an unauthorized contract, and at the same time retain the benefit thereof.—Casey v. La Societe De Credit Mobilier, Case No. 2,496.

An agreement by a national bank to pledge a portion of its assets to secure loan made to it by a firm is not affected by the fact that the president of the bank was a member of the firm.—Casey v. La Societe De Credit Mobilier, Case No. 2,496.

A national bank being without authority to purchase or hold its own shares, cannot, by a purchase and transfer, vest title in another.—Meyers v. Valley Nat. Bank, Case No. 9,519; Man v. Cheeseman, Id. 9,002a.

A national bank has no authority to lend its credit on personal security.—Johnston v. Charlottesville Nat. Bank, Case No. 7,425.

A national bank has authority, under Rev. St. § 5136, to take and hold interest coupons not under seal, attached to railway aid bonds under seal, where each coupon contains an express promise to pay to bearer, and is signed by the proper officer.—First Nat. Bank v. Bennington, Case No. 4,807.

§ 19. Loans and collateral security.

A loan by a national bank in excess of the restriction (Act June 3, 1864, § 29) is not void; but making such a loan subjects the bank and its officers to the forfeitures and penalties prescribed in section 53.—Stewart v. National Union Bank, Case No. 13,435; Shoemaker v. National Mechanics' Bank, Id. 12,801.

One national bank, which loans money to another, knowing that the latter intends to loan the same to its directors, may recover the same from the borrowing bank, if it had no knowledge of any fraudulent intent in making the loans to the directors, even though the directors failed to repay the same.—National Bank of Commerce v. National Bank of Missouri, Case No. 18,310.

A national bank has power to lend money upon the note or other personal obligation of the borrower, secured by a pledge of stock of a corporation as collateral security.—Shoemaker v. National Mechanics' Bank, Case No. 12,801.

A national bank may lend money in good faith, without any fraudulent intent, to its directors as well as to others, provided the amount so loaned does not exceed the limitation of one-tenth of the capital stock actually paid in.—National Bank of Commerce v. National Bank of Missouri, Case No. 18,310.

A national bank may borrow money for the purpose of lending the same again to others with a view to making a profit.—National Bank of Commerce v. National Bank of Missouri, Case No. 18,310.

A national bank may take from a customer, as collateral security, the note and mortgage of a third person, and may foreclose the same if the borrower becomes insolvent, and the personal security fails.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Mears, Case No. 9,450.

A national bank may take a pledge of chattels as security for money lent.—Pittsburgh Locomotive & Car Works v. State Nat. Bank, Case No. 11,198.

A national bank has no power to guaranty the obligation of a person on the deposit of collateral security.—Seligman v. Charlottesville Nat. Bank, Case No. 12,642.

A national bank cannot take a mortgage upon real estate as security for a debt concurrently created or for future advances (Act June 3, 1864).—Kansas Val. Nat. Bank v. Rowell, Case No. 7,611.

National banks may hold real-estate security acquired by subrogation from a holder of a negotiable note.—Mathews v. Abbott, Case No. 9,275.

§ 20. Interest and usury.

The penalty prescribed by Act June 3, 1864, § 30, for the taking of usury on loans and discounts by national banks, is the only penalty enforceable.—National Exch. Bank v. Moore, Case No. 10,041.

Where usurious interest has been actually paid, double the amount thereof may be recovered from a national bank under Rev. St. § 5198.—Markson v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 9,097; Crocker v. Same, Id. 3,397.

The action against a national bank to recover a penalty for usury in the case of successive renewal notes held to accrue at the time the interest taken was applied to the principal, or when judgment is entered therefor.—Duncan v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 4,135.

The assignee in bankruptcy of a person who has paid to a national bank a greater amount of interest than that allowed by law is his "legal representative," within Rev. St. § 5198, allowing a recovery of twice the sum paid, and may sue to recover the same.—Crocker v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 3,397; Markson v. Same, Id. 9,097; Wright v. Same, Id. 18,078. CONTRA, see Barnett v. Muncie Nat. Bank, Case No. 1,026; Barnits v. First Nat. Bank, Id. 1,034.

The indorser of a bill of exchange is not such "legal representative."—Barnett v. Muncie Nat. Bank, Case No. 1,026.

Although, under the New York law, a corporation cannot interpose the defense of usury, a national bank which makes a loan to a corporation at a greater rate than 7 per cent. per annum forfeits the interest under Act June 3, 1864, § 30.—Ex parte Wild, Case No. 17,645.

Assumpsit by the holder of a claim against a national bank, which had been declared in default, to recover interest during the period of administration, will not lie against the receiver or against the comptroller of the currency, but will lie against the bank.—Chemical Nat. Bank v. Bailey, Case No. 2,635.

A national bank is entitled to the same privileges in regard to charging interest as is extended to state banks of issue in the state in which it is located.—First Nat. Bank v. Duncan, Case No. 4,804; Same v. Tinstman, Id. 4,805. CONTRA, see Duncan v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 4,135.

Interest is recoverable on the balance due a depositor in a national bank which has been declared in default by the comptroller of the currency, though he made no formal demand of payment.—Chemical Nat. Bank v. Bailey, Case No. 2,635.

Where a sufficient fund has been realized from the assets of a national bank, which has been declared in default, to pay all claims against it, and leave a surplus, interest on the claims will be allowed during the period of administration, before appropriating the surplus to the stockholders.—Chemical Nat. Bank v. Bailey, Case No. 2,635.

Where a renewal note at legal interest is given for a note discounted by a national bank at a usurious rate, the bank is entitled to recover the amount of the renewal note with interest, less the amount of usury reserved on the original discount credited as of that date.—National Bank of Madison v. Davis, Case No. 10,038.

Usury paid more than two years before the commencement of the suit cannot be recovered nor credited upon the principal of the note.—National Bank of Madison v. Davis, Case No. 10,038.

§ 21. Actions.

An action cannot be maintained against a national bank for conversion of shares of its own capital stock.—Meyers v. Valley Nat. Bank, Case No. 9,519.

Suits may be maintained by as well as against national banks in the federal courts of the district of their location (Act June 2, 1864, § 57).—Union Nat. Bank v. Chicago, Case No. 14,374.

A national bank incorporated under Act June 3, 1867, can be sued only in the courts designated in section 57.—Cadle v. Tracy, Case No. 2,279.

A national bank cannot be sued outside the district in which it is located. Service on the cashier when found within another district does not give jurisdiction.—Main v. Second Nat. Bank, Case No. 8,976.

The circuit courts do not have exclusive jurisdiction of actions against national banks under Rev. St. § 5198.—New Orleans Nat. Banking Ass'n v. Adams, Case No. 10,184.

The jurisdiction of the federal circuit court on a creditors' bill against a national bank, for discovery and other relief upon allegations of fraud by the officers, is not superseded by the appointment of a receiver by the comptroller.—McElhenny v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 8,779.

In such case, the costs of a master appointed to investigate the affairs of the bank will be ordered to be paid by the receiver.—McElhenny v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 8,779.

The circuit court has jurisdiction of a bill filed by a stockholder of a national bank to enjoin its officers from an illegal application of funds to his prejudice.—Shoemaker v. National Mechanics' Bank, Case No. 12,801.

A state court has no jurisdiction of an action against a national bank located in another state. Act June 3, 1867, § 57.—Cadle v. Tracy, Case No. 2,279.

Jurisdiction of actions by or against national banks, see, also, "Courts," § 36.

§ 22. Receivers.

Where the officers of a national bank have been making preferential payments, a court of equity, on the application of a depositor, will appoint a receiver.—Irons v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, Case No. 7,068.

An attachment of funds of a national bank on deposit in another bank, after one of its circulating notes has been duly protested for nonpayment, will not create a lien, as against a receiver subsequently appointed.—Harvey v. Allen, Case No. 6,177.

The assignee of bonds deposited with the treasurer of the United States as security for the redemption of national bank notes cannot question the validity of the appointment of a receiver for the bank in respect to other property than the bonds.—Van Antwerp v. Hulburd, Case No. 16,827.

The receiver of an insolvent national bank has no greater right to enforce collection of assets than the bank itself would have had.—Casey v. La Societe De Credit Mobilier, Case No. 2,496.

A receiver of a national bank is an officer of the United States.—Stanton v. Wilkeson, Case No. 13,299; Platt v. Beach, Id. 11,215.

The federal district court has jurisdiction of a common-law action brought by a receiver to collect a claim due the estate.—Platt v. Beach, Case No. 11,215.

A receiver of a national bank held not estopped from questioning jurisdiction by being substituted as defendant in place of the bank in a suit in a state court of another state.—Cadle v. Tracy, Case No. 2,279.

The district court is "a court of record of competent jurisdiction," within Rev. St. § 5234, permitting a receiver of a national bank to compromise doubtful claims on the order of such a court.—In re Platt, Case No. 11,211.

An order for the composition of a claim, when the claim is not a "bad or doubtful debt," is invalid, and a composition made under such an order is ineffectual.—Price v. Yates, Case No. 11,418.

The United States, as a creditor, has a prior lien over other creditors in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent national bank in charge of a receiver.—United States v. Cook County Nat. Bank, Case No. 14,853.

§ 23. Dissolution.

Comptroller of currency, in winding up insolvent national bank, has authority to finally determine when a deficiency of assets exists.—Bailey v. Sawyer, Case No. 744.

The provisions of the general banking law for winding up national banks under the direction of the comptroller of the currency are not exclusive of the remedy by creditors' suit, and the appointment of a receiver.—Wright v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, Case No. 18,084.

BASTARDS.

§ 1, Presumption of legitimacy. § 2, Proceedings under bastardy laws.

Right to inherit, see "Descent and Distribution," § 2.

§ 1. Presumption of legitimacy.

The marriage of the mother of a bastard, and the acknowledgment by the husband of the child, are prima facie evidence that he was the father.—United States v. Skam, Case No. 16,308.

The presumption of legitimacy in case of a child born in lawful wedlock is repelled by evidence which places the nonaccess of the husband beyond all reasonable doubt. It is not necessary to prove that nonaccess was impossible.—Stegall v. Stegall, Case No. 13,351.

Sufficiency of evidence to repel the presumption of legitimacy where the woman was pregnant when she was married.—Stegall v. Stegall, Case No. 13,351.

§ 2. Proceedings under bastardy laws.

A justice of the peace has no authority to take a recognizance (Act Va. Dec. 26, 1792, § 23) except upon application by an overseer of the poor.—United States v. Hancock, Case No. 15,295; Same v. Clements, Id. 14,816.

In cases of bastardy the circuit court of the District of Columbia has no jurisdiction, except upon complaint of the county overseers of the poor.—United States v. Dick, Case No. 14,957.

The circuit court of the District of Columbia has jurisdiction to require the father of a bastard to give security for its support.—Ross v. Kingston, Case No. 12,076.

The general report of the neighborhood is admissible on the question of legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock.—Stegall v. Stegall, Case No. 13,351.

The declarations of a father as to the maternity of his child are competent evidence.—United States v. Sanders, Case No. 16,220.

The unsworn declarations of the mother and putative father are inadmissible to prove illegitimacy in the case of a child born in lawful wedlock.—Stegall v. Stegall, Case No. 13,351.

Evidence of the likeness of the child to the supposed father is not admissible.—United States v. Collins, Case No. 14,835.

The confession of defendant having been given in evidence, he was not permitted to give evidence of his declarations at the same time that others also had had connection with the mother.—United States v. Collins, Case No. 14,835.

The order for paying £30 a year can only be made by a justice of the peace, under Act Md. 1796, c. 34.—United States v. Collins, Case No. 14,835.

The only judgment which can be given under the statute is that defendant give security to indemnify the county from any charge for the maintenance of the child.—United States v. Collins, Case No. 14,835.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

§ 1. Bills of exchange.

A warrant issued by the controller of a city, whose payment is restricted to a particular fund is not regarded as bill of exchange.—Bayerque v. San Francisco, Case No. 1,137.

It is not necessary that the various parties to a negotiable instrument should be different persons in order to render it a bill of exchange.—Wildes v. Savage, Case No. 17,653.

A bill of exchange drawn in one state on a person in another is a foreign bill, and the protest of such a bill is good evidence.—Lonsdale v. Brown, Cases Nos. 8,493, 8,494.

The following instrument: "St. Louis, May 10, 1861. At sight pay to the order of S., P. & Co., $4,000, value received, and charge the same to the account of L., P. & Co. To the Marine Bank of Chicago, Ill.."—is a bill of exchange, and not a check.—Olshausen v Lewis, Case No. 10,507.

§ 2. Checks.

The characteristics which distinguish checks from bills of exchange are that checks are always drawn on a bank; that they are payable immediately on presentment, and without days of grace; and that they are not presentable for acceptance, but only for payment.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,985.

The fact that checks are payable at a certain day, and not on demand, will not make them bills of exchange.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,985.

§ 3. Promissory notes.

A cashier's certificate of deposit for a sum named, payable at a certain time, to the order of the depositary, is a promissory note.—Austen v. Miller, Case No. 661.

The fact that a note is made payable in exchange with rate not specified does not prevent its being a promissory note. The rate is subject to proof.—Bradley v. Lill, Case No. 1,783.

A promise to pay a specified sum, with current exchange on New York and expenses of collection in case of suit, is not a promissory note.—Lane v. Gobbold, Case No. 8,051.

§ 4. Execution and delivery.

The addition of "and Company," to the signature of a note after the maker had taken in a partner, made with the consent of all parties, will make the note binding against the firm.—Crum v. Abbott, Case No. 3,454.

A promissory note delivered in escrow held valid in the hands of the payee, although agreement not complied with.—Boone v. Queen, Case No. 1,643.

§ 5. Acceptance—Promise to accept.

A promise to accept a nonexisting bill of exchange will amount to an acceptance of a bill subsequently drawn in favor of a person who took the same upon the faith of such promise.—Russell v. Wiggin, Case No. 12,165.

Persons who advance money on bills of exchange on the faith of a letter of credit of a third person, promising to accept the same when drawn, may maintain an action on such promise.—Russell v. Wiggin, Case No. 12,165.

A promise to accept a bill when drawn, shown to a third person, who, upon the faith thereof, takes the bill, when drawn for a valuable consideration, is in law an acceptance.—Payson v. Coolidge, Case No. 10,860; Wildes v. Savage, Id. 17,653.

It is not material that the bill is taken for a pre-existing debt.—Payson v. Coolidge, Case No. 10,860.

But the bill must be one payable after date, and not after sight.—Wildes v. Savage, Case No. 17,653.

An authority to draw bills of exchange, specifying amounts and times, with an assurance of payment, is an acceptance to one who takes the bills on the credit thereof.—Bayard v. Lathy, Case No. 1,131.

A letter written within a reasonable time after date of a bill of exchange, describing it, and promising to accept it, is a virtual acceptance.—Cassel v. Dows, Case No. 2,502; Bayard v. Lathy, Id. 1,131.

Where a letter has no reference to particular bills to be drawn, but is a general authority to draw at any time and to any amount against property to be shipped, the writer cannot be held as acceptor of a bill drawn under it, but the letter may be considered as a promise to accept, and the person who takes a bill on the credit of such promise may maintain an action on such promise.—Cassel v. Dows, Case No. 2,502.

An agreement to accept bills renders it unnecessary that the drawee shall have funds in his hands belonging to the drawer.—De Tastett v. Crousillat, Case No. 3,828.

A statement of sales by a consignee with authority to draw for the amount held an acceptance of a bill subsequently drawn by the agent of the owner, whose authority was not revoked by the bankruptcy in the meantime of the principal abroad without notice.—Ogden v. Gillingham, Case No. 10,456.

§ 6. —— Mode and sufficiency.

A bill of exchange may be accepted by the drawer's writing the word "excepted" upon it.—Miller v. Butler, Case No. 9,565.

An order written by the agent of the drawee, on the back of a bill, to another person, to pay it, held evidence of the drawee's acceptance of the original bill.—Harper v. West, Case No. 6,093.

§ 7. —— Conditional or qualified.

To charge the acceptor under a conditional acceptance, the holder must show performance of the condition.—Read v. Wilkinson, Case No. 11,611.

§ 8. —— For honor or supra protest.

An acceptance for the honor of the payee, after protest, is not binding.—Freeman v. Perot, Case No. 5,087.

§ 9. Consideration — Necessity and sufficiency.

A promissory note given in consideration of Confederate notes is void.—Bailey v. Milner, Case No. 740.

A mere moral consideration is not sufficient to support a promise to pay.—In re Cornwall, Case No. 3,251.

A gift, though expressed in a note, is not a sufficient consideration to support a promise to pay.—In re Cornwall, Case No. 3,251.

A promissory note of an emancipated slave given to the master in consideration of the emancipation is valid.—Smith v. Parker, Case No. 13,087.

An assignment of a sheriff's certificate of sale of real property is a sufficient consideration for a promissory note.—Packwood v. Clark, Case No. 10,656.

A bond to convey land is a good consideration for a promissory note, although the obligor has not the legal title when the note becomes due.—Lane v. Dyer, Case No. 8,050.

A promissory note given by the heir in renewal of a note made by his ancestor, which was barred by limitation at the death of the ancestor, is void for want of consideration.—Didlake v. Robb, Case No. 3,899.

§ 10. —— Failure of.

A partial failure of consideration is no defense to an action by the payee against the maker of a promissory note.—Varnum v. Mauro, Case No. 16,889.

§ 11. Validity—Duress.

A note given under the threat of interference to defeat a proposed compromise is void in the hands of the payee.—Bullene v. Blain, Case No. 2,124.

§ 12. —— Illegality.

Any instrument issued in violation of an act prohibiting a bank from issuing any bill or note not payable on demand, and without interest, under a penalty, is void.—Hayden v. Davis, Case No. 6,259.

An acceptance of such a draft, or an agreement to indemnify the person who signed it, is void.—Hayden v. Davis, Case No. 6,259.

A note given for slaves taken to Texas in 1835 in violation of the laws of Mexico is invalid.—Toby v. Randon, Case No. 14,071.

It is a good defense to a note given in 1864, for the hire of slaves, that, as part of the consideration, the hirer was to keep them out of reach of the Federal army.—Martin v. Bartow Iron Works, Case No. 9,157.

A note given for the assignment of the time of an apprentice, being for an illegal consideration, is void.—Walker v. Johnson, Case No. 17,073.

A note given for the loan of Confederate money is illegal, without consideration, and void, and will not support a note or duebill given in renewal thereof.—Scudder v. Thomas, Case No. 12,567.

"Confederate Treasury Notes" are illegal because issued by organization of subjects in rebellion.—Bailey v. Milner, Case No. 740.

Where property sold during the Civil War was to be paid for in Confederate notes, the seller cannot sue thereon, nor on a note given to secure the payment, though it did not specify the currency.—Nordlinger v. Vaiden, Case No. 10,296.

Notes issued by the city of Richmond in 1861 and 1862 held to have been intended to give aid and support to the Rebellion, and incapable of being validated.—Evans v. Richmond, Case No. 4,570.

A note given upon a wager as to the result of the local vote for presidential electors, though between parties not qualified to vote, is void.—Denney v. Elkins, Case No. 3,790.

§ 13. —— Ratification.

A suit for money obtained on a fraudulent note is not an affirmance of the contract.—Gibson v. Stevens, Case No. 5,401.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

§ 14. What law governs.

The statutes of a state enter into and become part of a note made in that state.—Gregg v. Weston, Case No. 5,800.

Where bills are accepted, payable in London, on a promise to provide funds to meet them, the contract is governed by the law of England.—Bainbridge v. Wilcocks, Case No. 755.

A bill drawn and indorsed in one state, but payable in another, is governed by the law of the former as to the liability of the indorser, but by the law of the latter as to the amount of interest.—Bank of Illinois v. Brady, Case No. 888.

A letter of credit given in Massachusetts by an agent there of a foreign banking house held governed by the laws of Massachusetts, and not by those of the domicile of the bankers.—Russell v. Wiggin, Case No. 12,165.

Notes drawn, dated, signed, and indorsed at Philadelphia, where drawers and indorser resided, delivered and discounted in New York, are governed by the laws of New York.—In re Conrad, Case No. 3,126.

A note made by an agent in Boston of a citizen and resident of California to a citizen and resident of Massachusetts, payable in Boston, is a Massachusetts contract.—Byington v. Lemmons, Case No. 2,264a.

A promissory note made in Oregon and payable in Scotland is to be considered as if made in Scotland, and a mortgage upon real estate in Oregon to secure its payment is to be tested by the laws of Oregon.—Oregon & W. Trust Inv. Co. v. Rathburn, Case No. 10,554.

A discount of notes in Rhode Island, procured there by an indorser, where the money is there paid, held a Rhode Island transaction, though the note was made in New York, where the maker resided, and where it was dated and made payable.—Providence County Sav. Bank v. Frost, Cases Nos. 11,453, 11,454.

A note "negotiable in the Bank of Alexandria," D. C., held governed by the laws in force in Alexandria.—Gilman v. King, Case No. 5,444.

The place where notes were negotiated, and not that where they were signed and indorsed, held to be the place of the contract.—Orr v. Lacy, Case No. 10,589.

See, also, post, §§ 36, 45, 61.
Effect of state laws and decisions in federal courts, see "Courts," § 80.

§ 15. Parties.

In the absence of a special agreement, the liability of acceptor and indorser of a bill of exchange attaches in the order in which their names appear on the bill.—Robinson v. Kilbreth, Case No. 11,957.

Where a bill is drawn with directions to charge to another, and it is accepted generally, the drawer is not ordinarily liable to the drawee.—Bell v. Davidson, Case No. 1,248.

An agent is not personally liable upon a promissory note made by him to one who took it with knowledge that it was given by him as agent of a corporation.—Bradley v. McKee, Case No. 1,784.

A note payable to A., B., C., or D. is payable to the promisees individually, and not to the three first jointly, or the fourth.—Samuels v. Evans, Case No. 12,289.

A note given to A., B., C., or D. is a promise to pay in the alternative, and either of the promisees may sue in his own name.—Spaulding v. Evans, Case No. 13,216.

§ 16. Interest and exchange.

Exchange is to be settled at the rate prevailing at the time of the verdict.—Cropper v. Nelson, Case No. 3,417.

The rate of interest and damages which the drawee of a bill is to pay ex mora is governed by the law of the place where the bill is drawn. —Ex parte Heidelback, Case No. 6,322.

Interest customary at Canton may be allowed upon a note executed there.—Cowqua v. Lauderbrun, Case No. 3,299.

Where a note is given in Indiana payable in New York, with interest and the rate of exchange, the rate of exchange will be the time the note becomes due.—Price v. Teal, Case No. 11,417.

§ 17. Accommodation paper.

Notes given by factors by way of advances on goods consigned, where not in excess of the value of the goods cannot be held to be accommodation paper.—In re Many, Case No. 9,054.

A person who gives a letter of credit on himself, as an accommodation, becomes a surety or guarantor only for the payment of drafts drawn on him to the extent of the credit given, and in strict compliance with its terms.—Lienow v. Pitcairn, Case No. 8,341.

An accommodation acceptor of a bill of exchange is a surety as to the drawer, but a principal as to the holder, although he knew the facts.—In re Babcock, Case No. 696.

§ 18. Attorney's fees.

The stipulation in a note for the payment of a reasonable attorney's fee on collection by action is valid, and binding on all indorsers.—Bank of British North America v. Ellis, Case No. 859.

See, also, post, § 26.

§ 19. Place of payment.

Where the maker signs a note by mistake above the printed line, stating where it is payable, the latter is nevertheless a part of the note.—Turnbull v. Thomas, Case No. 14,243.

§ 20. Time of payment.

A note payable when a certain third party should settle her accounts with the maker held payable after the lapse of one year, that being a reasonable time for the maker to coerce such settlement.—Scull v. Roane, Case No. 12,570c.

An acceptance takes effect from the day that it is actually made, and does not relate back to the day of presentation.—Mitchell v. DeGrand, Case No. 9,661.

A note and trust deed given to secure the same will be construed together, and the note may be declared due under a clause in the deed providing that the debt secured shall become wholly due on default in payment of interest. —Gregory v. Marks, Case No. 5,802.

§ 21. Days of grace.

On a bill payable a certain number of days after sight, the day of acceptance is excluded, and three days of grace added.—Mitchell v. DeGrand, Case No. 9,661.

The custom of merchants as to days of grace does not apply as between maker and payee.— McLain v. Rutherford, Case No. 8,868a.

A check is not entitled to days of grace, though payable at a certain day, and not on demand.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,985.

Days of grace are not allowed on promissory notes.—Cook v. Gray, Case No. 3,156a.

§ 22. Assignment of fund drawn on.

A check in the hands of the payee, before presentation, acceptance, or payment, is not an assignment of any part of the fund in the hands of the drawee.—Strain v. Gourdin, Case No. 13,521.

An order drawn on a general or particular fund does not amount to an assignment of that part, or give a lien, as against the drawee, unless there has been an express or implied acceptance by him.—McLoon v. Linquist, Case No. 8,899.

A draft upon a bank in which the drawer has a fund on deposit, before it is presented to or accepted by the drawee, or charged by it against the drawer, does not operate as an assignment of the fund; and the payee is not entitled to the fund, as against a subsequent assignee for creditors, who first notifies the bank of his title.—Rosenthal v. Mastin Bank, Case No. 12,063.

The right to the funds of the drawer in the hands of the drawee is vested in the indorsee of the bill, though the same is not accepted, and such funds are not subject to attachment after suit commenced against the drawee by the indorsee in the name of the payee.—Corser v. Craig, Case No. 3,255.

The presentation to the drawee of a negotiable draft drawn against a general balance in his hands, less than its amount, without an acceptance by him, does not operate as an assignment of the fund, or create any lien in favor of the holder.—Randolph v. Canby, Case No. 11,559.

§ 23. Collateral agreements.

A note absolute on its face may be made payable on conditions by a separate agreement as between the original parties, and an assignee with notice is affected with existing equities.— Thomas v. Page, Case No. 13,906.

III. NEGOTIABILITY AND TRANSFER.

§ 24. Statutory provisions.

A note not made payable at a bank is not a "promissory note negotiable by the law merchant," where, under the state law, the maker is entitled to assert, against any indorsee, any equity available against the payee.—Gregg v. Weston, Case No. 5,800.

§ 25. Certainty as to amount or parties.

A note which, in addition to interest, provides for the payment of taxes whose amount is uncertain, is not negotiable.—Howell v. Todd, Case No. 6,783.

A note containing a provision for the payment of all taxes and charges that might be levied upon it, or the mortgage securing its payment, is not negotiable.—Farquhar v. Fidelity Insurance, Trust & Safe Deposit Co., Case No. 4,676.

A United States "seven-thirty" note, payable to the order of ——, and not having the name of any person filled in the blank space, is negotiable by delivery.—United States v. Vermilye, Case No. 16,618.

No indorsements on the note, while such blank is left unfilled, will restrict its negotiability.—United States v. Vermilye, Case No. 16,618.

Such a note is not money, and a person who purchases it after its maturity, and after the time for its conversion into bonds has passed, takes nothing but the actual right and title of his vendor.—United States v. Vermilye, Case No. 16,618.

§ 26. Attorney's fees.

A stipulation to pay attorney's fees if a suit be instituted on the note does not affect its negotiability.—Howenstein v. Barnes, Case No. 6,786.

See, also, ante, § 18.

§ 27. Mode and form of payment.

To be negotiable, a note must be for the payment of money, in a sum certain, subject to no conditions. A note payable in "New York funds, or their equivalent," is not negotiable.—Hasbrook v. Palmer, Case No. 6,188.

A note for a certain sum payable in "current bank notes" is not negotiable.—Fry v. Rousseau, Case No. 5,141.

A note which, during four of the five years it has to run, may, at the maker's option, be paid in buggies at wholesale prices, is not negotiable.—Howell v. Todd, Case No. 6,783.

§ 28. Transfer by indorsement.

An indorsement by one who draws a foreign bill in his own favor, "Pay the amount to order for my use," prevents its negotiability, and no damages can be recovered for its nonacceptance.—Brown v. Jackson, Case No. 2,015.

The indorsement of a note placed in the hands of a third person for the benefit of a creditor of the indorser held to take effect from the date of the indorsement, and not from the date of its delivery to the creditor.—Fossitt v. Bell, Case No. 4,958.

§ 29. Transfer without indorsement.

A duebill payable to order or bearer is assignable, and may be assigned by an agent.—Griffin v. Nokes, Case No. 5,817a.

Delivery, without indorsement, of a note payable to a payee named, or bearer, is not sufficient to authorize the assignee to sue in his own name.—Bradley v. Trammel, Case No. 1,788a. CONTRA, see Bradford v. Jenks, Case No. 1,769.

A deed conveying a number of negotiable instruments of various kinds will not be considered as a negotiation of the paper on mercantile principles.—Hopkirk v. Page, Case No. 6,697.

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES ON INDORSEMENT OR TRANSFER.

(A) INDORSEMENT BEFORE DELIVERY TO OR TRANSFER BY PAYEE.

§ 30. Liability as joint maker.

A receipt, not negotiable, and intended as a memorandum of indebtedness by the maker thereof to the holder, does not come within the rule of law in Massachusetts that one who indorses a note, not being a holder of it, is an original promisor.—In re Wrentham Mfg. Co., Case No. 18,063; Ex parte Southwick, Id.

§ 31. Liability as indorser.

A stranger who writes his name in blank on the back of a promissory note is presumed, as to subsequent holders, to be an indorser, and is entitled to all the rights of one.—McComber v. Clarke, Case No. 8,711.

An action will lie by the holder against an indorser of a promissory note, where the indorsement was made upon a blank paper and subsequently filled up by the maker as intended by the indorser.—Patton v. Violett, Case No. 10,839.

A note may be good against an indorser, though it is void as against the maker.—Codwise v. Gleason, Case No. 2,939.

The surrender of notes by the payees to a subsequent indorser held a sufficient consideration to support his promise to pay the same.—Pinnes v. Ely, Case No. 11,169.

If a person who is not a party to a promissory note indorses his name upon it in blank, with intent to give it credit, the plaintiff may write over it an engagement to pay it in case of the insolvency of the maker.—Offutt v. Hall, Case No. 10,449.

§ 32. Liability as surety.

An accommodation maker is entitled to the rights of a surety as against a holder with knowledge of his true relation, and is discharged by a valid extension of time to the one who is, in fact, the principal debtor.—In re Goodwin, Case No. 5,549.

§ 33. Accommodation indorsement.

The presentation by the maker of a note for discount is notice to the bank that the indorsement thereon is an accommodation indorsement.—Lemoine v. Bank of North America, Case No. 8,240.

Where such indorsement is by a firm, the bank must ascertain whether it was duly authorized.—Lemoine v. Bank of North America, Case No. 8,240.

An indorser on a note made and indorsed for the accommodation of a third person is not a cosurety with the maker, unless so specially agreed.—Law v. Stewart, Case No. 8,130.

An accommodation indorsement on a note does not make it commercial paper as to the accommodation indorser.—Innes v. Carpenter, Case No. 7,049.

