The voluntary stranding of a vessel, when required and designed for the common safety of the associated interests, constitutes a case of general contribution, though followed by her total loss.—O'Connor v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 10,419; Patten v. Darling, Id. 10,812.

A three-masted schooner, being unable to keep her head to the wind through the loss of her mizzen sail in a severe storm, was put before the wind, and, the storm continuing, was finally beached on the New Jersey coast, it being considered safer to run such risk than to attempt to bring her head to the wind. Held a voluntary stranding, and that the vessel owners were entitled to contribution from the cargo.—Fitzpatrick v. Eight Hundred Bales of Cotton, Case No. 4,843.

The beaching of a vessel by the act of the master to prevent her foundering with a total loss of vessel, cargo, and crew, or to prevent her being driven on shore elsewhere, is a voluntary stranding, and the cargo must contribute in general average to the loss sustained.—In re Eight Hundred Bales of Cotton, Case No. 4,319.

In the case of a vessel dragging her anchors towards the shore in a gale to avoid the danger of being beaten to pieces on rocks the master voluntarily slipped his cable, and allowed the vessel to be thrown on the beach. Held a general average loss.—Sturgess v. Cary, Case No. 13,572.

Where a vessel cut through by ice while anchored in deep water was run ashore in shallow water, and injured by lying on an uneven bottom, held a general average loss.—Rathbone v. Fowler, Case No. 11,584.

An intention to consign to inevitable loss goods thrown overboard is not necessary to authorize a claim for general average.—Caze v. Reilly, Case No. 2,538.

Goods laden on deck with consent of the shipper under a bill of lading excepting "dangers of navigation," and necessarily jettisoned, do not make a case for general average.—The Milwaukee Belle, Case No. 9,627.

The fact that the shipment on deck was sought by the master for the purpose of trimming his vessel is not material.—The Milwaukee Belle, Case No. 9,627.

Right of contribution in case of a jettison of a load carried on deck under the usage of the trade, or under special agreement.—Goddefroy v. The Live Yankee, Case No. 5,496.

To constitute a case for general average, there must be a successful attempt, by a voluntary jettison, to avoid an imminent and apparently inevitable danger, in which ship, cargo, and crew all participate.—The Congress, Case No. 3,099.

A usage in the coasting trade to carry a part of the cargo, if heavy and imperishable, on deck, is reasonable, and, if such a deck load be jettisoned, the ship and freight are liable to contribute to the loss in general average.—The William Gillum, Case No. 17,693.

Blubber thrown overboard from a whaler, to prevent its sinking in a violent tempest, held a subject of general average.—Rogers v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., Case No. 12,016.

§ 227. —— Acts to prevent capture.
Where a ship is run ashore to avoid capture, and before she is boarded and burned a large part of her cargo is saved, the owner is entitled to contribution.—Caze v. Reilly, Case No. 2,538.

A shipper of money is entitled to reimbursement where it is surrendered by the master of the vessel to prevent her capture and burning by a privateer.—Hunter v. The Hannah, Case No. 6,905.

§ 228. —— Acts to prevent fire.
Damage to cargo by water used in extinguishing fire does not constitute a case for general average.—The Buckeye, Case No. 2,084.

If cargo is destroyed by fire, after being landed and stored in a port of refuge solely to enable the vessel to repair, it must be paid for in general average; otherwise, if it was landed and stored because it was damaged.—The Mary, Case No. 9,188.

§ 229. —— Acts to avoid collision.
The law of contribution by general average cannot be extended to the case of the cutting of a cable by a vessel at anchor to avoid impending collision with a vessel adrift.—The John Perkins, Case No. 7,360.

A loss occurring by accidental collision with a foreign vessel, which by the law of the country where it takes place is apportioned between the vessels, is not by our law deemed a general average.—Peters v. Warren Ins. Co., Case No. 11,034.

§ 230. Losses and expenses subject of compensation—Loss of or damage to vessel.
Injuries to rails and bulwarks by falling masts, cut away in a storm, are to be considered in general average.—Patten v. Darling, Case No. 10,812.

A shipper whose property is sold for the ship's necessities has a right of contribution over against the other shippers.—The Packet, Case No. 10,654.

The expenses of repairs at an intermediate port, required by ordinary decay in the course of a voyage, are not the subject of general average.—Ross v. The Active, Case No. 12,071.

The cargo owner is not liable to contribute towards the expenses of repairs of the vessel when the cargo is in safety, and receives no benefit therefrom.—Sparks v. Kittredge, Case No. 13,210.

Damage to the materials of a lost ship in saving a cargo should be paid by the cargo.—Roberts v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 11,908.

Where the cargo is sold in a port of refuge to obtain funds for repairing the vessel, there is no right of contribution.—Myers v. The Harriet, Case No. 9,992.

Where cargo is sold to raise funds to pay for repairs, the loss of such sale should be contributed for in general and particular average, in proportion to the amounts expended for repairs chargeable in general and particular average respectively.—Annan v. The Star of Hope, Case No. 405.

Repairs of a permanent character not contributed for where vessel seeks port of distress because of incapacity.—Annan v. The Star of Hope, Case No. 405.

Loss or damage to a wrecked vessel, or her tackle, in consequence of efforts to get her afloat, are apportioned upon ship and cargo only where the efforts are successful, and the cargo saved thereby.—Roberts v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 11,908.

The cutting away of masts and rigging in a gale is a general average, and where the cargo is owned by the owner of the vessel, the amount of its contribution may be deducted from the loss on the vessel.—Potter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., Case No. 11,336.

Damage caused to the vessel by swelling of linseed in her cargo, through its being wet by water which came in through the holes made in the vessel by the ice, and damage to the cargo by such water, must be regarded as damage from a peril of the sea, and therefore not to be allowed for in general average.—Rathbone v. Fowler, Case No. 11,584.

A removal in a port of necessity, for the purpose of repairs, of perishable fruit, which increased an incipient decay and precipitated an entire loss, is not a matter for general average. —Bond v. The Superb, Case No. 1,624.

§ 231. —— Services and expenses in general.

No loss or expense is to be considered as general average, and so applied in making up a loss, unless, in the first place, it was intended to save and preserve the remaining property, and unless, in the second place, it succeeded in doing so.—Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co., Case No. 17,739.

Expenses of causing a general average to be adjusted by an experienced despacheure should be contributed for.—Annan v. The Star of Hope, Case No. 405.

Where a vessel captured by a privateer was detained until security should be given that the cargo would not be carried to the port of destination, the expenses of the detention are subjects of general average.—Hurtin v. Phœnix Ins. Co., Case No. 6,941.

Freight on cargo jettisoned, where the vessel was subsequently abandoned, and was saved by salvors, and sold in admiralty proceedings, held should be allowed as part of the general average to be borne by ship, cargo, and freight saved.—The Nathaniel Hooper, Case No. 10,032.

Salvage charges are to be deemed a general average only when incurred for the benefit of all concerned.—Peters v. Warren Ins. Co., Case No. 11,034.

Commissions of consignees in collecting value of goods before delivering them should be contributed for.—Annan v. The Star of Hope, Case No. 405.

The rule that the shipowner is entitled to a commission upon the amount contributed for in general average, is founded upon the law merchant, and is not controlled by a particular local usage in contravention thereof.—Sturgis v. Cary, Case No. 13,573.

§ 232. —— Expenses for voyage to port of distress.

The wages, provisions, and other expenses of the voyage to a port of necessity, for the purpose of making repairs, constitute a general average.—Potter v. Ocean Ins. Co., Case No. 11,335.

The fact that there is no cargo on board will not prevent the application of the principle.—Potter v. Ocean Ins. Co., Case No. 11,335.

Wages and provisions are to be allowed in general average only from the time a vessel in distress alters her course to seek a place of safety, though she lay disabled for some time before.—The Mary, Case No. 9,188.

The expenses and charges of going to a port of necessity to refit can properly be a general average only when the voyage has been or might be resumed; but the doctrine does not apply if the voyage has been abandoned from necessity.—Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co., Case No. 17,739.

Expense of preparing for repairs follows the expense of repairs.—Annan v. The Star of Hope, Case No. 405.

Where the voyage has been abandoned from necessity, the expenses and charges of going to a port of necessity are not the subject of general average.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,094.

The charges for entering a harbor for repairs, the surveyor's bill, and port charges are items of general average, and the subject of general contribution.—Vowell v. Columbian Ins. Co., Case No. 17,019.

Where a disabled ship, having reached a harbor of safety, might have been repaired in a neighboring port, but the master employed a tug to tow her to her destination, held, that no part of the towage expense was chargeable to cargo. The judgment of the master was not conclusive on cargo owners.—In re Nine Hundred and Twenty-Eight Barrels of Salt, Case No. 10,272.

The law of average has no application to the expense of caring for and maintaining passengers at a port of distress.—Weston v. Train, Case No. 17,456.

The wages and provisions of the crew at a port of necessity are not chargeable on the cargo in general average, unless the voyage is resumed, and the cargo delivered at the port of destination.—Roberts v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 11,908.

Where a voyage is abandoned at a port of distress, the cargo is not liable for the expenses of the master's passage home.—Roberts v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 11,908.

The expenses of traveling, to consult the shipowner or underwriter upon the propriety of abandoning the voyage at a port of distress, do not fall upon the cargo, where the voyage is abandoned.—Roberts v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 11,908.

The regular port charges, and the expenses of ascertaining the amount of injury to the vessel in a port of distress, and the costs of a salvage suit, will be apportioned upon the vessel and cargo.—Roberts v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 11,908.

Cargo transshipped at a port of distress is liable for a reasonable compensation for the master's time and expenses in securing another vessel, where the transshipment is not to earn the original freight.—Roberts v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 11,908.

§ 234. Liability to contribute—Liability of vessel, cargo, and owner.

The maritime law does not imply, on the part of the owner receiving the goods, a promise for contribution.—The Congress, Case No. 3,099.

The owners of the vessel and the cargo saved must contribute where a part of the cargo is jettisoned for the safety of vessel and passengers.—Dike v. The St. Joseph, Case No. 3,908.

In case of loss and expense by necessary deviation, both vessel and cargo must contribute in general average.—Campbell v. The Alknomac, Case No. 2,350.

In case of total loss of the ship voluntarily stranded for the safety of the cargo, all the property exposed to the risk must contribute, and be contributed for, at its value when the sacrifice was made.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Cases Nos. 9,981, 9,982.

The vessel and the cargo under deck are not liable to contribution for the deck load thrown overboard for the general safety.—Triplet v. Van Name, Case No. 14,176; The Paragon, Id. 10,708.

Where by the bill of lading it is agreed that a portion of the cargo shall be carried on deck, the vessel must contribute for the loss of the deck load by jettison.—The Watchful, Case No. 17,250.

A ship floated off a reef by putting a part of the cargo into a wrecking vessel should contribute to the loss or damage suffered by such part.—Roberts v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 11,908.

Where the vessel will inevitably go ashore, and the master makes sail, and puts her ashore in a place most likely to save the vessel and cargo, and the vessel is lost, the property saved must contribute in general average.—Rea v. Cutler, Case No. 11,599.

Where the cargo is unloaded at a port of necessity for the common benefit of both vessel and cargo, the expenses thereof should be borne by both.—Roberts v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 11,908.

§ 235. —— Liability of freight.
Freight pro rata earned must contribute to the salvage with ship and cargo.—The Nathaniel Hooper, Case No. 10,032.

Where the ship is chartered for a gross sum for a round voyage, and general average occurs on the outward passage, the entire freight for the whole voyage must contribute.—The Mary, Case No. 9,188.

§ 236. —— Liability of master and crew.
The crew were ordered to contribute for a loss by embezzlement where strangers assisted in loading the cargo, but the fault could not be fixed.—Mariners v. The Kensington, Case No. 9,085.

All the crew must contribute to make up the loss of cargo by embezzlement, but proof is admissible to show the innocence of some.—Sullivan v. Ingraham, Case No. 13,595.

The seamen are not liable to contribute for embezzlement on board unless it was caused by their fraud, connivance, or negligence.—Spurr v. Pearson, Case No. 13,268.

The shares of fishermen in mackerel voyages, who sail under the agreements usual in such voyages, are subject to contribution for general average.—Utpadel v. Fears, Case No. 16,-808.

Where a cask of wine was lost while being hoisted aboard by the mate and crew, held, that the master, mate, and crew must share the loss with all the rest of the ship's equipage, in proportion to their monthly wages; and the fact that the master had paid off the seamen did not in any wise affect the contribution of the mate. —Wilson v. Belvidere, Case No. 17,790.

§ 237. Adjustment—In general.
A foreign adjustment of a loss cannot determine what is a general average.—Peters v. Warren Ins. Co., Case No. 11,034.

§ 238. —— As to vessel.
In estimating the loss where a vessel was beached to prevent her foundering, and went to pieces, the value must be taken as she was when the stranding was determined upon, without regard to her then peril.—In re Eight Hundred Bales of Cotton, Case No. 4,319.

The total salvage upon a ship and cargo saved together should be apportioned between them in the ratio of their values.—Roberts v. The Ocean Star, Case No. 11,908.

Value of vessel at port of delivery not proper measure of her contributory value. In absence of evidence, amount of insurance may be taken. —Annan v. The Star of Hope, Case No. 405.

In the adjustment and settling of general average, the contributory interest of the ship is to be estimated at her value at her port of departure, making reasonable allowance for wear and tear on the voyage, up to the time of the disaster.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Case No. 9,982.

Policies of insurance do not, of themselves, supply proof of the value of ship, cargo, or freight, on general average. But the adjusters can receive the policies as auxiliary evidence of those values.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Case No. 9,981.

As between the parties to a policy, the valuation of the vessel agreed on therein may be taken on general average as the value of the property at risk; but, as against owners of the cargo, the value must be established in the ordinary way.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Case No. 9,982.

§ 239. —— As to cargo.
Where goods are sold at the place of disaster, the adjustment of average will be governed by such price; but, when no sale is made at such place, the value at the place of shipment controls.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Case No. 9,981.

Invoices and bills of lading are competent evidence of the value of the cargo at the place of its purchase and shipment.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Cases Nos. 9,981, 9,982.

In the case of a jettison of goods, their value is generally to be estimated at their prime cost or original value, or, if the vessel has arrived at her port of destination, at their value at such port.—Rogers v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., Case No. 12,017.

Adjustment of general average where voyage broken up at intermediate port because of great injury to cargo by perils of sea.—The Ann D. Richardson, Case No. 410.

Owners of specie shipped for the purpose of purchasing return cargo, and sold by the master on the outward passage in a port of refuge to make repairs, are not entitled to profits they might have made, but only to interest from the time they could have used the specie at the outward port.—The Mary, Case No. 9,189.

§ 240. —— As to freight.
The valuation of freight in the policy may be received as prima facie evidence of its value in favor of and against the shipowner, on general average.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Case No. 9,982.

In adjusting the average, under the usage of the port, the contributory value of the freight was taken as one-half the gross freight agreed to be paid for the voyage on which the disaster occurred.—Rathbone v. Fowler, Case No. 11,-584.

Freight should be estimated at its gross value, both when contributed to and when contributory.—Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Cargo of the George, Case No. 9,982.

The contributory value of freight to a general average is ascertained by a deduction of one-third of the gross freight.—Humphreys v. Union Ins. Co., Case No. 6,871.

§ 241. Actions.
General average contribution may be recovered by a libel against the vessel for a total loss. —The William Gillum, Case No. 17,693.

A court of equity has jurisdiction to take an account of a general average loss, and decree contribution among those entitled to receive and bound to pay.—Sturgess v. Cary, Case No. 13,-572.

The court in admiralty will not entertain jurisdiction in cases of general average unless all the parties in interest are before it.—The Congress, Case No. 3,099.

In a suit of contribution for loss of masts sacrificed for the common benefit of ship, cargo, and freight, held, that the master was a competent witness for the vessel owners.—Patten v. Darling, Case No. 10,812.

The holders may recover in an action on a bill of lading the amount which the vessel owners offered to pay as their contribution in general average.—The Wiley Smith, Case No. 17,657.

See, also, "Admiralty," § 39.

§ 242. Lien.
A claim for general average contribution is but a qualified lien depending upon possession of the goods.—The Congress, Case No. 3,099.

In cases of general average, the master and owners may retain all goods of the shippers until their share of the contribution towards the average is either paid or secured; and there is no exception in the case of property of the government.—United States v. Wilder, Case No. 16,-694.

§ 243. Failure to enforce contribution.
Libelants who might otherwise be entitled to contribution under general average may lose it by laches in enforcing their claim, as against a mortgagee whose debt was a maritime lien before he waived it for the mortgage security.—Wood v. The Sallie C. Morton, Case No. 17,962.

XI. LIMITATION OF OWNER'S LIABILITY.

By special contract, see ante, §§ 175-178.
For collision, see, also, "Collision," § 135a.

§ 244. Vessels and interests to which limitation applies.
The act limiting liability (Rev. St. § 4283) is a regulation of commerce applicable to foreign vessels.—Levinson v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co., Case No. 8,292.

Such act is applicable to a vessel, running upon the ocean between ports of the same state, which carries merchandise or passengers on through bills or tickets destined to points in other states.—Lord v. Goodall, etc., S. S. Co., Case No. 8,506.

A steamer used in the upper Mississippi river is not within Act March 3, 1851, limiting the liability of shipowners, and the district court will not therefore restrain claimants from suing the owner at common law to recover the full value of freight lost by fire.—The War Eagle, Case No. 17,173.

Statutes of the United States limiting the liability of shipowners do not limit the liability of a foreign shipowner for a collision between an American and a foreign vessel on the high seas.—Churchill v. The British America, Case No. 2,715.

The extent of liability of an English vessel stranded in American waters is to be determined by Rev. St. §§ 4283, 4284, and not by the general maritime law.—The John Bramall, Case No. 7,334.

The whaling equipment, provisions, and supplies of a whaling ship are not within the meaning of the words "ship or vessel," as used in Act March 3, 1851, § 3, limiting the liability of owners to the value of their interest in the "ship or vessel and her freight then pending."—Swift v. Brownell, Case No. 13,695.

There is no "freight pending" on a whaling voyage within the meaning of Act March 3, 1851.—Swift v. Brownell, Case No. 13,695; The Ontario, Id. 10,543.

§ 245. Who are entitled to benefit of limitation.
The limited liability act cannot be invoked in an action between foreigners arising out of a collision between foreign vessels on the high seas, where none of the owners are residents of the United States.—Thomassen v. Whitwell, Case No. 13,929.

A suit brought against a part owner of a vessel, who was charterer and owner for the voyage and acting as master, is within Act March 3, 1851, c. 43, exempting vessel owners from personal liability for damages arising out of a collision.—Thorp v. Hammond, Case No. 14,004.

§ 246. Losses and injuries subjects of limitation—In general.
Act March 3, 1851, limits the liability of the owner of a ship for injuries to persons, equally with liability for injuries to property.—The Epsilon, Case No. 4,506.

The act of March 3, 1851, does not limit liability for damage done by a vessel to property on land, as where a warehouse is burned by sparks from a steam tug.—King v. American Transp. Co., Case No. 7,787.

The limitation of liability under Act March 3, 1851, § 3, is not affected by the fact that the vessel has been insured, and the insurance has been paid or become payable.—Wattson v. Marks, Case No. 17,296.

Where actual total loss occurred, formal abandonment is not necessary to entitle the owners to the benefit of the limited liability act.—The Peshtigo, Case No. 11,018.

A tender, made in the libel of the vessel and wreckage to be disposed of by the court, is a sufficient abandonment.—The John Bramall, Case No. 7,334.

Where a vessel runs upon the ocean between ports of the same state which carries merchandise on through tickets to other states, the limitation of liability applies to losses of goods carried between the ports of the same state.—Lord v. Goodall, etc., S. S. Co., Case No. 8,506.

Under Act March 3, 1851, § 3, the personal liability of the shipowners on a contract of affreightment ceases upon a total destruction of the vessel and loss of freight before the completion of her voyage, though the actual damage to or loss of the goods to be carried, as in the case of theft, has taken place prior to the time of the destruction of the vessel.—Wattson v. Marks, Case No. 17,296.

The absence of the "note in writing" (Act March 3, 1851, § 2) does not discharge the shipowner's liability on a contract of affreightment where the true character and value of the enumerated articles appear in the bill of lading.—Wattson v. Marks, Case No. 17,296.

Act March 3, 1851, § 4, authorizing transfer of owner's interest in ship and freight to a trustee for claimants, does not apply to a loss to another vessel by collision, nor to injuries to cargo on board the vessel in fault.—Barnes v. Steamship Co., Case No. 1,021.

§ 247. —— Privity or knowledge of owner.
The meaning of the words "privity" and "knowledge," as used in the statute, defined.—Lord v. Goodall, etc., S. S. Co., Case No. 8,506.

The privity or knowledge of the managing officers of a corporation, owners, is privity or knowledge on the part of the corporation itself.—Lord v. Goodall, etc., S. S. Co., Case No. 8,506.

The owner is in privity where a loss occurs by reason of failure to exercise the utmost care in selecting a competent master and crew, and in providing a seaworthy vessel.—Lord v. Goodall, etc., S. S. Co., Case No. 8,506.

A vessel is not seaworthy if not furnished with suitable compasses; but, where a deviating compass may be corrected by other correct compasses on board, the vessel is not unseaworthy in this respect.—Lord v. Goodall, etc., S. S. Co., Case No. 8,506.

Where the vessel is properly officered and manned, and in all respects seaworthy, a loss from causes arising during the voyage, without the privity or knowledge of the owner, is within the statute.—Lord v. Goodall, etc., S. S. Co., Case No. 8,506.

The limitation of the owners' liability by Act March 3, 1851, § 3, to the amount or value of their interest in the ship and her freight then pending, does not limit or affect their liability for loss, damage, or injury resulting through the fault of such vessel to another vessel and her cargo from a collision between the two vessels.—Wright v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co., Case No. 18,087.

§ 248. Proceedings — When Proceedings may be instituted.

The owner of the vessel may, before he is sued, institute proceedings to obtain the benefit of the act.—The John Bramall, Case No. 7,334.

The right to proceed for limitation of liability cannot be exercised after final hearing in an action in rem to recover on claims in respect to which limitation of liability is sought.—In re New York & W. S. S. Co., Case No. 10,200.

Proceedings to limit liability in respect to a collision may be instituted, even after the giving of a stipulation in an action in rem for the full value of the vessel, for the benefit of all demands arising from the collision.—In re New York & W. S. S. Co., Case No. 10,200.

Vessel owners, by allowing a final decree for damages for collision in the district court, waive their right to institute proceedings under the act of March 3, 1851, to limit their liability.—Dyer v. National Steam Nav. Co., Case No. 4,225.

Where the vessel owners have not instituted any proceedings to have the limitation of their liability adjudged, and have not surrendered the savings from the wreck, they are not entitled to the benefit of the act of March 3, 1851, or to the limitation under the general maritime law. —Dyer v. National Steam Nav. Co., Case No. 4,225.

§ 250. —— Jurisdiction.

Admiralty has exclusive jurisdiction of a proceeding under Act March 3, 1851, by vessel owners to limit their liability.—In re Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co., Case No. 11,451.

The jurisdiction of proceedings to obtain the benefit of the act limiting liability belongs to the district court of the district in which the vessel was stranded, where the liability arises from such stranding.—The John Bramall, Case No. 7,334.

Notwithstanding the language of Act March 3, 1851, § 4, it can be carried into effect by a court of admiralty.—The Epsilon, Case No. 4,506.

It is not necessary to jurisdiction of a petition to limit the liability under Act March 3, 1851, that the court should have possession of the vessel or of the proceeds, and the pendency of suits against the vessel and of stipulations of value is no reason why the proceeding should not be taken.—The City of Norwich, Case No. 2,762.

On a libel in personam for damages to a vessel in collision, the district court in admiralty has no power to reserve its final decree that the owners may take appropriate proceedings to limit their liability, where neither the ship and freight nor the amount or value is within its control.—Wright v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co., Case No. 18,086.

A person cannot take advantage of the limited liability act by answer to a libel for collision, but must institute separate proceedings therefor, for which leave of court is not necessary.—Thomassen v. Whitwell, Case No. 13,930.

The injunction granted in a proceeding to limit the liability of a shipowner restraining the prosecution of suits pending against the shipowner should not prohibit the collection of the taxable costs in such suits.—In re Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co., Case No. 10,361.

The district court of the United States may enjoin a suit against a ship and shipowners who have sought the benefit of the rule of maritime law limiting their liability.—Churchill v. The British America, Case No. 2,715.

On a petition by vessel owners for the benefit of the limitation of liability, the admiralty court has power to enjoin the further prosecution of suits by shippers against owners, pending in state courts, for their losses by the burning of the vessel at her dock.—In re Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co., Case No. 11,451.

On petition by owners to limit their liability, a paper called "Exceptions and Answer," seeking to contest the right to exemption, filed by a party who had not presented claims to the commissioner, held, should be allowed to stand as an exception to the jurisdiction of the court to enjoin his suit in the state court.—In re Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co., Case No. 11,452.

On a petition to limit the liability of owners of a boat set on fire and sunk by a collision, the value of the boat is arrived at by taking the value of the wreck when raised, and deducting therefrom the expenses of raising.—In re Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co., Cases Nos. 10,360, 10,362.

The value of repairs subsequently made and fire insurance moneys received by the owner cannot be added.—In re Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co., Cases Nos. 10,360, 10,362.

The valuation of the boat in a stipulation for value given in suits brought against her after she was repaired is immaterial.—In re Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co., Case No. 10,360.

The outfits of a whaler are a part of the appurtenances of the ship in estimating value.—The Ontario, Case No. 10,543.

Where a vessel is sailed on shares by her master who is not an owner, the interest of the owners in the freight in proceedings to limit their liability is only one-half such amount.—In re Wright, Case No. 18,066.

The value to which the liability to the owners of a vessel is limited is the value immediately after the injury, and before the vessel is repaired.—In re Wright, Case No. 18,066.

The petitioner is entitled to a docket fee for each creditor who comes in and proves his claim. But he has no preference for his costs over the costs of the creditor.—In re Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co., Case No. 10,361.

The costs and expenses of the proceeding are first to be paid out of the fund.—In re Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co., Case No. 10,361.

§ 254. —— Release on giving stipulation.

Under the act of 1851 the vessel cannot be discharged of liens on giving a bond or stipulation for her value on application by the owners. —Place v. The City of Norwich, Case No. 11,202.

But where the stipulation tendered is sufficient, the court will order the vessel to be released on giving a bond for her value.—Place v. The City of Norwich, Case No. 11,202.

§ 255. Distribution of proceeds.

In case the fund provided for by the act is insufficient to satisfy the demands against it, the claimants on the fund must share pro rata.—The Epsilon, Case No. 4,506.

XII. WRECK.

§ 256. Rights of property.

The owner of a vessel wrecked on a desert island has no title to a small vessel built from her remnants by the master and crew, as the only means of escaping from the island.—The Holder Borden, Case No. 6,600.

For conveying materials of the wrecked vessel in such small vessel, held that the master and crew were entitled to compensation for transportation.—The Holder Borden, Case No. 6,600.

Evidence that libelant's whaling vessel was recently wrecked in the vicinity where a cask of oil was picked up at sea; that similar casks of oil were picked up and delivered to libelant; and that the currents were such as to drift casks in that direction from the wreck,—is sufficient prima facie proof of ownership as against the finder who conceals it.—Lears v. One Cask Oil, Case No. 8,161a.

§ 257. Sale of wreck.

A wreck sale made by authority of state laws is valid to pass title to the property, where there is no owner or agent present to protect or claim it.—The Tilton, Case No. 14,054.

The title of a sunken vessel passes to the one who pays the full value of the vessel to the owner, whether after a decree or not.—Fox v. The Lucy A. Blossom, Case No. 5,013.

Competency as witnesses, see "Witnesses," § 26.
Right of slave to maintain action, see "Action," § 1.

§ 1. Legality of slavery.

Slavery existed only by virtue of the laws of the states where it was sanctioned.—Jones v. Van Zandt, Case No. 7,501.

§ 2. Slave trade—Statutory provisions.

See, also, "Commerce," § 1.

History and construction of the statutes in relation to the slave trade.—Tryphenia v. Harrison, Case No. 14,209; United States v. Darnaud, Id. 14,918; Same v. The La Jeune Eugenie, Id. 15,551; Same v. Naylor, Id. 15,858; Same v. The Ohio, Id. 15,914; Same v. Smith, Id. 16,332; The Wilson v. United States, Id. 17,846.

The mere transportation of any kind of goods to Africa is not a crime under any act of congress, independently of the intent with which it is done.—United States v. Libby, Case No. 15,597.

The offense of engaging in the slave trade is committed by procuring slaves and shipping them by the vessel of another.—United States v. Andrews, Case No. 14,454.

What is the receiving of a person on board with intent to make him a slave, such as will render the captain guilty of a capital offense.—United States v. Libby, Case No. 15,597.

It is not an indictable offense in the District of Columbia to attempt to sell a free mulatto as a slave.—United States v. Henning, Case No. 15,348.

An indictment will not lie for selling a negro or slave who was unlawfully imported.—United States v. Gould, Case No. 15,239.

The master of a vessel employed in transporting a slave from the Island of St. Thomas to Cuba is indictable under Act May 10, 1800.—United States v. Kennedy, Case No. 15,525.

Kidnapping the inhabitants of a foreign country for the purpose of making them slaves.—Charge to Grand Jury, Case No. 18,269a.

Service on a voyage known to be for the purpose of procuring slaves for transportation from one foreign country to another is a violation of Act May 10, 1800, forbidding citizens and residents of the United States to serve on a vessel used in such transportation.—Charge to Grand Jury, Case No. 18,269a.

The offense of sailing with intent to engage in the slave trade (Act April 20, 1818, §§ 2, 3) is not committed unless the vessel sail out of the port.—United States v. La Coste, Case No. 15,548.

It is an indictable offense, under the act of 1818, to fit, equip, load, or otherwise prepare, a vessel in the United States for the purpose of transporting slaves from a foreign place to any other place.—United States v. Malebran, Case No. 15,711.

An indictment under Act April 20, 1818, may be sustained for the illegal importation of an African brought from any foreign place, or from sea.—United States v. Haun, Case No. 15,329.

A person employed merely in the transportation of negroes from port to port is not guilty of piracy, under the act of 1820, for seizing negroes, or receiving them on a ship, with intent to make slaves of them.—United States v. Battiste, Case No. 14,545.

To bring a case within the act it is necessary that the negroes should have been free when seized or received on board.—United States v. Battiste, Case No. 14,545.

Either the owner of the vessel engaged in slave trade or the accused must be a citizen to constitute the offense described by Act 1820, § 4.—United States v. Brown, Case No. 14,656; Same v. Westervelt, Id. 16,668.

It is an offense under such section to receive negroes on board of the vessel from persons who have seized them and brought them to the vessel's side in violation of law.—United States v. Westervelt, Case No. 16,668.

§ 4. —— Suits for penalties and criminal prosecutions.

The circuit court has no jurisdiction of a suit to recover a penalty for aiding and abetting in the fitting out of a vessel for the slave trade.—Evans v. Bollen, Case No. 4,554.

A suit for a penalty for aiding and abetting in the fitting out of a vessel for the slave trade can only be brought in the district where the offense was committed.—Evans v. Bollen, Case No. 4,554.

A master who brought his ship from a foreign port, and surrendered her, because he believed her about to be engaged in the slave trade, awarded the informer's moiety, as against a claim thereto by the master of a steamer who gave information of facts learned from the crew while towing the slaver into port.—United States v. The Isla De Cuba, Case No. 15,448.

Intent and acts tending to make some one a slave are both necessary, under the act of 1820, to convict a person of a capital offense, though under other laws one may be guilty of a misdemeanor for merely transporting slaves from one place to another abroad.—United States v. Libby, Case No. 15,597.

Finding of 300 Africans on board a vessel held sufficient proof of probable cause for issuing warrant of arrest for engaging in slave trade.—In re Bates, Case No. 1,099a.

As to sufficiency of the indictment, see The Caroline, Case No. 2,418; United States v. Johnson, Id. 15,486; Same v. Kelly, Id. 15,515; Same v. La Coste, Id. 15,548; Same v. Smith, Id. 16,338; Same v. Williams, Id. 16,711.

Admissibility of evidence of the acts and statements of the accused to rebut a prima facie case of ownership in a citizen.—United States v. Brown, Case No. 14,656.

Facts and circumstances enumerated which are competent as evidence tending to show a guilty participation of the captain of a vessel in the slave trade, without actually taking slaves on board his own vessel.—United States v. Libby, Case No. 15,597.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain an indictment for forcibly confining and detaining negroes on board a vessel with intent to make them slaves. Act May 15, 1820, § 5.—United States v. Gordon, Case No. 15,231.

If a foreign claimant of a vessel seized for being engaged in the slave trade sets up a title derived from American owners, he must show affirmatively that there remains no American ownership.—United States v. The La Jeune Eugenie, Case No. 15,551.

The truth or falsity of the charge of being engaged in the slave trade held to be dependent on proof of circumstances attending the fitting, equipping, and loading, as well as those of the voyage; both to be weighed in connection with the master's declarations. Case No. 15,449 affirmed.—United States v. The Isla De Cuba, No. 15,447.

Evidence of an importation contrary to Act Md. 1796, c. 67.—Maria v. White, Case No. 9,076.

As to forfeiture of vessel engaged in slave trade or built therefor, see The Alexander, Case No. 165; The Caroline, Id. 2,418; The Orion, Id. 10,575; The Porpoise, Id. 11,284; Strohm v. United States, Id. 13,539; United States v. The Augusta, Id. 14,477; Same v. The Catharine, Id. 14,755; Same v. The Kitty, Id. 15,537; Same v. The La Jeune Eugenie, Id. 15,551; The Wanderer, Id. 17,139; Charge to Grand Jury, Id. 18,269a.

The child of a female slave is a slave, although the mother has the promise of the master that she shall be free at the end of a certain term of years.—Fanny v. Kell, Case No. 4,639.

The presumption of freedom attaches to every resident of a free state, without regard to color; and, on the same principle, in a slave state every colored man is presumed to be a slave.—Drayton v. United States, Case No. 4,074; Mandeville v. Cookenderfer, Id. 9,009; Miller v. McQuerry, Id. 9,583.

No presumption as to freedom of one born a slave arises from his being permitted to go at large without restraint.—Bell v. Hogan, Case No. 1,253.

The presumption of slavery arising from color is rebutted by evidence of general reputation of freedom.—Minchin v. Docker, Case No. 9,628; United States v. Fisher, Id. 15,101; Same v. West, Id. 16,667.

§ 6. Property in slaves.

Trover will not lie in Iowa to recover the value of slaves.—Daggs v. Frazer, Case No. 3,538.

In Virginia, a person who has been in possession of a slave for five years need not show the deed under which he claims title.—Love v. Boyd, Case No. 8,546.

A child of a slave is a slave of the person entitled to the service of the mother at the time of the birth.—Brooks v. Nutt, Case No. 1,958.

In action upon the statute of Virginia (pages 192, 374) for carrying away the plaintiff's slave, evidence will not be permitted to be given that the slave had hired himself as a free man to another master of a vessel in previous voyage. —Washington v. Wilson, Case No. 17,240.

§ 7. Transfer of slaves.

When deed of, not invalidated by removal.—Bank of United States v. Lee, Case No. 922.

A deed of a gift of a slave in Virginia held void unless accompanied by possession.—Lee v. Ramsay, Case No. 8,200.

Parol gift of a slave in Virginia, though accompanied by possession, held void, under Act 1758.—Lee v. Ramsay, Case No. 8,200.

Recording of deed of trust of slaves.—Bond v. Ross, Case No. 1,623; Lucy v. Slade, Id. 8,595.

The legacy of a slave gives no title until assented to by the executor.—Lee v. Ramsay, Case No. 8,200.

A power to sell cannot be inferred from a power to hire out a slave and receive his wages. —Daniel v. Kincheloe, Case No. 3,561.

Contracts for the sale of slaves are not enforceable after the passage of amendment 13 to the constitution.—Buckner v. Street, Case No. 2,098.

A bona fide possession of a slave, under an absolute bill of sale, without notice of a prior sale to another, held to give a good title after five years.—Reardon v. Miller, Case No. 11,616.

The remedy on a contract for the sale of slaves did not survive the abolition of slavery by the thirteenth amendment to the constitution. —Osborn v. Nicholson, Case No. 10,595.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to show the terms of sale of a slave where the contract was made in writing.—Scott v. Auld, Case No. 12,523.

Quære, whether children of a female slave, born while the mother was in the temporary service of a vendee for years, are slaves of the vendor or vendee.—Peter v. Cureton, Case No. 11,019.

§ 8. Hiring of slaves.

A slave hired to the master of a vessel as a mariner, with authority to sign the shipping articles, forfeits his wages by any act which would forfeit them if he were free.—Slacum v. Smith, Case No. 12,936.

A master of a vessel is not liable to the penalty under the Virginia statute for carrying a slave out of the state, unless he did it knowingly.—Lee v. Lacey, Case No. 8,193; McCall v. Eve, Id. 8,670.

Liability of master of vessel under Act Va. Jan. 25, 1798, for taking slave out of state without consent of owner.—Park v. Willis, Case No. 10,717.

§ 9. Fugitive slaves—Fugitive slave laws. The act of congress relating to the reclamation of fugitive slaves is valid.—In re Martin, Case No. 9,154; United States v. Scott, Id. 16,240b.

The fugitive slave law of September 16, 1850, is not unconstitutional.—In re Long, Case No. 8,478.

The fugitive slave law is not retroactive.—Ex parte Davis, Case No. 3,613.

Morris, Case No. 15,811.

§ 19. Emancipation—By deed.

Deed of manumission, acknowledged and recorded according to law, relates back to time of execution.—Betty v. Deneale, Case No. 1,-375.

Validity of deed of manumission in Maryland.—Samuel v. Childs, Case No. 12,287.

The children of a female slave, born during a term of service for which she is sold, with an obligation by the vendee to manumit her at the expiration of the term, are entitled to freedom.—Sarah v. Taylor, Case No. 12,339.

It is competent evidence tending to show genuineness of manumission papers executed on the coast of Africa that they were attested and sealed by persons purporting to be Portuguese there, and who had acted as such in other business, and that the paper and stamp were of the kind used there in public offices.—United States v. Libby, Case No. 15,597.

A person is not properly charged as a slave after an actual manumission, though the deed is not executed until afterwards.—United States v. Bruce, Case No. 14,676.

Equity will grant relief in a case of lost manumission deed.—Alice v. Morte, Case No. 198.

§ 20. —— By will.

Slaves cannot be manumitted in Washington county, D. C., by last will, if over 45 years old at the time the manumission is to take effect.—Wigle v. Kirby, Case No. 17,631.

Manumission by will, what constitutes.—Fidelio v. Dermott, Case No. 4,754.

Construction of will on the question of emancipation of slaves.—Quando v. Clagett, Case No. 11,492.

Emancipation by will does not need the assent of executor.—Chapman v. Fenwick, Case No. 2,604.

No implied emancipation arises from a legacy of $25 to slaves ordered by the will to be sold.—Bell v. McCormick, Case No. 1,255.

A will is not admissible as an instrument of manumission, under Act Md. c. 67, § 29.—Bell v. Greenfield, Case No. 1,251.

The child of a slave, born after the death of her owner, and before she arrives at the age at which she is entitled to manumission by his will, is a slave.—Samuel v. Childs, Case No. 12,287.

A slave manumitted by will, to take effect at a future date, is not entitled to freedom until that time, but the court will enjoin the respondent from removing him from its jurisdiction.—Kitty v. McPherson, Case No. 7,860.

Where freedom was granted a slave, provided "he behaves well until the year 1837, and continues to hire for good wages," it may be shown that he did not behave well, but ran away.—Coots v. Morton, Case No. 3,205.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

§ 1, Adequate remedy at law. § 2, Discretion of court in granting specific performance. § 3, Effectiveness of remedy. § 4, Against whom enforced. § 5, Certainty of contract. § 6, Consideration and mutuality of contract. § 7, Mistake. § 8, Oral contracts. § 9, Sufficiency of vendor's title. § 10, Agreements against conscience and unreasonable or illegal contracts. § 11, Abandonment of contract. § 12, Performance by complainant. § 13, Unfair conduct, negligence, and laches. § 14, Proceedings and relief.

§ 1. Adequate remedy at law.

Specific performance will not be decreed where adequate compensation can be had at law.—Roundtree v. McLain, Case No. 12,084a.

The cases in which specific performance of building contracts have been decreed stated by Miller, J.—Ross v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,080.

A contract to build a railroad will not be enforced in equity. There is an adequate remedy at law.—Ross v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,080; Fallon v. Railroad Co., Id. 4,629.

The court may decree specific execution of a contract to give certain specific collateral security.—Robinson v. Cathcart, Case No. 11,946.

A bill in equity will lie for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of three-eighths of a vessel being built, with a right of the purchaser to command, and to enjoin a sale of any interest therein, except with notice of such contract, and to prevent the appointment of any other person as master.—Higgins v. Jenks, Case No. 6,468.

Bonds of the United States are public stocks, and a covenant for their delivery will not be specifically enforced. The same rule is applicable in respect of railway shares.—Ross v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,080.

Where a harbor board was created by legislative act, with authority to contract for the improvement of a harbor, and the county in which the harbor was situated was required to deliver its bonds to the board, to be used in paying the contractors, held, that where the harbor board was afterwards abolished, contractors who had already completed their contract could maintain a bill in equity to compel the county to deliver the bonds directly to them.—Kimball v. Mobile, Case No. 7,774.

§ 2. Discretion of court in granting specific performance.

The specific performance of an agreement is not a matter of right, but rests in the sound discretion of the court.—Tobey v. County of Bristol, Case No. 14,065.

§ 3. Effectiveness of remedy.

Unless the court can decree specific performance of the whole of a contract, it will not interfere to enforce any part of it.—Ross v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,080.

Specific performance of an agreement will not be enforced where the decree would be a vain and imperfect act, or where the specific performance might be productive of injustice to the parties.—Tobey v. County of Bristol, Case No. 14,065.

§ 4. Against whom enforced.

The assignee of a covenant for title may enforce performance against the heir of the covenantor, to the extent of the interest inherited, although such covenant was the joint covenant of the ancestor and another, and such heir is not named therein.—Fields v. Squires, Case No. 4,776.

Equity will decree specific execution equally in behalf of the vendor as in behalf of the vendee.—Bronson v. Cahill, Case No. 1,926.

§ 5. Certainty of contract.

Specific performance will not be decreed where the contract is uncertain.—Bowen v. Waters, Case No. 1,725; Kendall v. Almy, Id. 7,690; Roundtree v. McLain, Id. 12,084a; Smith v. Burnham, Id. 13,019.

Specific performance of a contract to convey land will be decreed, although the evidence of the conclusion of the agreement is not clear, where valuable improvements have been made by the party put into possession in expectation of such an agreement.—Thompson v. King, Case No. 13,962.

§ 6. Consideration and mutuality of contract.

An executory agreement, or an imperfect conveyance, without a valuable or meritorious consideration, will not be enforced in equity.—Burton v. Le Roy, Case No. 2,217.

The relation of son-in-law does not constitute such a consideration.—Burton v. Le Roy, Case No. 2,217.

A promise by a purchaser, after a sheriff's sale to him, to reconvey to another, is without consideration, and specific performance cannot be required.—Lenox v. Notrebe, Case No. 8,246c.

A bond for a deed, on consideration that the obligors, "the trustees of the schools of Portland, and their successors in office," shall perform certain things, is a mere gratuitous promise until performed, and will not be enforced.—Chapman v. School Dist., Case No. 2,608.

Mere inadequacy of price is no ground for refusing assistance.—Garnett v. Macon, Case No. 5,245.

But this is not the rule where the consideration is grossly inadequate.—Surget v. Byers, Case No. 13,629.

An executory contract will not be specifically enforced unless the remedy is mutual.—Ross v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,080.

Where only part of vendors were bound for a title, there is a want of mutuality, and a specific execution will not be decreed.—Bronson v. Cahill, Case No. 1,926.

§ 7. Mistake.

The matter entitling the party to an amendment of his contract may be set up by way of defense to a proceeding to enforce a specific performance of the contract, where the clause omitted through mistake or accident would, if found in the instrument, constitute a ground of defense.—Woodworth v. Cook, Case No. 18,011.

But such a defense cannot be set up where the rights of a bona fide purchaser have intervened which would or might be seriously prejudiced by giving effect to the defense.—Woodworth v. Cook, Case No. 18,011.

§ 8. Oral contracts.

Sufficiency of memorandum under the statute of frauds to render the contract specifically enforceable in equity.—Bissell v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, Case No. 1,446.

An oral promise by purchaser at execution sale to reconvey to the execution debtor on reimbursement is not enforceable in equity.—Cocks v. Izard, Case No. 2,934.

Only those acts are considered as part performance which would operate as a fraud on parties unless the whole contract is executed.—Ex parte Storer, Case No. 13,490.

The payment of part of the price is not such an act of part performance as to form the basis of relief in equity.—Ex parte Storer, Case No. 13,490.

Otherwise as to possession taken of land, or where improvements are made.—Ex parte Storer, Case No. 13,490.

§ 9. Sufficiency of vendor's title.

Where the contract is for a good and operative title, the court will not compel the party to accept a defective title.—Garnett v. Macon, Case No. 5,245; Sohier v. Williams, Id. 13,159; Watts v. Waddle, Id. 17,295.

The vendee's objections may be extended to incumbrances of every description which may embarrass him in the full enjoyment of his purchase.—Garnett v. Macon, Case No. 5,245.

A title may be doubtful because it depends on a doubtful interpretation of a will, if all parties who may be interested in the estate are not bound by the decree.—Sohier v. Williams, Case No. 13,159.

Pending a bill to vacate title, specific performance of a contract for the sale of land will be decreed if the vendor is able to make a good title at any time before the decree is pronounced, notwithstanding dismissal of a former bill by the vendor on account of defective title.—Hepburn v. Auld, Case No. 6,389.

§ 10. Agreements against conscience and unreasonable or illegal contracts.

Specific performance will not be decreed where the contract is oppressive and against conscience. —Surget v. Byers, Case No. 13,629; Roundtree v. McLain, Id. 12,084a; Bowen v. Waters, Id. 1,725.

If a contract is unreasonable, equity will not interfere.—Bowen v. Waters, Case No. 1,725; Garnett v. Macon, Id. 5,245; Roundtree v. McLain, Id. 12,084a.

Specific performance will not be decreed of an agreement of a debtor to procure the obligation of a third person and assign it to the creditor in consideration of forbearance.—Roundtree v. McLain, Case No. 12,084a.

Agreement by foreign railroad company with domestic company to build road different from that required by domestic company's charter will not be specifically enforced.—Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Franklin Canal Co., Case No. 2,890.

A creditor who induces an assignee in bankruptcy to agree to transfer to him, for a nominal consideration, a property right of value, on the assertion that it is of no value, is not entitled to a specific performance.—In re Mott, Case No. 9,878a.

A decree will not be refused for an incorrect opinion by plaintiff upon a subject respecting which defendant is as competent a judge as the plaintiff, if honestly made.—Robinson v. Cathcart, Case No. 11,947.

§ 11. Abandonment of contract.

To sustain the vendee's allegation that the contract was abandoned by implication, the conduct of the vendor ought to be such as to justify a reasonable man in believing that he acquiesced. —Garnett v. Macon, Case No. 5,245.

§ 12. Performance by complainant.

The party seeking specific performance must show that he has been always ready to perform his part.—Kendall v. Almy, Case No. 7,690; McNeil v. Magee, Id. 8,915.

On a bill against the purchaser of the legal title a notice to defendant, relied on by plaintiff, must be averred and proved.—McNeil v. Magee, Case No. 8,915.

A covenant to convey a particular title if after acquired by the covenantor may be enforced in equity, if such covenantor neglect to perform the same, without a prior demand and refusal.—Fields v. Squires, Case No. 4,776.

Specific performance may be enforced in favor of a party who has not punctually performed the contract, where his default admits of compensation.—Coe v. Bradley, Case No. 2,941.

An entry by consent of the obligor under a bond for title, after consideration partly paid, and the making of improvements, will entitle the obligee to specific performance.—Felch v. Hooper, Case No. 4,717.

A bill will not lie to enforce a contract to sell land, whose consideration was money to be paid and certain work to be done, where the work is not done, and there has been no offer to perform. —Denniston v. Coquillard, Case No. 3,801.

An agreement to convey if certain conditions were complied with within a certain time will not be enforced where the other party was not bound to perform the conditions, and did not do so within the time.—Prentice v. Betteley, Case No. 11,381.

Where a contract of sale provides that the same shall be void if the vendee does not pay the purchase money within a prescribed period, specific performance will not be decreed where payment is not made within such time.—Vint v. King, Case No. 16,950; Findlay v. Vint, Id.; Allen v. Same, Id.; Sheffey v. Same, Id.

The performance of a comparatively inconsiderable part of a contract (e. g. the expenditure of $50,000 in building a railroad which will cost $12,000,000) does not take it out of the class of executory contracts.—Ross v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,080.

The failure to tender money due under a contract until five years after the time limited by the contract for payment is such laches as will justify the dismissal of the plaintiff's bill.—Hollingsworth v. Fry, Case No. 6,619.

A delay of two years in making payment held not to bar specific performance where the vendee had made valuable improvements without objection from the vendor, who sustained no damage which interest would not compensate.—Mason v. Wallace, Cases Nos. 9,255, 9,256.

§ 13. Unfair conduct, negligence, and laches.

Unfair conduct of complainant in relation to a parol agreement to convey lands, is good ground of refusing performance.—Thompson v. Tod, Case No. 13,978.

Where both parties have been grossly negligent, equity will leave them to their legal remedies.—Longworth v. Taylor, Case No. 8,490.

Specific performance will not be decreed at the instance of the vendor of property greatly deteriorated in value, where he has been guilty of gross negligence.—Cooper v. Brown, Case No. 3,-191.

Where time is material, the right to specific performance may depend upon it.—Garnett v. Macon, Case No. 5,245.

In cases in which the contract and the remedy are not reciprocal, or in which there has been a considerable change in the value of the land, equity will consider time to be material in the case of an agreement to convey.—Prentice v. Betteley, Case No. 11,381.

Time will not be considered as essential, where the same justice can be done between the parties, and neither has sustained inconvenience by the delay, and the property has not changed in value.—Longworth v. Taylor, Case No. 8,490.

Where the property had decreased half in value, the court refused, after a delay of many years, to decree specific performance, but ordered a rescission of the contract and repayment of the amount paid.—McKay v. Carrington, Case No. 8,841.

After long delay and laches, equity will not decree specific performance of an award respecting realty where there has been a material change of circumstance and injury to the other party.—McNeil v. Magee, Case No. 8,915.

Bill for reconveyance of an estate upon an agreement and subsequent award dismissed under the circumstances, the bill being brought against purchasers after a considerable lapse of time, the original vendee having died insolvent. —McNeil v. Magee, Case No. 8,915.

A bill for specific performance of an agreement to deliver a contract of insurance cannot be maintained after the lapse of 10 years.—Markey v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., Case No. 9,-091.

§ 14. Proceedings and relief.

On a bill for specific performance, where defendant, before the hearing, will probably render itself incapable of performing the contract specifically, an injunction will be allowed only where the bill states a case for the relief asked. —Ross v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,080.

The assignee of a vendee is a necessary party in a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey.—Longworth v. Taylor, Case No. 8,-490.

The tenant for life and contingent remainder-man in fee may represent the inheritance, in a bill for specific performance, though their interests are merely equitable, if the issue of the remainder-man will take, if he fails to do so by reason of the contingency.—Sohier v. Williams, Case No. 13,159.

The admission of a parol agreement in the answer will not prevent defendant from protecting himself against a performance by pleading the statute.—Thompson v. Tod, Case No. 13,978.

Length of time is no objection to a decree, if not pleaded in the answer, where the condition of the parties and property remains substantially the same.—Hunter v. Marlboro, Case No. 6,908.

Where the agreement admitted by the answer differs from that stated in the bill, complainant must prove the contract aliunde.—Thompson v. Tod, Case No. 13,978.

The distinction between ordering a contract to be rescinded, and decreeing a specific performance, commented upon.—Bowen v. Waters, Case No. 1,725.

On a bill for specific performance the court will not decree repayment of illegal interest which has been paid.—Longworth v. Taylor, Case No. 8,491.

Where the vendor agreed that the deed should be made before payment of the consideration, he cannot require the money to be brought into court.—Johnson v. Sukeley, Case No. 7,414.

A decree in Kentucky, for the conveyance of land in Ohio, though executed by a commissioner under the statute, in pursuance of the decree, can give no title.—Watts v. Waddle, Case No. 17,295.

The decree of title in one state to lands in another state cannot operate so as to vest the legal title.—Watts v. Waddle, Case No. 17,295.

Sufficiency of execution of deed of infant by guardian under decree for specific performance. —Bank of the United States v. Van Ness, Case No. 938.

A purchaser held to be entitled to recover back his deposit and expenses incurred in searching and examining the title, where the order compelling him to complete the purchase is withdrawn by consent of the vendor, a receiver.—Drake v. Goodridge, Case No. 4,063.

§ 1. Admission of states.

On the admission of a state into the Union, the United States parts with jurisdiction over land owned by it therein, so far as the general purposes of government are concerned, except as to such jurisdiction as is expressly reserved and excepted.—United States v. Stahl, Case No. 16,373.

After a state has been admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original states, the United States cannot abridge its sovereign power over territory embraced within its limits, by a treaty with an Indian tribe therein.—United States v. Forty-Three Gallons of Whisky, Case No. 15,136.

The territory of Indiana, by coming into the Union, consents to such constitutional provisions as are repugnant to the compact in the ordinance of 1787.—Vaughan v. Williams, Case No. 16,903.

The fact that congress imposed certain conditions on the application of Georgia for admission into the Union under the constitution of 1868 does not give such constitution the force or effect of an act of congress.—Marsh v. Burroughs, Case No. 9,112.

The validity of a decree of the congress of the state of Tamaulipas cannot be called in question.—Brownsville v. Cavazos, Case No. 2,043.

A resolution of the Tamaulipas congress, passed after the lands in dispute had become a part of the territory of the state of Texas, is not binding as res judicata.—Brownsville v. Cavazos, Case No. 2,043.

§ 2. Secession and reconstruction.

No state has a right to withdraw from the Union at pleasure, with or without cause.—United States v. Cathcart, Case No. 14,756.

Act June 25, 1868, to admit certain of the seceding states to representation in congress, did not re-enact the constitutions of such states.—Hatch v. Burroughs, Case No. 6,203.

The recognition by the national government of the government established at Wheeling, Va., after the secession of the state, as the lawful government of Virginia, is binding on the judiciary.—Griffin's Case, Case No. 5,815.

Trials under the reconstruction acts, by military commission, could only be for the violation of some known law in force in the state, and the punishment inflicted only that provided by law.—Ex parte Hewitt, Case No. 6,442.

§ 3. Boundaries.

Proper boundaries of New Jersey on the Delaware river under the original grants and the treaty of peace.—Corfield v. Coryell, Case No. 3,230.

The territory of the state of Delaware within the "twelve-miles circle" extends across the Delaware river to low-water mark on the Jersey shore.—Case of Pea Patch Island, Case No. 18,311.

Under the patent and charter of Connecticut of March 19, 1631, and April 23, 1662, respectively, and the patent of March 12, 1664, to the Duke of York, and the possession claimed and held pursuant thereto, the islands lying easterly of the land boundary between Connecticut and New York and adjacent to the Connecticut shore are within the jurisdiction of Connecticut, and this jurisdiction includes Goose Island.—Keyser v. Coe, Case No. 7,750.

The alteration of the boundary line between Michigan and Ohio cannot affect titles to real estate acquired by judicial proceedings within the territory changed, prior to the change.—Piatt v. Oliver, Case No. 11,115.

§ 4. Rights of state.

The rights of the crown devolved on the states by the Revolution, and were confirmed by the treaty of peace to them in their sovereign capacity.—Bennett v. Boggs, Case No. 1,319.

The United States laws act directly upon individuals, and are to be enforced by national instrumentalities. A state, as a political body, cannot be compelled to execute such laws.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,274.

§ 5. Powers in general.

In the absence of an express prohibition, a grant of power to congress does not prevent the states from continuing to act on a subject within the grant until congress legislates fully concerning it, and so as to conflict with the acts of the state.—United States v. New Bedford Bridge, Case No. 15,867.

The grant of unqualified power to the general government to do a particular act is considered exclusive, where its exercise by the state government would be inconsistent therewith.—Golden v. Prince, Case No. 5,509.

Where a statute of the United States makes any provision upon a subject within the scope of the powers of the general government, the state laws upon the same subject cease to operate.—United States v. Mundell, Case No. 15,834.