An accommodation indorser of a bill of exchange, who pays the same after protest, has a right of action against the acceptor.—Robinson v. Kilbreth, Case No. 11,957.

An accommodation indorser can show a want of consideration only as against the accommodated party.—Bank of British North America, v. Ellis, Case No. 859.

One indorsing a note, after previous indorsement by two others for accommodation of the maker, may recover from either of them the whole amount paid by him to take up the note.—Mason v. Mason, Cases Nos. 9,245, 9,246.

An indorsement of a note to give it credit is a sufficient consideration to support the action against the indorser.—Vowell v. Lyles, Case No. 17,021.

§ 34. Contribution.

The indorsers of accommodation paper are considered as joint sureties, and liable to contribution.—McDonald v. Magruder, Case No. 8,761.

On a several indorsement for the accommodation of the maker of a note, one indorser, who is obliged to take up the note, may recover his proportion from the other.—Magruder v. McDonald, Case No. 8,965.

A covenant not to sue one maker of a promissory note is no release of the others.—Ferson v. Sanger, Case No. 4,752.

(B) INDORSEMENT FOR TRANSFER.

§ 35. Nature and grounds of liability.

The indorsement of a negotiable note, as well as the note itself, purports a consideration.—McClintick v. Johnston, Case No. 8,700.

Indorser held liable on partnership note given by one partner after dissolution in renewal of note made before dissolution.—Greatrake v. Brown, Case No. 5,743.

An indorser is in any event liable to his indorsee only for the amount actually paid by the indorsee, with lawful interest thereon, and not for the face value of the note.—In re Many, Case No. 9,054.

§ 36. What law governs.

The indorsement of a note is a new, distinct contract, which is governed by the law of the place where it is made, without regard to the law of the place where the note was made.—Mott v. Wright, Case No. 9,883; Pomery v. Slacum, Id. 11,262.

The indorsement of a negotiable note in different states by different indorsers will be governed by the local law where each indorsement was made.—Dundas v. Bowler, Case No. 4,141.

The indorsement is considered to have been made in the state in which the instrument is delivered to the indorsee, though it was written in another state.—Mott v. Wright, Case No. 9,883.

The indorser of a bill of exchange is liable for damages according to the law of the place where the indorsement is made.—Lenox v. Wilson, Case No. 8,247.

The law of Indiana which requires a suit against the maker, before recourse can be had against the indorser, does not govern an action in such state against the assignor of a negotiable note made and assigned in Ohio, and payable there, the assignment being a new contract.—Burrows v. Hannegan, Case No. 2,206.

See, also, ante, § 14; post, §§ 45, 61.

§ 36a. Parties to indorsement.

A note payable to M., cashier, is a note payable to the bank, and the bank is liable on an indorsement and discounting by him.—Blair v. First Nat. Bank, Case No. 1,485.

An indorsement of a note by the president and cashier transfers the note to the indorsee of a corporation to which it is payable.—Chillicothe Branch of State Bank v. Fox, Case No. 2,683.

§ 37. Indorsement in blank.

A blank indorsement does not discharge subsequent indorsers as such.—Bank of British North America v. Ellis, Case No. 859.

The blank indorsement of a bill of exchange passes all the interest therein to every indorsee in succession, discharged from any obligation which might subsist between the original parties, but which does not appear upon the face of the instrument itself.—Wilkinson v. Nicklin, Case No. 17,673.

§ 38. Special indorsement.

A special indorsement does not restrict the rights of the indorsee as against prior indorsers or the drawer.—Brown v. Jackson, Case No. 2,016.

§ 39. Restrictive indorsements.

A parol agreement, made at the time a note is indorsed, cannot affect the indorser's rights under the law merchant.—Bank of Alexandria v. Deneale, Case No. 846.

§ 40. Implied warranties.

The transferror of a note impliedly warrants its genuineness.—Semmes v. Wilson, Case No. 12,658.

It cannot be inferred that a transferee took the risk of the note's being a forgery because it was passed to him long after dishonor, at a heavy discount.—Semmes v. Wilson, Case No. 12,658.

§ 41. Liability of successive indorsers.

Where a note, after indorsements to others, is indorsed to the first indorser, who reindorses it, the intermediate indorsers are not liable thereon.—Howe Mach. Co. v. Hadden, Case No. 6,785.

All indorsers or assignors of any instrument in writing, assignable by law for the payment of money (in Arkansas), become equally liable with the maker, obligor, or payee, on receiving due notice of the nonpayment or protest of such instrument.—Campbell v. Jordan, Case No. 2,362.

In the case of a raised check, passing through several banks before it was finally paid by the drawee, the loss must fall upon the one who first gave it credit by indorsement.—First Nat. Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, Case No. 4,801.

§ 42. Discharge of indorser—By extending time of payment.

An agreement between the holder and drawer, which suspends the right of the holder to enforce payment, will discharge the indorser, for it suspends his rights.—Bank of the United States v. Hatch, Case No. 918; Cooper v. Gibbs, Id. 3,194.

A contract to give time to the maker does not discharge the indorser unless it is valid and enforceable.—Ex parte Balch, Case No. 789.

The indorser is discharged where the indorsee gives time to the maker, either to pay the note or the mortgage securing it.—Morgan v. Tipton, Case No. 9,809.

The indorser of a promissory note is discharged by the holder giving the maker time to pay by installments.—Cope v. Huntt, Case No. 3,206.

If new notes or securities are taken by the holder of a note, and time given without consent of the indorser upon the old note, he is discharged.—White v. Burns, Case No. 17,539; Bank of United States v. Lee, Id. 921.

The first indorser is discharged where, after dishonor, an extension of credit is given without his consent, by an arrangement made between the maker, the holder, and subsequent indorsers.—Seventh Ward Bank v. Hanrick, Case No. 12,678.

An indorser on the notes of a bankrupt is not discharged by an extension of time given to the bankrupt by the holder.—Tiernan v. Woodruff, Case No. 14,028.

Giving time to the maker of a promissory note, after judgment against both maker and indorser, does not discharge the indorser.—King v. Thompson, Case No. 7,807.

Giving time by indorsee to maker in consideration of part payment, after obtaining judgment and issuing execution against him, discharges the indorser.—Low v. Underhill, Case No. 8,561.

The indulgence which will release an indorser of negotiable paper must not only be given upon a good consideration, but must be for some limited and definite time within which the creditor's right of action is suspended.—Varnum v. Bellamy, Case No. 16,886.

The payment of a part of the debt and accepting claims to be applied when collected in further payment, under a verbal agreement not to sue, constitute no legal consideration for a promise of forbearance.—Varnum v. Bellamy, Case No. 16,886.

After demand and notice, the holder may give time to the maker, or take time note of indorser, without releasing subsequent indorser.—Bank of United States v. Abbott, Case No. 906; Same v. MacDonald, Id. 925.

§ 43. —— In other ways.

A representation by the holder of a note to the indorser that it has been paid will not discharge the indorser if he has not been injured thereby.—Ex parte Balch, Case No. 789.

An attorney who receives a note for collection cannot, without special instructions, make a binding agreement to release the indorser from his liability.—Varnum v. Bellamy, Case No. 16,886.

The liability of an indorser, after waiver of demand and notice, is fixed, and is not discharged by the subsequent guaranty of payment by a third person.—Corbett v. Woodward, Case No. 3,223.

After demand and notice, a neglect to enforce security until it becomes inadequate by depreciation will not discharge the indorser.—Bank of Alexandria v. Wilson, Case No. 856.

The indorser is released where, without his consent, the holder assents to the discharge of the maker in bankruptcy.—In re McDonald, Case No. 8,753.

A release of a remote indorser by the holder of a note is a discharge of the subsequent indorsers.—Hawkins v. Thompson, Case No. 6,246.

The indorser is discharged where the holder, on request, does not sue the maker, who was at the time solvent. (Act Va. Dec. 23, 1794.)—Patton v. Violett, Case No. 10,839.

The holder of a note cannot be chargeable with gross negligence in failing to sue the maker, who resides in another state.—Davie v. Hatcher, Case No. 3,610.

An intention of the parties, appearing from the circumstances, on releasing the maker, to preserve the liability of the indorser, will be given effect equal to an express declaration.—Eldrege v. Chacon, Case No. 4,329.

§ 44. Rights of indorsee against indorser.

In Indiana, on all other instruments save those given to banks, the maker must be prosecuted to insolvency, before the indorsee can have recourse to his indorser.—Morgan v. Tipton, Case No. 9,809; Mott v. Wright, Id. 9,883.

Under the provision of the Indiana statute giving the indorsee a right of action against the indorser, after having used due diligence to obtain the money, the indorsee of a note secured by a mortgage on lands in another state need not first exhaust such security.—Swiggett v. Seymour, Case No. 13,701.

The holder of a promissory note has no equity against a remote indorser unless he has used due diligence to recover from the parties liable to him at law.—Dean v. Marsteller, Case No. 3,710.

The rights of a holder of a protested bill as to one party cannot be affected by his failure to sue another party.—Brown v. Jackson, Case No. 2,016.

An action will not lie by an indorsee against a remote indorser upon a promissory note which is not mercantile negotiable paper.—Bradley v. Knox, Case No. 1,782.

A bona fide indorsee may recover against the indorser of a void note by showing the consideration paid therefor.—Root v. Wallace, Case No. 12,039.

A person to whom a forged note has been passed may recover on the original consideration, without showing that defendant had knowledge of the forgery.—Semmes v. Wilson, Case No. 12,658.

(C) ASSIGNMENT OR SALE.

§ 45. What law governs.

An assignment of a note is a new contract, and is governed by the law of the place where it is made.—Dundas v. Bowler, Case No. 4,141.

See, also, ante, §§ 14, 36; post, § 61.

§ 46. Parties.

An assignment of a promissory note by one of two payees when not in partnership transfers only one-half interest and will not enable the assignee to sue the maker.—Dwight v. Pease, Case No. 4,217.

§ 47. Rights of assignee.

If a draft, not negotiable, be accepted by the drawee, with an agreement to pay the amount to any person to whom it is assigned, the assignee, after notice, may maintain an action for money had and received to his use against the acceptor.—Weston v. Penniman, Case No. 17,455.

In Pennsylvania the assignee of a note not under seal, containing a warrant to confess judgment, may sue in his own name.—Mitchell v. Walker, Case No. 9,670.

No particular form of assignment is necessary. It is sufficient that the intent to assign appear.—Mitchell v. Walker, Case No. 9,670.

One who receives from the drawer a nonnegotiable bill in payment of a debt may recover against all persons responsible on it, though it is not accepted.—Brown v. Jackson, Case No. 2,015.

An assignment of a note in one state to an unauthorized banking association thereof gives the assignee no right to sue in the state where the note is payable.—McClintick v. Cummins, Case No. 8,699.

After a note is taken up by the indorser its negotiability ceases, and his assignee cannot sue in his own name.—Swann v. Scholfield, Case No. 13,676.

The assignee of a note, taking it from the payee after dishonor, cannot enforce it against the maker, who has been released by the payee.—Gelston v. Adams, Case No. 5,302.

§ 48. Equities and defenses against assignee.

A note assigned after its maturity leaves all equities open between the original parties.—Gwathney v. McLane, Case No. 5,882.

The maker may set up the same defense against a note in the hands of an assignee that he might make if it were held by the payee.—Bradley v. Trammel, Case No. 1,788a.

Notes assigned as collateral security for an antecedent debt, to one who had notice of the consideration, are subject in his hands to the defenses available against the payee.—Smith v. Babcock, Case No. 13,009.

A plea that the defendant paid the note to the assignor before he had notice of the assignment cannot be sustained against the assignee.—Patterson v. Atherton, Case No. 10,822.

It is no defense to a suit against the maker of a note, by one to whom it was assigned after it was dishonored, that it was given to pay for land which had not been conveyed, where defendant has not demanded a conveyance.—Holy v. Rhodes, Case No. 6,651.

§ 49. Recourse by assignee to assignor.

The assignment of a note by writing guaranteeing "the ultimate payment" does not change the liability from that of an ordinary assignor.—Dent v. Ashley, Case No. 3,809b.

A note in the hands of an assignee is prima facie evidence that the face thereof was paid by him for it, but the assignor can prove what actually was paid.—Martin v. Kercheval, Case No. 9,163.

The assignee of a note must use due diligence, by prosecuting the maker to insolvency, or show some sufficient excuse for the failure, before he can hold the assignor liable.—Lemmons v. Choteau, Case No. 8,239a.

That the maker is a transient and unsettled person, without averring insolvency, is not sufficient to excuse the holder from using due diligence.—Lemmons v. Choteau, Case No. 8,239a.

The assignee of a note must use due diligence to recover of the maker, who is not notoriously insolvent or removed from the state, before he can resort to the assignor.—Dent v. Ashley, Case No. 3,809b.

(D) BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

§ 50. Statutory provisions.

A collateral agreement between the parties to a negotiable note that it is to be paid only on certain conditions cannot be set up in defense to a suit by a bona fide transferee for value, though a state statute provides that the maker may set up any defense against the assignee which he could make against the payee.—Thomas v. Page, Case No. 13,907.

§ 51. Mode or form of transfer.

An unauthorized transfer, to a bona fide purchaser, of certificates of a public debt, indorsed in blank to facilitate partial payment and exchange for other certificates, vests an absolute title in the purchaser.—Combs v. Hodge, Case No. 3,048.

§ 52. Actual and constructive notice.

Where one of the firm accepts a bill of exchange for accommodation, without the knowledge of his partners, the drawer has a right to sell the same, and those taking it, though with knowledge, are bona fide holders.—City Bank of Columbus v. Beach, Case No. 2,737.

One who takes a check with knowledge that the person who transferred it had no right to do so cannot recover against the drawer.—Rounsavel v. Scholfield, Case No. 12,085.

A merchant purchasing a note at heavy discount, after learning of insolvency of payees, is not a bona fide holder as against previous lien of judgment creditor's bill.—Cummings v. Mead, Case No. 3,476.

An indorsement on a bill of exchange, "Credit my account," is restrictive in character, and prevents further negotiability of the bill.—Lee v. Chillicothe Branch Bank, Cases Nos. 8,186, 8,187.

Such indorsement is sufficient to apprise subsequent indorsees of want of authority to transfer to them.—Lee v. Chillicothe Branch Bank, Case No. 8,186.

An indorsee of a note given in payment for a horse, in the sale of which there was a fraudulent concealment of the animal's unsound condition, is not an innocent holder for value, where he owned an interest in the horse, and the seller was his agent.—Pease v. McClelland, Case No. 10,882.

A transferee of a draft, having knowledge that the acceptance was procured by fraud, cannot rely upon statements of the acceptor made to the one who negotiated it and repeated to him.—Platt v. Jerome, Case No. 11,217.

The rule of lis pendens does not apply to commercial paper.—In re Great Western Tel. Co., Case No. 5,740.

The pendency of the suit on negotiable paper is not constructive notice to purchasers thereof. —Preble v. Portage County, Case No. 11,380.

§ 53. Facts putting on inquiry.

A bona fide purchaser is not bound to inquire into the character of a note which on its face is valid.—Ex parte Estabrook, Case No. 4,534.

Circumstances that would put a prudent man on inquiry will not affect the title of the purchaser of a note before maturity, if he did not in fact know of any defect in the title.—Ex parte Estabrook, Case No. 4,534.

Where a promissory note is fair upon its face, an indorsee is not bound to inquire into the consideration or circumstances under which it was given.—In re Great Western Tel. Co., Case No. 5,740.

A bill drawn by a partner in two firms, in the name of one, upon the other, payable to himself for his individual debt, and accepted, is enforceable in the hands of an indorsee without notice.—Babcock v. Stone, Case No. 701.

§ 54. Consideration in general.

The holder of a note given for a fraudulent consideration will be held to strict proof that he paid value.—Prentice v. Zane, Case No. 11,383.

Payment need not be in cash to make one a bona fide purchaser of a promissory note.—In re Great Western Tel. Co., Case No. 5,740.

A creditor to whom a note is given with directions to collect it and to retain the surplus, where the debt is afterwards settled, is not a holder for value.—Cummings v. Mead, Case No. 3,476.

§ 55. Taking as collateral security.

A pledgee in good faith and for value before maturity is a bona fide holder for value.—Ex parte Kelty, Case No. 7,681.

One holding a promissory note as collateral security is not a purchaser for value.—Mack v. Baker, Case No. 8,834.

Notes of third parties to himself, passed by a borrower to a lender with his own note, are good in the lender's hands, though originally without consideration. The makers can protect themselves as sureties only by positive notice to the lender of the want of consideration and that the paper was to be used as a security only.—New York Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Cowperthwaite, Case No. 10,207.

§ 56. Taking as security for antecedent debt.

The holder of a negotiable bill or note taken as security for a pre-existing debt is a holder for value, unaffected by equities subsisting between the original parties.—In re Huddell, Case No. 6,825; Fogg v. Stickney, Id. 4,898. CONTRA, see Prentice v. Zane, Case No. 11,383.

An indorsee in good faith of a note wrongfully diverted and transferred as collateral security for a precedent debt is not affected by equities existing between the original parties.—National Bank of Republic v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co., Case No. 10,039.

§ 57. Taking in payment of existing debt.

A pre-existing debt is a sufficient consideration for the assignment of a note to close the equities between the original parties.—Riley v. Anderson, Case No. 11,835; Cummings v. Mead, Id. 3,476.

By the commercial law, a negotiable promissory note, received in payment of a pre-existing debt, bona fide, and without notice, is not subject to the equities between the original parties as an accommodation note, though the rule in New York be otherwise.—Crosby v. Lane, Case No. 3,423.

Where such note is accepted as payment on false and fraudulent representations of the assignor as to its making, and the responsibility of the parties, the original debt is not extinguished.—Crosby v. Lane, Case No. 3,423.

A creditor to whom an agent transfers notes of his principal, before maturity, in consideration of the canceling of a security held against the agent, held a bona fide purchaser for value where the principal was indebted for advances made.—Turnbull v. Thomas, Case No. 14,243.

A person to whom an accommodation indorser transfers the note in payment of a pre-existing debt due from the makers, though he has knowledge of the circumstances, may recover thereon against the indorser.—Varnum v. Bellamy, Case No. 16,886.

The payee of a draft accepted for the accommodation of the maker, who takes it in satisfaction of a debt due from the maker, or as security, without notice of any fraud on the acceptor, is a bona fide holder for value, and stands in the same position as if the draft were drawn in favor of the acceptor, and indorsed by him to such holder.—Pugh v. Durfee, Case No. 11,460.

§ 58. Rights of bona fide purchasers.

The intended misapplication of the proceeds of a note drawn by a partner in the firm name, apparently in the course of the partnership business, will not affect the rights of a bona fide holder.—Bush v. Crawford, Case No. 2,224.

An innocent purchaser for value of a treasury note, on which the indorsee's name is forged, and the name of the indorser is erased, is entitled to receive the amount thereof from the treasury.—Jarvis v. Kendall, Case No. 7,227.

The assignee of one partner held to have a prima facie title to notes taken by the other partner for goods sold after the assignment, as against a purchaser with notice.—Fisher v. Lord, Case No. 4,821.

V. PRESENTMENT, DEMAND, NOTICE, AND PROTEST.

§ 59. Necessity in general.

An election by the holder to consider what passed on presentation of a bill as a nonacceptance is binding on him, as against other parties.—Mitchell v. De Grand, Case No. 9,661.

A demand of payment at the placed named is not necessary to charge the maker.—Beverley v. Beverley, Case No. 1,376; Brown v. Piatt, Id. 2,026; Bank of United States v. Bussard, Id. 911; Silver v. Henderson, Id. 12,854; Chillicothe Branch of State Bank v. Fox, Id. 2,683; Smith v. Johnson, Id. 13,067; Thompson v. Cook, Id. 13,952.

If defendant was ready to pay or did pay into the bank named as the place of payment the amount due, it is matter of defense.—Silver v. Henderson, Case No. 12,854.

Where a note may be discharged in property at a certain time, no demand is necessary.—Campbell v. Clark, Case No. 2,355a.

If an indorser is once fixed by due notice of the non-acceptance of a bill, no delay of the holder to return the bill and demand payment takes away his right of recovery, notwithstanding the drawer may, in the intermediate time, have failed.—Wild v. Bank of Passamaquoddy, Case No. 17,646.

One discounting a note for the joint benefit of the maker and indorsers, though in unequal amounts, need not make demand and give notice to recover against indorsers.—Bank of Washington v. Way, Case No. 957.

A payee of a promissory note indorsing it after dishonor is considered a drawer, and is not liable to the indorsee without demand and notice.—Cox v. Jones, Case No. 3,303.

The bank of Alexandria is bound to make demand and give notice to charge the indorser.—Bank of Alexandria v. Young, Case No. 858.

In Virginia the indorsee of a promissory note may recover at law against a remote indorser, without having given notice of nonpayment by the maker.—Dunlop v. Silver, Case No 4,169.

Notice to the indorser of nonpayment of a promissory note, not payable to order, is not necessary in Virginia.—Ish v. Mills, Case No. 7,104.

Notice of demand and nonpayment is necessary to charge the guarantor of a note or bill, whether his name be upon the paper or not; but in the latter case reasonable notice is sufficient.—Foote v. Brown, Case No. 4,909.

A foreign bill of exchange must be regularly protested, after a demand and refusal of payment.—Orr v. Lacy, Case No. 10,589.

Where a check is presented and not paid, notice of dishonor must be given the maker, in order to charge him.—Farwell v. Curtis, Case No. 4,690.

Notice to an indorser should be given, though he be beyond sea, if his residence is known, and reasonable diligence should be used to find his place of residence.—McMurtrie v. Jones, Case No. 8,905.

§ 60. Diligence required of holder.

The holder of a foreign bill, protested for nonacceptance, must give notice to the indorser as soon as possible, under all the circumstances, according to the usual course of communication.—Lindenberger v. Wilson, Case No. 8,361.

The holder of a bill of exchange, after demand and notice, is not bound to active diligence.—Barnes v. Ryder, Case No. 1,020.

Where the holder of a check accepts the check of the bank in payment, he must present and collect it the same day, or be chargeable with laches.—Farwell v. Curtis, Case No. 4,690.

The loss falls on the holder of a check where he fails to present the same within a reasonable time, and the bank fails.—Farwell v. Curtis, Case No. 4,690.

The holder of a check cannot extend the time for which the drawer would be liable.—Farwell v. Curtis, Case No. 4,690.

The holder of a check makes the drawee his agent where he sends it by mail to the drawee for collection and return, and must bear any loss arising after the time when the check could have been presented by express or other usual method.—Farwell v. Curtis, Case No. 4,690.

If the maker of a draft had a well-founded expectation that if presented within a reasonable time it would be honored, the holder must use due diligence in presenting it, and give him notice of its dishonor.—Olshausen v. Lewis, Case No. 10,507.

Where the holder retains a draft drawn on a bank for more than a month without presentation, and waits three weeks longer to protest it, he cannot recover of the drawer.—Olshausen v. Lewis, Case No. 10,507.

A drawee to whom a collecting agent mails a check for collection is a subagent, and the holder is chargeable with the subagent's negligence, either in presenting to himself or in giving notice of dishonor.—Simonds v. Black River Ins. Co., Case No. 12,874.

Delay in receiving a reply, due wholly to the postal service, does not charge a collecting agent with notice of the dishonor of a check which he has mailed to the drawee for collection.—Simonds v. Black River Ins. Co., Case No. 12,874.

A creditor holding a note whose proceeds are to be collected and applied to discharge the debt is bound to use due diligence to collect the note, and give notice of nonpayment.—Foote v. Brown, Case No. 4,909.

If the holder of a bill remitted as payment of a pre-existing debt does all in his power to notify the one remitting it of its dishonor, he is not liable.—Gallagher v. Roberts, Case No. 5,195.

§ 61. What law governs.

A note or foreign bill of exchange is a contract of the state in which it is made payable, and is governed by its laws as to demand and notice and protest. — Gaylord v. Johnson, Case No. 5,285; Golden v. Prince, Id. 5,509; Indseth v. Pierce, Id. 7,026; Neederer v. Barber, Id. 10,079.

See, also, ante, §§ 14, 36, 45.

§ 62. Presentment for acceptance.

A foreign bill of exchange must be presented for acceptance within a reasonable time, and what is a reasonable time depends upon the circumstances of each particular case.—Wallace v. Agry, Case No. 17,096.

A bill of exchange, payable at sight, must be presented within a reasonable time. In the case of a foreign bill, it need not be sent by the first vessel.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,519.

The drawer of a bill is liable only as indorser where it is remitted to, and received by, his creditor in payment of a debt, whether the drawer had funds in the hands of the drawee or not.—Denniston v. Imbrie, Case No. 3,802.

§ 63. Notice of nonacceptance.

Where a bill is presented and dishonored, though it was not necessary to present it, notice must be given without waiting the maturity of the bill.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,520.

Notice of protest of a bill of exchange must be given by the earliest practicable post after the bill is dishonored, where the parties do not live in the same town.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,520.

The burden is upon the party charged with the duty of giving notice of nonacceptance or dishonor of proving the manner in which it was given, and of any legal excuses for its delay.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,520.

Want of notice of nonacceptance is not excused by an understanding between plaintiff and defendant that the bill should not be sent on for acceptance.—Nicholson v. Patton, Case No. 10,250.

A protest for nonpayment will not supply the place of a protest for nonacceptance where the bill has been presented.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,519.

An unexplained delay of nine days in giving notice of nonacceptance of a foreign bill held fatal.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,519.

§ 64. Presentment for payment and demand—Who may make.

Demand and notice may be made by notary's clerk.—Bank of Alexandria v. Wilson, Case No. 856.

A justice of the peace in Mississippi is ex officio notary public for purpose of protest and notice.—Austen v. Miller, Case No. 661.

§ 65. —— Upon whom to be made.

Demand where maker of notes dies before maturity, see Bank of Washington v. Reynolds, Case No. 954.

In the case of a joint and several promissory note, a demand must be made upon both makers to charge the indorser, though one resides in another state.—Tayloe v. Davidson, Case No. 13,769.

Demand of payment on one of the firm held sufficient to charge the indorser of a firm note given after dissolution.—Greatrake v. Brown, Case No. 5,743.

An indorser who promised to pay in case of the insolvency of the maker is entitled to the usual demand and notice.—Offutt v. Hall, Case No. 10,449.

§ 66. —— Place.

Demand of payment of a note given by citizens of one state to citizens of another, in which it was dated, but not payable at any particular place, must be made at the usual place of business of the makers.—Burrows v. Hannegan, Case No. 2,205.

Demand at bank where payable, and which was holder, must be made, though maker had no funds to his credit.—Bank of United States v. Smith, Case No. 935.

A note made negotiable at a certain bank is not "payable" at that bank, and demand there is not necessary.—Beeding v. Thornton, Case No. 1,228.

Demand at government office, in which the maker was employed, in his absence, during his usual hours of business, where he lived out of town, held not sufficient.—Goldsborough v. Jones, Case No. 5,517.

A demand of the barkeeper of a tavern to which the livery stable was attached, in which the maker of a note occasionally left his horse while at a government office, in which he was employed, is not a sufficient demand.—Goldsborough v. Jones, Case No. 5,517.

§ 67. —— Time.

To hold the indorser of a note payable on demand, demand must be made within a reasonable time. An unexplained delay of seven months is unreasonable.—Martin v. Winslow, Case No. 9,172.

An indorser is not liable on a demand note where no demand is made within four years.—In re Crawford, Case No. 3,364.

A demand and notice more than five years after date on a demand note is not within a reasonable time.—In re Grant, Case No. 5,691.

The reasonable time within which a foreign bill of exchange, payable after sight, ought to be presented, must be determined with reference to the usage among merchants as to the delays in the negotiation and transmission of such bills.—Wallace v. Agry, Case No. 17,097.

A bill of exchange payable 60 days after sight, drawn in Havana upon London, need not be sent direct to London, and may be sent for sale to the United States.—Wallace v. Agry, Case No. 17,096.

Notes left for collection in the bank are due on the third day of grace, under the general commercial usage.—Hill v. Norvell, Case No. 6,497.

The day of the date is excluded, in computing the time when a note without grace is due.—Hill v. Norvell, Case No. 6,497.

The demand must be made on the last day of grace.—Auld v. Peyton, Case No. 654.

Demand (in District of Columbia) held not necessary until the day after the last day of grace.—Brent v. Coyle, Case No. 1,837.

The usage of the banks in the District of Columbia to make a demand on the fourth day of grace only applies to notes negotiated by the bank.—Hill v. Norvell, Case No. 6,497.

In the county of Washington, D. C., by usage, demand and notice, on the day after the last day of grace on a promissory note, will charge indorsers residing in the county, and having notice of the usage.—Smith v. Glover, Case No. 13,051.

Demand and notice on the day after the expiration of the days of grace is in time, in the District of Columbia.—Bank of Alexandria v. Wilson, Case No. 856.

A demand on the last day of grace, after banking hours, is not too soon.—Bank of Metropolis v. Walker, Case No. 903; Munroe v. Mandeville, Id. 9,929.

Where a note, drawn without grace, falls due on Sunday, demand and protest on Saturday will hold the indorsers.—Doremus v. Burton, Case No. 4,002; Mandeville v. Rumney, Id. 9,015.

If the last day of grace fall on Sunday, demand must be made on Saturday, but the notice may be given on Monday.—Irwin v. Brown, Case No. 7,080.

Demand of payment on the 5th of July of a note due on the 1st–4th of July is too late to charge the indorser, and the insolvency of the maker will not excuse the delay.—Neale v. Peyton, Case No. 10,071.

Demand on the day after the third day of grace is too late.—Beeding v. Pic, Case No. 1,227; Lindenberger v. Beale, Id. 8,359.

Upon a note due 23d and 26th July, demand and notice after the 28th are too late, but demand and notice on the 27th are not.—Lenox v. Wright, Case No. 8,249.

Demand by a notary public, the day after the last day of grace, upon the indorser at his house (where the note was payable), without inquiring for the maker, or whether he had funds there, held not sufficient to bind a second indorser.—Mechanics' Bank v. Lynn, Case No. 9,382.

§ 68. —— Mode and sufficiency.

An indorser is bound by the usage of the local banks as to demand, notice, and protest, known to him at the time of indorsing.—Bank of Columbia v. Lawrence, Case No. 872; Same v. McKenny, Id. 874.

But not otherwise except upon his agreement.—Bank of Alexandria v. Deneale, Case No. 846.

Where note is payable at a certain bank demand need not be personal.—Bank of Metropolis v. Brent, Case No. 900; Bank of United States v. O'Neale, Id. 932.

Inquiry made by the teller of the bookkeeper of a bank as to whether a deposit has been made to pay a note left for collection is a sufficient demand.—Browning v. Andrews, Case No. 2,040.

The demand is good though the teller acted as clerk of the protesting notary.—Browning v. Andrews, Case No. 2,040.