Jurisdiction which a state has once exercised cannot be withdrawn from it, and conferred on the general government, without the consent of the state.—United States v. Stahl, Case No. 16,373.

State statute prohibiting employment of Chinese by contractors upon public works held in conflict with the treaty with China, and void.—Baker v. Portland, Case No. 777.

A state cannot pass bankrupt and naturalization laws, notwithstanding congress has failed to legislate on such subjects.—Golden v. Prince, Case No. 5,509.

It is not competent for the legislature of a state to declare that its citizens shall not make such contracts as they please out of the state.—Lamb v. Bowser, Cases Nos. 8,008, 8,009.

A state may by contract give certain persons exclusive privileges.—Bancroft v. Thayer, Case No. 835.

The colonization contract made with Mercer, January 22, 1844, held valid and binding on the republic of Texas.—Hancock v. Walsh, Case No. 6,012.

A compact entered into between two states, with the assent of congress, is binding on those states and the citizens of each.—Fleeger v. Pool, Case No. 4,860.

Grants made by North Carolina and Tennessee, beyond their boundaries, as admitted in the compact between the states of Tennessee and Kentucky, are void by such compact.—Fleeger v. Pool, Case No. 4,860.

The compact between Virginia and Maryland does not prevent Maryland from prohibiting the importation of Virginia slaves from Virginia.—Delilah v. Jacobs, Case No. 3,773.

The resolution of annexation of Texas, assented to by the convention of Texas, is equally binding on the state, whether considered as a treaty or as a contract.—Hancock v. Walsh, Case No. 6,012.

§ 7. Bonds and securities.

Minnesota state railroad aid bonds issued under the amendment of the state constitution of April 15, 1858, are valid.—Chamberlain v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co., Case No. 2,578.

Amendment of April 15, 1858, to Minnesota state constitution, authorizing the issuance of bonds by the state in aid of railroads, and the nature of the remedies by foreclosure and forfeiture, considered.—Chamberlain v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co., Case No. 2,578.

The provisions of the Missouri constitution as to aid to railways, amendatory acts, and titles to acts, discussed.—Foster v. Callaway County, Case No. 4,967.

An act authorizing the indorsement by the governor in behalf of the state of railroad bonds bearing interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum authorizes the indorsement of bonds bearing such rate of interest payable in gold.—Young v. Montgomery & E. R. Co., Case No. 18,166.

Bona fide holders for value of bonds indorsed by the governor in behalf of the state, referring to the act giving him authority, are not charged with constructive notice of the fact that the bonds thus indorsed were not first mortgage bonds, as required by the act.—Young v. Montgomery & E. R. Co., Case No. 18,166.

Act Ga. Dec. 3, 1866, was designed to protect the state from loss by indorsement of railroad bonds, and did not make the state a trustee for bondholders.—Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co., Case No. 3,483.

There is nothing in the constitution of the United States forbidding states or counties to borrow money and give proper securities. Such securities are not bills of credit within the meaning of the constitution.—McCoy v. Washington County, Case No. 8,731.

Construction of Const. N. Y. 1846, art. 7, §§ 4, 9, forbidding release or compromise of state claims against incorporated companies, and the giving or loaning of state credit in aid of corporations, in connection with Act N. Y. 1847.—Darby v. Wright, Case No. 3,574.

§ 8. Officers.

A state treasurer held not personally liable for moneys paid out of a fund deposited by the company for the protection of its policy holders, where he acts in good faith under the advice of the law officers of the state that the claims paid are proper charges on the fund.—Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Hemingway, Case No. 4,797.

A special fund for the payment of a claim having been applied to other uses by the state treasurer, a court of equity cannot restrain such officer from applying to general purposes other subsequently received funds, not specially dedicated by law, nor compel by mandamus that they be substituted in place of the special fund.—Self v. Jenkins, Case No. 12,640.

A taxpayer cannot maintain a suit against state officers to restrain them from executing and issuing bonds authorized by an unconstitutional act.—Morgan v. Graham, Case No. 9,801.

An unconstitutional law affords no justification to a state officer for an act injurious to an individual.—Astrom v. Hammond, Case No. 596.

A state cannot be sued in its courts without its consent.—Adams v. Bradley, Case No. 48.

Appearance of attorney general or district attorney without express authority of law does not give jurisdiction.—Adams v. Bradley, Case No. 48.

Jurisdiction of federal courts, see "Courts," § 17.

Constitutionality, see "Constitutional Law," § 1.
Impairing obligation of contract, see "Constitutional Law," §§ 6–9.
Retrospective or ex post facto laws, see "Constitutional Law," § 10.
Statute of frauds, see "Frauds, Statute of."
—— of limitation, see "Limitation of Action."
Statutory new trial, see "New Trial," § 28.

Provisions relating to particular subjects.

See "Bankruptcy," §§ 2–6; "Bastards," § 2; "Corporations"; "Customs Duties"; "Descent and Distribution"; "Frauds, Statute of"; "Insolvency," §§ 1–4; "Internal Revenue"; "Intoxicating Liquors"; "Maritime Liens," §§ 17–26; "Mechanics' Liens"; "Seamen," §§ 1–13.

I. ENACTMENT, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Enactment.

An act introduced for the purpose of validating certain bonds, which did not pass the legislature by the vote required by the constitution, is not constructive notice to anybody of anything.—Young v. Montgomery & E. R. Co., Case No. 18,166.

A ratification by congress of a charter granted a canal company by a state makes it an act of congress.—Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Key, Case No. 2,649.

The senate has constitutional power to originate an act increasing the postage on certain mail matter. (Act March 3, 1875.) Such a bill is not a bill "for raising revenue," such as the house only can originate.—United States v. James, Case No. 15,464.

§ 2. Adoption of existing act.
Where any part of a state law is not applicable to the case at the time of the enactment of an act of congress referring to the laws of the states as rules of decision, the whole statute is inapplicable.—United States v. Mundell, Case No. 15,834.

In the adoption of the laws of another state by the governor and judges of the territory of Michigan a change in one word made a material difference in the construction of the law. Held, that a subsequent adoption by a revision commission, without change, made the act as published binding.—Peck v. Pease, Case No. 10,-894.

§ 3. Provision as to time of taking effect.
The time when an act of congress which is approved and signed by the president of the United States takes effect must appear by the act itself. —In re Welman, Case No. 17,407.

§ 4. Publication.
A law authorizing a city to issue bonds is not a "general law" which is required by the Wisconsin constitution to be published before going into effect.—Luling v. Racine, Case No. 8,603.

§ 5. Mistakes and ambiguities.
A mistake apparent upon the face of the act, if it may be corrected by other language therein, is not fatal.—Blanchard v. Sprague, Case No. 1,517.

A mistake in descriptive words, if of the essence of the act, and permitting its reference to other than the subject intended, is fatal.—Blanchard v. Sprague, Case No. 1,517.

A court will not substitute other words and dates to maintain an act making erroneous references to the things aliunde.—Blanchard v. Sprague, Case No. 1,517.

Where there is such an ambiguity in a penal statute as to leave reasonable doubts of its meaning, the penalty will not be inflicted.—The Enterprise, Case No. 4,499.

§ 6. Determination of validity.
Where a law bears upon its face the requisite authentication, the vote by which it was passed cannot be inquired into.—Falconer v. Campbell, Case No. 4,620.

Laws within the general scope of the authority of the legislature cannot be declared void because contrary to the principles of natural justice.—Minge v. Gilmour, Case No. 9,631.

It cannot be set up against the validity of an act of congress that it conflicts with an existing treaty with a foreign nation.—Ropes v. Clinch, Case No. 12,041.

The power to declare statutes void exists only in cases of contravention, opposition, or repugnancy to some express restriction or provision in the constitution.—United States v. The William, Case No. 16,700.

Where an act is capable of two interpretations, the court will adopt the one which will sustain it, rather than one which will render it void as unconstitutional.—St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Papin, Case No. 12,239.

Judicial inquiry into the motives of legislators in passing a statute is not permissible.—Kountze v. Omaha, Case No. 7,928.

A construction which would impute to the legislature a design to perpetrate a fraud should be avoided if it can reasonably be done.—Milner v. Pensacola, Case No. 9,619.

An interpretation which requires the introduction of new provisions and clauses to render the statute sensible or practicable will not be adopted.—United States v. Bassett, Case No. 14,539.

II. GENERAL AND SPECIAL LAWS.

§ 7. What constitutes a special law.
A statute legalizing a special election to authorize the issuing of municipal bonds to aid a private enterprise held in violation of Const. Kan. art. 12.—Commercial Nat. Bank v. Iola, Case No. 3,061.

Act Mo. March 31, 1868, relating to the discharge of the state's mortgage on the Pacific Railroad, held not unconstitutional, as a special law, or as relating to more than one subject.—Murdock v. Woodson, Case No. 9,942.

§ 8. Curative acts.
The inhibition of the enactment of special laws giving effect to informal or invalid wills or deeds does not apply to a general curative statute.—Wright v. Taylor, Case No. 18,096.

III. SUBJECTS AND TITLES OF ACTS.

§ 9. Sufficiency of title and expression of subject in title.
Act not void because its title misrecites the date of the act to which it is supplementary.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Van Ness, Case No. 830.

Act not void because its title purports it to be an act supplementary to an act which expired by its own limitation, where such act was subsequently revived.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Van Ness, Case No. 830.

An act entitled "An act to tax and regulate" certain named foreign corporations cannot contain any provision in relation to any other foreign corporation. Const. Or. art. 4, § 20.—Oregon & W. Trust Inv. Co. v. Rathburn, Case No. 10,555.

§ 10. Plurality of subjects.
An act entitled "To incorporate the town of," etc., is not open to the objection that it relates to more than one subject, etc., where it provides for the issue of railroad aid bonds.—Judson v. Plattsburg, Case No. 7,570.

An act whose subject is disposing of insolvent debtors' property may properly include a provision that the assignment in insolvency shall discharge prior attachments.—Mayer v. Cahalin, Case No. 9,340.

Query, whether an act involving alternatives, mutually dependent, whose title specifies all the purposes except one, and that consequential, violates the constitutional provision that no law shall contain more than one subject, which subject shall be clearly expressed in the title.—Leger v. Rice, Case No. 8,210.

IV. AMENDMENT AND REVISION.

§ 11. Amendment.
Under Const. Or. art. 4, § 22, a section of a statute cannot be amended by simply repealing a clause or subdivision of it.—Sayles v. Oregon Cent. Ry. Co., Case No. 12,423.

§ 12. Revised statutes.
Where the language used in a revision cannot possibly bear the same construction as the original act, full effect must be given the new enactment.—The Brothers, Case No. 1,968.

In the construction of the Revised Statutes no change of meaning will be imputed to a change of phraseology in the re-enacted statute unless the language used indicates an intended departure therefrom.—United States v. Tilden, Case No. 16,520.

A section in a revision will not be given a construction in opposition to its positive provisions, in order to conform it to the pre-existing statute.—Dodge v. Arthur, Case No. 3,950.

The enactment of the Revised Statutes was not original legislation, but merely a more convenient expression of the law existing on December 1, 1873.—United States v. Moore, Case No. 15,804.

The Revised Statutes as enacted June 22, 1874, did not alter statutory provisions in force December 1, 1873.—The L. W. Eaton, Case No. 8,612.

The publication of the second edition of the Revised Statutes under Act March 2, 1877, did not affect any statute passed subsequent to December 1, 1873.—McLean v. St. Paul & C. Ry. Co., Case No. 8,893.

The Revised Statutes must be regarded as passed on December 1, 1873, and all other acts of the same session of congress passed that date are to be treated as subsequent acts repealing the Revised Statutes, so far as they are inconsistent therewith.—In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Case No. 10,561.

V. REPEAL AND REVIVAL.

§ 13. Repeal in general.
A statute can be repealed only by an express provision of a subsequent law, or by necessary implication.—Morlot v. Lawrence, Case No. 9,815.

§ 14. Implied repeal.
The law does not favor the repeal of a statute by implication.—Cooke v. Ford, Case No. 3,173; United States v. One Hundred Barrels of Spirits, Id. 15,948.

And only a necessary and irresistible implication will be held to operate a repeal of a statute.—The Argo, Case No. 516; Cooke v. Ford, Id. 3,173; United States v. Ten Thousand Cigars, Id. 16,451.

A statute repeals an earlier one if it covers the same subject-matter.—Butler v. Russell, Case No. 2,243; Ogden v. Witherspoon, Id. 10,461; United States v. Barr, Id. 14,527; Same v. Cheeseman, Id. 14,790.

A subsequent statute inconsistent with or repugnant to a former statute repeals it by implication.—Ogden v. Witherspoon, Case No. 10,461; In re Oregon Bulletin Printing & Publishing Co., Id. 10,561; Schenck v. Peay, Id. 12,451; United States v. Barr, Id. 14,527; Same v. Irwin, Id. 15,445; West v. Pine, Id. 17,423; Woods v. Jackson Iron Mfg. Co., Id. 17,993.

Such repeal will operate only to the extent of the repugnance.—United States v. One Hundred Barrels of Spirits, Case No. 15,948.

The adoption of a treaty, with the stipulations of which the provisions of a state law are inconsistent, is equivalent to a repeal of such law.—Fisher v. Harnden, Case No. 4,819.

The doctrine that a statute is impliedly repealed by a subsequent act revising the whole matter of the first does not apply when the revisory statute itself prescribes its operation upon the previous act. When that is done, no other effect can be given to the revisory act.—Patterson v. Tatum, Case No. 10,830.

A prohibition of amendments by mere reference to the title of an act does not prevent repeals by implication.—Mayer v. Cahalin, Case No. 9,340.

Implied repeal not inferred by omission of short expression in repetition in supplemental act of section of former statute.—Aspden's Estate, Case No. 589.

Where a subsequent statute expressly substitutes a different tribunal to determine a question, it impliedly repeals the former statute.—United States v. One Case of Hair Pencils, Case No. 15,924.

The provision in a subsequent act providing a limitation for a prosecution, "any law or provision to the contrary notwithstanding," repeals prior provisions on the same subject.—United States v. Platt, Case No. 16,054a.

In the case of inconsistent acts passed on consecutive days, a joint resolution passed on the later day directing that the earlier act be not published until some days later shows the legislative intention that the earlier act should not be repealed, where publication is necessary to put the act in force.—In re Northwestern Ry. Co., Case No. 10,340.

A general law admitting interested parties to testify as witnesses in all cases held not repealed by a subsequent special law admitting interested parties to testify in certain contingencies.—United States v. Ten Thousand Cigars, Case No. 16,451.

The sections of the Revised Statutes in relation to crime are not repealed by subsequent statutes prescribing different punishments.—United States v. Ulrici, Case No. 16,594.

§ 15. Effect of repeal.
The repealing act will be construed as totally abrogating the law repealed, except as to such rights as became perfect under it.—Pruseux v. Welch, Case No. 11,456.

The repeal of a prohibitory act does not validate contracts made while the prohibition was in force.—Milne v. Huber, Case No. 9,617.

A statute requiring execution against the principal before suing on appeal bond, in force when the bond was executed, held to be the law of the contract, and it is not affected by the repeal.—Goshorn v. Alexander, Case No. 5,630.

The provision that the repeal of a statute shall not extinguish any liability incurred under it (Act Feb. 25, 1871, § 4) does not apply to an act not forbidden by statute at the time of its commission.—United States v. Bennett, Case No. 14,570.

Where a statute giving the right to recover money paid under an illegal contract is repealed, a pending suit and the cause of action involved in it fall with the repeal.—Kimbro v. Colgate, Case No. 7,778.

The repeal of a usury law which forfeited all interest upon a usurious contract leaves the contract in full force according to its terms.—Daggs v. Ewell, Case No. 3,537.

The adoption thereafter of a constitution imposing penalties for usurious contracts can have no effect upon such contracts.—Daggs v. Ewell, Case No. 3,537.

A claim for money taken as usury while a law forbidding usury was in force is not destroyed by the repeal of the law.—Whitaker v. Pope, Case No. 17,528.

The repeal of a lien law after the lien has attached by performance of work does not defeat the lien.—In re Hope Min. Co., Case No. 6,681; Sabin v. Connor, Id. 12,197.

An action commenced on the day a law is repealed is within a saving clause of all actions commenced before the passage of the repealing act.—In re Ankrim, Case No. 395.

Where a cause of action falling within the terms of Act 1823, § 2, arose after the passage of Act July 18, 1866, and before the passage of the Revised Statutes, no suit can be maintained thereon after the passage of the Revised Statutes.—United States v. Claflin, Case No. 14,799.

The repeal of a statute pending proceedings to enforce a penalty or forfeiture under it will bar further proceedings, where there is no saving clause.—Union Iron Co. v. Pierce, Case No. 14,367; United States v. Six Fermenting Tubs, Id. 16,296.

The repeal of an act defining a crime and its punishment does not prevent the prosecution and conviction of a party for the prior violation thereof. Rev. St. § 13.—United States v. Barr, Case No. 14,527.

An offense created by law falls by a repeal of the law without reservation of jurisdiction. —Anonymous, Case No. 475.

§ 16. Revival.
When a statute contains an absolute affirmative repeal of an antecedent statute, or part of it, the expiration of the subsequent statute by its own limitation will not revive the repealed act. —United States v. Twenty-Five Cases of Cloths, Case No. 16,563.

A statute providing that the repeal of a repealing act shall not revive the original act applies to cases of repeal by implication.—Milne v. Huber, Case No. 9,617.

VI. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

§ 17. General rules of construction — Construction by legislature.
The legislative construction of a statute cannot have a retroactive operation.—Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Stockdale, Case No. 6,662.

Where the boundaries of a surveyor general's district depend on the construction of various acts of congress, which have been uniformly construed in one way, and that construction repeatedly sanctioned by legislative action, it becomes conclusive on the judiciary.—United States v. Lytle, Case No. 15,652.

The state legislature has no power to construe a statute previously enacted as to acts done.—Union Iron Co. v. Pierce, Case No. 14,367.

§ 18. —— Construction by executive officers.
The construction given to a statute by the officers appointed to execute it, and acted upon for a long term of years, though not conclusive, is entitled to great consideration by the court. —Gear v. Grosvenor, Case No. 5,291.

The construction given to laws by the executive department, in carrying them into effect, for many years, should, as a rule, be followed by the judiciary, when private rights are not affected.—United States v. Lytle, Case No. 15,652.

§ 19. —— Legislative intent.
Where the meaning of a statute is plain, there is nothing open for construction. It is only where the meaning is doubtful that the court can indulge conjecture as to the legislative intent.—Ogden v. Strong, Case No. 10,460.

§ 20. —— Debates in legislature.
In construing a statute, the facts and circumstances which led to and surrounded its passage, as derived from the congressional journals and debates, and documents laid before congress, will be considered.—United States v. Collier, Case No. 14,833.

The statements of members of a legislative body in debate on the passage of a law may be resorted to to ascertain its general object, though not for the purpose of explaining the meaning of the terms used.—Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, Case No. 6,546.

§ 21. —— Statutes in pari materia.
In the construction of a statute, other statutes in pari materia will be considered.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,099; Le Roy v. Chabolla, Id. 8,267; United States v. Collier, Id. 14,833.

When a statute is made in addition to another on the same subject-matter, without express words of repeal as to any part of the former, the provisions of both must be construed together. —United States v. Woolsey, Case No. 16,763.

§ 22. —— Statutes of other state or country.
The construction given to the statutes of a state or country by its courts will be followed by the courts of other countries.—Humphreyville Copper Co. v. Sterling, Case No. 6,872; Prentice v. Zane, Id. 11,383; United States v. Sherebeck, Id. 16,275.

§ 23. —— Statutes adopted from other state or country.
A legislature re-enacting a British statute in this country presumably adopts the construction given to it by the British courts.—Kirkpatrick v. Gibson, Case No. 7,848.

The construction put by a state court upon its statute, which is subsequently adopted verbatim by another state, is not controlling where the constitution of the latter shows that a different construction was intended.—In re Swearinger, Case No. 13,683.

§ 24. —— Conflicting sections.
As between conflicting sections of the same statute, the last in order of arrangement will control.—Hall v. Equator Mining & Smelting Co., Case No. 5,931.

§ 25. —— Words and phrases.
In the interpretation of statutes, words of common use are to be taken in their natural, plain, and ordinary signification.—Apperson v. City of Memphis, Case No. 497; United States v. Clark, Id. 14,804; Schriefer v. Wood, Id. 12,481.

General words in a statute, following an enumeration of particular cases, apply only to cases of the same kind as those enumerated.—United States v. Irwin, Case No. 15,445.

Effect must be given to the words used in the statute when there is no uncertainty or ambiguity in their meaning.—United States v. Warner, Case No. 16,643.

In the absence of statutory provisions, the federal courts resort to the common law for guidance in the construction of legal terms and phrases.—United States v. Outerbridge, Case No. 15,978.

And the meaning of "robbery," as used in relation to acts declared piratical, is to be ascertained by reference to the common law.—United States v. Jones, Case No. 15,494.

Wherever, in a statute, the words "master and crew" occur in connection with each other, the word "crew" embraces all the officers as well as the common seamen.—United States v. Winn, Case No. 16,740.

The phrase "subsequent to the passage of this act" held to mean subsequent to its approval by the governor.—Walker v. Mississippi Val. & W. Ry. Co., Case No. 17,079.

§ 26. —— Punctuation.
In the construction of laws, punctuation is no criterion of the sense of the legislature, unless it is in conformity with their intention, as expressed in the words used.—In re Irwine, Case No. 7,086.

§ 27. —— Construction in connection with title and preamble.
The title of the act may be resorted to to explain and show the general purport and the inducement which led to its enactment.—Ogden v. Strong, Case No. 10,460.

The title of an act cannot control plain words in the body thereof, but, taken in connection with other parts, may assist in removing ambiguities.—Copeland v. Memphis & C. R. Co., Case No. 3,209; United States v. McArdle, Id. 15,653; Same v. Randolph, Id. 16,120.

The same rule is applicable in regard to the preamble.—Copeland v. Memphis & C. R. Co., Case No. 3,209; United States v. Webster, Id. 16,658.

§ 28. —— Considering whole act.
In construing a statute, the whole act must be considered.—Strode v. The Stafford Justices, Case No. 13,537.

§ 29. —— Giving effect to every part of statute.
A statute must be so construed, if possible without doing violence to language, as to give force and meaning and effect to every part of it. —In re Davis, Case No. 3,615.

Every part of a statute must be viewed in connection with the whole to effect harmony and give a sensible and intelligent effect to each.—Ogden v. Strong, Case No. 10,460.

§ 30. —— Effect of partial invalidity.
Statutes partly in conflict with the constitution will be held void only in part.—Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. St. Louis, Case No. 10,-345.

§ 31. General and special provisions.
The presumption is that provisions of a general character in an appropriation act are limited to the subject-matter of the act, and are not permanent regulations, unless clearly so provided.—United States v. Jarvis, Case No. 15,-468.

A statute applicable in its terms to particular actions cannot be applied by construction to other actions standing on the same reason.—Jacob v. United States, Case No. 7,157.

§ 32. Particular classes of statutes—Penal statutes.
The language of the statute is to be particularly adhered to in the construction of penal laws. —Ferrett v. Atwill, Case No. 4,747; United States v. Clayton, Id. 14,814; Same v. Wilson, Id. 16,730.

And a doubt whether an act charged in an indictment is embraced in the criminal prohibition must be resolved in favor of the accused.—United States v. Reese, Case No. 16,137.

The rule that penal statutes are to be strictly construed will not prevent the courts from inquiring into the intention of the legislature.—The Bolina, Case No. 1,608; The Enterprise, Id. 4,499.

All the provisions or sections of a penal statute must be taken together, and interpreted according to the import of the words, so as to give effect to its objects and intent.—The Harriet, Case No. 6,099.

In construing penal statutes courts will not, by construction, ingraft words in one section upon those of another, unless the legislative intention be plain and clear.—United States v. Clayton, Case No. 14,814; Same v. Twenty-Four Coils of Cordage, Id. 16,566.

In the construction of penal statutes that sense will be adopted which harmonizes best with the context, and promotes in the fullest manner the apparent policy and objects of the legislature.—United States v. Winn, Case No. 16,740.

In the construction of a penal statute an offender who is protected by its letter cannot be deprived of its benefit on the ground that his case is not within the spirit and intention of the law.—United States v. Ragsdale, Case No. 16,113.

Where a penal statute is complete without certain words, and giving them effect will render the whole act meaningless, they should be rejected as surplusage.—United States v. Stern, Case No. 16,389.

Consent is essential to guilt, and the legislature is supposed to pass all penal laws with the understanding that courts will not inflict the penalties for such violations as are unintentional.—The William Gray, Case No. 17,694.

§ 33. —— Remedial statutes.
Remedial statutes should be liberally construed, to advance the remedy, rather than strictly to the destruction of a right.—Edmondson v. Hyde, Case No. 4,285.

§ 34. Time of taking effect.
Statutes cannot, by any fiction or relation, have any effect before they are actually passed. —Warren Mfg. Co. v. Etna Ins. Co., Case No. 17,206.

When no time is fixed, statutes take effect from date.—Warren Mfg. Co. v. Etna Ins. Co., Case No. 17,206.

Penal statute takes effect from time of passage when no other time is fixed.—The Ann, Case No. 397.

A public law takes effect under the constitution from the very time of its approval.—In re Richardson, Case No. 11,777.

When the priority of different events comes in question, an act will be considered as taking effect only from the actual time of its approval by the president.—Salmon v. Burgess, Case No. 12,262.

An act takes effect from the day of its approval by the executive, and includes that day, unless its operation is postponed by its own terms.—Weed v. Snow, Case No. 17,347.

Rev. St. § 5481, defining the crime of extortion under color of office, being passed after the cession of Alaska, is in force there from the time of its passage.—United States v. Carr, Case No. 14,730.

A public law operates prospectively, and not retrospectively.—In re Richardson, Case No. 11,777.

A statute will not be construed as retroactive unless the intention appears on its face.—In re Billing, Case No. 1,408; Schenck v. Peay, Id. 12,450; United States v. Starr, Id. 16,379.

And not then where it will impair vested rights or violate a contract.—In re Billing, Case No. 1,408.

The specification in an amendatory act of its retroactive effect excludes all unspecified cases. —Oxford Iron Co. v. Slafter, Case No. 10,637.

VII. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

§ 36. Pleading.
A declaration founded upon a statute must conclude against the form of the statute, etc.—Jones v. Vanzandt, Case No. 7,502.

A declaration founded on an amendatory act, which refers to and continues the provisions of a former act, should conclude "against the form of the statute," and not "statutes."—Falconer v. Campbell, Case No. 4,620.

§ 37. Evidence.
A state law certified by the clerk of the executive council and the seal of the state is sufficiently proved, under Act May 26, 1790.—United States v. Johns, Case No. 15,481.

The charter of a corporation may be proved by the pamphlet laws of the state, published by the authority of the legislature.—Rockville & W. Turnpike Road v. Andrews, Case No. 11,984.

A state statute book purporting to be published by legislative authority held admissible evidence of the laws of the state, though not authenticated.—Commercial & Farmers' Bank v. Patterson, Case No. 3,056.

Where a statute makes it a felony to steal the notes of any particular incorporated bank, the act of incorporation becomes a public statute, and may be proved by the statute book.—United States v. Porte, Case No. 16,070.

The existence, tenor, and effect of the law of the place of payment of negotiable paper, determining the question as to due presentment of a bill of exchange, may be proved by parol.—Indseth v. Pierce, Case No. 7,026.

Foreign written laws must be proved by the laws themselves.—Consequa v. Willings, Case No. 3,128; Robinson v. Clifford, Id. 11,948; United States v. Ortega, Id. 15,971.

But, if they cannot be procured, inferior evidence may be received.—Consequa v. Willings, Case No. 3,128; Seton v. Delaware Ins. Co., Id. 12,675; United States v. Gardiner, Id. 15,186a.

Printed statute books of the parliament of Great Britain, purchased of the queen's printer, are admissible as prima facie evidence of the laws contained therein.—United States v. Certain Casks of Glass Ware, Case No. 14,764; Same v. One Hundred and Ninety-One Casks of Glassware, Id. 15,935a.

The law of England may be proved in the admiralty court by printed books of statutes, reports, and text writers, as well as by the sworn testimony of experts.—The Pawashick, Case No. 10,851.

The laws of an isolated country may be proved by parol and by persons not jurisconsults if they testify directly and positively.—Wilcocks v. Phillips, Case No. 17,639.

For release of property in admiralty, see "Admiralty," §§ 67–77, 110, 152; "Shipping," § 254.

In relation to removal of causes, see "Removal of Causes," § 5.
To abide event of another suit pending, see "Admiralty," § 133.
To return vessel, see "Shipping," §§ 24, 25.

§ 1. Requisites and validity.

The court will not allow mere verbal understandings between counsel to control the rights of the parties.—The Martha, Case No. 9,144; In re Amory and Leeds, Id. 336a.

A stipulation induced by misrepresentations is not binding on the court.—United States v. Peralta, Case No. 16,032.

§ 2. Construction and effect.

An oral agreement by counsel made out of court will not be construed on conflicting opinions.—American Saddle Co. v. Hogg, Case No. 316.

Effect of written stipulation between attorneys after verdict as to the disposal of future questions.—Tomes v. Redfield, Case No. 14,085.

Compensation for use of street, see "Eminent Domain," § 3.

§ 1. Elevated railroads.

Acts N. Y. April 22, 1867, and June 3, 1868, relating to construction of elevated railroad in New York City, are not void as containing a delegation of legislative authority.—Currier v. West-Side Elevated Patent Ry. Co., Case No. 3,493.

Erection of posts for elevated railroad in street not enjoined at suit of abutting owner not showing title to the soil in the street.—Currier v. West-Side Elevated Patent Ry. Co., Case No. 3,493.

Legislative authorization will prevent enjoining construction of elevated railroad in street as a nuisance.—Currier v. West-Side Elevated Patent Ry. Co., Case No. 3,493.

SUBMISSION.

To arbitration, see "Arbitration and Award," § 1.

SUBMISSION OF CONTROVERSY.

§ 1, Construction, scope, and effect of submission.
§ 2, Correction of statement.

The whole controversy is submitted, without limitation, under an agreed statement providing that "the court may make any other order or judgment in the case which they shall think it may require."—Derby v. Jacques, Case No. 3,817.

Annexing letters without reservation to an agreed statement of facts under which the case is submitted waives a statutory requirement that they shall be stamped.—Snow v. Miles, Case No. 13,146.

§ 2. Correction of statement.
To support a motion made after a decision to correct an agreed statement of facts on which the case is tried, the moving party must not only show that the statement was actually erroneous, but that he had not been guilty of laches.—United States v. Butterfield, Case No. 14,704.

SUBROGATION.

§ 1, To rights of lienors generally. § 2, To rights of mortgagees. § 3, To rights of vendor. § 4, To rights of surety. § 5, To rights of creditors. § 6, To rights of payee or indorsee.

Of insurer on payment of loss, see "Insurance," § 166.

§ 1. To rights of lienors generally.
One having a lien on certain property may pay off prior incumbrancers, and be substituted to their rights.—Russell v. Howard, Case No. 12,156.

A surety on a bond in admiralty, who pays the money, is subrogated to the rights of the original libelant.—Carroll v. The Leathers, Case No. 2,455.

A purchaser of a fishing vessel from assignees in bankruptcy, who is afterwards compelled to pay a secret lien for wages, is subrogated to the lien of the seamen upon the proceeds of fish caught during the voyage, which proceeds came to the hands of the assignees.—In re Low, Case No. 8,558.

See, also, "Maritime Liens," § 65.

§ 2. To rights of mortgagee.
Notes taken up by agents of the maker at maturity, and charged in their account current with the maker, will be held to have been paid, and the agents are not entitled to the benefit of a mortgage given to secure such notes.—Turnbull v. Thomas, Case No. 14,243.

§ 3. To rights of vendor.
Lands mortgaged to indemnify the mortgagee against an incumbrance on other property which the mortgagee subsequently conveyed with a covenant against incumbrances, may be reached by the latter's grantee, who has been evicted, or been obliged to pay the incumbrance.—Upham v. Brooks, Case No. 16,797.

§ 4. To rights of surety.
The fact that the state, which had indorsed railroad company bonds, and was secured by a mortgage, could not be sued, is no reason why the holders of the bonds should not be subrogated to the rights of the state, and have the benefit of the security.—Young v. Montgomery & E. R. Co., Case No. 18,166.

The security given by the maker of a note to the indorser may, after both are insolvent and the surety's liability has become fixed, be recovered by the holder and applied in payment.—Mathews v. Abbott, Case No. 9,275.

A mortgage pledge or lien received by the surety to secure him may be enforced by the creditors, where both principal and surety are insolvent, and the latter has not been released.—Ex parte Morris, Case No. 9,823.

A surety holding collateral security for his indemnity is a trustee for the creditor, where the debtor is insolvent.—In re Baldwin, Case No. 796.

A creditor may enforce application to the payment of his debt of security given as indemnity to a surety.—Branch v. Macon & B. R. Co., Case No. 1,808; Burroughs v. United States, Id. 2,202.

A surety is entitled to the protection of a court of equity; also sub modo to the benefit of all the securities which the creditor has.—Wiggin v. Dorr, Case No. 17,625.

§ 5. To rights of creditors.
A surety discharging the debt of his principal is subrogated to all the rights of the creditor.—Bank of the United States v. Winston, Case No. 944; Dennis v. Rider, Id. 3,797.

§ 6. To rights of payee or indorsee.
Notes secured by a trust deed were paid by the maker as they matured, with funds borrowed from a third person under an agreement that he should hold the notes on the same security, of which the payees had no knowledge. Held, that the lender was not subrogated to any rights under the trust deed.—Dooley v. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Case No. 3,999.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

To corporate stock, see "Corporations," §§ 17–22.

§ 1. Consideration.
A promise, made publicly in church, to subscribe a portion of the indebtedness due from the church, is valid, where expenses were incurred on the faith of such promise.—Capelle v. Trinity M. E. Church, Case No. 2,392.

Subscriptions in aid of college endowments become fixed and legal obligations as soon as the college performs its undertaking.—Sturges v. Colby, Case No. 13,566.

Want of consideration for a subscription to a college endowment fund is no defense to a note given in settlement thereof.—Sturges v. Colby, Case No. 13,566.

SUNDAY.

§ 1, Work or labor. § 2, Contracts. § 3, Injuries received while violating law. § 4, Service of process and judicial proceedings.

§ 1. Work or labor.
A statute, in general terms, against laboring on Sunday, applies to corporations.—Powhattan Steamboat Co. v. Appomattox R. Co., Case No. 11,363.

Under a state law providing a penalty for laboring on Sunday, a common carrier is not responsible for failure to deliver goods delivered to him on Sunday.—Powhattan Steamboat Co. v. Appomattox R. Co., Case No. 11,363.

Note made on Sunday not void.—Barrett v. Aplington, Case No. 1,045.

§ 3. Injuries received while violating law.
The fact that a vessel was hauled into a dock on Sunday, which was an illegal act under the state law, will not prevent her recovering damages in admiralty, where she is injured on such day, on the falling of the tide, from defects in the bottom.—Sawyer v. Oakman, Cases Nos. 12,402, 12,404.

See, also, "Collision," § 120.

§ 4. Service of process and judicial proceedings.
A notice cannot be lawfully served on Sunday.—Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Bradley, Case No. 2,646.

As a general rule, judicial acts cannot be performed on Sunday.—Kirkpatrick v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., Case No. 7,847.

Depositions taken on Monday, after adjournment from Saturday to Sunday, and from Sunday to Monday, must be suppressed.—Kirkpatrick v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., Case No. 7,847.

Sunday is not a day on which a supersedeas can be given.—Gannon v. Donn, Case No. 5,211.

Of vessel, see "Shipping," § 6.
Proof and priority of tax claim in bankruptcy, see "Bankruptcy," §§ 382, 432.

§ 1. Nature and extent of power in general.

The power of taxation belongs to the legislative department of the government. The judicial department has no general jurisdiction over the subject.—Heine v. Levee Com'rs, Case No. 6,325; Talcott v. Pine Grove, Id. 13,735.

A state legislature has no authority to authorize taxation in aid of private enterprises.—Commercial Nat. Bank v. Iola, Case No. 3,061.

A state law taxing nonresident merchants, etc., on all sums invested in business in the state, is not unconstitutional.—Duer v. Small, Case No. 4,116.

A constitutional provision abolishing all laws exempting property from taxation does not thereby impose any tax, and none can be collected which is not specially authorized by statute.—Savannah v. Atlantic & G. R. Co., Case No. 12,385.

A state has authority by legislative act to compel a county, against its will, to levy a tax for the improvement of a harbor within its limits, although other counties may derive some benefit therefrom.—Kimball v. Mobile, Case No. 7,774.

The Iowa statute of April 12, 1870, authorizing townships, towns, and cities to vote a tax to raise money to be absolutely given to a railway company, is not in conflict either with the constitution of the state or of the United States.—King v. Wilson, Case No. 7,810.

§ 2. Constitutional requirements and restrictions.

A provision for the collection of a tax, in districts where the same is forcibly resisted, so soon as such resistance is put down, does not show a want of uniformity in the tax.—United States v. Riley, Case No. 16,164.

A law imposing a higher tax upon a foreign corporation doing business within the state than upon a domestic corporation, held not in violation of a constitutional provision that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state."—Insurance Co. v. New Orleans, Case No. 7,052.

A statute providing that the rate per cent. of the tax in each municipality shall be in proportion to the indebtedness of each is not in conflict with a constitutional provision that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state.—Maenhaut v. New Orleans, Case No. 8,939.

Want of uniformity in the application of a tax will not defeat it.—Apperson v. City of Memphis, Case No. 497.

§ 3. Constitutional and statutory provisions.

Constitutional provisions for the protection of taxpayers must be strictly construed.—Denike v. Rourke, Case No. 3,787.

Statutes in relation to the enforcement and collection of taxes must be strictly construed.—Minturn v. Smith, Case No. 9,647.

§ 4. Persons and property taxable—Property in general.

The courts cannot, by construction or legal fiction, include subjects of taxation not within the terms of the law.—United States v. Watts, Case No. 16,653.

The funds in the hands of an assignee in bankruptcy may be taxed by the state.—In re Mitchell, Case No. 9,658. CONTRA, see In re Booth, Case No. 1,645.

A fee simple cannot be sold for taxes where an estate for life, in existence, is of sufficient value to pay them.—Hellrigle v. Ould, Case No. 6,344.

Ores extracted from mining claims immediately become subject to state taxation, though the legal title to the land is still in the United States.—Forbes v. Gracey, Case No. 4,924.

§ 5. —— Corporations, and corporate stock and property.

Revenue Act La. 1870 construed as to taxes upon insurance companies.—Insurance Co. v. New Orleans, Case No. 7,052.

The franchise of a corporation is taxable, as well as its property; but the tax must be uniform as to the class on which it operates.—Jessup v. Chicago & A. R. Co., Case No. 7,300.

Individual property held within the state may be taxed by the state. The property of the Bank of the United States is no exception.—Bank of United States v. Deveaux, Case No. 916.

Construction of the charter of the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad Company, as to the taxation of its property.—Moore v. Holliday, Case No. 9,765.

The Kentucky Improvement Company, which has authority under its charter (Act Ky. Dec. 14, 1865) to construct a railroad from its lands to the Ohio or the Little Sandy river or to connect with other railroads, is liable to be taxed as a railroad company.—Kentucky Imp. Co. v. Slack, Case No. 7,718.

A provision for the taxation of railroad property (Laws Vt. 1874, Act No. 1) is not invalid by reason of the fact that lands improved by having a railroad built on them are not made taxable until they have been so improved 10 years.—Wells v. Central Vermont R. Co., Case No. 17,390.

The capital stock of a national bank cannot be assessed, as such, by state authority, but the shares may be assessed to the individual holders.—Collins v. Chicago, Case No. 3,011.

Under the statutes of Nebraska, national bank shares may be taxed, and the tax enforced by distraint against the property of the bank.—First Nat. Bank v. Douglas County, Case No. 4,799.

A taxation of national bank shares above their par value renders the whole tax inoperative and void.—Union Nat. Bank v. Chicago, Case No. 14,374.

Where moneyed capital was taxed a fixed amount per share, but a reduction of indebtedness was allowed before the assessment, a similar tax, without a deduction, on national banks, was invalid.—City Nat. Bank v. Paducah, Case No. 2,743.

Where different rates of taxation are imposed on different classes of moneyed capital, the rates of taxation on national bank shares should not exceed the rate imposed upon shares in state banks.—City Nat. Bank v. Paducah, Case No. 2,743.

§ 6. —— Public property and institutions.

Taxability of the land grant to the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company.—Hunnewell v. Burlington & M. R. Co., Case No. 6,879.

The land is not taxable by a state during the suspension of a location, under a warrant canceled for fraud.—Bronson v. Kukuk, Case No. 1,929.

Quære, whether uninhabited township owned in severalty is rightly included in a tax act which did not provide for the valuation of the land of the different owners.—Clarke v. Strickland, Case No. 2,864.

Land purchased from the United States, and paid for, is liable to taxation, though patent not issued.—Astrom v. Hammond, Case No. 596; Carroll v. Perry, Id. 2,456.

Lands patented to the Indian reservees, under the treaty with the Miami Indians of June 5, 1854, are liable to be taxed by the state authority after the title has passed from the Indian reservee to a citizen.—Peck v. Miami County, Case No. 10,891.

The lands patented to the Union Pacific Railroad Company are liable to state taxations before their sale by the company. Reversing Union Pac. R. Co. v. McShane, Case No. 14,381.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. McShane, Case No. 14,382; Same v. Lincoln County, Id. 14,378.

An act of the state legislature laying a tax on "all real estate, to wit" (specifying various sorts of real estate shown to be private property), does not include property of any sort of the United States within its territory.—United States v. Weise, Case No. 16,659.

The federal government has no power to tax agencies employed by a municipal corporation in the exercise of its legitimate powers, such as an advance of money to aid in the construction of a railroad to the city.—United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., Case No. 14,511.

§ 7. —— Exemptions.

Restriction of taxation to the proceeds alone of "mines and mining claims" does not exempt surface improvements. Const. Nev. art. 10.—Gold Hill v. Caledonia Silver Min. Co., Case No. 5,512.

A state statute passed under a compact with the United States exempting lands sold by them therein from taxation for five years from the sale, cannot be repealed, as to prior purchasers, before the termination of such time.—Thompson v. Holton, Case No. 13,958.

An exemption from taxation by charter must be expressly conferred, or must appear by clear and necessary implication from the language used.—Minot v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., Case No. 9,645.

Right of exemption from taxation of certain railroads under Act Dec. 25, 1852, § 12.—Parmley v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., Case No. 10,768; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Cleino, Case No. 631; Bailey v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., Id. 732.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company is not exempt from state taxation, as an instrumentality created by congress, and employed for transportation of mails, armies, etc., of the United States.—Huntington v. Central Pac. R. Co., Case No. 6,911.

The payment of a bonus for a charter does not protect the grantee from taxation not expressly reserved therein.—Minot v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., Case No. 9,645.

§ 8. Place of taxation.

Placing the property of a corporation in the hands of a receiver does not exempt it from the operation of the tax laws of the jurisdiction in which it lies.—Stevens v. New York & O. M. R. Co., Case No. 13,405.

School lands held by the state of Alabama, under Act June 22, 1854, in the state of Nebraska, are not taxable by the latter state.—Stoutz v. Brown, Case No. 13,505.

Shares of stock cannot be taxed in the place where the corporation is located, without regard to the residence of the owner.—Union Nat. Bank v. Chicago, Case No. 14,374.

Taxation of the shares of a bank in the place where the bank is located, being void as to all shareholders not residing in the district, is also void as to those residing there.—Union Nat. Bank v. Chicago, Case No. 14,374.

The portion of a railroad bridge over the Missouri river, between Iowa and Nebraska, which lies within the limits of Iowa, may be taxed as a bridge, under Code Iowa, 1873, §§ 808, 810.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. Pottawattamie County, Case No. 14,384.

The Burlington & Southwestern Railroad Company, an Iowa corporation, held liable to taxation in Missouri, in which its road was extended by special acts upon its road, and property therein.—Burlington & S. Ry. Co. v. Putnam County, Case No. 2,169.

A national bank located in New Jersey, which, for the convenience of persons in Philadelphia, keeps a clerk there to receive deposits, is not located in Philadelphia, so as to be liable to taxation.—National State Bank v. Pierce, Case No. 10,052.

Ores extracted from mines within a state, and there reduced, may be taxed by the state, although mined by a corporation of another state, and though the assessment is not made until the end of a quarter after the proceeds are carried out of the state.—Forbes v. Gracey, Case No. 4,924.

§ 9. Levy and assessment.

A statute declaring that a majority of the board shall have full authority to transact business, and that no proceedings shall be declared invalid on account of the absence of one of them, will not be construed to have a retroactive effect.—Schenck v. Peay, Case No. 12,450.

Where a statute provides for a board of three tax commissioners, and that number is appointed, but only two acted or qualified, the proceedings of the board are void ab initio.—Schenck v. Peay, Case No. 12,450.

A memorandum on the books of the town clerk that certain persons were "sworn to office" as assessors, signed by the clerk as a justice of the peace, and not as town clerk, held a sufficient certificate of the official oath under the Maine statutes.—Ware v. Bradbury, Case No. 17,168.

The action of a board of equalization in disregarding the return under oath of a corporation, and raising the value of its property without evidence or a chance to be heard, held illegal.—Jessup v. Chicago & A. R. Co., Case No. 7,300.

The board of equalization created by the Missouri constitution of 1875 (article 10, § 18) became at once the only board for that purpose, was clothed with all the powers of the previous board, and had power to act as an original assessing body.—Ketchum v. Pacific R. Co., Case No. 7,738.

Under Laws Mo. 1852-53, p. 13, the state board of equalization cannot act as an original assessing body and make an assessment de novo of railroad taxes, but it is only authorized to equalize the aggregate valuation of the county boards.—Paul v. Pacific R. Co., Case No. 10,845.

An assessment de novo by the state board will not vitiate the entire tax, but will leave the final valuation as fixed by the county boards.—Paul v. Pacific R. Co., Case No. 10,845.

A mere error of judgment on the part of assessing officers as to the valuation of property, in the absence of fraud, is not subject to judicial revision.—Paul v. Pacific R. Co., Case No. 10,845.

The assessment of a tax must be made in the mode or on the principle prescribed by statute. —Huntington v. Central Pac. R. Co., Case No. 6,911; Tilton v. Oregon Cent. Military Road Co., Id. 14,055.

In California a railroad must be taxed as real estate, and assessed in the counties in which each portion lies, at its cash value as so much land.—Huntington v. Central Pac. R. Co., Case No. 6,911.

The lands and improvements thereon must be assessed separately, like other real estate.—Huntington v. Central Pac. R. Co., Case No. 6,911.

The omission to assess other property exempted from taxation under an unconstitutional statute does not render void a tax upon property of others liable to taxation, or give them a remedy by injunction.—Muscatine v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., Case No. 9,971.

Assessment by county commissioner of larger sum than is granted by legislature vitiates the whole tax.—Clarke v. Strickland, Case No. 2,864.

Where the taxpayer does not present a complete schedule, the tax will not be rendered illegal if the assessors tax for property not contained therein.—Ware v. Bradbury, Case No. 17,168.

An assessment of real property, which contains no valuation except certain figures without mark or sign to indicate for what they stand, is void for uncertainty.—Tilton v. Oregon Cent. Military Road Co., Case No. 14,055.

Personal property not listed for taxation, as required by law, may be assessed against the apparent owner by possession or muniment of title.—The North Cape, Case No. 10,316.

The assessment of taxes on a vessel and the warrant may be against the vessel by name.—The North Cape, Case No. 10,316.

A state cannot tax shares in a national bank by requiring the value of the property of the bank to be added to the value of the shares, otherwise ascertained, to obtain its assessable value.—St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Papin, Case No. 12,239.

National banks cannot be compelled by the auditor or probate judge to present for inspection the deposit books of the bank in order to reach such deposits for purposes of taxation.—First Nat. Bank of Youngtown v. Hughes, Case No. 4,811.

Levies which were not ascertained until the summer of 1876, although the assessment related back to August, 1875, were governed by the rates prescribed by the Missouri constitution of November, 1875.—Ketchum v. Pacific R. Co., Case No. 7,738.

What constitutes a district for the purposes of taxation within Act 1862, providing for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts.—Sharpleigh v. Surdam, Case No. 12,711.

§ 10. Lien and priority.

The lien of the state for taxes is paramount to all private rights.—Steubenville & I. R. Co. v. Tuscarawas County, Case No. 13,388.

The lien of the state for taxes upon railroad property in the custody of the law is prior to all other liens whatsoever, except for judicial costs.—Georgia v. Atlantic & G. R. Co., Case No. 5,351.

The lien of the state for taxes attaches to personal property upon the seizure thereof by the collecting officers, from which time the property is in the custody of the law.—Steubenville & I. R. Co. v. Tuscarawas County, Case No. 13,388.

Taxes on chattels are not a lien on the real property of the owner until after judgment on a suit to recover them.—Metcalf v. Davies Screw Co., Case No. 9,495.

§ 11. Recovery of taxes paid.

A tax paid under protest, and with notice that the person intends to bring a suit to test its validity, may be recovered back where it is illegal.—Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. St. Paul, Case No. 10,346.

The payment of illegal taxes under protest to relieve the party from an accumulation of penalties, which could only be enforced by judicial proceedings, is voluntary, and cannot be recovered back.—Oceanic S. S. Co. v. Tappan, Case No. 10,405.

Allowance or recovery in ejectment, see "Ejectment," § 27.

§ 12. Collection and enforcement against persons or personal property.

Act Ark. T. Oct. 26, 1825, is inapplicable to nonresidents; and, where fees were received by the sheriff acting as tax collector, he is liable for the penalty prescribed in such act.—McGunnegle v. Rutherford, Case No. 8,815a.

Where a collector of taxes is charged with the duty of collecting arrearages, his bond is liable for all such collections made by him after its date.—Washington v. Walker, Case No. 17,235.

Duties of county justices and the tax collector in relation to the collection of taxes levied in obedience to a mandamus of a federal court.—United States v. Lafayette County Court, Case No. 15,549.

Back taxes on realty (in Missouri) cannot be collected from the personal property of a subsequent purchaser.—Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Cleino, Case No. 631.

The rolling stock of a railroad may be sold for taxes as against mortgagees, though the road be unable to replace it.—Steubenville & I. R. Co. v. Tuscarawas County, Case No. 13,388.

In a suit to recover taxes, the court cannot reduce assessable value or include omitted property; it cannot go behind the action of the board of equalization, finding the number of miles of a railroad in a county, or adjust the amount of taxable property, or correct mistakes of fact. —Ketchum v. Pacific R. Co., Case No. 7,738.

Intervening petitions by taxing officers in a railroad receivership case, for payment of taxes, are not suits to recover taxes, within the meaning of the act allowing 5 per cent. for attorney's fees. Act Mo. March 29, 1875, § 4.—Ketchum v. Pacific R. Co., Case No. 7,738.

In a suit to collect taxes, tax bills purporting to be certified by duly-authorized officers are presumed to be correct, and the burden of proof is upon those contesting them.—Ketchum v. Pacific R. Co., Case No. 7,738.

A set-off is not admissible against a demand for taxes.—Apperson v. City of Memphis, Case No. 497.

Replevin lies for property seized by a tax collector under a void assessment.—Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Cleino, Case No. 631.

Personal estate upon the premises may be distrained for taxes against the realty.—Hayman's Adm'rs v. Rothwell, Case No. 6,267.

§ 13. Sale of land for nonpayment of tax.

A lawful tender of the tax on lands to the officer authorized to receive it is tantamount to an actual payment, and devests the authority of the officer to sell the land for taxes.—Schenck v. Peay, Case No. 12,451.

A collector must make a demand on the owner of land for taxes before judgment can be rendered against the land.—Mayhew v. Davis, Case No. 9,347.

To bind the owner by a tax sale the land must have been proceeded against in the name of the real owner, or by such a description as will clearly identify it.—Bush v. Williams, Case No. 2,225.

Advertisement of delinquent tax as including an illegal county tax as part of the amount due is a fatal defect.—Clarke v. Strickland, Case No. 2,864.

Tax sale of part of lot held void for failure to state its number in the advertisement of sale. —Bradley v. Conner, Case No. 1,774.

Notice of sale as provided by the statute is an essential requisite to the validity of the sale. —Moore v. Brown, Case No. 9,753.

A sale of land under several levies is void if one of the levies is illegal.—Gresham v. Montgomery, Case No. 5,805.

A levy or seizure of real property may be made without going upon the premises, by making a memorandum upon the warrant of the description of the premises, for the purpose of a levy and sale.—United States v. Hess, Case No. 15,358.

The purchase by a deputy of the sheriff who made the tax sale, where he took no part therein, does not render it void.—O'Reilly v. Holt, Case No. 10,563.

The purchase by a clerk of the chancery court, in whose office the deed must be filed, does not render the sale void.—O'Reilly v. Holt, Case No. 10,563.

A tax sale will not be set aside for an alleged fraudulent combination among bidders, where there were more lands for sale than all wanted, and it does not appear that they did not bid against each other.—Swartz v. Funk, Case No. 13,678.

A tax sale will be set aside in equity where there was fraud and collusion between the officer making the sale and the purchaser.—Schenck v. Peay, Case No. 12,451.

The assessment of the penalty of 50 per cent. simultaneously with the apportionment, under Act June 7, 1862, is unauthorized, and renders void a sale for taxes made thereunder.—Schenck v. Peay, Case No. 12,451.

An ex-sheriff cannot, under order of court years after the time to redeem has expired, amend his return of a tax sale so as to show that the sale was valid, when it appeared on the record to be void.—French v. Edwards, Case No. 5,098.

A change in the assessment, made after the return, without the knowledge of the owner, who complied with all legal requirements, will vitiate a sale for nonpayment of taxes.—Brettaugh v. Locust Mountain Coal & Iron Co., Case No. 1,846.

The annulment by decree of court of a tax sale of premises mortgaged to secure notes held by different parties inures to the benefit of all such holders, and not solely of the holder at whose suit the decree was made.—Weaver v. Alter, Case No. 17,308.

Even though a state had power to tax real estate of the United States within its territory, it cannot enforce the tax by levy and seizure.—United States v. Weise, Case No. 16,659.

A sale of land for taxes in an Indian reservation not subject to state taxation is void.—Swope v. Purdy, Case No. 13,704.

The land is not subject to a sale for taxes by the state until the legal title passes by the issuing of a patent.—Bronson v. Kukuk, Case No. 1,929.

Upon a petition to confirm a tax sale, the purchaser must show every fact necessary to give jurisdiction and authority to the officer making the sale, and a strict compliance with the statute.—Overman v. Parker, Case No. 10,623.

§ 14. Restraining collection of tax.

The nature and extent of the jurisdiction of equity to restrain the collection of taxes considered.—Parmley v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., Cases Nos. 10,767, 10,768.

A party coming into court to restrain the collection of taxes must have paid or tendered the part admitted to be due. A willingness to pay or payment into court is not sufficient.—Parmley v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., Case No. 10,768.

A distinction, on principle and policy, suggested between enjoining local or municipal taxes and taxes levied by the state for purposes of general revenue.—Parmley v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., Case No. 10,768.

A bank is a proper party complainant to enjoin a collection of a tax upon its shares assessed against its stockholders.—City Nat. Bank v. Paducah, Case No. 2,743.

Whether Rev. St. § 3224, which provides that "no suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court," applies to a suit in a federal court to restrain the collection of a state tax, quære.—Wells v. Central Vermont R. R. Co., Case No. 17,390.

Equity will enjoin the collection of taxes which are invalid where the remedy at law is inadequate.—Union Nat. Bank v. Chicago, Case No. 14,374.

A suit will lie to restrain the collection of an unlawful tax against a corporation, the remedy at law being inadequate.—Woolsey v. Dodge, Case No. 18,032; First Nat. Bank of Omaha v. Douglas County, Id. 4,809.

A sale of personal property for an illegal tax will not be enjoined, there being an adequate remedy at law.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lincoln County, Case No. 14,379; Trask v. Maguire, Id. 14,145.

A collection of a tax may be enjoined where its enforcement would lead to a multiplicity of suits.—City Nat. Bank v. Paducah, Case No.

2,743; Union Nat. Bank v. Chicago, Id. 14,-374.

The collection of an illegal tax upon real property will be restrained where its enforcement will result in a cloud upon the title.—Huntington v. Central Pac. R. Co., Case No. 6,911; Minturn v. Smith, Id. 9,647; Tilton v. Oregon Central Military Road Co., Id. 14,055.

A bank whose capital stock is assessed at full value, while all other property is assessed at less than half value, may obtain relief in equity by enjoining collection of the excess.—Merchants' Nat. Bank of Toledo v. Cumming, Case No. 9,453.

The court will not, on the petition of railroad receivers appointed by it, enjoin the execution of state tax warrants which are regular on their face, and where the collectors are acting in good faith.—Stevens v. New York & O. M. R. Co., Case No. 13,405.

The court cannot interfere where the manner of assessing and collecting taxes prescribed by law is not unconstitutional, and the officers charged with such duties conform to the law.—Steubenville & I. R. Co. v. Tuscarawas County, Case No. 13,388.

Where the assessing officers, in taxing national bank shares, have arrived at a correct result, the collection of the taxes will not be restrained because the method was erroneous.—St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Papin, Case No. 12,239; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lincoln County, Id. 14,-379.

The assessment or collection of any tax authorized cannot be restrained where the officer has power to inquire and determine whether the thing assessed by him is liable to taxation, however erroneous his decision of that question may be.—Pullan v. Kinsinger, Case No. 11,463.

Temporary injunction against collection of taxes under state authority granted, with leave to bring question before full bench.—Bailey v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., Case No. 732.

The validity of a provision as to collection of taxes against nonresidents from property within the state of the firms, etc., to which they belong, cannot be determined on a bill filed by a nonresident to restrain collection, to which the other members of the firm are not made parties.—Duer v. Small, Case No. 4,116.

A bill of peace to restrain the collection of a tax brought by a number of persons liable therefor in the name of themselves, and for all who may come in, will not lie.—Cutting v. Gilbert, Case No. 3,519.

Taxation by state authority of the capital stock of a national bank, invested in United States securities, restrained.—First Nat. Bank of Omaha v. Douglas County, Case No. 4,809.

See, also, "Corporations," §§ 28, 29.

§ 15. Redemption from tax sale.

The purchaser under decree of the court held entitled to redeem from a tax sale.—Oneale v. Caldwell, Case No. 10,515.

Infants whose property has been sold for taxes due may redeem at any time within one year after they have arrived at full age.—Mockbee v. Upperman, Case No. 9,687.

The right of redemption is against the person possessed of the title at the time of redemption.—Bright v. Boyd, Case No. 1,875.

Outstanding tax title in another is no lawful ground for a refusal by the county auditor to receive from the owner of the regular title money tendered to redeem from another tax sale.—Lancaster v. County Auditor, Case No. 8,038.

A formal offer, by a relative or friend of the owner, to pay a tax, where he went to the commissioners' office for that purpose, is not necessary where the commissioners decline to receive any tender unless made by the owner in person.—Lee v. Chase, Case No. 8,185; Same v. Kaufman, Id. 8,192.

A tender, by a relative or friend of the owner, of a tax due upon property advertised for sale, is a sufficient tender, irrespective of rules of the tax commissioners as to its validity.—Lee v. Chase, Case No. 8,185; Same v. Kaufman, Id. 8,192.

A lien creditor of the owner of the fee may make a lawful tender of the tax, under the act of 1862, and may redeem the land from a tax sale.—Schenck v. Peay, Case No. 12,451.

§ 16. Tax titles—Title and rights of purchaser at tax sale.

In a sale of land for taxes, any material act which the law requires, or which may prejudice the rights of the owner, will be fatal to the title of the purchaser.—Ogden v. Harrington, Case No. 10,457.

A payment of the money received on the sale into the county treasury instead of the state, or the treasury of the county instead of the treasury of the township, cannot affect the title.—Ogden v. Harrington, Case No. 10,457.

A tax title is utterly void if the land be sold in a wrong name, under a wrong assessment.—Stansbury v. Taggart, Case No. 13,292.

Where the title to a railroad company exempted by charter from taxation passes to the state, and is sold by it to a new organization, after the adoption of a new constitution prohibiting the exemption of private property from taxation, the right of exemption does not pass.—Trask v. Maguire, Case No. 14,145.

To support a title under a tax sale a strict compliance with the statute is requisite, and, where the reputed owner is proceeded against as though he were occupier, the sale is illegal.—Rule v. Parker, Case No. 12,125.

Irregularities will not affect the validity of the title under a sale for direct taxes within insurrectionary districts, under Act 1862, where the proceedings are colorable, and free from fraud, accident, or mistake.—Sharpleigh v. Surdam, Case No. 12,711.

A title made in the name of a deceased person, under the act of 1836, inures to the benefit of his heirs.—Schedda v. Sawyer, Case No. 12,-443.

A purchaser at a sale for taxes acquires only the right of the person in whose name the property was assessed.—Blodget v. Brent, Case No. 1,553.

A party in possession and claiming title at the time a tax levy is perfected cannot acquire an outstanding title by neglecting to pay the tax or judgment, and purchasing at the tax sale.—Le Roy v. Reeves, Case No. 8,272.

In Illinois, an auditor's tax deed, coupled with seven years' possession and payment of taxes, gives good title.—Mattison v. Walker, Case No. 9,297.

A sale of other premises than that levied upon will not convey a good title.—United States v. Hess, Case No. 15,358.

A tax sale and conveyance in pursuance thereof (in Virginia) vests the purchaser with the title of the person assessed with the taxes at the beginning of the tax year, notwithstanding irregularities in the proceedings, if they do not appear on the face thereof.—McQuain v. Meline, Case No. 8,923.

§ 17. —— Tax deeds and actions to try title.

The right of a purchaser at a tax sale in Illinois to a deed is postponed on a resale within two years for taxes.—Denike v. Rourke, Case No. 3,787.

Recitals in tax deed in Wisconsin held sufficient compliance with the statute.—Geekie v. Kirby Carpenter Co., Case No. 5,295.

The deed need not recite that the land was assessed on the commissioners' book.—McQuain v. Meline, Case No. 8,923.

A recital that the land was returned delinquent for the nonpayment of the taxes is sufficient as a recital of the assessment.—McQuain v. Meline, Case No. 8,923.

A tax deed made pursuant to sales had prior to the passage of the act may be declared void for want of a lawful notice of redemption.—Lord v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co., Case No. 8,507.

A tax deed reciting a sale to the highest bidder is void upon its face where the statute only authorized a sale of the smallest portion of the property which any one would take and pay the judgment and costs.—Le Roy v. Reeves, Case No. 8,272.

Tax deed held void where there was added to the sum assessed the price of a revenue stamp.—Geekie v. Kirby Carpenter Co., Case No. 5,295.

Equity will not cancel a tax deed where there has been no fraud practiced against the owner of the land, and no substantial injustice done to him.—Craig v. Pollock, Case No. 3,335.

A tax deed, made to the assignee of a tax-sale certificate assigned by the county clerk without authority of law, is void on its face.—Swope v. Saine, Case No. 13,705.

A tax deed in Kansas, made and recorded as required by law, bars a recovery of the land after two years.—Sprague v. Pitt, Case No. 13,254.

Under the Arkansas statutes, a tax deed which shows by its recitals that two or more separate town lots were sold en masse for a gross sum is void on its face, and cannot be contradicted by evidence aliunde.—Walker v. Moore, Case No. 17,080.

The deed, when regular, is prima facie evidence that the proceedings were regular, and that the title passed.—Lamb v. Gillett, Case No. 8,016; McQuain v. Meline, Id. 8,923; Mattison v. Walker, Id. 9,297; Roberts v. Pillow, Id. 11,909. CONTRA, see Arrowsmith v. Burlingim, Id. 563; Dunn v. Games, Id. 4,176; Miner v. McLean, Id. 9,630.

Act Wis. April 19, 1852, making a recorded tax deed conclusive in regard to any errors of officers in levying taxes and selling lands to enforce payment, held not unconstitutional.—Lord v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co., Case No. 8,507.

Under a statute making tax deeds prima facie evidence of valid title (Act Ohio, March 14, 1831), the deed is admissible in evidence, without proof of the preliminary proceedings.—Lamb v. Gillett, Case No. 8,016.

In such case the burden of showing that the prior proceedings were irregular or illegal rests on the other party.—Lamb v. Gillett, Case No. 8,016.

The purchaser from a person holding only a tax title has the burden of maintaining that such title extinguished the patent title, which, as to him, is an adverse claim.—Curts v. Cisna, Case No. 3,507.

The owner may rely upon the truth of the record made by the sheriff's return showing a tax sale to be void.—French v. Edwards, Case No. 5,098.

Plaintiff in ejectment cannot recover, on a tax deed, lands originally held by the United States, without showing a sale by the United States before the levy of the state taxes; it is not necessary to show that a patent issued.—Lord v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co., Case No. 8,507.

The purchaser at a tax sale in Illinois must show that the person in whose name the land was taxed resided in the county when the notice of sale and time for redemption was served upon him.—Denike v. Rourke, Case No. 3,787.

In proof of the proceedings preliminary to the sale, it is only necessary to show by the county auditor's record such facts as the statute requires to be of record; other facts may be proved by parol.—Lamb v. Gillett, Case No. 8,016.

A record from the books of the county auditor must show the transactions as they occurred. A historical account of the events is not a record. The auditor must state facts, not conclusions.—Dunn v. Games, Case No. 4,176.

A state statute of limitations is not applicable to a sale of land exempted by federal authority from state taxation.—Swope v. Purdy, Case No. 13,704.

§ 18. Forfeitures and penalties.

Statutory provision for enforcing forfeiture for nonpayment of tax must be strictly followed.—Clarke v. Strickland, Case No. 2,864; Schenck v. Peay, Id. 12,451.

Congress may declare a forfeiture for nonpayment of taxes that will take effect ipso jure.—Schenck v. Peay, Case No. 12,451.

Forfeiture for nonpayment of tax is waived by levy of another tax after title of state had become perfect.—Clarke v. Strickland, Case No. 2,864.

An act of legislature giving further time to pay a tax after forfeiture for nonpayment waives the forfeiture.—Clarke v. Strickland, Case No. 2,864.

Where the receiver of a railroad and the taxing officers agreed to submit to the court the question of the validity of certain levies, held, that the company was not subject to the penalty prescribed by the Missouri statute of March 15, 1875, against railroad companies failing to pay taxes, but the court would allow 10 per cent. interest from the date the taxes became due.—Ketchum v. Pacific R. Co., Case No. 7,738.

In Ohio there can be no forfeiture for nonpayment of taxes of delinquent lands which the county treasurer and collector has not returned under oath to the county auditor.—Miner v. McLean, Case No. 9,630.

The county auditor is required to make a record of such return, which record cannot be altered by parol evidence.—Miner v. McLean, Case No. 9,630.

The making of lists of lands forfeited for the nonpayment of taxes and the sale thereof in Ohio, considered.—Raymond v. Longworth, Case No. 11,595.

§ 19. Legacy, inheritance, and transfer taxes.

Deposits in a Pennsylvania savings bank, made by a citizen of New Jersey, not subject to Pennsylvania collateral inheritance tax.—Allen v. Philadelphia Sav. Fund Soc., Case No. 234.

A savings bank is not liable for the collateral inheritance tax on a deposit therein.—Allen v. Philadelphia Sav. Fund Soc., Case No. 234.

Stocks and bonds of Pennsylvania corporations, and claims against Pennsylvania debtors, belonging to a decedent not domiciled in Pennsylvania, and passing to collateral heirs, but not under the intestate laws of the state, nor under any will proved and administered therein, are not subject to the state collateral inheritance tax.—Kintzing v. Hutchinson, Case No. 7,834.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

§ 1, Establishment. § 2, Receivers. § 3, Delivery of messages. § 4, Limitation of liability. § 5, Liability for damages, and measure of damages.

Contracts by telegraph, see "Contracts," § 3.
Liability for injury by cable in navigable stream, see "Navigable Waters," § 14.
Presumption of delivery of telegram, see "Evidence," § 12.
Taxation of expenses for telegraphing, see "Costs," § 20.

§ 1. Establishment.

A provision of a state statute, giving an exclusive right to a telegraph company to erect and use lines of telegraph within certain counties, held to be in conflict with Act July 24, 1866, in relation to the construction of telegraph lines.—Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., Case No. 10,960.

Congress has constitutional power to grant to telegraph companies organized under state laws the right to construct and use lines of telegraph along any of the military or post roads of the United States.—Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., Case No. 10,960.

When a railroad is in possession of a receiver of the United States court. a telegraph company can acquire no title to its right of way by condemnation proceedings in a state court.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Atlantic & P. Tel. Co., Case No. 17,445.

Not authorized by acts establishing post roads, or Act July 24, 1866. to establish lines over right of way of railroad company without making compensation.—Atlantic & P. Tel. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., Case No. 632.

A railroad cannot grant to a telegraph company the sole right to construct a line over its right of way, so as to exclude other telegraph companies. Act July 24, 1866.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. American Union Tel. Co., Case No. 17,444.

A telegraph company having a grant from a railroad of such exclusive right to construct a line along the right of way is entitled to an injunction against actual interference with its line, but not against such interruption of its business as results from mere competition by other companies constructing rival lines along the same railroad.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. American Union Tel. Co., Case No. 17,444.

§ 2. Receivers.

If the receiver ratifies a contract previously made with the company, the rights under such contract are not affected by the foreclosure proceedings.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Atlantic & P. Tel. Co., Case No. 17,445.

§ 3. Delivery of messages.

Telegraph companies are bound to deliver messages impartially, in good faith, and in the order in which they are received.—Dorgan v. Telegraph Co., Case No. 4,004.

A person using the telegraph, unless he insures his message, takes the risk of delay and failure to deliver arising from accidents and obstructions incident to telegraph lines.—Dorgan v. Telegraph Co., Case No. 4,004.

A telegraph company is entitled to a reasonable time for the delay on account of other business at the repeating office.—Behm v. Western Union Tel. Co., Case No. 1,234.

The fact that a message left at a telegraph office in New York at 5:20 p. m. was not delivered at Mobile until 10:30 a. m. on the next day held prima facie evidence of negligence.—Dorgan v. Telegraph Co., Case No. 4,004.

A telegraph company is not guilty of negligence where a message left at a small station during a reasonable absence of the operator is forwarded on his return.—Behm v. Western Union Tel. Co., Case No. 1,234.

§ 4. Limitation of liability.

A contract exempting the company from liability for damages resulting from delay, unless the message was ordered repeated, is void, as against public policy.—Dorgan v. Telegraph Co., Case No. 4,004.

§ 5. Liability for damages, and measure of damages.

A telegraph company, negligently delivering a forged dispatch, is liable for the damage thereby sustained, though plaintiff has a remedy ex contractu against a solvent indorser of a forged draft, which was the subject of the dispatch.—Strause v. Western Union Tel. Co., Case No. 13,531.

The company is only liable for damages which were within the reasonable contemplation of the parties at the time of making the contract for transmission.—Dorgan v. Telegraph Co., Case No. 4,004.

Liable only for nominal damages where the dispatch does not on its face indicate that the sender is liable to sustain loss if not promptly forwarded, and the company is not so informed.—Behm v. Western Union Tel. Co., Case No. 1,234.

The liability is limited to nominal damages merely, notwithstanding the agent was informed that the message was important, where the dispatch does not in any way indicate that damages will be suffered by delay.—Dorgan v. Telegraph Co., Case No. 4,004.

TENANCY IN COMMON.

See, also, "Joint Tenancy."
Ejectment by cotenant, see "Ejectment," § 3.

§ 1. Creation and existence.

Where there are several grantees in a conveyance who take in trust for certain purposes, they are, under Act Mass. 1785, c. 62, to be deemed tenants in common, and not joint tenants.—Robison v. Codman, Case No. 11,970.

Under a joint demise, by the statute of Tennessee, a tenancy in common may be proved.—Fleeger v. Pool, Case No. 4,860.

§ 2. Mutual rights and liabilities of co-tenants.

One tenant in common may disseise another.—Prescott v. Nevers, Case No. 11,390.

A refusal by one tenant in common to permit his cotenant to participate in the enjoyment of the property constitutes an adverse possession.—Roberts v. Moore, Case No. 11,905.

An adverse possession held by a tenant in common, to the exclusion of his cotenants, bars under the statute of limitations or by lapse of time.—Scott v. Evans, Case No. 12,529.

The statute of limitations is set in motion by an ouster of a cotenant, and an adverse claim.—Four Hundred and Twenty Min. Co. v. Bullion Min. Co., Case No. 4,989.

A purchaser at a tax sale by a tenant in common in possession, who is an agent of the other cotenants, will be held to be a trustee for them.—Baker v. Whiting, Case No. 787.

A purchase made by one of two parties interested together by mutual agreement, made agreeably thereto, will inure to the benefit of the other.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

Upon the death of one of two tenants in common of land sold by an attorney in fact, who took bonds in payment, running to his principals jointly, the survivor is entitled, as against the executors of deceased, to have possession of all the bonds.—Penn v. Butler, Case No. 10,930.

The liability of a tenant in common of mineral land, who takes ore therefrom, is the value of his cotenant's share of the ore in place.—Clowser v. Joplin Min. Co., Case No. 2,908a.

Act Me. March 15, 1821, c. 35, § 2, punishing waste by a tenant in common by treble damages, does not apply where the title is held adversely.—Prescott v. Nevers, Case No. 11,390.

Equity will enjoin a tenant in common from stripping the land of its timber pending a bill in equity.—Bradley v. Reed, Case No. 1,785.

§ 3. Rights and liabilities of co-tenants as to third persons.

A deed by a tenant in common, of his interest in a particular part of the tract, though void as to cotenants, is good against himself and those claiming under him.—Lamb v. Wakefield, Case No. 8,024.

A tenant in common cannot, without consent of his cotenants, grant permits to others to cut timber on the premises.—Baker v. Whiting, Case No. 787.

A tenant in common can recover no more than his own portion of the estate, where he has not disseised his cotenant.—Stevens v. Ruggles, Case No. 13,408.

The holder of an undivided interest in land under the laws of California may recover the entire land, as against all parties, except his cotenants.—French v. Edwards, Case No. 5,098.

In admiralty, see "Admiralty," § 66.
Of freight, see "Shipping," § 187.
Of services, see "Pilots," § 5.

§ 1. Necessity.

A demand of payment in a certain kind of money will not excuse the debtor from proving a lawful tender.—Searight v. Calbraith, Case No. 12,585.

§ 2. Waiver.

A tender is dispensed with by a previous refusal to accept it.—Blight v. Ashley, Case No. 1,541.

A declaration by a person that he will not receive money about to be tendered excuses its production.—Barker v. Parkenhorn, Case No. 993.

§ 3. Sufficiency.

It is not a tender for one to ask if the money will be taken, and to say he is ready to pay it, and offer to give a check.—Ladd v. Patten, Case No. 7,973.

Treasury notes issued under Act 1814, cc. 77, 699, being receivable in payment of duties, taxes, and land debts due the United States, are a good tender in payment of such debts.—Thorndike v. United States, Case No. 13,987.

The interest on such notes continues to run until their payment.—Thorndike v. United States, Case No. 13,987.

A tender of a less amount than is due is of no effect.—Leitch v. Union R. Transp. Co., Case No. 8,224.

A tender after suit brought must include costs, though the process has not been served.—The Sunshine, Case No. 13,623.

A tender made after suit brought, where it does not include interest and costs, and the money is not deposited in court as required by the rules, is unavailing.—Hus v. Kempf, Case No. 6,943.

A tender of more than the amount due upon condition of receiving change and a receipt in full of the claim is not a legal tender.—Perkins v. Beck, Case No. 10,984.

A tender by the pledgor to the pledgee of a vessel, who has bought her at an attachment sale by another creditor, must include the expense of repairs made by him.—Barker v. Parkenhorn, Case No. 993.

§ 4. Effect.

A tender admits the cause of action in admiralty as at law.—Cain v. Garfield, Case No. 2,293.

A tender by respondents on libel for services as stewardess of a ship is an admission of ownership of the vessel.—Jones v. Crowell, Case No. 7,459.

Where general and special counts are pleaded, payment of money into court generally does not admit liability upon the special count.—Snow v. Miles, Case No. 13,146.

Where plaintiff does not establish more at the trial than the amount paid into court, he must be nonsuited, or have a verdict against him.—Donnell v. Columbian Ins. Co., Case No. 3,987.

Where defendant pleads a tender, plaintiff cannot accept the money and proceed for more. —Alexandria v. Patten, Case No. 186.

§ 1. Authority over, and application of acts of congress.

The government and laws of the United States do not extend to territory ceded by a foreign power by the mere act of cession.—American Ins. Co. v. Canter, Case No. 302a.

Act July 20, 1868, imposing a tax on distilled spirits, being a general act, and passed since the acquisition of Alaska, is in force there.—United States v. Seveloff, Case No. 16,252.

Congress has power to authorize the president to regulate or prohibit the introduction of distilled spirits into the district of Alaska, under penalties, as prescribed by Act July 27, 1868.—The Louisa Simpson, Case No. 8,533.

When distilled spirits are imported into the district of Alaska, within the meaning of the act.—The Louisa Simpson, Case No. 8,533.

§ 2. Officers.

The governor and judges of the territory of Michigan had power to adopt the laws of the respective states, but had no legislative authority.—Peck v. Pease, Case No. 10,894.

Salaries of officers of the territory of Minnesota.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,321.

§ 3. Ordinances for the government of Northwest Territory.

As to the force and effect generally of provisions of the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory.—Spooner v. McConnell, Case No. 13,245.

Any provisions of the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory which are repugnant to the Ohio constitution, sanctioned by congress, are abrogated by its provisions.—Spooner v. McConnell, Case No. 13,245.

The article in such ordinance respecting the navigableness of certain waters, and the carrying places between them, remains without modification.—Spooner v. McConnell, Case No. 13,-245.

The ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory was superseded by the adoption of the constitution of the United States, and the admission to the Union of the states formed from that territory.—Woodman v. Kilbourn Mfg. Co., Case No. 17,978.

§ 1. Days—Excluding first or last day.

Where an act is to be performed within a certain time, the day on which the instrument requiring it is made is to be excluded.—Pearpoint v. Graham, Case No. 10,877.

§ 2. —— Excluding Sunday.

Where the last day for doing an act falls upon Sunday, it must be performed on the day preceding.—Pearpoint v. Graham, Case No. 10,877.

§ 3. —— Disregarding fractions of a day.

The doctrine that in law there is no fraction of a day is a mere legal fiction, and is true only sub modo, and in a limited sense, where it will promote the right and justice of the case.—In re Richardson, Case No. 11,777.

Fractions of a day will be considered, when it is necessary to ascertain which of two events first happened.—Lockett v. Hill, Case No. 8,-443; In re Wynne, Id. 18,117.

Fractions of a day are not to be noticed in determining the time of a passage of a law of congress. The law goes into effect from the beginning of the day of its date, unless otherwise provided.—In re Welman, Case No. 17,407.

I. REGULATION IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Statutory regulation.
A steam tug engaged exclusively in towing upon a river within the limits of a state is not subject to inspection, under Act June 8, 1864, § 4.—The Farragut, Case No. 4,677; The Oconto, Id. 10,421.

It is not material that the vessels towed were engaged in interstate commerce.—The Farragut, Case No. 4,677.

In a libel of information brought under Act Feb. 23, 1871, a seizure must be alleged in order to give the court jurisdiction.—The Oconto, Case No. 10,421.

A steam tug, regularly licensed under the acts of congress, plying between ports in different states, is not amenable to local laws regulating Sunday labor.—Philadelphia & Havre De Grace Steam Tow-Boat Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., Case No. 11,085.

II. CONTRACT IN GENERAL.

§ 2. Nature in general.
A contract to tow a vessel out to sea is maritime, though the service does not extend beyond the district.—Betts v. Goodwin, Case No. 1,374.

§ 3. Parties.
A vessel engaged in towing is liable in rem for refusal to perform a contract of towage made by her master, where the agreed price has been received therefor.—The James McMahon, Case No. 7,197.

A person who ships cargo by barge which he knows must be towed to her place of destination is bound by the terms of towage which the barge agrees on with the tug which the barge procures to tow her.—The W. E. Gladwish, Case No. 17,355.

The owner of a canal boat cannot recover for damages caused by the negligence of a tug in the performance of a contract of towage which the former knew that the master of the tug made against the positive instructions of the owner.—The R. F. Cahill, Case No. 11,735.

§ 4. Consideration.
Contracts for towage, made between masters of tugs and persons in charge of a wreck, should be scrutinized by courts of admiralty, and annulled if it appears that undue advantage was taken of the necessities of the persons in charge of the wreck to procure unreasonable recompense.—The W. D. B., Case No. 17,306.

The promise of a tug, which had towed a schooner from imminent danger of fire, and, with the assent of her master, left her at an apparently safe berth, to return in case of danger, is without consideration, and the tug is not liable for a breach thereof.—Bothwell v. Vessel-Owners' Towing Ass'n, Case No. 1,687.

§ 5. Performance.
A contract to tow a canal boat to a certain dock, and there leave her in a safe and suitable place to discharge her cargo, held performed by leaving the canal boat at the upper side of the pier, where, on a change of tide, she was crushed by floating ice.—The Nellie, Case No. 10,094.

§ 6. Compensation—Right in general.
A steamboat owner, calling for the assistance of another steamboat to remove his boat from a position of danger from fire, cannot escape paying for such services on the ground that his boat would have been safe in its original position.—Stevens v. The S. W. Downs & The Storm, Case No. 13,411.

§ 7. —— Amount.
The full sum fixed by the contract for towage service will not be allowed, but only a quantum meruit, if it appears that the service did not accomplish the result agreed to be performed.—The W. D. B., Case No. 17,306.

A threat to attach a vessel is not such duress as will avoid the effect of a certificate made by a master as to the amount agreed to be paid for services.—The Senator, Case No. 12,665.

The master's certificate as to the amount agreed to be paid for services will not be set aside unless it appear clearly and satisfactorily that the sum named is so unreasonable as to raise a suspicion of fraud.—The Senator, Case No. 12,665.

§ 8. —— Lien.
Towage services constitute a lien upon the vessel.—Ward v. The Banner, Case No. 17,149; The General Cass, Id. 5,307.

The lien for towage is devested by an assignment of the claim.—Sturtevant v. The George Nicholaus, Case No. 13,578.

A contract to tow boats for a certain sum per trip during the season held inconsistent with the right to a lien, and a libel in rem will not lie for the towage services.—The J. M. Welsh, Case No. 7,327.

§ 9. Relation of tug to tow.
A tug towing a coal heaver is the servant of the latter, and bound to obey its orders; and is not responsible, though, in point of fact, giving orders to her, for damages in the proper course of its employment.—The Sampson, Case No. 12,-280.

§ 10. Duties and liabilities of tug to tow in general—Nature of tug's liability.
A tug is not liable as a common carrier upon a contract of towage.—Bothwell v. Vessel-Owners' Towing Ass'n, Case No. 1,687; Abbey v. The Robert L. Stevens, Id. 8; The Neaffie, Id. 10,063; The Princeton, Id. 11,433a; The Angelina Corning, Id. 384; Dunn v. The Young America, Id. 4,178; The Enterprise, Id. 4,500.

§ 11. —— Skill, care, and knowledge required in general.
The master of the tug in performing a contract of towage is responsible for ordinary skill and diligence.—The Merrimac, Case No. 9,478; The Adelia, Id. 79.

The tug, unless wholly under the command of the tow, and implicitly obeying its orders, is bound to use all necessary care, foresight, and skill to provide for the safety of the tow.—I—— v. The I. M. Lewis and The Aline, Case No. 6,991.

Proper skill and caution is such skill and caution as persons of ordinary prudence, duly qualified for the business, and exercising an honest care of the interests confided to them, ordinarily use.—Miller v. The Eastern Railroad, Case No. 9,567.

The tug is bound to know the channel and to keep the tow in the deepest water, and she must resort to sounding where the ordinary lights and landmarks are obscured.—The Morton, Case No. 9,864.

The contract of towage implies knowledge of the channel and safe pilotage.—The Zouave, Case No. 18,221.

The master of the tug is bound to know the sailing qualities of a vessel which he has several times before towed into the harbor, and to know the condition of the harbor; and he is responsible for the manner in which he enters it.—The Margaret, Case No. 9,068.

§ 12. —— Making up tow.
The master of the tug has the duty of making up the tow, and he may exercise his judgment in that regard without reference to directions by the master of the tow.—The Sweepstakes, Case No. 13,687.

In arranging the tow, the tug must direct as to the length of lines and the position of the vessels with reference to care in navigation.—The Morton, Case No. 9,864.

The tug is bound to the exercise of ordinary care in taking up, arranging, and managing the tow.—The Morton, Case No. 9,864.

In making up a tow, vessels of heavy draft should be placed behind those of lighter draft.—The Zouave, Case No. 18,221.

The steamer must arrange her tow with reference to her capacity and the nature of the voyage and the waters to be navigated.—Flannery v. The Ontario, Case No. 4,856.

In passing through the channel of St. Clair Flats, the vessel of the heaviest draft should be placed last.—The Sweepstakes, Case No. 13,-687.

The tug is not liable as a common carrier, but is bound to the exercise of ordinary skill and diligence in taking up, arranging, and managing its tow.—The Stranger, Case No. 13,525.

Steamboat held in fault for unwieldy arrangement of tow on the Schuylkill river.—Flannery v. The Ontario, Case No. 4,856.

§ 13. —— Furnishing force and appliances.
One who contracts to tow a vessel from sea into port must furnish sufficient force for the undertaking.—Dunn v. The Young America, Case No. 4,178.

The tug is bound to furnish the towing line as a part of the contract of towage, in the absence of a usage or understanding to the contrary.—The Merrimac, Case No. 9,478.

A tug whose master also acts as pilot and engineer is not properly manned.—The Armstrong, Case No. 540.

A hawser, lengthened by a piece of stern line, parted when another tug took hold to help in the increasing wind, and the tows were seriously injured by pounding together, and afterwards sank. Held, that the tug was liable.—The Francis King, Case No. 5,042.

§ 14. —— Abandonment of tow.
A tug is justifiable in abandoning tow where towline breaks at night during severe storm, and attempts to regain it would be very dangerous to tug.—The Clematis, Case No. 2,876.

Decision of master of tug, acted on in good faith, to abandon tow in storm, will not be impeached, unless clearly erroneous.—The Clematis, Case No. 2,876.

A propeller, having barges in tow, left them outside of the port of Cleveland, while she went in to take on fuel. Held, that she was liable for a loss by a storm during the night.—The Elmira, Case No. 4,417.

III. LOSS OF OR INJURY TO TOW.

§ 15. Liability of tug in general.
The liability of a tug for injuries to her tow arises from the nature of the service, and exists although the contract of towage is not made immediately between tug and tow.—Jennings v. Muller, Case No. 7,282.

A tug is liable for damages done to her tows through want of ordinary care on her part.—The Lyon, Case No. 8,645.

A tug, exercising that degree of caution and skill which prudent navigators usually employ in simliar services, is not liable for injury to tow.—The Brazos, Case No. 1,821.

The tug is not responsible for damages done by the tow, whether lashed alongside or drawn by hawsers, except it be proved that the injury was owing to want of care or skill in the tug, in performing the duties belonging to her.—The Express, Case No. 4,598.

The responsibility for navigation where the tow is lashed to the side of the tug, and depends wholly upon it for motive power and steerage, is wholly on the tug.—Dutton v. The Express, Case No. 4,209.

The tug is not liable for taking one of several courses open to it in an emergency, unless it appear that such course was manifestly the most dangerous.—The Mohawk, Case No. 9,693.

A tug is liable for damages, resulting from negligence in her navigation, to a vessel in tow, whether she is towing under a contract or not. —The Deer, Case No. 3,737.

Owners of steamer towing a flat boat at a low stage of water in the Ohio river held not liable as common carriers for a loss, in the absence of negligence or want of skill in navigation.—Brawley v. The Jim Watson, Case No. 1,817.

Tow boat held guilty of negligence in navigating close to shore, through anchored vessels, and in not anticipating sudden anchoring of vessels ahead.—The Brooklyn, Case No. 1,938.

The towing boat on the Mississippi river held in fault for attempting to run bridge piers in tempestuous weather with loaded barges in tow. —The Mollie Mohler, Case No. 9,701.

Tug held not to have exercised ordinary skill and diligence in leaving Astoria on the ebb tide with a tow for Cape Disappointment.—The Merrimac, Case No. 9,478.

A carrier is guilty of negligence in towing two loaded barges around a point where the channel is narrow and the water shallow, where one barge could have passed in safety.—The Northern Belle, Case No. 10,319.

A tug towing in narrow channel encountering blinding snow storm should anchor.—The Armstrong, Case No. 540.

A steamboat, towing canal boats between New Brunswick and New York, held negligent in venturing beyond the mouth of the Raritan river in a high wind.—The Blanche Page, Case No. 1,523.

To make a tug liable for keeping on through running ice, it must appear that the error was one which a careful and prudent navigator would not have made under the circumstances. —The W. E. Gladwish, Case No. 17,355.

Tug held liable for the loss of a canal boat run upon Flood Rock in a field of soft ice, on the ground that she should have waited until the ice had passed.—The U. S. Grant, Case No. 16,-804.

Tug held liable for damages to ship towed stern foremost from pier in East river, and drifting into pier on opposite shore, where the ship's hands failed to catch the line thrown from the tug.—The M. A. Lennox, Case No. 8,-987.

A tug towing a lighter from the North into the East river, without slackening speed upon coming round against the ebb tide, held liable for the capsizing of the lighter.—The Trojan, Case No. 14,184.

A vessel with a heavy tow in passing from the North river into the East river, where the harbor is crowded with vessels at anchor, should pass around Governor's Island.—The Syracuse, Case No. 13,717.

Tug held not in fault when, having a clear passage, she was forced ashore, with her tow, by a cake of ice which swung on the tide.—The General William McCandless, Case No. 5,322.

Injuries to tow held, on the evidence, incident to the navigation by hawser.—Patlen v. The Illinois, Case No. 10,798.

The tug must take proper measures to guard against the effect of the tide and the passing of other tugs.—The Olive Baker, Case No. 10,489.

A tug employed to take a vessel out of a slip is bound to adopt a method of taking her out without injury.—The M. M. Caleb, Case No. 9,-680.

§ 17. Stranding of tow.

A tug which strands a tow by negligence is liable for expenses of getting her off; and the court will not scrutinize very closely items of expense for lighterage, etc., where the master acted in good faith.—The Michael Groh, Case No. 9,522.

A tug which ran its tow aground is liable for the amount the tow was compelled to pay another tug as salvage for pulling her off.—The C. F. Ackerman, Case No. 2,562.

Miscalculation, resulting in failure to reach a bar at high water, and the grounding of the tow, is negligence rendering the tug liable.—The Brazos, Case No. 1,821.

Owners of tug held liable for grounding of tow where the master of the tug did not take the channel agreed, and gave confused and contradictory orders.—Dutton v. The Express, Case No. 4,209.

Tug held liable for grounding of tow in Hell Gate, resulting from maneuvers rendered necessary by failure of the pilot to observe in proper time that a schooner preceding the tug and tow had lost the wind.—The Niagara, Case No. 10,-219.

A tug will be held liable for injury to her tow run ashore by reason of the breaking of the tug's rudder chain, which was known to the owner to be worn out and insufficient.—The M. M. Caleb, Cases Nos. 9,681, 9,683.

§ 18. Unknown or concealed obstructions.

A tug engaged to tow a schooner from one anchorage in New York harbor to another is not responsible for the safe transportation of the schooner over sunken rocks, provided she exercise ordinary care and skill in directing the movements of the two vessels.—Whitehead v. The Tempest, Case No. 17,563a.

A tug using ordinary care is not liable for damages to the tow in striking a sunken rock, caused by the sudden and unexplained sheering of the tow.—The Stranger, Case No. 13,525.

A tug is not liable for a tow sunk when in ordinary and proper channel, by striking a single rock on the bottom, whose presence was not known to mariners and could not have been known by exercise of care.—The America, Case No. 282; The Angelina Corning, Id. 384.

Liability for injury to schooner by striking on rocks in attempt of tug to wind her by means of an eddy and the current.—The Adelia, Case No. 79.

The running of the tow on a sunken pier known to the master of the tug held conclusive evidence of negligence, in the absence of proof of vis major.—The Deer, Case No. 3,737.

It is culpable negligence for a tug in her home port to leave her tow beside a dock where, upon the ebbing of the tide, the latter will be in danger from a sunken obstruction.—Jennings v. Muller, Case No. 7,282.

§ 19. Collision.

The question of the tug's liability where the tow is injured by being brought into collision with another vessel is to be determined by the same rules applicable to ordinary cases of collision.—Nelson v. The Goliah, Case No. 10,106.

Tug held liable for injury to tow in collision when rounding a high dock which shut off view of approaching vessels.—The C. Y. Davenport, Case No. 3,527.

The tug will be held solely liable for a collision between boats in her tow, caused by the grounding of one on attempting to pass a raft moving in the same direction in a narrow channel.—The David Morris, Case No. 3,596.

Where a vessel to be towed is known to the tug to be a bad steerer, the tug will be liable for injuries to other vessels in the tow caused thereby.—Orhanovich v. The America, Case No. 10,568.

A steamboat endeavoring to round the Battery in New York harbor with a large tow, against a strong tide, being apparently without sufficient power, held liable for loss of tow by collision with a vessel at anchor.—Langley v. The Syracuse, Case No. 8,068.

A tug which gives a different signal from that intended, resulting in a collision, is liable therefor to her tow.—The Volunteer, Case No. 16,990.

Tug held not liable for collision of tow with dock.—McFadden v. The Illinois, Case No. 8,784.

A tug descending a river about a mile wide, with tows astern on long lines, held in fault for damage to one of them by collision with an anchored vessel, for not passing to leeward, where lay three-fourths of the navigable water.—The Lyon, Case No. 8,645.

§ 20. Contributory negligence or fault of tow—Duties and liabilities of tow in general.

Vessel in tow must keep in proper trim to follow tug, and steer accordingly.—The Allegiance, Case No. 207; The Sea Breeze, Id. 12,572a; The Brothers, Id. 1,969.

The vessel towed is bound to prevent a collision if she can, or to make the damages as light as possible.—The Morton, Case No. 9,864.

Where the master of a boat, left by her tug to wait the tug's return to complete the towing contract, at a place from which she is obliged to move for other vessels, moves her to an unsafe place, the tug is not liable for resulting injuries. —The P. C. Schultz, Case No. 10,865.

Where the tug acts pursuant to the direction of the owners of the tow and a pilot employed by them, it is not liable for resulting damages.—Goodwin v. The C. Durant, Case No. 5,552.

When tug not liable to vessel in stern tier of tow, injured when leaving dock at night.—Abbey v. The Robert L. Stevens, Case No. 8.

The refusal of the master of the tow to go on board after she had broken adrift, to aid in her rescue, will prevent a recovery for her loss, if it contributed thereto, unless such refusal was based upon a well-grounded fear of endangering his life.—Hope v. Eastern Transp. Line, Case No 6,680.

§ 21. —— Unseaworthiness or unfitness of tow.

Towboat held not liable for sinking of canal boat in tier of boats towed astern, where she was old and weak, and no notice of danger was given the towboat.—The Oswego, Case No. 10,610.

A canal boat in a tow on the Hudson river, being unseaworthy, began to leak, and was cast off from the steamboat, but failed to reach a dock, and sunk. Held, that the steamboat was liable for half the loss caused by the failure to reach the dock.—The J. L. Hasbrouck, Cases Nos. 7,324, 7,325, 7,326.

Tug held not liable by loss of tow in severe storm, sunk by water getting into her hold through an insufficiently secured forecastle hatch.—Schurtz v. The New York, Case No. 12,492.

Tug held not liable for loss of canal boat by striking pier, where it did not have strength enough to bear ordinary contacts and blows.—The General Geo. G. Meade, Case No. 5,312.

Where the tow undertakes to furnish the line, and the tug objects to its insufficiency, it is not liable for the consequences of its breaking. —Moore v. The C. P. Morey, Case No. 9,756.

The tug will not be held liable, as between the tug and the tow, for the condition and strength of a hawser furnished by the tow, where it is not shown that it was parted by the negligence of the tug.—The Echo, Case No. 4,263.

The failure of canal boats towed through Long Island Sound to have anchors ready for use, where the tug takes shelter in the lea of an island on a storm arising, and to use the same on notice from the master of the tug, where the latter's anchor breaks in the increasing sea, and the boats are cut adrift, will cast upon the tow the burden of the loss.—The Thomas Kiley, Case No. 13,925.

A tug which, in towing a ship, negligently brings her against a wharf, is liable in damages, although the ship was rotten and unseaworthy, unless her condition was the sole cause of the injury.—The Workman, Case No. 18,045.

A tug which negligently places a tow in danger cannot set up in defense to a suit for the loss, mistake, or want of skill of the tow's crew in an emergency, or the absence of extraordinary ground tackle.—The Merrimac, Case No. 9,478.

§ 22. —— Failure to obey orders of tug.
The master of a vessel towed on a line astern is bound to obey all proper orders of the master of the tug, and the latter is not liable for damages caused by refusal or negligence in such particular.—Dutton v. The Express, Case No. 4,209.

Tug held relieved from responsibility where master of injured tow refused to be towed to a place of safety, and tow sank.—The General Geo. G. Meade, Case No. 5,312.

A general direction that the tow brace off from the dock will not excuse the tug when the latter was ignorant of the specific danger to which the tow was exposed.—Jennings v. Muller, Case No. 7,282.

§ 23. Duties of tug after disaster.
The tug must be extremely diligent to render assistance to tow in distress.—Abbey v. The Robert L. Stevens, Case No. 8.

Tug held negligent in casting off tow at destination without inquiring as to the condition of one of the boats, with which she had come in violent contact during the day.—Gilooley v. Pennsylvania R. Co., Case No. 5,448a.

The tug is not bound to lay by a tow aground where it would endanger her own safety.—The Mosher, Case No. 9,874.

Where the tow is sunk in a collision without any fault on the part of the tug, the latter's obligation is at an end, and she is under no obligation to mark the wreck by a light or otherwise, so as to prevent injury to other vessels thereby.—The Swan, Case No. 13,667.

§ 24. Limiting liability of tug.
A steam tug cannot limit its responsibility by a notice, given at the time of commencing the voyage, that it must be at the risk of the tow. —Vanderslice v. The Superior, Case No. 16,843.

The tug must use reasonable carefulness and ordinary skill, and cannot bargain to be exempted from all the risks of the service.—Ulrich v. The Sunbeam, Case No. 14,329.

Whether a contract stipulating for the exemption of the tug from proper and reasonable care and skill in navigation would be lawful, quære.—The Princeton, Case No. 11,434.

A contract for towage at the risk of the tow does not exempt the tug from liability for damages caused to the tow by the negligence of the tug.—The Syracuse, Case No. 13,717; Deems v. Albany & Canal Line, Id. 3,736; Langley v. The Syracuse, Id. 8,068; Williams v. The Vim, Id. 17,744a.

Under a contract to tow "at the risk of the master and owners" of the tow, a tug is responsible only for the exercise of ordinary skill and diligence in her navigation. — The Princeton, Case No. 11,434.

Under such contract the tug is not liable for a loss resulting from mere error of judgment, in the absence of gross negligence or willful misconduct.—The Princeton, Case No. 11,434.

Tow cannot recover for injury from ice where tug gave due notice of danger and refused to take any responsibility.—The Alfred and Edwin, Case No. 190.

Where the agent of the owner of a barge informs the master of a tug that the master of the barge has no authority to take the risk of being towed through dangerous ice, the tug will be liable for a loss caused thereby.—The James A. Wright, Cases Nos. 7,190, 7,191.

The tug must exercise reasonable diligence and ordinary skill; and where the tow takes the chances of entering, in a storm, a harbor with a shifting channel, the tug is not liable, in the absence of negligence, where the tow grounds on a new shoal.—The Mosher, Case No. 9,874.

§ 25. Actions for damages — Nature and form of remedy.
An action to recover damages arising out of the negligent performance of a towing contract rests in contract, and not in tort.—Goodwin v. The C. Durant, Case No. 5,552.

§ 26. —— Stale claims.
A delay of three years to enforce a claim against a tug for negligent towing, where the ownership of the tow had changed, held to render the claim stale.—The Jessie Russell, Case No. 7,298.

§ 27. —— Parties.
Owner of barge lost by negligence of tug may sue such tug therefor, though the barge was turned over to defendant tug by another tug, with which the contract for towage was made.—The Clematis, Case No. 2,875.

The liability of a tug guilty of negligence is not diminished by the fact that another vessel, not joined in the action, was equally in fault. —The C. Y. Davenport, Case No. 3,527.

§ 28. —— Evidence.
Burden is on libelant to prove negligent performance of contract.—The Adelia, Case No. 79; Dunn v. The Young America, Id. 4,178; Nelson v. The Goliah, Id. 10,106.

A tug is liable for the loss of a tow in a sudden squall where she does not complete the contract of towage at one trip, unless she shows that between the time when the tow was left at an intermediate place and when she was taken up again there was no time when the towage contract could have been safely performed.—The W. E. Cheney, Case No. 17,344.

Where cargo is shipped by a barge, and lost by contact with ice while the barge is being towed by a tug, the owner of the cargo must show negligence on the part of the tug to recover against it for a loss.—The W. E. Gladwish, Case No. 17,355.

Burden is on tug which abandons tow in storm to show sufficient excuse therefor.—The Clematis, Case No. 2,876.

The burden is on the tug to show that the object under water, which the tow struck, was one the presence of which the tug was not bound to have known.—The George Farrell, Case No. 5,332.

The tug is prima facie at fault in a case of damages resulting from the slipping of the tow line.—The Sweepstakes, Case No. 13,687.

The admission of the owner of a tug that he was liable for the loss of a tow, coupled with payment of damages to the owner, is sufficient to sustain a decree against him in favor of the owner of the cargo.—The U. S. Grant, Case No. 16,804.

§ 29. —— Damages.
The value of the vessel at the time and place of loss, in the local currency or its equivalent, will be allowed.—Cramer v. Allen, Case No. 3,346.

The uncertainty as to the degree of fault and its consequences, where both vessels are chargeable, brings the case within the reason of the rule of apportionment.—Cramer v. Allen, Case No. 3,346.

The damages will be divided where a tow on the Niagara river was separated from the tug, through negligent navigation of the tug, and drifted over the falls, because it had no anchor on board.—Cramer v. Allen, Case No. 3,346.

Item of cost of raising cargo of sunken tow will be stricken from a decree against the tug where libelant is shown to have been released from claim of the cargo owner.—The Francis King, Case No. 5,043.

IV. LOSS OF OR INJURY TO TUG.

§ 30. Duty and liability of tow.
Where a steamer stranded in a river employs a less powerful one to assist in getting her off, and directs the maneuver, it is her duty to see that there are no obstacles or dangers in the place where the latter is to work; and she is liable for the sinking of the latter in the maneuver.—The Virginia, Case No. 16,957.

TOWNS.

§ 1, Officers. § 2, Contracts in general. § 3, Bonds—Issue and validity. § 4, —— Coupons. § 5, —— Actions on bonds. § 6, Actions.

See, also, "Counties"; "Municipal Corporations."
Liabilities for injuries from defective highways, see "Highways," §§ 4, 5.
Reservation of town sites, see "Public Lands," § 24.

In Illinois, town officers continue to be such until their successors are qualified, and resignation does not relieve them from duty and liability.—United States v. Badger, Case No. 14,493.

§ 2. Contracts in general.
A contract entered into by a town is not destroyed and annulled by its subsequent obliteration by legislative act.—Beckwith v. Racine, Case No. 1,213.

§ 3. Bonds—Issue and validity.
Act Mo. March 23, 1868, authorizing townships to subscribe to the capital stock of a railroad company when two-thirds of the persons voting upon the question vote in favor thereof, held valid.—Pepper v. Saline County, Case No. 10,972.

A subscription, made by a township in aid of a railway under a statute which has been declared unconstitutional because it required only two-thirds of the voters voting (Act Mo. May 23, 1868), while the constitution required two-thirds of all the voters in the township, is void, although the officers certify that two-thirds of all the voters voted for it.—Kirkbride v. Lafayette County, Case No. 7,840.

It is no defense to railroad aid bonds that after the meeting at which the donation was authorized, but before its formal acceptance by the company, the action of the first meeting was rescinded by the town.—Portsmouth Sav. Bank v. Yellow Head, Case No. 11,296.

The assent by majority taxpayers to the issuing of railway aid bonds, once duly made under Laws Vt. 1867, No. 1, cannot be withdrawn, though attempted to be made before the assent has been certified.—First Nat. Bank v. Dorset, Case No. 4,808.

Sufficiency of affidavit of assessors under Laws N. Y. 1869, c. 241, § 2, as to the facts authorizing the issue of town bonds.—Smith v. Ontario, Case No. 13,085.

The affidavit of the assessor as to the consent of taxpayers, when attached to and filed with such consent, held sufficient, although it did not state on its face what the consent was to, or for, or about.—Phelps v. Lewiston, Case No. 11,076.

A provision in a statute under which railroad aid bonds were issued, that they should be registered in the office of the county clerk, held directory merely.—First Nat. Bank v. Arlington, Case No. 4,806.

Proper proceedings for the issue of railroad aid bonds, where proceedings were commenced under an old act (Laws N. Y. 1869, c. 907), and continued under a new one (Id. 1871, c. 925), passed during their pendency.—Munson v. Lyons, Case No. 9,935.

Town bonds issued after, but authorized by vote before, the adoption of a new constitution, are not affected by it.—Balcheller v. Mascoutah, Case No. 792.

Validity of bonds issued by the town of Lewiston, N. Y., under Acts N. Y. May 11, 1868, and April 19, 1869.—Phelps v. Lewiston, Case No. 11,076.

§ 4. —— Coupons.
A statement in bonds that the commissioners have caused one of their number to sign the coupons is equivalent to a signing of the coupons by all of them.—Phelps v. Lewiston, Case No. 11,076.

Interest is recoverable on coupons from the time of the demand.—Phelps v. Lewiston, Case No. 11,076.

§ 5. —— Actions on bonds.
In a suit on railway aid bonds, evidence of declarations made to taxpayers before they assented to the issuing of the bonds inducing such assent, held inadmissible.—First Nat. Bank v. Arlington, Case No. 4,806.

§ 6. Actions.
No action at law can be maintained against a town which has been obliterated by legislative act.—Beckwith v. Racine, Case No. 1,213.

A detective employed by a town to ascertain what individuals composed a mob that destroyed property for which the town was liable may recover compensation, with interest from the time of his demand.—Sargent v. Inhabitants of Bristol, Case No. 12,363.

TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES.

I. MARKS AND NAMES SUBJECTS OF OWNERSHIP.

§ 1, Nature of trade-marks. § 2, Devices or symbols. § 3, Numerals. § 4, Fictitious or fanciful names. § 5, Geographical names. § 6, Names of manufacturers. § 7, Names of patented articles. § 8, Form of articles or packages.

II. TITLE, CONVEYANCES, AND CONTRACTS.

§ 9, Nature of property. § 10, Who may acquire trade-mark. § 11, Extent of rights acquired. § 12, Abandonment and forfeiture. § 13, Construction and operation of assignments. § 14, Change in or dissolution of partnership.

III. REGISTRATION, REGULATION, AND OFFENSES.

§ 15, Power to regulate trade-marks. § 16, Registration. § 17, Criminal prosecutions—Searches.

IV. INFRINGEMENT.

(A) What Constitutes Infringement.

§ 18, Nature of injury. § 19, Imitation—In general. § 20, —— Marks, devices, or symbols. § 21, —— Names. § 22, —— Packages. § 23, Use of trade-mark for different goods. § 24, Use of goods for different purposes. § 25, Deception of public.

(B) Actions.

§ 26, Grounds of action and defenses. § 27, Persons entitled to sue. § 28, Persons liable. § 29, Pleading. § 30, Evidence. § 31, Reference. § 32, Temporary injunction. § 33, Permanent injunction. § 34, Damages and profits.

I. MARKS AND NAMES SUBJECTS OF OWNERSHIP.

§ 1. Nature of trade-marks.
A trade-mark signifies anything that has become in time adopted as the prima facie means of detecting the goods, wares, or properties of certain proprietors.—Washington Medalion Pen Co. v. Esterbrook, Case No. 17,246a.

Words, to be upheld as a trade-mark, must either be merely arbitrary or indicate origin or ownership.—Blackwell v. Dibrell, Case No. 1,-475.

§ 2. Devices or symbols.
The fact that the eagle is the national emblem of the United States does not prevent its appropriation by private parties for use as a trademark, especially when there is but slight resemblance in the figure of the eagle so used to that of the national emblem.—United States v. Steffens, Case No. 16,384.

An illustration of a crown used by brand, stencil plate, etc., upon vessels and labels for paints, may be a lawful trade-mark.—Smith v. Reynolds, Case No. 13,098.

§ 3. Numerals.
A trade-mark in the symbol "½," as ordinarily printed, cannot be acquired for cigarettes made of two kinds of tobacco, half and half; but held, that plaintiff had acquired a right to it in a particular form, size, color, and style, under which it was registered.—Kinney v. Allen, Case No. 7,826.

§ 4. Fictitious or fanciful names.
The words "Stoga Kip," as applied to boots, indicate neither ownership nor origin, but merely designate quality, and are not the subject of valid trade-mark.—Walker v. Reid, Case No. 17,084.

The words "The Star Shirt," and such words used with a star, and the device "The * Shirt," are a lawful trade-mark.—Morrison v. Case, Case No. 9,845.

There can be no trade-mark in the name "Singer Sewing Machine."—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Larsen, Case No. 12,902.

The term "Yankee" applied as the name or label upon soap held to be a valid trade-mark.—Williams v. Adams, Case No. 17,711.

The word "Parabola," used as the name of needles, not being descriptive of any particular quality, held a valid trade-mark.—Roberts v. Sheldon, Case No. 11,916.

The word "Centennial" is general property, and cannot be used for a trade-mark.—Hartell v. Viney, Case No. 6,158.

The word "Eureka," first used in a compounded fertilizer, will be protected.—Alleghany Fertilizer Co. v. Woodside, Case No. 206.

§ 5. Geographical names.
The term "Worcestershire Sauce" is generically applied to a certain kind of table sauce, and cannot be exclusively appropriated by persons residing in Worcestershire, England.—Lea v. Deakin, Case No. 8,154.

The right of exclusively using the word "Durham" in labels on smoking tobacco belongs to manufacturers in the town of Durham, N. C.—Blackwell v. Dibrell, Case No. 1,475.

§ 6. Names of manufacturers.
The words "J. C. Frese & Co., Hopfensack, 6, Hamburg," in an oval, held a valid trade-mark for a medical preparation known as "Hamburg Tea."—Frese v. Bachof, Case No. 5,109.

The name "Dr. J. Blackman's Genuine Healing Balsam," given to a medicine by its inventor, held a valid trade-mark, the exclusive right to use which would pass on an assignment of the exclusive right to make and sell it.—Filkins v. Blackman, Case No. 4,786.

§ 7. Names of patented articles.
A person has no right to mark his goods with any words or terms indicating that they are manufactured under a patent which he does not own and has no right to use, and the courts will restrain him from such action.—Washburn & Moen Mfg. Co. v. Haish, Case No. 17,217.

The names on fruit jars, "Mason's Patent, Nov. 30th, 1858," "Mason's Improved," and "The Mason Jar of 1858," held not entitled to protection because having a tendency to mislead the public, a patent therefor having been adjudged invalid.—Consolidated Fruit-Jar Co. v. Dorflinger, Case No. 3,129.

The designation "The Mason Jar of 1872" held not open to the same objection.—Consolidated Fruit-Jar Co. v. Dorflinger, Case No. 3,-129.

The words "Fairbanks' Patent," used by Fairbanks & Co., held not a trade-mark; and another manufacturer will not be enjoined from using such words on scales made in imitation of Fairbanks' scales after the patents have expired.—Fairbanks v. Jacobus, Case No. 4,608.

§ 8. Form of articles or packages.
An ornamented tin pail, given away on the sale of paper collars contained therein, held not a trade-mark.—Harrington v. Libby, Case No. 6,107.

A barrel of peculiar form, dimensions, and capacity, irrespective of any marks or brands impressed upon or connected with it, cannot become a lawful trade-mark, or a substantive part of a lawful trade-mark.—Moorman v. Hoge, Case No. 9,783.

There may be a valid trade-mark in a stick upon which carpets are rolled, and which presents a peculiar shape and appearance at the ends of the roll.—Lowell Mfg. Co. v. Larned, Case No. 8,570.

II. TITLE, CONVEYANCES, AND CONTRACTS.

§ 9. Nature of property.
The privilege of a party to the exclusive enjoyment of a trade-mark does not rest upon a right of property therein, but on its prior use and application in the manner in which it has been imitated and employed by defendant.—Walton v. Crowley, Case No. 17,133.