If the maker is not found at his office or his dwelling house on the last day of grace, so that payment of the note cannot be demanded, the note is dishonored.—Greatrake v. Brown, Case No. 5,743.

On a demand of the maker the note must be produced.—Peabody v. Denton, Case No. 10,867.

A protest of interest coupons is sufficient to charge the indorser of the notes from which they were cut, though the notary did not have the notes as well as the coupons to present for payment.—Codman v. Vermont & C. R. Co., Case No. 2,936.

§ 69. —— Excuses for failure to present.

Demand and notice excused where drawer has no funds and no reason to expect payment.—Allen v. King, Case No. 226.

The mere fact that the indorser of a note is a member of the firm by which it is made will not excuse a failure of demand and notice, although the firm were insolvent when the note was given, and the indorser knew that it was not paid.—In re Grant, Case No. 5,691.

A promissory note transferred by indorsement after maturity is payable on demand, and demand and notice are necessary to charge the indorser, though he knew the maker to be insolvent at the time of indorsing it.—Stewart v. French, Case No. 13,427.

Insolvency of the maker, in Virginia, dispenses with suit and demand and notice.—Offutt v. Hall, Cases Nos. 10,449, 10,450.

Where the maker dies before the note falls due, demand or notice to charge the indorser is not necessary where he administers upon the maker's estate.—Union Bank of Georgetown v. Magruder, Case No. 14,360.

§ 70. —— Effect of delay or failure.

The want of due presentation of a check and of notice of nonpayment exonerates the drawer in so far only as actual damages resulted.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,985.

Agent liable for failure to make demand and give notice.—Allen v. King, Case No. 226.

§ 71. Protest and certificate.

A protest cannot be made in the name of a notary by his clerk.—Sacrider v. Brown, Case No. 12,205.

One protest to a bill of exchange is sufficient.—Indseth v. Pierce, Case No. 7,026.

The fact that the notary's signature and part of a notice of protest are printed does not invalidate it.—Spalding v. Krutz, Case No. 13,201.

A notary should certify all the facts that occurred in relation to a protest of commercial paper.—Searight v. Calbraith, Case No. 12,585.

A protest which does not state that the notary informed the indorser of demand and refusal is insufficient.—Bank of Alexandria v. Wilson, Case No. 856.

A statement in the protest of a demand on a drawer, of nonpayment, and that notice was given to the indorser, is prima facie evidence of due notice.—Eldrege v. Chacon, Case No. 4,329.

The notary's certificate under seal is evidence of the facts therein recited.—Jones v. Heaton, Case No. 7,468; Indseth v. Pierce, Id. 7,026.

§ 72. Notice of nonpayment and protest —To whom to be given.

The indorser is, in all cases, entitled to due notice of the dishonor of a bill of exchange.—Ramdulollday v. Darieux, Case No. 11,543.

Where there are two joint indorsers notice must be given to both.—Gantt v. Jones, Case No. 5,213.

The holder of a check must give notice to the drawer of refusal of payment by the bank, and such notice must be averred in a declaration thereon.—Sherman v. Comstock, Case No. 12,764.

A notice left with a person authorized to receive notices is not good when given after the indorser's death.—Brent v. Bank of Washington, Case No. 1,834.

Where indorser dies intestate, notice left with his son at intestate's place of business, before appointment of administrator, held sufficient.—Bank of Columbia v. King, Case No. 871.

A bank which receives a note for collection from another bank, indorsed by the cashier thereof, need not give notice of nonpayment to any other party than such bank.—Codrington v. Adams, Case No. 2,937.

An agent to present a note for payment is not bound to give notice of dishonor to the indorser, but only to his principal, who in turn gives such notice.—Bank of United States v. Goddard, Case No. 917.

An accommodation indorser is not entitled to notice unless he has actually sustained damages by its want.—Bank of Columbia v. French, Case No. 867.

Notice of dishonor need not be given to parties who are not liable on account of the dishonor, and can look to no person on the bill for indemnification, or for payment of it.—Hutz v. Karthause, Case No. 6,963.

§ 73. —— Place.

A personal notice, to charge the indorser, may be served anywhere.—Hyslop v. Jones, Case No. 6,990.

Where the indorser lives in the city, the notice must be served on him personally, or at his place of business or residence.—Hyslop v. Jones, Case No. 6,990.

But if deposited in the post office, and in fact received by him in time, it is sufficient.—Hyslop v. Jones, Case No. 6,990.

A written notice of the dishonor of the note, left at the dwelling house of the indorser, is sufficient.—Greatrake v. Brown, Case No. 5,743.

Notice left in the indorser's separate room, in a business house where he is a clerk, is sufficient.—Bank of United States v. MacDonald, Case No. 925.

Notice left with a boarder at the same house with the indorser, with the request to hand it to him, is sufficient.—Bank of United States v. Hatch, Case No. 918.

A notice left at a boarding house where the indorser resided when it was drawn, but which he had left without the holder's knowledge, having embarked for Europe, is sufficient.—McMurtrie v. Jones, Case No. 8,905.

Where the notary does not find the indorser at home, and leaves a written notice with his family, it is sufficient.—Cana v. Friend, Case No. 2,375.

Notice left at shop of indorser's son, though connected with his dwelling house, held not sufficient.—Bank of United States v. Corcoran, Case No. 912.

Where the indorser has a known place of business within the city, notice must be given to him there, irrespective of his residence.—Spalding v. Krutz, Case No. 13,201.

§ 74. —— Time.

A demand of payment on the third day of grace, after bank hours, and notice to the indorser and protest on the same day, are not too soon, if the note is in bank for collection, and the maker has been notified thereof; such being the usage of the banks.—Munroe v. Mandeville, Case No. 9,929.

Where a demand is made on the last day of grace, notice to the indorser on the next day is in time.—Read v. Carbery, Case No. 11,604; Bank of Metropolis v. Walker, Id. 903.

Notice on the third day of grace, though after bank hours, is too soon.—Auld v. Mandeville, Case No. 653.

If a note fall due on Saturday, and payment be demanded of the maker on that day, notice to the indorser on Monday is not too late.—Crawford v. Milligan, Case No. 3,370; Seventh Ward Bank v. Hanrick, Id. 12,678.

If Sunday be the last day of grace, the demand, protest, and notice may be on Saturday, and suit may be instituted the same day, after banking hours.—Mandeville v. Rumney, Case No. 9,016.

But in such case the notice may be given on Monday, the demand having been made on Saturday.—McElroy v. English, Case No. 8,782.

Notices of dishonor sent through agents must be transmitted within the time allowed to the principal.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,519.

Where an agent, who received directions by mail on noon of Saturday to give notice of protest, did not give such notice until Monday, held, that the drawer was discharged.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,518.

Notice of demand and nonpayment need not be given during business hours.—Bonner v. New Orleans, Case No. 1,631.

§ 75. —— Mode and sufficiency.

A copy of the protest for nonacceptance need not accompany the notice of dishonor.—Wallace v. Agry, Case No. 17,096.

Notice is sufficient if it describe the note so that the indorsers must know it, and state that payment was demanded and protest made, and that the holders look to the indorsers for payment.—Cooper v. Gibbs, Case No. 3,194.

Due notice, as between any indorsers, is sufficient to charge such indorsers in favor of all subsequent indorsers.—Bank of United States v. Goddard, Case No. 917.

The receipt of notice cannot be inferred from an agreement by the indorser not to take advantage of the statute of limitations, and to authorize an attorney to docket a suit.—Bank of United States v. Corcoran, Case No. 912.

A verbal notice, on the day following the last day of grace, that payment had been demanded, and that the note would be protested if not paid, is not sufficient.—Bank of United States v. Barry, Case No. 907.

The delivery of a note to a deputy notary is not per se notice to the notary who was indorser thereon.—Bank of Columbia v. Mackall, Case No. 873.

A notice wrongly stating amount of note is ineffectual.—Bank of Alexandria v. Saunders, Case No. 852.

A mistake in the recital of the date of the note will not invalidate the notice.—Bank of United States v. Watterston, Case No. 941.

As to the sufficiency of a notice of dishonor of a bill held by the government, to the transaction of whose business unusual delays are incident.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,519.

Inserting the name "John" instead of "James" will invalidate the notice, unless the party have good reason to believe that "James" was intended.—Underwood v. Huddlestone, Case No. 14,340.

The usages of an office, as regards the service of a notice, cannot make that evidence which is in itself not so.—Whitehead v. Jones, Case No. 17,563.

Testimony of a notary that he made demand at the shop of an indorser, but did not remember whether he saw him, is not sufficient proof of notice.—Mechanics' Bank v. Taylor, Case No. 9,383.

§ 76. —— By mail.

The next mail after protest is sufficient.—Austen v. Miller, Case No. 661.

Notice of nonpayment, if by mail, must be given on the last day of grace, where the mail does not close until six hours after the close of the bank.—Bank of Alexandria v. Swann, Case No. 853.

Notice mailed after closing of mail on the day after the last day of grace is too late.—Bank of United States v. Swann, Case No. 937.

If demand is made on Saturday, and notice by mail would reach the indorser on the same evening, it is too late to mail the notice on the following Monday.—King v. Foyles, Case No. 7,792.

The notice is properly directed to the post office where the party is in the practice of receiving his mail, though it be not the nearest post office.—Sherman v. Clark, Case No. 12,763.

Where the indorser lives at the place where the note is payable, notice of protest received through the mail on the day of dishonor or the next is sufficient.—Spalding v. Krutz, Case No. 13,201.

Notice by mail is not sufficient as to an indorser residing in the country where he had a house in town usually resorted to by him for business.—Bank of Columbia v. Lawrence, Case No. 872.

Notice to an indorser by mail must be directed to the post office nearest his place of residence.—Fowler v. Warfield, Case No. 5,004.

A notice to an indorser, who is a member of congress, then in session, left in the post office of the senate or house of representatives, is not sufficient.—Hill v. Norvell, Case No. 6,497.

Where an indorser has a public office in town, which is kept open every day, a notice deposited in the mail is not sufficient, though he resides five miles out of town, and the post office is his nearest post office.—Vowell v. Patton, Case No. 17,022.

In case of a war between two countries, a notice of nonpayment, sent between the countries through the post, is not good.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,519.

A notice by mail of a protest of a foreign bill, deposited in a mail bag of a vessel belonging to a nation at the time at war with another, is insufficient, where not followed by a duplicate notice.—Philips v. Janney, Case No. 11,095.

§ 77. —— Excuses for failure to give notice.

Demand, and notice to the indorser, are not necessary, where the maker is insolvent.—Riddle v. Mott, Case No. 11,810.

Notice to the indorser is not necessary where he knew the maker to be insolvent at the time of the indorsement.—Morris v. Gardner, Case No. 9,830.

Notice of nonpayment is excused where the holder called at the indorser's place of business, in business hours, and found it closed.—Bowie v. Blacklock, Case No. 1,729.

Want of funds in the hands of the drawee of a bill of exchange renders notice to the drawer of nonacceptance or nonpayment unnecessary.—Read v. Wilkinson, Case No. 11,611; Baker v. Gallagher, Id. 768; Cox v. Simms, Id. 3,306.

A drawer of a check is only entitled to notice of nonpayment where he draws in the reasonable expectation of having funds to meet its payment.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,985; Valk v. Simmons, Id. 16,815.

The accommodation drawer of a check on a bank in which he had no funds is entitled to notice of nonpayment, where the holder took it with knowledge that the drawer had reasonable expectations that the drawee would furnish funds to meet it.—Mackall v. Goszler, Case No. 8,835.

Notice of nonpayment and protest is unnecessary where the drawee, having a trifling balance due to the drawer in his hands, gave notice that bills would not be honored.—Hopkirk v. Page, Case No. 6,697.

A state of war between the countries in which the drawer and drawee respectively reside will excuse notice of nonpayment and protest to the drawer until within a reasonable time after the impediment is removed.—Hopkirk v. Page, Case No. 6,697.

The transfer of property by the maker of a promissory note to the indorser for the express purpose of paying the debt will dispense with notice of nonpayment, if the amount of property thus assigned be sufficient to satisfy the liability; not otherwise, although all the property of the maker may have been thus assigned.—Woodbury v. Crum, Case No. 17,969.

If, however, the assignment to the indorser is in trust for general creditors, and sufficient only for the payment of a small portion of the debts of the maker, such transfer, although including all the debtor's property, is not sufficient to excuse the want of notice to the indorser.—Woodbury v. Crum, Case No. 17,969.

§ 78. —— Effect of delay or failure to give.

Where the parties live within two miles of each other, nine days' delay to give notice is fatal.—Morris v. Gardner, Case No. 9,830.

If one of the joint indorsers pay the note, he cannot recover a moiety from the other indorser, to whom notice of dishonor was not given.—Gantt v. Jones, Case No. 5,213.

§ 79. Waiver of presentment, demand, protest, and notice.

An indorser who, with knowledge that no notice of nonpayment was given him, promises to pay the note, waives such notice.—Perry v. Rhodes, Case No. 11,011.

Where the drawer of a bill, after it is drawn, gives the drawee notice not to pay it, presentation for acceptance and payment is waived.—Neederer v. Barber, Case No. 10,079.

The waiver of objection as to want of notice may be after, as well as before, the laches.—Bank of Columbia v. Mackall, Case No. 873.

An indorser, by taking partial indemnity, after the note becomes due, does not thereby waive legal notice.—Burrows v. Hannegan, Case No. 2,205.

A request by the indorser of a note to the holder to pursue the maker is not evidence of waiver of demand and notice, but the jury may infer therefrom due demand and notice.—Riggs v. St. Clair, Case No. 11,829.

§ 80. New promise after discharge.

A subsequent promise by an indorser to pay, made with full knowledge of his discharge, will bind him.—Morris v. Gardner, Case No. 9,830.

A promise by an indorser to pay, after being discharged by neglect of due notice, is not binding unless made with knowledge of all material facts.—Martin v. Winslow, Case No. 9,172.

A promise to pay does not bind an indorser who did not know at the time that he was discharged by the laches of the holder.—Good v. Sprigg, Case No. 5,532.

A promise to pay by the indorser is presumptive evidence of due notice of protest and nonpayment.—Sherman v. Clark, Case No. 12,763.

Admission to a stranger by an indorser that he is willing to pay the debt will not dispense with proof of demand and notice, etc.—Gassaway v. Jones, Case No. 5,263.

VI. PAYMENT.

§ 81. What constitutes in general.

A guarantor may take up the paper guaranteed, and transfer his claim as guarantor to the persons from whom he obtained the means with which to take up the paper.—Fourth Nat. Bank v. Walker, Case No. 4,992.

Purchase of notes by trustee for another held not to amount to a payment.—Ex parte Balch, Case No. 789.

A landlord who also holds a note of his tenant with a deed of trust of personalty as security must apply the proceeds of such property distrained for rent to the note, as against an indorser.—Bank of United States v. Smith, Case No. 936.

A promissory note given as collateral for a note borrowed is not discharged by the borrower's taking up the borrowed note with funds furnished by the lender.—Smith v. Johnson, Case No. 13,067.

If the holder receive an inland bill for the money due by the note, it is a discharge of the note, unless the parties otherwise agree.—Dunlop v. Silver, Case No. 4,169.

Bona fide payment by the maker to a fraudulent holder discharges the debt.—Alexander v. Horner, Case No. 169.

§ 82. Mode and sufficiency.

The taking of stock and cash in satisfaction of a debt on surrendering a note held to amount to a payment of such note.—In re Ford, Case No. 4,932.

A draft drawn on a bank is payable in current coin and not in depreciated bank notes.—Olshausen v. Lewis, Case No. 10,507.

The holder of a check is not bound to receive part payment thereof, even though the bank be willing to pay in part.—In re Brown, Case No. 1,985.

The payee of a note for the payment of money by a certain day, which may be discharged in property, has no right to demand property, nor can the obligor discharge it in property after the day of payment has passed.—Campbell v. Clark, Case No. 2,355a.

A qualified acceptance of bill of exchange to the amount of proceeds of certain property against which it was drawn, and subsequent application of such proceeds, is a satisfaction only pro tanto.—Cassel v. Dows, Case No. 2,502.

§ 83. Evidence of payment.

The possession by the payee of a time draft, unaccepted and uncanceled, is not prima facie evidence that he has paid it.—Hankin v. Squires, Case No. 6,025.

The circumstance that a draft does not bear the customary "Paid" stamp of the bank, nor appear on its books to have been paid, may be considered by the jury in determining the question of payment.—Hankin v. Squires, Case No. 6,025.

The possession of a bill of exchange by the drawee is prima facie evidence that he has paid all those who could claim against him thereon, and the indorser is a competent witness in a suit by the payee against the drawer.—Lonsdale v. Brown, Case No. 8,492.

§ 84. Effect of payment.

The holder of a bill of exchange cannot recover from the maker damages for its nonpayment after receiving the principal and interest from the indorser.—Tombeckbee Bank of Mobile v. ——, Case No. 14,082.

The holder of a bill before protest is not affected by a settlement between the drawer and payee.—Cox v. Simms, Case No. 3,306.

The payment, by the maker, of a judgment in favor of the assignee of a note, obtained in a suit against him alone, will not protect him from liability to the payees, in a prior suit by them to set aside the transfer, and recover the note, where he failed to give them notice of the second suit.—Pratt v. Burr, Case No. 11,373.

VII. ACTIONS.

Form of action, see "Debt, Action of," § 1.
Jurisdiction of suits by transferees as dependent upon citizenship or residence of parties, see "Courts," § 49.
Parol evidence, see "Evidence," § 68.

§ 85. Right of action.

If the plaintiff obtain possession of the defendant's acceptance by a fraudulent practice, he cannot recover upon it.—Wilson v. Cromwell, Case No. 17,799.

Where the drawer has no funds in the hands of the drawee, and the bill is not accepted, action may be brought before it is payable.—Baker v. Gallagher, Case No. 768.

In Illinois the indorsee of a promissory note, the maker of which has been adjudicated bankrupt, may proceed at once against the indorser.—National Bank of Commerce v. Booth, Case No. 10,036.

§ 86. Limitations.

The statute begins to run from the date of a note payable on demand.—Bartlett v. Rogers, Case No. 1,079.

In the case of a bill of exchange made payable at a particular place the statute does not commence to run until a demand is made at that place.—Picquet v. Curtis, Case No. 11,131.

The statute is no bar where the holder of an accepted bill of exchange was beyond seas at the time his cause of action accrued, and so continued until suit brought, though the indorsers always were residents of the United States.—Irving v. Sutton, Case No. 7,077.

The statute of one state is no bar to an action therein upon a note made by defendant in another state, in which plaintiff has always resided.—Lee v. Cassin, Case No. 8,184.

An action in New York on a promissory note made in Massachusetts is barred by the New York statute, though it would not be barred by the Massachusetts statute.—Nicolls v. Rodgers, Case No. 10,260.

§ 87. Defenses—In general.

Bona fide purchasers, see ante, §§ 50–58.

Defenses available against a bond given to secure a debt of another are available in action on a note given to extend the time of payment.—American Button-Hole, Over-Seaming & Sewing Mach. Co. v. Murray, Case No. 292.

The words "without offset," in common use on the face of negotiable paper, will not prevent an offset, as between the maker and payee.—Harmanson v. Bain, Case No. 6,073.

The acceptor of bills drawn under the usual forms of commercial letters of credit can compel the holder of the letter to furnish funds to meet the acceptances; and a bill due by the issuer of the letter to the holder cannot be set off against this obligation.—McCulloch v. Taylor, Case No. 8,740.

The mistake of arbitrators in making an award is not available as a defense to an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange drawn for the amount of the award.—Miller v. Butler, Case No. 9,565.

The maker of the note, having acquired the equitable interest of the assignor, may use it in his defense to an action at law on the note.—Warren v. Emerson, Case No. 17,195.

§ 88. —— Accommodation paper.

A purchaser for value of an accommodation bill, though with notice of its character, is entitled to recover from the party for whose benefit it was issued.—Perry v. Crammond, Case No. 11,005.

A promissory note given by the treasurer of a manufacturing corporation for the accommodation of a third person without authority is valid in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value before maturity.—Ex parte Estabrook, Case No. 4,534.

One who takes drafts of a national bank with knowledge of the fact that they were issued as accommodation paper cannot recover thereon against the bank in the hands of a receiver.—Johnston v. Charlottesville Nat. Bank, Case No. 7,425.

Knowledge that a note was accommodation paper will not prevent one who took the same in payment of an overdue note, or as security for a subsisting debt, from recovering thereon.—Molson v. Hayley, Case No. 9,702.

It is no defense to an accommodation acceptor of a bill of exchange that plaintiff took the same from the drawers in payment of a pre-existing debt, with knowledge that it was an accommodation paper.—Jewett v. Hone, Case No. 7,311.

§ 89. —— Fraud in inception.

Fraud or deception in obtaining the note is no defense to a suit by a bona fide holder for value, without notice.—Riley v. Anderson, Case No. 11,835; Mason v. Jones, Id. 9,240.

A member of a company, who individually discounts a note belonging to the company, without knowledge of fraud in its origin, is yet affected by the fraud of the company's agent.—Mason v. Jones, Case No. 9,240.

The defense of fraud may be set up against an indorsee of a note, who took it after maturity.—Slacom v. Wishart, Case No. 12,933.

§ 90. —— Illegality.

No matter how illegal or immoral the consideration of a note or bill may be, it is valid in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, unless made absolutely void by statute.—Hatch v. Burroughs, Case No. 6,203.

Bills drawn for an illegal consideration, or for one that has failed, cannot be enforced in the hands of a purchaser with notice.—Perry v. Crammond, Case No. 11,005.

Notes, bills, or other securities issued in aid of the war of the Rebellion are valid in the hands of a bona fide holder for value.—Hatch v. Burroughs, Case No. 6,203.

Collusion between the captors of a Spanish vessel and an American citizen, by which she was wrecked within the territory of the United States, and the cargo landed and duties regularly paid, is no bar to a recovery on bills of exchange given by the American citizen on purchase of the cargo.—Hopner v. Appleby, Case No. 6,699.

§ 91. —— Failure of consideration.

In Georgia, both total and partial failure of consideration is pleadable in defense to sealed notes or single bills.—Martin v. Bartow Iron Works, Case No. 9,157.

A partial failure of the consideration cannot be set up as a defense to the note given on a purchase.—Elminger v. Drew, Case No. 4,416.

Under the Oregon Code a partial failure of consideration is not a defense to an action upon a promissory note, but must be pleaded as a counterclaim.—Packwood v. Clark, Case No. 10,656.

The bankruptcy of a mutual insurance company is no defense to an action by the assignee of a note given for the premium on a policy of insurance.—Carey v. Nagle, Case No. 2,403.

Want of consideration in the making and indorsing of a note can be shown, against a remote party, only where he took with knowledge of such want between nearer parties.—Bank of British North America v. Ellis, Case No. 859.

The bona fide holder of a note given to a railroad company as subscription for stock may enforce it without regard to existing equities between the original parties.—Cooper v. Laber, Case No. 3,198.

The accommodation indorser of a renewal note given to a bank may show, in defense to a suit thereon by the bank, that the cashier promised, as consideration for his indorsement, that the bank would set off accruing claims for services rendered by the maker, so that he would not be held liable.—First Nat. Bank v. Cleaver, Case No. 4,800.

§ 92. —— Stolen instruments.

It is no defense to a bank note taken in the usual course of business that it was stolen from the rightful owner.—City Bank of Columbus v. Farmers' & Planters' Bank, Case No. 2,738.

§ 93. Set-off.

A joint and several note in the hands of an assignee may be set off in an action by one of the makers.—Pate v. Gray, Case No. 10,794a.

A maker of a promissory note, when sued by the indorsee, may set off the payee's note to him, which he held at the time he had notice of the assignment of his own note to plaintiff, though it was not then payable.—Tooker v. Thompson, Case No. 14,097.

In an action by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note, the defendant may set off the payee's note to him, which he held before and at the time he had notice of the assignment of his own note to the plaintiff, although not then payable, but becoming payable before his own note.—Stewart v. Anderson, Case No. 13,421.

Defendant cannot set off plaintiff's acceptance of defendant's draft, not due at the commencement of the action, but due before plea pleaded; nor can it be allowed as payment on the general issue of non assumpsit.—Deale v. Krofft, Case No. 3,698.

Damages on bills of exchange, paid by the defendant, upon bills drawn by him on the plaintiff, and which the plaintiff was bound to pay, may be set off.—De Taslet v. Crousellat, Case No. 3,827.

One of two joint makers of a promissory note cannot set off against him a note given by the payee to him individually.—Cobb v. Haydock, Case No. 2,923.

§ 94. Parties—Plaintiffs.

Possession of a note payable to bearer is prima facie evidence of right, and the holder may sue in his own name.—Halsted v. Lyon, Case No. 5,968.

The payee of a promissory note, who has been obliged to take it up on his indorsement, may recover the amount from the maker, upon a special count.—Reintzel v. Morgan, Case No. 11,683.

The indorsee of a promissory note not payable to order, but expressed to be "negotiable at" a certain bank, may maintain an action against the maker in his own name.—Muir v. Jenkins, Case No. 9,903.

Under an indorsement in blank the holder of a bill for collection may bring suit in his own name.—Orr v. Lacy, Case No. 10,589.

The acceptor of a bill which came into his hands after it was put in circulation is presumed to be the owner, and he may recover thereon against the maker.—Hunter v. Kibbe, Case No. 6,907.

An indorsement for collection merely may be disregarded, and the suit be brought by the indorser.—Greenhough v. Keyworth, Case No. 18,299; Cassel v. Dows, Id. 2,502.

The last indorser, who takes up a draft when due, may cancel the names of the prior indorsers without impairing his title to recover against the acceptor.—Deale v. Krofft, Case No. 3,698.

Where an assigned note has been lost, suit thereon can be brought only in the name of the assignee.—Leavitt v. Cowles, Case No. 8,171.

A bank which discounts a note for a partner, who drew the same in the name of the firm, and forged the name of the payee, cannot sue under the assignment, but may sue in the name of the payee for its benefit.—York Bank v. Asbury, Case No. 18,142.

Where the drawer of a bill of exchange may sue in the name of the payees for his own benefit, his payment of the bill to the payee is no bar.—Davis v. McConnell, Case No. 3,640.

The drawer, having paid the bill to the payees after the acceptors refused to pay it, had a right to sue the acceptors.—Davis v. McConnell, Case No. 3,640.

A person cannot sue as an indorsee unless he be the owner of the note, or have some legal or equitable interest therein. A mere agent, to whom a note is indorsed by his principal for the benefit of the latter, cannot maintain such suit.—Thatcher v. Winslow, Case No. 13,863.

A person paying a note while lying in a bank under protest cannot maintain a suit thereon in the name of the bank.—Patriotic Bank v. Wilson, Case No. 10,810.

§ 95. —— Defendants.

The holder of a note need not proceed against the maker before suing the indorser, where the maker is insolvent.—Patton v. Violett, Case No. 10,839.

Where the maker is insolvent, the holder may primarily sue the indorser of a promissory note, although the maker at such time has personal property in his hands, more than enough to pay the debt.—Vowell v. Lyles, Case No. 17,021.

The payee of a note signed in a firm name may sue one partner alone thereon under Rev. St. N. C. c. 31, § 39.—Palyart v. Goulding, Case No. 10,701.

The bank of Alexandria may sue the indorser without first bringing suit against the maker.—Bank of Alexandria v. Wilson, Case No. 855.

A suit may be prosecuted against two of three joint indorsers found within the district under Act Feb. 25, 1839.—Cooper v. Gordon, Case No. 3,195.

Bills, delivered after the death of the drawer to a person who had made advances upon their faith to the drawer, who had them in his possession for the purpose of raising the money for the drawer, may be enforced against his representatives.—Perry v. Crammond, Case No. 11,005.

The maker of an order on a general fund, or his assignee after bankruptcy, where acceptance has been refused, is a necessary party to a suit in equity on such order.—Walker v. Seigel, Case No. 17,085.

§ 96. Declaration or complaint.

A single bill or promissory note may be declared on according to its legal effect.—Turner v. White, Case No. 14,264; Spaulding v. Evans, Id. 13,216; Drake v. Fisher, Id. 4,061.

An averment in a declaration that A., by B., made a certain bill or check, is sufficient.—Sherman v. Comstock, Case No. 12,764.

A declaration on a bill of exchange is sufficient where it avers that plaintiffs are the holders of a certain bill drawn by defendant's agent, and accepted by him, pursuant to an agreement between the parties; that the bill was drawn on a sufficient consideration; that it was duly accepted by defendant, and was protested for nonpayment.—Central Ohio R. R. v. Thompson, Case No. 2,550.

In an action on a note, interest need not be demanded in the declaration.—Chinn v. Hamilton, Case No. 2,685.

Demand at the place named need not be averred in an action against the party primarily liable. Readiness to pay is matter of defense.—Kendall v. Badger, Case No. 7,691; Smith v. Johnson, Id. 13,067; Thompson v. Cook, Id. 13,952.

In an action against the indorser, assignor or guarantor of a note, a demand on the maker when it became due must be alleged.—January v. Duncan, Case No. 7,217; Bank of United States v. Smith, Id. 935.

Where an action is brought against two, as the survivors of one, who executed a joint note, it is not essential to allege that the note had not been paid by the deceased.—Silver v. Henderson, Case No. 12,854.

An averment that a note sued on was assigned on the day or at the time of its execution is sufficient.—Silver v. Henderson, Case No. 12,854.

Where a note was indorsed by two persons, held, that an averment that it was indorsed by defendants by the names of A. and B. was sufficient without averring that they were partners, for they assumed a joint liability whether they were general partners or not.—Kendall v. Freeman, Case No. 7,692.

An indorsement to the cashier of a bank may be declared on as an indorsement to the bank.—Bank of United States v. Davis, Case No. 915.

A note payable to a certain person, "cashier, or order," may be declared on by the bank of which he was agent without an indorsement.—Bank of United States v. Lyman, Case No. 924.

Where a bill was accepted by one of a firm without the knowledge of the partners, nor in the course of business, recovery can be had thereon under a count stating it was drawn on "B. & Co.," and accepted by B. by writing the name of "B. & Co."—City Bank of Columbus v. Beach, Case No. 2,737.

An averment that defendant put his name on the back of a note with intent to give it a credit and to induce the plaintiff to accept the same, and that the note so indorsed was delivered to the plaintiff for a full and valuable consideration, is a sufficient averment of a consideration for the promise.—Offutt v. Hall, Cases Nos. 10,449, 10,450.

A judgment in an action on a bill of exchange will not be arrested because the declaration fails to allege a consideration if the instrument as declared on imports a consideration.—Kemble v. Lull, Case No. 7,683.

A count upon the indorsement of a promissory note, not payable to order, without averring a consideration for the indorsement, held bad.—Janney v. Geiger, Case No. 7,212.

A declaration on note indorsed by one as agent in his own name should show that the note was made payable to such person as agent.—Wilson v. Porter, Case No. 17,827.