The right of the proprietor of a trade-mark to its exclusive use, and to protect and enforce such right by proceedings in chancery, exists by virtue of the common law, and independently of the trade-mark acts.—United States v. Roche, Case No. 16,180.

Trade-marks are an entirety, and are incapable of exclusive use at different places by more than one independent proprietor.—Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, Case No. 9,026.

The interest of a partner in the firm's brand or trade-mark is too intangible, and cannot be reached in equity at the suit of a judgment creditor.—Taylor v. Bemis, Case No. 13,779.

§ 10. Who may acquire trade-mark.
The owner of goods is entitled to the exclusive use of a trade-mark devised and applied by him, although he is not himself the manufacturer, and the name of the manufacturer is used as a part of the trade-mark.—Walton v. Crowley, Case No. 17,133.

§ 11. Extent of rights acquired.
The words imprinted upon a patented article of manufacture are common property from the date of the expiration of the patent.—Tucker Mfg. Co. v. Boyington, Case No. 14,229; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Larsen, Id. 12,902; Filley v. Child, Id. 4,787.

§ 12. Abandonment and forfeiture.
Abandonment of a trade-mark is not made out by showing numerous infringements in which the owners of such trade-mark have not acquiesced.—Williams v. Adams, Case No. 17,-711.

The right to a trade-mark is forfeited by its deceptive use to designate a spurious article.—Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, Case No. 9,-026.

Disregard of territorial limits allotted by license, and misuse of the trade-mark, forfeit the right to the same.—Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, Case No. 9,026.

The right to use a trade-mark held forfeited by nonuser for eight years.—Blackwell v. Dibrell, Case No. 1,475.

Voluntary relinquishment of the original mark for a new device forfeits the right to the old mark.—Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, Case No. 9,026.

§ 13. Construction and operation of assignments.
Under an assignment of the exclusive right to use the name of the inventor in the manufacture and sale of certain medicine for a term of 10 years, with the condition that, on the performance of the covenant for such time, the assignee shall have "all of the rights and privileges" to use the inventor's name, without reward, for 50 years, the assignee acquires, after the 10 years, the same exclusive rights which he had during such years.—Filkins v. Blackman, Case No. 4,786.

A writing extending to the purchasers of a Cincinnati distillery "the use of all my brands formerly used by me in my Cincinnati house," where the seller also had a New York house, held to convey an exclusive right to use the trade-mark.—Johnson v. Schenck, Case No. 7,-412.

§ 14. Change in or dissolution of partnership.
The exclusive right to use the trade-mark of a firm does not pass to a member by implication on a sale of the business to him, but he may use the trade-mark, provided he do so in a manner not to deceive the public.—Young v. Jones, Case No. 18,159. CONTRA, see Blackwell v. Dibrell, Case No. 1,475.

A trade-mark adopted by a partnership may be used by either member after its dissolution, and where one obtains letters of registration in his own name he may be compelled to transfer an equal interest to the other.—Taylor v. Bothin, Case No. 13,780.

The surviving partner held estopped by partnership letters to purchasers of part of its business, showing assent to the use of trade-marks previously conveyed by one partner, to deny his power to convey the same.—Johnson v. Schenck, Case No. 7,412.

III. REGISTRATION, REGULATION, AND OFFENSES.

§ 15. Power to regulate trade-marks.
The legislation by congress upon the subject of trade-marks cannot be sustained under the power to legislate in favor of authors and inventors, nor under the power to regulate commerce, and the act of July 8, 1870, on this subject, is unconstitutional.—Leidersdorf v. Flint, Case No. 8,219.

§ 16. Registration.
The right to a recorded trade-mark is limited to its use in connection with the articles particularly described in the filed statement.—Osgood v. Rockwood, Case No. 10,605.

In the case of a trade-mark owned by a firm, it is not necessary to record the name of each individual partner, and his place of residence, under Act July 8, 1870, § 77.—Smith v. Reynolds, Case No. 13,098.

Where a trade-mark is claimed for paints generally, it is sufficient to specify paints as the class of merchandise, without specifying any description of paints.—Smith v. Reynolds, Case No. 13,098.

The certificate of the registration of a trademark need not include a certified copy of the declaration filed with the trade-mark.—Walker v. Reid, Case No. 17,084.

Sufficiency of evidence of the filing of the declaration under oath as to the right to a trademark, under Act July 8, 1870, § 77.—Smith v. Reynolds, Case No. 13,097.

The commissioner of patents may institute an interference between opposing claimants for registration of the same trade-mark, to determine ownership.—Hanford v. Westcott, Case No. 6,022.

§ 17. Criminal prosecutions—Searches.
Relief by search warrant under Act Aug. 14, 1876, § 7, denied for lack of definiteness in the affidavit and proof of the applicant's right or title.—In re O'Donnell, Case No. 10,434.

IV. INFRINGEMENT.

(A) WHAT CONSTITUTES INFRINGEMENT.

§ 18. Nature of injury.
The essence of the wrong in the infringement of a trade-mark consists in the sale of the goods of one person as those of another.—Osgood v. Allen, Case No. 10,603.

§ 19. Imitation—In general.
A resemblance sufficient only to deceive ordinary purchasers is sufficient to constitute infringement.—Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, Case No. 9,026; Consolidated Fruit-Jar Co. v. Thomas, Id. 3,131.

Infringement may consist in an imitation, though not amounting to forgery, yet so close as to deceive an unwary purchaser.—Blackwell v. Armistead, Case No. 1,474.

§ 20. —— Marks, devices, or symbols.
A person cannot imitate the trade-mark of another by using any of its prominent and distinguishing words, where calculated to deceive the cautious and careful purchaser.—United States v. Roche, Case No. 16,180.

A trade-mark for soap, "Mottled German Soap," with a circle and moon and stars in the middle, held infringed by "S. W. McBride's German Mottled Soap," with a crescent and single star, though "Mottled German Soap" or "Mottled Soap" had been in common use for years.—Proctor v. McBride, Case No. 11,441.

A registered trade-mark for plug tobacco, consisting of longitudinal and transverse lines for dividing the plug, will not prevent the use of Greek crosses and half crosses for the same purpise.—Dausman & Drummond Tobacco Co. v. Ruffner, Case No. 3,585.

The use of a monogram in the same manner and with accessories in imitation of plaintiff's trade-mark held to be an infringement.—Consolidated Fruit-Jar Co. v. Thomas, Case No. 3,131.

A trade-mark consisting of the words "Genuine Durham Smoking Tobacco," with the side figure of a bull as a symbol, is infringed by the use of the words "The Durham Smoking Tobacco," in connection with the head of a bull.—Blackwell v. Armistead, Case No. 1,474.

Use of "Apollinis" with representation of bow and arrow or anchor restrained as infringing trade-mark of "Apollinaris" with representation of anchor.—Apollinaris Brunnen v. Somborn, Case No. 496.

A trade-mark for seamless bags, consisting of the word "Stark" over a simicircular arch with the letter "A" below, is infringed by a like device, except that the word "Star" is substituted for "Stark."—Gardner v. Bailey, Case No. 5,221.

§ 21. —— Names.
"William Clark & Sons' Parabola Needles" is an infringement of "Roberts' Parabola Needles."—Roberts v. Sheldon, Case No. 11,916.

The imitation of a manufacturer's label, where the only change was "Holsteter" and "Holsteter & Smyte," for "Hostetter" and "Hostetter & Smith," held to be illegal.—Hostetter v. Vowinkle, Case No. 6,714.

The owner of the trade-mark "Best Spanish Flavored Durham" cannot enjoin the use of "Genuine Durham Smoking Tobacco" where he used the word "Durham" as a mere unmeaning incident.—Blackwell v. Armistead, Case No. 1,474.

§ 22. —— Packages.
Imitation of package of medicine, as to form, color, and style, enjoined, though defendants substituted their own names in the various places where plaintiffs used theirs.—Frese v. Bachof, Cases Nos. 5,109, 5,110.

§ 23. Use of trade-mark for different goods.
Plaintiff recorded the word "Heliotype" as used in connection with a print made by a patented process called "Heliotype." Held, that its use on a print not made by such process was not an infringement.—Osgood v. Rockwood, Case No. 10,605.

A manufacturer had no right to use the illustration of a crown as a trade-mark for paints generally, where another has previously used it for white lead.—Smith v. Reynolds, Cases Nos. 13,098, 13,099.

§ 24. Use of goods for different purposes.
A trade-mark used only in connection with the dry white oxide of zinc is not infringed by use in connection with paint composed of white oxide of zinc, ground in oil, falsely represented as containing white oxide of zinc made by the owner of the trade-mark.—La Societe Anonyme Des Mines v. Baxter, Case No. 8,099.

§ 25. Deception of public.
Where the representations employed bear such resemblance to plaintiff's trade-mark as to be calculated to mislead the public generally who are the purchasers of the article, and to make it pass with them for the one sold by him, such representations will be enjoined.—Walton v. Crowley, Case No. 17,133.

A person not connected with the Singer Manufacturing Company may make a Singer sewing machine, and sell it by that name, after the patents have expired, but he may not do any act conveying an intimation that such machine was made by that company.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Larsen, Case No. 12,902.

The use of one's label for the purpose of deceiving purchasers will be enjoined.—Coffeen v. Brunton, Case No. 2,946.

(B) ACTIONS.

Jurisdiction, see "Courts," § 34.

§ 26. Grounds of action and defenses.
It is no bar to protection in our courts that a remedy is not reciprocally allowed to aliens in the country to which such owner belongs.—Taylor v. Carpenter, Case No. 13,785.

Equity will not protect by an injunction the trade-marks of owners of quack medicines.—Heath v. Wright, Case No. 6,310; Fowle v. Spear, Id. 4,996.

Equity will not interfere in behalf of the owner of a trade-mark acquired by advertising the subject of it under false representations as to its origin and qualities.—Seabury v. Grosvenor, Case No. 12,576.

A long delay of alien manufacturers to prosecute after knowledge of a fraudulent use of their trade-mark may be competent proof to show their acquiescence in it but is not an absolute bar to recovery unless extending to the period of the statute of limitation.—Taylor v. Carpenter, Case No. 13,785.

Acts of acquiescence in the use of complainant's alleged trade-mark by defendant will estop complainant to claim that the defendant has no right thereto.—Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, Case No. 3,764.

The basis of the action of a court of equity to restrain infringement is fraud on the part of the defendant.—Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, Case No. 3,764.

§ 27. Persons entitled to sue.
An alien manufacturer abroad is entitled to protection in our courts against a fraudulent infringement of his trade-mark in this country.—Taylor v. Carpenter, Cases Nos. 13,784, 13,785.

The assignee of a whole right in a trade-mark, and of the property in the goods to which it is attached, may enjoin its wrongful use by others to the like extent as his assignor.—Walton v. Crowley, Case No. 17,133.

§ 28. Persons liable.
The owner of a trade-mark for goods which he manufactures under a patent is not entitled to enjoin the use thereof by a dealer purchasing his goods from a manufacturer licensed under the patent.—Walker v. Reid, Case No. 17,084.

§ 29. Pleading.
The fraudulent intent, as charged in a bill for infringement of a trade-mark, must be taken as confessed, on demurrer to the bill, and complainant will be entitled to an injunction.—Enoch Morgan's Sons' Co. v. Hunkele, Case No. 4,493.

§ 30. Evidence.
The certificate of the commissioner of patents as to the registration of a trade-mark held admissible in evidence under Rev. St. § 4940, and prima facie evidence of proper registration.—United States v. Steffens, Case No. 16,384.

The certificate of registry issued under Act July 8, 1870, is not conclusive of the claimant's right to appropriate the device.—Moorman v. Hoge, Case No. 9.783.

§ 31. Reference.
Where it did not appear whether the public was actually deceived or in danger of being deceived, the cause was referred to a master to ascertain such fact.—Osgood v. Allen, Case No. 10,603:

§ 32. Temporary injunction.
The decision of the examiner cannot be questioned collaterally, and the successful party is entitled to a provisional injunction against the licensees of the unsuccessful party when no doubt exists as to the infringement.—Hanford v. Westcott, Case No. 6,022.

A preliminary injunction will be granted to restrain the use of a trade-mark where plaintiff has been in exclusive possession of the same for a number of years, and defendant has just commenced to manufacture under such name.—Filkins v. Blackman, Case No. 4,786.

Delay in making the application is no bar to a preliminary injunction. although it may preclude complainant's obtaining past profits.—Consolidated Fruit-Jar Co. v. Thomas, Case No. 3,-131.

On an application for a preliminary injunction to restrain the use of a trade-mark, the court cannot pass upon the merits of the defense.—Blackwell v. Armistead, Case No. 1,474.

§ 33. Permanent injunction.
Injunction against use of a label will not be granted unless complainant's right is clear.—Coffeen v. Brunton, Case No. 2,947.

§ 34. Damages and profits.
Exemplary damages are recoverable for an injury from counterfeiting plaintiff's trade-mark.—Warner v. Roehr, Case No. 17,189a.

Nominal damages only will be given for infringing a label, where no specific injury has been proved.—Coffeen v. Brunton, Case No. 2,-946.

An alien owner is entitled to recover to the extent of his damages in the loss of sales and their profits, though defendant's goods were of inferior quality.—Taylor v. Carpenter, Case No. 13,785.

Equity will protect the owner of a trade-mark by an injunction against an infringer and a decree for damages, which is ordinarily the loss of profits from the infringement.—Hostetter v. Vowinkle, Case No. 6,714.

Where complainants' sales fell off in an amount at least equal to sales made by defendant of the imitated article, damages were awarded to the extent of the profits they would have made on the number sold by the defendant.—Hostetter v. Vowinkle, Case No. 6,714.

An accounting for past profits will not be decreed where there has been laches in bringing suit, and long acquiescence in the adverse use of the mark by others.—Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, Case No. 9,026.

Treasonable conspiracies, see "Conspiracy," § 3.

I. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREFOR.

§ 1. Powers of congress.
Congress has no power to change, in any way, the crime of treason, as defined by Const. art. 3, § 2, and acts of congress cannot be considered as legislative definitions of the crime.—Case of Fries, Case No. 5,126.

Treason is defined by the constitution, and the power of congress over the subject is limited to prescribing the punishment.—United States v. Greathouse, Case No. 15,254.

§ 2. Levying war—In general.
The expression "levying war" in the constitutional definition of "treason" was borrowed from the law of England, and is to be understood in the sense which it bore in England when the constitution was adopted.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,276.

Treason begun against a state may be mixed up or merged in treason against the United States. If the treasonable purpose be to overthrow the government of the state, and forcibly to withdraw it from the Union, and thereby to prevent the exercise of the national sovereignty within the limits of the state, this would be treason against the United States.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,275.

To constitute treason against the United States by levying war, there must be a levying of war against the United States in their sovereign character, and not merely a levying of war exclusively against the sovereignty of a particular state.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,275.

There may be treason against a state by levying war which is aimed altogether against the sovereignty of the state.—Charge to Grand Juty, Treason, Case No. 18,275.

§ 3. —— Intent.
If a man joins and acts with an assembly of people, his intent is always to be considered and adjudged to be the same as theirs; and the law judges of the intent by the fact.—Case of Fries, Case No. 5,127.

Treason in the assembling of bodies of men, armed or arrayed in a warlike manner, is determined by the intent. If the purpose be of a private nature, it is not treason, regardless of the acts actually committed; otherwise, where the intent is to effect some object of general public nature.—Case of Fries, Case No. 5,127.

A conspiracy to resist by force the execution of a law of the United States in particular instances only, for personal or private purposes only, is not treason.—United States v. Hoxie, Case No. 15,407.

Either acts of hostility and resistance to the government, or a hostile intention in the body assembled, are necessary to convert a meeting of men with ordinary appearances into an act of levying war. A treasonable intent on the part of the leader, uncommunicated to the assemblage, is not sufficient.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,694a.

§ 4. —— Overt acts.
Where a body of armed men is mustered in military array for a treasonable purpose, every step which any one of them takes, by marching or otherwise, in part execution of such purpose, is an overt act of treason in levying war.—United States v. Greiner, Case No. 15,262.

Purchase of a vessel, and fitting her up for service with arms and ammunition, and the employment of men to manage it, in pursuance of a design to commit hostilities on the high seas in aid of an existing rebellion against the United States, are overt acts of treason.—United States v. Greathouse, Case No. 15,254.

§ 5. —— Procuring treasonable assemblies.
The engaging or enlisting of men for levying war against the United States, not followed by a future embodying of such men, is not punishable as treason.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692a.

Query, whether a person who advises or procures a treasonable warlike assemblage, and does nothing more, is guilty of treason under the constitution.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,-693.

A person present, directing, aiding, abetting, counseling, or countenancing the violence, or if, though absent at the time of its actual perpetration, he yet directed the act, or devised or knowingly furnished the means for carrying it into effect, and instigated others thereto, he is guilty of treason.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,276.

Act Aug. 6, 1861, making it a high misdemeanor to recruit soldiers or sailors in any state or territory to engage in armed hostility against the United States, or to open a recruiting station for the enlistment of such persons, was intended to reach acts not deemed treasonable under the statute of 1790.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,272.

If a convention, legislature, junto, or other assemblage entertain the purpose of subverting the government, and to that end pass acts, resolves, ordinances, or decrees, even with the view of raising a military force to carry their purpose into effect, this alone does not constitute a levying of war.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,274.

The act of revolutionizing a territory of the United States, though only as a means for an expedition against a foreign power, is treason.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692a.

The fact that treason might incidentally arise in the attempt to embark troops against a foreign nation, with which the United States are at peace, will not affect a previous assemblage of troops, where the treason was neither committed nor intended.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,694a.

§ 6. —— Assembly of troops.
An intention to commit treason against the United States by levying war, not carried out by the actual assembling of troops, is not punishable as treason.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692a.

If a body of men be actually assembled for the purpose of effecting a treasonable purpose by force, that is levying war. But it must be an assemblage in force,—a military assemblage in a condition to make war.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,273; United States v. Greathouse, Id. 15,254; Same v. Burr, Id. 14,-693.

If a body of men be actually assembled in force, in a condition to make war, in order to overturn the government at any one place by force, this is levying war. It is not necessary that the assemblage should be with military arms and array; numbers alone may supply the requisite force.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,274.

If the assembly is arrayed in a military manner, if they are armed and marched in military form, for the express purpose of overawing and intimidating the public, and thus attempt to carry into effect the treasonable design, this will, of itself, amount to a levy of war, although no actual blow be struck, or engagement take place. —Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,275.

§ 7. —— Taking possession of public property.

The combination of a body of men, with the design of seizing, and the actual seizing, of the forts and other public property of the United States, is a levying of war against the United States, and is treason.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Cases Nos. 18,270, 18,274.

§ 8. —— Resisting law.

The words "levying war," as used in the constitutional definition of "treason," include not only the act of making war for the purpose of entirely overturning the government, but also any combination forcibly to oppose the execution of any public law of the United States, with intent to prevent its enforcement in all cases, if accompanied or followed by an act of forcible opposition to such law in pursuance of such combination.—Charge to Grand Jury, Neutrality Laws and Treason, Case No. 18,269; Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Id. 18,276.

A combination to suppress the excise officers, and prevent the execution of an act of congress, accompanied by a display of force arrayed in a military manner, with arms, and by acts of violence to compel them to resign their offices, is a levying of war.—United States v. Mitchell, Case No. 15,788.

And there must be some overt act done, or some attempt made by them, with force, to execute, or towards executing, that purpose. The assembly must be in a condition to use force, and must intend to use it, if necessary, to further, aid, or accomplish the treasonable design. —Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,275.

An insurrection to resist by force the execution of a federal tax law, or the militia called out to enforce it, on any ground whatever, is a levying of war against the United States.—Case of Fries, Case No. 5,127.

Opposing, by force of arms, an act of congress, with a view to defeating its efficacy, and thus defying the authority of the government, is levying war against the United States, and constitutes treason.—Case of Fries, Case No. 5,126.

A conspiracy to raise an insurrection to resist the execution of a federal statute by force is only a misdemeanor. Treason is not committed until the persons proceed to carry the intention into execution by force.—Case of Fries, Case No. 5,127.

To go with a large party in arms, marshaled and arrayed, to houses of officers of excise, and there commit acts of violence and devastation, with the avowed object of suppressing such offices, and compelling the resignation of the officers, for the purpose of nullifying an act of congress, is treason.—United States v. Vigol, Case No. 16,621.

Direct proof of the purpose, however, is not legally necessary. The concert of purpose may be deduced from the concerted action itself, or it may be inferred from facts occurring at the time, or before or afterwards.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,276.

If there be an assembly of persons, with force, with an intent to prevent the collection of lawful taxes or duties levied by the government, or to destroy all customhouses, or to resist the administration of justice in the courts of the United States, and the assemblage proceed to execute this purpose by force, this is treason against the United States.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,275.

Direct proof of the combining to prevent the enforcement of a law may be found in declared purposes of the individual party before the actual outbreak, or it may be derived from proceedings of meetings in which he took part openly, or which he either prompted or made effective by his countenance or sanction, commending, counseling, or instigating forcible resistance to the law.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,276.

The sudden outbreak of a mob, or the assembling of men, in order, by force, to prevent the execution of a law in a particular instance, and then to disperse, without any intention of continuing together or reassembling for defeating the law generally and in all cases, is not a levying of war such as constitutes treason.—Charge to Grand Jury, Fugitive Slave Law, Case No. 18,262; Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Id. 18,274.

§ 9. —— Resisting government military force.

If the troops of the United States should be called out by the president, upon the application of a state legislature or executive, to protect the state against domestic violence, and there should be an assembly of persons with force to resist and oppose the United States troops, this would be treason against the United States, although the primary intention of the insurgents may have been only to overthrow the state government or the state laws.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,272.

To be employed in actual service in an army raised to oppose the government in its action, or directly or indirectly to aid or assist in the levying or embodying of a military force for the subversion of the government, are plainly acts of "levying war," and involve the commission of the crime of treason. The constitutional definition of treason, however, is of broader signification, and includes all those who join a hostile army after war is begun.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,272.

§ 10. —— Levying war by persons confederated to form new government.

Levying war against the United States by persons however combined and confederated, even though successful in establishing their actual authority in several states, is treason.—Keppel v. Petersburg R. Co., Case No. 7,722.

Levying war against the United States by citizens of the republic, under the pretended authority of the new state government of North Carolina, or of the so-called "Confederate Government," is treason against the United States. —Shortridge v. Macon, Case No. 12,812.

Until belligerent rights are accorded by the political department of the government to the state or people in rebellion, the judiciary must regard them as rebels and lawless aggressors, and apply to them the penal law.—Charge to Grand Jury, Case No. 18,256.

§ 11. Adhering to enemies and giving them aid and comfort.

The expression, "adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort," in the constitutional definition of "treason," was borrowed from the ancient law of England, and is to be understood in the sense which it bore in England when the constitution was adopted.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,276.

The term "enemies" (Const. art. 3, § 3) applies only to subjects of a foreign power in a state of open hostility with us. It does not embrace rebels in insurrection against their own government.—United States v. Greathouse, Case No. 15,254.

All persons engaged therein are by the law regarded as levying war against the United States; and all who adhere to them are to be regarded as enemies; and all who give them, in any part of the United States, aid and comfort, come within the provisions of the act of April 30, 1790, and are guilty of treason.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,270.

In a civil war, persons who adhere to their allegiance are not, although they reside in an insurrectionary district, regarded as enemies; and trade with such persons, in good faith and without collusion with the enemy, is lawful, unless interdicted by the government.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,271.

The words, "adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort," include, in general, any act committed after war actually exists which indicates a want of loyalty to the government and sympathy with its enemies, and which, by fair construction, is directly in furtherance of their hostile designs.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,272.

Overt acts which, if successful, would advance the interests of the rebellion, amount to aid and comfort, though they failed.—United States v. Greathouse, Case No. 15,254.

After war actually exists, it is treasonable to sell to, or provide arms or munitions of war, or military stores and supplies, including food, clothing, etc., for the use of, the enemy; to hire, sell, or furnish boats, railroad cars, or other means of transportation, or to advance money or obtain credits for the use and support of the hostile army; and to communicate intelligence to the enemy by letter, telegraph, or otherwise, relating to the strength, movements, or position of the army.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,272.

And it makes no difference how distant he may be from the place of the assemblage of the enemy.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,274.

The going from the enemy's squadron to the shore for the purpose of peaceably procuring provisions for the enemy is not an act of treason; otherwise where provisions are carried towards the enemy with intent to supply them, though such intention is defeated.—United States v. Pryor, Case No. 16,096.

Delivering up prisoners and deserters to an enemy is treason, and nothing but a well-grounded fear of life will excuse the act.—United States v. Hodges, Case No. 15,374.

§ 12. Writing or speaking treasonable words.

Words, oral, written, or printed, however treasonable, seditious, or criminal of themselves, do not constitute an overt act of treason.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,271.

Mere expressions of opinion indicative of sympathy with the public enemy are not sufficient, under the constitution and laws, to warrant a conviction of treason.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,272.

It is an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment, under the act of 1799 (1 Stat. 618, c. 1), for a citizen of the United States, at a time when a part of the inhabitants of the United States are in rebellion against the government, to write letters to a member of the British parliament, urging that body to acknowledge the independence of the insurgents.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason and Piracy, Case No. 18,277.

§ 13. Misprision of treason.

Persons who have any knowledge of acts of treason, and do not as soon as possible make it known in the manner prescribed by Act April 30, 1790, § 2, are guilty of misprision of treason.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No. 18,270.

§ 14. Defenses.

Quaere, whether the constitutional disqualifications from holding office by having engaged in Rebellion (Amend. 14) operates to exempt from prosecution for treason.—Case of Davis, Case No. 3,621a.

The ordinances of secession of the states in rebellion do not furnish any defense to their citizens for treasonable acts against the United States government.—United States v. Cathcart, Case No. 14,756.

The whole existence of the Confederate government was a continued rebellion against the lawful government of the United States; and no one can be protected by the sanction of its authority save in acts of war.—United States v. Morrison, Case No. 15,817.

The national government conceded belligerent rights to the armies of the Confederate States; and acts of a strictly military character, performed under military authority, may be protected by reason thereof.—United States v. Morrison, Case No. 15,817.

Belligerent rights conceded to the Confederate States cannot be invoked for the protection of persons entering within the limits of a loyal state, and secretly getting up hostile expeditions against the government.—United States v. Greathouse, Case No. 15,254.

A letter of marque issued by an insurrectionary government, which has not been recognized by the legislative and executive departments of the existing government, is no defense to treason in levying war under such letter.—United States v. Greathouse, Case No. 15,254.

Except in the case of force under a personal fear of death, a private soldier or subordinate officer cannot excuse a treasonable act on the ground of compulsion.—United States v. Greiner, Case No. 15,262.

A person who advised or procured a warlike assemblage, charged as the overt act of treason, cannot be convicted of treason until after the conviction of one of those charged with the overt act.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,693.

The agreement of capitulation between Generals Sherman and Johnston was a mere military parol, terminating with the war, and the persons included were liable to arrest for treason after the war.—United States v. Rucker, Case No. 16,203.

Instructions of the secretary of war held acts of the president, within Act March 3, 1863, relieving persons from acts done during the Rebellion under the order of the president.—Crosby v. Cadwalader, Case No. 3,419.

§ 14a. Persons liable.

An alien resident may be guilty of treason by co-operating either with rebels or foreign enemies.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Cases Nos. 18,274, 18,276.

If a body of men be actually assembled to effect by force a treasonable purpose, all those who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are actually leagued in the general conspiracy, are to be considered guilty of treason.—Charge to Grand Jury, Neutrality Laws and Treason, Case No. 18,269; Charge to Grand Jury, Treason and Piracy, Id. 18,277.

All who aid in the prosecution of war levied against the United States, whether by open hostilities in the field, or by performing any part in the furtherance of the common object, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, are guilty of treason.—United States v. Greathouse, Case No. 15,254.

The fact of levying war may consist of a multiplicity of acts performed in different places by different persons, and any one of such persons, when leagued in the general conspiracy, is liable as a principal traitor.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,693.

In treason there are no accessaries. All who engage in rebellion, or who designedly give to it any species of aid and comfort, in whatever part of the country they may be, are principals. —United States v. Greathouse, Case No. 15,254; Case of Fries, Id. 5,127.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

§ 15. Preliminary proceedings.
A person will not be held to trial for treason in levying war against the United States on an affidavit that he is enlisting men for such purpose, without proof of the actual embodying of men, where ample time is given to get such proof.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,-692a.

The provision of the constitution that no person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court, is inapplicable to preliminary hearings and commitments. —United States v. Greiner, Case No. 15,262; Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Id. 18,276.

The question raised by a defense made in the nature of a plea autrefois acquit will not be determined on a preliminary examination to commit a person for high treason.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,694a.

§ 16. Indictment.
An indictment under Act July 17, 1862, § 2, need not use the phrase "levying war" specifically; it is sufficient to follow the language of the act.—United States v. Greathouse, Case No. 15,254.

An indictment for levying war against the United States must specify an overt act, and the charge must be proved as laid.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,693.

§ 17. Evidence—Admissibility.
The declaration of the prisoner accompanying the overt act charged may be proved to show his intention in doing it; but his confession of committing such act is not admissible.—United States v. Lee, Case No. 15,584.

Query, whether, after proving a connection for some general object between persons accused of treason in levying war, the conversations of one with third persons may be given in evidence against the other to prove what that object was. —United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,694a.

Proof of remote intentions may be relevant by proof of the continuance of the intention, and consequently is admissible.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,693.

Facts occurring and rumors prevalent in the neighborhood which would explain certain particulars relied upon to show treasonable intent, and make them show a different intent, though a long time in advance of the alleged treasonable occurrence, are admissible.—United States v. Hanway, Case No. 15,299.

Facts out of the district may be proved after the overt act as corroborative evidence of the intention.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,-693.

It is not competent, on a trial for treason, to prove that the accused, in the course of the insurrection, joined with others in robbing the mails, when a separate indictment for that offense is already pending against him.—United States v. Mitchell, Case No. 15,789.

Where it was claimed that a circular letter had been written by leaders of an insurrection calling citizens to assemble with arms, etc., held, that a copy thereof was not admissible, unless it was proved to be one of the copies actually circulated.—United States v. Mitchell, Case No. 15,789.

§ 18. —— Weight and sufficiency.
Where it is charged that a war was levied without striking the blow, the intention to strike must be plainly proved.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,694a.

Where defendant is charged with being present at the place of the treasonable assemblage, charged as the overt act, the proof must show defendant's presence with such assemblage, or his intention to join it at such place.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,693.

The meaning of the words "overt act," as used in the constitutional definition of treason and in the statute, is an act of a character susceptible of clear proof, and not resting in mere inference or conjecture.—Charge to Grand Jury, Treason, Case No, 18,272.

Where it is shown by several witnesses that accused took part in a treasonable conspiracy, it seems that it is sufficient to prove by two witnesses that he marched, as a volunteer, with arms, in military array, with a party which used force to prevent the execution of an act of congress.—United States v. Mitchell, Case No. 15,788.

Where the overt act has been proved by two witnesses, evidence is admissible to show the course of the prisoner's conduct at other places, and the purpose with which he went to the place where the treason is laid; and, if he went with a treasonable design, then the proof of treason is complete.—Case of Fries, Case No. 5,126.

Proof of procurement of a warlike assemblage, if admissible to establish a charge of actual presence, must be made in the same manner, and by the same kind of testimony, which would be required to prove actual presence.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,693.

§ 19. Trial—Reception of evidence.
On the trial of a person indicted for treason in levying war against the United States, the court cannot control the order of proof to the extent of requiring the prosecution to prove the overt act charged, before proving the intention with which such act was committed.—United States v. Burr. Cases Nos. 14,692h, 14,693; Same v. Lee, Id. 15,584.

The overt act of levying war must be proved by two witnesses before testimony is admissible relative to the conduct or declarations of the prisoner elsewhere, and subsequent to the overt act charged.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,693.

Everything tending to show that there was an intention to make public resistance to a law of the United States is entirely evidence in chief, and cannot be received in rebuttal.—United States v. Hanway, Case No. 15,299.

§ 20. Punishment and forfeiture.
Where the treason consists in engaging in or assisting a rebellion or insurrection, the death penalty cannot be inflicted, under Act July 17, 1862.—United States v. Greathouse, Case No. 15,254.

Under Act N. Y. 1778, estates forfeited for treason are not sold free from incumbrances. But otherwise as to Act N. Y. 1783.—Beach v. Woodhull, Case No. 1,154.

Construction of Act N. J. Dec. 11, 1778, relating to forfeited estates, and of inquisition proceedings thereunder.—Kemp v. Kennedy, Case No. 7,686.

The owners of estates wrongfully forfeited under Act N. J. Dec. 11, 1778, have no remedy by ejectment to recover the property forfeited, but can only proceed by writ of error according to the statute.—Kemp v. Kennedy, Case No. 7,686.

TREATIES.

§ 1, Nature. § 2, Construction, operation, and effect. § 3, Repeal of treaty.

See, also, "Extradition," §§ 1–15.
Effect of treaties on rights of aliens, see "Aliens," § 2.
In relation to duties, see "Customs Duties," § 6.
Lands acquired by, see "Public Lands," § 2.
With Indians, see "Indians," § 4.

§ 1. Nature.

Treaties with foreign nations comprise a portion of the public and supreme law of the land, and a violation by a citizen of the United States may be punished in the federal courts by indictment.—Henfield's Case, Case No. 6,360.

A treaty which stipulates for the payment of money is not the supreme law of the land, for such stipulation is not within the treaty-making power.—Turner v. American Baptist Missionary Union, Case No. 14,251.

The stipulations in a treaty between the United States and a foreign nation are paramount to the provisions of the constitution of a particular state.—Gordon v. Kerr, Case No. 5,611.

§ 2. Construction, operation, and effect.

The operation of a treaty before ratification by the governing powers of the state by whose agents it has been signed.—Hylton v. Brown, Case No. 6,982.

A treaty takes effect from its date when ratified, unless a different period is fixed, or must be adopted to fulfill the manifest intent.—In re Metzger, Case No. 9,511.

The effect of a treaty of peace and acts of congress on the attainder laws.—Gordon v. Kerr, Case No. 5,611; Hylton v. Brown, Id. 6,981, 6,982.

Construction of treaties of 1762–83, between Spain and England, as to right to cut mahogany in Honduras.—Graham v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co., Case No. 5,674.

A debt due to a British subject may be recovered, under the treaty of peace of 1783, though paid to a state under its confiscation act.—Hamilton v. Eaton, Case No. 5,980.

Under the treaty with Great Britain of 1794, the precincts and jurisdictions of army posts are not to be considered as extending three miles in every direction by analogy to the jurisdiction at sea from the coast line.—Jackson v. Porter, Case No. 7,143.

The award under the French convention of 1831 was properly made to the legal and ostensible owner of the property at the time of seizure.—Dutilh v. Coursault, Case No. 4,206.

The judgment of the commissioners did not deprive a person of the right to resort to the ordinary tribunals of the country to establish his claim to participate in the sum awarded.—Dutilh v. Coursault, Case No. 4,206.

An intervener who did not participate in the making of a false oath by the original claimant is not prejudiced thereby.—Dutilh v. Coursault, Case No. 4,206.

In a contest between two litigants respecting a sum awarded, it is not necessary to make all the other claimants under the convention parties to the suit.—Dutilh v. Coursault, Case No. 4,206.

The party who receives the sum awarded for the whole claim is a trustee for such as may be entitled to participate therein.—Dutilh v. Coursault, Case No. 4,206.

Rights of consignees of goods seized by a foreign government under the French treaty of 1831.—Ridgway v. Hays, Case No. 11,817.

The share of the loss of an alien partner of a firm was not allowable as a claim under such treaty, but he is entitled to be paid for freight and advances out of the moneys allowed to the other members.—Ridgway v. Hays, Case No. 11,817.

The commissioners under the French treaty of 1831 could not decide between conflicting American claimants.—Ridgway v. Hays, Case No. 11,817.

The commissions of a supercargo of a cargo sequestered by the king of the Sicilies is a charge on the indemnity fund provided for by treaty.—Stewart v. Callaghan, Case No. 13,423.

Omission of the secretary of the treasury to retain the amount of debts due the United States from a person entitled to an award under the Spanish treaty does not prevent the United States from suing the claimant's assignee, who has received the money.—United States v. Hunter, Case No. 15,426.

Construction of the decision of the commissioners under article 4 of the treaty of Ghent.—Open Boat, Case No. 10,548.

The United States, by their alliance with France during the Revolutionary War, held not to be considered parties to the capitulation made by the Marquis De Bouille with the inhabitants of Dominica.—Miller v. The Resolution, Case No. 9,588.

The convention of April 30, 1852, between the United States and the Hanseatic League, does not preclude an action in the admiralty courts of the United States by an American citizen for wages as seaman on board a Bremen ship.—Leavit v. The Shakespeare, Case No. 8,167.

§ 3. Repeal of treaty.

A treaty, whose subject is within the legislative power of congress, may be repealed by congress so far as it is a municipal law.—Taylor v. Morton, Case No. 13,799; United States v. Tobacco Factory, Id. 16,528.

Mode specified in which congress may destroy the operative effect of a treaty.—Ropes v. Clinch, Case No. 12,041.

To the person, see "False Imprisonment."

I. ACTS CONSTITUTING TRESPASS, AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

§ 1. What constitutes trespass.
An entry on the part of land lying within the county, with intent to do injury in the part lying without the county, is unlawful.—Gorman v. Marsteller, Case No. 5,629.

§ 2. Persons liable.
All who instigate, promote, or co-operate in the commission of a trespass, or aid, abet, or encourage its commission, are guilty.—Berry v. Fletcher, Case No. 1,357; Johnson v. Tompkins, Id. 7,416.

But the mere presence of persons will not make them trespassers.—Berry v. Fletcher, Case No. 1,357.

A person who, with knowledge that another has committed a trespass, receives part of the property taken, is guilty of the trespass.—Voss v. Baker, Case No. 17,012.

II. ACTIONS.

§ 3. Rights of action and defenses—When action lies in general.
Trespass vi et armis will lie for the master against one who beats his slave, although there should be no loss of service.—Garey v. Johnson, Case No. 5,240; Wilson v. Kedgeley, Id. 17,815; Newman v. Davis, Id. 10,176.

§ 4. —— Possession to support.
Possession alone is sufficient to support trespass quare clausum fregit against one who has no title.—Edmondson v. Lovell, Case No. 4,286.

Possession in fact or in law is necessary to maintain trespass quare clausum fregit.—Tayloe v. Varden, Case No. 13,771; Corfield v. Coryell, Id. 3,230.

There must be actual possession by the plaintiff, of the locus in quo, at the time of the supposed trespass.—Fraser v. Hunter, Case No. 5,063; O'Neale v. Brown, Id. 10,514.

Possession taken by a customs officer of imported goods, before they are unladen, to secure the lien for duties, will not prevent one who purchased them while at sea from maintaining trespass against a wrongdoer.—Howland v. Harris, Case No. 6,794.

§ 5. —— Defenses.
Where defendant pleaded that civil war existed, and that the alleged trespasses were by virtue of an order of the general commanding the army in that department, defendant is protected by Const. Mo. art. 11, § 4.—Clark v. Dick, Case No. 2,818.

§ 6. Parties.
None can recover where all the plaintiffs have not a right to recover.—Fraser v. Hunter, Case No. 5,063.

§ 7. Pleading.
Sufficiency of complaint in action to recover treble damages for cutting and carrying away timber, and defenses thereto, under Civ. Code Or. §§ 385, 386.—Neff v. Pennoyer, Case No. 10,085.

In trespass, any matter done by virtue of a warrant must be specially pleaded.—Martin v. Clark, Case No. 9,158a.

In trespass to land, plats are not a part of the pleadings, but are evidence merely.—Pancoast v. Barry, Case No. 10,705.

§ 8. Issues and proofs.
Under a plea of not guilty and notice of "defense on warrant," defendant may give his title in evidence in justification.—Pancoast v. Barry, Case No. 10,705.

In trespass, defendant cannot justify under the general issue.—Goddard v. Davis, Case No. 5,491.

Where plaintiff, in trespass to land, relies upon possession without title, defendant, under the general issue, may show title in another, under whose authority he claimed to enter.—Reynolds v. Baker, Case No. 11,727.

Where a day is laid, and from such day to the commencement of the action divers trespasses are committed, one trespass only, prior to the day named, may be proved. But divers trespasses may be shown within the time laid.—United States v. Kennedy, Case No. 15,524.

§ 9. Evidence.
In an action for a tort to personal property, possession, accompanied by an assertion of ownership, is prima facie evidence of property.—Bas v. Steele, Case No. 1,088.

Plaintiff cannot give evidence of trespasses committed on land not within his location at the time of the trespass.—Holmead v. Corcoran, Case No. 6,627.

Plaintiff must prove every abuttal set forth in his declaration.—Fraser v. Hunter, Case No. 5,063.

In a suit for trespass to personal property, plaintiff must show what property was injured, and that defendant participated therein.—McKenna v. Fisk, Case No. 8,852.

§ 10. Damages.
In an action of trespass vi et armis, plaintiff cannot recover for any injury done to real property.—McKenna v. Fisk, Case No. 8,852.

To authorize the giving of exemplary or vindictive damages, either malice, violence, oppression, or wanton recklessness must appear.—Berry v. Fletcher, Case No. 1,357.

§ 11. Trial and judgment.
It is the province of the jury to ascertain the damages when they are uncertain.—Davis v. Pitman, Case No. 3,647a.

Where the defendants are sued jointly, the jury must find a single verdict, and estimate the damages according to the most culpable of the joint trespassers.—Berry v. Fletcher, Case No. 1,357.

The person who forcibly carries another on board a steamer, and the master who carries him to sea against his will, are joint trespassers, and a recovery and satisfaction against one will bar an action against the other.—Duane v. Goodall, Case No. 4,105.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE.

See "Ejectment"; "Quieting Title," § 7.

§ 1. Pleading and evidence.
Defendant in an action of trespass to try title in Texas, who has pleaded not guilty, and has also, in pleading the statute of limitations, set up a title for himself, is not precluded from showing the invalidity of plaintiff's title.—Sheirburn v. Hunter, Case No. 12,744.

In an action of trespass to try title in Texas it is not necessary to prove an actual trespass by defendant, except in cases where there is no controversy about the title, but only as to boundaries, and where the plaintiff, having the superior title, charges defendant with trespassing on his land.—Viesca v. Wyche, Case No. 16,940.

§ 1. Notice of trial and preliminary proceedings.

Where several actions on policies of insurance are brought by the same plaintiffs against different companies, and the questions are the same, the evidence the same, and the counsel the same, the court may order them all to be tried to the same jury.—Wiede v. Insurance Co. of North America, Case No. 17,617; Same v. International Ins. Co., Id.; Same v. Home Ins. Co., Id.

Plaintiff in an action at law cannot be ruled to trial without notice where defendant has filed a bill in equity on the ground that the remedy at law was not adequate.—Baptist Missionary Union v. Turner, Case No. 968.

A case is not regularly for trial unless it has been put at issue at a preceding term.—Boyer v. Roberts, Case No. 1,754; Schnertzel v. Purcell, Id. 12,472.

Where a cause has been continued from term to term by consent, the parties are bound to be ready for trial at any subsequent time, and notice of intention to try is not requisite.—King of Spain v. Oliver, Case No. 7,812.

§ 2. Course and conduct of trial—Exclusion of persons.

The court can exclude from within the bar any person coming there to report testimony during the trial.—United States v. Holmes, Case No. 15,383.

§ 3. —— Right to open and close.

The party holding the affirmative of the issue has the right to open and close the argument.—Beall v. Newton, Case No. 1,164; Davidson v. Henop, Id. 3,605; Dunlop v. Peter, Id. 4,168; Henderson v. Casteel, Id. 6,350; Murray v. Mason, Id. 9,966; Sutton v. Mandeville, Id. 13,651.

On a plea of tender, etc., defendant has the right to open and close.—Auld v. Hepburn, Case No. 650.

In an action of covenant plaintiff has the right to open and close.—Moncure v. Dermott, Case No. 9,707.

Where defendant pleads payment, and adopts such a course as to throw the whole affirmative proof on the plaintiff, the plaintiff has a right to reply.—United States v. Ingersoll, Case No. 15,440.

If there be judgment for plaintiff on demurrer to some of the pleas, and if issue of fact be joined upon others, the jury may be charge to assess damages upon the judgment on the demurrers in case they should find the issues of fact for plaintiff; but this does not give plaintiff the right to open and close the argument where defendant holds the affirmative of all the issues of fact.—Kerr v. Force, Case No. 7,730.

§ 4. —— View and inspection.

A party has no right to inspect papers which he has given the other notice to produce at the trial, unless he consent that they shall be used in evidence.—Jordan v. Wilkins, Case No. 7,526.

Before the jury are sworn and the trial commenced, a party cannot call for a paper which his opponent has received notice to produce on the trial.—Hylton v. Brown, Case No. 6,981.

§ 5. Reception of evidence—Taking oral testimony.

A sworn interpreter may take advantage of the suggestions of others who are not sworn with regard to the proper interpretation of testimony, stating the result to the court as his own interpretation.—United States v. Gibert, Case No. 15,204.

The court may demand a statement in writing of questions intended to be put to a witness, in order that no illegal evidence may be heard by the jury and make an undue impression.—United States v. Callender, Case No. 14,709.

§ 6. —— Introduction of documentary evidence.

Defendant, by reading part of account filed by plaintiff, makes the whole account evidence.—Bell v. Davis, Case No. 1,249; Griffin v. Jeffers, Id. 5,817.

Papers are not made evidence by a notice calling on the opposite party for them, and he may waive reading them.—Blight v. Ashley, Case No. 1,541.

Plaintiff may read his books in evidence where, being called for by defendant, they are inspected by him, or retained without objection.—Coote v. Bank of the United States, Case No. 3,203; Corps v. Robinson, Id. 3,252.

Written testimony to which objection has been made should be handed to the court for inspection, without being read, for a determination of its admissibility.—Polk v. Robertson, Case No. 11,250.

§ 7. —— Separation and exclusion of witnesses.

Witnesses may be separated, and examined each out of hearing of the others.—Joice v. Alexander, Case No. 7,435; Patton v. Janney, Id. 10,836.

§ 8. —— Offer of proof.

An offer to allow the jury to examine, with a microscope, papers whose genuineness is doubted, is too late, when made during the argument.—Howell v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., Case No. 6,780.

§ 9. —— Order of proof, rebuttal, and reopening cause.

It is not necessary, in order to impart a rebutting character to testimony, that the contradiction should be complete and entire, but it is sufficient if it has a tendency to contradict or disprove the opposite statement.—United States v. Holmes, Case No. 15,382.

A witness cannot be called to prove handwriting to contradict another who has neither admitted nor denied that the letters were in his handwriting.—United States v. Gardiner, Case No. 15,186a.

After defendant has closed his testimony, plaintiffs will not be permitted to give additional evidence on a point upon which they had already examined witnesses, and defendant has proved nothing new. Otherwise where defendant has brought out other facts or transactions.—Gilpins v. Consequa, Case No. 5,452.

After the jury has retired, and returned into court to give their verdict, a witness who has come into court since the jury retired cannot be examined.—Riley v. Cooper, Case No. 11,836.

Where the jury, after retiring, come into court to ask questions of a witness, counsel will not be permitted to interrogate the witness.—United States v. Greenwood, Case No. 15,260.

Additional proofs cannot be produced as to a point reserved for further argument after trial and decree.—Abbey v. The Robert L. Stevens, Case No. 8.

§ 10. —— Objections and motions to strike out.

The exclusion on cross-examination of a question intended to affect the witness' credibility cannot be sustained on the ground that counsel should have so stated when the objection was made.—Nichols v. Harris, Case No. 10,243.

When a resort to circumstantial evidence is necessary, objections to testimony on the ground that any particular circumstance is irrelevant or inconclusive are not favored, as each circumstance usually depends on others for its force.—United States v. The Isla De Cuba, Case No. 15,447.

Objections to testimony must point out a part to which the objection lies.—Carr v. Gale, Case No. 2,434.

Objections to a deed on the ground that there was no proof of execution by one of the parties held to apply to its effect and not to its admissibility.—Rhoades v. Selin, Case No. 11,740.

An objection to evidence, on which the court is divided, does not prevail.—Henry v. Ricketts, Case No. 6,385; Melvin v. Lackland, Id. 9,407.

The objection to the incompetency of a witness for interest which appears upon his cross-examination is not waived by pursuing the cross-examination upon the merits of the case.—Walker v. Parker, Case No. 17,082.

Where it subsequently appears, on examination of a witness sworn on his voir dire, that he is incompetent, his testimony will be set aside.—Evans v. Eaton, Case No. 4,559.

§ 11. Arguments of counsel.

Opinions of counsel not in practice may be quoted at the bar in court's discretion.—Anonymous, Case No. 474.

Counsel will not be permitted to argue to the jury against an instruction given in the case.—United States v. Columbus, Case No. 14,841.

§ 12. Taking case or question from jury —Questions of law or fact in general.

Where both parties testify that a note appearing at the trial to have been duly stamped was not stamped when negotiated, held, that defendant was entitled to go to the jury on the question.—Platt v. Broach, Case No. 11,216.

It is discretionary with the court whether or not to take a question from the jury, and dispose of it as a matter of law, where the facts are undisputed.—In re Jelsh, Case No. 7,257.

Province of court and jury, see "Insurance," § 189; "Negligence," § 5; "Nuisance," § 4; "Payment," § 23.

§ 13. —— Demurrer to evidence.

A demurrer to evidence waives all objections to its admissibility, and admits every conclusion that may be fairly deduced from it.—Jacob v. United States, Case No. 7,157; Johnson v. Same, Id. 7,419; Jones v. Vanzandt, Id. 7,501; Miller v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., Id. 9,560; United States v. Williams, Case No. 16,724.

The court will infer in favor of the party demurring to evidence all the facts which the evidence on the other side conduces to prove.—Johnson v. United States, Case No. 7,419.

Upon a demurrer to evidence, judgment not rendered for plaintiff if declaration substantially defective.—Bank of the United States v. Smith, Case No. 935.

The plaintiff is not obliged to join in demurrer to the evidence unless the demurrer expressly admits every fact which the jury might reasonably infer from the testimony. But if demurrer be joined, the court will infer what the jury might infer.—Patty v. Edelin, Case No. 10,840.

§ 14. —— Dismissal or nonsuit.

On a trial before a jury the court has no power to grant a nonsuit against plaintiff's will.—Foote v. Silsby, Case No. 4,916; Thompson v. Campbell, Id. 13,944a; Miller v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., Id. 9,560.

Where the evidence for a party having the burden of proof is not such as would warrant a verdict in his favor, the judge need not submit the case to the jury.—Bowditch v. Boston, Case No. 1,719; United States v. One Still, Id. 15,954.

A nonsuit for variance set aside, and the declaration amended on payment of costs.—Craig v. Brown, Case No. 3,326.

Dismissal before trial, see "Dismissal and Nonsuit."

§ 15. —— Direction of verdict.
Where there are material facts in the case, depending upon the weight of evidence and the credibility of witnesses, which are in dispute, and the proper inferences to be drawn from the evidence are not certain, necessary, or undisputed, defendant is not entitled to have a verdict directed.—United States v. Babcock, Case No. 14,486.

Where a finding in favor of plaintiffs would be contrary to evidence, the court may instruct the jury to find a verdict for defendant.—Goddard v. Cunningham, Case No. 5,490a; Kielley v. Belcher Silver Min. Co., Id. 7,761.

A motion to direct a verdict for defendant must be made at the close of plaintiff's case. It is not addressed to the court's discretion, but presents a question of law, the ruling on which is subject to exception.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, Case No. 9,449.

The defendant, by introducing evidence in defense, waived its request, made at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, that the court direct a verdict for the defendant.—Whitehouse v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., Case No. 17,565.

§ 16. Instructions to jury—Province of court and jury in general.
The construction of a bill of sale is a question of law.—Nason v. United States, Case No. 10,024.

Bonds were advanced in payment for building a railroad on security given to apply the proceeds to the construction. Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the goods purchased with the proceeds belonged to the contractor or the surety.—Comstock v. Carnley, Case No. 3,081.

When, by pleading or by special verdict or demurrer to evidence, the law is separated from the fact, the jury have no right to decide the law.—Stettinius v. United States, Case No. 13,-387.

The construction of an oral contract is for the jury, where there is a conflict as to the words used or ambiguity; otherwise, it is for the court.—Detroit Stove Works v. Perry, Case No. 3,835.

Whether an instrument is of itself a fraud in law must be determined from the instrument alone. The existence of a collateral understanding different from the written instrument is a question for the jury.—Miller v. Jones, Case No. 9,576.

If a contract is to be made out through a correspondence, the question of its construction is one for the court, regardless of its extent.—United States v. Shaw, Case No. 16,266.

Question of usury in written contract is for court.—Bank of Washington v. Walker, Case No. 955.

The effect of bankruptcy and death of a party to prevent the barring, by lapse of time, of a judgment against him, is a question of law for the court.—In re Morris, Case No. 9,825.

The construction of unwritten laws or usages of foreign countries, when duly proved, is for the court.—Consequa v. Willings, Case No. 3,-128.

The constitutionality of an act of congress is not a proper subject for the consideration of a jury.—United States v. Shive, Case No. 16,278.

The court may give an opinion and present its views of the nature, tendency, and weight of the evidence.—Bollmans v. Parry, Case No. 1,612; Consequa v. Willings, Id. 3,128; United States v. Fourteen Packages of Pins, Id. 15,151.

Dates fixed by records of court may be stated to jury as facts.—Andrews v. Graves, Case No. 376.

§ 17. —— Necessity and sufficiency.
It is no ground of error that the court refused to instruct the jury on a point of law which was so stated as to involve an opinion on matters of fact.—United States v. Burnham, Case No. 14,690.

When the issue is joined upon a matter of law, the court will not, at the prayer of either party, instruct the jury upon the matter of law submitted to the jury by the pleadings.—Alexandria v. Brockett, Case No. 182.

The court will not give an instruction unless justified by the evidence. Rules of determining such fact.—Bank of Alexandria v. Deneale, Case No. 846; Gardner v. Collins, Id. 5,223.

The right of the court to instruct the jury is not confined to the giving of such instructions as may be requested by counsel.—Stettinius v. United States, Case No. 13,387.

The federal circuit court is not bound to notice in its charge any matters to which its attention is not called, and in regard to which instructions are not requested.—Seabury v. Field, Case No. 12,575.

The court will not give an instruction upon a point not material to the issue.—Harper v. Smith, Case No. 6,092.

The court has no right to give the jury any direction upon questions of fact, but should call their attention to particular points, and observe upon the tendency, force, and comparative weight of conflicting testimony.—United States v. Sarchet, Case No. 16,224.

A point of law embraced in the argument need not be noticed in the charge unless the court's opinion upon it is explicitly required.—United States v. Fourteen Packages of Pins, Case No. 15,151.

It is not error to direct the attention of the jury to the distinction between "reasonable cause to believe" and "actual belief."—Lawrence v. Graves, Case No. 8,138.

In determining the sufficiency of instructions, they should be taken as a whole.—Willis v. Carpenter, Case No. 17,770.

§ 18. —— Form and requisites.
The court is not bound to give an instruction in the precise form and manner in which it is put by counsel.—Pitts v. Whitman, Case No. 11,196.

An instruction stating a fact contrary to a previous correct instruction held to be misleading.—Blake v. Smith, Case No. 1,502.

Abstract, irrelevant, vague, or general instructions need not be given.—Bottomley v. United States, Case No. 1,688.

§ 19. —— Requests or prayers.
Where the instructions given by the court cover the whole controversy, and are sufficiently full to enable the jury to decide the entire issue between the parties, the refusal of the court to give other instructions is not error.—Locke v. United States, Case No. 8,442.

Prayers for instructions not complied with by the court are to be considered as refused.—Emerson v. Hogg, Case No. 4,440.

On a difference of opinion between two judges, the court will refuse to give the instructions asked.—Clark v. Ford, Case No. 2,820.

§ 20. —— Objections and exceptions.
Failure to furnish written instructions precludes counsel's objecting to court's statement as to instruction refused.—Allen v. Blunt, Case No. 217.

Exceptions will lie to the refusals of the court to give instructions when requested, in like manner as to the instructions actually given.—Emerson v. Hogg, Case No. 4,440.

The waiver of an objection should be entered on the record with the objection.—American Saddle Co. v. Hogg, Case No. 316.

§ 21. Custody, conduct, and deliberations of jury.

A verdict agreed upon after a juror has separated from his fellows by mistake, and returned, may be allowed to stand, in the discretion of the court.—Burrill v. Phillips, Case No. 2,200.

The jury cannot be allowed to take to the jury room a letter, the genuineness of which is denied, for the purpose of comparing it with a genuine letter. Such comparison must be made in the progress of the trial.—Howell v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., Case No. 6,779.

If the jury send a written request for instructions to the court, when not in session, the court, after notice to the counsel, will reply in writing, if it deems it safe and proper to do so.—Norris v. Cook, Case No. 10,305.

The court is not bound to instruct the jury after they have retired, unless the jurors request it.—Forrest v. Hanson, Case No. 4,943; Turner v. Foxall, Id. 14,255.

The construction of the federal constitution by the supreme court is binding on the jury as well as the court.—United States v. Shive, Case No. 16,278.

§ 22. Verdict—General verdict.

A general finding for the plaintiff or defendant by a jury is good, and disposes of all the issues. —Archer v. Morehouse, Case No. 18,225.

A verdict, though informal, is good if the substance of the issue has been found.—Russell v. Wheeler, Case No. 12,164a.

Form of verdict on bond conditioned to pay money by installments, rendered before all installments are due.—Davidson v. Brown, Case No. 3,601.

A verdict which is repugnant or uncertain in a material point is void.—Stearns v. Barrett, Case No. 13,337.

In a suit in the name of the United States of America, a verdict finding in favor of the United States, without the addition "of America," is sufficient.—Sears v. United States, Case No. 12,592; Smith v. Same, Id. 13,122.

Where, in a joint action of tort, there is no evidence as to one defendant, a verdict against all of them will be set aside.—United States v. Chaffee, Case No. 14,773.

Where, in such case, defendants sever in their pleas, and a verdict is returned against all, the case may be non pros'd as to one against whom there was no testimony, and judgment entered against the others.—United States v. Chaffee, Case No. 14,773.

If the jury find the point in issue, a finding as to another matter out of the issue may be rejected as surplusage.—Stearns v. Barrett, Case No. 13,337; United States v. One Case Stereoscopic Slides, Id. 15,927.

Where a verdict is rendered on certain counts of the declaration by the express direction of plaintiff, the other counts cannot be referred to as sustaining the verdict.—Jones v. Van Zandt, Case No. 7,502.

Plaintiff is entitled to legal interest on a verdict where judgment is delayed by defendant by motion for new trial or otherwise.—Dowell v. Griswold, Case No. 4,040.

On a plea in abatement, if the jury find against the plea, they ought to assess the damages on the plaintiff's declaration. If this is omitted, a venire de novo must be awarded.—Hollingsworth v. Duane, Case No. 6,615.

Where separate and distinct pleas are taken to different parts of the count, and some of the issues thereon are found for plaintiff, and some for defendant, several damages should be assessed, and judgment rendered for each party as to the issues found for him.—Kerr v. Force, Case No. 7,730.

Where the statute gives double or triple damages, a general verdict will be deemed for single damages, unless the contrary appear, and the court will double or treble them; but a verdict may be found for double or treble damages.—Cross v. United States, Case No. 3,434.

A finding in pounds, when damages were laid in the declaration in dollars, is no cause for arresting judgment.—Butts v. Shreve, Case No. 2,-258.

The court, on rendering judgment on a verdict assessing damages, cannot add interest from a time anterior thereto.—Byington v. Lemmons, Case No. 2,264a.

In an action ex contractu against two or more, the verdict must be against all or none.—Milne v. Huber, Case No. 9,617.

A jury which has given a verdict of one cent damages, under the mistaken view that it will carry costs, cannot change the same after they have been discharged.—Snowden v. McGuire, Case No. 13,150.

Under Act Sept. 24, 1789, § 32, the court may give judgment as the right appears, without regarding any imperfection or want of form in the verdict.—United States v. Quantity of Tobacco, Case No. 16,106a.

The record of the verdict will be amended in the case of a clerical mistake to conform to the verdict as rendered.—Tomes v. Redfield, Case No. 14,085.

After a special verdict, a motion by plaintiff to enter the verdict on certain counts and nol. pros. the others was granted.—Stokes v. Kendall, Case No. 13,480.

It is not error to allow the plaintiff to remit an excess of interest found in the verdict, and then affirm the verdict, so amended.—Paige v. Loring, Case No. 10,672.

§ 23. —— Special interrogatories and findings.

The court is not bound to give an opinion instanter, on the trial of a cause, but may direct the point to be saved by a special verdict.—Croudson v. Leonard, Case No. 3,439.

Court cannot, upon a special verdict, infer facts not actually found.—Bank of Alexandria v. Swann, Case No. 853.

The conclusion from facts found in a special verdict must be drawn by the court.—Butler v. Hopper, Case No. 2,241.

Danger of prejudice to successful party by special finding of facts stated. — Clement v. Phœnix Ins. Co., Case No. 2,882.

§ 24. Trial by court.

Procedure on trial in action at law by the court stated. — Clement v. Phœnix Ins. Co., Case No. 2,882.

On trial of an action at law without a jury, it is discretionary with the court to make either general or special findings on the facts.—Clement v. Phœnix Ins. Co., Case No. 2,882; Folsom v. Mercantile Mut. Ins. Co., Id. 4,903; Archer v. Morehouse, Id. 18,225.

Trial by court without jury is not concluded until formal findings of facts are made.—Clement v. Phœnix Ins. Co., Case No. 2,882.

On the question whether a tract of land is sufficiently described, the judge may weigh his personal knowledge thereof in connection with the testimony.—United States v. Juares, Case No. 15,500.

§ 25. Correction of irregularities.

Errors committed on the trial of an action at law against the party who obtains a verdict are merged in the verdict.—Schmeider v. Barney, Case No. 12,462.

Either a verdict or judgment cures a defective venue.—Crittenden v. Davis, Case No. 3,393b.

The verdict will cure defects in substance in the pleadings if, from the issue in the case, the facts omitted or defectively stated may fairly be presumed to have been proved on the trial.—Stanley v. Whipple, Case No. 13,286.

TROVER AND CONVERSION.

§ 1, Acts constituting and liability therefor. § 2, Actions—Right of action and defenses. § 3, —— Pleading and evidence. § 4, —— Damages.

By agent, see "Principal and Agent," § 11.
By bailee, see "Bailment," § 5.
By executor, see "Executors and Administrators," § 17.
By wife, see "Husband and Wife," § 10.

§ 1. Acts constituting, and liability therefor.

The unauthorized transfer of plaintiff's property by defendant, though without wrongful intent, and before demand, is still a conversion.—Savary v. Germania Bank, Case No. 12,387.

All persons aiding to deprive the true owner of his goods are liable for their conversion, whether they profit by the transaction or not.—Longfellow v. Lewis, Case No. 8,487.

§ 2. Actions—Right of action and defenses.

General property in the goods without actual possession is sufficient to maintain trover.—Cooke v. Woodrow, Case No. 3,181.

A bailiff who distrains goods for rent, and leaves them on the premises of the owner, who takes them away, cannot maintain trover therefor.—King v. Fearson, Case No. 7,789.

Trover will lie by the general owner of goods against another, who had converted them to his own use, although a lien existed thereon in favor of a third person, who had the immediate possession.—Longfellow v. Lewis, Case No. 8,487.

A purchaser at sheriff's sale on credit, the property being retained as security, has sufficient title to maintain an action for its conversion.—Abbott v. McCartney, Case No. 12.

An agreement to sell and transfer goods seized and held as a distress for rent due from the seller will transfer the general property.—Cooke v. Woodrow, Case No. 3,181.

The possession of tobacco notes held evidence of the possession of the tobacco which they represent.—Hance v. McCormick, Case No. 6,009.

A demand and refusal or an actual conversion is necessary to sustain trover.—Chapin v. Siger, Case No. 2,600; Carr v. Gale, Id. 2,434.

Tender of storage charges for goods held adversely not necessary.—Allen v. Ogden, Case No. 233.

The fact that a party came lawfully into possession of property is not the criterion to determine whether a demand and refusal are necessary in an action of trover.—Blakely v. Ruddell, Case No. 18,241.

Where a person purchases personal property from one to whom it has been loaned by the owner, a demand of him is not necessary to support an action of trover.—Blakely v. Ruddell, Case No. 18,241.

In trover for the conversion of goods, it is a good defense that plaintiff obtained possession of the same on a sale in fraud of the bankrupt act, and that the title and right of possession is in the assignee in bankruptcy of his vendor.—Eiseman v. Maul, Case No. 4,322.

A declaration in trover for "a chest containing sundry tools," is sufficient to admit evidence of the value of the tools.—Ball v. Patterson, Case No. 814. CONTRA, see Ball v. Patterson, Case No. 813.

The defense that the seizure and conversion of the property in question was an act of war is admissible under the general issue in trover.—Coolidge v. Guthrie, Case No. 3,185.

Possession at the time of seizure is prima facie evidence of ownership, shifting the burden of proof.—Eiseman v. Maul, Case No. 4,322.

Expression of intention to retain goods demanded, evidence of conversion.—Allen v. Ogden, Case No. 233.

In trover, a mere demand and refusal is not in all cases evidence of conversion. Where the demand is made by an agent, and the refusal is for defect of authority in the agent, or for a refusal to show authority, it is not evidence of a conversion. Otherwise, where there is no request to see the authority, and the refusal to deliver the property turns on other distinct grounds.—Watt v. Potter, Case No. 17,291.

In trover for the conversion of goods, plaintiff must prove title as against the world when his title is denied.—Eiseman v. Maul, Case No. 4,322.

To establish a conversion, there must be proof of wrongful possession, or of exclusion of the owner's right, or of unauthorized and injurious use, or of wrongful detention after demand.—Maine v. Haley, Case No. 8,977.

§ 4. —— Damages.

A person who tortiously sells the property of another, without his consent, is liable for its full value at the time of the sale, though he does not receive any of the purchase money.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,848.

In an action of trover and conversion for articles purchased from a person who sold them without authority, the measure of damages is the real value of the property.—Scull v. Briddle, Case No. 12,569.

A person holding goods under a respondentia bond, with an assignment of the bill of lading, may recover damages for their unlawful taking in the full value of the goods, irrespective of the amount of his debt.—Pacific Ins. Co. v. Conard, Case No. 10,647.

Measure of damages for the conversion of a whale.—Bartlett v. Budd, Case No. 1,075; Taber v. Jenny, Id. 13,720; Bourne v. Ashley, Id. 1,699.

In trover for slaves plaintiff may recover damages beyond the value of the property converted.—Nevett v. Berry, Case No. 10,135.

Substantial doubts existing as to any of the elements of damage in a case of tortious taking must operate against the wrongdoer.—Taber v. Jenny, Case No. 13,720.

A jury may as part of the damages give interest on the value of property converted.—Matthews v. Menedger, Case No. 9,289.

A person who tortiously converts goods temporarily landed at an intermediate port from necessity for the purpose of repairing the vessel is not entitled to a deduction from the damages of the amount of duties payable.—Watt v. Potter, Case No. 17,291.

I. CREATION, EXISTENCE, AND VALIDITY.

§ 1. Express trusts.

The Massachusetts statute of frauds is substantially similar, as respects trusts, to the statute of 29 Car. II.—Jenkins v. Eldredge, Case No. 7,266.

An agreement of defendant to reduce a trust to writing, or to keep a private memorandum thereof, will take the case out of the statute.—Jenkins v. Eldredge, Case No. 7,266.

A deed from an equitable mortgagee, and an assignment of a bond to reconvey to persons who had agreed to purchase on joint account, held to create a fiduciary relation between them, grounded on privity of title or estate, under which the purchase of an outstanding incumbrance or adverse title by one would be a trust for the benefit of both, taking the agreement out of the statute of frauds.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

The statute of frauds, which requires that a declaration of trust of lands should be in writing, can be pleaded only by him who has the legal estate and is sought to be charged with the trust.—Oneale v. Caldwell, Case No. 10,515.

A trust, created by a parol contract, will be enforced in equity against a party who does not insist upon the defense of the statute of frauds.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

The statute of frauds is never allowed as a protection to fraud, or as a means of seducing the unwary into false confidence to their injury.—Jenkins v. Eldredge, Case No. 7,266.

A declaration of trust not recorded is inoperative, under Act Ill. Jan. 31, 1827.—Hubbard v. Turner, Case No. 6,819.

A loose settlement in trust for children held not controlling as against a subsequent deed of trust.—Ingraham v. Meade, Case No. 7,045.

Under an act "for the relief of the widow and children of" H., by which moneys were directed to be paid to them, held, that such moneys were not a trust for the creditors of H.—Ogden v. Strong, Case No. 10,460.

Contractors for the building of a railroad, having stock of the railroad company as security for their contract, hold such stock for the common benefit of themselves and others whom they have admitted to share in their contract, and must deal with such stock accordingly.—Wiggins v. European & N. A. Ry. Co., Case No. 17,626.

The mere deposit of money in a savings bank, entered in the name of the depositor "in trust for" another person, without notice to him, is not sufficient to show that the money passed to him, especially where he had no knowledge thereof until after the death of the depositor.—Stone v. Bishop, Case No. 13,482.

A credit given by the grantee to the grantor of land for the proceeds of a sale by him of part of the land held to amount to a declaration of trust.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,406.

A feme sole created a trust for herself for life, with remainders, reserving a power to revoke or declare new trusts. Held, that an instrument to "renew the trust for five years" was a complete execution of the power, and operated as a revocation at the end of five years.—Hidelt v. Girard Life Insurance, Annuity & Trust Co., Case No. 6,464.

A deed made by a bankrupt to the trustee, in pursuance of the requirements of the bankrupt law, is a revocation of a prior trust.—Bronaugh v. Mason, Case No. 1,923.

A trust held extinguished by the cestui que trust conveying the land, though the grantee failed to fulfill its agreement on which the conveyance was made; the remedy of the cestui que trust being at law, for damages, or by bill in equity, for specific performance.—Hunter v. Marlboro, Case No. 6,908.

§ 2. Resulting trusts.
Rules as to the creation of resulting trusts, by Story, J.—Hoxie v. Carr, Case No. 6,802.

Where the equity of each party is equal, the court will not deprive one party of the advantage he may have gained by obtaining a legal estate in property which was promised as a security for a debt due to each.—Philips v. Crammond, Case No. 11,092.

A resulting trust arises on a conveyance for a consideration which is to be afterwards ascertained by the price at which the grantee may sell it.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,406.

Where a judgment note is given by an agent for all moneys advanced to him by the principal, including the purchase price of property the title to which was taken in the agent's name, held, that a resulting trust could not be asserted therein.—Napier v. Server, Case No. 10,010.

A deed in satisfaction of precedent debt, under agreement that grantor should have surplus on resale, creates trust only in proceeds of sale.—Alexander v. Rodriguez, Case No. 172.

When money or other assets of one person are used by another to purchase property in his own name, a resulting trust arises in favor of the former.—Friedlander v. Johnson, Case No. 5,117.

A conveyance by husband and wife of the wife's land in exchange for lands conveyed to the husband raises a resulting trust in her favor, in the absence of evidence that she assented to the conveyance to her husband.—Nicklin v. Wythe, Case No. 10,253.

A resulting trust arises where lands have been purchased by one partner and paid for out of the funds of the partnership as a resulting trust arises where a person takes the conveyance to himself of property purchased with money which he holds in a fiduciary capacity.—Philips v. Crammond, Case No. 11,092.

What is sufficient evidence of a resulting trust and its recognition by the grantee.—Hunter v. Marlboro, Case No. 6,908.

Where a memorandum of sale recited a receipt of money from B. and C. on a contract of sale, parol evidence is admissible to show that C. did not advance any of the price and that no resulting trust was created.—Clark v. Burnham, Case No. 2,816.

§ 3. Constructive trusts—In general.
Equity will not raise a use by implication for a person who by law cannot hold it.—Philips v. Crammond, Case No. 11,092.

A person who agrees to pay a certain sum from a particular fund as soon as he shall receive it will, in equity, be regarded as a trustee of the fund to that extent.—United States v. Carlisle, Case No. 14,724.

§ 4. —— Necessity of writing.
Where a trust is implied in favor of a principal whose agent acquires the legal estate in property as such agent, such a trust is not within the statute of frauds, and it need not be manifested by a writing.—Manning v. Hayden, Case No. 9,043.

§ 5. —— Dealings by persons in fiduciary relation with trust property or interests.
A person acquiring the legal estate in property as the agent of another will be required to account for the same in equity. Therefore an attorney employed to foreclose a mortgage who purchases at the sale will be held a trustee for his client, at the option of the latter, unless it appears that such client has not been prejudiced thereby.—Manning v. Hayden, Case No. 9,043.

An administrator who purchases in his own name on a sale under foreclosure of a mortgage belonging to his intestate holds the property for the benefit of the heirs, and cannot sell it without authority of the court.—Rafferty v. Mallory, Case No. 11,526.

A written agreement to purchase lands on joint account creates a fiduciary relation, and a purchase by one, on his sole account, will be treated as in trust for the joint account.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

The fraud of an agent in availing himself of his confidential relation to create an interest adverse to that of his principal creates a trust, even when the agency must be established by parol.—Jenkins v. Eldredge, Case No. 7,266.

Under an agreement of separation between husband and wife, property was transferred to trustees to pay the income to the wife, it being provided that the agreement should continue notwithstanding the parties elected to cohabit. Held, that the husband, subsequently receiving the income under an agreement to invest it for the wife and her children, became a trustee of the wife.—Walker v. Beal, Case No. 17,065.

A person who assumes to act as agent in redeeming lands sold for taxes will be considered as acting in that capacity in subsequent dealings with the title.—Schedda v. Sawyer, Case No. 12,443.

§ 6. —— Acquisition of property by fraud or undue influence.
The holder of the legal title to land will in equity be charged as trustee, where it was acquired by fraud or under such circumstances as to render it inequitable for him to retain it.—Norton v. Meader, Case No. 10,351; Hardy v. Harbin, Id. 6,060.

Persons who secure the legal title of a Mexican grant by the presentation of a worthless document as a transfer of the grantee's interest will, in equity, be treated as trustees of the heirs of the grantee.—Hardy v. Harbin, Case No. 6,060.

Verbal promise to dying person by heirs to convey his property in a certain way, though fraudulent, does not raise a trust adhering to the land.—Bedilian v. Seaton, Case No. 1,218.

The manager of a railroad company, who, by an oppressive exercise of his powers, procures donations of property to be made to him in trust for the company, will be considered to hold the property in trust for the donors.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. Durant, Case No. 14,377.

§ 7. —— Wrongful assumption of control of property.
A person who intermeddles with the property of an infant will be treated in equity as a trustee for such infant, and he will not be allowed to buy an outstanding legal title, to the infant's prejudice.—Lenox v. Notrebe, Cases Nos. 8,-246b, 8,246c.

One in possession, claiming under an adverse but defective title, without fraud, cannot be held to be the trustee of the true owner, nor be made to account for the proceeds of a sale by him.—Gaines v. Lizardi, Case No. 5,174.

But where the possession was not in good faith, the possessors are liable for rents and profits, and are not entitled to compensation for improvements.—Gaines v. Lizardi, Case No. 5,174.

§ 8. —— Evidence to establish trust.
In cases of a joint purchase, where each purchaser is to have an interest in the purchase in proportion to his advances, parol evidence is admissible to establish the trust, as well as to rebut, control, or vary it.—Jenkins v. Eldredge, Case No. 7,266.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that the purchase made in the name of one was made for the joint benefit of two, and in such case the grantee will be considered a trustee of a moiety for the other purchaser.—Powell v. Monson & Brimfield Mfg. Co., Case No. 11,356.

See, also, post, § 48.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

§ 9. General rules.

When a trust is created, the legal effect of which is declared by the law, the court is bound to presume that the intent of the creator was in conformity with it.—Pennoyer v. Shelden, Case No. 10,943.

§ 10. Estate of trustee and of cestui que trust.

A covenant by the father of the intended wife to stand seised to her use, after marriage, of a piece of real estate, does not operate after marriage to pass the legal estate by the statute of uses; the use remains executory in the trustee and his heirs.—Magniac v. Thompson, Case No. 8,956.

A conveyance by a husband and wife of her estate to a third person and his heirs, to the use of the grantees during their joint lives, and for the use of the survivor in fee simple, is valid and operative under the statute of uses.—Durant v. Ritchie, Case No. 4,190.

Public lands, purchased at an auction sale by an agent of an association of individuals, cannot be sold on an attachment against him; and an assignment by him of certificates of patent to the purchaser on the sale under the attachment is invalid.—Piatt v. Oliver, Case No. 11,115.

An unexecuted trust for the benefit of one for life, and on his death for the heirs of another, cannot be separated into distinct trusts.—Curtis v. Smith, Case No. 3,505.

A trustee, by an instrument intending to convey a complete title in the thing, may convey his individual interest, though the instrument is inoperative as to his cestuis que trustent.—Piatt v. Oliver, Case No. 11,116.

A trustee cannot attack the validity of a deed under which he took possession, unless he was deceived into taking title, not knowing that the property really belonged partly or wholly to himself.—Hunt v. Danforth, Case No. 6,888.

The equitable interest of a cestui que trust by way of contingent remainder is capable of assignment.—Sullivan v. Sullivan, Case No. 13,598.

A conveyance from a cestui que trust, confirmed by the trustee, will entitle the purchaser to protection against a secret trust unknown to him.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

A trustee who was a creditor before the trust arose may pursue the same legal remedies for enforcement of his debt which would have been otherwise available.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,406.

§ 11. Evidence to aid construction.

The written declaration of a trustee in a conveyance by him of the trust property to a third person is not admissible against the creator of the trust to show the intent of the parties in the original conveyance to the trustee.—Waterman v. Wallace, Case No. 17,261.

III. APPOINTMENT, QUALIFICATION, AND TENURE OF TRUSTEES.

§ 12. Acceptance or disclaimer by appointee.

Any act done by the trustee under a trust deed is evidence of the acceptance of the trust. —Lewis v. Baird, Case No. 8,316.

§ 13. Jurisdiction of courts.

Jurisdiction of courts of equity over trusts, and of the appointment of agent.—Baring v. Willing, Case No. 985.

§ 14. Corporation as trustee.

A corporation may be a trustee if not prohibited, where the trust is germane to or in harmony with the objects of the corporation.—Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

§ 15. Removal.

The trustee of a family settlement in which infants are interested may be changed by consent of the parties, upon a bill filed for that purpose only.—Young v. Young, Case No. 18,177.

Where, by contract, a trust was created and trustees appointed, but the trust was not to take effect until the happening of a certain event, held, that before that time the court would not, at the instance of one of the parties, remove the trustees for alleged misfeasance.—Sloo v. Law, Case No. 12,956.

An executor who has taken charge of a trust estate under a will will not be displaced, and a receiver appointed, unless it appear that the property is in danger, and the trustee is irresponsible.—Haines v. Carpenter, Case No. 5,905.

To preserve a trust estate mainly within the jurisdiction, the court may remove ex parte a nonresident naked trustee, who cannot be served because he is in a hostile territory, and appoint another.—Ketchum v. Mobile & O. R. Co., Case No. 7,737.

A trustee removed without notice while in a hostile territory held to have abandoned his office by a silence of 10 years after cessation of hostilities and notice of removal.—Ketchum v. Mobile & O. R. Co., Case No. 7,737.

IV. MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSAL OF TRUST PROPERTY.

See, also, post, §§ 32-35.

Right to follow trust property, see post, §§ 42-44.

§ 16. Diligence and good faith of trustee.

A trustee is only bound to manage lands conveyed on an undefined trust with the same diligence as he does his own property.—Burr v. McEwen, Case No. 2,193.

§ 17. Collection of outstanding property.

Trustees under an assignment of assets for certain purposes cannot vary its terms and accept payment of debts in a manner not contemplated therein.—Bank of United States v. Bomford, Case No. 909.

A trustee who receives, in payment of a loan, Confederate treasury notes at par which were worth only 30 cents on the dollar, is liable, unless he show that he acted under compulsion.—Moore v. Mitchell, Case No. 9,770.

Parol understandings had with the testator cannot be set up to save the trustee from liability under the law.—Moore v. Mitchell, Case No. 9,770.

§ 18. Repairs, improvements, and taxes.

A trustee is not chargeable with failure to rent unproductive property, or to inclose open lands.—Burr v. McEwen, Case No. 2,193.

The trustee is bound to pay taxes, if in funds, or he may advance his own money, and charge it against the property in his hands.—Burr v. McEwen, Case No. 2,193.

§ 19. Payment of claims against property.

Payment of a debt by a trustee to a receiver under a confiscation decree of a Confederate court is a breach of trust.—Clark v. Gibboney, Case No. 2,821.

§ 20. Sale.
A trustee given the power to sell the trust property and reinvest in other property, when the same can be done advantageously, has not an unlimited power of sale, and a sale to his personal creditor in part payment of a debt is not a valid execution of the trust; and, where the purchaser has notice of the violation of the trust, the property is chargeable in his hands with the trust.—Wormeley v. Wormeley, Case No. 18,047.

The trustee may sell at private sale, where the trust is general, and no mode of sale is prescribed.—Burr v. McEwen, Case No. 2,193.

A trustee, if acting in good faith, is justified in selling for fair market value, though special circumstances enhance value to the purchaser.—Burr v. McEwen, Case No. 2,193.

Where a deed purports to be executed by the trustees of a town, there must be evidence that the persons who signed it were trustees, and that they had power to make the conveyance.—Wallace v. Dewey, Case No. 17,099.

A conveyance of land in consideration of coupon bonds by a trustee empowered to sell may be valid, though it be not a sale for money.—Speigle v. Meredith, Case No. 13,227.

A purchase made by a trustee is voidable at the election of the cestui que trust only if he disaffirms it within a reasonable time after notice thereof.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,406.

Length of time affords no presumption of an acquiescence in a purchase by a trustee of property held by him in trust, unless it appears that the cestui que trust had notice that the trustee had become the purchaser.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,406.

There is no principle of equity which will invalidate the title of a trustee to land which the law has taken out of his hands, and which he has purchased from one appointed to sell it.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,406.

The burden is upon a trustee for creditors who claims that a purchase by a co-trustee in his own name, on a sale to enforce payment of a judgment recovered by the trustees, was made by the co-trustee as trustee, to show that fact.—Cushing v. Smith, Case No. 3,511.

If a cestui que trust under an assignment for the benefit of creditors buys a right of property which the assignees were empowered to sell in the execution of their trust, he must claim as a purchaser under them, not as a cestui que trust.—Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, Case No. 17,677.

Where all of the living trustees having a power to sell negotiated the contract of sale, a purchaser under a deed executed by a part only, who has performed his contract, is entitled to have the heirs and legatees decreed to complete the contract.—Long v. Soule, Case No. 8,483.

As to the priorities between the parties where a trustee in a deed of trust is also made agent to collect the notes secured thereby, which he sells to bona fide purchasers, where he subsequently obtains title to the property, having previously executed a release as trustee.—Smith v. Perkins, Case No. 13,091.

The legal estate passes by a deed of bargain and sale made by a trustee, whether the terms of the trust are complied with or not.—Bank of the United States v. Benning, Case No. 908.

Defendant who has no title cannot question conduct of trustee in conveying to plaintiff.—Bayard v. Colefax, Case No. 1,130.

In order to set aside a purchase of trust property from a trustee authorized to sell, on the ground of collusion, the fraud must be clearly proven.—Carpenter v. Robinson, Case No. 2,431.

§ 21. Mortgage.
A power in a trust deed to sell and reinvest on the same limitations and trusts does not include by implication the power to mortgage.—Patapsco Guano Co. v. Morrison, Case No. 10,792.

A statutory provision giving the court power to authorize a trustee to sell or convey the corpus of the trust estate does not confer power to authorize the trustee to mortgage it.—Patapsco Guano Co. v. Morrison, Case No. 10,792.

§ 22. Contracts—Negotiable instruments.
A trustee, unless expressly authorized, cannot issue negotiable paper executed in his trust character so as to bind the trust estate.—Patapsco Guano Co. v. Morrison, Case No. 10,792.

§ 23. Investments.
A trustee resident in the Confederate States held not personally liable for the amount of investments in Confederate bonds, where he did not deal directly with the Confederate government, except as to nonresident cestuis que trustent adhering to the United States.—Head v. Starke, Case No. 6,293.

Third persons cannot object to the unauthorized investment of trust funds.—Blagge v. Miles, Case No. 1,479.

A state legislature may authorize a change of investments by trustees.—Hoyt v. Sprague, Case No. 6,810.

§ 24. Submission to arbitration.
A trustee of one to whom a loss is payable by the policy may refer it to arbitration, where empowered by the cestui que trust to adjust and sue for the loss.—Brown v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., Case No. 2,009.

§ 25. Individual interest in transactions.
A trustee will not be permitted to obtain any personal benefit to himself at the expense of his cestui que trust.—Sloo v. Law, Case No. 12,957.

§ 26. Loss of property.
Where the trusteee mingles the trust fund with his own money, he is liable on its loss.—Moore v. Mitchell, Case No. 9,770.

A trustee who uses trust money in trade is chargeable with all profits which he has made, and in case of loss it must be borne by himself.—In re Thorp, Case No. 14,002.

§ 27. Ratification of unauthorized acts.
Where trust funds are fraudulently used by the trustee to purchase stock in a railroad company which is subsequently consolidated with another company, the beneficial owner, having prior knowledge of the misappropriation, must seek his remedy against the stock of the consolidated company in the hands of the trustee.—Western Division of Western N. C. R. Co. v. Drew, Case No. 17,434; Schutte v. Florida Cent. R. Co., Id.

§ 28. Co-trustees.
One trustee will be enjoined from denying another access to the books and papers relating to the trust.—Sloo v. Law, Case No. 12,957.

Where money is paid to a trustee, a co-trustee who joined in the receipt is not liable unless the trustee had no right to receive the money.—Wallis v. Thornton, Case No. 17,111.

An attorney for trustees charged with a public trust, or one of such trustees acting as attorney for the others, has not the implied power to consent to a decree which has the effect of taking the trust out of the hands of the trustees, or of placing its execution in other hands.—Vose v. Internal Imp. Fund, Case No. 17,008.

§ 29. Actions by or against trustees—Form of remedy, rights of action, and defenses.

A trustee appropriating the proceeds of trust property is liable in assumpsit.—Baker v. Root, Case No. 780.

The remedy of the cestui que trust against the trustee for negligence is in equity, not at law.—Hukill v. Page, Case No. 6,854.

A cestui que trust may maintain a suit to enjoin the trustee from collecting, appropriating, or disposing of the trust property.—St. Luke's Hospital v. Barclay, Case No. 12,241.

See, also, post, §§ 37, 45.

§ 30. —— Jurisdiction.

Equity has jurisdiction of a suit by the trustee against the cestuis que trustent, to direct an issue devisavit vel non, and to decree possession of the land to the trustee to enable him to execute the trust.—Harrison v. Rowan, Case No. 6,143.

A trustee whose title is derived solely by act of the law cannot sue in another state without having his appointment repeated by the local tribunal.—Curtis v. Smith, Case No. 3,505.

A trustee deriving title from a will must prove the will in the local jurisdiction before suing to recover a trust fund in the hands of a person therein.—Curtis v. Smith, Case No. 3,505.

§ 31. —— Parties.

Trustees implicated in a common breach of trust are liable to suit jointly or severally, at the election of the cestui que trust.—Heath v. Erie Ry. Co., Case No. 6,306.

The same doctrine applies to any wrongdoer who is confederated with a fraudulent trustee.—Heath v. Erie Ry. Co., Case No. 6,306.

A deed of trust to secure creditors with ascertained debts marshaled them into four classes. Held, that a bill would lie by one of the fourth class for breach of the trust, without making the others parties.—Dorr v. Gibboney, Case No. 4,006.

The cestuis que trustent must be made parties to a suit by the trustee, whose object is to devest them of title.—Piatt v. Oliver, Case No. 11,115.

V. EXECUTION OF TRUST BY TRUSTEE.

See, also, ante, §§ 16-31.

§ 32. Apportionment of capital and income.

The cestui que trust will not be deprived of a proper allowance for maintenance and education to enhance the contingent estate of another, where the trust allows an expenditure of the principal for such purpose.—Curtis v. Smith, Case No. 3,505.

§ 33. Sufficiency of execution of trust.

A secret trust held to be executed by a deed from the trustee and the cestuis que trust to a third person.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

A strict trust, entirely private in its nature, must be executed by all the trustees, unless otherwise provided. But a public trust may be executed by a majority of the trustees, unless otherwise provided.—Sloo v. Law, Case No. 12,957; Boone v. Clarke, Id. 1,641.

§ 34. Reconveyance of trust property to creator of trust.

The presumption of a reconveyance of lands conveyed in trust, after it becomes impossible to execute the trust, held to be conclusive.—French v. Edwards, Case No. 5,098.

On the death of trustees in a deed of trust leaving infant heirs, the court, on application of the owner of the property conveyed in trust, will order the guardian of said heirs, duly appointed, to execute a deed releasing to the said owner the property so conveyed.—Orme v. Clarke, Case No. 10,577.

§ 35. Effect of execution.

An executed trust cannot be revived by nonexecution of a trust resulting from subsequent agreement relating to same subject.—Baker v. Biddle, Case No. 764.

VI. ACCOUNTING AND COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEE.

§ 36. Release from liability.

The profit gained by the trustee on a sale of property held by him in trust belongs to the cestui que trust, and the trustee cannot so purchase or hold the property as to release the claim of the cestui que trust to compel him to account.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,406.

§ 37. Actions for accounting.

A court of equity has jurisdiction over a controversy between a cestui que trust and his trustee in relation to accounts for services and disbursements in the management of the trust.—Parsons v. Lyman, Case No. 10,780.

Nature and extent of the jurisdiction of the courts of probate of Connecticut over the administration of testamentary trusts.—Parson v. Lyman, Case No. 10,780.

Creditors of an insolvent trustee need not be made parties to a bill against his administrator for an account.—Burton v. Smith, Case No. 2,219.

The settlement by a probate court of the accounts of a testamentary trustee must, in order to bind the cestui que trust, be made upon due previous notice to him of the time and place of settlement.—Parsons v. Lyman, Case No. 10,780.

All presumptions are against a trustee who does not keep accurate and distinct accounts.—Bourne v. Maybin, Case No. 1,700.

While a trustee cannot be charged with negligence or maladministration not set out in the bill for an account, it may be considered in fixing his compensation.—Burr v. McEwen, Case No. 2,193.

§ 38. Charges.

If a trustee, executor, or agent buy in debts due by his cestui que trust, testator, or principal for less than their nominal amount, the benefit arising therefrom belongs to the person for whom he acted.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,406.

A trustee who previous to the Civil War appropriated the trust estate to his own use is liable for interest during the war.—Bourne v. Maybin, Case No. 1,700.

A trustee who fails to execute a direction to sell property and invest the proceeds in productive funds is liable for interest.—Nicholson v. McGuire, Case No. 10,249.

Interest will not be allowed against a trustee where he had received no interest, if there was no neglect or use of the money on his part.—Cassels v. Vernon, Case No. 2,503.

A trustee acting bona fide under invalid letters testamentary should not be charged with interest, where the property did not earn interest.—Grattan v. Appleton, Case No. 5,707.

§ 39. Credits.

Fees paid for professional advice as to the execution of the trust are chargeable against the trust; otherwise as to fees in a litigation of the trustee's account.—Burr v. McEwen, Case No. 2,193.

§ 40. Compensation.

Trustees are entitled to compensation by way of commissions.—Burr v. McEwen, Case No. 2,193.

They are in equity entitled to commissions allowed to executors by statute.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,407.

Trustees are entitled to commissions of 5 per cent. on money passing through their hands.—Askew v. Odenheimer, Case No. 587.

Commissions are not allowed to a trustee who makes a sale in violation of his trust.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,848.

One who holds premises as trustee of another is entitled to commissions on renting the same where not guilty of gross misconduct, although he is not an open and express trustee.—Jenkins v. Eldredge, Case No. 7,268.

VII. ESTABLISHMENT AND ENFORCEMENT OF TRUST.

§ 41. Rights of cestui que trust as against trustee.

There can be no disseisin of a trust, though the exercise of an adverse possession for a great length of time may in equity bar it.—Baker v. Whiting, Case No. 787.

Where a trust made to defraud creditors is executed by the trustee conveying the property to a third person to secure a loan to the cestui que trust, whose rights the grantee distinctly recognizes, the trust is enforceable.—Hunter v. Marlboro, Case No. 6,908.

The trustee is not answerable to the representatives of the cestui que trust for acts done with the latter's approval.—Burr v. McEwen, Case No. 2,193.

A receipt given by one just arrived at full age for a certain sum as his share of an estate under a trust deed is no bar in equity to his demanding interest and dividends due on the fund.—Nicholson v. McGuire, Case No. 10,249.

The original trust may be enforced against a son of the trustee, who assisted his father in a scheme to get possession of the trust estate, for a grossly inadequate consideration.—Bunnel v. Stoddard, Case No. 2,135.

§ 42. Right to follow trust property or proceeds thereof—In general.

Partnership funds fraudulently diverted to individual purposes by one member may be followed by the other members, and treated as trust property, if they can be distinctly traced in the hands of any one except a bona fide purchaser without notice.—Kelley v. Greenleaf, Case No. 7,657.

Public lands, made a trust estate for the payment of certain bonds, and placed under the control of trustees, are subject to the power of a court of equity to raise therefrom the money due and chargeable thereon.—Vose v. Internal Imp. Fund, Case No. 17,008.

§ 43. —— Election to take property or proceeds.

The person entitled to the resulting trust is not obliged to take the land, but may elect to take the money.—Philips v. Crammond, Case No. 11,092.

Where the identity of a trust fund converted by the trustee can be traced, the cestui que trust may elect to take it, though it has greatly increased in value.—Piatt v. Oliver, Cases Nos. 11,115, 11,116.

A bill praying for specific relief may be considered as an election.—Piatt v. Oliver, Case No. 11,116.

§ 44. —— Trust property transferred to third persons.

The beneficiaries may follow a trust fund into the hands of any one receiving it with notice of the trust.—In re Tesson, Case No. 13,844; United States v. Waterborough, Id. 16,648.

One purchasing the legal title, with notice of a prior equitable title, is trustee for the holder of the equitable title; but, if the latter encouraged the purchaser to pay the purchase money, the legal title will not be disturbed in equity.—Kurtz v. Bank of Columbia, Case No. 7,949.

An individual having an interest in certain real estate held by a trustee must be presumed to know the nature of his title and the acts of the trustee, and on a sale by the trustee cannot claim to be an innocent purchaser without notice.—Piatt v. Oliver, Case No. 11,115.

Persons who loan money on certificates of stock which state that the borrower holds them in trust, with knowledge that the same is borrowed for the private use of the trustee, are liable to the cestui que trust.—Jaudon v. National City Bank, Case No. 7,230.

Where an officer of a bank, being a member of a firm, lends to it money of the bank, it cannot be followed into the hands of the firm.—Case v. Beauregard, Case No. 2,487.

Where a husband, a trustee of land in which his wife has a life interest, conveys the same, the wife also signing the deed, and deposits the proceeds in a firm of which he was a member, the wife has no title in the money so deposited.—In re Chisolm, Case No. 2,687.

A broker for an army paymaster, who accepts his official checks in payment for stock transactions, is charged with notice of the trust which a suitable inquiry would have revealed, and is liable to the government for property thus embezzled.—United States v. Polhamus, Case No. 16,062.

A cotrustee purchased in his own name an equity of redemption sold to enforce payment of a judgment recovered by the trustees. Held, that a purchaser from him obtained a good title.—Cushing v. Smith, Case No. 3,511.

Purchasers who took with notice of an invalid execution of a trust in their chain of title, who believed their title good, where the trust is enforced against the land, are entitled to the amount of incumbrances which they have paid, and permanent improvements made, as well as advances they have made to the cestuis que trustent, to be offset against the profits.—Wormeley v. Wormeley, Case No. 18,047.

When the principal can trace his property as distinct from that of the factor, he can recover it in whosesoever hands it may come.—Thompson v. Perkins, Case No. 13,972.

A judgment creditor is not a bona fide purchaser who as such is protected against a resulting trust.—Flanders v. Thompson, Case No. 4,853.

§ 45. Actions—Grounds of action.

Equity will not lend its aid to enforce a trust made to defraud creditors.—Hunter v. Marlboro', Case No. 6,908.

A trust created by a release of all claim in land to another for the purpose of freeing it from all claims of the releasor, so as to induce others to advance funds for its improvement, will be enforced in equity.—Jenkins v. Eldredge, Case No. 7,266.

The heirs of a deceased beneficiary whose estate has been fully settled, and debts satisfied, may maintain suit in respect to a trust in real estate, notwithstanding it has in equity been converted into personalty.—Bunnel v. Stoddard, Case No. 2,135.

An action at law will not lie by a successor of a deceased trustee against his administrator to recover the trust fund.—Curtis v. Smith, Case No. 3,505.

§ 46. —— Limitations and laches.

Constructive trusts being purely of equitable cognizance, lapse of time is no absolute bar to relief; and, when the trust arises out of fraud, each case is to be determined on its own circumstances.—Stevens v. Sharp, Case No. 13,410; Manning v. Hayden, Id. 9,043.

Neither lapse of time, nor any defense analogous to the statute of limitations, can be set up by the trustee of an express trust as a defense to his liability to execute the trust.—Hancock v. Walsh, Case No. 6,012.

The statute of limitations does not run against an established trust.—Piatt v. Oliver, Case No. 11,115; Walton v. Coulson, Id. 17,132.

The statute does not run against an equitable title, nor in favor of one.—Baird v. Wolfe, Case No. 760.

Time begins to run against a trust as soon as it is openly disavowed by the trustees insisting upon an adverse right and interest, which is unequivocally made known to the cestui que trust.—Robinson v. Hook, Case No. 11,956; Baker v. Whiting, Id. 787.

The principle that the statute will not protect trustees applies only to express, not to constructive, trusts.—Hayman v. Keally, Case No. 6,265.

Neither the trustee of an express trust, guilty of malversation, nor a confederate procuring the property of the beneficiaries by fraud, can claim a bar by lapse of time.—Bunnel v. Stoddard, Case No. 2,135.

Where a mortgagee in possession under an absolute deed, with an agreement that the mortgagor might redeem when he found it convenient, sells the land to a bona fide purchaser, and so destroys the equity of redemption, a court of equity will treat him as a prospective trustee, so the trust is not barred till the expiration of six years from the discovery of a right to an account.—Wyman v. Babcock, Case No. 18,-113.

A residuary legatee who took real estate subject to the payment, in three years after testator's death, of a certain sum to another, in trust for testator's children, held not an express trustee, and the claim was barred after 30 years. —In re O'Neale, Case No. 10,512.

Those trusts which are the mere creatures of a court of equity, and are not within the cognizance of a court of law, are not within the operation of the statutes.—Wisner v. Odgen, Case No. 17,914.

§ 47. —— Parties.

In a suit by a surety to cancel a conveyance of land made by him in trust to secure a note of the principal, the trustee is a necessary, and not a nominal, party.—Teal v. Walker, Case No. 13,812.

The rights of different parties in trust property may be enforced in one suit, when they claim under a common source of title, and assert a joint wrong, involving the trust property.—Bunnel v. Stoddard, Case No. 2,135.

In a suit in equity to convert the holders of the legal title to land into trustees for the true owners, a previous holder of such legal title, who has parted with all his interest in it, is not a necessary party.—Hardy v. Harbin, Case No. 6,060.

In a suit to enforce a trust created by a person since deceased, and also to set aside certain conveyances procured from her heirs, as alleged, by fraud, the administrator of the ancestor, and the heirs or their representatives, are properly joined as complainants.—Bunnel v. Stoddard, Case No. 2,135; Allen v. Simons, Id. 237.

In a suit to enforce a trust, where one of the joint equitable owners with plaintiff is out of the jurisdiction, and will not join in the suit, the court has power to proceed in his absence.—Scudder v. Calais Steamboat Co., Case No. 12,-566.

§ 48. —— Pleading and evidence.

It need not be alleged that a trust in lands was created by writing, for that will be presumed until the contrary appears. The statute of frauds requiring such trusts to be created or evidenced by writing is a rule of evidence, not of pleading.—Lamb v. Starr, Case No. 8,021.

The party who alleges a trust has the burden of establishing it.—Prevost v. Gratz, Case No. 11,406.

The record of a suit in admiralty brought by a trustee is admissible, in favor of the cestuis que trustent, to show the recovery, and the title on which it rested.—Church v. Shelton, Case No. 2,714.

I. GOVERNMENT AND OFFICERS.

§ 1. Nature of the Union.

Cases on the subject of sovereignty reviewed by Hughes, J.—Lee v. Kaufman, Case No. 8,-191.

All powers of the United States government arise from the grant expressed in their written constitution. None of the prerogatives of the English crown devolved by succession upon them.—Russell v. Forty Bales Cotton, Case No. 12,154.

The United States, in their political capacity, are a collective, invisible body, and can only act by their officers, who constitutionally and legally administer the government, and by the agents duly appointed by them.—United States v. Hillegas, Case No. 15,366.

§ 2. Territory, boundaries, and jurisdiction.

The right to acquire territory by cession is incidental to treaty-making power.—American Ins. Co. v. Canter, Case No. 302a.

The boundary line between the United States and the British provinces on the Passamaquoddy is the middle of the stream or channel, running the line at low-water mark.—The Fame, Case No. 4,634.

But each nation may also have a common right of passage and navigation over the whole river or bay, where it is necessary for the convenient access and trade of its own ports.—The Fame, Case No. 4,634.

The small island called "Pope's Folly," in the Bay of Passamaquoddy, is within the jurisdiction of the United States.—Open Boat, Case No. 10,548.

The purchase of lands by the United States for public purposes within the territorial limits of a state does not of itself oust the jurisdiction of sovereignty of the state over such lands.—United States v. Cornell, Case No. 14,867.

Where the purchase of land for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, or other needful buildings is made by consent of the state legislature, such land, under the constitutional provision, falls within the exclusive legislation of congress.—United States v. Cornell, Case No. 14,867.

On the admission of Kansas into the Union, jurisdiction within forts of the United States within the state was not excepted, and the consent of the state is necessary to the exercise of federal jurisdiction therein.—United States v. Stahl, Case No. 16,373.

Congress has exclusive legislative power over a place ceded by a state for a military post, though the state reserves a right to send process therein.—United States v. Knapp, Case No. 15,-538.

Congress can legislate in respect of murder only where the crime is connected with some subject-matter or was committed in some place which brings it within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government.—United States v. Ward, Case No. 16,639.

§ 3. Congress.

The senate may punish for contempts of its authority in cases of which it has jurisdiction.—Ex parte Nugent, Case No. 10,375.

The warrant of commitment need not set forth the particular facts which constitute the alleged contempt.—Ex parte Nugent, Case No. 10,375.

An inquiry by the senate as to the violation of a rule of secrecy in relation to pending treaties is within its jurisdiction, and it may punish for contempt of such rule.—Ex parte Nugent, Case No. 10,375.

The senate has a right to hold secret sessions whenever in its judgment the proceedings shall require secrecy, and may pronounce judgment in secret session for a contempt which took place in secret session.—Ex parte Nugent, Case No. 10,375.

A commitment for contempt by the senate or house of representatives cannot be inquired into by any other body or court, either by habeas corpus or otherwise.—Ex parte Nugent, Case No. 10,375.

The superintendent of public printing is subject wholly to the control of the joint committee of congress on printing. Act Aug. 26, 1852.—United States v. Seaman, Case No. 16,245a.

Privilege of members of congress from service of process, see "Process," § 6.

§ 4. President.

The president has no power to interfere with a public prosecution, except to put an end to it and discharge the accused. He has no power to change the proceedings, nor the place of trial.—United States v. Corrie, Case No. 14,869.

The president's power of controlling an officer is limited to those functions which, by law, are to be exercised by the will of the president, and in which his order would be a justification.—United States v. Kendall, Case No. 15,517.

In the case of a letter written to the president, and in the hands of the prosecuting attorney, the president alone can decide as to the propriety of withholding parts of it, and he cannot delegate his discretion.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,694.

The interposition of the president to protect abroad the lives and property of citizens of the United States is a matter resting in his discretion.—Durand v. Hollins, Case No. 4,186.

Compelling attendance as witness, see "Witnesses," § 2.
Powers of president, see, also, "Habeas Corpus," § 16; "Militia"; "Neutrality Laws," § 13; "Pardon," § 1.
Power to establish blockade, see "War," § 26.

§ 5. Executive departments.
Orders issued by the department of state in relation to such public measures as are not immediately connected with the duties of some other department are to be considered as orders of the president.—Lockington v. Smith, Case No. 8,448.

The head of a department is authorized, in the administration of the duties of his office, to employ agents, and to determine when an exigency arises demanding their employment.—United States v. Potter, Case No. 16,076.

The secretary of the treasury has no power to compromise criminal proceedings pending in court.—United States v. George, Case No. 15,198.

An assignment of a bond for jail limits to the United States, when they are plaintiffs, is valid, and its acceptance by the secretary of the treasury will be presumed to have been authorized.—United States v. Noah, Case No. 15,894.

The direction of the president will be presumed, where money is advanced by the direction of the head of a proper department.—United States v. Cutter, Case No. 14,911.

The construction of a law by the navy department, and the practice under it, cannot be allowed to alter the law, nor to control its construction in a court of justice.—Goldsborough v. United States, Case No. 5,519.

An order issued by the secretary of the navy to an officer of the navy to apply a sum of money to expenses resulting from injuries incurred while on special duty cannot be controlled by the accounting officers of the treasury.—United States v. Jones, Case No. 15,493a.

A regulation of the treasury department made pursuant to an act of congress is of the same force as if incorporated in the body of the act itself.—United States v. Barrows, Case No. 14,529.

The regulations of a department in settling its accounts are subject to the revision of a court and jury, when they work manifest injustice to individuals.—United States v. Cadwalader, Case No. 14,706.

A marshal obeying order of secretary of war, rather than that of court, should not be punished for contempt of court.—Ex parte Benedict, Case No. 1,292.

The relation of the executive to the judicial department stated in an opinion by Washington, J.—Lockington v. Smith, Case No. 8,448.

§ 6. Officers—Qualifications.
A person disqualified by the fourteenth amendment from holding office, by having engaged in the Rebellion after taking an oath to support the constitution of the United States, is indictable, under Act May 31, 1870, § 15, for subsequently accepting the office of sheriff.—United States v. Powell, Case No. 16,079.

Accepting and holding the office of justice of the peace under the Confederate government is not of itself sufficient evidence of engaging in the insurrection.—United States v. Powell, Case No. 16,079.

Acts done under compulsion of force, or of a well-grounded fear of bodily harm, do not come within the constitutional provision.—United States v. Powell, Case No. 16,079.

§ 7. —— Appointment and tenure.
Under article 2 of the constitution, all offices under the federal government must be established by law, except where the constitution itself otherwise provides.—United States v. Maurice, Case No. 15,747.

A person appointed to an office without authority, and who never performed an official duty as such officer, is not an officer de jure or de facto.—Schenck v. Peay, Case No. 12,451.

An appointment by the president to an office, during a recess of the senate, to fill a vacancy happening by the expiration of a term when the senate was in session, cannot constitutionally take effect.—In re District Attorney of United States, Case No. 3,924.

Where a session of congress passes without the filling of an office which was created and took effect during a previous session of the senate, the president cannot make a valid appointment during a recess of the senate.—Schenck v. Peay, Case No. 12,451.

Act July 23, 1868, to authorize the temporary supplying of vacancies in the executive department, applied to existing vacancies.—American Wood-Paper Co. v. Glen's Falls Paper Co., Case No. 321a.

A "permanent agent" is one appointed by the president with the advice and consent of the senate.—Armstrong v. United States, Case No. 548.

There is no distinction between foreign and domestic agents of the government, under Act 1809, as to the mode of appointment and tenure of office.—Armstrong v. United States, Case No. 548.

Where the appointing power is the president and senate, acting concurrently, the president alone has not the power of removal, in the absence of legislation and precedent to the contrary.—United States v. Avery, Case No. 14,481.

Where, from the beginning, congress has practically conceded the authority to the president to make removals, without the consent of the senate, from offices to which appointments were made for fixed terms by consent of the senate, the courts cannot deny such power.—United States v. Avery, Case No. 14,481.

§ 8. —— Powers.
A contract by the clerk of the house of representatives, made with a person to furnish wood, where no appropriation has been made to pay for the same, is not binding on either party.—United States v. Derringer, Case No. 14,950a.

A contract made with the secretary of the navy cannot be rescinded by the chief of the bureau having charge of such contracts.—United States v. Shaw, Case No. 16,266.

Under Act May 29, 1830, the solicitor of the treasury has authority to compromise suits and take lands in trust for the United States, and control and dispose of the same.—United States v. Lane, Case No. 15,559.

An agent charged with enforcing claims due the United States may exercise reasonable discretion in the management and compromise of suits.—United States v. Hudson, Case No. 15,413.

The executive may compromise doubtful claims by taking a conveyance of lands, in satisfaction, and may afterwards sell and convey them.—United States v. Hudson, Case No. 15,413.

A federal officer cannot, without the authority of congress, submit to arbitration a dispute as to the riparian rights of the United States.—United States v. Ames, Case No. 14,441.

The principles of natural equity governing the relation of principal and agent to each other apply in the case of government agencies.—United States v. Jarvis, Case No. 15,468.

The United States are not bound by the declarations and representations of their agent, unless it is clear that he was acting within the scope of his authority, and was empowered to make the declaration.—United States v. Martin, Case No. 15,732.

The government is not bound by the acts of its officers in excess of their powers.—United States v. City Bank, Case No. 14,796.

§ 9. —— Liabilities.

Executive federal officers are personally liable at law in the ordinary forms of action for illegal official, ministerial acts, or omissions, to the injury of an individual.—United States ex rel. Stokes v. Kendall, Case No. 15,517.

A public agent of the government, contracting for the use of the government, is not personally liable, although the contract be under his seal.—Hodgson v. Dexter, Case No. 6,565.

A public ministerial officer who caused the arrest of one residing in the rebellious states on an order emanating from the president is not liable for false imprisonment unless he co-operated with or induced the president to issue the order with motive to oppress.—Lamar v. Dana, Case No. 8,006.

An officer paying money of the United States to the Confederate States under compulsion is not liable therefor, especially as the Confederate government was recognized as a belligerent by the United States.—United States v. Huger, Case No. 15,415.

Instructions not supported by law are illegal, and the inferior officer is not bound to obey them.—Gilchrist v. Collector of Charleston, Case No. 5,420.

The clerk of the house of representatives is not personally responsible in damages for refusing to give the public printing to a person to whom the preceding clerk had promised it.—Davis v. Garland, Case No. 3,635.

Government moneys in the hands of the assistant quartermaster for disbursement, deposited by him with an assistant treasurer of the United States, still continue to be moneys of the United States, and such treasurer is not liable in assumpsit to the depositor therefor.—Morgan v. Van Dyck, Case No. 9,810.

§ 10. —— Compensation, fees, and expenses.

The compensation of special officers employed by the head of a department may be fixed by special agreement.—United States v. Cadwalader, Case No. 14,706.

Where the accounts of a public officer employed by the head of a department under a special contract are settled, and a certain rate of compensation allowed, he continues to be entitled to the same rate of compensation until a new agreement is made.—United States v. Cadwalader, Case No. 14,706.

An officer with a salary payable quarterly, appointed for four years "unless sooner removed by the president," is not entitled to his salary to the end of a quarter during which he is removed.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,321.

The register of the treasury, though receiving pay as such, held entitled to compensation as agent for disbursing money appropriated for contingent expenses of the treasury department, library of congress, and other appropriations for public purposes.—United States v. Nourse, Case No. 15,901.

The executive cannot alter compensation given to a public officer or agent by act of congress.—Goldsborough v. United States, Case No. 5,519.

The head of a department has discretionary power to allow for a bona fide performance of service by a public officer, or a bona fide expenditure of money, though not so expressly authorized by law.—United States v. Duval, Case No. 15,015.

Where a public officer, at the request of the head of a department, performs other public duties than those properly belonging to his office, he is entitled to extra compensation.—United States v. Duval, Case No. 15,015.

Construction of Act Aug. 6, 1846, §§ 6, 22, and Act June 30, 1864, § 170, as to the allowance to an assistant treasurer of commissions on the sale of stamps.—United States v. Butterfield, Case No. 14,703.

A receiver of public moneys is entitled to 1 per cent. on moneys received until the allowance amounts to $2,500, though the same accrue within the first six months of the year.—United States v. McCarty, Case No. 15,657.

The commission should be paid quarterly as it arises, and payment cannot be refused by the treasury department because the whole amount accrues in the first two quarters.—United States v. McCarty, Case No. 15,657.

A receiver of public moneys is entitled to his commissions on moneys received, though he resigns or is removed from office at the termination of the first six months of the last year covered by his appointment.—United States v. Edwards, Case No. 15,026.