A note may be surrendered and canceled, and a recovery had on the original consideration, if the declaration contains a count founded thereon.—Bank of United States v. Lyman, Case No. 924.

The assignee of a note assigned by a firm need not aver and prove the names of the persons who composed the firm.—Thompson v. Cook, Case No. 13,952.

§ 97. Plea or answer.

A plea that defendant, sued as a principal, indorsed the note as guarantor, and not as principal, held good on demurrer.—Dibble v. Duncan, Case No. 3,880.

A plea of failure of consideration, in defense to a note, should distinctly allege the actual consideration, and that there was never any other.—Grunninger v. Philpot, Case No. 5,852.

A plea setting up fraudulent representations in defense to a note should allege all necessary incidents of time and circumstance, and that the note was given in reliance thereon.—Grunninger v. Philpot, Case No. 5,852.

A plea, in an action on a note, that the payee received another note and mortgage to be applied to the note, to be good, must aver the receipt of proceeds, etc.—Homas v. McConnell, Case No. 6,656.

A plea in an action against the indorser that the maker of the note, at the date of the writ, had goods and chattels to a greater amount than due thereon, is no answer to an averment of insolvency.—Janney v. Geiger, Case No. 7,212.

A plea in an action on a bill of exchange alleged to have been given in payment of freight on property transported by plaintiff is insufficient where it alleges a failure of consideration by reason of the careless and tortious manner of transporting the goods, whereby defendant suffered damages in excess of the amount of the bills, but does not allege any nonperformance or tort in reference to the shipment.—Central Ohio R. R. v. Thompson, Case No. 2,550.

A plea of duress by the maker of a note is bad, as against an indorsee, unless it avers notice of such duress by the latter.—McClintick v. Johnston, Case No. 8,700.

A plea to an action on a note, which avers that the goods for which it is given are valueless, is not good.—Christy v. Cummins, Case No. 2,708.

A plea that the bill of exchange, on which the action is founded, was not drawn and accepted at the place alleged, constitutes no bar, and is bad on demurrer.—Jones v. Heaton, Case No. 7,468.

§ 98. Amendment of pleadings.

A plea of nonassumpsit to an action against the acceptor of a bill of exchange may be amended by annexing the affidavit required by statute.—Loving v. Fairchild, Case No. 8,556.

In a suit on several promissory notes, held that an amendment was proper which added a count on another note embraced in the same transaction.—Tiernan v. Woodruff, Case No. 14,027.

§ 99. Issues and proof.

An unsubstantial variance between the note and the declaration, where the note is described in effect, will be disregarded.—Conant v. Wills, Case No. 3,087.

A note substantially different from that described in the declaration cannot be given in evidence upon a writ of inquiry.—Farmers' Bank of Alexandria v. Lloyd, Case No. 4,661.

The omission of the payee to show protest, or that it was not required, can only be taken advantage of by special demurrer.—Baker v. Gallagher, Case No. 768.

In an action on a note, where the plea is nonassumpsit, the defendant cannot show damages by a breach of the contract on which the note was given.—Cheongwo v. Jones, Case No. 2,638.

Where the declaration avers a protest for nonacceptance as well as for nonpayment, and the action is brought on the protest for nonpayment, the nonacceptance need not be proved.—Nicholson v. Patton, Case No. 10,250.

In an action upon a promissory note, proof of the partnership of the plaintiffs held not necessary, under the rule of court, where defendants failed to file an affidavit denying their signatures.—Pratt v. Willard, Case No. 11,378.

In an action upon protest for nonpayment, it is not necessary to show a protest for nonacceptance, nor to give notice of nonacceptance.—Cox v. Simms, Case No. 3,306.

In an action by the payee of a bill having two subsequent indorsements in full, plaintiff need not show a new assignment to himself.—Cox v. Simms, Case No. 3,306.

A plea that the note had been assigned should be supported by some proof that the right was in the assignee.—Conant v. Wills, Case No. 3,087.

The plea of nonassumpsit puts plaintiff to the proof of all material averments in his declaration, and where he relies on an indorsement he must prove it.—Stroud v. Harrington, Case No. 13,546a.

Under a general averment that due notice of nonpayment was given the indorser of a note or bill, all the facts may be given in evidence.—Dwight v. Wing, Case No. 4,219.

Under a statute providing that the writing on which the suit is founded is receivable without proof of execution, unless the execution is denied, plaintiff must prove an indorsement, where he relies upon the same, but the suit is not founded thereon.—Stroud v. Harrington, Case No. 13,546a.

In an action on a note, if an intermediate indorsement is averred, it must be proved, although the suit is brought for the use of such intermediate indorser.—Coyle v. Gozzler, Case No. 3,312.

Words of surplusage, not descriptive of the bill, but of the place where it is payable, held no variance.—Orr v. Lacy, Case No. 10,589.

A declaration on a note averred that it was presented to the bank "when due, to wit, July 23, 1841." Held, that the words "to wit," etc., were surplusage.—Hyslop v. Jones, Case No. 6,990.

A seal and the words "witness my hand and seal," on an inland bill of exchange, may be rejected as surplusage, and the bill be declared on in the usual form.—Irwin v. Brown, Case No. 7,080.

The right of action on a bill of exchange is complete by the nonacceptance, protest, and notice, and, where these facts are averred and proved, subsequent averments of presentment for payment, nonpayment, and notice thereof need not be proved.—Wallace v. Agry, Case No. 17,096.

The words "in the state of Ohio," in the description of a note, may be rejected as surplusage and need not be proved.—Drake v. Fisher, Case No. 4,061.

A note not payable to plaintiff or order, as charged in the declaration, is inadmissible.—Carrington v. Ford, Case No. 2,449.

An averment of an indorsement to "Hyer and Burdett, survivors of Bremner," held not supported by an indorsement to "Messrs. Hyers, Bremner, and Burdett."—Hyer v. Smith, Case No. 6,979.

A declaration alleging the drawing of a bill by Elisha B. is not supported by proof of a bill signed by Elijah B.—Craig v. Brown, Case No. 3,326.

A note payable "with interest" will not support a count upon a note payable without interest.—Blue v. Russell, Case No. 1,568.

A note payable in sixty days, "with interest from date," will not support a declaration upon a note payable in sixty days without interest.—Coyle v. Gozzler, Case No. 3,312.

A special custom to demand payment on the day after the last day of grace may be given in evidence without being averred in the declaration.—Coyle v. Gozzler, Case No. 3,312.

A note, stating on its face where it is payable, cannot be given in evidence on a count on a note omitting such description, but it is admissible on a count for money had and received.—Stone v. Lawrence, Case No. 13,484.

The declaration alleged an authority to draw, but not in writing, for 100,000 francs. The proof was a letter authorizing blank francs to be drawn for. Held, that this was no variance.—Rabaud v. D'Wolf, Case No. 11,519.

Omission, in copy of note filed, of indorsement, which is alleged in the declaration, is not fatal.—Adams v. White, Case No. 68.

In an action on a note made by three persons, parol evidence is not admissible to show that a note set out in the record of confiscation proceedings as made by two of such persons was the same note.—Vogler v. Spaugh, Case No. 16,988.

§ 100. Presumptions and burden of proof.

The holder must show the insolvency of the maker, to maintain suit against the indorser.—McIver v. Kennedy, Case No. 8,830.

Plaintiff must show, in an action against the indorser, that he instituted his suit against the maker in due time, and prosecuted it diligently to an ineffectual execution.—Mandeville v. Mackenzie, Case No. 9,014.

In an action against a bank on a promissory note taken for collection, the burden of proof rests with the bank to show that the notary made the proper demand on the maker of the note, either at his place of business or at his residence.—Ellsworth v. Gunton, Case No. 18,294.

The acceptance of a draft drawn on another "if in funds" is evidence of the possession of funds of the drawer.—Kemble v. Lull, Case No. 7,683.

An acknowledgment of indorsement of a draft drawn by defendant, which was not produced, held prima facie evidence of indorsement in a suit against the drawer.—Hyer v. Smith, Case No. 6,979.

Due diligence in making demand and giving notice cannot be inferred from the fact that the parties to a check resided in the same town, and that the drawer was insolvent.—McKinder v. Dunlap, Case No. 8,863.

Query, whether an indorsement of the negotiable paper must be proved to have been made before it became due.—Stuart v. Greenleaf, Case No. 13,555.

A note imports a consideration.—Cook v. Gray, Case No. 3,156a.

The words "value received" in negotiable paper are not necessary.—Benjamin v. Tillman, Case No. 1,304.

Indorsee not required to prove consideration of negotiable paper until it is shown to have been put in circulation by fraud or undue means.—Adams v. White, Case No. 68.

Proof by the maker of a promissory note that it was fraudulently obtained puts the burden on the indorsee to show that he paid a valuable consideration.—McClintick v. Cummins, Case No. 8,698.

A promissory note signed by one as agent of a corporation does not upon its face import a personal obligation. The burden of proof in such case is upon the holder.—Bradley v. McKee, Case No. 1,784.

The burden of proof that a promissory note was given or indorsed without consideration is upon the party alleging it.—Packwood v. Clark, Case No. 10,656.

The payee of a bill drawn by a public officer upon a general agent of the United States must show that value was given therefor, where a strong ground is made out to show a want of consideration.—United States v. Price, Case No. 16,090.

Possession by the original indorser of bills of exchange, bearing uncanceled indorsements to others, is prima facie evidence of ownership.—Picquet v. Curtis, Case No. 11,131.

The payees suing on a note indorsed to another have the burden of showing that it has been retransferred, or was indorsed for collection, or that they have repaid the money.—Veitch v. Basye, Case No. 16,909.

An assignment of a note must be proved, to entitle the assignee to judgment.—Clark v. Cropper, Case No. 2,817a.

The possessor of a negotiable instrument is prima facie a bona fide holder for value in the usual course of business, without notice of facts impugning its validity.—Bank of British North America v. Ellis, Case No. 859.

The holder of negotiable paper which is proved to have been put in circulation by fraud must show that he is a bona fide holder for a valuable consideration.—Cummings v. Mead, Case No. 3,476.

§ 101. Admissibility of evidence.

Where there is a subscribing witness to a promissory note, its execution must be proved by him.—Turner v. Green, Case No. 14,256.

A bill of exchange is evidence under the general counts as between the holder and the acceptor, or a remote indorser.—Frazer v. Carpenter, Case No. 5,069.

As between the parties to a note, parol evidence is admissible to show that there was no consideration, and defendant did not indorse the note to give it credit.—Corcoran v. Hodges, Case No. 3,228.

An agreement made on the indorsement in blank of a dishonored note, that the indorser should not be liable except on the maker's insolvency, may be shown by parol.—Taylor v. Schofield, Case No. 13,804.

In Pennsylvania the equity follows a promissory note into the hands of an indorsee, unless dated at Philadelphia, and made payable "without defalcation."—Commercial & Farmers' Bank v. Patterson, Case No. 3,056.

The words, "without defalcation," do not prevent the maker of a Pennsylvania note from showing fraud in the payee in obtaining the note.—Commercial & Farmers' Bank v. Patterson, Case No. 3,056.

In an action of an indorsee against the maker on a promissory note, declarations of payee before he parted with it are competent evidence for defendant.—Commercial & Farmers' Bank v. Patterson, Case No. 3,056.

The testimony of a notary that he demanded payment of a note on the third day of grace, and gave notice of nonpayment on the following day, is competent, although he cannot recollect the day of the month.—Bank of United States v. Abbott, Case No. 906.

Extracts from the notarial book of a deceased held admissible to prove demand of payment of a promissory note and notice to the indorser.—Whitney v. Huntt, Case No. 17,589.

In an action by the indorsee against the indorser of a void note, such note is inadmissible in evidence.—Root v. Wallace, Case No. 12,039.

In an action against an indorser of a promissory note, a record of a judgment upon the same note between other parties cannot be given in evidence unless the note itself be produced, and the defendant's indorsement proved.—Welsh v. Lindo, Case No. 17,408.

In an action against an accommodation acceptor by a transferee, where the defense is that the acceptance was procured by fraud, a receipt by the drawer expressing a consideration for the transfer is inadmissible to show that the indorsee paid value.—Platt v. Jerome, Case No. 11,217.

Where the plaintiff bank's notary was the indorser, declarations of his son and deputy as to the giving of notice are inadmissible.—Bank of Columbia v. Mackall, Case No. 873.

Memorandum in a notary's book of demand and notice, supported by testimony as to his practice in making demand and giving notice, is competent evidence.—Coyle v. Gozzler, Case No. 3,312.

Proof of execution of the notes in suit cannot be made by testimony of an admission of the authenticity of certain notes, and that the witness believes the notes in the suit and those admitted are the same.—Brown v. Piatt, Case No. 2,026.

§ 102. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

In an action by the indorsee against the indorser, it is necessary to prove only the indorsement, and not the execution of the note by the maker.—Kendall v. Freeman, Case No. 7,692.

In an action against the last indorser of a promissory note, it is not necessary to prove the prior indorsements.—Whittemore v. Herbert, Case No. 17,602.

In an action by the indorsee of a promissory note against the maker, plaintiff need not produce written evidence of the authority of the indorser's agent to indorse.—Miller v. Moore, Case No. 9,584.

In an action against the indorser of a foreign bill of exchange, for nonpayment, it is not necessary to produce a protest for nonacceptance.—Hodgson v. Turner, Case No. 6,570.

Evidence of the confession of the maker of a note that he owes part of it, held not sufficient on the money counts.—Turner v. Green, Case No. 14,256.

In an action by the indorser against the bankrupt drawer of a bill of exchange it is sufficient to account for its nonproduction that it was lodged with the commissioners in bankruptcy.—Palmer v. Blight, Case No. 10,684.

§ 103. Trial—Filling in or striking out indorsements.

The holder of a note, with a blank indorsement, may fill up the blank at the trial.—Bank of United States v. Roberts, Case No. 946; Dennison v. Larned, Id. 3,798; Vowell v. Lyles, Id. 17,021.

An indorser of a negotiable bill or note may fill in prior blank indorsements and strike out subsequent indorsements, and sue on it in his own name, and this may be done on the trial.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,517; Neederer v. Barber, Id. 10,079; Stettinius v. Myer, Id. 13,385.

The payee of a negotiable bill or note in possession, may strike out all indorsements and bring the action in his own name, and this may be done at the trial.—Conant v. Wills, Case No. 3,087; Neederer v. Barber, Id. 10,079; Oneale v. Beall, Id. 10,513; Cassel v. Dows, Id. 2,502; Leavitt v. Cowles, Id. 8,171.

Such indorsements may be stricken out after the note is offered in evidence.—Blue v. Russell, Case No. 1,568.

The holder of a note cannot fill in the blanks in an indorsement in blank by a third person, written over the name of the payee on the back of the note.—Cooke v. Weightman, Case No. 3,180.

An indorsement in full cannot be struck out at the time of trial, so as to enable the indorser to recover on the bill.—Craig v. Brown, Case No. 3,327.

Plaintiff, who is not an indorsee, has no right at the trial to strike out the words of a special indorsement.—Bank of United States v. Moore, Case No. 930.

Judgment will not be arrested because plaintiff's name being indorsed upon the bill in blank, was not struck out at the trial.—Vowell v. Alexander, Case No. 17,017.

§ 104. —— Province of court and jury.

Due diligence in giving notice of dishonor to an indorser is a question for the jury.—Ish v. Mills, Case No. 7,104.

Where the facts have been found by the jury, it is within the province of the court to determine whether due diligence has been used in giving notice of dishonor.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,519.

The question of the residence of the indorser, and whether the notice was sent to the nearest post office, will be left to the jury.—Whitney v. Huntt, Case No. 17,589.

§ 105. Judgment and costs.

The measure of damages in an action on a bill of exchange is its value, at the time of notice of protest, in gold or silver, and not in a depreciated or fluctuating currency.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,517.

The recovery on a note for a certain sum of money, to be paid in sugar, must be for the sum of money mentioned, though by the law of the place the note must be paid in sugar.—Courtois v. Carpentier, Case No. 3,286.

In an action by an indorsee against a maker, where the maker has no defense against the payee, he cannot claim the indorsee should recover only so much as is due the indorsee from the payee.—Chillicothe Branch of State Bank of Ohio v. Fox, Case No. 2,683.

An indorser is not entitled to recover of the drawer damages incurred by nonacceptance, unless he has paid them or is liable to pay them.—Kingston v. Wilson, Case No. 7,823.

In an action on a note, judgment may be given for interest from its maturity or in damages.—Archer v. Morehouse, Case No. 18,225.

On a promise to pay a bill of exchange when able, if plaintiff would give time, plaintiff is entitled to interest on the amount of the bill only from the time when defendant was able to pay, and not to damages.—Lonsdale v. Brown, Case No. 8,494.

Interest before judgment will not be allowed where, by the law of the place where the note was made, no interest is payable until judgment is obtained.—Courtois v. Carpentier, Case No. 3,286.

In New York the holder of a bill of exchange is entitled to recover at the rate of exchange at the time the notice of protest was given.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,517.

The rate of exchange is not exclusively regulated by the expense of transporting specie from one place to the other, but rather by the current rates for drafts in specie.—Balch v. Colman, Case No. 791.

On a promissory note given in New York payable at Detroit, with the current rate of exchange on New York, the rate of exchange may be recovered.—Grutacap v. Woulluise, Case No. 5,854.

The holders of a promissory note may recover the costs of protest against an indorser, where such protest is evidence of a demand.—Doughty v. Hildt, Case No. 4,027.

In an action on a promise to accept bills of exchange on faith of which money was advanced on such bills, plaintiffs may recover the whole damages, costs, and expenses paid by them, including re-exchange, with interest of the place where the money was payable by them.—Russell v. Wiggin, Case No. 12,165.

In an action on the case by payees and indorsers of a bill of exchange, to recover from the acceptor the amount of the accepted bill, plaintiffs cannot recover damages and costs paid by them in a suit against them by the indorsee of the bill, there being no money count in the declaration.—King v. Phillips, Case No. 7,802.

The difference of exchange cannot be recovered in an action on a promissory note, where there is no allegation in the declaration to cover the rate of exchange.—Weed v. Miller, Case No. 17,346.

A judgment against an accommodation indorser, who is considered as a surety, and, also, the drawer, merges the relation of principal and surety.—Findlay's Ex'rs v. Bank of United States, Case No. 4,791.

A judgment and execution against the drawer of a bill of exchange is no bar to a judgment against the indorser.—Hodgson v. Turner, Case No. 6,570.

The indorser of a note is liable for costs in an action against him, where the maker paid the note after suit brought.—Otts v. Jones, Case No. 10,619.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

§ 1. What law governs.

The validity of a bond of security given to the United States, so far as it depends upon the capacity of the parties to make it, is to be governed by the law of the place where it is made.—United States v. Garlinghouse, Case No. 15,189.

See, also, post, § 9.

§ 2. Parties.

A bond voluntarily given to the United States as security is valid and binding, if the United States, in their political and corporate capacity, have a legal, pecuniary interest in the performance of its condition, although not expressly required or authorized by any act of congress.—United States v. Garlinghouse, Case No. 15,189; Same v. Howell, Id. 15,405; Same v. Humason, Id. 15,420.

A bond made payable to "the United States of America" is binding at common law.—Dixon v. United States, Case No. 3,934.

A bond to convey to a board not in esse certain lots for public purposes, on the establishment of a county seat, is valid and enforceable.—Sargeant v. State Bank of Indiana, Case No. 12,360.

The sureties of litigants in the federal courts need not be residents of the state in which the suit is pending.—Souter v. La Crosse R. R., Case No. 13,180.

§ 3. Execution in general.

A verbal condition on signing a bond that certain other signatures shall be obtained is not available in defense unless known to obligee.—American Button-Hole, Over-Seaming & Sewing Mach. Co. v. Murray, Case No. 292.

A bond under seal, perfect in all respects, held valid against the sureties, notwithstanding their testimony that they signed on condition that another signature should be obtained.—In re Mayo, Case No. 9,353.

It is no defense to a bond that it was executed on the agreement that it should be signed by another, and that such other was falsely personated, when defendant procured such personation.—United States v. Quantity of Distilled Spirits, Case No. 16,099.

A printed form of bond was signed by persons who had consented to become sureties. The blanks were subsequently filled out without express authority from them, and the same was subsequently accepted by the United States. Held not a valid bond, as to the sureties.—United States v. Nelson, Case No. 15,862.

§ 4. Signatures.

The fact that a prior signature was forged is not available in defense.—American Button-Hole, Over-Seaming & Sewing Mach. Co. v. Murray, Case No. 292.

A bond given by W. and G., composing a firm, and C. and M. as sureties, for payment by the firm of taxes as manufacturers of tobacco, is the bond of the signers individually, and not of the firm.—United States v. Lawrence, Case No. 15,574.

§ 5. Consideration.

A bond is good at common law if entered into for a valuable consideration, and if not repugnant to any statute or the general policy of the law.—Greathouse v. Dunlap, Case No. 5,742.

§ 6. Duress.

A bond obtained by falsely representing to the obligors that the obligee had a requisition to take them to another state, to answer a criminal charge, is void.—Bell v. Nimmo, Case No. 1,258.

§ 7. Illegality.

A bond is void which shows upon its face an illegal consideration.—Greathouse v. Dunlap, Case No. 5,742.

A bond to pay an annuity in equal shares to a daughter and her husband if they should become reunited, and live together, and, in case of their separation, a certain sum to the husband, held void as to the latter provision, as against public policy.—Fry v. Grigg, Case No. 5,139.

Executor's bond to surety to pay him half of his commission held valid, and enforceable before final settlement of estate.—Culbertson v. Stillinger, Case No. 3,463.

A subsequent agreement, not under seal, not to claim certain commissions, is no defense in an action at law on the bond.—Culbertson v. Stillinger, Case No. 3,463.

Proper deductions in such case.—Culbertson v. Stillinger, Case No. 3,463.

§ 8. Instruments defective as statutory bonds.

A statutory bond which contains more than the statute requires is not vitiated by the surplus matter if easily separated, but is vitiated by the omission of a material condition required by the statute.—Dixon v. United States, Case No. 3,934; United States v. ———, Id. 14,413; Same v. Brown, Id. 14,663; Same v. Mynderse, Id. 15,850a, 15,851.

A bond given under a statute is void so far as it exceeds the requirements thereof.—Armstrong v. United States, Case No. 549.

A statutory bond with penalties and conditions substantially different from those prescribed by the statute is so far void.—United States v. Howell, Case No. 15,405; Same v. Humason, Id. 15,420.

A statutory bond taken in a penalty greater than that prescribed by law is void, whether the statute prescribes a specific sum as a penalty, or a standard by which that penalty is to be measured so as to give a precise sum.—United States v. Gordon, Case No. 15,232.

Where the statute declares that the bond shall be in a prescribed form, and no other, any variance is fatal.—United States v. Brown, Case No. 14,663.

A retrospective condition in a statutory bond is void.—United States v. Brown, Case No. 14,663.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

§ 9. What law governs.

A bond taken under an act of congress is not governed by the local law, but is, in contemplation of law, given at the seat of the federal government.—United States v. Stephenson's Ex'rs, Case No. 16,386.

See, also, ante, § 1.

§ 10. Reference to other instruments.

If the condition of a bond does not specify the purposes for which it is given, but refers to a paper which does specify them, this is equivalent to an enumeration of those purposes in the bond itself.—United States v. Maurice, Case No. 15,747.

The statement in a bond issued by a railroad company to raise money to construct its road that payment is guarantied by a contract of lease with another company is binding upon the latter, where the statement was made at its request.—Opdyke v. Pacific R. R., Case No. 10,546.

§ 11. Conditions.

In a bond conditioned that the parties will perform the decree of the court, "the court" means the court which shall ultimately decide the cause.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,613.

Where, in a bond taken at common law, the condition is bad in part only, a recovery may be had on it for breach of the good part.—United States v. Brown, Case No. 14,663.

III. NEGOTIABILITY AND TRANSFER.

§ 12. Negotiability.

A bond issued by an individual, under seal, with coupons attached for semiannual interest, payable to bearer, and secured by a mortgage of real estate to trustees, is a negotiable instrument.—In re Leland, Case No. 8,229.

The coupons of coupon bonds payable to bearer are negotiable, though not by themselves negotiable in form.—McCoy v. Washington County, Case No. 8,731.

A recital in the bond that the interest is to be paid on presentation of the coupons annexed is equivalent to making the coupons payable to bearer.—Rockmulh v. Pittsburgh, Case No. 11,982.

A township bond containing the statement that it is to be converted into a county bond, on certain contingencies, is not negotiable, and is open to defenses in the hands of any holder.—Merriwether v. Saline County, Case No. 9,485.

Bonds containing a provision that they were to be exchanged for other bonds when an injunction against the issue of the latter should be finally dissolved are not negotiable, and are subject to defenses in the hands of innocent holders.—Pepper v. Saline County, Case No. 10,972.

Railroad bonds payable in different sums, according as the place of payment might be fixed by indorsement of the president, and bearing an indorsement in which the place of payment was left blank, held not negotiable, and not valid in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, where they were stolen from the company.—Jackson v. Vicksburg, S. & T. R. Co., Case No. 7,150.

§ 13. Assignment.

To enable a person, by assignment of a bond, to vest a legal title in the assignee, it must appear that he has the right to make the assignment.—Clark v. Phillips, Case No. 2,831a.

§ 14. Bona fide purchasers.

Possession of uncanceled coupons, detached from negotiable bonds, is prima facie evidence of title, with all the rights of purchaser.—Duncan v. Mobile & O. R. Co., Case No. 4,138.

A creditor, receiving a negotiable bond from his debtor as security for a loan, without notice of his want of title, acquires a valid title to the same as against the true owner.—In re Norris, Case No. 10,303.

Fraud of the payee is no defense to negotiable bonds in the hands of innocent holders for value, before maturity.—Muscatine v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., Case No. 9,971.

A railroad mortgage coupon bond, payable to bearer, containing a condition "to make the scrip preferred stock attached to this bond full-paid stock" upon surrender of the bond, held valid in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value, where it was stolen from the owner, and sold with the certificate detached.—Hotchkiss v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank, Case No. 6,719.

The bona fide purchaser in the regular course of business, and for their market price, before maturity of municipal coupon bonds, transferable by delivery, which had been stolen, takes a good title except as to matured coupons.—Gilbough v. Norfolk & P. R. Co., Case No. 5,419.

Pledgees of bonds payable to bearer hypothecated to secure a debt are legal holders, and are entitled to demand payment of coupons which fall due before the maturity of the debt which the bonds were pledged to secure.—Warner v. Rising Fawn Iron Co., Case No. 17,188.

Coupons taken after they are due are subject to all the equities which properly attach to them in the hands of the previous holder.—Union Bank v. New Orleans, Case No. 14,351.

IV. PERFORMANCE OR BREACH OF CONDITION.

§ 15. Performance.

A bond given in 1869, payable in "dollars" generally, was payable in gold and silver only; but, after the passage of the legal tender acts, it could lawfully be discharged by legal tender notes.—Williamson v. Richardson, Case No. 17,754.

§ 16. Breach of condition.

It is not a breach of a condition of a bond given to the United States for moneys to be advanced that the officer to whom the bond was given has accepted, but has not paid, orders drawn upon him by the persons to whom, by the terms of the condition, the advances were to be made.—Parker v. United States, Case No. 10,750.

V. ACTIONS.

§ 17. Right of action in general.

Upon a bond conditioned to pay certain installments, an action may be brought upon failure to pay the first installment.—Nailor v. Kearney, Case No. 10,004.

An action will not lie, until the end of the term, for breach of a bond conditioned that defendant shall conduct a certain manufactory for a certain time, and keep an exact account, and deliver to plaintiff one-tenth of the product when demanded.—Cottle v. Payne, Case No. 3,268.

A recovery may be had upon a coupon payable at a particular place without presentation for payment at such place.—Smith v. Tallapoosa County, Case No. 13,113.

Where bonds contained a provision for semi-annual interest "on the presentation of the respective coupons hereto attached, both principal and interest payable at the principal office of said company in the City of New York," but neither the act authorizing the issue of the bonds nor the mortgage securing them, nor the coupons themselves say anything about the presentation of the coupons as a condition of payment, an action may be maintained upon the coupons without previous presentation for payment.—Warner v. Rising Fawn Iron Co., Case No. 17,188.

§ 18. Defenses.

The relief which defendant might have in a court of equity cannot affect the determination of an action at common law upon a bond.—Culbertson v. Stillinger, Case No. 3,463.

An obligor may set up any defense to a bond, as against the assignee, which he had against the obligee.—Bell v. Nimmo, Case No. 1,258.

To an action on a bond to pay the sum that shall be recovered in a certain action then pending between different parties, a defense other than fraud cannot be set up which might have been available in the first action.—Greathouse v. Dunlap, Case No. 5,742.

The defense that the bond is in restraint of liberty must be specially alleged.—Greathouse v. Dunlap, Case No. 5,742.

§ 19. Parties.

Where a suit on a bond is brought in the name of the obligee, it is not material to the obligor that he is not the person interested.—Waller v. Adams, Case No. 17,107.

In a suit against the obligor in a bond paid in Confederate currency to an executor during the Civil War, to cause him to deliver it up and pay it again, the executor is a necessary party.—Howland v. Kelly, Case No. 6,796.

On a joint and several bond, plaintiff may sue one or all of the obligors, but not an intermediate number.—Chandler v. Byrd, Case No. 2,591b.

An action in a federal court in New York may be maintained on a joint and several bond to the United States, against those of the obligors who are living, and against the administrators or executors of those who are dead.—United States v. Lawrence, Case No. 15,574.

Suit on a joint and several bond may be brought against the executors of a deceased obligor, together with the surviving obligors, without showing the insolvency of the survivors.—United States v. Tracy, Case No. 16,536.

§ 20. Pleading—Declaration.

In a declaration on a bond several breaches may be assigned in the same count.—United States v. Truesdell, Case No. 16,543.

The holder of coupons payable to bearer may sue thereon without producing or being interested in the bond from which they were cut.—Kennard v. Cass County, Case No. 7,697.

Coupons cut from coupon bonds may be declared on without in any way declaring on the bonds themselves.—McCoy v. Washington County, Case No. 8,731.

Coupons declared on should be identified in the declaration by the number of the bond, date, sum, and time of payment.—Kennard v. Cass County, Case No. 7,697.

The assignment of the breach of a condition by a direct negative of its words is good.—United States v. Spalding, Case No. 16,365.

Breaches of a penal bond must be assigned before judgment.—Robins v. Pope, Case No. 11,931a.

The breach of the conditions of a penal bond should be assigned with certainty and particularity, so as to show the injury.—Burnett v. Wylie, Case No. 2,172a.

Breaches may be assigned either in the declaration or replication, when performance is pleaded or suggested on the record.—Burnett v. Wylie, Case No. 2,172a.

Separate profert need not be made of the condition of the bond, where the declaration states the condition in assigning the breach.—United States v. Spalding, Case No. 16,365.

§ 21. —— Plea or answer.