An officer who has realized money on an execution in favor of the United States may retain it by way of set-off for fees of his office due him from the United States.—United States v. Mann, Case No. 15,716.

Government agent must be reimbursed damages paid in consequence of protest of bill of exchange authorized to be drawn by him.—Armstrong v. United States, Case No. 548.

§ 11. —— Actions against.

A warrant of distress under Act May 15, 1820, has the effect of a judgment.—Armstrong v. United States, Case No. 548.

No claim of a public officer for a credit can be admitted on a trial unless presented to and disallowed by the accounting officers of the treasury. Act March 3, 1797. A suspension is not a disallowance.—United States v. Duval, Case No. 15,015.

In an action by the government against an officer or individual to recover moneys claimed of him, defendant is entitled to an allowance of all equitable demands of his against the United States which have been disallowed by the accounting officers.—United States v. Collier, Case No. 14,833.

An account duly authenticated from the treasury department is not per se evidence of a balance due on a former account, or of items transferred from the account of another person, or of items recharged.—United States v. Kuhn, Case No. 15,545.

The auditor's report of a balance due from a person accountable for public money is not evidence in an action for the debt.—United States v. Patterson, Case No. 16,008.

If the United States, suing on an account, introduce evidence of defendant's account current, showing a balance in his favor, he is entitled to a verdict therefor, unless plaintiff show errors or omissions turning the balance the other way.—United States v. Kuhn, Case No. 15,545.

A transcript from the treasury books charging the balance of a former settlement is not per se evidence warranting a verdict for such balance.—United States v. Laub, Case No. 15,568.

A receiver of public moneys is not entitled to offset rejected accounts for unauthorized clerk hire, fuel, lights, or for transmitted money. Office rent may be allowed under extraordinary circumstances.—United States v. Lowe, Case No. 15,635.

In an action to recover a balance due from a receiver of public moneys, a claim that a certain sum had been stolen from him held not supported, he never having presented a claim for a credit of such amount.—United States v. Reymert, Case No. 16,149.

§ 12. —— Accounting and settlement of accounts.

After a credit has been given by the United States, and the account settled, they cannot open the account and revoke the credit, unless originally given by fraud, imposition, or mistake.—United States v. Kuhn, Case No. 15,545.

Federal officers holding the public money as money of the United States are only accountable to the United States.—Vasse v. Comegyss, Case No. 16,894.

The acts of agents of the treasury department in stating and settling accounts of officers and issuing warrants for balances found due are ministerial acts, and the authority given by law must be strictly and literally pursued.—Ex parte Randolph, Case No. 11,558.

Payments by the post-office department to the treasury may be carried in quarterly by large "covering warrants."—Boody v. United States, Case No. 1,636.

§ 13. Liability on official bonds.

A public officer who receives money in advance for the contingencies of his office is a receiver of public money within the meaning of Act March 3, 1797.—United States v. Lee, Case No. 15,585.

The bondsmen of the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York are liable for moneys lost by his clerks while in his hands as an officer.—United States v. Butterfield, Case No. 14,703.

Sureties on a bond for the faithful execution of the agency of an officer in paying invalid pensioners are not answerable for his defaults in not paying navy and privateer pensions.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,686.

Sureties on the bond of a receiver of public moneys are only bound for the paying over of all moneys received after execution of the bond, and not for any previous shortage or defalcation.—United States v. Linn, Case No. 15,606.

The government cannot apply money received by a receiver of public moneys, and paid over, after the date of the bond, in discharge of a previous defalcation, to the prejudice of the new sureties.—Myers v. United States, Case No. 9,996.

The sureties on the bond of a receiver of public moneys are not liable for moneys received before the date of the bond, but during his term of office.—United States v. Spencer, Case No. 16,368.

As against the sureties on the bond of a receiver of public moneys, the government has no right to apply payments made after execution of the bond to the discharge of a shortage existing prior thereto.—United States v. Linn, Case No. 15,606.

The sureties on the bond of a receiver of public moneys are not liable for money which came into his hands the day after the expiration of his term of office.—United States v. Spencer, Case No. 16,367.

Where the government employs a person to perform labor neglected by a public officer pertaining to his duties, his sureties are liable only for a reasonable compensation for such labor.—United States v. Wann, Case No. 16,638.

Where an officer receiving a salary from the United States is surety for a defaulter, the continuance of the payment of his salary is no relinquishment of the claim against him as surety.—United States v. Beattie, Case No. 14,554.

Act May 15, 1820, providing for the better organization of the treasury department, substituted, by implication, the new official bond called for by the act for the former bond, and discharged the sureties on the latter, as to subsequent transactions.—United States v. Maurice, Case No. 15,747.

The United States, suing on an official bond, has the burden of showing that the principal failed to discharge the duties of his office.—United States v. Bell, Case No. 14,565.

In an action on a bond of a disbursing officer, the sureties may prove that a disputed item of credit claimed has been presented to and disallowed by the proper accounting officers, though the treasury transcript does not show such fact.—United States v. Corwin, Case No. 14,870.

In such action defendant is entitled to a credit for moneys reasonable in amount paid by such officer, and for services rendered by him in good faith, in the proper discharge of his official duties.—United States v. Corwin, Case No. 14,870.

United States, in an action upon a collector's bond, cannot obtain judgment against the surety for more than the penalty.—United States v. Ricketts, Case No. 16,159.

An assignment by a collector in trust to pay any judgment recovered on his official bond enables the United States, on recovering such judgment, to sue the trustees for an accounting.—United States v. Hoyt, Case No. 15,410.

But, where the first act of the United States in affirmance of the trust is the filing of their bill for an account, the trustees are not liable for property previously disposed of with the consent of the assignor and sureties.—United States v. Hoyt, Case No. 15,410.

Moneys collected by the government on execution may be proved as a credit in a subsequent action on the same bond, against a different party to the bond, without exhibiting the voucher for such payment to the treasury department.—Myers v. United States, Case No. 9,996.

II. PROPERTY, CONTRACTS, AND LIABILITIES.

Priority of claims in bankruptcy, see "Bankruptcy," § 430.

§ 14. Property.

The United States, purchasing land within a state merely to secure a debt, takes it as any other corporation, and cannot claim any of the immunities or prerogatives of a sovereign.—Elliot v. Van Voorst, Case No. 4,390.

No property belonging to the United States can be disposed of except by authority of an act of congress. Const. art. 4, § 3.—United States v. Nicoll, Case No. 15,879.

Neither the war department nor the treasury department has authority to sell public property put under its management or superintendence, and the bringing of an action for the price or value of such property is not an affirmance of a sale made without authority.—United States v. Nicoll, Case No. 15,879.

The Massachusetts laws of flowage do not apply to the case of machinery used by the United States on its lands, over which jurisdiction has been ceded to them.—United States v. Ames, Case No. 14,441.

The United States, in cases where congress has not provided adequate remedies for injuries to public property, may resort to those of common-law origin or those provided by the laws of the state.—United States v. Ames, Case No. 14,441.

The lex rei sitæ will govern the rights and remedies in relation to land owned by the United States within the limits of a state over which they have no cession of jurisdiction.—United States v. Ames, Case No. 14,441.

But lands over which jurisdiction has been ceded, or which are not within the limits of any state used for constitutional purposes, are subject only to the laws of congress in the case of conflict.—United States v. Ames, Case No. 14,441.

A suit in admiralty to enforce a lien given by the state law is not a judicial proceeding under such law, and the United States is not entitled in such suit to have the res discharged from arrest under Rev. St. § 3753.—The Revenue Cutter, Case No. 11,712.

§ 15. Contracts.

The United States government has power to make a contract as incident to its sovereignty. It may compromise a suit, and receive real and personal property in discharge of the debt, in trust, and sell the same.—United States v. Lane, Case No. 15,559.

The capacity of the United States to contract is co-extensive with the duties and powers of government; and every contract subserving the performance of a duty may be rightfully made. —United States v. Maurice, Case No. 15,747.

It is not essential to a contract between an individual and the government that it should express the circumstances under which it was made so precisely and distinctly as to show the motives inducing it, and the objects to be effected.—United States v. Maurice, Case No. 15,-747.

The rule that every contract, legal on its face, imports a consideration, and is presumed to be obligatory until the contrary is shown, if the parties be ostensibly able to contract, applies to government contracts.—United States v. Maurice, Case No. 15,747.

The duty of the government to secure its debts necessarily implies the means of securing them; and sureties may therefore be required to the bond of a government debtor.—United States v. Maurice, Case No. 15,747.

Quære, whether, if congress, after authorizing the construction of a bridge according to certain plans, arbitrarily changes the plans while the bridge is in course of construction, there is any breach of contract which will render the United States liable for the expenses necessary to make the change.—Newport & C. Bridge Co. v. United States, Case No. 10,186.

Where congress directed a change in the conditions previously prescribed by it for the construction of a bridge, and authorized the bridge company to sue the United States for the necessary cost and expenditures to be incurred in making the change, held, that this did not authorize the recovery of damages for which the bridge company became liable to a material man for a breach of contract rendered necessary by the change.—Newport & C. Bridge Co. v. United States, Case No. 10,186.

Act Feb. 16, 1876, appropriating $1,500,000 to the Centennial Exhibition, does not require repayment to the United States before stockholders of the exhibition shall be repaid their subscriptions, but only requires repayment before a percentage of the profits is paid to the stockholders.—Centennial Board of Finance v. Patterson, Case No. 2,545.

As to the existence of liens arising for work and labor done in connection with property of the government.—United States v. Wilder, Case No. 16,694.

§ 16. Right of government to priority of payment — Debts, persons, and property affected.

Act March 3, 1797, § 5, declaring that "where any revenue officer or other person thereafter becoming indebted to the United States by bond or otherwise shall become insolvent," the debt due to the United States shall be first satisfied, is limited by the title of the act to persons accountable for public money, and does not apply to all debtors of the United States.—United States v. Fisher, Case No. 15,103.

Act 1797, c. 74, giving a priority to the United States, applies to equitable as well as legal debts; but such priority cannot be enforced in a suit at law brought in the name of a private creditor, who has assigned his claim to the United States.—Howe v. Sheppard, Case No. 6,772.

A judgment in favor of the United States arising out of a fraudulent entry of goods is, in case of the debtor's insolvency, entitled to the same preference given to bonds for the payment of duties (Act 1799, § 65), but only in case of a general assignment of the debtor's property.—United States v. Wood, Case No. 16,755.

In case of the insolvency of surviving judgment debtors in a suit on a bond for customs duties, the United States may in equity recover the debt out of the assets of a deceased judgment debtor, whose estate was also insolvent, in virtue of their general priority.—United States v. Cushman, Case No. 14,908.

If both principal and surety be insolvent and assign to the same person, the funds of the principal to the extent of the surety's claim are deemed assets of the surety; so that, if he also be indebted to the United States, they may sue in equity against the assignee to insure their priority.—United States v. Hunter, Case No. 15,426.

A debt due from the administrator, and returned on the inventory as solvent, is presumed to have been collected, and is therefore assets in his hands applicable to the payment of a debt due from the deceased to the United States.—United States v. Eggleston, Case No. 15,027.

A bona fide conveyance, mortgage, or execution, before the right of preference in the United States has accrued by an act of insolvency, will pass the right of property freed from liability for debts due to the United States.—United States v. Delaware Ins. Co., Case No. 14,942.

The priority of the United States gives no lien on property which is under execution when it accrued.—United States v. Mechanics' Bank, Case No. 15,756.

§ 17. —— Insolvency, assignment, or attachment.

Insolvency or inability to pay debts by a debtor to the United States does not give the United States a preference, under Act 1790 (1 Stat. 145), Act 1797 (1 Stat. 512), and Act 1799 (1 Stat. 627), unless such insolvency is accompanied by a voluntary assignment of all the property of the debtor for the benefit of his creditors. —Thelluson v. Smith, Case No. 13,878.

The United States are not entitled to a priority under Act 1799, c. 128, § 65, out of funds in the hands of assignees, unless there be a general assignment by the debtor of all his property.—United States v. Munroe, Case No. 15,835.

The United States have a preference in the payment of customhouse bonds only in cases of notorious insolvency, such as assignment of the debtor's property, absconding, etc.—United States v. King, Case No. 15,536.

The United States have no priority in payment of their debts, under Act March 3, 1797, § 5, unless the assignment by the debtor be a general assignment, or in the case of legal insolvency, where, by operation of law, the debtor's property is taken out of his hands to be distributed by others.—United States v. Clark, Case No. 14,-807.

The assignee is liable only if he has notice of the debt to the United States, but the notice need be such only as is sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry.—United States v. Clark, Case No. 14,807.

The right of the United States to priority in the payment of their debts, and the remedies for its enforcement against assignees of debtors.—United States v. Clark, Case No. 14,807.

A deed by a debtor of the United States conveying all his property to trustees for payment of his debts, not including the debts of the United States, is an act of insolvency, so that the priority of the United States immediately attaches.—United States v. Marshal of District of North Carolina, Case No. 15,727.

The priority of the United States is not defeated, it seems, by the fact that the debtor afterwards recovers property in the right of his wife by legal proceedings, whatever the amount thereof.—United States v. Marshal of District of North Carolina, Case No. 15,727.

Whether property omitted from the debtor's deed is so inconsiderable as to show an intent to evade the statute is a question in the sound discretion of the court.—United States v. Marshal of District of North Carolina, Case No. 15,-727.

An assignment by partners of all their effects for the payment of their debts, for which the partnership estate is inadequate, is an act of insolvency which will give the United States preference in the payment of their debts against the firm or its members.—United States v. Shelton, Case No. 16,272.

The fact that a creditor gave up his intention of levying in consideration of a general assignment in trust, first to pay his claim, and then the debt of the United States, will not prevent the assignment being fraudulent and void as against the United States.—United States v. Mott, Case No. 15,826.

An assignment, to entitle the United States to their priority (Act March 3, 1797, § 5), must be an assignment of all the debtor's property, but it need not be for the benefit of all his creditors.—United States v. Mott, Case No. 15,826.

A conveyance, by a known insolvent, of all his property, to one or more creditors in discharge of their own claims, not exceeding the sum due them, is not a "voluntary assignment," within Act 1799, § 65, so as to be affected by the priority of the United States, unless made with intent to evade such priority.—United States v. McLellan, Case No. 15,698.

If an assignment does not on its face purport to be of all the debtor's property, the United States, to obtain priority, must show that it does in fact transfer all.—United States v. Langton, Case No. 15,560.

The omission of a small part of the debtor's property from the assignment, by mistake or fraud, will not defeat the priority of the United States.—United States v. Langton, Case No. 15,-560.

The priority of the United States as a creditor, under Rev. St. §§ 3466, 3467, is secured only when by law or the act of the debtor his property is attached, sequestered or being administered for the benefit of his creditors generally. —United States v. Wilkinson, Case No. 16,-695.

The attachment mentioned is not such an attachment as is authorized by the laws of Missouri, which is for the exclusive benefit of the creditor who makes it.—United States v. Wilkinson, Case No. 16,695.

§ 18. —— Nature and extent of the priority.

The priority of the United States is not affected by the local rule that lands consisting of different parcels, subject to a general incumbrance, are, in equity, to be charged in the inverse order of alienation of the separate fund.—United States v. Duncan, Case No. 15,003.

Act March 3, 1797, § 5, does not give to one part of a debt due to the United States a priority over any other part, nor does it affect the right of the debtor to apply a payment of money in his hands to either of two debts to the United States.—United States v. Cochran, Case No. 14,821.

Where the United States have various debts due by bonds with different sureties, payments by the assignees must be applied pro rata.—United States v. Amory, Case No. 14,443.

The United States are not entitled to a preference over firm creditors for the payment of the individual debt of a partner out of the assets of the partnership.—United States v. Duncan, Case No. 15,003; Same v. Evans, Id. 15,062.

The United States have not priority, under Act March 3, 1797, over the allowance to the widow of a deceased debtor, under the state law.—Postmaster General v. Robbins, Case No. 11,314.

The priority given to the United States (Rev. St. § 3466) is not a lien upon the property of the insolvents in the hands of the assignee or administrator, but only a right to a priority of payment out of the proceeds of such property after notice of the claim.—United States v. Eggleston, Case No. 15,027.

The necessary expenses of administration are to be paid before a debt due to the United States. —United States v. Eggleston, Case No. 15,027.

A debt due to the United States is to be preferred to the expenses of the last illness; but, where the same have been duly paid by the administrator without notice of the claim of the government, the priority of the latter is lost.—United States v. Eggleston, Case No. 15,027.

The administrator is bound to discharge taxes and funeral charges before satisfying the claim of the United States as a creditor.—United States v. Eggleston, Case No. 15,027.

Expenses incurred by an assignee in insolvency in recovering a demand are chargeable on the fund, and the right of the United States to priority attaches to the residue.—United States v. Hunter, Case No. 15,427.

§ 19. —— Relative right of United States and other lien creditors.

The priority of the United States does not yield to the claims of any creditors, however high may be the dignity of their debts.—United States v. Duncan, Case No. 15,003.

The acts giving the United States preference in cases of insolvency will not be so construed as to destroy prior legal liens.—United States v. Sheriff of Charleston, Case No. 16,276.

The priority of the United States does not supersede a mortgage on land, nor a judgment made perfect by the issue of an execution and a levy on real estate.—United States v. Duncan, Case No. 15,003.

The priority of the United States does not entitle them to prior satisfaction by attachment and levy over prior attaching creditors.—United States v. Canal Bank, Case No. 14,715.

Execution creditors may sell vessels on which the government has a lien under chattel mortgages made for advances to build them, subject to such lien, where a sale under the mortgages can only be had on six months' notice.—United States v. Collins, Case No. 14,834.

The United States, not made parties to a bill in a state court for the payment of partnership debts out of partnership assets in the hands of the administrator of a partner who had died insolvent indebted to the United States, are not bound by the decree rendered therein.—United States v. Duncan, Case No. 15,003.

§ 20. —— Proceedings to enforce priority.

State statutes in relation to the proof of claims against decedents' estates are not binding on the United States in the collection of their debts.—United States v. Backus, Case No. 14,491.

The United States are not bound by general words in a statute, but only when included expressly or by necessary implication.—United States v. Hewes, Case No. 15,359.

The United States and their debtors are not included in the provisions of Act Feb. 28, 1839, to abolish imprisonment for debt.—United States v. Hewes, Case No. 15,359.

§ 21. Estoppel.

The government is not ordinarily bound by an estoppel.—Johnson v. United States, Case No. 7,419.

III. FISCAL MANAGEMENT, PUBLIC DEBT, AND SECURITIES.

§ 22. Money—Wrongful issue.

Bridge, railroad, and passenger railway companies may issue tickets good for one trip, without violating Act July 17, 1862, prohibiting the issuance by private persons or corporations of obligations intended to circulate as money, etc. —United States v. Monongahela Bridge Co., Case No. 15,796.

Sufficiency of indictment under Act July 7, 1838, c. 212, § 1, to restrain the circulation of small notes and currency in the District of Columbia.—Stettinius v. United States, Case No. 13,387.

§ 23. Redemption of forged notes.

The receipt for redemption by the assistant treasurer of certain notes of the United States as genuine will not bind the United States in any manner if the notes were not in fact genuine; and an action will lie to recover the amount paid thereon, irrespective of the bona fides of defendant.—United States v. Cooke, Case No. 14,854.

The United States may recover back money paid by their assistant treasurer for the redemption of forged treasury notes or treasury notes which, being printed by the treasury department and ready for issue, were not in fact issued.—Cooke v. United States, Case No. 3,178.

In an action by the United States to recover the amount of money paid on notes presented for retirement, on the ground that they were not genuine, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that fact.—United States v. Cooke, Case No. 14,854.

IV. CLAIMS AGAINST UNITED STATES.

§ 24. Assignment.

The term "claim" (Rev. St. § 3477) held not to include claims for supplies furnished the Oregon expedition to protect the emigrants of 1854.—Dowell v. Cardwell, Case No. 4,039.

The proof of an assignment of a claim for indemnity cannot be by parol.—Bell v. Lewis, Case No. 18,231.

§ 25. Contracts to collect—Lien.

An agent employed to collect a claim against the United States for a certain per centum of the amount realized, whether in cash or scrip, has a lien upon the fund for his compensation.—Dowell v. Cardwell, Case No. 4,039.

§ 26. Rejection or allowance.

The rules prescribed by the treasury department for the adjustment of claims against the government will, if reasonable, be respected; otherwise if they go to a complete denial of justice.—United States v. Mann, Case No. 15,716.

Where congress has acted upon a claim for damages to property from its occupancy by the government troops, no further allowance can be made.—United States v. Williams, Cases Nos. 16,720, 16,721.

§ 27. False and fraudulent claims.

To constitute the offense of knowingly presenting a false paper in support of a claim, with intent to defraud the United States (Act March 3, 1823, § 1), it is not necessary that the claim be in favor of the accused.—United States v. Kohnstamm, Case No. 15,542.

It is a felony to transmit to the pension office forged papers in support of a claim for bounty land. Act March 3, 1823, § 1.—United States v. Wilcox, Case No. 16,691.

An indictment for transmitting such forged papers is sufficient if it show that the purpose was to obtain the allowance of the claim, though they were not sufficient for that purpose.—United States v. Wilcox, Case No. 16,691.

The repealing clause of Act March 2, 1863, saves prosecution under Act March 3, 1823, for offenses previously committed.—United States v. Kohnstamm, Case No. 15,542.

In Rev. St. § 3490, prescribing penalties for the presentation of fraudulent claims against the government, the word "person" does not include corporations.—United States v. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co., Case No. 15,506.

Making a claim against the government within Rev. St. § 5438, punishing the making of false or fraudulent claims, consists in asking or demanding payment for services.—United States v. Bittinger, Case No. 14,599.

The making and the presenting of false claims against the United States are distinct offenses, under Rev. St. § 5438.—Ex parte Shaffenburg, Case No. 12,696.

The offense under Rev. St. § 5438, is not sufficiently charged in the words of the statute; but the facts constituting it must be alleged with such particularity as to apprise the accused with reasonable certainty of the nature of the accusation against him.—United States v. Green, Case No. 15,257.

The action to recover a penalty or damages for making a false claim against the United States (Rev. St. §§ 3490-3493) may be brought without the previous authority or consent of the district attorney; and under Civ. Code Or. § 7981, the complaint may be subscribed by the attorney of the person who brings it.—United States v. Griswold, Case No. 15,266.

Conspiracy to defraud United States, see "Conspiracy," § 2.

V. ACTIONS.

Jurisdiction of suits by and against United States, see "Courts," §§ 2, 100.

§ 28. Action by United States—Right of.

Congress cannot create damages to be recovered by the United States by suit, or cause acts to be wrongs to the United States, which are in their nature wrongs to another.—United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., Case No. 16,598.

The United States may sue in debt to recover the penalty given by Act Aug. 30, 1852, notwithstanding section 41, which provides that all penalties "may be recovered in an action of debt by any person who will sue therefor."—United States v. Bougher, Case No. 14,627.

A suit to redress fraudulent acts on the part of the managing officers of the Union Pacific Railroad Company cannot be obtained in a suit brought by the United States.—United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., Case No. 16,598.

Construction of Act March 3, 1873, § 4, directing a suit in equity to be instituted in the name of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company and others.—United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., Case No. 16,598.

The United States cannot convert to themselves the property of another by their own declaration or their own authority, nor can they maintain an action in their own name against one to recover a debt which he may owe to another.—United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., Case No. 16,598.

Where the money of the government is improperly placed in a bank, the illegality of the transaction is no bar to a recovery.—United States v. City Bank, Case No. 14,796.

On a note given to an agent of the United States for their benefit suit may be brought in their name.—United States v. Boice, Case No. 14,619.

The United States, like individuals, can sue in their own name without special authority.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,517.

A bill of exchange indorsed to the treasurer of the United States may be declared on in the name of the United States, and an averment that it was indorsed immediately to them will be good.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,517.

§ 29. —— Remedies and procedure.

The United States, when suing to enforce demands against individuals, are subject to the same rules of decisions and limitation of remedies as private parties, in the absence of an act of congress.—United States v. Zerega, Case No. 16,786.

The United States has the same remedy against the lands of delinquent collectors that the state gives against the lands of those against whom she has obtained judgment. 1 Stat. 275.—United States v. Graves, Case No. 15,250.

Where the United States enter the court as litigants, they waive their exemption from legal proceedings, and stand upon the same footing with private individuals.—United States v. Flint, Case No. 15,121.

Where the United States prosecute their suits in the state court, they are subject to the state law as to the manner of enforcing their rights.—Stearns v. United States, Case No. 13,341.

In such case a discharge from imprisonment of a judgment debtor under a law of the state will bar an action of debt on a bond given for the jail liberties.—Stearns v. United States, Case No. 13,341.

The process and forms of proceedings adopted by congress from the state laws are binding upon the United States as parties to an action.—United States v. Tetlow, Case No. 16,456.

The United States, as plaintiffs in an action at common law, are not exempt from the provisions of Act March 2, 1867, adopting the modifications, conditions, and restrictions upon imprisonment for debt existing by state laws by virtue of their prerogative.—United States v. Tetlow, Case No. 16,456.

The principle of the common law that a man shall not be taken twice in execution for the same cause is as applicable to the United States as to other creditors.—United States v. Watkins, Case No. 16,650.

§ 30. —— Power to institute.

A suit prosecuted in the name and for the benefit of the United States will not be recognized in the federal courts unless they are represented by the district attorney, or some one designated by him.—United States v. Stowell, Case No. 16,409; Same v. Doughty, Id. 14,986; Same v. McAvoy, Id. 15,654.

Quære, whether an action can, in any case, be brought for an individual in the name of the United States, by any attorney other than the district attorney, when the latter refuses to bring it.—United States v. Morris, Case No. 15,816.

§ 31. —— Limitation and laches.

A statute of limitations does not bind the government unless it be specially named.—United States v. Davis, Case No. 14,929; Miller v. Lindsey, Id. 9,580.

A state statute of limitations is ineffectual to bar a right of action secured to the United States by act of congress.—McGlinchy v. United States, Case No. 8,803; Perkins v. Same, Id. 10,990.

Neither the general statute of limitations nor that of Massachusetts as to executors and administrators binds the United States in a suit in the circuit court, and neither can be pleaded in bar of such suit.—United States v. Hoar, Case No. 15,373.

The statute of limitations does not run against the government, nor is it chargeable with delays, so as to raise a presumption of payment.—United States v. Williams, Cases Nos. 16,720, 16,721.

The fact that the United States is a stockholder does not exempt a corporation from the operation of the statute of limitations.—Bank of the United States v. M'Kenzie, Case No. 927.

§ 32. —— Parties.

The assignee of an insolvent debtor to the United States is a necessary party to a suit by them, for an accounting of property of the debtor, in the hands of third persons.—United States v. Couch, Case No. 14,874.

§ 33. —— Set-off and counterclaim.

A claim of damages sustained by a public officer against the government cannot be set off against a legal demand.—United States v. Wells, Case No. 16,663.

Unliquidated damages arising from torts may be set off against a government claim, but such damages can only include actual loss, not anticipated profits.—United States v. Buchanan, Case No. 14,678.

Claims against the government are not admissible as a set-off which have not previously been presented to and disallowed by the proper accounting officer, except in the case of absence from the United States, or unavoidable accident preventing such presentation.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,321.

The rejection of a claim by an officer authorized by special act to settle the same on equitable principles does not preclude its being set up as a set-off.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,321.

A set-off in a suit by the United States on a bill of exchange against a private individual, where the course required by the act for the settlement of accounts between the United States and receivers of public moneys has not been pursued, will be rejected.—United States v. Barker, Case No. 14,517.

A party claiming a set-off against the government has the burden of showing that the claim has been presented to the accounting officers, and disallowed.—United States v. Martin, Case No. 15,732.

A defendant sued by the United States is not entitled to a finding in any form of a sum due him by the United States in excess of the claim for which he was sued.—Schaumburg v. United States, Case No. 12,442.

§ 34. —— Judgment.
The right of the United States to summary judgment under Act March 3, 1797, c. 74, § 3, does not extend the suits brought by them as indorsees of promissory notes.—United States v. Blacklock, Case No. 14,604.

Act March 3, 1797, providing that judgment shall be given at the return term against debtors of the United States, on motion, is limited to cases in which the principal debtor is a party. —United States v. Lyon, Case No. 15,651.

§ 35. Actions against United States.
The United States cannot be sued.—United States v. Barney, Case No. 14,525.

Quære: Whether the United States can compulsorily be made a defendant to a foreclosure bill, where it holds a lien on the property.—Meier v. Kansas Pac. Ry., Case No. 9,394.

The United States can be brought into court by the entry of an order that it shall plead, etc., within a given time, and the service of a copy of such order upon the proper representatives of the government.—Fifth Nat. Bank v. Long, Case No. 4,780.

Jurisdiction of actions against United States, see "Courts," § 2.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS.

§ 1, Powers. § 2, Compensation.

§ 1. Powers.
The commissioners have no power to issue attachments returnable to the circuit courts of the United States.—Chittenden v. Darden, Case No. 2,688.

The commissioner has no power to direct the warrant to be returned before another commissioner.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

A commissioner of a United States court has not power to commit a citizen for an alleged contempt.—Ex parte Doll, Case No. 3,968.

A commissioner for a state appointed by the federal circuit court therein to take depositions in a case pending in said court has authority to administer an oath under the laws of the United States.—United States v. Coons, Case No. 14,-860.

§ 2. Compensation.
When performing the duties of a referee, a commissioner is entitled to master's compensation.—Crosby v. The Prince Albert, Case No. 3,-424b.

See, also, "Admiralty," § 145.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

I. APPOINTMENT AND TENURE.

§ 1, Appointment. § 2, Removal.

II. DEPUTIES AND ASSISTANTS.

§ 3, Appointment and qualification. § 4, Who is a deputy. § 5, Liabilities. § 6, Liability of marshal for acts of deputy. § 7, Compensation.

III. COMPENSATION AND REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES.

§ 8, Fees. § 9, Commissions. § 10, Mileage and traveling and transportation expenses. § 11, Poundage. § 12, Reimbursement of expenses. § 13, Interest on fees and expenses. § 14, Proceedings for collection.

IV. POWERS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

§ 15, Powers. § 16, Liabilities—Attachment. § 17, —— Custody of property. § 18, Arrest. § 19, Requiring bail and other bonds by marshal. § 20, Actions to enforce liability—Right of action. § 21, —— Pleading. § 22, —— Damages. § 23, Amercement and contempt.

V. LIABILITIES ON OFFICIAL BOND.

§ 24, Requisites and validity of bond. § 25, Acts of marshal rendering surety liable. § 26, Action on bond.

Disturbance of possession, or interference with, see "Courts," § 118.
Fees in admiralty, see "Admiralty," § 143.
—— in bankruptcy, see "Bankruptcy," §§ 663, 664.
Jurisdiction of actions on marshals' bonds, see "Courts," § 38.
Marshal of District of Columbia, see "District of Columbia," § 3.
Taxation of commissions, see "Costs," § 24.

I. APPOINTMENT AND TENURE.

§ 1. Appointment.
Upon a motion to discharge a defendant arrested upon a cap. ad res. by a marshal appointed by the president de facto of the United States, the court will not decide the question whether he was duly elected to that office.—Peyton v. Brent, Case No. 11,056.

§ 2. Removal.
Notice of removal from office is not necessary to effect such removal.—Overton v. Gorham, Case No. 10,626.

A marshal is removed by the receipt of a commission from the president by an appointee who takes the oath of office and gives the requisite bond, though no notice is given.—United States v. Bank of Arkansas, Case No. 14,515.

The acts of the marshal after the appointment of a new one, and before he received notice thereof, are good.—Bowerbank v. Morris, Case No. 1,726.

A sale on execution by a marshal after he has been removed is null and void.—United States v. Bank of Arkansas, Case No. 14,515.

II. DEPUTIES AND ASSISTANTS.

§ 3. Appointment and qualification.
A marshal has power to appoint a special bailiff to execute a particular process, where the state sheriffs have like power.—United States v. Jailer, Case No. 15,463.

A deputy's commission and proof that he was performing the duties of his office raise a presumption that he has taken all prerequisite oaths. —United States v. Hudson, Case No. 15,412.

Such presumption is not negatived by proof that the "iron-clad oath" (Act 1862) has not been deposited with the clerk of the district court, as it may lawfully be deposited elsewhere.—United States v. Hudson, Case No. 15,412.

§ 4. Who is a deputy.
A bailiff appointed by a marshal, and authorized to perform a particular act, becomes a special deputy.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

§ 5. Liabilities.
The deputy is an officer of the court, and may be held responsible as such.—Bagley v. Yates, Case No. 725; The Laurens, Id. 8,122.

The deputy may be attached for disobedience of an order to pay over money received on a judgment after return of execution.—Bagley v. Yates, Case No. 725.

§ 6. Liability of marshal for acts of deputy.
A marshal is not responsible for acts of his deputy not in the line of his duty.—Bagley v. Yates, Case No. 725.

A deputy marshal, after taking a debtor on capias ad respondendum, has no authority to receive payment thereof, and discharge the debtor; and his act is not binding on the marshal. But the act is a misfeasance in office, for which the marshal is responsible.—United States v. Moore, Case No. 15,802.

§ 7. Compensation.
The fees for a service by a deputy marshal legally belong to the marshal, and his receipt for them operates as a discharge from liability for such service.—Wintermute v. Smith, Case No. 17,897.

The legality of the service of subpœnas made by a deputy, and his right to fees, is not affected by the failure of the marshal to make a return of the appointment of such deputy to the district judge.—Wintermute v. Smith, Case No. 17,897.

The deputy's remedy for compensation for services performed by him is against the marshal for whom he performed the services.—Wintermute v. Smith, Case No. 17,897.

A sale of treasury notes by the marshal for currency at 8 per cent. premium, and a payment of his deputy in such currency, is a violation of the law.—United States v. Patterson, Cases Nos. 16,009, 16,010.

A marshal who pays over to his deputies or assistants, for taking a census, less funds than he received from the government, is liable to the penalty of $500. Act March 3, 1839.—United States v. Patterson, Cases Nos. 16,009, 16,010.

III. COMPENSATION AND REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES.

Compensation of deputies, see, ante, § 7.

§ 8. Fees.
If the state court compensates services similar to those performed by a marshal, although not performed there by a like officer, the marshal is entitled to the same compensation.—The Trial, Case No. 14,170.

Fees, when not regulated by law, are to be allowed upon the principles of a quantum meruit. —Bottomley v. United States, Case No. 1,689.

Fees of marshal for "a service," "aid," commitment and discharge, for keeping prisoners, etc. —Ex parte Paris, Case No. 10,714.

Fees of marshals in proceedings relating to slaves.—In re Runaways & Petitioners for Freedom, Case No. 12,137.

Marshal allowed two dollars for the service of each venire on town clerks.—United States v. Cogswell, Case No. 14,825; Same v. Smith, Id. 16,346.

Fees of marshal as keeper of alcohol seized for violation of internal revenue laws.—United States v. Three Hundred Barrels of Alcohol, Case No. 16,509.

Fees of marshal for attending examination and bringing in and guarding prisoners before a commissioner. Rev. St. § 829.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

The marshal is not entitled to fees for serving a rule to plead.—Parker v. Bigler, Case No. 10,726.

A marshal is not entitled to compensation for custody of property under process in admiralty, beyond $2.50 per day.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,725.

A marshal who holds property under several processes in admiralty is entitled to a per diem custody fee, to be apportioned among the cases in which the several processes were issued.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,725.

Where more than two days are employed in making an arrest, the necessity for the extra time must be shown.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

No fees can be allowed for an arrest in another state by a marshal believing at the time that the place of arrest is within his own state. —In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

Where the wrong person is arrested, the marshal can be allowed no fees of any kind.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

An officer who, in executing admiralty process in rem, does not take and hold actual and manifest possession, cannot charge custody fees, although he may be liable for the safe-keeping of the vessel.—The Hibernia, Case No. 6,455.

A marshal is not to be allowed for services as keeper or inspector of the state jails, except in a case where especially directed by the court.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,346.

A marshal who extends an execution on real estate for the government is entitled to his fees from the government, though the land be not yet sold or redeemed or in any way converted into money.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,346.

The marshal has no right to the fees provided by law in case of settlement where the settlement is made before the claimant appears in court.—Bone v. The Norma, Case No. 1,626.

§ 9. Commissions.
The marshal is entitled to the commissions on execution allowed by the state law where the money is paid without a sale of property.—Pomroy v. Harter, Case No. 11,263.

Where property is not sold, nor money made nor received by the marshal on execution, he is not entitled to half commissions.—Erwin v. Cummins, Case No. 4,525.

Under Rev. St. § 829, a marshal is entitled to a commission as for the sale of property in a suit in rem against a vessel, where process issued and a bond was given, though the amount of the final decree was paid before execution.—The City of Washington, Case No. 2,772.

A vessel was seized by the marshal under a monition, and thereafter was released on a stipulation for her appraised value. Held, that the marshal was not entitled to a commission on such appraised value, under Rev. St. § 829, providing for a commission to the marshal "when the debt or claim is settled by the parties without a sale of the property."—The Acadia, Case No. 23. But see The Russia, Case No. 12,170.

A marshal is not entitled to commissions on forfeited delivery bond.—Anonymous, Case No. 448.

A marshal is not entitled to commissions on interlocutory sales of prize.—The Avery, Case No. 671.

A marshal is not entitled to commissions on money paid to his deputies for taking a census. —United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,346.

The marshal may include his commissions in a forthcoming bond, and is also entitled to commissions upon an execution on the bond.—Thomas v. Brent, Case No. 13,893.

§ 10. Mileage and traveling and transportation expenses.
A marshal is entitled to actual mileage traveled on return of nulla bona.—Anonymous, Case, No. 448.

Where a marshal sends a process by mail to his deputy in a distant county, he is entitled to be paid mileage on such process; but, where he sends a deputy from the court house to a distant county for service, he is entitled to the reasonable expenses of the deputy, but not to mileage.—Anonymous, Case No. 437.

A marshal who traveled 160 miles to serve a witness residing, in an air line, within 100 miles from the place of trial will be allowed mileage for 100 miles only.—Parker v. Bigler, Case No. 10,726.

The marshal must name the place of service in his return, so that the correctness of the mileage charged may appear upon its face.—In re Donahoe, Case No. 3,979.

The expenses allowed for "traveling" must be actually proven by the marshal, deputy, or bailiff who incurred the expenses, and should be referred to specifically.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

Transportation fees should be allowed, notwithstanding the first name of the person arrested is wrongly given by affiant who accompanied the officer.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

The costs of transporting a guard should be allowed only where it is shown that he is necessary.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

Such costs will be allowed, even though the guards are summoned as witnesses and paid mileage.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

Mileage in transporting a prisoner should be allowed only for the route usually traveled.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

"Travel" or "mileage" is to be computed from the place where the process is returned to the place of service.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

Rev. St. § 829, adhered to as to the rule governing computation of mileage.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

A charge for constructive travel and attendance at the monthly rules disallowed.—United States v. Cogswell, Case No. 14,825; Same v. Smith, Id. 16,346.

A marshal having two or more processes at the same time, in the same proceeding, can charge mileage but once; but additional travel made necessary may be charged.—In re Donahoe, Case No. 3,979.

Mileage allowed in each case for serving warrants on different parties at the same place where the parties in whose favor they are served are not the same.—In re Crittenden, Case No. 3,393.

§ 11. Poundage.

Marshal held entitled to poundage where an insolvent debtor to the United States imprisoned on a ca. sa. is discharged therefrom by the secretary of the treasury "on payment of costs."—Townsend v. United States, Case No. 14,119.

The marshal is not entitled to poundage on the attachment of money on deposit in a bank, where the same is not taken into his actual custody.—Ringgold v. Lewis, Case No. 11,847.

Plaintiff is liable to the marshal for his whole poundage if he levy goods to the value of the debt, whether they be sold or not.—Mason v. Muncaster, Case No. 9,248.

§ 12. Reimbursement of expenses.

Marshal will be reimbursed for rent paid for an office for the clerk of the courts of the United States.—United States v. Cogswell, Case No. 14,825.

Claimants not liable to marshal for expenses attending seizure, on bonding vessel, pending appeal from decrees of condemnation.—The Aigburth, Case No. 105.

The marshal is entitled to a reasonable charge for dockage of a vessel which was on a marine railway when seized, and could not be removed without danger of sinking.—The Novelty, Case No. 10,368.

A notice to the marshal is not sufficient to relieve the libelant from expense of a keeper of the vessel arrested. Application must be made to the court.—The Independent, Case No. 7,016.

The marshal is entitled only to his actual necessary expenses for ship-keeping, which must be established by vouchers or otherwise to the satisfaction of the court.—The Free Trader, Case No. 5,091.

Expenses of marshal as keeper of alcohol seized for violation of internal revenue laws.—United States v. Three Hundred Barrels of Alcohol, Case No. 16,509.

A marshal who, in taking the census, advances money to pay the expenses, after repeated attempts to obtain it from the proper department, may retain the amount thus paid out of the public money in his hands.—United States v. Ten Eyk, Case No. 16,449.

The marshal is entitled to charge, as part of the expense of serving a writ in a criminal case, a per diem paid his deputy, not to exceed two dollars a day. Rev. St. § 829, par. 18.—United States v. Harker, Case No. 15,307.

The marshal cannot appoint an auctioneer to conduct a judicial sale at the expense of the government or of a private party, without the consent of the party for whose benefit the services are performed.—The Tubal Cain, Case No. 14,212.

Expenses incurred by the marshal for the purpose of establishing and settling his accounts with the government will be disallowed.—United States v. Cogswell, Case No. 14,825.

§ 13. Interest on fees and expenses.

The marshal may be allowed interest on expenditures.—In re Donahoe, Case No. 3,979; United States v. Cogswell, Id. 14,825.

And on fees.—United States v. Cogswell, Case No. 14,825. CONTRA, see In re Donahoe, Case No. 3,979.

The marshal is entitled to interest on sums due to him and not paid after demand, and must pay interest on sums due from him after demand.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,346.

§ 14. Proceedings for collection.

A marshal has a remedy by attachment to enforce payment of his fees.—Anonymous, Case No. 445. CONTRA, see In re Atlantic Mut. Life Ins. Co., Case No. 629.

Marshal cannot detain defendant on a ca. sa. for poundage, if plaintiff has received the debt and costs.—Causin v. Chubb, Case No. 2,527.

The person to whose use the suit is entered of record is not liable to the marshal for his poundage on a ca. sa.—Ringgold v. Hoffman, Case No. 11,846.

The marshal may recover his poundage from defendant, committed in execution, in an action of assumpsit.—Ringgold v. Glover, Case No. 11,845.

In case of dispute in regard to fees not regulated by law the matter will be referred to an auditor.—Bottomley v. United States, Case No. 1,689.

Though the certificate of a judge allowing a marshal's account is prima evidence of its legality and proper amount, the treasury department may reject it, if believed improper.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,346.

IV. POWERS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

§ 15. Powers.

The marshal has the right to take the posse, and to call on all citizens to aid him in arresting rioters, and the citizens have a right to arm themselves.—United States v. Fenwick, Case No. 15,086.

§ 16. Liabilities—Attachment.
The marshal and his deputies are personally answerable for failure to pay into court forthwith moneys attached by them.—The Laurens, Case No. 8,122.

A marshal attaching foreign coin must pay it into court as money, and cannot consider it as cargo merely.—The Laurens, Case No. 8,122.

§ 17. —— Custody of property.
A marshal who rents, without an order of the court, a building in his custody, is liable for injuries thereto by the tenants.—Perrin v. Epping, Case No. 10,996.

The marshal has no right, without consent of parties, to insure, at their expense, vessel in his custody, pending disposal of case in circuit court.—Burke v. The M. P. Rich, Case No. 2,162.

A marshal selling under a vend. ex. has no power to pay arrears of taxes out of the proceeds of other property sold under the same writ.—Bleeker v. Bond, Case No. 1,536.

A marshal is liable for malfeasance where he disposes of the property, to the injury of the defendant, without complying with the requisites of the law.—Corning v. Burdick, Case No. 3,246.

§ 18. Arrest.
The marshal is relieved from his liability for failure to bring in defendant on the return of the writ, where the latter has been discharged under the insolvent law.—Trundle v. Heise, Case No. 14,207.

A marshal having a person in custody under lawful process may use such force as is necessary to keep him in custody, and in doing so is not guilty of any crime against the state law.—Ex parte Sifford, Case No. 12,848.

Congress has power to protect officers making arbitrary arrests and imprisonments, where the writ of habeas corpus is suspended, by passing laws indemnifying them or declaring them not liable to legal proceedings.—McCall v. McDowell, Case No. 8,673.

§ 19. Requiring bail and other bonds by marshal.
The marshal is bound to take sufficient bail for the appearance of defendant, and he is judge of the sufficiency.—Winter v. Simonton, Case No. 17,892.

The marshal is bound to obey the writ as he receives it, where the statute is directory to the court or the clerk only, but in demanding bail he acts at his peril.—United States v. Mundell, Case No. 15,834.

An indorsement even by the court will not justify the marshal in requiring bail, where the statute does not require it.—United States v. Mundell, Case No. 15,834.

A marshal who takes sureties not freeholders on a replevin bond (in Indiana) is liable on their failure.—Bispham v. Taylor, Case Nos. 1,443, 1,444.

§ 20. Actions to enforce liability—Right of action.
The remedy against a marshal for failure of duty is by an action for a false return.—Corning v. Burdick, Case No. 3,246.

And not for a rule on the marshal for a return.—Segourney v. Ingraham, Case No. 12,-634.

§ 21. —— Pleading.
A declaration in an action against a marshal for neglect to make the money on a judgment must negative every presumption of duty on his part.—Bispham v. Taylor, Case No. 1,443.

An averment that the marshal took insolvent sureties, and not freeholders, on a replevin bond, is sufficient to charge him.—Bispham v. Taylor, Case No. 1,443.

§ 22. —— Damages.
If the loss of the debt be the direct legal consequence of failure to serve the process, the amount of the debt is the measure of damages; but the mere failure to serve the process does not imply the loss of the debt by the officer's negligence.—United States v. Moore, Case No. 15,802.

If a marshal levies on the property of a third person, pursuant to instructions, without any abuse of his authority, he is liable only for the injury actually sustained.—Pacific Ins. Co. v. Conard, Case No. 10,647.

In such case the rule of damages is the value of the goods, with interest from the time of taking them; or, if they are articles of merchandise, from the expiration of the usual term of credit on sales.—Pacific Ins. Co. v. Conard, Case No. 10,647.

If an auction sale has become necessary in consequence of the levy, the plaintiff will be entitled to recover the expenses of such sale; also the amount of the premium for insurance against fire effected on the goods. But he is not entitled to recover for money paid counsel, or other expenses incurred in prosecuting the suit.—Pacific Ins. Co. v. Conard, Case No. 10,647.

§ 23. Amercement and contempt.
The marshal, being called upon by the court to bring before them any defendant arrested by him upon any original writ or mesne process, according to the tenor of his return, and failing so to do, will, on motion, be amerced to the amount of the debt, or damages and costs, and judgment will be entered therefor, nisi, the second day of the next term.—Winter v. Simonton, Case No. 17,892.

If a defendant arrested upon a capias ad respondendum be discharged under the insolvent act, before the return of the writ, and fail to appear, the marshal cannot be amerced.—Williams v. Craven, Case No. 17,719.

If the marshal, upon a ca. resp., be amerced debt and costs nisi, the defendant may, on or before the next term, give bail, and exonerate the marshal.—Heyer v. Wilson, Case No. 6,446.

The resignation of a marshal or of his deputy does not oust the court's jurisdiction to punish for misconduct in office by attachment for contempt.—The Laurens, Case No. 8,122.

V. LIABILITIES ON OFFICIAL BOND.

§ 24. Requisites and validity of bond.
A bond given by a marshal payable to the president of the United States and his successors, instead of the United States, is not good, and the sureties are not liable thereon.—Jackson v. Simonton, Cases Nos. 7,146, 7,147.

§ 25. Acts of marshal rendering surety liable.
The marshal is liable upon his official bond if he suffer a debtor to escape after arrest upon a cap. ad sat., although he has him in court at the return day.—United States v. Brent, Case No. 14,639.

A marshal is liable on his official bond for failure of his deputy to serve original process; but the measure of his liability is the actual damage plaintiff receives by such negligence.—United States v. Moore, Case No. 15,802.

§ 26. Action on bond.
Rev. St. § 786, limiting the time within which actions must be commenced on marshal's bonds, does not apply to actions instituted by the United States.—United States v. Rand, Case No. 16,-116; Same v. Godbold, Id. 15,219.

In a suit by the government on a marshal's bond to recover moneys collected on execution, defendant cannot set off accounts which had been presented as a charge against the government in another claim, to which they have a good defense under the statute of limitations.—United States v. Prentice, Case No. 16,083.

Under Act April 10, 1806, it is optional with the injured party to bring suit on the marshal's bond in his own name, or in the name of the United States.—United States v. Davidson, Case No. 14,921.

Petition in suit upon marshal's bond should ask actual damages.—Adler v. Newcomb, Case No. 83.

In a declaration on a marshal's bond, it is not necessary to aver that the penalty has not been paid. The usual averment of the breach of the condition is sufficient.—Sperring v. Taylor, Case No. 13,235.

To an action on a marshal's bond for taking insufficient security on a replevin bond, a plea that a levy was made on goods and chattels, lands and tenements, sufficient to satisfy the judgment, is good in bar.—Sedam v. Taylor, Case No. 12,608.

A judgment entered for the penalty of a marshal's bond remains as security for all persons injured by default of the marshal.—Wetmore v. Rice, Case No. 17,468.

USAGES.

See "Customs and Usages."

USE AND OCCUPATION.

§ 1, When the action lies. § 2, Amount of recovery.

§ 1. When the action lies.

In Virginia an action for use and occupation will lie although there be a parol demise for a time, and rent certain, if it be waived, and a promise to pay for the time occupied.—Wise v. Decker, Case No. 17.907.

Partial eviction does not bar an action for use and occupation.—McGunnigle v. Blake, Case No. 8,816.

§ 2. Amount of recovery.

Plaintiff can recover only for the time of the actual occupation, though there be a parol lease for a whole year at a fixed rent.—Carroll v. Finnagan, Case No. 2,453.

USURY.

§ 1, What constitutes—In general. § 2, —— Purchase of obligations to pay money. § 3, —— Antedating contract. § 4, —— Compounding interest. § 5, —— Payment of interest in advance. § 6, —— Adding exchange. § 7, —— Bonus from borrower to lender. § 8, —— Transactions through agents. § 9, —— Failure to specify rate of interest. § 10, Effect on contract or security. § 11, What law governs. § 12, Estoppel. § 13, Application of payments. § 14, Relief in equity. § 15, Usury as a defense. § 16, Pleading. § 17, Evidence. § 18, Rights and remedies of third persons.

Effect of repeal of law, see "Statutes," § 15.
Form of action to recover, see "Assumpsit, Action of," § 1.
In contracts of loan associations, see "Building and Loan Associations."
Taking by national bank, see "Banks and Banking," § 20.

§ 1. What constitutes—In general.

To constitute usury, there must be a corrupt loan of money.—Lafayette Bank v. Bank of Illinois, Case No. 7,987.

Where the principal of a loan is to be returned at all events, any profit made, or loss imposed upon the borrower in addition to the legal rate of interest, is usury.—Buttrick v. Harris, Case No. 2,256.

Where there is no right to demand payment there can be no forbearance, and if no forbearance no usury, under the Virginia statutes.—Lloyd v. Scott, Case No. 8,434.

A sale of an indorsed negotiable note for merchandise which is disposed of for a sum less than the value of the note is not usurious.—Riddle v. Mandeville, Case No. 11,807.

An agreement by a bank to pay the face of its bills is not usurious, though they are depreciated in the market.—Lafayette Bank v. Bank of Illinois, Case No. 7,987.

The owner of property borrowed money to pay off an incumbrance, and deeded the same to the lender, who gave back a lease at a greater rental than legal interest, with the privilege of purchasing during the term for the amount loaned. Held not a usurious transaction.—Sherwood v. Burgess, Case No. 12,775.

A confession of judgment for $6,000 in favor of a person who procured satisfactions of that amount of judgments, on an advance of $3,000, should stand only as security for $3,000.—Moore v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co., Case No. 9,777.

A mortgage of $20,000, where a life insurance of $80,000 was also taken from the lender, as security for a net loan of $16,000, is usurious.—Moore v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co., Case No. 9,777.

Where a bank, on discounting a note for an indorser at the legal rate, gave time post notes, not bearing interest, the transaction is usurious, and the bank cannot recover on the discounted note.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Gaither, Case No. 4,655.

The prohibition against receiving "any greater sum or value" for the loan or use of money than that prescribed (Code Or. § 755) applies to a receipt at any time for or on account of such loan or use.—In re Pittock, Case No. 11,189.

Ill. Act 1857, in relation to interest and usury, construed.—Barrett v. Aplington, Case No. 1,045.

The statute of usury applies to contracts of corporations.—Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, Case No. 850.

A contract not usurious at the time it is made cannot become so by any future contingency.—York Bank v. Asbury, Case No. 18,142.

A stipulation in a judgment that the interest on it shall bear interest if not paid annually is void, and does not make such judgment usurious.—In re Fuller, Case No. 5,148.

§ 2. —— Purchase of obligations to pay money.

The purchase of a bond at a price which produces a greater than the legal rate of interest is usurious, where the transaction is intended only as a cloak for usury.—Moncure v. Dermott, Case No. 9,707.

Where the sale of depreciated bank notes at a greater or less than the market price is a mere device to evade the statute, it is usurious.—Judy v. Gerard, Case No. 7,571.

A purchase of a bill at any discount or premium, not done to cover usury, is not usurious.—Orr v. Lacy, Case No. 10,589.

A purchase of a bill in the market, like a commodity, at any price, is not usurious. But an unaccepted bill is not so purchased.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

The difference in value of notes of a Western bank and those of Eastern banks may be covered by a contract, without usury.—Orr v. Lacy, Case No. 10,589.

The purchase of a rent charge of $1,000 per annum for $12,500 is not usurious, where the legal rate is 6 per cent.—Gordon v. Dooley, Case No. 5,607.

A rent charge or annuity of $500 a year in consideration of $5,000 advanced, where there was no agreement to repay the principal, is not usurious, though the grantor reserved the right of redemption.—Lloyd v. Scott, Case No. 8,434.

A lease at a yearly rental of $270, taken from a mortgagee on a mortgage to secure a loan of $3,000, is void for usury.—Gordon v. Hobart, Case No. 5,608.

§ 3. —— Antedating contract.
It is not usury to charge interest from the date of the contract, though the writings are not executed until later.—United States v. Williams, Case No. 16,721.

Treating a note as discounted on the day of its date, where proceeds were not carried to the credit of the party until later, is not usury where checks were previously drawn against it.—Bank of Washington v. Walker, Case No. 955.

The maker, when transferring, as collateral security, bonds bearing an earlier date, may agree that interest shall run from their date according to their tenor.—In re Moore, Case No. 9,752.

§ 4. —— Compounding interest.
Compound interest is not illegal, and may be recovered when a part of the contract.—Bainbridge v. Wilcocks, Case No. 755.

If the interest is, by the agreement, payable annually, it is not usury to add it to the principal at the end of the year, and take a new note for the whole, bearing interest.—Oliver v. Decatur, Case No. 10,495.

Charging interest on balances of running accounts, regularly transmitted according to custom of trade, is not usury.—Barclay v. Kennedy, Case No. 976.

§ 5. —— Payment of interest in advance.
The discounting of an indorsed note received in a fair transaction, at a rate exceeding the lawful rate of interest, is a usurious transaction.—Nicholls v. Fearson, Case No. 10,227.

The discount by a bank of a note made directly payable to itself is not usurious.—Bank of the Metropolis v. Moore, Case No. 901; Union Bank of Georgetown v. Corcoran, Id. 14,353.

Taking 64 days' discount on a 60 days' note is not usury.—Bank of the United States v. Crabb, Case No. 913; Union Bank of Georgetown v. Gozler, Id. 14,358.

Charging different rates of discount for different localities, if not intended as a cloak for usury, held not usurious.—Bradley v. McKee, Case No. 1,784.

The question whether such transaction is bona fide is one for the jury.—Bradley v. McKee, Case No. 1,784.

§ 6. —— Adding exchange.
Adding exchange on the place of the payee's residence, where the note is made and payable in another state, renders it usurious.—Buttrick v. Harris, Case No. 2,256.

The making a note payable at a place in which exchange sells at a premium does not constitute usury, nor does it render the note void in the hands of a bank whose charter prohibits the taking more than a certain rate of interest.—York Bank v. Asbury, Case No. 18,-142.

A discount of a bill upon which exchange is charged, to take up a prior bill, is not usurious unless the agreement was made at the discount of the first bill.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

Where the rate of exchange charged is only colorable, it is usurious.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

When paper is the basis of exchange, it may be shown as influencing the rate of exchange.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

§ 7. —— Bonus from borrower to lender.
It is not usury for a broker who has advanced money to purchase a vessel to charge legal interest and commissions.—The Panama, Case No. 10,703.

It is usury to take 2½ per cent. commission besides the usual bank discount on a draft at 45 days.—Nicholls v. Wright, Case No. 10,236.

§ 8. —— Transactions through agents.
A principal betrayed into loaning money at a usurious rate by an agent may recover legal interest from the borrower.—Short v. Skipwith, Case No. 12,809.

Payment of commissions to a loan broker in addition to the lawful interest does not make the contract of lending usurious, unless it appear that the claim for commissions was but a device to evade the law.—Eddy v. Badger, Case No. 4,276.

The purchase of a note drawn by the maker to his own order, and indorsed in blank, from his brokers, without knowledge of their agency, in the regular course of business, at a greater rate than 6 per cent., is not usurious, within Act Pa. May 28, 1858.—Sparhawk v. Cochran, Case No. 13,203.

§ 9. —— Failure to specify rate of interest.
Act Ill. Feb. 12, 1857, held inapplicable to a contract where no rate of interest was fixed by agreement.—Bradley v. Lill, Case No. 1,783.

§ 10. Effect on contract or security.
A bill drawn, accepted, and indorsed to raise money for the use of the payee is void for usury where discounted by a broker at a usurious rate.—Gaither v. Lee, Case No. 5,182.

A mortgage is infected with the usury in a note which it is given to secure.—Morgan v. Tipton, Case No. 9,809.

Under a constitutional provision that no higher rate of interest than 6 per cent. shall be taken or demanded, and that the legislature shall provide by law all necessary forfeitures and penalties against usury, a contract for a greater rate of interest is void in toto, though the legislature has not provided forfeitures, etc.—Dill v. Ellicott, Case No. 3,911.

In Indiana, usury makes void the instrument infected with it.—Morgan v. Tipton, Case No. 9,809.

In Ohio, usury avoids the contract only for the excess.—McLean v. Lafayette Bank, Case No. 8,888.

A covenant absolutely to pay a usurious debt directly to the lender is not a covenant simply to indemnify the surety, though delivered to him; and under the Virginia law it is void.—Moncure v. Dermott, Case No. 9,707.

A bank charter silent as to the effect or penalty if more than the charter rate of interest be taken, renders a contract void only as to the excess of interest stipulated.—Darby v. Boatman's Sav. Inst., Case No. 3,571.

§ 11. What law governs.
Where notes drawn, dated, signed, and indorsed at Philadelphia, where the drawer and indorser resided, were delivered and discounted in New York at a rate of interest which rendered the notes void for usury under the New York law, the indorser is not liable.—In re Conrad, Case No. 3,126.

Accommodation paper made in New York was placed in the hands of note brokers there, who sold the same by correspondence at 10 per cent. discount, as first-class business paper, to a Connecticut corporation, who paid for the same by check on a New York bank. Held, that the transaction was governed by the law of New York, and that the notes were void for usury.—In re Dodge, Case No. 3,948.

A draft drawn and indorsed in Ohio for the accommodation of the drawee in New York, in which place it is negotiated for a usurious consideration, is avoided for usury under the New York laws.—Davis v. Clemson, Case No. 3,630.

There is no usury in charging exchange on a bill drawn in Indiana payable in New York.—Orr v. Lacy, Case No. 10,589.

§ 12. Estoppel.
If the cause of action be usurious, no waiver of the objection by defendant in pais will avail plaintiff.—Moncure v. Dermott, Case No. 9,707.

§ 13. Application of payments.
Where a statute forbids a corporation taking over a certain amount of interest, all money taken over such amount must be credited to the debtor on the principal.—Market Bank of Troy v. Smith, Case No. 9,090.

A mortgagee will not be required to account that he may be charged with usury.—Bowen v. Kendall, Case No. 1,724.

§ 14. Relief in equity.
Affirmative relief against a usurious contract will be granted in equity only upon condition that plaintiff pay the amount of money advanced, or allow a decree therefor.—Yardley v. New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co., Case No. 18,125; Kilgour v. Same, Id.; Goodman v. Same, Id.

A contract by a corporation with purchasers of certificates of stock to pay them a higher rate of interest than that permitted by law is invalid, and a subsequent contract founded thereon, to apply the excess of interest in a manner contemplated therein, will not be enforced in equity.—Sullivan v. Portland & K. R. Co., Case No. 13,596.

§ 15. Usury as a defense.
Usury must be pleaded and proved.—Cleveland Ins. Co. v. Reed, Case No. 2,889.

Usury cannot be set up on a bill to set aside a mortgage unless it is alleged.—Baldwin v. Raplee, Case No. 801.

The defense of usury can be pleaded so long as any part of the principal debt remains unpaid.—In re Prescott, Case No. 11,389.

The New York act of 1850 providing that no corporation shall interpose the defense of usury does not extend to suits against accommodation indorsers for corporations.—Market Bank of Troy v. Smith, Case No. 9,090.

§ 16. Pleading.
Sufficiency of pleas in bar of avowry of distress for rent due under a grant of a rent charge or annuity, setting up usury.—Lloyd v. Scott, Case No. 8,434.

A special plea in assumpsit averring that the contract was entered into in another state, by the law of which it was usurious, is good on special demurrer.—Juillard v. Remington, Case No. 7,572.

A variance between November and September in the allegation and proof of the making of a usurious contract held not material.—Harper v. Smith, Case No. 6,092.

§ 17. Evidence.
In an action to recover on a note given for a usurious loan, the burden is on plaintiff to show the actual amount lent.—Hill v. Scott, Case No. 6,498.

§ 18. Rights and remedies of third persons.
A stranger cannot set up usury as a defense.—Yardley v. New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co., Case No. 18,125; Kilgour v. Same, Id.; Goodman v. Same, Id.

The purchaser of checks payable to bearer, though bona fide and without notice, is affected by usury therein.—Hill v. Scott, Case No. 6,498.

Alleged usury in a loan of money and sale of goods cannot be taken advantage of by one purchasing the goods from the vendee.—Simpson v. Wiggin, Case No. 12,887.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT

§ 1. What constitutes a sale.

A penal bond construed as a contract of sale with covenant to make good title.—Lamb v. Carter, Case No. 8,013.

§ 2. Formal requisites.

A contract to sell land or an equitable interest therein is not void for want of an acknowledgment or recording.—Arden v. Brown, Case No. 510.

Act Md. 1766, c. 14, providing for enrollment relates to estates at law only.—Arden v. Brown, Case No. 510.

§ 3. Consideration.

A simple hope, expectation, or possibility of benefit is a sufficient consideration to support a contract of sale.—Garrow v. Davis, Case No. 5,257.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF CONTRACT.

§ 4. In general.

Contract for sale of undivided half of land, and to pay for same out of proceeds of sales in parcels, construed.—Buckingham v. Jackson, Case No. 2,090.

The vendor of land contracted to be sold is a trustee for the purchaser.—McKay v. Carrington, Case No. 8,841.

A valid contract of sale vests the equitable interest in the vendee, from the execution of the contract, though the purchase money is not then paid.—Lane v. Ludlow, Case No. 8,052.

A bond for title given on an executory contract for the purchase of land conveys an equitable estate to the vendee which is assignable.—In re Reynolds, Case No. 11,724; Wescott v. Cole, Id. 17,417.

The vendor who has received the purchase money, but retains the legal title, is a mere trustee for the vendee, and can avail himself of no act prejudicial to the trust.—Waddington v. Banks, Case No. 17,028.

A person holding a bond for a deed whose conditions have been broken acquires no title to timber which he has cut on the land without the consent of the owner.—In re Gregg, Case No. 5,796.

III. RESCISSION OF CONTRACT.

§ 5. By vendor.

Representations respecting the value of what was taken for the consideration, made by the vendee, or by another in his presence, which were false in material points, and which influenced the vendor to sell, whether the vendee knew them to be false or not, will vitiate the sale.—Warner v. Daniels, Case No. 17,181.

A contract for the sale of land, providing for the right of annulment, on failure of any of the payments, by giving notice and paying the money received into a certain bank, can be annulled in no other way, except by consent.—McKay v. Carrington, Case No. 8,841.

The vendor cannot put an end to the contract for negligence where he is himself in default in not returning the portion of the consideration paid by the vendee.—Longworth v. Taylor, Case No. 8,490.

§ 6. By purchaser—Mistake.

A sale will not be rescinded for mistake alone if the party had full opportunity to examine the land, and did examine it.—Mason v. Crosby, Case No. 9,234.

A tract of land supposed to contain sixty million of timber was found to contain but five million, there being a mistake in the exploration. Held, that the conveyance must be rescinded, and the purchase money restored.—Daniel v. Mitchell, Case No. 3,562.

On the rescission of a conveyance for gross mistake, the purchasers cannot avail themselves of an agreement between the sellers, who divided the purchase-money notes, to jointly bear any losses sustained.—Daniel v. Mitchell, Case No. 3,562.

§ 7. —— Misrepresentation and fraud.
The vendee cannot rescind on the ground of fraud unless he place the vendor in the condition he was in before the purchase.—Murphy v. McVicker, Case No. 9,951.

A material false representation by the vendor or his agent vitiates the sale, though not known to be false when made.—Mason v. Crosby, Case No. 9,234.

That the purchaser examined the land will not prevent a rescission, if falsehood was practiced, whereby he was led to make only a slight and general examination.—Mason v. Crosby, Case No. 9,234.

Fraud practiced by one of several owners, or by one having a bond for a deed from some of the owners, is ground for rescission of the whole sale, where the owners take the benefit of the price obtained by the fraud.—Mason v. Crosby, Case No. 9,234.

If a person most benefited by a sale of land make false statements as to material matters relating to value, and which, from being more within his private knowledge or from other circumstances, were clearly relied on by the purchaser, the sale is void, whether the seller believe them to be true or not.—Smith v. Babcock, Case No. 13,009.

Where, on the sale of a timber tract, the vendor states that he is not acquainted with the land, and requests the vendee's agent to examine for himself, which he does, an action will not lie for false representations after five years, during which the vendee has sold part of the land, and cut part of the timber.—Sanborn v. Stetson, Case No. 12,291.

The vendees are not entitled to rely upon the opinion of the vendor's agent, where they have the means of ascertaining the facts.—Hough v. Richardson, Case No. 6,722.

Rescission of a sale is not precluded because the purchaser had an opportunity to examine the land, and he or his agent does examine it, if false representations of the vendor were relied on as to details, and others hired by him united in statements and acts likely to mislead the examiner.—Smith v. Babcock, Case No. 13,-009; Tuthill v. Same, Id. 14,275.

§ 8. —— Defects of title.
One who purchases land with knowledge that the title is defective, relying upon his vendor's warranty and promise to have the defect cured, cannot ask a rescission of the contract upon the ground of such defect.—Peters v. Bowman, Case No. 11,028.

§ 9. —— Return of consideration.
Where one having an interest in lands contracted with trustees to purchase the whole at a given price, but failed to pay at the time agreed, and afterwards sold to others at a profit, and received the consideration, before conveyance to him by the trustees, held, that he was to be regarded as the agent of his vendees, so that they must aid him to refund the consideration.—Smith v. Babcock, Case No. 13,009.

Where a sale is rescinded after several years, for fraud, each of the several equitable owners is liable to refund only the money he received, and not that received by the others, or paid to an agent since insolvent.—Mason v. Crosby, Case No. 9,234.

IV. PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

§ 10. Allowance and recoupment for defects of title.
An outstanding title, purchased by the vendee, will inure to the benfit of the vendor, who can be compelled to refund only the amount paid therefor.—Pintard v. Goodloe, Case No. 11,171.

A subpurchaser who gets in the paramount title is bound in equity to fulfill his contract with the first purchaser, deducting what he has been obliged to pay to get in the title.—Smith v. Arden, Case No. 13,003.

§ 11. Conveyance.
The vendor is bound to make and tender the deed.—Cooper v. Brown, Case No. 3,191.

The representatives of a deceased vendor, who has received the consideration of a purchase, are bound to use reasonable diligence in executing a conveyance.—Cooper v. Brown, Case No. 3,-191.

A reasonable time, only, can be allowed to a vendor to execute his part of the contract.—Bronson v. Cahill, Case No. 1,926.

Unforeseen circumstances and embarrassments may excuse the performance at the day if the party act in good faith.—Watts v. Waddle, Case No. 17,295.

A contract to convey a certain tract of land so soon as a suit then pending for the title shall be decided gives to the party that agrees to convey all the time necessary to close the litigation in all the forms it may assume.—Watts v. Waddle, Case No. 17,295.

A covenant to convey by "a good general warranty deed, with the fee simple annexed," is complied with by a deed containing a covenant against incumbrances and a general warranty of title, without covenant of seisin.—Kirkendall v. Mitchell, Case No. 7,841.

Where a deed is made under a defective power, the court will decree a conveyance on payment of the residue of the purchase money.—Murphy v. McVicker, Case No. 9,951.

§ 12. Quantity of land.
The words "sale in gross," when applied to the land itself, are synonymous with "contract of hazard," and preclude any claim for abatement in the purchase money.—Green v. Taylor, Case No. 5,761.

Where the statement of the quantity is mere matter of description, and not of the essence of the contract, the vendee takes upon himself the risk of the quantity, where there is no fraud or willful misrepresentation.—Stebbins v. Eddy, Case No. 13,342.

Equity will grant relief in the case of mistake by the parties where land is sold at a certain sum per acre, and the vendee will be allowed compensation for the deficiency.—Stebbins v. Eddy, Case No. 13,342.

The same rule will obtain where the sale is for a gross sum, and there is a positive representation of the quantity by the vendor.—Stebbins v. Eddy, Case No. 13,342.

The purchaser of lots in the city of Washington, by the square foot, is not bound to pay for a proportion of the alleys, if there be no special agreement to that effect.—Brent v. Smith, Case No. 1,841.

The metes and bounds, when they can be ascertained, will control the location, although they contained less than the amount of land specified.—Jackson v. Sprague, Case No. 7,148.

This rule obtains though parallel lines were to be run from each extremity of a base line, to be ascertained from a known point, until a certain quantity was obtained, where a portion of the base has been cut off by prior grants.—Jackson v. Sprague, Case No. 7,148.

§ 13. Payment of purchase money.
One who purchases with full knowledge of the title, and of pretended claims, and receives a deed, cannot withhold a part of the purchase money on account of the alleged defect, but must seek redress on his warranty.—Stansbury v. Taggart, Case No. 13,292.

The vendee will be required to pay interest where he refused to receive and pay for the title on tender of a conveyance on the day fixed, though there was a doubtful point of law involved in the title.—Sohier v. Williams, Case No. 13,160.

V. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF THE PARTIES.

(A) AS TO EACH OTHER.

§ 14. Payment of taxes.
A vendor of property is not liable to the vendee for taxes for the current year, not then assessed, and not payable until January 1st following.—Hunt v. Smith, Case No. 6,899.

§ 15. Damages to premises.
A vendee or mortgagee in possession, with the great bulk of the purchase money due and unpaid, will not be permitted to cut and take away the timber to the prejudice of the security.—Bradley v. Reed, Case No. 1,785.

§ 16. Improvements by purchaser.
A person who has a lien on a lot for improvements made under expectation of obtaining a title may enforce his claim against the insolvent owner of the lot as a general creditor.—Thompson v. King, Case No. 13,963.

See, also, post, § 31.

(B) AS TO THIRD PERSONS IN GENERAL.

§ 17. Prior purchasers in general.
Where a rightful estate is claimed by each of two purchasers, whose titles in other respects are equal, the maxim prevails, "Qui prior est in tempore potior est jure."—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

A purchaser for a valuable consideration, though with notice of a prior voluntary conveyance by his grantor, is protected against it by the statute of 27 Eliz.—Ridgeway v. Underwood, Case No. 11,815.

A purchaser under a judgment and execution against such grantor is not protected as a purchaser under such statute, but is considered a creditor standing in the place of the judgment creditor.—Ridgeway v. Underwood, Case No. 11,815.

A purchaser by deed will take a fee, as against one holding from his grantor a prior bond for a deed whose conditions have been violated.—In re Gregg, Case No. 5,796.

§ 18. Equities of vendor's grantor.
One who purchases land with knowledge of defects in the vendor's title stands in the same position as his vendor, with respect to the latter's grantor.—Peters v. Bowman, Case No. 11,029.

§ 19. Charges on land.
Notes given for taxes on real estate in Georgetown, D. C., held to create an equitable lien on the land, of which a purchaser was bound to take notice.—Georgetown v. Smith, Case No. 5,347.

Real estate purchased with actual or constructive notice that it is partnership property is chargeable, in the hands of the purchaser, with the payment of the partnership debts, of whose existence they had no knowledge.—Hoxie v. Carr, Case No. 6,802.

Where judgment is obtained against a vendor before the making of a deed or payment of the purchase money, the vendee may enjoin execution upon paying the purchase money into court to satisfy the judgment.—Lane v. Ludlow, Case No. 8,052.

A creditor obtaining judgment against the vendor, after the latter has received the purchase money, but before he makes a deed, will be enjoined, at suit of the vendee, from levying on the land.—McSorlay v. Ludlow, Case No. 8,927.

(C) BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

§ 20. Who are in general.
A mortgagee is a bona fide purchaser, though the mortgage was given to secure a pre-existing debt.—Partridge v. Smith, Case No. 10,787.

A purchaser under a contract for a deed is not protected as a bona fide purchaser, though he has paid the consideration.—Curts v. Cisna, Case No. 3,507.

One may protect himself as a bona fide purchaser by showing either that he paid without notice, or took through some bona fide purchaser without notice.—Mills v. Smith, Case No. 9,615.

The doctrine of a purchaser without notice applies only to equitable rights. In the case of legal titles the rule is, "Caveat emptor."—Hurst v. McNeil, Case No. 6,936.

When the vendor was not vested with a legal title, his vendee cannot be considered an innocent purchaser without notice.—Oakley v. Ballard, Case No. 10,393.

A plea of a purchase for a valuable consideration, without notice of the plaintiff's title, must aver that the person who conveyed was seised, or pretended to be seised, at the time when he executed the purchase deeds.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

§ 21. Parting with value.
One making payment of purchase money in Confederate notes in a Confederate state during the Rebellion is not a bona fide purchaser for value, entitled to equitable protection or relief in the federal court.—Cuyler v. Ferrill, Case No. 3,523.

§ 22. Quitclaim deed.
The grantee under a quitclaim deed from one who purchased land on joint account held entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser without notice to the extent of the purchase money paid before notice of the title of the other party to the agreement.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

The other party to the agreement held entitled to a lien to the extent of the purchase money unpaid at the time of notice to the grantee, for the payment of his moiety of the purchase money.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

§ 23. Notice—Time of notice.
To constitute a purchaser without notice, it is not sufficient that the contract should be made without notice, but that the purchase money should be paid before notice.—Wormeley v. Wormeley, Case No. 18,047.

A plea to a bill to set aside a conveyance as having been procured by fraud, which avers that defendant is a bona fide purchaser under the original grantee, but fails to aver that he has paid the whole consideration before notice of plaintiff's claim, is bad.—Wood v. Mann, Case No. 17,951.

§ 24. —— Actual notice.
Knowledge of an adverse claim will prevent a grantee being a bona fide purchaser, though he pays full value and supposes he is getting a good title.—Norton v. Meader, Case No. 10,351.

Where a purchaser has notice of the facts upon which an adverse claim depends, he is deemed to have notice of the consequences of those facts.—Cuyler v. Ferrill, Case No. 3,523.

Actual notice of a deed is as effectual as constructive notice based on the record.—King v. Young Men's Ass'n, Case No. 7,811.

Actual knowledge of the existence of a prior unrecorded mortgage is of the same effect as a recording.—Lord v. Doyle, Case No. 8,505.

A purchaser who agreed to assume a certain proportion of the liabilities to which the land was subject held to have sufficient knowledge of a prior unrecorded mortgage given by his grantor.—Lord v. Doyle, Case No. 8,505.

§ 25. —— Constructive notice in general. The registry of a deed or paper not duly or legally recorded is not constructive notice.—McNeil v. Magee, Case No. 8,915.

§ 26. —— Notice to agent or attorney. Notice to plaintiff's attorney in attachment proceedings of an unrecorded deed of the land attached operates as notice to plaintiff.—Polk v. Cosgrove, Case No. 11,248.

The grantee in a conveyance obtained through the agency of a third person is bound by the knowledge of such agent as to the existence of a prior unrecorded deed.—Goodenough v. Warren, Case No. 5,534.

As between the owner of land whose agent to pay taxes acquired a tax deed, and a purchaser from such agent who acted through an agent having notice of the fraud, the equitable right of the original owner will prevail.—Curts v. Cisna, Case No. 3,507.

§ 27. —— Facts putting on inquiry. Notice of a claim is sufficient if it put the party on inquiry.—Godfrey v. Beardsley, Case No. 5,497.

A knowledge of facts which, if traced and understood, will lead to a knowledge of title, is sufficient to charge a purchaser.—Tardy v. Morgan, Case No. 13,752.

A purchaser who has notice of such facts as, with ordinary diligence, would lead him to a full knowledge of an outstanding equity, is a purchaser with notice.—Hinde v. Vattier, Case No. 6,512.

Vague reports and rumors from strangers, and suspicion of notice, are not sufficient to charge a purchaser with notice of title in a third person.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

§ 28. —— Recitals in conveyance. A purchaser is bound to take notice of the recitals in deeds in his chain of title.—Reeves v. Vinacke, Case No. 11,663.

A clause in a deed from a stranger to the title is not notice to purchasers.—Polk v. Cosgrove, Case No. 11,248.

Where a deed in a chain of title made by an administrator recites that he conveyed the land in that capacity, the person takes the title with full knowledge of the trust.—Rafferty v. Mallory, Case No. 11,526.

A recital in a recorded deed by one having no record title is not constructive notice.—Mills v. Smith, Case No. 9,615.

An assignment, recited in a patent, that the warrant was assigned by the representatives of A. B., is no notice to the purchaser that the assignment was made without authority.—Scott v. Evans, Case No. 12,529.

The purchaser is chargeable with notice of a fact which the instrument through which he is obliged to make out his title leads him to.—Hardy v. Harbin, Case No. 6,060.

Recitals in patent held not sufficient to affect the grantee of the patentee with constructive notice of defective proceedings under which the land was sold.—Hardy v. Harbin, Case No. 6,059.

§ 29. —— Notice from records. A purchaser has not by law constructive notice of all matters of record, but only of those to which the title deeds of the estate refer, or put him upon inquiry.—Dexter v. Harris, Case No. 3,862.

A recorded deed misdescribing the premises by transposing the township and range numbers, where not applicable to any other land in the county, held constructive notice to a purchaser.—Partridge v. Smith, Case No. 10,787.

Disqualification of the notary to acknowledge a deed, on the ground of interest, does not prevent the record being notice to subsequent incumbrancers.—National Bank of Fredericksburg v. Conway, Case No. 10,037.

The record of a deed in Kentucky for lands in Ohio is no notice to a subsequent purchaser.—Lewis v. Baird, Case No. 8,316.

It being the universal practice in Texas, though not required by law, to record deeds and mortgages in separate books, held, that a deed recorded in a mortgage book did not operate as constructive notice.—King v. Young Men's Ass'n, Case No. 7,811.

The registry of a mortgage not executed in such manner as to authorize its record is not of itself notice.—Branch v. Atlantic & G. R. Co., Case No. 1,807.

If the acknowledgment of a deed be substantially defective, the record is not notice.—Shults v. Moore, Case No. 12,824; Morton v. Smith, Id. 9,867; Strong v. Same, Id. 13,544.

A person who takes a conveyance upon the assumption that a former mortgage to his grantor has been merged in a subsequent recorded conveyance of the fee, does so at his peril.—Oregon & W. Trust Inv. Co. v. Shaw, Case No. 10,556.

§ 30. —— Notice from possession. What is sufficient possession to constitute notice to judgment creditors or bona fide purchasers.—Lash v. Hardick, Case No. 8,097.

Actual possession is constructive notice to all the world of the title under which it is held.—Gum v. Equitable Trust Co., Case No. 5,867.

Visible possession and occupation by the grantee under an unregistered deed, known to a subsequent grantee, is sufficient, if not controlled by other circumstances, to warrant a finding of notice to the grantee.—Lonsdale Co. v. Moies, Case No. 8,496.

Possession by a tenant is constructive notice to the purchaser of the tenant's title, though not of the title of the lessor, or of the party under whom the tenant claims.—Flagg v. Mann, Case No. 4,847.

Open, notorious, and exclusive possession, making valuable improvements for 16 years, constitutes implied notice to an attaching creditor of a deed to the person in possession, though the same is not recorded until after the levy.—Weld v. Madden, Case No. 17,373.

The effect of possession of land, as constructive notice of title, cannot be extended to lands, outside the limits of the possession, claimed by another under the same title.—Daggs v. Ewell, Case No. 3,537.

§ 31. Rights of bona fide purchasers. A deed of lands to a purchaser without notice, duly recorded, cuts off any claim thereto founded on a resulting trust.—Daggs v. Ewell, Case No. 3,537.

A bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice of any fraud in the grant to his vendor, takes a good title as against the original grantor and his heirs.—Dexter v. Harris, Case No. 3,862.

A bona fide purchaser without notice, at a sale by a person appointed by the legislature to sell intestate's estate for payment of his debts, takes a good title as against the heirs, though the sale be fraudulent.—Dexter v. Harris, Case No. 3,862.

A purchaser for valuable consideration and without notice from one who has obtained the legal title to land by fraud will be protected.—Norton v. Meader, Case No. 10,351.

In Massachusetts and Maine a prior unrecorded deed is not good as against a subsequent attachment creditor without notice thereof.—United States v. Canal Bank, Case No. 14,715.

Innocent purchasers from a grantee who fraudulently obtained possession of a deed, who make valuable and lasting improvements, are entitled to compensation therefor.—Utterback v. Binns, Case No. 16,809.

In such case the annual rents and profits will be deducted from the value of the improvements.—Utterback v. Binns, Case No. 16,809.

VI. REMEDIES OF VENDOR.

§ 32. Vendor's lien — When lien exists, and extent.

A lien is neither a jus ad rem, nor a jus in re; and the lien of a vendor on the land sold is so mere a creature of the court of equity that its existence cannot be safely predicated in any case, until established by the decree of the court.—Gilman v. Brown, Case No. 5,441.

A vendor who has not parted with the legal title has a lien for the unpaid purchase money, enforceable either against the vendee, his representatives or assigns.—English v. Russell, Case No. 4,491.

A vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money does not exist, as against a bona fide purchaser without notice.—Gilman v. Brown, Case No. 5,441.

A vendee of land who never took the title, but resold it to his vendor, taking a bond with surety for the amount due, has no vendor's lien for the same.—Strider v. King, Case No. 13,534.

In Texas a vendor's lien reserved in the deed is equivalent to a mortgage for purchase money, and the purchaser has the same equity of redemption as if he had received a deed and given a mortgage for the purchase money.—King v. Young Men's Ass'n, Case No. 7,811.

A conveyance of the grantor's interest in firm property, made subject to the payment of his share of the firm debts, which the grantees assumed, held, upon a condition subsequent, giving a right of re-entry for nonperformance, and a lien superior to subsequent mortgagees.—Nash v. Le Clercq, Case No. 10,021.

§ 33. —— Waiver and extinguishment.

A vendor's lien will not be decreed where the parties do any unequivocal act by which they clearly show that they do not contemplate such a lien to exist.—Gilman v. Brown, Case No. 5,441.

If the vendor take a distinct security for the money, either property, or the responsibility of a third person, the lien is waived.—Gilman v. Brown, Case No. 5,441; Nash v. Le Clercq, Id. 10,021.

Taking a negotiable note of the vendee, indorsed by a third person, payable at future times by installments, extinguishes the lien.—Gilman v. Brown, Case No. 5,441.

But merely taking the note or bond of the vendee himself, without a surety, is no waiver of the lien.—Gilman v. Brown, Case No. 5,441.

The vendor's lien is not waived by the subsequent taking of a mortgage, and it takes precedence over a judgment lien acquired between the date of the transfer and the mortgage.—In re Bryan, Case No. 2,062.

§ 34. —— Assignment.

A purchase-money lien does not pass to the transferee of a note taken in part payment.—In re Brooks, Case No. 1,943.

§ 35. —— Rights and liabilities of subsequent purchasers.

The vendor has a lien for the purchase price as against purchasers from his vendee with notice.—Pintard v. Goodloe, Case No. 11,171.

If the purchaser sells the land to a third person, and the deed is duly recorded or made known to the original vendor, the latter cannot, by virtue of his lien, extinguish the third person's rights without legal process.—King v. Young Men's Ass'n, Case No. 7,811.

Certain parties purchased a railroad, and received a deed therefor, but left a part of the purchase price unpaid, and then procured an act of the legislature by which they, as purchasers and owners, were incorporated. Held, that the company so formed took the railroad subject to the vendor's lien for the unpaid purchase money.—Western Division of Western N. C. R. Co. v. Drew, Case No. 17,434; Schutte v. Florida Cent. R. Co., Id.

§ 36. —— Laches.

Equitable lien of assignee of bond for purchase money will not be enforced, as against other lienors, after 15 years' delay.—In re Butler, Case No. 2,235.

§ 37. —— Redemption.

Where a vendor's lien was reserved for part of the purchase money, and the grantee conveyed to another in trust for a joint-stock company, and the trustee went into possession, held, that a foreclosure of the lien, without making the trustee a party, did not extinguish the joint-stock company's right to redeem.—King v. Young Men's Ass'n, Case No. 7,811.

In such case the proper party to file a bill to redeem would be the trustee; but where he had been removed, and the directors of the company failed to appoint a new trustee, the stockholders might file the bill.—King v. Young Men's Ass'n, Case No. 7,811.

§ 38. —— Sale of land.

A sale of land for unpaid purchase money is not vitiated by the fact that it was made while the purchaser is absent during war with the other belligerent power, and had no notice of the sale.—Johns v. Slack, Case No. 7,363.

The pendency of confiscation proceedings by the United States against such purchaser does not help to vitiate the sale.—Johns v. Slack, Case No. 7,363.

§ 39. Recovery of land.

The vendor of land cannot maintain ejectment against the vendee in possession who has failed to pay a balance of the purchase price, without a notice to quit, or a demand to pay and notice of rescission.—Costigan v. Wood, Case No. 3,265.

§ 40. Actions for purchase money.

A purchaser who has received a deed, and holds under it, cannot set up a defect of title to avoid the recovery of the purchase money.—Taggart v. Stanbery, Case No. 13,724. See, also, Campbell v. Medbury, Case No. 2,365.

In an action by the payee of a note given for the purchase price of land, defendant, who has not gone into possession, may set up in defense plaintiff's want of title to the land.—Scudder v. Andrews, Case No. 12,564.

In an action for the purchase money defendant cannot set off the amount paid on the compromise of an outstanding claim made without the consent or knowledge of the grantor.—Taggart v. Stanbery, Case No. 13,724.

On an issue joined on a plea of want of title in an action on a bond expressed to be given for the purchase money of land, plaintiff has the burden of showing title.—Hotchkiss v. Floyd, Case No. 6,716.

VII. REMEDIES OF PURCHASER.

§ 41. Recovery of purchase money paid. Where, through neligence, the vendor cannot compel specific performance, the vendee may disaffirm the contract, and recover back the money paid. A demand for a deed is not necessary.—Cooper v. Brown, Case No. 3,191.

Where the vendee refuses to perform the contract, he cannot recover back the money paid, where the vendor obtains possession of the land.—Utterbach v. Binns, Case No. 16,809.

The vendee cannot recover back the purchase money paid upon failure of the vendor to convey, without tendering the form of a deed of conveyance, unless the vendor's title is defective.—Guttschlick v. Bank of the Metropolis, Case No. 5,880.

The vendee may recover back the purchase money in assumpsit, where the vendor's title was defective, though he has been in possession several years.—Guttschlick v. Bank of the Metropolis, Case No. 5,880.

§ 42. For defects in title. No action lies against grantor on a deed without covenants.—Baldwin v. Le Roy, Case No. 800a.

Where deed is without covenants, assumpsit will not lie for failure of consideration on complete failure of grantor's title.—Baldwin v. Le Roy, Case No. 800a.

§ 43. Damages for breach of contract. The measure of damages in an action for refusal to convey because of a defective title held to be the purchase money, with interest, where no rents and profits have been received. —Letcher v. Woodson, Case No. 8,280.

The measure of damages in an action for breach of a covenant to convey lands, the title to which was not in the defendant, is the value of the lands at the time of judgment.—Wilson v. Robertson, Case No. 17,830.

§ 44. Relief in equity. A purchaser in undisturbed possession will not be relieved from payment of the purchase money on the ground of defect of title, there being no fraud or misrepresentation; but he must rely upon his covenants.—Campbell v. Medbury, Case No. 2,365.

The neglect of the vendee to pay the purchase money and demand a conveyance from the vendor in his lifetime will prevent an injunction to restrain the collection of a judgment at law for the purchase money, on the ground of the difficulty of obtaining a title from the infant heirs.—Prout v. Gibson, Case No. 11,-445.

After the lapse of 20 years, a bill in equity cannot be maintained upon a bond for the conveyance of land, where the obligee early repudiated its obligation, though the obligor considered the bond worthless.—Wright v. Fullerton, Case No. 18,079.

§ 45. Evidence. An insufficient deed, received by the vendee of land, held admissible in evidence, in an action to recover back the purchase money, to show defective title.—Guttschlick v. Bank of the Metropolis, Case No. 5,880.

A written contract by a bank to convey, under the hands and seals of the president and cashier, reciting authority from the directors, is admissible without further evidence of authority of such officers to make the contract.—Guttschlick v. Bank of the Metropolis, Case No. 5,880.

§ 1. Place of trial. An action to recover for payments due under a railroad construction contract is not local.—Babbitt v. Burgess, Case No. 693.

A clerk of the circuit court of the District of Columbia is not entitled to sue by attachment of privilege.—Forrest v. Hanson, Case No. 4,942.

§ 2. Change of venue. A motion for change must be accompanied by an affidavit stating the grounds of belief that an impartial trial cannot be had in the county in which the suit is instituted.—Lewis v. Fire Ins. Co., Case No. 8,323.

The convenience of a party and his witnesses is an insufficient ground for the transfer of the cause from one place to another in the district for trial.—In re Preston, Case No. 11,393.

An issue from the orphans' court to the circuit court of the District of Columbia cannot be removed to another county.—Carter v. Cutting, Case No. 2,476.

Where the judges of the circuit court are incompetent from interest or having been of counsel to sit in a cause, it is to be certified to the nearest circuit court in the circuit competent in point of law to try it.—Richardson v. Boston, Case No. 11,780.

If the disability of the district judge terminates in his death, the circuit court must remand the certified causes to the district court under Act March 2, 1809, c. 94.—Ex parte United States, Case No. 14,411.

I. IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Power to make war.

The power of making war is exclusively vested in congress, but the president has power to repel invasions by hostile forces, even when congress has not declared war.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,342.

§ 2. Effect of war on existing rights and liabilities.

A state of war suspends existing contracts between the belligerent parties, and, upon the termination of the war, obligations theretofore contracted are revived.—Semmes v. City Fire Ins. Co., Case No. 12,651.

A declaration of war, or the commencement of actual hostilities between two states, ipso facto dissolves the partnership relation existing between citizens of the hostile states.—Planters' Bank v. St. John, Case No. 11,208.

The authority of an agent is not affected by war with the principal's country.—Cocks v. Izard, Case No. 2,934.

A declaration of war by competent authority suspends interest upon debts between citizens of the belligerents, until the conclusion of peace.—Conn v. Penn, Case No. 3,104; Jackson Ins. Co. v. Stewart, Id. 7,152.

Interest will not abate during a war, where the alien enemy has a resident agent known to the debtor.—Denniston v. Imbrie, Case No. 3,802; Conn v. Penn, Id. 3,104.

The usage of making annual rests in an account does not apply where commercial intercourse is suspended between the countries of the parties' residence by war.—Denniston v. Imbrie. Case No. 3,802.

The claims of creditors which existed prior to the American Revolution were not destroyed by the dissolution of the government, though the judicial means of enforcement were for the time lost.—Jones v. Walker, Case No. 7,507.

Debts due to a subject of Great Britain before the revolutionary war held within the treaty of peace, and the hostile legislation of the commonwealths were extinguished thereby.—Jones v. Walker, Case No. 7,507.

A debtor of a subject of Great Britain who accepted the offer of Act Va. Oct. 20, 1777, to pay the amount of the debt into the loan office, and receive a certificate of discharge, held not relieved from payment of the debt where the commonwealth did nothing to extinguish the same.—Jones v. Walker, Case No. 7,507.

The intervention of war pending a suit by a foreign corporation will not defeat the action unless it appear on the record that plaintiff is not within any of the exceptions which enable an alien enemy to sue.—Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Wheeler, Case No. 13,156.

See, also, post, § 81.
Effect on contract of insurance, see "Insurance," § 170.
—— on limitation of action, see "Limitation of Actions," § 15.
Revocation of agency, see "Insurance," § 5.

§ 3. Alien enemies.

The rules of the common law in cases of alien enemy do not apply with the same rigor in courts acting under the general laws of nations.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,372.

An alien enemy cannot sustain or defend a suit in the courts of the United States.—The D. Sargeant, Case No. 4,098; The Emulous, Id. 4,479; Johnson v. Thirteen Bales, etc., Id. 7,415; Mumford v. Mumford, Id. 9,918.

An alien enemy resident in the United States by license of the government may maintain a personal action.—Otteridge v. Thompson, Case No. 10,618.

No suit or proceeding can be maintained in the courts of a neutral nation by the subject of one belligerent against the subjects of the other for acts growing out of the war.—Juando v. Taylor, Case No. 7,558.

Contracts made for equipping and fitting a cartel will be enforced in the courts of either belligerent having jurisdiction.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,372.

An alien enemy beneficially interested in a suit cannot support it in the name of a neutral trustee unless the subject-matter arises out of a trade licensed by the government in whose courts redress is sought.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,372.

An alien enemy may sue and be sued in the enemy's country.—Cocks v. Izard, Case No. 2,934.

An alien enemy is not permitted to make a declaration preparatory to naturalization.—Ex parte Newman, Case No. 10,174.

Contracts made with an alien enemy are lawful if arising out of the trade carried on under license of the government, if the enemy be in the hostile country by license of the government, or if the contract be a ransom bond.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,373.

Contracts made by prisoners of war, in the enemy's country, for subsistence, are binding.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,373.

The existence of war does not prevent the citizens of one belligerent power from taxing proceedings for the protection of their own property in their own courts, against the citizens of the other, where the latter can be reached by process.—Lee v. Rogers, Case No. 8,201.

A vessel may be hypothecated by the master in an enemy's country for money advanced to return to the home port.—Crawford v. The William Penn, Case No. 3,373.

There is no legal difference as to the plea of alien enemy between a corporation and an individual.—Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Wheeler, Case No. 13,156.

In a plea of alien enemy in abatement of an action of detinue, it must be averred that such was the status of plaintiff at commencement of the suit.—Elgee's Adm'r v. Lovell, Case No. 4,344.

If the disability arise afterwards, the further prosecution of the suit is suspended merely until peace is restored.—Elgee's Adm'r v. Lovell, Case No. 4,344.

It is no answer to a plea of alien enemy to aver that the plaintiff has taken the oath prescribed by the amnesty proclamation.—Elgee's Adm'r v. Lovell, Case No. 4,344.

§ 4. Confiscation and conquest.

The law as to conquests and confiscation of enemy's territory and property.—The Amy Warwick, Case No. 342.

Operation of the treaty of 1783, upon the exercise of legislative powers for the confiscation of enemy's property.—Gordon v. Holiday, Case No. 5,610.

Enemy property found within our territory on the breaking out of war cannot be confiscated without an act of congress authorizing such confiscation.—Britton v. Butler, Case No. 1,903; Wagner v. The Juanita, Id. 17,039. But see The Emulous, Case No. 4,479.

A belligerent has the right to take such course, and impose such conditions, with regard to the confiscation of enemies' property, as it sees fit.—The Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097.

Trading with the enemy's country, which has been reduced to subjection, with permission and encouragement of the invading army, is not unlawful.—Harmony v. Mitchell, Case No. 6,082.

Debts, credits, and corporeal property of an enemy, found in the country on the breaking out of war, are confiscable.—The Emulous, Case No. 4,479.

Proceedings for the confiscation of enemy's property under a state law held coram non judice on the adoption of a treaty of peace stipulating against subsequent condemnation.—Fisher v. Harnden, Case No. 4,819.

Confiscation under Act Mass. April 3, 1779, divests only the estate of the absentee, and not the estate of a remainder-man.—Borland v. Dean, Case No. 1,660.

A purchaser from one who bought corporate stock on a sale under an invalid decree of confiscation, after notice of the corporation's claim of invalidity, is not a bona fide purchaser.—Avil v. Alexandria Water Co., Case No. 679.

On intervention by a third person setting up some charge or lien, collateral proceedings may be taken.—The Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097.

Intervention proceedings in proceedings on confiscation of land, setting up a lien on property, may be reviewed by appeal.—The Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097.

A judgment in confiscation proceedings is not subject to collateral attack.—Bragg v. Lorio, Case No. 1,800.

The record in confiscation proceedings is conclusive as between the maker and payee of a note confiscated therein.—Vogler v. Spaugh, Case No. 16,988.

Construction of the New York statute limiting the period of bringing claims and prosecutions against forfeited estate.—Fisher v. Harnden, Case No. 4,819.

Property seized in confiscation proceedings, or its proceeds before order of distribution made, will be restored to the owner, upon petition setting out a pardon for the offenses charged.—Brown v. United States, Case No. 2,032.

The marshals of the several districts, in enforcing the regulations established by the president, under the act of July 6, 1798, in relation to alien enemies, could act without the aid of the judicial authority.—Lockington v. Smith, Case No. 8,448.

If the island of St. Domingo was conquered by the British and given up to the blacks, the right of France would have revived, as a conqueror gains nothing but the temporary right of possession, and cannot, in the meantime, impair the rights of the former sovereign.—Clark v. United States, Case No. 2,838.

See, also, post, §§ 86–90.

§ 5. Martial law.

The president had authority to issue his proclamation of September 24, 1862, proclaiming martial law and the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus in the case of military arrests.—Ex parte Field, Case No. 4,761.

The president's proclamation, issued under authority of congress, declaring the inhabitants of certain states in rebellion to be in a state of insurrection, and forbidding all commercial intercourse with them, suspends suits in federal courts until after re-establishment of loyal government.—Currie v. The Josiah Harthorn, Case No. 3,491a.

The existence of martial law does not prevent the administration of justice between citizens in the civil courts, when such courts are authorized thereto by the military power; and their decrees are binding on the parties.—Kimball v. Taylor, Case No. 7,775.

Neither the chief justice nor any associate justice of the United States can sit either as a circuit court or as a single judge in a region subject to martial law, even to the extent of hearing an application to admit to bail.—Case of Davis, Case No. 3,621a.

A decree in an attachment case instituted during the war by seizure of the property and publication of notice held void as against a loyal citizen.—Dorr v. Gibboney, Case No. 4,006.

The crime of murdering the president of the United States in time of civil war is triable by a military commission.—Ex parte Mudd, Case No. 9,899.

A person committing an offense in a place where the federal courts are closed by civil war, and arrested and tried in a place where the federal courts are open, cannot be tried by military commission.—In re Murphy, Case No. 9,947.

A person cannot be tried by a military commission for a murder committed in a rebel country five months after hostilities have terminated and the rebel army has surrendered.—In re Egan, Case No. 4,303.

Private property cannot be seized for the purpose of insuring the success of a distant expedition upon which the army is about to march.—Harmony v. Mitchell, Case No. 6,082.

A military commander, under circumstances of actual, urgent, immediate, and pressing public necessity may take private property.—Harmony v. Mitchell, Case No. 6,082; Holmes v. Sheridan, Id. 6,644.

Private property may be seized to prevent it from falling into the hands of the enemy.—Harmony v. Mitchell, Case No. 6,082.

See, also, post, § 83.

§ 6. Prisoners of war.
Persons found on board a prize vessel are not subject to order of the court, but the detention or discharge is purely a matter of naval cognizance.—The Amelia, Case No. 276.

Prisoners and persons brought in with the prize for examination do not pass into the custody of the court, but their custody continues to be military in its character, and the duty of providing for their support devolves upon the government.—The Salvor, Case No. 12,272.

Slaves captured are neither prize nor prisoners of war.—Almeida v. Certain Slaves, Case No. 255.

A military parole is limited by the duration of the war.—In re Milliken, Case No. 9,608.

II. EMBARGO AND NONINTERCOURSE.

§ 7. Statutory provisions.
Construction of Act Jan. 9, 1808, c. 8.—The Sally, Case No. 12,257.

Construction of the nonimportation act of March 1, 1809.—The Falmouth, Case No. 4,631; United States v. The Good Friends, Id. 15,227; Same v. Hayward, Id. 15,336.

Construction of laws of July 1, 1812, July 5, 1812, and January 27, 1813.—Perots v. United States, Case No. 10,993.

Construction of nonimportation acts of 1811 and 1814.—United States v. Hayward, Case No. 15,336.

Construction of acts of April 18, 1818, May 15, 1820, and March 1, 1823, interdicting trade in British vessels.—In re Open Boat, Case No. 10,549.

Section 2 of the embargo law of April 25, 1808, held inoperative for ambiguity.—The Enterprise, Case No. 4,499.

By Act March 1, 1809, c. 91, § 19, and Act June 28, 1809, c. 9, § 2, the embargo acts were as to future cases repealed.—The Orono, Case No. 10,585.

Section 3 of the act of 1808 not repealed by the act of 1809, c. 91.—The Argo, Case No. 516.

The president's proclamation of August 9, 1809, was without legal operation, and did not revive the nonintercourse act of March 1, 1809, c. 91.—The Orono, Case No. 10,585.

The nonintercourse law was not repealed by the declaration of war with Great Britain, except so far as its provisions were inconsistent with a state of war.—Thomson v. United States, Case No. 13,985.

The embargo laws of December 22, 1807, and March 12, 1808, are not unconstitutional, either on the ground that they exceed the powers of congress to "regulate," because they interdict all foreign commerce, or because they are not, by their terms, limited to a specific duration.—United States v. The William, Case No. 16,700.

The proclamation of August 9, 1809, interdicting commerce with Great Britain, held not legal.—President's Proclamation Declared Illegal, Case No. 11,391.

Persons will be charged with a violation of the penal provision of trade laws, of which previous notice is not brought home to them, only from the time they are received by the collector of the district.—The Cotton Planter, Case No. 3,270.

§ 8. Effect on existing contracts.
An embargo does not render the performance of a contract, the execution of which it prevents, unlawful, but only suspends its execution.—Odlin v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, Case No. 10,433.

§ 9. What constitutes an importation.
An involuntary coming into port by stress of weather is not an "importation" of cargo contrary to the embargo laws.—The Mary, Case No. 9,183.

Voluntary arrival at port of destination, though without breaking bulk, constitutes an importation.—The Boston, Case No. 1,670.

§ 10. Clearance or permit.
A vessel licensed for the coasting trade was not required to obtain a clearance or permit on departing from a port of the United States, but only when departing from a district of the United States.—The Elizabeth, Case No. 4,352.

A coasting vessel sailing from New York into Long Island Sound must have a clearance, such waters not belonging to either the district of New York or the district of Connecticut.—The Elizabeth, Case No. 4,352.

Departure from any place within jurisdictional limits, although not a port, is within the provisions of the act.—The Ann, Case No. 397.

§ 11. Goods prohibited.
Act March 1, 1809, c. 91, applies to all goods of British manufacture, etc., although imported into a neutral country before the passage of that act.—In re Ten Hogsheads of Rum, Case No. 13,830.

Goods of British growth, though not liable to duties, are prohibited from importation by Act March 1, 1809.—United States v. The Mars, Case No. 15,723.

The construction by the customhouse of arms and ammunition for the defense of a vessel, as sea stores, adopted by the court.—The Isabella, Case No. 7,101.

§ 12. To what countries and persons laws apply.
The island of St. Domingo is a dependence of France, within the nonintercourse act of March 1, 1807.—Clark v. United States, Case No. 2,838.

A port conquered and occupied by the enemy held not a port of the United States, within the nonimportation acts.—United States v. Hayward, Case No. 15,336.

Construction and effect of Acts March 1, 1809, and March 2, 1811, in relation to the place of lading of prohibited articles.—United States v. The Nancy, Case No. 15,854.

A British subject living in Bermuda, who came to the United States in his own vessel to take his children home from school, returning after two weeks with a cargo, held not a resident within the United States, under 2 Stat. 351.—United States v. The Penelope, Case No. 16,024.

§ 13. Vessels prohibited.
An open boat is not a ship or vessel, within Acts 1820, c. 122, and 1823, c. 150, which prohibit commercial intercourse from the British colonies.—United States v. Open Boat, Cases Nos. 15,967, 15,968.

British ships or vessels excluded from our ports by such statutes are such as are owned by British subjects having a British domicile, and sailing under a British flag, and not ships or vessels owned by British subjects domiciled in the United States.—United States v. Open Boat, Case No. 15,967.

British-owned vessels are included in the prohibition, although not registered or navigated according to the British navigation and registry acts.—United States v. Open Boat, Case No. 15,968.

A registered vessel is within the prohibitions of Act Jan. 9, 1808, § 3, which was not repealed by Act March 1, 1809, § 19, or Act June 28, 1809, § 2.—The Short Staple, Case No. 12,-813.

Bringing British vessel with British cargo captured on high seas by French vessel, and given to American crew, into United States port, not a violation of Act March 1, 1809.—The Adventure, Case No. 93.

§ 14. Embargo bonds—Requisites, sufficiency, and construction.

Sufficiency of bond given under Act March 1, 1809, c. 91, § 13.—United States v. Sawyer, Case No. 16,227.

Validity of bond given under Act Dec. 22, 1807.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,334.

An embargo bond held void because of the insertion of stipulations not authorized by the statute.—United States v. Morgan, Case No. 15,809.

An embargo bond made payable to the United States is good under an act requiring it to be given to the collector of the district.—Dixon v. United States, Case No. 3,934.

Effect of want of seaworthiness as depriving the obligee of an embargo bond of the excuse of prevention of performance of the voyage by perils of the sea.—United States v. Dixey, Case No. 14,967.

What constitutes a "peril of the sea" within the condition of an embargo bond.—United States v. Hall, Case No. 15,285.

§ 15. —— Actions on bond.

A declaration on an embargo bond is not good without an assignment of breaches.—Dixon v. United States, Case No. 3,934.

In debt on an embargo bond, where it was alleged that the vessel was driven by stress of weather to the Island of St. Thomas, and there compelled by the authorities to sell her cargo, held, that a certificate by the governor of the island, without seal (his signature being proved), that a petition for leave to depart with the cargo was denied, was an official act, admissible in evidence.—United States v. Mitchell, Case No. 15,792.

In debt on an embargo bond, where it was claimed the vessel was driven by stress of weather to the Island of St. Thomas, held, that defendants must clear themselves of any imputation that the vessel was not seaworthy; but if sufficient cause, such as storms, were shown for her disability, the want of seaworthiness must be proved by the plaintiff.—United States v. Mitchell, Case No. 15,792.

In debt on an embargo bond, held, that the log book was admissible, having been identified by witness, though he did not recollect seeing the mate make regular entries in it; it also appearing that every exertion had been made to procure the attendance of the mate.—United States v. Mitchell, Case No. 15,792.

The certificate of an American consul, under his seal, that the ship's papers were lodged with him, as required by the embargo law, is evidence of that fact, but not of other facts stated in it.—United States v. Mitchell, Case No. 15,-791.

An action of debt upon a bond given under the embargo laws is a penal action, and the jury are judges both of the law and the facts. —United States v. Poyllon, Case No. 16,081.

Where a collector died pending suit for the penalty of an embargo bond given to him, and his deputy continued to act until after judgment, held, that the deceased collector's right to share in the moiety given to the revenue officers was preserved, and the same did not go to his successor.—United States v. Jones, Case No. 15,492.

§ 16. Forfeitures—Grounds of forfeiture and defenses.

Condemnation of a vessel, and part of her cargo, for a breach of the nonimportation laws. —Nelson v. United States, Case No. 10,116.

Goods placed on board with intent to import them are forfeited, irrespective of owners' intention to violate act.—The Boston, Case No. 1,670; United States v. The Little Charles, Id. 15,612.

An entry in a port of the United States by a derelict vessel, brought in by salvors without the consent of her owner or master, does not work her forfeiture under Acts April 18, 1818, and May 15, 1820, as such acts apply only to a voluntary entry.—The Waterloo, Case No. 17,-257.

Goods of British manufacture, though imported from a neutral country, held forfeited under Act March 1, 1809, c. 91.—The Rose, Case No. 12,044.

A vessel sailing to an interdicted port, unless by permission of the president, on the public service, was liable to forfeiture, under Act June 28, 1809, c. 9, § 3. Under the same act, British ports were permitted ports.—The Wasp, Case No. 17,249.

The value of $400, in determining the liability to forfeiture for taking on goods without permit and inspection (Act Jan. 9, 1808), may be made up by the aggregate of different shipments at different times and places.—United States v. The Polly and Jane, Case No. 16,063.

A vessel having the president's permission to go to the West Indies for American property, condemned, with her cargo, for having on board other merchandise besides that authorized.—United States v. The Little Ann, Case No. 15,-611.

The arrival of a vessel within the Chesapeake Bay for the purpose of procuring a pilot in anticipation of a storm, held sufficient to subject her to forfeiture.—Thomson v. United States, Case No. 13,985.

The use of a British license is no ground of condemnation, unless the vessel was seized during the voyage.—The Saunders, Case No. 12,-372.

No penalty attached (Act April 25, 1808, § 2), for loading without inspection.—The Active, Case No. 35.

Intention of touching off port of United States for supplies, and of terminating voyage in United States, if lawful, not cause of forfeiture.—The Ann Maria, Case No. 427.

What necessity will excuse from forfeiture.—The Argo, Case No. 516; United States v. The James Wells, Id. 15,467; The William Gray, Id. 17,694.

§ 17. —— Release of property on bond.

Vessels and cargoes liable for forfeiture under Act April 18, 1818, may be delivered to the claimants upon giving a bond for value.—United States v. The Pitt, Case No. 16,052.

An order by a district judge for the release of a vessel libeled for breach of the embargo laws is as valid when made at chambers as if made in open court.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,613.

After affirmance of the sentence of condemnation of the district court for a breach of the revenue or nonimportation laws, the court will forthwith, on motion, give judgment against the claimant and his sureties on the bond given upon the delivery of the cargo to him, at the appraised value.—Nelson v. United States, Case No. 10,116.

§ 18. —— Property forfeited.

The forfeiture attaches to the cargo on board at the time the vessel enters or attempts to enter our ports, and not to any cargo subsequently taken on board, though on board at the time of the seizure.—United States v. Open Boat, Case No. 15,968.

Return cargo was not affected with forfeiture under Act Jan. 9, 1808, § 3.—The Short Staple, Case No. 12,813; United States v. The James Wells, Id. 15,467.

Sea stores and provisions are not to be considered as a part of the cargo, so as to be forfeitable under such act, along with goods which the vessel was prohibited from taking on board. —United States v. The Polly and Nancy, Case No. 16,064.

A bona fide purchaser without notice is protected against an antecedent forfeiture to the United States.—The Mars, Case No. 9,106.

§ 19. —— Pleading.

Sufficiency of information under Act Jan. 9, 1809.—The Bolina, Case No. 1,608.

A libel against a vessel for violating the embargo laws must contain a substantial statement of the offense, and it must be made with reasonable precision.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,612.

A libel of forfeiture under the acts of 1807 and 1808 need not set forth the particular character of the vessel, since vessels of all kinds are subject to forfeiture under the law.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,612.

The exception in the embargo laws exempting from its penalties foreign vessels in certain cases need not be negatived in the libel.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,612.

§ 20. —— Evidence.

Imported cargo taken in at a port with which intercourse is prohibited is prima facie presumed to have been laden with an intention to import the same into the United States.—United States v. The Paul Shearman, Case No. 16,012.

The burden of proof of the vessel's being neutral in an information, under Act March 1, 1809, c. 91, and subsequent acts, rests on the claimant.—United States v. Hayward, Case No. 15,336.

The government has the burden of showing that the goods seized were part of the cargo on board at the time of the offense.—United States v. Open Boat, Case No. 15,968.