A plea of non damnificatus is only pleadable to indemnifying bonds.—Maryland v. Todd, Case No. 9,220.

In Ohio, both want of consideration and fraud can be pleaded to a bond.—Greathouse v. Dunlap, Case No. 5,742.

The question whether nil debet is properly pleaded to a declaration on a penal bond assigning breaches can only be raised by demurrer.—United States v. Spencer, Case No. 16,368.

If a plea of performance be too narrow, or contain a flat negative pregnant, it is bad.—United States v. Sawyer, Case No. 16,227.

A plea seeking to avoid a bond for being illegally taken colore officii should specially state all the facts which show such irregularity.—United States v. Sawyer, Case No. 16,227.

A breach of the condition of a penal bond is not sufficiently traversed by a plea averring that the obligors have not violated the condition to the extent charged in the declaration.—United States v. Dair, Case No. 14,913.

A special plea of non est factum, averring that the supposed bond sued on is a mere escrow, is bad, unless it aver that the condition on which it was delivered has not been performed.—United States v. Dair, Case No. 14,913.

If defendant on oyer does not set out the whole of the bond, plaintiff may relieve himself by praying it to be enrolled.—United States v. Sawyer, Case No. 16,227.

§ 22. Issues and proof.

Matters which make a bond void may be given in evidence, under the general issue of non est factum; but matters in avoidance must be pleaded.—Greathouse v. Dunlap, Case No. 5,742.

§ 23. Evidence.

Evidence of the handwriting of the obligor and subscribing witnesses residing abroad is only prima facie proof on the issue of non est factum.—Davies v. Davies, Case No. 3,612.

Where a claim arising out of breach of a bond is a stale one, plaintiff will be held to strict proof of damages.—Cottle v. Payne, Case No. 3,268.

§ 24. Recovery.

The judgment on a bond cannot exceed the penalty thereof and interest from the breach, though the sum actually be larger.—United States v. Arnold, Case No. 14,469; Goldhawk v. Duane, Id. 5,511; Bank of Mount Pleasant v. Sprigg, Id. 891; Bank of United States v. Magill, Id. 929.

Interest is recoverable on a bond with penalty only from commencement of suit, where no demand or acknowledgment is made.—Bank of United States v. Magill, Case No. 929.

A judgment on a penal bond with conditions, if not rendered for the penalty, to be discharged by the payment of the damages assessed, will be reversed.—Campbell v. Pope, Case No. 2,365a.

In debt on a bond with collateral condition, nothing is recoverable but what the obligee is entitled to on a breach of the condition.—Massey v. Schott, Case No. 9,262.

Where an interlocutory judgment is entered on a bond with a collateral condition, the jury, if either party so require, must ascertain the damages, if they be uncertain.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,686.

BOUNDARIES.

§ 1, Description—Material and permanent objects. § 2, —— Courses and distances. § 3, —— Quantity and designation of land. § 4, —— Waters and water courses. § 5, Evidence, ascertainment, and establishment.

Declarations as to boundaries, see "Evidence," §§ 40, 42.
Description of, see "Deeds," § 10.
Hearsay evidence, see "Evidence," § 42.
Of mining claims, see "Mines and Minerals," §§ 4, 5.

Geographical or political divisions.

See "Counties," § 1; "States," § 3; "United States," § 2.

§ 1. Description—Material and permanent objects.

In determining the limits of the tract from the map, regard is to be had to the natural objects there laid down as bounding the tract, rather than to the distance of such objects from other natural objects as shown by the scale.—United States v. Wilson, Case No. 16,734.

Where a grant solicited described the first line as a certain parallel of latitude, which was delineated on the diseño by reference to natural monuments, held, that these must control where they differed from the natural parallel.—United States v. Larkin, Case No. 15,562.

§ 2. —— Courses and distances.

Courses and distances are controlled by fixed monuments.—Cleaveland v. Smith, Case No. 2,874; Brown v. Huger, Id. 2,013; McPherson v. Foster, Id. 8,921; Simms v. Baker, Id. 12,868; Robinson v. Moore, Id. 11,960.

Where the original corners and lines are established, they must control courses and distances. But courses and distances called for must govern where there are no established objects to control them.—Nelson v. Hall, Case No. 10,107.

§ 3. —— Quantity and designation of land.

Where land is granted with reference to a map which clearly indicated the quantity, it will be assumed that the intention was to grant all the land included in the boundaries, though in a subsequent condition the quantity was erroneously stated.—United States v. Pacheco, Case No. 15,982.

Under a grant of "three square leagues, a little more or less, as the respective diseño explains," held, that three leagues were granted to be taken anywhere within the tract bounded by the ranchos named.—United States v. Carrillo, Case No. 14,736.

The words "a little more or less" held operative for such fractional parts of a league as may be in excess of the quantity named in the grant.—United States v. Fossat, Case No. 15,137.

Where a grant is of a certain quantity of land to be taken in the form of a square, and at the place delineated on the diseño, but no boundaries are named, the condition as to quantity and shape must control, as against any natural objects represented on the map.—Weber v. United States, Case No. 17,329.

§ 4. —— Waters and water courses.

The right of a proprietor, bounded by a navigable river, extends to high-water mark.—Bowman v. Wathen, Case No. 1,740.

A deed of land described as bounded by lines and marks on a river bank conveys the land only to high-water mark.—Dunlap v. Stetson, Case No. 4,164.

The owner takes the bank as it is, and may continue to be, by alluvion or decrease, by the flow of the river.—Dunlap v. Stetson, Case No. 4,164.

A boundary "on" the bank of a river, referring to fixed monuments of the bank, limits the grant to the bank, and excludes the flats below it.—Thomas v. Hatch, Case No. 13,899.

Where the land, according to a plan referred to in the deed, is bounded "on" a river, with no other specific boundaries, the flats will pass by operation of law.—Thomas v. Hatch, Case No. 13,899.

A boundary "on," "by," or "to," to a stream, includes the land at least to low-water mark.—Thomas v. Hatch, Case No. 13,899.

The purchaser of land bordering upon a nonnavigable stream or lake takes to the center of the stream or lake.—Bowman v. Wathen, Case No. 1,740; Forsyth v. Smale, Id. 4,950.

Where land is purchased bordering upon a nonnavigable stream or lake, and the line is meandered upon the stream for the purpose of quantity, and the stream is intended as the boundary, the grant includes any land between the meandered line and the water.—Forsyth v. Smale, Case No. 4,950.

The boundary to lands bordering on rivers and lakes is the meandered line established by the government surveyors.—Granger v. Swart, Case No. 5,685.

Where land was described as bounded on the side of a creek by a line meandering down its center to a station on the bank, and thence from station to station on the bank, held, that the creek constituted the boundary.—Quicksilver Min. Co. v. Hicks, Case No. 11,508.

The line of a creek held the proper boundary, though not corresponding to the straight lines, of courses and distances run along the general course of the creek.—Hills v. Homton, Case No. 6,508.

The word "point" in the description, "a straight line drawn to the beach, and from that point" another line, held not to mean a mathematical point, but to refer to the beach as one of the boundaries.—United States v. Soto, Case No. 16,357.

§ 5. Evidence, ascertainment, and establishment.

The mention in the act of possession of the length of a certain line as fixing its point of termination is not to be regarded as conclusive merely because at or near that distance from the starting point a marked tree is found which is not identified by any witness as the tree to which measurement was made.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,681.

A map which has governed in the sale of lots, and has been treated for many years by the proprietors and purchasers as the original map, is admissible to prove boundaries.—Harmer v. Morris, Case No. 6,076.

The remarks, however, made on the map by the proprietor, are not evidence.—Harmer v. Morris, Case No. 6,076.

The line of a fence erected by agreement of parties in settlement of a boundary dispute, where possession continued according thereto for 20 years, will conclude persons claiming under the original owners.—Wakefield v. Ross, Case No. 17,050.

The court is not restricted to the patent, but may refer to the original entry, survey, and plat.—Brown v. Huger, Case No. 2,013.

Ancient boundaries may be proved by reputation, known to the public, but not by hearsay as to a specific fact.—Ellicott v. Pearl, Case No. 4,386.

Public reputation, to prove boundaries, must be the reputation in the neighborhood, and not what particular persons said.—Nelson v. Hall, Case No. 10,107.

Reputation is not admissible to prove particular facts in a contest as to private rights, and proof that a stone monument was reputed to have been put down to designate a private grant is not admissible.—Winter v. United States, Case No. 17,895.

BOUNTIES.

See, also, "Pensions."

Bounty lands, see "Public Lands," §§ 10, 26, 27, 35.

§ 1. Fishing bounties.

Construction of Act 1813, c. 34, and Act 1819, c. 212, relating to bounty upon vessels employed in fisheries.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,099.

A vessel is "at sea," within the intent of such acts, when she is without the limits of any port or harbor on the sea coast.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,099.

Act July 29, 1813, c. 35, § 7, in relation to bounties, does not require any oath to the agreement referred to therein.—United States v. Nickerson, Case No. 15,878.

A vessel whose enrollment is not legally made is not entitled to claim the fishing bounty under Act July 29, 1813, § 5.—United States v. Bartlett, Case No. 14,532.

The entire contract between fishermen and skipper must be in writing, and such as is provided by law, to entitle the vessel to a bounty.—Crowell v. United States, Case No. 3,447; United States v. Atkins, Id. 14,474.

A payment of bounty without the production of a shipping paper is without authority, and may be recovered back.—Crowell v. United States, Case No. 3,447.

Fishing bounty improvidently paid to a vessel not entitled to it may be recovered back by the United States in an action for money had and received.—United States v. Bartlett, Case No. 14,532.

An almanac with underscored or dotted dates held inadmissible to prove the date of sailing and returning of a vessel engaged in fisheries.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,099.

The forfeiture provided by Act July 29, 1813, for fraudulently obtaining bounty, attaches only when there is actual fraud and deceit used in obtaining it.—The Harriet, Cases Nos. 6,099, 6,100.

A vessel is not subject to forfeiture under the act of July 29, 1813, on the improvident payment of a bounty, where not entitled to it, but only for the act of fraud and deceit in obtaining it, whether rightfully entitled to it or not.—The Swallow, Case No. 13,666.

Of warranty, see "Insurance," §§ 44–95; "Sales," §§ 35–38, 51.

BREACH OF MARRIAGE PROMISE.

§ 1, Pleading. § 2, Issues and proof.

§ 1. Pleading.

The proper plea to a count on a breach of promise of marriage is "non assumpsit," and not "not guilty"; and a plea of "not guilty" will be stricken out, on special demurrer, as bad.—Wilkinson v. Pomeroy, Case No. 17,675.

A plea of the general issue, in an action for breach of promise of marriage, may be treated as a nullity, under rule 26, if not accompanied by the affidavit and the certificate required by that rule.—Wilkinson v. Pomeroy, Case No. 17,674.

A special plea in such an action may be treated as a nullity, under rule 27, if not accompanied by the certificate required by that rule.—Wilkinson v. Pomeroy, Case No. 17,674.

In such an action, matter, in a plea, which attributes to the plaintiff habits, disposition, temper, and acts in such wise as would warrant an action for libel against whoever should publicly make such charges by printing or writing, is irrelevant, impertinent, and scandalous, and will be stricken out on motion.—Wilkinson v. Pomeroy, Case No. 17,674.

§ 2. Issues and proof.

In such an action, evidence of acts of misfeasance, immediately connected with the cause of action, or evidence showing an equitable defense arising out of the cause of action, if admissible at all, can be given in evidence in mitigation of damages under a plea of the general issue.—Wilkinson v. Pomeroy, Case No. 17,674.

Matter pleadable in bar in such an action, if intended to show that the plaintiff had no subsisting cause of action when the suit was commenced, can be given in evdience under the general issue.—Wilkinson v. Pomeroy, Case No. 17,674.

BREACH OF THE PEACE.

See, also, "Disturbance of Public Assemblage"; "Riot."

§ 1. Nature and elements of offense.

Driving a carriage so rapidly through city streets as to endanger the safety of the inhabitants is an indictable offense at common law, and amounts to a breach of the peace.—United States v. Hart, Case No. 15,316.

BRIBERY.

§ 1. Nature and elements of offense.

Quære, whether a person is subject to indictment in the federal courts for attempting to bribe a federal officer, in the absence of an act of congress defining such offense.—United States v. Worrall, Case No. 16,766.

The offense of attempting to bribe an officer is completed at the time when and at the place where the letter containing the corrupt offer is written and delivered at a post office in the district, though addressed to the officer, residing in another state.—United States v. Worrall, Case No. 16,766.

§ 1. Bridge companies.

A bridge company having an exclusive franchise to maintain a bridge may waive or abandon the same by its corporate act so as to bind its stockholders.—Milnor v. New Jersey R. Co., Case No. 9,620.

BROKERS.

See, also, "Factors"; "Principal and Agent."
Insurance brokers, see "Insurance," §§ 5, 6.
Taxation, see "Internal Revenue," § 31.

§ 1. Authority.

A broker whose principal writes him to charter a vessel has authority to make a binding verbal agreement to that end.—Quirk v. Clinton, Case No. 11,518.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

See, also, "Associations."

§ 1. Loans.

Loans made to their members by building and loan associations, conducted in accordance with the ordinary and well-known methods adopted by such societies, are not usurious.—Johnson v. Potomac Bldg. Ass'n, Case No. 7,406.

Such associations are partnerships, and loans made to their members are dealings with partnership funds, in which the borrower has the same interest before and after the loan as the other members.—Johnson v. Potomac Bldg. Ass'n, Case No. 7,406.

The contracts made with the borrowing members upon the well-known and usual terms of such contracts are not such as equity will relieve from, as unconscionable and oppressive.—Johnson v. Potomac Bldg. Ass'n, Case No. 7,406.

The loans by building associations under an arrangement whereby the members bid for the amount and pay a premium are not usurious.—Johnston v. Clarke, Case No. 18,303.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

In civil action, see "Evidence," § 15.
In criminal prosecutions, see "Chiminal Law," § 52.

BURGLARY.

§ 1, Offenses—Intent. § 2, —— Situation of premises.

§ 1. Offenses—Intent.

A slave, lodging in the house, who lifts the latch of his master's sleeping room in the nighttime, and enters with an axe in his hand, with intent to murder him, is guilty of burglary.—United States v. Bowen, Case No. 14,629.

§ 2. —— Situation of premises.

A storehouse not within the curtilage, but in which the owner's clerk usually sleeps, is the mansion house, so that burglary may be committed therein.—United States v. Johnson, Case No. 15,485.

CANALS.

Condemning land for, see "Eminent Domain," § 1.
Jurisdiction of admiralty, see "Admiralty," §§ 4, 30, 31.

§ 1. Establishment, construction, and maintenance.

Statutes relating to construction of canals construed according to their spirit, though seemingly contrary to their letter.—Baring v. Erdman, Case No. 981.

The Louisville and Portland Canal Company, incorporated by Kentucky in 1825, all the stock of which is owned by the United States, is still in existence, with the right to use and control the canal and its revenues for the purposes contemplated by the Kentucky statute and the joint resolution of congress of May 24, 1860.—United States v. Louisville & P. Canal Co., Case No. 15,633.

Act June 10, 1872, in relation to such canal, construed, so as not to impair the rights of the bondholders.—United States v. Louisville & P. Canal Co., Case No. 15,633.

The president and directors of the said canal company enjoined, at the suit of the United States, from interfering with the engineer, officers, and contractors prosecuting repairs and improvements thereon.—United States v. Louisville & P. Canal Co., Case No. 15,633.

The right to construct a dam by the Blackstone Canal Company, under a special act, determined.—Farnum v. Blackstone Canal Corp., Case No. 4,675.

The canal corporation may permit water to be drawn through its canal for mill purposes, where neither the public use nor any private right is thereby injured.—Lonsdale Co. v. Moies, Case No. 8,496.

The nation which constructs an artificial channel may annex such conditions to its use as it pleases.—The Avon, Case No. 680.

CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Setting aside fraudulent conveyance, see "Fraudulent Conveyances," §§ 28–35.

I. RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

§ 1. Grounds of cancellation.

A conveyance will not be set aside for inadequacy of consideration unless the consideration be grossly inadequate, and such as to clearly indicate the existence of unfair dealing, fraud, imposition, or oppression.—Jenkins v. Einstein, Case No. 7,265; Walker v. Derby, Id. 17,068.

Where inadequacy of price is so great that the mind revolts at it, slight additional circumstance of advantage or oppression will be sufficient to set aside the sale, though mere inadequacy of price is not alone sufficient.—Holmes v. Holmes, Case No. 6,638.

A court of equity will not direct a deed, void upon its face, to be surrendered and canceled. This should only be done where a deed is void for matters wholly extrinsic.—Elliott v. Peirsoll, Case No. 4,395.

Equity will direct the cancellation of a contract for fraud or mistake, but it cannot alter the contract.—Brooks v. Stolley, Case No. 1,962.

Material misrepresentation of facts, even though inadvertently made through the mutual mistake of the parties, or by the mistake of the grantors alone, is ground of rescission in equity.—Daniel v. Mitchell, Case No. 3,562; Doggett v. Emerson, Id. 3,960; Hough v. Richardson, Id. 6,722.

Even though the complaining party was of sound understanding, and had time to detect the falsehood.—McAlister v. Barry, Case No. 8,656.

Equity will not entertain a suit to cancel a policy of insurance, and enjoin the insured from bringing action thereon, on the ground of fraud in obtaining it, which may be set up in defense of an action at law.—Home Ins. Co. v. Stanchfield, Case No. 6,660.

A deed will not be rescinded for fraudulent misrepresentations by a stranger; but they may afford ground for relief on account of mistake. —Fisher v. Boody, Case No. 4,814.

Where a daughter, immediately before marriage, conveyed land to her father, upon his advice, in the belief that she would be benefited thereby, and would receive the title on his decease, but his will proved ineffectual to transfer it, held, that equity would direct a conveyance to her.—Slocum v. Marshall, Case No. 12,953.

A conveyance by a daughter, owner of the reversion, to her father, who had a life estate, as tenant by the curtesy, set aside for want of consideration, and on the ground of undue influence.—Pye v. Jenkins, Case No. 11,487.

Rule that transfers between persons occupying fiduciary relations will be carefully scrutinized applied.—Atwater v. Hadley, Case No. 639.

A conveyance made to his attorney by a party in embarrassed circumstances will not be set aside unless it be shown that he had been consulted in regard to the particular transaction, or that he was in a position to take an unfair advantage.—Jenkins v. Einstein, Case No. 7,265.

A mistake of facts going to the essence of a contract is a ground for cancellation.—Hammond v. Allen, Case No. 6,000.

Courts will not relieve a party from a contract or agreement entered into by mistake, where the mistake is one purely of law.—In re Dunham, Case No. 4,146.

A mistake as to the value of the consideration given for the conveyance of land is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the conveyance, where the vendor had means of avoiding the mistake by inquiry, and no fraud or falsehood was used to influence his judgment.—Warner v. Daniels, Case No. 17,181.

In the absence of fraud or unfair practices, equity will not relieve from a release given to a joint debtor under a misapprehension of its operation to discharge a co-debtor.—Joy v. Wurtz, Case No. 7,555.

An agreement, coupled with a power of attorney, giving a person a large contingent compensation on the collection of a claim against a foreign government, held, should be canceled for mutual mistake, where, unknown to both parties, the claim, a few days prior thereto, was allowed and liquidated by treaty stipulation.—Hammond v. Allen, Case No. 6,000.

A recovery cannot be had on the ground of a mistake as to the land purchased, where full opportunities were given for examination, and an examination was made, and no falsehood or fraud appears in any material representations, or act in relation to them.—Ferson v. Sanger, Case No. 4,752; Hough v. Richardson, Id. 6,722.

Deed declared void because procured by fraud practiced upon the grantor.—Copeland v. Burtis, Case No. 3,208.

A bond given for the price of property will be canceled where the vendor, in default of the payment, conveys the property to a third person.—Castor v. Mitchel, Case No. 2,507.

A suit will lie by the legal owner, out of possession, to annul a deed to which his name is forged.—Bunce v. Gallagher, Case No. 2,133.

§ 2. Defenses.

A covenant not to sue some of the persons liable for such fraud will not preclude the remedy in equity.—Tuthill v. Babcock, Case No. 14,275.

It is no objection to a rescission that another remedy or a guaranty may exist against the person principally benefited by the sale, after he has become insolvent, but not against the other parties; especially in case of fraud.—Smith v. Babcock, Case No. 13,009.

A contract will not be set aside upon charges of fraud and misrepresentations in procuring it, where a rescission would disturb many large and important transactions, except upon clear proof.—Morgan v. New Orleans, M. & T. R. Co., Case No. 9,804.

A bill in equity will not lie to rescind a sale of timber land, for misrepresentations as to quantity, where the vendees, after exploration of the land, have cut large quantities of timber therefrom.—Hough v. Richardson, Case No. 6,722.

Rescission of contract not allowed after the purchaser had taken timber from the land, and the foreclosure of a mortgage given by him.—Ferson v. Sanger, Case No. 4,752.

§ 3. Restoring consideration and placing parties in statu quo.

A party who desires to rescind a contract on the ground of fraud must offer to return the thing purchased, whether it be land or personal property.—Murphy v. McVicker, Case No. 9,951.

On the rescission of the sale of timber lands, the purchaser who had not realized from the sale of timber cut by him was required to file a bond to pay the amount as soon as collected. —Doggett v. Emerson, Case No. 3,962.

Where a conveyance is set aside for gross misrepresentations and deceit, interest is to be paid on the money refunded from the time it was received, without demand.—Doggett v. Emerson, Case No. 3,962.

§ 4. Effect of cancellation.

The cancellation of a bond does not per se destroy it when it is canceled through fraud or evident mistake, but it may be declared upon as a good and subsisting obligation.—United States v. Williams, Case No. 16,724.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

§ 5. Jurisdiction.

A court of equity has jurisdiction of a suit by heirs to set aside a deed from their ancestor, as obtained by undue influence, or as being taken in trust for his maintenance, and, after his death, for the benefit of the heirs.—Harding v. Wheaton, Case No. 6,051.

A proceeding under the jurisprudence of Louisiana to cause the erasure of a mortgage is properly instituted in the court of the parish where the premises lie.—New Orleans Nat. Banking Ass'n v. Adams, Case No. 10,184.

§ 6. Limitations and laches.

Long acquiescence and lapse of time is a good ground against permitting a deed to be impeached as fraudulent.—Sullivan v. Sullivan, Case No. 13,598.

A delay of two years after completion of an alleged fraudulent sale of land, and of one year after discovery of the fraud, held no bar to a suit for rescission.—Smith v. Babcock, Case No. 13,009.

A bill to set aside a deed for duress dismissed where there was a delay of 12 years, and defendant had made valuable improvements.—Murphy v. Paynter, Case No. 9,952.

Six years' delay in bringing suit to set aside a sale for fraud, held sufficient to bar relief.—Johns v. Slack, Case No. 7,363.

The occupation of premises for nearly six years without complaint is a strong circumstance disproving a material mistake or proof of negligence in seeking relief.—Ferson v. Sanger, Case No. 4,752.

§ 7. Parties.

In a suit to rescind a sale of lands, one of the purchasers may be joined as plaintiff though he has since released his interest to the others.—Mason v. Crosby, Case No. 9,234.

In a suit to rescind a sale of lands, if all the parties to the conveyance are made respondents, it is no objection to a recovery on the merits that some who had an equity in the land are not joined.—Mason v. Crosby, Case No. 9,234.

§ 8. Pleading.

A bill to cancel an agreement is defective which does not bring the proper parties before the court, and alleges mistake, without fraud, as a ground for relief.—Carter v. Swift, Case No. 2,479.

A bill charging falsehood and fraud in a sale, and alleging exaggeration of the quantity of timber on the land, may contain enough to justify rescission for gross mistake in quantity, without setting up the latter as a specific and separate cause; but it is better to plead such cause independently.—Smith v. Babcock, Case No. 13,009.

Fraud must be clearly alleged and satisfactorily proved in order to set aside a deed therefor after 20 years.—Lenox v. Notrebe, Case No. 8,246c.

It is no objection to a bill filed to set aside an assignment of a mortgage given in payment of a debt, and to recover a debt, that it does not contain an offer to reassign the mortgage.—Pagan v. Sparks, Case No. 10,659.

A bill to rescind a deed, when filed after considerable lapse of time, must state sufficient reasons for the delay, where there has been a material change in the character or value of the property.—Fisher v. Boody, Case No. 4,814.

Lying by, and acquiescence, may be sufficient to induce the court to refuse to rescind a deed, though not pleaded as a bar.—Fisher v. Boody, Case No. 4,814.

§ 9. Evidence.

In a suit for rescission, the person most benefited by the sale is to be suspected of fraud, if a fraud were actually committed.—Smith v. Babcock, Case No. 13,009.

A party seeking to set aside a contract on the ground of misrepresentation and concealment has the burden of showing the same.—Teakle v. Bailey, Case No. 13,811.

§ 10. Judgment or decree.

A conveyance obtained by undue influence may be allowed to stand as security for actual advances and charges, and set aside as to all other purposes, on account of imposition.—Harding v. Wheaton, Case No. 6,051.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION OF COMMON CARRIERS.

§ 1. In general.

No person is a common carrier who is not a carrier for hire, though the compensation need not be a fixed sum. — Citizens' Bank v. Nantucket Steamboat Co., Case No. 2,730.

There is no difference in point of law between common carriers on land and common carriers by water.—King v. Shepherd, Case No. 7,804.

Owners of ships which are employed in transporting goods for hire are common carriers.—The Gold Hunter, Case No. 5,513.

Carriers by water on the Mississippi river are subject to the full liability of common carriers.—The Keokuk, Case No. 7,721.

Transportation of money for an express company, under a special contract, does not make a railroad company a common carrier thereof.—Kuter v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., Case No. 7,955.

A charter requiring a railroad company to transport "all merchandise and property" does not oblige it to become a common carrier of money.—Kuter v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., Case No. 7,955.

The transportation of passengers or of merchandise by common carriers does not necessarily imply that the owners are not common carriers of bank notes or specie.—Citizens' Bank v. Nantucket Steamboat Co., Case No. 2,730.

II. CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

See, also, post, §§ 37, 49–51.

Ownership of goods shipped, see "Sales," § 31.

§ 2. Bills of lading, shipping receipts, and special contracts—Construction and operation of bill of lading.

The words "in good order and well-conditioned," in a bill of lading of bales of cotton, have reference only to external condition.—Bradstreet v. Heran, Case No. 1,792a.

A custom founded upon a constant departure from the terms of bills of lading used in the trade is not available to control a bill of lading.—Bazin v. Liverpool & P. S. S. Co., Case No. 1,152.

A bill of lading is conclusive to establish the articles shipped unless fraud or mistake is shown.—Backus v. The Marengo, Case No. 712.

The bill of lading is prima facie evidence that the goods were shipped in good condition.—Turner v. The Black Warrior, Case No. 14,253.

The statement "shipped in apparent good order and condition five cases of merchandise, value and contents unknown," has reference only to external condition.—The California, Case No. 2,314.

A bill of lading in the usual form is a mere receipt for goods, and a different contract may be shown by parol.—Knox v. The Ninetta, Case No. 7,912.

A bill of lading considered as a receipt may be controlled or contradicted by parol evidence.—Cafiero v. Welsh, Case No. 2,286.

A bill of lading is both a receipt and a contract. As a receipt, it may be explained by parol, but not as a contract.—Goodrich v. Norris, Case No. 5,545.

Parol evidence is admissible to show a mistake in the statement of the quantity of goods received.—Goodrich v. Norris, Case No. 5,545.

Parol evidence is admissible to explain or rectify statements in the bill respecting the condition of the goods at the time of loading, as between the original parties, but not as against consignees who have made advances upon the faith of such statements, irrespective of the amount.—Bradstreet v. Heran, Cases Nos. 1,792, 1,792a.

Where the owner successfully repudiates a bill of lading, he cannot at the same time, set it up as merging a prior contract.—The Edwin, Case No. 4,300.

The words "contents unknown" merely require the shipper to prove that the goods were actually laden on board, not that they were in good condition when shipped.—English v. Ocean Steam Nav. Co., Cases Nos. 4,490, 4,490a.

A bill of lading, consigning the cargo to a certain person, does not preclude the court from ascertaining the true ownership of the property by other evidence.—Two Hundred and Sixty Hogsheads of Molasses, Case No. 14,296.

§ 3. —— Negotiability and transfer of bill of lading.

Act Pa. Sept. 24, 1866, making bills of lading negotiable, does not enable a wrongful taker to pass a good title.—Bank v. Shaw, Case No. 843.

Purchasers of a bill of lading, who have reason to believe that the seller held it as security merely, acquire no better title.—Bank v. Shaw, Case No. 843.

The indorsement of a bill of lading, unless made for value, or as security, does not pass the right of property in the goods.—United States v. Delaware Ins. Co., Case No. 14,942.

The indorsement of a bill of lading transfers all the legal right in the property to the indorsee, as against a consignee who did not have prior possession.—Ryberg v. Snell, Cases Nos. 12,189, 12,190.

The delivery of a bill of lading amounts to a transfer of the property subject to the right of the seller if the consideration be not paid to reclaim the property before it comes into the actual possession of the purchaser. — Walter v. Ross, Case No. 17,122.

The assignment of a bill of lading passes the property in the goods, and advances subsequently made to the consignor on the transmission of the goods are not a lien on them.—Curry v. Roulstone, Case No. 3,497.

Transfer of a bill of lading, as a mere collateral to previous obligations, without anything advanced, given up, or lost on the part of the transferee, does not affect the right of stoppage in transitu.—Lesassier v. The Southwestern, Case No. 8,274.

One who acquires bill of lading from rightful holder, though through his negligence, can pass good title to innocent purchaser.—Bank v. Shaw, Case No. 843.

A bona fide holder of a draft drawn against goods shipped, with bill of lading attached, has a lien upon the goods in the hands of the consignee, to whom the consignor is indebted on general account.—Lee v. Bowen, Case No. 8,183.

The assignee of a bill of lading is unaffected by a usage between the consignor and carrier in reference to delivery, contrary to the terms of the contract, of which he has no notice.—Myrick v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., Case No. 10,001.

Although the bona fide holder of a bill of lading is entitled to the proceeds, the consignee has the right to deduct his commissions, and also the charges and insurance advanced by him.—Wolf v. Smythe, Case No. 17,928.

§ 4. —— Receipts for goods.

Shipping receipts held to constitute through contracts, by which the carrier was liable for the proper transportation of the articles beyond the line of its own road.—Myrick v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., Case No. 10,001.

The words in a receipt "received in good order" make a prima facie case, but may be explained or contradicted by the carrier.—Seller v. The Pacific, Case No. 12,644.

As between the original parties, the carrier may show that the property receipted for was not all received by it.—The J. W. Brown, Case No. 7,590.

§ 5. —— Contracts for transportation of goods.

A freight bill is a contract, and its effect cannot be varied by parol evidence.—Dixon v. Columbus & I. R. Co., Case No. 3,929.

A freight bill ending "Acc't Henry Dixon," and signed "W. T. Noell & Co., Agents," may be construed as made to Henry Dixon, he being in fact the consignee.—Dixon v. Columbus & I. R. Co., Case No. 3,929.

The carrier may, by contract with the shipper, secure to itself, in case of damage or loss for which it is liable, the benefit of any insurance to be effected by the shipper.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Erie & W. Transp. Co., Case No. 11,112.

§ 6. Custody and control of goods.

A carrier in possession may maintain a suit to recover damages to the goods transported, resulting from the wrongful act of a stranger.—Hovey v. The Sarah E. Brown, Case No. 6,744.

The liability of a carrier is not diminished by the absence of a bill of lading, and his right to recover for damage to cargo depends upon his possession as a carrier at the time of the accident.—The General McCullum, Case No. 5,318.

A carrier from whom negotiable notes have been stolen, who has paid their value to their owner, may recover the same from a person to whom the thief transferred them after maturity.—United States v. Vermilye, Case No. 16,618.

See, also, post, § 26.

§ 7. Transportation and delivery—Route.

See, also, post, §§ 16, 33-35.

Where goods were to be shipped by water, the mere transshipment by rail and deposit in warehouse, subject to charges, and without notice to the consignee, is not a conversion entitling him to recover the full value.—Howe v. The Lexington, Case No. 6,767a.

§ 8. —— To whom delivery may be made.

A person who obtained possession of a note by fraud changed its time of payment, and, impersonating the maker, sent it by express to the payee bank for discount, and received through the express company the proceeds, addressed to the maker. Held, that the express company was not liable to the bank.—Norwalk Bank v. Adams Exp. Co., Case No. 10,354.

§ 9. —— Place of delivery.

A usage to deliver goods consigned to a particular person, though in different parcels, at one place, will relieve the carrier from his responsibility as insurer, where he offers to make such delivery, but the consignee claims the right to require a delivery at different places.—The Richmond, Case No. 11,796.

Long-established, uniform, and well-known usage as to the mode of delivery will be considered as a part of the contract of the carrier.—The Richmond, Case No. 11,796.

§ 10. —— Notice to consignee.

Under a bill of lading silent as to the method of delivery, the carrier must at least give notice of the time and place of unlading, or the place of deposit.—Howe v. The Lexington, Case No. 6,767a.

A usage or custom, to excuse such notice, must be so clear and notorious as to afford a presumption that all parties acted with an understanding of its character and application.—Howe v. The Lexington, Case No. 6,767a.

§ 11. —— What constitutes delivery.

Delivery is completed when there is nothing left to be done to finish the transportation.—Hall v. Nashville & C. R. Co., Case No. 5,940.

§ 12. —— Failure or refusal of consignee to receive goods.

A carrier is justified in selling goods which the consignee refused to receive on their arriving damaged and in a perishable condition from causes for which he is not responsible.—The Bobolink, Case No. 1,588.

§ 13. —— Liability for failure to deliver.

The common-law rule of liability as to personal delivery is not applicable to steamers and railroads having a regular time of arrival and departure.—Binford v. The Virginia, Case No. 1,412.

A carrier, upon delivery of only a part of goods shipped under one complete contract, is only liable for the part not delivered, unless the consignee, within a reasonable time after discovering the defect, tenders the goods already delivered.—Conner v. The Sarah Sands, Case No. 3,115.

Where part of the goods delivered are destroyed by fire, the consignee should in like manner tender the part not destroyed.—Conner v. The Sarah Sands, Case No. 3,115.

The carrier is not liable to the shipper for a deficiency from the amount receipted for where it has delivered to the consignee all of the property received for shipment.—The J. W. Brown, Case No. 7,590.

The fact that the shipper gave an order to warehousemen for the cargo, and then settled with them on the faith of the bill of lading, does not change the rule.—The J. W. Brown, Case No. 7,590.

§ 14. —— Liability for misdelivery.

Common carriers are liable for a loss caused by a wrongful delivery of goods.—The Huntress, Case No. 6,914.

Where a misdelivery is caused by the failure of the owner to properly mark the goods, or to present them to the carrier or his servant, the carrier, if without fault, is not liable.—The Huntress, Case No. 6,914.

The carrier is responsible where he delivers the goods to the wrong person, though by mistake or imposition.—The Santee, Case No. 12,328.

Express company held not liable for delivery by the agent of a railroad company, who was also its agent, of goods shipped by freight, and consigned to the shipper, but marked upon the railroad receipt to be delivered to another, against whom a draft was drawn and sent to the agent by express, with the receipt, for collection.—Bland v. Southern Exp. Co., Case No. 1,526.

§ 15. —— Actions for failure to deliver.

The carrier cannot, of his own motion, set up title in a third person in defense to an action for nondelivery to the shipper or his consignee; but he may set up a delivery to the real owner, upon demand made or suit brought by him.—Rosenfield v. Express Co., Case No. 12,060.

The delivery by the carrier to the actual owner is a good defense to an action by the shipper, who had no title.—The Idaho, Cases Nos. 6,997, 6,998.

The burden of proof is on the shipper or owner to show nondelivery of the goods.—The Falcon, Case No. 4,617.

The shipper of grain, who takes no bill of lading, is bound, in an action for short delivery, to prove the amount delivered to the carrier.—Manning v. Hoover, Case No. 9,044.

Where the bill of lading of goods specifies that they are to be delivered to A. or B., in an action for nondelivery it is not enough to show nondelivery to A.—The Falcon, Case No. 4,617.

In a suit against a carrier, by the shipper or consignee, for nondelivery, plaintiffs can only recover nominal damages, where they have received the goods or their value from a third person, to whom they were delivered.—Rosenfield v. Express Co., Case No. 12,060.

The damages for refusal by a carrier to deliver goods to the owner is the difference in market price at the time of the demand and at the actual delivery.—Schmidt v. The Pennsylvania, Case No. 12,464.

The measure of damages for nondelivery of goods is their current value at the port of destination at the time when the goods ought to have been delivered, with interest from that time.—The Gold Hunter, Case No. 5,513; Greenway v. The Griffin, Id. 5,789.

The measure of damages for the refusal to transport goods at an agreed price is the difference in value of the same at the ports of shipment and delivery, less the agreed freight, and other necessary charges of transportation.—Harvey v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., Case No. 6,180.

The measure of damages for not transporting unmanufactured lumber intended for specific manufacture by the owner is the price that the same would bring at the place of delivery when so manufactured, less its cost, including transportation, with interest from the time of the refusal to so transport the lumber.—Harvey v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., Case No. 6,181.

§ 16. Delay in transportation or delivery.

A carrier is obliged to deliver the property placed in his charge within a reasonable time, the determination of which depends upon the special circumstance.—Broadwell v. Butler, Case No. 1,910.

A carrier is liable for damages caused by the delay in delivering an unmarked case of goods, whose outer covering, properly marked, was removed while in its custody, where the consignee made repeated demands therefor.—Rowe v. The City of Dublin, Case No. 12,094.

A common carrier is liable for any interruption to the transit of goods caused by a strike of its employés, which occasions loss to the owners.—Sherman v. Pennsylvania R. Co., Case No. 12,769.

A carrier's undertaking to deliver goods within a specified time is excused only by act of God or the public enemy.—Broadwell v. Butler, Case No. 1,910.

The subsidence of water in the Ohio river, preventing a boat from passing up the falls, will not excuse failure to deliver within a reasonable time.—Broadwell v. Butler, Case No. 1,910.

But proof of a usage, long established, uniform and well known, to wait for a rise in the water, will excuse failure to deliver within a reasonable time.—Broadwell v. Butler, Case No. 1,910.

Method of ascertaining damages for delay in the arrival of goods shipped, where there was no market quotation on the day on which the goods should have arrived.—The Colon, Case No. 3,025.

Where the season for the sale of the goods has passed, a carrier responsible for the delay in delivering them is liable for damages occasioned thereby, and the diminution in value is properly chargeable as an item of damage.—Rowe v. The City of Dublin, Case No. 12,094.

§ 17. Loss or injury to goods—Care required of carrier.

See, also, post, §§ 27–35.

If the circumstances under which property is received relieved from the responsibility of common carriers, there is yet an implied contract for ordinary care.—Kuter v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., Case No. 7,955.

When the question of diligence arises at all, the carrier is bound, like other bailees for hire, warehouseman, or wharfingers, to the exercise of due diligence only.—Binford v. The Virginia, Case No. 1,412.

§ 18. —— Character and value of goods.

If coin is so packed as to deceive the carrier as to the contents of the package, he is not liable as a common carrier. But, if there is anything from which he might infer that the box contains money, he is bound to inquire in regard to it.—Kuter v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., Case No. 7,955.

The company is liable for the exercise of ordinary care only, where a package of money is delivered to it without any express or implied notice of its contents.—St. John v. Southern Exp. Co., Case No. 12,228.

A carrier is responsible for loss of jewelry when he makes no inquiry as to the contents of the package, and the shipper had no notice of a rule requiring such a disclosure.—Fellows v. The Crescent City, Case No. 4,721a.

A common carrier is not, under all circumstances, entitled to know the contents of packages tendered for carriage, and a mere failure to ascertain whether the package contains anything dangerous, there being no reasonable ground for suspicion, does not of itself constitute negligence.—Parrott v. Barney, Case No. 10,773.

§ 19. —— Condition of goods.

A bill of lading acknowledging receipt, in good order and condition, of casks containing bristles, covered with matting, "weight and contents unknown," is no admission as to the condition of the goods beyond that visible to the eye or apparent from handling.—The Columbo, Case No. 3,040.

In such case the burden is on the shipper to prove the contents, and their condition at the time of shipment.—The Columbo, Case No. 3,040.

Otherwise, where the external covering is damaged when delivered, so as to account for an injury to the contents.—The Columbo, Case No. 3,040.

§ 20. —— Defective packing.

A carrier receiving goods improperly packed is bound to stow them with reference to their condition.—The David and Caroline, Case No. 3,593.

It is not sufficient for the carrier to show merely that the packages were insufficient and that the defect was not discovered by him, but he must show that the loss actually resulted from such insufficiency and from no fault of his.—Zerega v. Poppe, Case No. 18,213.

Damage to ribbons from discoloring held caused by dampness when packed, where the various coverings were in perfect condition when delivered.—Ordt v. Ocean Steam Nav. Co., Case No. 10,551.

A recital in a bill of lading that the goods were received in good order may be contradicted by showing that the cask, case, etc., in which they were packed was insufficient, and the injury to the goods was caused thereby.—Zerega v. Poppe, Case No. 18,213.

The words "in good order and condition" extend only to apparent external condition, and the carrier may show that the package, etc., was secretly defective.—The Olbers, Case No. 10,477; The Oriflamme, Id. 10,571.

But such words are sufficient to throw the burden upon the carrier to show secret defects to relieve himself from liability.—The Oriflamme, Case No. 10,571.

Goods shipped under a bill of lading containing the clause "weight, contents, and value unknown," found to be injured, after delivery on the opening of the cases in which they were shipped, will be presumed to have been properly packed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.—English v. Ocean Steam Nav. Co., Cases Nos. 4,490, 4,490a.

Shippers of merchandise, of large experience, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, are presumed to use the best method of packing the same for the particular kind of carriage.—The Moravian, Case No. 9,789.

§ 20a. —— Commencement of liability.

The carrier is liable for goods from the time they are shipped, although the bill of lading may be actually signed subsequent to the loss.—Snow v. Carruth, Case No. 13,144.

§ 21. —— Termination of liability.

A carrier's liability ceases when he has delivered the goods according to the bill of lading.—The Tybee, Case No. 14,304.

The liability as carrier continues after arrival of goods, notwithstanding restrictions in bill of lading, if the carrier fails to give notice of arrival.—Ayres v. Western R. Corp., Case No. 689.

A carrier stowing goods in his warehouse, without notifying the consignee of their arrival, remains liable as a carrier until the consignee learns the fact from some source; and, if the goods are injured before such notice, the carrier is liable, though the consignee afterwards refuses to take them.—The Mary Washington, Case No. 9,229.

The fact that a carrier is accustomed to store goods in his warehouse until the consignee learns from the consignor of their arrival does not excuse the carrier from himself notifying the consignee, where it is not shown that the consignor knew of the practice.—The Mary Washington, Case No. 9,229.

§ 22. —— Act of God or vis major.

The "act of God" which excuses the carrier from liability must be the immediate and distinct result of providential events, sudden or overwhelming in their character, which human sagacity could not foresee, or human force prevent.—Tompkins v. The Dutchess of Ulster, Case No. 14,087a.

The carrier is liable if he negligently expose property to capture by a public enemy, in consequence of which it is captured and destroyed.—Caldwell v. Southern Exp. Co., Case No. 2,303.

Where liquors in the hands of a carrier for transportation are seized, forfeited, and destroyed in conformity to the state law, the shipper cannot recover of the carrier.—Wells v. Maine S. S. Co., Case No. 17,401.

In the absence of a special contract, the carrier can only relieve himself from liability for injury to goods by proving that it was the result of some natural and inevitable necessity superior to all human agency or control, or of a force exerted by a public enemy.—The Zenobia, Case No. 18,209.

§ 23. —— Inherent defects in goods.

The carrier is liable for a want of proper care and skill in guarding against damages or deterioration arising from the nature of the goods or of the voyage.—The Invincible, Case No. 7,056.

A shipper of lard in the summer months takes the risk of damage occasioned by the excessively hot weather, unless some neglect or fault can be charged upon the carrier contributing to the loss.—Nelson v. Woodruff, Case No. 10,117.

§ 24. —— Contributory negligence of owner.

Carriers are not liable for damage to goods resulting from the act of the owner.—Choate v. Crowninshield, Case No. 2,691.

Where damages to goods are attributable partly to the fault of the carrier, and partly to the fault of the shipper, the loss will be equally divided, where it is impossible to ascertain for what proportion each is responsible.—Snow v. Carruth, Case No. 13,144.

§ 25. —— Actions for loss or injury.

The owner may recover for injury to goods in transportation, discovered after delivery to him, though he sells them before making a claim against the carrier, and without giving it opportunity to inspect them.—The Elmira Shepherd, Case No. 4,418.

The carrier's liability for damages is not affected by the conduct of the consignee in holding damaged goods.—The Compta, Case No. 3,070.

One who sells goods on credit cannot maintain an action against the carrier for their loss. In shipping, he acts as agent of the purchaser.—Blum v. The Caddo, Case No. 1,573.

The signing of a bill of lading, after damage to the cargo, will not increase the liability of the carrier.—The Edwin, Case No. 4,300.

Carrier has burden of showing how loss occurred.—The Bay State, Case No. 1,148; Bazin v. Liverpool & P. S. S. Co., Id. 1,152.

The recitals, "shipped in good order and condition"; "quality, condition, and contents unknown"; "not accountable for breakage,"—are only evidence of external condition, and the shipper must show that internal injuries were caused by the negligence of the carrier.—The Moravian, Case No. 9,789.

The burden of proving breach of duty by the carrier, whether it be alleged as a malfeasance or a nonfeasance, is upon the party alleging it.—Dixon v. Columbus & I. R. Co., Case No. 3,929.

The fact that cases of goods were in good order when received, and broken when delivered, casts the burden on the carrier to show how the injury occurred.—The Moravian, Case No. 9,789.

Where there are no exceptions in a bill of lading, the carrier has the burden of explaining the cause of injury to the goods, which were received in good order.—Nordlinger v. The Catherina, Case No. 10,295.

Where goods are lost after receipt by the carrier, and before delivery, presumption is that it was occasioned by the carrier's neglect.—Choate v. Crowninshield, Case No. 2,691.

A presumption of want of proper care or diligence does not arise from the fact of nondelivery.—Brown v. The Elvira Harbeck, Case No. 2,005.

An acknowledgment that the goods were shipped in good condition raises an inference that an injury subsequently discovered arose from a cause for which the carrier is responsible.—Dill v. The Colombo, Case No. 3,910a; English v. Ocean Steam Nav. Co., Id. 4,490, 4,490a.

Evidence showing that the injury would not have resulted in the common course of events, with proper care, in the absence of explanation, proves it to have been caused by negligence.—The Moravian, Case No. 9,789.

Damages recoverable for injuries to goods while in the hands of a carrier held to be the difference in market value between the sound and damaged goods at the place of delivery, together with the expenses of appraisers and wardens, called under the custom of the place to ascertain the amount.—Pendall v. Rench, Case No. 10,917.

A carrier held personally liable for salvage on property loaded on its cars while being transported by another across a river on flatboats.—Seaman v. Erie Ry. Co., Case No. 12,582.

The measure of damages for the loss of property shipped is its net value at the point of destination, with interest, deducting freight.—Woodward v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., Cases Nos. 18,006, 18,007.

The value of goods at place of delivery, with interest from the day when they should have arrived, is the measure of damages for their loss. Anticipated business profits are not allowed.—Bazin v. Liverpool & P. S. S. Co., Case No. 1,152.

The measure of damages for an injury in transit is the difference between the market value if sound and the value in the unsound condition at the time when goods should have been delivered.—The Colonel Ledyard, Case No. 3,027; The Compta, Id. 3,070.

When the property carried was Confederate notes, in case of their loss by the negligence of the carrier their value at the close of the war when demand was made is the proper measure of damages, and interest should be allowed from that time.—Caldwell v. Southern Exp. Co., Case No. 2,303.

Consignees can recover of the carrier for loss or injury to goods shipped, estimated as at the place of delivery, to the extent of advances made.—Burritt v. Rench, Case No. 2,201.

§ 26. Carrier as warehouseman.

A carrier which keeps a warehouse for the storage of goods until called for by the consignee is liable only as a warehouseman for goods stored therein after the carriage is ended.—White v. Colorado Cent. R. Co., Case No. 17,543.

Where the consignee is not present to receive the goods as they are unloaded, pursuant to a notice, the carrier is thereafter liable as an ordinary bailee for hire.—Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. The Tangier, Case No. 12,267.

§ 27. Limitation of liability—Liabilities subject to limitation.

A common carrier may, by special contract, limit his common-law liability to that of an ordinary bailee for hire, but he cannot exempt himself from liability for misconduct or negligence.—York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., Case No. 18,143; Earnest v. Express Co., Id. 4,248.

A common carrier may limit his liability by an express agreement so far as the common law makes him an insurer, but not for the negligence of himself or servants.—Seller v. The Pacific, Case No. 12,644.

A carrier cannot, by contract, relieve himself from responsibility for the negligence of his servants, because such a contract is unreasonable and contrary to public policy.—The Colon, Case No. 3,023.

§ 28. —— Mode or form of limitation.

The mere taking of a receipt by a drayman of the shipper containing the words "not accountable for contents" does not constitute an agreement to limit liability.—Seller v. The Pacific, Case No. 12,644.

The shipper is bound by a limitation of the carrier's liability, where it is plainly written in a printed blank used as a bill of lading, where he accepted the same without objection, though he neglected to read it.—Leitch v. Union R. Transp. Co., Case No. 8,224.

The carrier may limit his common-law responsibility by special contract with the shipper.—Leitch v. Union R. Transp. Co., Case No. 8,224.

A common carrier may by special contract limit his common-law liability in case of fire.—Van Schaack v. Northern Transp. Co., Case No. 16,876.

A notice stamped on the bill of lading, "Not responsible for rust, breakage," etc., and a statement by the receiving clerk to the same effect, do not make a specific contract limiting the carrier's liability.—Merriman v. The May Queen, Case No. 9,481.

Contracts limiting the common-law liability of the carrier are to be strictly construed in favor of the shipper.—Menzell v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., Case No. 9,429.

A baggage-transfer company, by conditions printed upon receipts given for baggage checks, may limit its liability for certain goods, and in certain amounts, unless specially agreed otherwise.—Hopkins v. Westcott, Case No. 6,692.

Construction of the words "any article," in a clause limiting liability in a receipt given by a transfer company for a baggage check.—Hopkins v. Westcott, Case No. 6,692.

A person who delivers his baggage check to a transfer company for delivery to his house, and receives a receipt therefor, is chargeable with notice of a printed condition therein limiting the liability of the transfer company in case of loss.—Hopkins v. Westcott, Case No. 6,692.

A condition as to "privilege of reshipping," does not limit the carrier's responsibility.—Broadwell v. Butler, Case No. 1,910.

§ 29. —— Assent of consignor or owner.

A person employed to construct glass cases and superintend their shipment cannot bind the owner by a contract limiting the carrier's liability for loss from breakage.—Merriman v. The May Queen, Case No. 9,481.

The shipper is bound by a limitation of liability in case of fire contained in a bill of lading delivered to the agent or person bringing the goods or placed in a box from which the shippers were accustomed to obtain bills of lading for shipments from time to time made.—Van Schaack v. Northern Transp. Co., Case No. 16,876.

§ 30. —— Operation and effect of limitation in general.

An express company which has limited its responsibility to ordinary care is not liable for a loss caused by the negligence of a railroad which carried its freight.—Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Exp. Co., Case No. 889.

Under an exemption of loss by "fire or other casualty while in transit," held, that the company was not liable where the goods were burned in the cars by a mob who took possession while operations on the road were stopped during a strike of the employés.—Sherman v. Pennsylvania R. Co., Case No. 12,769.

The exception from fire liability inserted in a bill of lading does not excuse the carrier in all cases of destruction by fire. He is, notwithstanding, bound to use reasonable care and vigilance, such as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise over his own property.—Woodward v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., Cases Nos. 18,006, 18,007.

A contract releasing the carrier from damage from "leakage or decay, chafage or breakage, or from any other cause not the result of collision of trains," etc., held not to apply to loss by fire while the goods were stored in the carrier's warehouse.—Menzell v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., Case No. 9,429.

Under a bill of lading excepting leakage, the carrier is not liable for a loss of wine by leakage caused by a latent defect in the cask.—The Olbers, Case No. 10,477.

The carrier is liable for loss of oil by leakage caused by the casks not being properly wet, where the bill of lading stipulates for such wetting, notwithstanding a clause, "Not accountable for leakage."—Hunnewell v. Taber, Case No. 6,880.

Though liability for fire is excepted, the carrier is bound to do all that reasonable and prudent men could do to prevent the entire destruction of the property after it has caught fire.—Woodward v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., Cases Nos. 18,006, 18,007.

Though the damage was the result of a clause excepted against, the carrier is still liable if it could have been avoided by skill and diligence.—Turner v. The Black Warrior, Case No. 14,253.

§ 31. —— Limitation of amount of liability.

A notice that the express company will not be liable for more than $50 on unvalued packages will prevent a recovery of a greater sum by a shipper, who, with knowledge thereof, failed to disclose the value of a package to avoid paying a greater rate.—Earnest v. Express Co., Case No. 4,248.

§ 32. —— Limitation of liability as ground of defense.

Where the damage is shown to have been caused by an excepted peril, the burden is on the shipper to prove want of skill or diligence.—Turner v. The Black Warrior, Case No. 14,253.

Where plate glass is shipped under a bill of lading excepting liability for breakage, and the cases as delivered are found to contain broken glass, the burden is upon the shipper to prove negligence.—The Pereire, Case No. 10,979.

A printed clause, "not responsible for leakage," in a bill of lading for oil, changes the general rule that the acknowledgment of goods being received in good order casts the burden on the carrier of showing want of negligence.—The Invincible, Case No. 7,055.

§ 33. Connecting carriers—Duties and liabilities in general.

A railroad company receiving goods from a connecting road is liable to the owner for failure to deliver them.—Knowles v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co., Case No. 7,899.

Each member of a connecting line of carriers who receives goods for shipment under a through bill of lading is liable for damage, on whatever part of the line received.—Harp v. The Grand Era, Case No. 6,084.

A carrier receiving goods for transportation to a point beyond its terminus is not bound to account for a loss, where it has delivered at its own terminus to a proper person.—Dixon v. Columbus & I. R. Co., Case No. 3,929.

A shipper cannot hold a connecting line responsible except through the contract made by the original carrier with himself.—St. Louis Ins. Co. v. St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co., Case No. 12,238.

The connecting carrier is held to the obligations of a common carrier, subject to the lawful restrictions made by the contract with the original carrier.—St. Louis Ins. Co. v. St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co., Case No. 12,238.

A forwarding carrier who pays past freight charges, according to usage, may recover the amount from the consignee.—Monteith v. Kirkpatrick, Case No. 9,721.

Where such forwarding carrier has no connection with the previous carriers, it is not liable for damage to the goods while in its possession.—Monteith v. Kirkpatrick, Case No. 9,721.

§ 34. —— Contracts for through transportation.

A statement in the receipt that the company is to forward to the place nearest or most convenient to the destination only, for delivery to other parties, who shall complete the transportation, on which its liability is to cease, does not change its liability where it has arrangements for through transportation.—St. John v. Southern Exp. Co., Case No. 12,228.

A receipt by a carrier for transportation beyond its line, where the whole charge is paid in advance, makes out a prima facie case of a contract to deliver at the destination.—St. John v. Southern Exp. Co., Case No. 12,228.

§ 35. —— Actions against connecting carriers.

A carrier receiving goods from a connecting carrier under a through bill of lading may be sued primarily for goods lost by her.—Maxwell v. The Powell, Case No. 9,324.

The burden is upon plaintiff to show that a railroad company which received goods for transportation to a point beyond its terminus undertook to carry the whole distance by rail.—Dixon v. Columbus & I. R. Co., Case No. 3,929.

§ 36. Charges and lien.

A carrier, in the absence of special contract, may demand and recover a reasonable sum as freight for the transportation of merchandise, and no more.—Harvey v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., Case No. 6,180.

Shipper bound to pay freight only on actual weight where freight is to be paid at a certain rate per pound, and printed bill of lading has written condition "contents and weight unknown."—The Andover, Case No. 366.

The carrier is not bound to part with the possession of the goods or to make actual delivery until freight is paid, though the goods must be first discharged from the vessel and an opportunity given to examine them.—One Thousand Two Hundred and Sixty-Five Vitrified Pipes, Case No. 10,536.

The consignee is liable for full freight where he demands and receives the property before it reaches its ultimate destination.—Violett v. Stettinius, Case No. 16,953.

Neither party can require of the other, as of right, that goods under one bill of lading shall be delivered in parcels, on the freight of such parcels being separately paid.—One Thousand Two Hundred and Sixty-Five Vitrified Pipes, Case No. 10,536.

The right to freight and the lien therefor is not affected by a contest between the consignee and another as to ownership of the cargo, as that a cargo of guano was tortiously taken from intervener's land.—Crapo v. The Arctic, Case No. 3,361.

Although there is no limit of rate charges in its charter, the company can only charge a reasonable rate, dependent upon the nature of the goods, etc.—Camblos v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., No. 2,331.

A railroad company cannot make the same charge for a package made up of separate parcels of goods owned by different persons, but consigned to one person as the aggregate of the separate parcels.—Camblos v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Case No. 2,331.

The stipulation "only half freight to be paid for all barrels delivered in a broken state" covers all barrels broken when delivered, though some were broken when shipped.—Durkee v. Workman, Cases Nos. 4,194, 4,195.

Under a bill of lading for a certain quantity of coal deliverable to M. or his assigns, "he or they paying freight for the same at" so much per ton, no freight is due until all the coal is delivered.—One Hundred and Seventy-Five Tons of Coal, Case No. 10,522.

A shipper whom the receiver of a railroad company had charged more than the statutory rate of freight allowed to sue the receiver in the federal court for the excess.—In re McElrath, Case No. 8,780.

Evidence of charges for freight two years previous to the charges in controversy, for like freight, held competent upon the question of their reasonableness.—Harvey v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., Case No. 6,180.

Damage to goods may be set up in defense to suit for freight.—Bearse v. Ropes, Case No. 1,192.

The question of the reasonableness of a freight charge is for the jury.—Camblos v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Case No. 2,331.

Cargo is not devested of a lien for freight by merely being discharged into a warehouse, and placed with the consignee.—Crapo v. The Arctic, Case No. 3,361.

A contract to settle for freight on coal on the 10th of the succeeding month by giving a note at 60 days is a waiver of the carrier's lien, and the contract cannot be rescinded, and a lien asserted, before the note is dishonored.—Sicard v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,831.

A carrier may deliver part of a shipment without impairing his right to hold the residue for freight on the whole consignment.—Sears v. Four Thousand Eight Hundred and Eighty-Five Bags of Linseed, Case No. 12,589.

III. CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK.

§ 37. Duties and liabilities of carriers in general.

Carriers of live stock must provide accommodations whereby the stock can be safely and properly kept and cared for until a delivery can be made to the consignee according to the terms of the shipment.—Myrick v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., Case No. 10,001.

In the case of a horse, in apparent good condition when shipped, delivered in a dying condition but without any fractures or external or visible injury, the shipper must show some negligence of the carrier, to charge him with liability.—Hussey v. The Saragossa, Case No. 6,949.

IV. CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS.

Carriage of passengers by vessels, see "Shipping," §§ 194–207.
Discrimination against passengers by reason of race, color, or condition, see "Civil Rights," § 2.

§ 38. Relation between carrier and passenger.

The proprietors of steamboats engaged regularly in carrying passengers between certain points are common carriers, and are bound to receive all persons on board to whose character and conduct there is no reasonable objection.—Jencks v. Coleman, Case No. 7,258.

§ 39. Fares, tickets, and special contracts.

The placing of a ticket on the counter of a ticket office, after the purchaser has laid down his money and gone away, is not a delivery.—Quigley v. Central Pac. R. Co., Case No. 11,510.

A check given by a railroad conductor for "one continuous passage" to a certain point on taking up a ticket which, by its terms, was not transferable, is also not transferable.—Cody v. Central Pac. R. Co., Case No. 2,940.

A passenger traveling on a railroad ticket at a reduced rate, entitling him to a continuous trip between two points, has no right to stop over at an intermediate station.—Pierce v. Pennsylvania Co., Case No. 11,146.

Printed conditions of a ticket inconsistent with a valid oral contract of carriage are not conclusive against the passenger.—Morrison v. The John L. Stephens, Case No. 9,847.

The federal court declined to order its receiver to disregard a state statute fixing maximum rates for freight and passengers on all the roads within the state.—In re McElrath, Case No. 8,780.

§§ 40, 41. Personal injuries — Care required of carrier in general.

Common carriers of passengers are bound to use extraordinary care and diligence, and are excused only by reason of force or pure accident.—The Oriflamme, Case No. 10,572.

The slightest negligence will render the carrier liable for injury to a passenger if, by the exercise of the strictest care or precaution reasonably within its power, the injury would not have been sustained.—Seymour v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,685.

A stage proprietor is not responsible for casualties which could not be foreseen nor guarded against.—McKinney v. Neil, Case No. 8,865.

A railroad company carrying passengers on freight trains is under the same obligation to carry them safely as if they were on regular passenger trains.—Hazard v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., Case No. 6,275.

§ 42. —— Acts or omissions of carriers' employés.

The proprietor of a steamboat is liable for personal injuries maliciously inflicted upon a passenger by its clerk while collecting fares, arising out of a dispute in regard to payment, irrespective of the merits of such dispute, though the act of the clerk was not authorized by such proprietor.—Pendleton v. Kinsley, Case No. 10,922.

The failure of the stage driver to act with skill and prudence will render the proprietor liable, though the accident was caused by the recklessness of the driver of a rival stage line.—Peck v. Neil, Case No. 10,892.

Stage owners are bound to the greatest care; and the least neglect or want of skill by the driver makes them liable for injuries to a passenger.—Maury v. Talmadge, Case No. 9,315.

It is the duty of a stage driver to caution the passengers when about to pass over a dangerous bridge, or piece of road.—Maury v. Talmadge, Case No. 9,315.

Proprietor of stagecoach is liable for injury to passenger due to intoxication of driver, though his reputation previously was of the highest character.—Bishop v. Stockton, Case No. 1,440.

§ 43. —— Sufficiency and safety of means of transportation.

A stage proprietor is bound to furnish proper coaches, horses, and harness, and a skillful and careful driver, and he is liable for the smallest degree of negligence in this particular.—McKinney v. Neil, Case No. 8,865.

A railroad company is bound to construct platforms for the safety rather than the convenience, of its passengers, and is bound to the highest degree of care and skill in such construction.—Harkey v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., Case No. 6,065.

§ 44. —— Who liable for injuries.

A railroad company allowing trains of another to run over its track is responsible, as to its own passengers, in the same manner as if all the trains belonged to itself.—Barron v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., Case No. 1,053.

§ 45. —— Management of conveyance.

Owners of a freight train are liable for carelessness in loading causing injury to a passenger on another train.—Curtis v. Central Ry., Case No. 3,501.

§ 46. —— Actions for injuries.

In the case of injury to a passenger by the carelessness of a stage driver, he may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit.—Saltonstall v. Stockton, Case No. 12,271.

In the case of injuries by a collision to a passenger on a railroad, the burden is on the carrier to show that the accident was not caused by fault of its servants.—Goble v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., Case No. 5,488a.

Proof of the upsetting of defendant's stage-coach, and injury to the passengers, casts the burden on defendant of showing that he exercised proper skill and care.—Saltonstall v. Stockton, Case No. 12,271.

Where the accident is imputed to the misconduct of the driver, defendant must show that the driver possessed and exercised that degree of skill which competent drivers usually possess, and ought to possess to convey passengers with safety and comfort.—Saltonstall v. Stockton, Case No. 12,271.

A contract by passengers with an agent of a stage line, limiting the number of passengers for the trip, is not admissible in an action for damages by a passenger not a party to it, who entered the coach on the way.—Maury v. Talmadge, Case No. 9,315.

In such case, defendant may prove a general custom as to number of passengers carried, but not the practice of its own line.—Maury v. Talmadge, Case No. 9,315.

The upsetting of a stage is prima facie evidence of negligence in the proprietor, and the passenger need not show more.—McKinney v. Neil, Case No. 8,865.

Exemplary damages will be given where an injury is caused by great recklessness of the carrier's servants.—Peck v. Neil, Cases Nos. 10,892, 10,893.

§ 47. Contributory negligence of person injured.

It is not contributory negligence for a passenger to ride in the smoking car next to the locomotive.—Goble v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., Case No. 5,488a.

A passenger not rightfully in a certain position cannot complain of the absence of the proper safeguards.—Hazard v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., Case No. 6,275.

A passenger cannot recover for injuries in an accident caused by the negligence of the carrier's servants, if he was in a position where a prudent man would not have been.—Hazard v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., Case No. 6,275.

The carrier is not liable if the passenger proceeds where there is apparent risk of danger, even though guilty of negligence.—Seymour v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,685.

Where a passenger is placed in imminent danger by the negligence of the carrier's servants, and makes an error in judgment in attempting to save himself, the carrier is, nevertheless, liable.—Saltonstall v. Stockton, Case No. 12,271.

§ 48. Ejection of passengers and intruders.

A carrier may grant exclusive privilege for transaction of business on its vehicles, and eject a person transacting business without its consent.—Barney v. The D. R. Martin, Case No. 1,030.

The proprietors of a steamboat may exclude therefrom one who takes passage for the purpose of soliciting passengers for a connecting line running in opposition to a line with which the steamboat proprietors have a contract to carry passengers through to a distant point.—Jencks v. Coleman, Case No. 7,258.

Common carriers may inquire into the habits and motives of persons offering themselves as passengers, and exclude all persons of bad character or habits, or those whose objects are to interfere with their interests, or to disturb their line of patronage, or who refuse to obey reasonable regulations.—Jencks v. Coleman, Case No. 7,258.

Gamblers and monte men, whose purpose in traveling upon a train is to ply their vocation, may be excluded.—Thurston v. Union Pac. R. Co., Case No. 14,019.

In an action for wrongful expulsion from a train, plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for loss of time, expenses while delayed, cost of another ticket, and compensation for the indignity put upon him.—Quigley v. Central Pac. R. Co., Case No. 11,510.

A verdict of $1,052 for wrongful expulsion from a train, held should be set aside, unless plaintiff should elect to reduce his judgment to $152.—Quigley v. Central Pac. R. Co., Case No. 11,510.

§ 49. Passengers' effects—What constitutes personal baggage.

Valuable laces held reasonable apparel and baggage, reference being had to the social position and wealth of the plaintiff, the state of her health, and the object of her journey to this country from abroad.—Fraloff v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., Cases, Nos. 5,025, 5,026.

A gold watch and chain, gold ornaments for presents, and American coin are not baggage.—The Ionic, Case No. 7,059.

A gold watch and gold spectacles held necessary to the traveler's personal convenience.—Walsh v. The H. M. Wright, Case No. 17,115.

Articles which it is usual for persons to carry with them from necessity or convenience or amusement, and also money not exceeding a reasonable amount, fall within the term "baggage."—Walsh v. The H. M. Wright, Case No. 17,115.

Manuscript books, the property of a student, and necessary to the prosecution of his studies, are to be regarded as baggage.—Hopkins v. Westcott, Case No. 6,692.

The carrier is not liable for baggage in excess of that usually carried by passengers of like station, pursuing like journeys.—Fraloff v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., Case No. 5,026.

§ 50. —— Loss or injury.

Where the passenger informed the carrier that his trunk contained nothing but clothing, whereas it contained a large amount of coin and gold ornaments, held, that the carrier was not liable for any of the contents, where it was lost.—The Ionic, Case No. 7,059.

A steamboat is not liable for the loss of jewelry usually worn by a passenger as a part of her apparel, but left in her stateroom, in a handbag, with other articles of personal use, and stolen while she was at supper.—The R. E. Lee, Case No. 11,690.

The carrier is not liable for the loss of personal baggage gratuitously carried, unaccompanied by the owner, in the absence of proof of actual negligence or misconduct.—Brown v. The Elvira Harbeck, Case No. 2,005.

Whether the baggage accompanies the passenger or not, the carrier is responsible for its safe delivery.—The Elvira Harbeck, Case No. 4,424.

Where personal baggage, not arriving in time to be carried with the passenger, is put on board a later vessel, and a bill of lading given therefor, the vessel is liable as on the ordinary shipment of goods on freight.—The Elvira Harbeck, Case No. 4,424.

A passenger who, by concealment, attempts to get valuable articles carried without paying the extra rates charged therefor, cannot recover in case of loss.—Hellman v. Holladay, Case No. 6,340.

If the carrier, with knowledge of the fact, carries such article as extra baggage, on paying the usual charges therefor, it is liable for a loss.—Hellman v. Holladay, Case No. 6,340.

Liable for loss of coin in a trunk with wearing apparel, though it had no notice, where the passenger pays for excess baggage.—Baldraff v. Camden & A. R. R., Case No. 794.

§ 51. —— Actions for loss.

An action for the loss of baggage of a married woman containing her personal effects is properly brought in her name.—The State of New York, Case No. 13,328.

The question whether a passenger has carried an excess of baggage, considering his position in life, and the journey, is one of fact for the jury.—Fraloff v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., Case No. 5,026.

§ 52. Sleeping cars.

A sleeping-car company is neither liable as a common carrier nor as an innkeeper.—Blum v. Southern Pullman Palace Car Co., Case No. 1,574.

A sleeping-car company is liable for a loss, caused by its negligence, of articles usually carried by a passenger about his person, and of money reasonably necessary for traveling expenses, in failing to take reasonable care to prevent thefts.—Blum v. Southern Pullman Palace Car Co., Case No. 1,574.

A sleeping-car company, which furnishes a suitable car with proper connections and in readiness for a continuous passage, is not liable to a passenger therein for the failure of a connecting line to send forward the train, on account of a riot.—Simms v. Pullman South. Car Co., Case No. 12,869a.

§ 1. When writ will issue.

Certiorari cannot issue from a superior court, district Arkansas, to bring up from the county court a case for adjudication.—Carr v. Tweedy, Case No. 2,440a.

§ 2. Jurisdiction.

A federal court has jurisdiction to issue a writ of certiorari as ancillary to a writ of habeas corpus, and to render their jurisdiction under the latter writ effective.—In re Martin, Case No. 9,151.

The federal circuit court has no power to issue a writ of certiorari to a United States commissioner to review proceedings before him under the fugitive slave act of September 18, 1850.—Ex parte Van Orden, Case No. 16,870.

§ 3. Writ of procedendo.

Where a case has been improperly taken out of the hands of a magistrate through a writ of certiorari, on a motion presented to the court by way of a writ of error coram nobis, the court will issue a writ of procedendo.—Blagden v. Broadrup, Case No. 18,238.

CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE.

§ 1, What constitutes, and effect. § 2, Actions.

§ 1. What constitutes, and effect.

A deed executed for land, which is held adversely to the grantor by an individual in possession, is void under the champerty act.—Dubois v. McLean, Case No. 4,107.

A cestui que trust may lawfully dispose of his trust estate, though his title is contested by the trustee.—Baker v. Whiting, Case No. 787.

An agreement giving plaintiff the exclusive right to collect claims for damages for infringement of a patent, he to bear all expenses, and to receive half the recovery as compensation, held void for champerty and maintenance.—Gregerson v. Imlay, Case No. 5,795.

A patentee may maintain an action in New York for damages against a person who, not being interested in defending suits brought upon the patent, assists infringers to defend with money, and otherwise.—Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co. v. White, Case No. 5,602.

The fact that a contract tainted with champerty and maintenance was made in a state where the common-law doctrines concerning such subject were abrogated by law cannot uphold it, in equity, where such contract was to operate in many states where it was clearly void.—Gregerson v. Imlay, Case No. 5,795.

§ 2. Actions.

An action will lie for maintenance in this country.—Fletcher v. Ellis, Case No. 4,863a.

The pendency of the suit, the court, and time, place, and circumstances must be alleged, so as to show the maintenance,—Fletcher v. Ellis, Case No. 4,863a.

CHARITIES.

§ 1, Statutory provisions. § 2, Purposes of gift—Relief of poor. § 3, —— Education. § 4,—— Promotion of religion. § 5, —— Public institutions and improvements. § 6, Capacity of trustees or donees to take. § 7, Certainty of beneficiaries. § 8, Certainty as to purpose of gift. § 9, Administration and enforcement of gift.

Gifts to, see "Perpetuities," § 3.
Restrictions as to charitable devises or bequests, see "Wills," § 1.

§ 1. Statutory provisions.

The statutes of mortmain are in force in Maryland, but the statute of charitable uses is not.—Barnes' Heirs v. Barnes, Case No. 1,014.

The English statutes of mortmain and superstitious uses were never adopted by the colony or state of Pennsylvania.—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952; Miller v. Lerch, Id. 9,579.

The principles of the common law relative to charitable uses, which were resorted to in England by the statute of charitable uses, were, however, adopted, as well as the principles of equity, in the administration of such trusts.—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952.

§ 2. Purposes of gift—Relief of poor.

A gift to a religious society for the relief of the poor members thereof is a good charitable use.—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952.

A devise of lands in trust for the formation and support of a home for aged, infirm, or invalid men, with a provision for its perpetuation by bequests of its inmates, held valid as a charitable use.—Cresson v. Cresson, Case No. 3,389.

§ 3. —— Education.

A gift for a library and academy of arts and sciences is for an "educational purpose." Code Ga. § 3157.—Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

A bequest to the Educational Society of Virginia, an unincorporated association, "for the benefit of the theological students at the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary of Virginia, * * * $1,000, the interest only to be annually expended" is void under the Maryland law.—Meade v. Beale, Case No. 9,371.

A gift to the treasurer of a society organized for the civilization and improvement of certain Indian tribes, for the benefit of such Indians, is a good charitable use.—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952.

§ 4. —— Promotion of religion.

An annual subscription to the stock of a religious society, which is applied to the printing and dissemination of books and writings approved by such society, is a good charitable use.—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952.

A gift to a religious society to enable it to enlarge and improve its meeting house, is a good charitable use.—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952.

A devise or bequest to a society for its purposes, with which testator is familiar, where such purposes are proper objects of charitable uses, is a good devise or bequest for such charitable uses.—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952.

A gift to the trustees of a church on condition that they shall not allow any alteration in the pulpit and galleries of the church, and shall not alien the Sabbath school lot, is valid.—Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

§ 5. —— Public institutions and improvements.

A gift to a town for a fire engine and hose is a good charitable use.—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952.

§ 6. Capacity of trustees or donees to take.

A religious corporation created under Act Pa. April 6, 1781, may take the title as trustee for the heir at law of the testator, who devised certain lands to it in trust for uses that were void.—Miller v. Lerch, Case No. 9,579.

Unincorporated religious, literary, or charitable associations, in Pennsylvania, may take property by devise or bequest, for pious or charitable purposes, without a license from the state.—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952.

A church is capable of taking and executing a trust for the benefit of destitute and needy churches, and to care for testator's cemetery lot.—Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

Societies of Friends, unincorporated associations in Pennsylvania, held capable of taking property by devise or bequest for the purposes of their organization.—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952.

The fact that a charitable society has already a surplus of funds does not vitiate a gift to it.—Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

§ 7. Certainty of beneficiaries.

A bequest of a fund to be "applied to the support of missionaries in India," under the direction of a certain board of missions, is void for uncertainty.—Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church v. McMaster, Case No. 1,586.

Devise in trust, to lay out $200 a year in wood, meal, and clothing, to be distributed among the poor and necessitous widows and orphans within the corporation of Georgetown, is void for uncertainty.—Barnes' Heirs v. Barnes, Case No. 1,014.

A devise for the establishment of "a hospital for females within the city of Savannah, on a permanent basis, into which sick and indigent females are to be admitted and cared for," is not void for uncertainty as to the beneficiaries. —Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

A general direction that an act of incorporation should be obtained for the hospital does not render the devise void.—Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

§ 8. Certainty as to purpose of gift.

A gift to "The Widows' Society of Savannah," for "the benevolent purposes of said society," where such society was incorporated for the relief of indigent widows and orphans, held sufficiently definite.—Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

A conveyance of realty and other property, in trust "for the purpose of founding an institution for the education of youth" in a certain county, held valid.—Russell v. Allen, Case No. 12,149.

A gift to the trustees of a church to devote the income to such destitute and needy churches in the state as they may select, so as to promote the cause of religion, held not void for uncertainty.—Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

§ 9. Administration and enforcement of gift.

Where a charity is definite, the court of chancery will provide a trustee if none is named, or if the one named is incompetent to act.—Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

The jurisdiction of chancery over charitable uses and gifts therefor does not depend upon the statute of charitable uses (43 Eliz. c. 4).—Magill v. Brown, Case No. 8,952.

Mortgage of vessels, see "Shipping," §§ 37, 38. When fraudulent as to creditors, see "Fraudulent Conveyances."

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

§ 1. Nature of transfer of chattels as security—What constitutes a mortgage.

A bill of sale, with a lease back, containing an agreement of the seller to buy back the property at a fixed price, will be construed as a mortgage.—In re Gurney, Case No. 5,873.

Where the right of reconveyance on default of payment of purchase price is reserved on a sale of property, the conveyance will be construed as a mortgage.—Mitchell v. McKibbin, Case No. 9,666.

Contract to buy machinery and let another have it to manufacture cloth from, to be paid by sales of such cloth, construed as equitable mortgage.—Almy v. Wilbur, Case No. 256.

§ 2. Delivery.

Record of a mortgage of personal property pursuant to the laws of the state is equivalent to a delivery.—Jones v. Sleeper, Case No. 7,496.

§ 3. Validity—Property mortgaged in general.

See, also, post, §§ 9, 11.

A chattel mortgage permitting substitution of property held not binding on the substituted property in the absence of a formal delivery by the mortgagor.—McDermott v. Yeatman, Case No. 8,749.

Property subsequently acquired may be bound by the provisions in the mortgage to that effect, as against other creditors.—Mitchell v. Winslow, Case No. 9,673.

See, also, post, § 13.

§ 4. —— Stock in trade.

A mortgage of "the whole of my stock of books and stationery now remaining in my possession, and also such additions thereto as I may hereafter make from time to time to the same," is not void for uncertainty, but does not convey future additions.—Wagner v. Watts, Case No. 17,040.

A mortgage covering fixtures, a stock of goods on hand kept for sale, and all such as should afterwards be purchased and put into the store, may be valid as to the fixtures while void as to the goods.—In re Kahley, Case No. 7,593.

A mortgage covering a stock in trade and all renewals thereof, and other property, though void as to the stock in trade, may still be valid as to the other property.—In re Perrin, Case No. 10,995.

§ 5. —— Crops.

The owner or lessee of land may give a valid mortgage upon his crop before it is raised.—Ellett v. Butt, Case No. 4,384.

§ 6. —— Retention of possession, control, and power of sale or use.

In Indiana an unrecorded chattel mortgage, where the property is not delivered to the mortgagee, is absolutely void, as against the assignee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor.—Moore v. Young, Case No. 9,782.

A mortgage of a stock in trade to secure an antecedent debt is void as to creditors, where not accompanied by possession, though it is duly recorded under Act Md. 1729, c. 8, § 5.—Noyes v. Brent, Case No. 10,373.

A chattel mortgage permitting the mortgagor to retain possession, and act as apparent owner, is not void upon its face by the common law, or the law of Massachusetts.—Brett v. Carter, Case No. 1,844.

A recorded chattel mortgage upon merchandise and fixtures, the mortgagor to remain in possession, with implied permission to sell the merchandise, but not the fixtures, is void in Missouri as to the merchandise, but valid as to the fixtures.—In re Kirkbride, Case No. 7,839.

In Nevada a chattel mortgage is void as to creditors, unless immediate possession of the mortgaged property is taken and retained by the mortgagee.—In re Morrill, Case No. 9,821.

Possession of slaves by the mortgagor, either before or after condition broken, is neither fraudulent, nor a badge of fraud requiring explanation.—Merrill v. Dawson, Case No. 9,469.

The retention of possession of the property by the mortgagor after condition broken will not affect the validity of the mortgage as between the parties.—Hallack v. Tritch, Case No. 5,956.

A chattel mortgage is void, as against the creditors of the mortgagor, where it is the intention of the parties that the mortgaged property should remain in possession of the mortgagor, and to be used and disposed of by him.—Catlin v. Currier, Case No. 2,518; In re Cantrell, Id. 2,389; In re Bloom, Id. 1,557; Johnson v. Patterson, Id. 7,403; In re Burrows, Id. 2,204; McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Id. 8,888; In re Manly, Id. 9,031; In re Morrill, Id. 9,821; In re Kahley, Id. 7,593; Wait v. Bull's Head Bank, Id. 17,043.

In Indiana a parol agreement that the mortgagor of a stock of goods shall have possession and sell them in the usual course of his business, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt, does not render the mortgage fraudulent and void as to creditors.—Overman v. Quick, Case No. 10,624.

In Georgia a mortgage of a stock of goods is valid, though possession is given to the mortgagor with power of sale, and is binding on subsequent additions to replenish the stock as against sellers who had no notice of the mortgage.—Johnson v. Patterson, Case No. 7,403.

The parties may agree that the possession and use of the mortgaged chattels shall be retained by the mortgagor until condition broken.—Mitchell v. Winslow, Case No. 9,673.

A clause constituting the mortgagor agent of the mortgagee to sell the goods and account for their proceeds does not render the mortgage fraudulent on its face.—Hawkins v. Hastings Bank, Case No. 6,244.

A mortgage on a stock of goods given to a retiring partner by the continuing partner, which contains no provision for applying the proceeds of sales to the debt, or for reinvesting them to augment the trust fund, is void upon its face.—Smith v. McLean, Case No. 13,074.

§ 7. —— Sufficiency of change of possession.

The delivery of possession must be immediate, and a mortgage, void at its inception for want of such delivery, is not made valid by a subsequent taking of possession before a creditor acquires his lien.—Edmondson v. Hyde, Case No. 4,285.

§ 8. —— Cure of defects by taking possession or recording.

Possession taken by the mortgagees before the rights of any other party attach cures any irregularity in the acknowledgment of the mortgage.—In re Burnett, Case No. 2,172.

In Illinois, recording a chattel mortgage in which material changes have been made since its acknowledgment gives it no additional validity.—Harvey v. Crane, Case No. 6,178.

II. FILING, RECORDING, AND REGISTRATION.

See, also, ante, § 8.

§ 9. Original—Necessity of filing or recording.

Unrecorded chattel mortgage valid, as between the parties, although possession not taken.—In re Barman, Case No. 999; Winsor v. McLellan, Id. 17,887.

A contract in effect an equitable mortgage need not be recorded as between the parties and third persons with notice.—Almy v. Wilbur, Case No. 256.

A chattel mortgage, valid as between the parties, though not filed as required by the state law, is good as against the assignee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor.—Coggeshall v. Potter, Case No. 2,955; In re Collins, Id. 3,004; Ex parte Dalby, Id. 3,540.

In New Jersey a chattel mortgage is good against subsequent creditors from the time of filing.—Miller v. Jones, Case No. 9,576.

Until March 19, 1839, there was no law in Arkansas requiring chattel mortgages to be recorded. If recorded prior to that time, the record was not notice, but tended to give publicity and repel fraud.—Merrill v. Dawson, Case No. 9,469.

A bill of sale intended for security operates (in Massachusetts) as a pledge and not as a mortgage, and does not require, or admit of, registration.—Ex parte Fitz, Case No. 4,837.

§ 10. —— Place of recording or filing.

A mortgage not filed in the county of the mortgagor's residence is void as to creditors, under Laws N. Y. 1833, c. 279, § 2.—Platt v. Stewart, Case No. 11,220.

In Michigan the mortgage must be filed in each township in which any of the mortgagors reside, to render the same valid as against creditors where the mortgagors retained possession.—Kane v. Rice, Case No. 7,609.

A chattel mortgage covering property in New York and New Jersey, and recorded in the latter state alone, will be held valid as to the New York property.—In re Soldiers' Business Messenger and Dispatch Co., Case No. 13,163.

§ 11. —— Priority over unrecorded mortgage.

A person who has knowledge of the giving of a mortgage is bound to ascertain whether the same has been paid, and cannot rely upon a statement to that effect by the person in charge of the record books.—Pickert v. The Independence, Case No. 11,124.

§ 12. Renewal.

The assignee in bankruptcy cannot claim that the mortgage is invalid because not renewed under the statutes of New York, if valid when bankruptcy proceedings were commenced.—Carlisle v. Davis, Case No. 2,411.

After the filing of the original, and once refiling of a copy, of a mortgage on a canal boat, no further filing is necessary to make the mortgage a continuing security, under Act N. Y. April 28, 1864.—Pickert v. The Independence, Case No. 11,124.

A statement which notifies creditors of the extent of the mortgagee's lien is sufficient to accompany the refiling of the mortgage.—Miller v. Jones, Case No. 9,576.

A description, in the renewal statement, of the property by reference to a prior mortgage on file, and the schedule thereto attached, "and all other goods and chattels" in a certain building, held insufficient.—Platt v. Stewart, Case No. 11,220.

A statement in renewal of a mortgage given to secure rent, that "the interests of the parties remain unchanged, except so far as the same have been altered by payment of rent accrued," held insufficient under Laws N. Y. 1833, c. 279, § 3.—Platt v. Stewart, Case No. 11,220.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

§ 13. Property mortgaged.

A mortgage "of all the goods and merchandise" in a certain store does not include fixtures.—In re Eldridge, Case No. 4,330.

Articles purchased to supply the place of articles sold by a trustee in a deed of trust, conveying certain articles to secure certain creditors, are not protected by the deed unless so stipulated therein.—Letourno v. Ringgold, Case No. 8,282.

A mortgagee of an unfinished article will hold the additions by accretion.—Ex parte Ames, Case No. 323.

A mortgage of future additions to a stock in trade is valid, and operates upon the goods as fast as they are added.—Brett v. Carter, Case No. 1,844.

§ 14. Lien and priority.

Quære as to the effect of provisions as to subsequently acquired property, as between incumbrances of different date.—Mitchell v. Winslow, Case No. 9,673.

See, also, ante, § 11.

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.

§ 15. Right to possession before default.

The filing by the mortgagor of a voluntary petition in bankruptcy is "an attempt to sell," within the meaning of the provision giving the right to take possession.—Moore v. Young, Case No. 9,782.

§ 16. Action by mortgagor against third person.

Equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin the levy of an execution against a mortgagor upon mortgaged goods in possession of the mortgagee, as the mortgagee has an adequate remedy at law.—La Mothe v. Fink, Case No. 8,032.

V. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF CREDITORS.

§ 17. Rights in general.

A mortgagee leaving the mortgagor in possession of personal property, as his agent, is chargeable, as against other creditors, with the amount sold by the mortgagor, whether applied on the debt or not.—Smith v. Ely, Case No. 13,044.

To defeat the title of the grantee in an absolute bill of sale third persons cannot avail themselves of a collateral agreement between the parties by which the title is defeasible on certain conditions.—The Ocean, Case No. 10,401.

Creditors who have not by judgment and execution obtained a specific lien cannot attack a chattel mortgage as not accompanied by delivery and change of possession of the property mortgaged (3 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 222, § 9), and the assignee in bankruptcy of the mortgagee has no greater right.—In re Collins, Case No. 3,007.

§ 18. Actions to set aside mortgage.

Where a mortgage provides that the mortgagor may retain possession, and act as apparent owner, the question of fraud is one of fact for the jury.—Brett v. Carter, Case No. 1,844.

A power of sale, which permits the mortgagor to replace them "in such manner as he may determine," may be proved by parol, or inferred from circumstances and the conduct of the parties.—In re Kahley, Case No. 7,593.

VI. ASSIGNMENT OF MORTGAGE OR DEBT.

§ 19. Effect of assignment.

The transfer to the purchaser of land of a note given to the former owner for rent, and the transfer of a mortgage on the crop to secure the note, invests such purchaser with the lien created by the mortgage.—Ellett v. Butt, Case No. 4,384.

VII. SATISFACTION.

§ 20. Satisfaction by taking possession.

The title of the mortgagee becomes absolute after condition broken, and where he takes possession the debt is satisfied to the extent of the value of the property at the time he took possession.—In re Haake, Case No. 5,883.

§ 21. Substitution of security.

A subsequent agreement to deliver the mortgaged property to the mortgagor on his giving security to sell the same and account for and pay over the proceeds, held a substitute for the mortgage.—Harper v. Neff, Case No. 6,089.

VIII. FORECLOSURE.

§ 22. Effect of foreclosure.

Foreclosure of a chattel mortgage does not affect rights of third person in the mortgaged property.—Catlin v. Currier, Case No. 2,518.

The practice on foreclosure is, by interlocutory decree, to allow until the next term to redeem, and, in default of redemption, to then foreclose by final decree barring redemption.—Merrill v. Dawson, Case No. 9,469.

§ 23. Action to foreclose.
Bill against third person to enforce equitable mortgage of chattels—Sufficiency of averments.—Almy v. Wilbur, Case No. 256.

Right to vote, see "Elections," § 1.

§ 1. Who are citizens.
Free persons of color born within the allegiance of the United States have always been regarded as citizens.—United States v. Rhodes, Case No. 16,151.

Colored persons, equally with white persons, are citizens of the United States.—In re Turner, Case No. 14,247.

The emancipation of a native-born slave by the thirteenth amendment removed the disability of slavery, and made him a citizen of the United States, subject, however, to any lawful restriction imposed upon his right to vote, or other powers or privileges.—United States v. Rhodes, Case No. 16,151.

The status of a child whose mother was a citizen of the United States, and his father an Indian maintaining a tribal relation, is that of the father.—Ex parte Reynolds, Case No. 11,719.

A child of a member of an Indian tribe within the territory of the United States, though born within the limits of the United States, is not a citizen thereof.—McKay v. Campbell, Case No. 8,840.

By the common law, a child born within the allegiance of the United States is born a subject thereof, without reference to the political status or condition of its parents.—McKay v. Campbell, Case No. 8,840.

Defendant, born in New York, in 1760, of Irish parents, left in 1771, and resided in the British dominions until his return to America, in 1785. Held not a citizen of the United States.—Hollingsworth v. Duane, Case No. 6,615.

Under the treaty with Great Britain of October 20, 1818, art. 3, a child born in the Oregon territory in 1823, of British subjects, was born in the allegiance of the king of Great Britain.—McKay v. Campbell, Case No. 8,840.

A person born in 1823, in the Oregon territory, whose father was a British subject, and whose mother was a member of the Chinook Indian tribe, is not a citizen of the United States.—McKay v. Campbell, Case No. 8,840.

Inhabitants of the territory of Orleans became citizens of Louisiana and of the United States by the admission of Louisiana to statehood.—United States v. Laverty, Case No. 15,569a.

A person born abroad on board an American vessel, whose parents are citizens of the United States, temporarily absent only, is to be regarded as a citizen of the United States.—United States v. Gordon, Case No. 15,231.

§ 2. Citizens of the United States and of the several states.
An American citizen has two classes of privileges: (1) Those which he has as a citizen of the United States; and (2) those which he has as a citizen of the state where he resides.—Ex parte Kinney, Case No. 7,825.

By the fourteenth amendment, citizenship in the United States is defined and is made independent of citizenship in a state, and the privileges and immunities secured by the constitution are such as belong of right to citizens of all free states, and those which in the constitution are secured to the people, either as against the action of the federal or of the state government.—United States v. Hall, Case No. 15,282.

§ 3. Expatriation.
A person's allegiance to the government continues to be due as long as its courts of justice are open to maintain peace and protect the citizen.—United States v. Greiner, Case No. 15,262.

In the United States expatriation is considered a fundamental right. To sustain it the government to which allegiance is sworn, if independent in fact, need not have been recognized as such by the United States.—Juando v. Taylor, Case No. 7,558.

The right of expatriation recognized in the case of an American citizen accepting from a foreign government a commission authorizing him to cruise as a privateer.—Jansen v. The Vrow Christina Magdalena, Case No. 7,216.

Quære, whether a native-born American citizen can expatriate himself.—Chacon v. Eighty-Nine Bales of Cochineal, Case No. 2,568.

A citizen of the United States cannot expatriate himself without the consent of his government; and no consent is to be implied from the policy of the United States to permit the naturalization of foreigners without inquiring whether their allegiance to their native countries has been dissolved.—Williams' Case, Case No. 17,708.

A citizen of the United States cannot throw off his allegiance without a law authorizing the same.—United States v. Gillies, Case No. 15,206.

A citizen of one country may enter the military service of a foreign government without compromising the neutrality of his own, or devesting himself of his rights of citizenship.—Chacon v. Eighty-Nine Bales of Cochineal, Case No. 2,568; Juando v. Taylor, Id. 7,558.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

§ 1, Constitutional and statutory provisions and effect thereof. § 2, Discrimination by reason of race, color, or condition. § 3, Offenses and criminal prosecutions.

See, also, "Constitutional Law," §§ 4, 11, 12.
Denial ground for removal of cause from state court, see "Removal of Causes," § 24.
Jurisdiction to enforce rights, see "Courts," § 39.
Marriage between negroes and white persons, see "Marriage," § 2.
Right to vote, see "Elections," § 1.

§ 1. Constitutional and statutory provisions and effect thereof.

The thirteenth amendment gave to the freed slave no right of protection from the federal government superior to that of his white fellow citizens, and no exemption from the power of state control which might be exercised against others.—Charge to Grand Jury, Civil Rights Act, Case No. 18,260.

The provision of the fourteenth amendment that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States," prohibits the action of the state alone. It gave congress no power to legislate against the wrongs and personal violence of citizens.—Charge to Grand Jury, Civil Rights Act, Case No. 18,260.

The privileges and immunities which this clause forbids the states to abridge are only that limited class which depend immediately upon the constitution of the United States, such as the right to pass from state to state and to the national capital, to protection upon the high seas and in foreign countries, and the like.—Charge to Grand Jury, Civil Rights Act, Case No. 18,260.

These laws, state and national, were intended to secure political and legal equality of rights to all citizens, but were not intended to establish social equality, or to enforce social intercourse between different classes of citizens.—Charge to Grand Jury, The Civil Rights Act, Case No. 18,258.

The civil rights act of 1866 was within the power conferred upon congress by the thirteenth amendment, on the subject of slavery, under which it had full power to pass all laws deemed proper for its entire eradication in any form.—United States v. Cruikshank, Case No. 14,897.

Congress is authorized to protect the rights secured by the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments.—United States v. Given, Case No. 15,210.

The civil rights act of April 9, 1866, was intended to protect against legal disabilities and legal impediments, and not private infringements of the rights secured, through prejudice or otherwise, when the laws are impartial and sufficient.—Louisiana v. Dubuclet, Case No. 8,538.

The civil rights bill, while not intended to enlarge the privileges and immunities of white citizens, furnishes additional guaranties and remedies to secure their enjoyment.—Live-Stock Dealers' & Butchers' Ass'n v. Crescent City Live-Stock Landing & Slaughter-House Co., Case No. 8,408.

The civil rights bill is not a penal statute, but a remedial one, and is to be liberally construed.—United States v. Rhodes, Case No. 16,151.

A corporation is included within the word "person" in Act April 20, 1871.—Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, Case No. 10,336.

The statutes of South Carolina requiring the arrest and detention in jail of colored seamen coming into ports of the state during the time their vessel remained in such state are valid and constitutional.—Roberts v. Yates, Case No. 11,919.

In North Carolina, the equal rights, in inns and public conveyances, of all persons without distinction of class, are fully protected by state statutes, and existed as to inns at common law: and the "Civil Rights Bill" was unnecessary in the state, and its only effect is to give jurisdiction of wrongs committed against citizens on account of class to the federal courts.—Charge To Grand Jury—The Civil Rights Act, Case No. 18,258.

Civil incapacities and disqualifications under the law of the domicil are not regarded in other countries, as to acts done or rights acquired within another jurisdiction, where no such disqualifications are acknowledged.—Polydore v. Prince, Case No. 11,257.

When state laws have imposed duties, the performance or nonperformance of which affects rights under the federal government, congress may make the nonperformance of those duties an offense against the United States, and may punish it accordingly.—United States v. Given, Case No. 15,210.

§ 2. Discrimination by reason of race, color, or condition.

Common carriers may provide separate accommodation for white and colored passengers, providing they be equally suitable, and may exclude passengers who refuse to comply with reasonable regulations in this particular.—Green v. The City of Bridgeton, Case No. 5,754.

A colored female passenger may be required to ride in a car set apart for colored female passengers, where it is equally fit and appropriate in all respects with that set apart for the use of white female passengers.—United States v. Dodge, Case No. 14,976.

An indenture of apprentice of a negro child, which does not contain the provisions for his security and benefit required by the general laws of the state in indentures of white apprentices, is void, under the civil rights bill of 1866.—In re Turner, Case No. 14,247.

A crime inflicted upon a colored person, not by reason of his race, color, or previous condition, is not within the civil rights act of 1866.—United States v. Cruikshank, Case No. 14,897.

It is a violation of the civil rights bill of 1866 to inflict upon a negro the punishment of banishment from the state.—United States v. Horton, Case No. 15,392.

There is a deprivation of equal protection of the laws where the officers of the law, with knowledge of the public outrages and crimes committed by defendants, willfully failed to employ legal means to bring the offenders to trial because of the color of their victims.—United States v. Blackburn, Case No. 14,603.

§ 3. Offenses and criminal prosecutions.

Congress has no authority, under the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments or otherwise, to declare it a crime for any individuals to deny to negroes the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of the theaters and inns of a state.—Charge To Grand Jury—Civil Rights Act, Case No. 18,260.

An indictment under the civil rights bill of 1866 should state that the offense charged was committed against the person injured, by reason of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude.—United States v. Cruikshank, Case No. 14,897.

An indictment against a state tax collector for depriving a Chinaman of a right secured to him by Act May 31, 1870, by exacting money under a state law relating to miners, held demurrable, in the absence of an averment that he was a miner, so as to be within its provisions.—United States v. Jackson, Case No. 15,459.

A clerk in charge of the reception of travelers at an hotel is liable under Act March 1, 1875, for refusing accommodations to a negro traveler by reason of his color.—United States v. Newcomer, Case No. 15,868.

A state officer, empowered by law to select jurors to serve in the courts of the state in the trial of civil and criminal cases, who for a series of years selects only white jurors, and fails to select colored jurors, is amenable to indictment in a court of the United States, under Act March 1, 1875, § 4 (18 Stat. 335), entitled "An act to protect all citizens in their civil rights."—Charge To Grand Jury—Civil Rights Act, Case No. 18,259.

A railway employé who denies to a female passenger a right to ride in the only car in the train appropriated for the accommodation of ladies alone, solely because she is a person of African descent, is guilty under the civil rights law of March 1, 1875, whether he acts under the instructions of his employer or not.—United States v. Dodge, Case No. 14,976.

The crime of conspiring to injure or intimidate citizens in the exercise of their civil rights is an infamous crime, which must be proceeded against by indictment, and not by information.—United States v. Butler, Case No. 14,701.

Act May 31, 1870, was designed not to punish abuse of authority by state officers, but to forbid the execution of state laws, which the act makes void.—United States v. Jackson, Case No. 15,459.

In Act May 31, 1870, § 6, to enforce the rights of citizens irrespective of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, the words "any right or privilege granted or secured to" include the rights of peaceably assembling and of free speech.—United States v. Mall, Case No. 15,712.

§ 1. Deputies.

The clerk is not bound by the acts of his deputy where not in the ordinary course of business.—Welddes v. Edsell, Case No. 17,375.

Clerk of circuit court of District of Columbia held not liable for the act of his deputy in making an erroneous indorsement on an execution.—Patons v. Lee, Case No. 10,800.

§ 2. Compensation of clerks.

Where the office of clerk of the district court and that of the clerk of the circuit court are held by the same person, he is entitled to the salary of each office. Act May 18, 1842, c. 29.—United States v. Bassett, Case No. 14,539.

The fees of each office are to be kept distinct, and a deficiency in the amount of one cannot be made up by excess in the amounf of the other.—United States v. Bassett, Case No. 14,539.

Reasonable compensation (Act Feb. 28, 1799, § 3), when no provision is made by law, will be determined by allowance in similar cases.—Anonymous, Case No. 472.

Fees for filing and recording paper.—Amy v. Shelby County, Case No. 345.

Fees of clerks of courts on continuance of a case in equity.—Ex parte Lee, Case No. 8,177.

Fees for seizure on water for breach of revenue laws determine amount for seizure on land.—Anonymous, Case No. 472.

The clerk is entitled to fees in admiralty cases for filing the record, making the docket and indexes, for order to cancel stipulations, taxing costs, receiving and disbursing money, entering order check, entries in ledger, and filing clerk's costs.—The Siren, Case No. 12,910.

The clerk is entitled to a fee of two dollars for services in making up the calendar, and sending notice to the proctor that the cause is on the calendar, with its number.—The Siren, Case No. 12,910.

The clerk is entitled to commissions upon money deposited in a bank under a decree of the court, and subject to its order (Act 1793, c. 20, § 2) as "money deposited in court."—Ex parte Prescott, Case No. 11,388.

The clerk has no right to commissions on money subject to the decree of the court, unless it is in the court's registry, or has passed through his hands. (Act Feb. 26, 1853).—Ex parte Plitt, Case No. 11,228.

Money must be actually received, kept, and paid out, to entitle the clerk to the one per cent. commission. Rev. St. § 828.—In re Goodrich, Case No. 5,541.

The clerk is not entitled to such commission on moneys which, although ordered to be, are not in fact, paid into his hands.—In re Goodrich, Case No. 5,541.

The clerk is entitled to commissions upon proceeds of interlocutory sales of prize paid into court.—The Avery, Case No. 671.

The clerk of the circuit court of the District of Columbia may have an attachment for the nonpayment of his fees.—Lee v. Patterson, Case No. 8,198.

Fees paid to the officers of the court by the claimant of property seized are not to be repaid by the United States, under Act Feb. 28, 1799, § 8, where the libel is dismissed.—In re Stover, Case No. 13,506.

A third person, who appears and defends in behalf and in the absence of the party to a suit in admiralty, is personally liable for the clerk's fees.—In re Stover, Case No. 13,507.

The losing party is liable for the clerk's costs for orders actually entered on behalf of the succeeding party in the progress of the cause. —Sancho v. Atwood, Case No. 12,291a.

A dismissal "without costs to either party" does not relieve the parties from liability to the clerk for fees for services rendered at their request.—In re Stover, Case No. 13,507.

§ 3. Reimbursement of expenses.

Expenses incurred for board and lodging at hotels while attending at terms of the court held away from the place where the clerk is required to keep his office are not allowable as "necessary expenses of his office." (Act Feb. 26, 1853).—United States v. Gorham, Case No. 15,235.

The power to make alterations and modifications in the charter of Bowdoin College and the manner of its exercise.—Allen v. McKean, Case No. 229.

A college (Bowdoin) privately founded, though chartered by the state, is not a public corporation.—Allen v. McKean, Case No. 229.

§ 2. Officers.

The approval of the board of trustees of a college cannot give effect to an unconstitutional act taking away their visitorial powers.—Allen v. McKean, Case No. 229.

Injuries from swells, see "Navigable Waters," § 4.

I. RULES AND PRECAUTIONS FOR PREVENTING COLLISIONS IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Adoption of rules.

The district court for the Eastern district of Pennsylvania adopts, without limitation, what it supposes to be the rule of the English trinity house for avoiding collision. Rules stated.—Lyle v. The Conestoga, Case No. 8,622.

The rules of navigation for avoiding collision, the use of lights, etc., before the adoption of the statutory rules.—Jones v. The Hanover, Case No. 7,466.

§ 2. Operation and effect.

The British merchants' shipping act has no application to the equipment or conduct of a British vessel when meeting a foreign ship on the high seas.—The Belle, Case No. 1,269.

The ordinary rules of navigation designed to prevent collision are binding on fishing vessels while engaged on their fishing grounds.—The Summit, Case No. 13,606.

Courts of admiralty of the United States may apply the rule of the general maritime law in regard to the liability of owners of foreign vessels for collisions on the high seas.—Churchill v. The British America, Case No. 2,715.

A foreign vessel in collision with an American schooner off the east end of Long Island may set up the failure of the schooner to show a torch light, as required by the act of congress, as a fault, on a libel by the schooner for collision.—Leonard v. Whitwill, Case No. 8,261.

Barges navigating the Ohio and Mississippi are subject to the rules of navigation.—The Dick Keys, Case No. 3,898.

A steamboat carrying the mail is bound by the same laws and rules of navigation that govern other steamers.—Haney v. The Louisiana, Case No. 6,021.

A custom that vessels lying aground in a Hatteras Inlet channel must bear their own loss from collision cannot control the liability under the law of the colliding vessel.—The Ellen S. Terry, Case No. 4,378.

A steamer used as a harbor ferryboat, in violation of law, is liable for collision with a vessel in the lawful use of the harbor.—The Maverick, Case No. 9,316.

§ 3. Local rules in general.

The local rules of navigation established by general usage must be observed.—Halderman v. Beckwith, Case No. 5,907.

District court in admiralty is not in all cases bound by the city ordinances regulating navigation.—The B. S. Sheppard. Case No. 2,072.

City ordinances concerning vessels are binding only as police regulations. They cannot change the demands of maritime law.—The Palmetto, Case No. 10,699.

St. Mass. 1847, c. 234, § 2, requiring vessels in Boston harbor to rig in jib booms in certain cases, is valid.—The Clover, Case No. 2,908.

Rules and regulations for landings made by Mississippi towns, when authorized by state laws, will be enforced in federal courts.—Culbertson v. The Southern Belle, Case No. 3,462.

Act N. Y. April 12, 1848, requiring steamboats passing up and down the East river to be navigated in the center of the river, applies to a tug whose business is to cruise along the docks, and move vessels from one pier to another, or into or out of the harbor.—Vandewater v. Westervelt, Case No. 16,846a.

Act N. Y. April 12, 1848, requiring steamers navigating the East river to keep to the middle of the stream, will be enforced in the admiralty courts.—Lonan v. The C. H. Northram, Case No. 8,473.

A Louisiana law adopting regulations as to the navigation of the Mississippi river cannot affect vessels engaged in carrying on commerce between that and other states.—Halderman v. Beckwith, Case No. 5,907.

§ 4. Rules of supervising inspectors.

Supervising inspectors have power to make rules not inconsistent with general rules of navigation.—The American Eagle, Case No. 301.

Pilot rules of supervising inspectors are controlled by Act 1864.—The Atlas, Case No. 633.

A rule of supervising inspectors adopted before but not promulgated at the time of a collision, is not applicable thereto.—The Narragansett, Case No. 10,016.

The rule of the supervising inspectors of steam vessels requiring a vessel on the port tack in a fog to sound two blasts of her fog horn held to be binding as a usage of the sea.—The Eleanora, Case No. 4,335.

Quære, whether rule 9 of the board of supervising inspectors (Act Feb. 28, 1871) has the force of law in respect to the lights to be carried on tows.—The Jesse Williamson, Jr., Case No. 7,296.

§ 5. Departure from rules in general.

Vessels have a right to assume in the absence of knowledge to the contrary that other vessels are complying with statutory regulations.—The Ariadne, Cases Nos. 524, 525.

The rules of navigation are not inflexible, and a vessel which strictly adheres to them may be guilty of a tortious injury to another which fails to observe them.—The Santa Claus, Case No. 12,327.

A sail vessel is in fault where adherence to the rule that she shall keep her course necessarily results in a collision, which a change would probably have averted.—Brooks v. The D. W. Lenox, Case No. 1,952.

A vessel will not be pronounced in fault for adhering to a rule of navigation, unless a very clear case for departure is shown.—The Clement, Case No. 2,879.

Mere apprehension of danger of collision will not justify change of course in a vessel whose duty under the rules is to keep her course. A change should only be made where there is actual danger.—The General U. S. Grant, Case No. 5,320.

It is not enough for the party who departs from the rule to show that they would have gone clear if each had kept its course; he must also show the other party ought to have perceived there was no possible chance of collision by so doing.—Wheeler v. The Eastern State, Case No. 17,494.

A failure to keep to the middle of the East river, as required by law, will not be considered a fault where the approaching vessel was seen in time to take the necessary steps to clear.—The Frederick M. Wilson, Case No. 5,078.

The swinging out of steamboat when meeting cross tide held not a change of course.—The General Franz Sigel, Case No. 5,311.

The failure to comply with the local regulation, where it did not contribute to the collision, will not render the vessel liable.—Fagan v. The Pluto, Case No. 4,605; The Fanita, Id. 4,635.

§ 6. Obligation to take precautions.

All vessels are required to use reasonable diligence to avoid collisions.—Buzzard v. The Petrel, Case No. 2,261.

Nothing in the rules will excuse neglect of precautions required by ordinary practice of seamen or the special circumstances.—Lane v. The A. Denike, Case No. 8,045.

Where measures of precaution have been neglcted which would have rendered the collision less probable, it is no excuse that it could not have been prevented at the moment it occurred.—Nelson v. The Goliah, Case No. 10,106.

Carrying the statutory lights will not exonerate a vessel from responsibility for a collision, where the special circumstances reasonably called for extraordinary measures to apprise other vessels of her proximity and character.—The R. W. Burrowes, Case No. 12,180.

The steamer need not slacken her speed nor change her course, where she sees the lights of another vessel, and has no reasonable ground to apprehend a collision.—The Scotia, Case No. 12,513.

A vessel having the right of way must keep a proper lookout and use proper seamanship to avoid collision.—The Mary C., Case No. 9,201.

A vessel which comes into the wind, for the purpose of shortening sail without first having made a careful survey to discover approaching vessels, is at fault.—The Starlight, Case No. 13,310.

The running of a steamer in a thoroughfare of vessels, at night, with no more precaution than is usual in the daytime, raises an inference that she could have discovered an approaching vessel in time to avoid collision.—Fish v. The Black Warrior, Case No. 4,813.

§ 7. Negligence in general.

Any negligence, inattention, or want of skill in the navigation or care of a vessel resulting in injury to others will entitle the sufferer to damages.—Ward v. The Ogdensburgh, Case No. 17,158.

A steamer, having placed herself in a position involving danger of collision, is responsible for the consequences.—The City of Paris, Case No. 2,765.

Exertions to avoid a collision will not relieve a vessel whose original wrongful maneuver made it inevitable.—Beardsley v. The Metamora, Case No. 1,186.

A vessel wrongfully or carelessly placing herself in the course of another, so as to render collision inevitable, is liable therefor.—The New Jersey, Case No. 10,161.

The keeping of schedule time will not excuse a ferryboat starting from her slip at such a time as to endanger collision with another vessel.—The Columbus, Case No. 3,043.

The relative situation of a vessel, and the probability of a change therein at the time that a course is decided upon by another, will determine the question of negligence of the latter.—The Thomas A. Scott, Case No. 13,921.

The master of a vessel will be held justified in bearing down on another vessel to leeward, which has hoisted her colors, as if to speak him, if it is the custom to do so.—Stone v. Ketland, Case No. 13,483.

A vessel whose crew was disabled by yellow fever held not in fault in failing to put back to port, or anchoring, where she took reasonable precautions to avoid collision.—The Southern Home, Case No. 13,187.

It is a fault for the entire crew of a sail vessel, including the lookout, to be engaged in handling the sails.—The H. P. Baldwin, Case No. 6,812.

The master or pilot in command of a vessel is only bound to exercise ordinary skill and prudence in getting his vessel under weigh.—The Eliza and Abby, Case No. 4,349.

Bad management, which is not the proximate cause of the collision, will not subject a vessel to damages.—The Eliza and Abby, Case No. 4,349.

An approaching vessel, considering the white light to be that of a vessel at anchor, held not excused where, by the exercise of ordinary nautical skill and care, the error might have been discovered in time to avoid a collision. Case No. 5,734 reversed.—The Gray Eagle, Case No. 5,735.

§ 8. Contributory negligence.

Faulty management of one vessel does not excuse want of proper care and skill of the other.—Lucas v. The Thomas Swann, Case No. 8,588.

Absence of all hands from posts of duty save the pilot, though inexcusable, yet if it did not contribute to collision does not render vessel liable.—The America, Case No. 284.

The fact that the vessel whose duty it was, under the rules, to give way, was disabled and partly unmanageable, does not impose upon the other vessel the duty to avoid her, unless the disability was manifest.—The H. P. Baldwin, Case No. 6,812.

Negligence by a vessel having the right of way in not seasonably discovering an approaching vessel will not charge the former with fault, unless such negligence contributed to the collision.—The Starlight, Case No. 13,310.

§ 9. Inevitable accident.

Inevitable accident is never admitted as a defense unless it appear that neither vessel was in fault.—Sterling v. The Jennie Cushman, Case No. 13,375.

Where no fault can be found on either side, the collision will be deemed an inevitable accident.—Ward v. The Fashion, Case No. 17,154.

"Inevitable accident" means one happening after due care and caution and a proper display of nautical skill.—The Baltic, Case No. 823.

Inevitable accident is that which cannot be prevented by ordinary caution and maritime skill.—Brainard v. The Worcester, Case No. 1,804a; Lucas v. The Thomas Swann, Id. 8,588.

Inevitable accident occurs only when the collision results from natural causes, without any fault of the owners or the crews of either vessel.—Killam v. The Eri, Case No. 7,765.

A collision occurring in the daytime in fair weather may be an inevitable accident.—The Java, Case No. 7,234.

The fact that a collision was caused by a hurricane is no defense if it could have been avoided by foresight, precaution, and nautical skill.—Bodin v. The Thule, Case No. 1,595.

A collision is not an inevitable accident merely because it could not have been prevented after realization of the dangerous position of the vessels, if they were negligently brought into that position.—The Falcon, Case No. 4,619.

The effect of the tide upon a steamer entering a harbor does not make out a case of inevitable accident.—The Russia, Case No. 12,168.

A tug will not be held in fault for her engine's catching on the center, whereby she drifted towards rocks, and, in trying to get away, collided with a floating bath house.—The M. R. Brazos, Case No. 9,898.

Where a vessel injured by a collision with another at a wharf in a violent storm is cut adrift to prevent her sinking at the wharf, and collides with another vessel, held, that the latter collision is not a case of inevitable accident.—Sherman v. Mott, Case No. 12,767.

A steam ferryboat was held to be justified in attempting to run between New York and Brooklyn, in broken and running ice, and a collision with a schooner in a slip was held a case of inevitable accident.—The Brooklyn, Case No. 1,939.

§ 10. Speed.

Risk of collision, requiring reduction of speed, exists whenever vessels are so near that a collision might result from any departure from the rules.—The Milwaukee, Case No. 9,626.

A rate of speed in steamers which, under the circumstances, necessarily endangers the property of others, is unjustifiable, and makes the owners responsible for the consequences.—Ward v. The Fashion, Case No. 17,154.

"Moderate speed" (Act 1864, c. 69, art. 16) is a speed sufficiently moderate to enable the steamer, under ordinary circumstances, when approaching another ship so as to involve risk of collision, seasonably and effectually to slacken her speed, or, if necessary, stop and reverse.—Dolner v. The Monticello, Case No. 3,971.

The obligation to slacken speed under article 16 of the collision act was not intended to be contemporaneous with the duty of porting under article 13.—The Free State, Case No. 5,090.

The obligation to slacken speed arises in case of continuous approach, or when the approaching light is found to be closing in, instead of opening out.—The Manitoba, Case No. 9,029.

Excessive speed in a steamer is not excused by the fact that she is under contract with the government to carry the mails in a specified time.—The James Adger, Case No. 7,188; The Northern Indiana, Id. 10,320.

The speed of a steamer in fair weather in open sea, being the usual rate, held not an element in the collision, where she stopped as soon as the necessity was apparent.—Brennan v. The Virgo, Case No. 1,831.

The inability of a steamer to reverse her engine at once where she is running at full speed is not a fault.—The Northfield, Case No. 10,326.

A vessel will be held at fault for racing under full sail with another vessel on a dark night, when other vessels on the same course have taken in their light sails.—The Thomas Martin, Case No. 13,926.

The fact that a vessel is on the wrong side of the channel does not relieve another from the duty to reduce her speed to avoid a collision.—The Brothers, Case No. 1,969.

A steamboat meeting a tow, if she cannot pass at a safe distance, must reduce her speed to prevent injury to the tow by the swell.—The C. H. Northam, Case No. 2,690.

Where a steamboat passes a tow without much reduction of speed, whereby the tow was damaged by the swell, the steamboat is liable.—The C. H. Northam, Case No. 2,689.

A steamer is liable whose speed prevents avoiding a collision with a sail vessel suddenly revealed to view on rounding a bend in the river.—The Cambridge, Case No. 2,333.

The attempt to pass a ferryship at such a rate of speed as renders it impossible to stop in time to avoid hitting a ferryboat, in case one should come out, is negligence.—The D. R. Martin, Case No. 4,091.

It is a gross fault in a steamer to pass along the mouths of the ferry slips in the East river, in close proximity thereto, at a speed at which all efforts to stop her, when danger of collision with a ferryboat coming out of her slip appears, are ineffectual.—The Favorita, Case No. 4,695.

A steamer will be held in fault in keeping up a high rate of speed in a narrow channel full of vessels ahead of her, some of which did not become visible, owing to the presence of others, until too late to avoid collision.—The James Roy, Case No. 7,201.

A steamer will be held in fault for running at a speed of 17 miles an hour in the nighttime, through a crowd of vessels, whose lights are seen by her.—The Syracuse, Case No. 13,718.

It is a neglect of proper precaution to put a steamboat under full headway just as she is entering a narrow part of the channel in the night.—Bulloch v. The Lamar, Case No. 2,129.

Steamer held in fault in maintaining a speed of eight miles an hour on the river St. Clair, on a very dark night.—Hall v. The Buffalo, Case No. 5,927.

Steamer held in fault for running six or seven knots an hour, on a boisterous and dark night, 15 miles off Sandy Hook.—The Leo, Cases Nos. 8,251, 8,254.

A speed of nine miles an hour, in the East river, in a crowd of vessels, is an unreasonable speed.—The Florida, Case No. 4,889.

It is negligence for a steamer to enter Milwaukee harbor at a speed of eight miles an hour.—The Alleghany, Cases Nos. 204, 205.

A tug is in fault which in a crowded thoroughfare, like the Chicago river, proceeds at the rate of over five miles an hour.—The Little Giant, Case No. 8,401.

A steamer entering a narrow and crowded harbor without slowing down will be held in fault, though the colliding vessel was also in fault for taking a wrong course and not signaling.—Maxwell v. The Brothers and The Lady Franklin, Case No. 9,332.

The cases upon the subject of speed reviewed and criticised.—The Free State, Case No. 5,090.

§ 11. Ferryboats.

Ferryboats are not absolved from general rules of navigation in making slips.—The Armitage Brearley, Case No. 537.

A ferryboat must take the ordinary precautions to avoid collisions, though she is compelled to make a certain number of trips within an hour.—Randolph v. United States, Case No. 11,562.

Ferryboats crossing harbors at night or in fog should proceed with great caution.—Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. The John Adams, Case No. 338.

Ferryboats running between Peck's slip and Williamsburgh, on the East river, are within the local law requiring vessels navigating the river to keep to the middle. (Act N. Y. April 12, 1848.)—The E. C. Scranton, Case No. 4,273.

A ferryboat ascending the East river is not entitled to hug the shore as against a sail vessel coming down the river.—The E. C. Scranton, Case No. 4,273.

A ferryboat is culpably negligent in running on a dark night, through a crowded harbor, relying solely upon a defective compass.—Lenox v. Winisimmet Co., Case No. 8,248.

II. SAIL VESSELS MEETING OR CROSSING.

§ 12. Application of rules in general.

The rule that a vessel sailing free must give way to one closehauled applies to pilot boats and other vessels on bays and harbors, as well as on the high seas.—The Clement, Case No. 2,879.

A vessel approaching another so circumstanced as to be difficult of control is in fault for colliding with her, if, by proper exertions and management, she could keep out of the way.—The Maud Webster, Case No. 9,303.

§ 13. Vessels out of command.

When a vessel is tacking and out of command, other vessels must avoid her.—The A. G. Brooks, Case No. 98.

A pilot boat under reefed sails, with helm lashed to leeward, and alternately luffing up and falling off, must unlash her helm, and keep a steady course, on the approach of another vessel.—The Transit, Case No. 14,137.

A sail vessel is in fault for coming in stays across the bows of another sail vessel, which she has just passed.—Bartlett v. Williams, Case No. 1,081.

§ 14. Comparative duty of vessels running free and closehauled.

The vessel sailing free must give way to the one closehauled, and take the proper measures to avoid a collision, and the latter must hold her course, regardless of the tacks they are on.—The Argus, Case No. 521; The Blossom, Id. 1,564; The Catharine and Martha, Id. 2,512; The Clement, Id. 2,880; Dodge v. The John Stuart, Id. 3,952a; The M. M. Hamilton, Id. 9,685; Poole v. The Washington, Id. 11,271; The Radama, Id. 11,521; Saunders v. The Hanover, Id. 12,374.

The vessel closehauled must keep her course, though not carrying lights.—The Belle, Case No. 1,269.

The vessel going free should pass astern of the vessel closehauled.—The A. G. Brooks, Case No. 98.

The vessel sailing free has no right to go ahead of the one closehauled and compel the latter to go about before running out her tack.—The Mary Eveline, Case No. 9,211.

A vessel with the wind free, attempting, without necessity, to cross the bows of a vessel closehauled, is liable if a collision ensues.—The Clara M. Porter, Case No. 2,792.

A vessel closehauled, crossing the course of another sailing free, will not be held in fault for luffing, where the vessels are brought into imminent danger of collision through the fault of the latter in not keeping away.—The John Stuart, Case No. 7,427.

A vessel sailing free attempted to pass so close to a vessel closehauled that a mistake of the latter in luffing caused the collision. The latter had no lookout. Held, that the damages should be divided. Case No. 10,607 reversed.—The Osseo, Case No. 10,608.

In case of a collision between a vessel running free and one closehauled, the former must show that all possible care and skill were used by her, and that the collision was the fault of the other vessel, or was inevitable.—The Clement, Case No. 2,879; The Osseo, Id. 10,607; The Rebecca, Id. 11,618.

A vessel sailing free, which mistakes the course of another closehauled, and causes a collision by luffing, will be held liable.—Aumach v. The Queen of the South, Case No. 657a.

Failure of a sloop running before the wind in the East river to foresee the point at which an approaching schooner will run out her tack, so as to keep out of her way when she comes about, is a fault barring recovery for an ensuing collision.—Winne v. The Carroll, Case No. 17,876a.

§ 15. Closehauled—In general.

Vessels sailing, one within seven points of the wind, and the other two points free, are neither closehauled.—The M. M. Chase, Case No. 9,684.