In the absence of fraud, the court will not hold that sea stores taken on board under a permit from the collector were more than were necessary.—The Isabella, Case No. 7,101.

The report required of the master must state truly the voyage and the place whence the vessel last sailed; and the owner is considered as authorizing the master to make the report. Therefore, though he may controvert it, it is yet prima facie evidence.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,612.

Where the claimants set up a special defense against a forfeiture under the nonintercourse laws, the onus probandi lies on them.—The Short Staple, Case No. 12,813.

On a libel of forfeiture under the embargo laws, the report, manifest, and affidavit of the master before the collector constitute one entire transaction, so as to be admissible in evidence. The entry of the ship is a separate matter, and not necessary to complete the transaction.—United States v. The Little Charles, Case No. 15,612.

Vessel and cargo condemned upon the evidence for violation of embargo laws.—United States v. The William and Samuel, Case No. 16,701.

§ 21. —— Judgment.

The judgment should ascertain and decree the informers' share.—The Bolina, Case No. 1,608.

§ 22. —— Remission of forfeiture.

Until final judgment, no part of the forfeiture under the embargo and nonintercourse act vests absolutely in the collector; but after final judgment his share vests absolutely, and cannot be remitted.—The Margaretta, Case No. 9,072.

§ 23. —— Distribution of proceeds.

Upon the seizure and condemnation of a vessel for violation of Act Feb. 28, 1806, only half of the forfeiture goes to the United States.—United States v. Yeaton, Case No. 16,779.

§ 24. Penalties and enforcement thereof.

A forfeiture of a vessel imposed by the embargo laws cannot be enforced after she has arrived within the jurisdiction of a foreign power. The remedy then is for the penalty of double the value of vessel and cargo.—Parker v. United States, Case No. 10,751.

The secretary of the treasury had no authority under Act Feb. 27, 1813, c. 175, to remit the penalties for goods subsequently imported contrary to the nonimportation act.—The Margaretta, Case No. 9,072.

Procedure for a penalty under section 3 of the embargo act.—Cross v. United States, Case No. 3,434.

Debt will lie in favor of the United States to recover the penalty given by the embargo act for being knowingly concerned in a foreign voyage in violation of such act.—United States v. Allen, Case No. 14,431.

An action of debt to recover a penalty for violation of the embargo laws (1807–1808) may be brought in any district where the offender may be found. Act Feb. 28, 1839.—United States v. Woolsey, Case No. 16,762.

Penalties under Act Jan. 9, 1808, are to be sued for within the time limited by the statute of limitations of April 30, 1790, and not by Act March 2, 1799, § 89, or Act March 26, 1804.—United States v. Mayo, Case No. 15,755.

The limitation prescribed by Act March 2, 1799, § 89, continues to apply to suits brought for penalties under the embargo act of 1808.—United States v. Woolsey, Case No. 16,763.

A verdict for a specific sum in debt for the double value, under Act Jan. 9, 1808, c. 8, § 3, where the statute gives the double value, is to be considered as the double value, unless the contrary appear.—Cross v. United States, Case No. 3,434.

§ 25. Offenses.

An offense punishable by fine and imprisonment, under Act Jan. 9, 1809, was not saved from repeal by the saving clause in Act June 28, 1809, § 2.—United States v. Mann, Case No. 15,718.

Exportation of goods contrary to Act Jan. 9, 1809, § 1, is a misdemeanor, of which the circuit court has original cognizance; and it seems the prosecution may be by information.—United States v. Mann, Case No. 15,717.

A piece of colored cloth is a pass within the meaning of Act Aug. 13, 1813, c. 56, § 1, if used for the purpose of protection in concert with the commander of the foreign vessel.—United States v. Briggs, Case No. 14,646.

An inspector may go on board of any vessel to discover if any goods, etc., were illegally laden on board contrary to the embargo acts; and, if obstructed, an indictment will lie, under Act March 1, 1799, c. 128, § 71.—United States v. Sears, Case No. 16,247.

The power to remit fines (Act Jan. 2, 1813) extends to cases of joint ownership between citizens of the United States and citizens of Great Britain, so far as the former were concerned.—Gallego v. United States, Case No. 5,-201.

The power is lodged entirely with the secretary of the treasury. The court has no revisory power.—Gallego v. United States, Case No. 5,201.

III. PRIZE.

(A) BLOCKADE.

§ 26. Power to establish.
Powers of president in establishing blockades, and directing capture of hostile property.—The Amy Warwick, Case No. 341; The Sarah Starr, Id. 12,352; United States v. The Tropic Wind, Id. 16,541a.

A blockade of the enemy's ports is as lawful a means of war in civil warfare as it is in a war between nations foreign to each other.—The Hiawatha, Case No. 6,451.

As against the states in rebellion, the United States had both sovereign and belligerent rights, and might both establish a blockade and interdict all commerce with their ports.—The Revere, Case No. 11,716.

The acts of July 13, 1861, and August 6, 1861, did not affect prior proceedings of the president in authorizing acts of war, in establishing blockades, and making captures of enemy property.—The Hiawatha, Case No. 6,451.

The proclamation of the blockade is of itself conclusive evidence of the existence of war warranting the blockade.—The Mary Clinton, Case No. 9,203.

§ 27. Notice of blockade.
A neutral must be sufficiently informed of the existence of a blockade to be affected with the penal consequences of a violation.—The Louisa Agnes, Case No. 8,531.

A notice of a blockade, to the officials of a neutral government, is a sufficient notice of it to the subject of such government.—The Hiawatha, Case No. 6,451.

Only those who are ignorant of the blockade are entitled to the warning and indorsement mentioned therein.—The Revere, Case No. 11,716; The Louisa Agnes, Id. 8,531.

A warning on the register of a vessel is not necessary to establish notice of a blockade, where actual notice of it to the master or owner is satisfactorily made out otherwise.—The Hiawatha, Case No. 6,451.

§ 28. What constitutes a blockade.
A blockade, as understood by the law of nations, is an investment of a town of one belligerent by the forces of another.—United States v. The William Arthur, Case No. 16,702.

To constitute a blockade of a port, an adequate force must be stationed to render the entrance or departure of vessels into or from the port dangerous.—The Sarah Starr, Case No. 12,-352.

§ 29. Withdrawal of blockade.
Effect of proclamation "relaxing blockade" of Beaufort, N. C.—The Alma, Case No. 253.

(B) CAPTURE AND LIABILITY OF CAPTORS.

See, also, post, § 89.

§ 30. What constitutes, in general.
An animus capiendi, and a submission, constitute a capture, though no prize crew is put on board.—The Alexander, Case No. 164.

The surrender of Charleston operated as a capture of all the prize or booty in the town and harbor.—The Siren, Case No. 12,911.

The prize act of 1864 does not exhaust the subject of prize or no prize. There may still be captures which go to the United States only, and there may be prize without captors.—The Siren, Case No. 12,911.

The liability to condemnation is not affected by the right of the captors to prize money, or the fact that the capture was brought about by a revolt of the crew of the vessel.—United States v. The Wren, Case No. 16,768.

§ 31. Who may capture.
It is immaterial by whom the vessel was seized if she was subject to capture and condemnation for being engaged in an unlawful trade.—The Ouachita, Case No. 10,620.

Any person may take possession of property seizable as prize, when found within the jurisdiction of the court.—The Tropic Wind, Case No. 14,186.

A vessel subject to capture may be arrested by any person, officer, or citizen, as property belonging to the government.—The Prince Leopold, Case No. 11,428.

Captures under a commission to cruise are valid, if war existed at the time of the capture, though the commission was granted in time of peace.—Chacon v. Eighty-Nine Bales of Cochineal, Case No. 2,568.

Seizure of a vessel for violation of a blockade is lawful, though made by a national vessel forming no part of the blockading squadron. Case No. 9,414 affirmed.—The Memphis, Case No. 9,413.

The filing of a libel by the United States against a vessel captured by a transport vessel in its service, not commissioned as a vessel of war, is a ratification equivalent to an original seizure by authority of the government.—The Emma, Case No. 4,461.

A captured vessel is subject to trial and condemnation for violating the law, whether the persons or means employed in making the seizure were authorized or not.—United States v. The Onachita, Case No. 15,919a.

An abandoned merchant vessel, saved and taken possession of by a cruiser on the surrender of Charleston, was prize to the United States, but neither the cruiser nor the fleet generally were captors.—The Siren, Case No. 12,911.

Vessels used merely as transports for troops and neither armed nor commanded by government officers do not bring within the prize jurisdiction a capture by military forces.—United States v. Two Hundred and Sixty-Nine and One-Half Bales of Cotton, Case No. 16,583.

§ 32. Place of capture.
A capture may be made by a privateer of the United States within the territorial limits of the United States at any place below low-water mark.—The Joseph, Case No. 7,533.

A vessel subject to capture may be arrested anywhere at sea or within the dominions of the capturing power.—The Prince Leopold, Case No. 11,428.

Enemy property captured by a public vessel in an enemy port, although, when seized, stored in a warehouse on land, near the water, held, under the facts in this case, to be lawful prize.—In re One Thousand Two Hundred and Fifty-Three Bags of Rice, Case No. 10,535.

Property seized by an armed vessel of the United States empowered to make prizes while afloat in an enemy port, on board of an enemy vessel, is lawful prize under the law of nations.—In re One Thousand Two Hundred and Fifty-Three Bags of Rice, Case No. 10,535.

Property found on shore, or even land itself, may be condemned under Act Aug. 6, 1861, declaring private property used in promoting insurrection to be lawful subject of prize and capture.—United States v. Athens Armory, Case No. 14,473.

A neutral vessel on a lawful voyage from Washington City to Halifax, during the Civil War, is not subject to arrest on the Potomac river.—The Tropic Wind, Case No. 14,186.

The seizure of enemy property by the United States as prize of war on land, jure belli, is not authorized by the law of nations, and can be upheld only by an act of congress.—United States v. One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-Six Shares of Capital Stock, Case No. 15,961.

§ 33. Powers and duties of captors.

It is the duty of captors to bring in the prize crew, or at least the master and principal officers, with the prize, for adjudication.—The Bothnea, Case No. 1,686; The Jane Campbell, Id. 7,205.

The captors must bring in the master of the captured ship and the ship's papers, or satisfactorily explain the omission.—The Arabella, Case No. 501.

And the omission of the captors of a vessel to bring in the captured crew will not inure to defeat a capture by a government vessel.—The Shark, Case No. 12,708.

A vessel, after her capture, appropriated to the use of the United States, and not sent into port, where none of her company are sent in as witnesses, will be discharged for want of legal arrest and prosecution.—The Wave, Case No. 17,299.

The vessel will not be condemned to the United States for failure of the captors to bring in the master of the captured vessel, where he was released from motives of compassion.—The Flying Fish, Case No. 4,892.

The captor will be excused from sending in his prize for adjudication, only where his doing so will weaken his command, so as to endanger the public service.—Fay v. Montgomery, Case No. 4,709.

A vessel documented as neutral, and sailing under a neutral flag, will not be condemned instanter, where the captors failed, without any excuse, to send in the master of the prize as a witness.—The Julia, Case No. 7,576.

The failure to send the officer or crew of the captured vessel into port with her, or produce them as witnesses, held cured by the subsequent appearance and examination in preparatorio of the master.—The Henry Middleton, Case No. 6,378.

The captors must immediately upon arrival in port deliver, upon oath, all the papers of captured vessels into the registry of the prize court.—The Diana, Case No. 3,876.

Captors have a right to carry their prizes to a proper and convenient port for adjudication, and are not controlled by the revenue officers.—The Lively, Case No. 8,403.

The prize will be given into the custody of the marshal pending the production of the prisoners taken in her whose examination is important.—The Albion, Case No. 143.

§ 34. Wrongful capture and wrongful acts of captors.

Probable cause is a sufficient justification for a capture.—The George, Case No. 5,328; The Liverpool Packet, Id. 8,406; The Rover, Id. 12,091.

But such protection may be forfeited by subsequent misconduct or negligence.—The George, Case No. 5,328.

Captors are bound to good faith and ordinary diligence, and are therefore liable for ordinary negligence.—The George, Case No. 5,328.

Captors are not liable for damages where the vessel presented probable cause for capture, though her predicament was involuntary, and caused by mistakes of the revenue officers of the captor's own government.—The La Manche, Case No. 8,004.

A voyage by a vessel from an enemy port with a cargo on board, without the license of our government, is of itself a probable cause for the capture of the vessel and cargo.—The Liverpool Packet, Case No. 8,406.

Circumstances which warrant a reasonable suspicion of illegal conduct will constitute probable cause for capture. It is not necessary that there be prima facie evidence to condemn.—The George, Case No. 5,328.

What constitutes a probable cause of capture may depend on the ordinances of the country of the captors, as well as on the law of nations.—The Invincible, Case No. 7,054.

A capture after a treaty of peace, though made in good faith, will entitle the owner to damages for goods taken and costs.—The Ulpiano, Case No. 14,326.

A seizure as prize is no tresspass, though it may be wrongful.—Juando v. Taylor, Case No. 7,558.

On recapture, owners held entitled to damages out of goods put on board by privateers.—British Consul v. Thompson, Case No. 1,899.

Where a capture is lawful, the subsequent bringing in of the captured vessel is not a cause for giving damages.—The Marianna Flora, Case No. 9,080.

Damages for personal ill usage will be awarded where the captors wantonly injured the captured crew.—The Jane Campbell, Case No. 7,205; The Lively, Id. 8,403.

The captors will be held liable in damages for unjustifiable conduct towards the property on the prize after her arrest.—The Jane Campbell, Case No. 7,205.

The question of condemnation is not affected by the wrongful acts of the captors towards the prize or its crew subsequent to capture.—The Louisa Agnes, Case No. 8,531.

§ 35. Persons liable.

The extent of the liability of the owners of a commissioned privateer for acts of the officers and crew discussed.—Dias v. The Revenge, Case No. 3,877; The Amiable Nancy, Id. 331.

A district court cannot proceed against a captor into whose hands the proceeds of the capture have never arrived.—Carson v. Jennings, Case No. 2,464.

One claiming by acts of record to be part owner of a privateer is responsible for damages assessed against her, though not named in the ship's papers.—The Mary, Case No. 9,185.

An officer of a public armed vessel of the United States who makes seizure of a neutral vessel on the high seas is liable for all consequential damages, unless he show probable cause for the seizure.—Shattuck v. Maley, Case No. 12,714.

§ 36. Proceedings against captors.

Claimants who complain of irregularities, delay, and acts of negligence by the captors must proceed by libel and monition, and not by special motion. Rule 23.—The Tropic Wind, Case No. 14,186.

The right of reclamation for damages, in cases of captures by public vessels, must be pursued by plea and proof.—The Louisa Agnes, Case No. 8,531.

Redress for wrongs committed by the captors, or for want of diligence in proceeding to trial, cannot be had by way of defense in the prize suit.—The Joseph H. Toone, Case No. 7,541.

As to the jurisdiction of courts of admiralty in an action for damages for unlawful capture, where the court of appeals of the United States, under the Articles of Confederation, had reversed a decree of condemnation, and awarded restitution without ordering damages.—Jennings v. Carson, Case No. 7,281.

False papers divest a neutral vessel of all right to redress for an unlawful capture.—Mann v. Sacks, Case No. 9,035.

A suit will not lie in a neutral tribunal against a lawfully commissioned cruiser for an alleged illegal capture.—The Invincible, Case No. 7,054.

Where a vessel is wrongfully captured, the owner may libel against the capturing vessel and her captain, for reparation of the loss and damage sustained by such capture.—Gibbs v. The Two Friends, Case No. 5,386.

Burden of proof of necessity of spoliation in action for unlawful seizure of vessel.—Arnold v. Delcol, Case No. 556.

Probable or reasonable cause of capture must be shown to rest on strong facts apparent at the time of capture. What facts are sufficient. —United States v. The Ariadne, Case No. 14,465.

§ 37. Damages.

A suit for consequential damages will lie for the illegal seizure of a vessel, by a French privateer, where there was a decree of restitution by the French court of admiralty.—McGrath v. The Candalero, Case No. 8,809.

Loss of voyage is not an item of damages in case of marine trespass.—The Amiable Nancy, Case No. 331.

Freight is not a proper item of damage for an illegal capture where the voyage has not been lost.—The Lively, Case No. 8,403.

A speculative loss of profits is not a proper item of damage in a case of illegal capture.—The Lively, Case No. 8,403.

The measure of damages for an illegal capture, where the vessel and cargo have been wholly lost, is the prime cost and interest.—The Lively, Case No. 8,403.

Injury alleged to the cargo after it came into the possession of the captors should be ascertained under the direction of the prize court, by a survey and appraisement or sale.—The Lively, Case No. 8,403.

Vindictive damages not allowable against owners of privateer for trespasses committed by crew.—The Amiable Nancy, Case No. 331.

Commissioners to whom the case is referred to state the amount of damages for an illegal capture must state the items of the allowances in detail in their report.—The Lively, Case No. 8,403.

Commissioners appointed to state damages should not hear ex parte evidence without notice to the other side.—The Lively, Case No. 8,403.

The captured, who has failed to enforce a decree of a superior court reversing the decree of a court of admiralty, cannot claim as damages losses sustained by depreciation of the funds in which the proceeds of the capture were invested.—Carson v. Jennings, Case No. 2,464.

French owners are entitled to the benefit of the ordinance of congress relative to recaptures.—Ducatur v. The Desire, Case No. 4,111.

(C) GROUNDS OF CONDEMNATION.

§ 38. Carrying contraband goods.

In what cases provisions are contraband.—The Commercen, Case No. 3,055.

Articles which, in their actual condition, may be and are used either for purposes of war or peace, are contraband, when destined to the enemy's country or to the enemy's use.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

All military equipments and military clothing are regarded as contraband.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

The destination of arms and munitions of war, and the use intended to be made thereof at the time of seizure, furnishes a test of their status as contraband or otherwise.—United States v. Six Boxes of Arms, Case No. 16,295.

Contraband merchandise is liable to capture when destined to a hostile country, or for the use of the enemy.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

Contraband goods may be transported by a neutral between neutral ports.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

The master in time of war is bound to know the contents of contraband packages on board. —The Springbok, Case No. 13,264.

The owner of a neutral vessel held chargeable with knowledge of the fact that contraband cargo was destined for the enemy's use, and liable for the acts of the master in violation of the rights of the belligerent.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

Under Act July 13, 1861, goods forming the cargo of a vessel proceeding to a point in the insurrectionary states are liable to forfeiture only when in transitu, and the vessel only while the contraband cargo is on board.—United States v. The Francis Hatch, Case No. 15,158.

Under the regulations made under the authority of Acts July 13, 1861, May 20, 1862, and July 2, 1864, a vessel engaged in a prohibited trade is liable to forfeiture, even after the termination of the prohibited voyage and the discharge of the contraband cargo.—United States v. The Francis Hatch, Case No. 15,158.

Innocent goods on board will share the fate of contraband goods where they belong to the same owner.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024; The Springbok, Id. 13,264.

Contraband articles intended to be delivered from a neutral port, by transshipment into the enemy's country, and for the use of the enemy, are liable to capture.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

A neutral cannot lawfully become the carrier of provisions for the supply of the enemy's army, though such army be in a neutral country, and engaged only in hostilities against another belligerent; and in such case the vessel employed is not entitled to freight.—The Commercen, Case No. 3,055.

Where the vessel is employed with the knowledge of her master in carrying contraband goods to the enemy's country by means of transshipment at an intermediate port, from which they are sent on in another vessel, the vessel is subject to condemnation with the cargo.—The Springbok, Case No. 13,264; The Stephen Hart, Id. 13,364.

The offense of attempting to carry contraband of war to the enemy is complete at the moment when a vessel begins her voyage for that purpose, and she is from that time liable to capture.—The Dolphin, Case No. 3,975; The Stephen Hart, Id. 13,364; The Peterhoff, Id. 11,024.

And this is the rule although the vessel intended to transship the same at an intermediate port.—The Stephen Hart, Case No. 13,364; The Springbok, Id. 13,264.

Vessel and cargo condemned for transporting contraband of war to the enemy.—The Ezilda, Cases Nos. 4,599, 4,600; The Gertrude, Id. 5,369; The Nassau, Id. 10,026; The Peterhoff,

Id. 11,023; The Richard O'Bryan, Id. 11,767; The Springbok, Id. 13,263; The Stephen Hart, Id. 13,363.

§ 39. Violation of blockade.

To constitute a violation of blockade, there must be the existence of the blockade, a knowledge thereof, and a running of the same with a cargo laden after the commencement of the blockade.—Conner v. The Coosa, Case No. 3,113.

The act of sailing for a blockaded port with knowledge of the blockade, and an intention to violate it, is an attempt which will authorize the capture and condemnation of the vessel.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,727; The Dolphin, Id. 3,975; Ingraham v. The Nayade, Id. 7,046. CONTRA, see The John Gilpin, Case No. 7,343.

If a vessel, after sailing with intent to break a blockade, abandons such purpose, and changes her destination, the original offense is condoned.—The Circassian, Case No. 2,727; The John Gilpin. Id. 7,343.

Neutral vessel held not subject to forfeiture for sailing to a blockaded port with knowledge of a proclamation declaring an intent to blockade the port, where it was not its intention to violate an actual blockade. Case No. 4,477 reversed.—The Empress, Case No. 4,478.

The voyage of a vessel to a blockaded port, although broken by a stop at a neutral port, is one continuous illegal voyage.—The Dolphin, Case No. 3,975; The Pearl, Id. 10,874.

An attempted breach of blockade cannot be predicated on the intention to land the cargo of a vessel wrecked on an enemy's coast temporarily on the adjoining shore, until it could be conveyed to a loyal port.—United States v. The F. W. Johnson, Case No. 15,179.

The departure of a vessel from a blockaded port, under the compulsory direction of a blockading cruiser, does not reintegrate her to the state of an innocent trader, where she approached the port with knowledge of the blockade, and with intent to violate it.—The Louisa Agnes, Case No. 8,531.

After cargo has been delivered to a neutral consignee at a neutral port, it is not subject to capture as having been originally brought from an enemy blockaded port in violation of the blockade.—The Isabella Thompson, Case No. 7,102.

A vessel approaching a blockaded port, with intent to violate the blockade, is not entitled to be warned off.—The Hallie Jackson, Case No. 5,961; United States v. The Hattie Jackson, Id. 15,327.

A vessel having knowledge of a blockade at the time of sailing cannot lawfully approach the port for the bona fide purpose of inquiring as to the continuance of the blockade.—The Delta, Cases Nos. 3,777, 3,778; The Cheshire, Id. 2,655, 2,657.

The master is entitled to make inquiry and to receive notice of blockade of whose existence he had no previous knowledge.—The Delta, Case No. 3,778.

An entry into a blockaded port to obtain necessary supplies excused.—The Forest King, Case No. 4,937.

Owners of vessel, and generally owners of cargo, bound by violation of blockade by master.—The Aries, Case No. 528.

Cotton picked up at sea by a United States cruiser held properly proceeded against as prize where the circumstances showed that it had recently been abandoned either by an enemy or a neutral engaged in breaking the blockade.—In re Seventy-Eight Bales of Cotton, Case No. 12,679.

The running of a neutral vessel into a blockaded port, of which its owner had due notice, subjects her to forfeiture, regardless of the instructions of the owner, or her intentions.—The Napoleon, Case No. 10,013.

On notice of a blockade a neutral vessel may withdraw from the port, with all the cargo honestly laden on board before the commencement of the blockade.—The Hiawatha, Case No. 6,451.

Where 15 days are allowed for neutral vessels to leave on proclamation of a blockade, a vessel cannot leave within such time with a cargo put on board after notice that the blockade had become effective.—United States v. The Tropic Wind, Case No. 16,541a.

The act of egress is as culpable as the act of ingress, when done in fraud of a blockade.—The Hiawatha, Case No. 6,451.

The acts of a master in breach of a blockade affect the cargo equally with the vessel, if the cargo is laden on board after the blockade has become effective as to the vessel.—The Hiawatha, Case No. 6,451.

An innocent shipment will share the fate of the vessel and other cargo, where an attempt has been made to violate a blockade of which the shipper had notice.—The Sunbeam, Case No. 13,615; United States v. The Hattie Jackson, Id. 15,327.

Coin taken in a vessel which was captured in the act of breaking a blockade is liable to condemnation, though belonging to a neutral, and not intended to be used in trade.—The Wando, Case No. 17,140.

Cargo on board a neutral vessel, to which it has been transshipped in a neutral port from a vessel which has run a blockade, is subject to capture, where there is a solidarity of interests between the vessels, and the voyage was continuous.—The Isabella Thompson, Case No. 7,102.

Neither a consul nor the commander of an American vessel of war has authority, by virtue of his official station, to grant any license or permit which could have the legal effect of exempting the vessel of an enemy from capture and confiscation.—Rogers v. The Amado, Case No. 12,005.

§ 40. Enemy property—In general.

As soon as war is declared, all the property of the enemy or of his subjects, wherever found, whether on the land or water, is lawful prize.—Johnson v. Twenty-One Bales, etc., Case No. 7,417; The Emulous, Id. 4,479.

But books intended for a public library will not be confiscated.—The Amelia, Case No. 277.

§ 41. —— Property of neutrals domiciled in enemy country.

Political status, and not individual loyalty or disloyalty, is controlling on the question of enemy ownership.—The Amy Warwick, Case No. 342; The Hiawatha, Id. 6,451; The Peterhoff, Id. 11,024; The Pioneer, Id. 11,171a, 11,174; The Sally Magee, Id. 12,260; United States v. The Allegheny, Id. 14,429; Same v. The F. W. Johnson, Id. 15,179.

National character depends upon domicile.—The Ann Green, Case No. 414; United States v. El Telegrafo, Id. 15,049; Johnson v. Twenty-One Bales, etc., Id. 7,417.

The intention as to residence openly declared, however short the residence, will establish the domicile.—Johnson v. Twenty-One Bales, etc., Case No. 7,417.

A temporary excursion to the place of the original domicile, or to any other, will not be deemed to interrupt the residence.—Johnson v. Twenty-One Bales, etc., Case No. 7,417.

The character of a ship is determined by the residence of her owners, and not by the flag she carries.—The San Jose Indiano, Case No. 12,-322.

And property belonging to a neutral who is domiciled and carrying on trade at an enemy port is enemy property.—The Delta, Case No. 3,777; The Francis, Id. 5,034; The Sarah Starr, Id. 12,352.

Inhabitants of Chincoteague island, separated from the coast of Virginia by a ship canal, held not to be enemies on the ground of their residence.—The Elizabeth Ann, Case No. 4,357.

A foreign consul, carrying on trade as a merchant in the enemy's country, where he is stationed, is considered as on the same footing with other resident merchants, and his property on the high seas is subject to capture and condemnation.—The Pioneer, Case No. 11,175.

Thirteen years' residence in the enemy's country of a citizen of another country held to subject him to the disabilities of an enemy.—Rogers v. The Amado, Case No. 12,005.

The commercial residence of the master of a vessel will define his personal relations as apparent owner.—The Island Belle, Case No. 7,-107.

Property of persons residing within the rebel lines during the War of the Rebellion is proper prize.—The Mary Clinton, Case No. 9,203.

The fact that a person's place of residence is occupied by the army of the United States will not affect his status, where the government of the state is still under the control of the insurgents.—United States v. The Allegheny, Case No. 14,429.

A person who puts himself in itinere to return to his native country is deemed to have assumed his native character.—The Francis, Case No. 5,034; The St. Lawrence, Id. 12,232.

The separate property of a neutral partner in a house of trade established in an enemy's country is not subject to confiscation; otherwise, as to property of the firm.—The San Jose Indiano, Case No. 12,322.

Where a partner in a neutral house is domiciled in the enemy's country, and engaged in its general commerce, for the benefit of his neutral house, his property is liable as prize.—The San Jose Indiano, Case No. 12,322.

In the case of a joint shipment from enemy country, the share of the partner domiciled in the enemy country was condemned.—The Francis, Case No. 5,035.

Under the treaties of 1794, 1814, and 1815, a British merchant, residing in a port of a seceding state during the war, has no immunity from the general principles of public law, applicable to resident neutral merchants.—The Sarah Starr, Case No. 12,352.

Vessel and cargo owned by aliens residing in the enemy's country will be restored where delivered to the blockading squadron on fleeing the country to save it from the enemy.—The Evening Star, Case No. 4,575.

§ 42. —— Property of temporary residents, and withdrawal thereof.

A citizen temporarily residing in the enemy's country at the breaking out of the war is entitled to a reasonable time to collect and convert his effects to enable him to withdraw them from the country. Case No. 7,343 reversed.—The John Gilpin, Case No. 7,344; The San Jose Indiano, Id. 12,322; The Sarah Starr, Id. 12,353.

A loyal citizen converted his property into a vessel and cargo for the purpose of withdrawing himself and effects from the enemy's country. Held not subject to capture as enemy's property. Case No. 5,308 reversed.—The General C. C. Pinckney, Case No. 5,309.

But a naturalized citizen cannot lawfully bring away his property from an enemy country after knowledge of the war, without the license of the government.—The St. Lawrence, Case No. 12,-232; The Rapid, Id. 11,576.

§ 43. —— Property shipped from enemy country.

Enemy property, shipped by an enemy, from an enemy port, to his creditor, to be applied on a debt, is subject to capture at sea before it comes to the creditor's hands.—The Hannah M. Johnson, Cases Nos. 6,029a, 6,030.

Property shipped from an enemy's country by an American citizen, after knowledge of the war, is subject to condemnation as enemy property.—The Mary, Case No. 9,184.

Cargo purchased with the proceeds of an outward cargo held to be the property of the consignees from the time it was laden on board and bills of lading executed therefor.—The Sally Magee, Case No. 12,260.

A shipment made by an enemy shipper to his correspondent in America, to belong to the latter at his election, in 24 hours after arrival, is liable to condemnation as hostile property.—The Francis, Case No. 5,032.

Cotton purchased during the Civil War with the proceeds of debts collected by a citizen of a loyal state, who went south before the war to collect such debts, captured while water borne in Texas, held not enemy's property. Case No. 4,-784 reversed.—Fifty-One Bales of Cotton, Case No. 4,785.

A shipment made by a person domiciled in the enemy's country to a house established in a neutral country, in which he is a partner, if made upon their joint account and risk, is not liable to condemnation.—The San Jose Indiano, Case No. 12,322.

A shipment made by such house to the partner domiciled in a neutral country is only liable as prize where made on joint account.—The San Jose Indiano, Case No. 12,322.

§ 44. —— Property shipped to enemy country.

Property shipped to become the property of the enemy is not protected by neutrality of shipper.—The Ann Green, Case No. 414.

Property purchased as stock, in a trade to be carried on in the enemy's country, by a person domiciled and permanently residing there, is subject to forfeiture.—The Lilla, Case No. 8,348.

§ 45. —— Produce of soil of enemy country.

Produce of the enemy's soil owned by a neutral, while it remains in the enemy's country, is enemy property.—The Mary Clinton, Case No. 9,203.

Produce of the soil of a hostile country, embarked in the commerce thereof, is legitimate prize, regardless of the owner's domicile.—The Mary Clinton, Case No. 9,203.

§ 46. —— Flag under which property is carried.

Mortgaged property put on board a belligerent vessel by the mortgagor, rightfully in possession, is subject to capture.—Bolchos v. Darrel, Case No. 1,607.

A vessel sailing under the flag of the enemy is considered as enemy property, and is liable to confiscation, jure belli.—United States v. El Telegrafo, Case No. 15,049.

Neutral property in an enemy's ship is forfeited by the treaty with France. Article 14.—Bolchos v. Darrel, Case No. 1,607.

A neutral flag constitutes no protection to enemy's property, and a belligerent flag communicates no hostile character to neutral property.—United States v. El Telegrafo, Case No. 15,049.

Vessel does not forfeit neutral character by hoisting foreign flag in conformity to trade regulations.—Arnold v. Delcol, Case No. 556.

§ 47. —— Change of ownership during war.

In war, property cannot change its hostile character in transitu.—The Francis, Case No. 5,032.

A change of ownership during hostilities will not be recognized where the disposition and control of the vessel continue in the former agent of her formerly hostile proprietors.—The Island Belle, Case No. 7,107.

A sale of property during hostilities in an enemy port, by a person domiciled and trading there, to a neutral, will not prevent the property being subject to capture as prize.—The Sarah Starr, Case No. 12,352.

Enemy property transferred to a neutral residing at the time in the enemy's country does not lose its character as enemy property.—The Stephen Hart, Case No. 13,364.

§ 48. —— Fraudulent claim by neutral.

Fraudulent conduct of a neutral owner of a portion of the property captured, in claiming another part which belongs to an enemy, is ground of forfeiture of his portion.—The Lilla, Case No. 8,348; United States v. The Lilla, Id. 15,600.

Portion of cargo clearly owned by neutral not confiscated because of his claim of ownership to the whole, unless fraudulently made.—The Betsy, Case No. 1,364.

§ 49. —— Rights of neutral lienors.

The interests of a loyal mortgagee under a mortgage recorded before the outbreak of hostilities will not be condemned because of enemy ownership.—United States v. The Arcola, Case No. 14,464a.

§ 50. Trading and intercourse with enemy.

During war, all trade with the enemy, unless by permission of the sovereign, is interdicted, and subjects the property engaged therein to confiscation.—The Eliza, Case No. 4,346; The Rapid, Id. 11,576; The San Jose Indiano, Id. 12,322; The Shark, Id. 12,708.

American vessel loading in enemy's port after knowledge of war declared, liable to confiscation for trading with enemy.—The Alexander, Case No. 164.

A vessel has not proceeded or departed on her voyage within Acts July 13, 1861, and May 20, 1862, and the rules and regulations of the secretary of the treasury supplementary thereto, until she is outside the limits of the harbor or her port of departure.—United States v. The George Darby, Case No. 15,200.

A trade to a neutral port is not illegal, although the public enemy derive benefit thereby, unless such trade be carried on in connection with or subservient to hostile interests and policy.—The Liverpool Packet, Case No. 8,406.

An American vessel, which, after a knowledge of the war, proceeds from a neutral to an enemy port on freight, is subject to forfeiture on her return voyage to the United States.—The Joseph, Case No. 7,533.

The law of prize is a part of the law of nations, and by it hostile character of trade does not depend upon the character of the trader who pursues it.—Conner v. The Coosa, Case No. 3,113.

A vessel guilty of an unlawful trade with the enemy is liable to capture at any time during the voyage. Case No. 9,414 affirmed.—The Memphis, Case No. 9,413.

If a vessel be sent from the United States, after knowledge of war, to the enemy's country, to withdraw such property, the vessel and the cargo are confiscated jure belli.—The Rapid, Case No. 11,576.

A shipment made after known war, by an American citizen from an enemy's port to one of her colonies, is illegal, as a trading with the enemy.—The Diana, Case No. 3,876.

An American vessel is liable to condemnation as prize of war for taking on board a cargo from an enemy's ship under the pretense that it is ransomed, and she may be seized on the return voyage.—The Lord Wellington, Case No. 8,508.

A trading voyage by an American vessel is not made unlawful by directing that the proceeds shall be remitted to American citizens detained in the enemy's country in bills of exchange drawn upon that country.—United States v. The Ariadne, Case No. 14,465.

A British subject domiciled in United States, though temporarily absent in British territory, is an American merchant as to purposes of trade.—The Ann Green, Case No. 414.

The trade between Jamaica and Canada not national during war between the United States and Great Britain.—The Ann Green, Case No. 414.

A neutral friend to both belligerents cannot transport the effects of one to the use of the other.—The Mary Clinton, Case No. 9,203.

The carrying of military or naval persons in the service of the enemy to enemy ports subjects the offending vessel to condemnation.—United States v. The Wren, Case No. 16,768.

Sailing under enemy's license is cause for forfeiture of neutral vessel.—The Alliance, Case No. 245; The Aurora, Id. 660; The Julia, Id. 7,575. But see The Sarah Starr, Case No. 12,352; United States v. The Ariadne, Id. 14,465; Hooper v. The Hiram, Id. 6,675; United States v. The South Carolina, Id. 16,360.

A transfer of property to a neutral by an enemy in time of war, or in aid of a contemplated war, is illegal, as in violation and fraud of vested belligerent rights.—The Mersey, Case No. 9,489.

A neutral owner is concluded by the act of his agent in charge, in allowing the vessel to be employed by the enemy.—The Napoleon, Cases Nos. 10,012, 10,013.

Property captured trading with the enemy is deemed quasi enemy property.—The Joseph, Case No. 7,533; The Rapid, Id. 11,576.

French privateers protected in bringing prizes into American ports, though such privateers were originally American vessels. Treaty Feb. 6, 1778, art. 17.—British Consul v. The Mermaid, Case No. 1,897.

(D) JURISDICTION AND PROCEDURE.

Jurisdiction over captures and prizes, see, also, "Admiralty," 35; "Courts," § 98.

§ 51. Jurisdiction—In general.

The United States district courts are permanent prize tribunals, and take cognizance of questions of prize by virtue of their general jurisdiction.—The Amy Warwick, Cases Nos. 341, 342.

The court of the district into which the property is carried and proceeded against has jurisdiction.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

The exclusive cognizance of prize cases is vested in the courts of the capturing power.—The Invincible, Case No. 7,054.

A foreign prize court which has once acquired jurisdiction over the corpus does not lose it because the same is taken into another jurisdiction by a purchaser from the captors. Case No. 12,047 reversed.—Rose v. Himely, Case No. 12,046.

Jurisdiction may be taken while property captured is lying in foreign neutral port.—The Arabella, Case No. 501.

Where the captured vessel was destroyed because unfit to be sent in for adjudication, but the cargo was sent in, held, that the court had jurisdiction.—The Zaralla, Case No. 18,203.

Where the captured vessel is appraised by a naval survey, and appropriated to the United States, she may be proceeded against in a prize court, where her papers and crew, together with the appraisal, are sent in.—The Advocate, Case No. 94.

It is the usage of prize courts to exercise jurisdiction over property captured on board a vessel without having the vessel itself brought within their cognizance.—The Edward Barnard, Case No. 4,291; Proceeds of Prizes of War, Id. 11,440.

The confiscations provided for by Act July 3, 1861, § 6, and Act Aug. 6, 1861, can be carried into effect by the prize courts of the United States, as respects property captured at sea.—The Sarah Starr, Case No. 12,352.

§ 52. —— As affected by locality of capture.

The prize jurisdiction embraces the whole question of prize, unrestrained by the locality of the capture.—Johnson v. Twenty-One Bales, etc., Case No. 7,417; The Hiawatha, Id. 6,451; Two Hundred and Eighty-Two Bales of Cotton, Id. 14,291.

The courts of the United States have jurisdiction over all prizes made in ports, as well as on the high seas, by virtue of the delegation of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.—The Emulous, Case No. 4,479.

The prize court has cognizance of all captures in an enemy country, made in creeks, havens, and rivers by a naval force acting alone or in co-operation with land forces.—Two Hundred and Eighty-Two Bales of Cotton, Case No. 14,291.

Captures of vessels on navigable rivers are not within the prize jurisdiction unless made by the naval arm, or by its co-operation, contributing immediately in effecting the capture.—United States v. Two Hundred and Sixty-Nine and One-Half Bales of Cotton, Case No. 16,583.

A capture by naval forces of property stored in a warehouse near the shore of a harbor is a subject of prize jurisdiction.—United States v. Seven Hundred and Three Casks of Rice, Case No. 16,253b.

The district courts have prize jurisdiction in case of property, recently water-borne, captured on a wharf by man-of-war's men in boats.—Six Hundred and Eighty Pieces of Merchandise, Case No. 12,915.

The admiralty courts have jurisdiction in prize over captures made on the Mississippi river during the Civil War.—United States v. Two Hundred and Sixty-Nine and One-Half Bales of Cotton, Case No. 16,583.

§ 53. —— Courts of neutral country.

Jurisdiction of a neutral court is ousted in case of capture on the high seas, by a privateer lawfully commissioned, of the property of an enemy to the sovereign issuing the commission, though the capture was originally made by a proscribed privateer.—Castello v. Bouteille, Case No. 2,504.

A prize court of the United States has no jurisdiction on the capture of a British vessel by a French privateer, within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States.—Findlay v. The William, Case No. 4,790.

The federal district courts will not assume jurisdiction of prize matters of foreign nations occurring upon the high seas flagrante bello.—Hernandez v. Aury, Case No. 6,413.

Though the question of prize or no prize belongs exclusively to the courts of the captor, a neutral will restore a prize wrongfully taken by one of the belligerents in violation of the rights of the neutral.—Chacon v. Eighty-Nine Bales of Cochineal, Case No. 2,568.

§ 54. Procedure in general.

Common-law principles and rules of evidence cannot be applied in a prize court.—The Tulip, Case No. 14,234.

The rules of practice in admiralty are the basis of practice in prize in our national courts.—The Wave, Case No. 17,298.

The practice in prize proceedings is governed by the English practice, where not regulated by decisions or rules of our courts.—The Prince Leopold, Case No. 11,428.

Construction of Act 1862, c. 50, for better administration of law of prize.—The Amy Warwick, Case No. 342.

In a proceeding under Act Aug. 6, 1861, to forfeit an interest in a vessel, the pleadings and proceedings are subject to like rules as in ordinary cases of prize of war.—United States v. The Picayune, Case No. 16,041a.

§ 55. Release of property on bond.

Prize goods will not be delivered on bail unless claimant shows a prima facie legal title.—The Diana, Case No. 3,876.

No delivery on bail will be made to either captor or claimant until after hearing.—The Diana, Case No. 3,876; The George, Id. 5,327.

Unless by consent.—The Euphrates, etc., Case No. 4,546.

The appellate court will not hold itself bound by the action of the district court in allowing a delivery on bail in a gross case of illegality.—The Diana, Case No. 3,876.

A sale is preferable to an appraisement when the value is to be ascertained for the purpose of a delivery on bail.—The George, Case No. 5,327.

Where cargo delivered on what afterwards appeared insufficient bail had passed to bona fide purchasers, held, that a monition should issue against the claimants to pay into court the excess in value over the amount of bail.—The Lynchburg, Case No. 8,638.

A vessel seized as prize and released on bonds is subject to capture and condemnation for a subsequent violation of the blockade on the same voyage.—The Rising Dawn, Case No. 11,857.

In a suit on a bond for the redelivery of property seized, the amount of the judgment is the highest price for the property between the date of the bond and the date of the judgment.—United States v. The Rob Roy, Case No. 16,179.

§ 56. Transferring property seized to use of government.

The court has power to appraise property captured as prize, and to transfer it to the use of the government before condemnation, at its appraised value.—The Ella Warley, Case No. 4,371.

The appraised value at which a prize is accepted by the United States and devoted to the public use will be regarded as her true value in decreeing a forfeiture.—The Express, Case No. 4,597.

An order appointing appraisers before libel filed, without notice to any claimant, but under circumstances showing assent of subsequent claimants thereto, will not be set aside on their subsequent motion.—The Memphis, Case No. 9,412.

That an order appointing appraisers was signed by the judge out of his district does not affect its validity.—The Memphis, Case No. 9,412.

§ 57. Sale of property.

Order to sell cargo denied when allegation of necessity is not supported by preponderance of evidence.—The Alliance, Case No. 244.

On motion for the sale of a cargo as perishable, the judgment of the prize commissioners will control, unless overborne by evidence produced.—The Nassau, Case No. 10,025.

Prize property which is in a perishing condition will be ordered to be sold.—The Crenshaw, Case No. 3,384; The Ella Warley, Id. 4,372; Stoddard v. Read, Id. 13,470.

After the condemnation of a vessel and cargo, but before entry of the decree, a sale of the same will not be ordered, where it does not appear that they were perishable.—The Cheshire, Case No. 2,656.

The district court may order a sale of cargo as perishable, pending an appeal to the circuit court.—The Pioneer, Case No. 11,172.

Where the cargo captured is in a perishable condition, it will be ordered to be sold by the circuit court pending an appeal to the supreme court.—The Hiawatha, Case No. 6,452.

On interlocutory sales of prize, marshal must bring proceeds of sale into court, with a regular account.—The Avery, Case No. 671.

Sale by order of the provisional agent at Barracoa is valid, being subsequently confirmed by the proper jurisdiction at Guadaloupe, under a law existing before the capture.—Dennis v. The Lear, Case No. 3,796.

Belligerents have no right, unless secured by treaty, to sell their prizes in a neutral port.—Consul of Spain v. Consul of Great Britain, Case No. 3,138.

If French privateers, duly commissioned, make lawful captures on the high seas, sales by them in our ports cannot be prevented.—Moodie v. The Amity, Case No. 9,741.

§ 58. Parties.

Prize proceedings should be taken in the name of the government and not in the names of the individual captors.—Proceeds of Prizes of War, Case No. 11,440.

But where the United States district attorney authorizes a suit, for the condemnation of a prize, to be filed in the names of the individual captors, the court will allow the proceedings to be so conducted, instead of requiring that the suit be instituted on behalf of the government.—Proceeds of Prizes of War, Case No. 11,440.

Notice to the master of a prize suit against the vessel is notice to her real owner, making him a party.—Cushing v. Laird, Case No. 3,509.

§ 59. Pleadings and claims.

The proper form of a libel in prize is a mere general allegation of prize.—The Empress, Case No. 4,476; The Sally Magee, Id. 12,260.

The libel need not specifically set forth the grounds on which condemnation is sought.—The Revere, Case No. 11,716.

This is the rule under Act Aug. 6, 1861.—United States v. The Picayune, Case No. 16,041a.

A prize delivered to the court by the prize master is under its control, and the filing of a libel is not necessary to give it jurisdiction of the property.—The Memphis, Case No. 9,412.

A general prize allegation cannot be properly joined with an information on a seizure for the violation of a statute.—The Dimon, Case No. 3,917.

The defense, in the claim, must be limited to a contestation of the allegations of the libel.—The Empress, Case No. 4,476.

An answer or claim need contain nothing more than a general denial of the grounds of condemnation alleged.—The Delta, Case No. 3,777; The Joseph H. Toone, Id. 7,540; The Lynchburg, Id. 8,637a.

It is irregular to subjoin to the claim anything besides a test oath.—The Empress, Case No. 4,476.

Such irregularities will be corrected on motion, without formal exceptions.—The Empress, Case No. 4,476.

The practice stated as to the claim and test oath.—The Empress, Case No. 4,476.

Prolixity of statement in answer and claim criticised.—The Lynchburg, Case No. 8,637a.

A motion by the owner of the cargo for leave to put in a claim allowed, omitting the special averments.—The Joseph H. Toone, Case No. 7,540.

A claim and answer in a prize suit cannot put in issue anything but the question of prize or no prize.—The Napoleon, Case No. 10,012.

A claimant cannot put in a special claim or answer leading to any other issue than the one simply of prize or no prize without the assent of the United States attorney or the special order of the court.—The Louisa Agnes, Case No. 8,531.

Claims should be made by the parties themselves, if within the jurisdiction, and not by their agents.—The Lively, Case No. 8,403; The St. Lawrence, Id. 12,232; The Sally, Id. 12,258.

Effect of a claim and answer in a prize suit put in and verified by an agent, and not by the owner.—The D. Sargeant, Case No. 4,098.

The consul of a nation may claim on behalf of its subjects in the absence of any authorized agent.—The London Packet, Case No. 8,474.

A claim to the captured property may be interposed by the master or agent, but it must be in behalf of the proper party. If no claim is made, the property will be condemned as belonging to an enemy.—United States v. The Lilla, Case No. 15,600.

Claims presented after the proofs have been opened and examined, and after hearing the reasons assigned for condemnation, are never favored.—United States v. The Lilla, Case No. 15,600.

A claimant will not be allowed to inspect documents found on board a prize for the purpose of stating his claim correctly.—The Cuba, Case No. 3,457.

An averment that claimants were citizens of the United States held a suppression of the fact that they were resident traders in the enemy's country.—The Sally Magee, Case No. 12,260.

§ 60. Evidence—Presumptions and burden of proof.

The burden of proof in all prize causes is on claimants.—Johnson v. Thirteen Bales, etc., Case No. 7,415.

Claimants, admitted or proved to be alien enemies, must be presumed to be in the ordinary and usual situation of alien enemies; that is, out of our country.—Johnson v. Thirteen Bales, etc., Case No. 7,415.

If the constitution of a foreign tribunal be not known, it will be presumed to be a legal one. —Snell v. Faussatt, Case No. 13,138.

All goods found on board an enemy's ship, are presumed to be enemy property unless a distinct neutral character is impressed upon, and accompanies, them.—The Flying Fish, Case No. 4,892: The San Jose Indiano, Id. 12,322.

Where a shipment is made to partners, they will be held by the court to take in equal moieties, unless upon the original papers a different proportion appears.—The San Jose Indiano, Case No. 12,322.

Either spoliation of papers or falsified destination creates a legal presumption of hostile ownership.—The Bermuda, Case No. 1,345.

The absence of all papers, where the vessel was captured off a blockaded coast, far out of the route of her ostensible voyage, after a long chase, held a strong presumption of intentional destruction.—United States v. The Onachita, Case No. 15,919a.

Claimant has the burden of showing by clear evidence that the vessel was compelled to enter the blockaded port, as alleged, by overwhelming necessity, arising from injuries received at sea, and the loss of fuel, water, and provisions.—The Sunbeam, Case No. 13,613.

A vessel clearing from Nassau for St. John, N. B., laden with arms and munitions of war, found off Charleston, S. C., during a blockade, held prima facie liable to condemnation.—The Elizabeth, Case No. 4,351.

On a monition to proceed to adjudication, the onus probandi rests on the claimant.—The Rover, Case No. 12,091.

§ 61. —— Admissibility.

During war, no claim standing in opposition to the ship's papers and preparatory evidence is ever admitted in a prize court.—The Diana, Case No. 3,876.

Verified copies are admissible where the documents themselves which were the cause of the capture have been surreptitiously taken from the possession of the prize master.—The Julia, Case No. 7,575.

Where no prevarication or other improper conduct on the part of the captured vessel is shown the question of condemnation of the vessel is to be determined from the papers found on board. —United States v. The South Carolina, Case No. 16,360.

On a libel of a captured vessel, a settled course of trade in violating the blockade, and the employment of the vessel before in such trade by the same owner, may be considered.—The William H. Northrop, Case No. 17,696.

In seizures for breach of blockade, the captors may put in affidavits contradicting the preparatory testimony as to the nearness of the captured vessel to the blockaded port, and the acts denoting an attempt to violate the blockade. —The Joseph H. Toone, Case No. 7,541.

Claimants held not estopped, by license and clearance for one place, to show that the primary destination of the voyage was another place, so as to save forfeiture.—The David E. Wolf, Case No. 3,594.

A statement made on the record by the prize commissioner, in regard to the reluctance of a witness to answer, is not evidence.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

A document produced for the first time at the hearing, and forming no part of the deposition in the case, is not admissible in evidence. —The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

Papers in a prize court of another country are inadmissible to show that there was no cause for capture, unless the whole papers are produced.—The Rover, Case No. 12,091.

Proofs from two other cases on the docket of the court for trial at the same time allowed under Prize Rules No. 33.—The Springbok, Case No. 13,264.

The proof in one case invoked in another, where the bill of lading on one vessel covered the cargo of both, and the shippers and consignees were the same.—The Albert, Case No. 138.

The rule requiring evidence obtained directly from documents or witnesses found on board of a vessel at the time of her seizure is not imperative.—Proceeds of Prizes of War, Case No. 11,440.

The rule requiring the master and crew of the prize vessel to be produced as witnesses may be dispensed with where there is no means of complying therewith, and secondary evidence admitted.—The Actor, Case No. 36.

On special order the testimony of the captors and witnesses present at the capture was allowed, the master, crew, and passengers having inadvertently been allowed to escape.—The Falcon, Case No. 4,616.

The crew of the captured vessel were at their request put on shore, and the vessel was destroyed, and no person on board at her capture was sent in for examination. On special leave of the court witnesses for the capturing vessel were examined.—The Zaralla, Case No. 18,203.

Examination of witnesses confined to persons on board vessel at time of capture.—The Alliance, Case No. 246.

§ 62. —— Weight and sufficiency.

Effect of spoliation of ship's papers.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024; The Stephen Hart, Id. 13,364.

The mutilation of a logbook of a vessel in a position to violate a blockade is ground of condemnation where not satisfactorily explained.— The Ella Warley, Cases Nos. 4,373, 4,374.

The intentional mutilation of a logbook is a suspicious circumstance, which cannot be overcome by doubtful evidence.—The Mersey, Case No. 9,489.

An obstinate suppression of the ship's papers, etc., coupled with a voyage from an enemy country, is sufficient cause of condemnation.— The St. Lawrence, Case No. 12,232.

Effect of absence of invoice.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024; The Springbok, Id. 13,264.

Effect of false and simulated papers.—The George, Case No. 5,328; The Gertrude, Id. 5,369; The J. W. Wilder, Id. 7,592; The Louisa Agnes, Id. 8,531; The Peterhoff, Id. 11,023; The Revere, Id. 11,715; The Robert Bruce, Id. 11,889; The Scotia, Id. 12,514.

Vessel captured close in shore near blockaded port, with falsified papers, and cargo of first importance to enemy, condemned.—The Mary Jane, Case No. 9,214.

Spanish papers found on board an American vessel do not prove double papers if no other marks of fraud appear.—Arnold v. Delcol, Case No. 556.

The refusal to send the ship's papers to the capturing vessel is a suspicious circumstance.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

The effect of deficiencies in the manifest, and defects in the bills of lading, considered.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

Persistent misrepresentation by the claimant of the character and destination of the voyage of the captured vessel is sufficient cause for condemnation of vessel and cargo.—The Revere, Case No. 11,716; The San Jose Indiano, Id. 12,322.

A vessel condemned because her destination was falsified at the port of departure, and because the master, in the preparatory examination, made false statements as to the ownership of the cargo.—The Herald, Case No. 6,391.

The purchase of an enemy's vessel in a neutral port is itself a suspicious circumstance, so that the evidence of an absolute bona fide transfer should be clearly established.—United States v. The Lilla, Case No. 15,600.

Vessel captured with contraband cargo near enemy's coast, and 150 miles off her course as designated on her papers, condemned.—The Nymph, Case No. 10,387.

Cargo sent in by another vessel, the captured vessel being appropriated by the United States, condemned on the evidence of a person present at the capture.—The Wave, Case No. 17,299.

The spoliation of property or the failure to send in the officers and crew with the vessel for examination can only be justified by an overruling necessity.—The Jane Campbell, Case No. 7,205.

Defendant, claiming a vessel under condemnation of a foreign tribunal, must prove that the tribunal was properly constituted.—Snell v. Faussatt, Case No. 13,138.

The case, in the first instance, is to be tried on evidence coming from the captured; and, if that does not raise a doubt, the property will be restored.—The Stephen Hart, Case No. 13,364.

Where it is claimed that an enemy vessel has been transferred during the war to a neutral, competent proof of the transfer must be produced, or the vessel will be regarded as enemy property.—The Stephen Hart, Case No. 13,364.

The mere registry of the vessel in the name of the neutral claimant as owner is not enough. —The Stephen Hart, Case No. 13,364.

A contingent destination to a blockaded port, if it in fact existed, must appear on the ship's papers.—The Delta, Case No. 3,777.

Previous notorious enemy ownership and illicit trade held sufficient to condemn vessel where bona fide purchase and voyage not shown. —The Belle, Case No. 1,272.

A vessel was condemned which had among her cargo arms, described in her freight list as "hardware" and cotton cards, not marketable at the port for which the vessel cleared, though her papers did not show any other destination.—The Dolphin, Case No. 3,975.

A clear necessity will justify an entrance into a blockaded port, but satisfactory evidence will be required of the reality and urgency of the necessity.—Ingraham v. The Nayade, Case No. 7,046; The Major Barbour, Id. 8,983.

Vessel loaded with arms, ammunition, etc., found several hundred miles out of her true course, and heading towards a blockaded port, held properly condemned.—The Joseph H. Toone, Case No. 7,543.

Vessel sailing under neutral flag, whose open papers show neutral ownership, was condemned upon other papers found, artfully concealed, tending to show enemy ownership.—The Fortuna, Case No. 4,954.

Evidence showing actual hostile destination of vessel.—The Alma, Case No. 253.

Where the testimony of witnesses from the delinquent vessel is dispensed with, adequate proof must be supplied aliunde of the delictum charged.—The Thomas Watson, Case No. 13,933.

Enemy ownership held proved by the uncontradicted testimony of the owner as to his residence, supported by a recital in a mortgage given by him.—United States v. The Arcola, Case No. 14,464a.

Clearing for one legal port with design to proceed to another legal port, in order to conceal the real voyage, for mercantile purposes, is not liable to condemnation.—Gibbs v. The Two Friends, Case No. 5,386.

Where property is shipped in an enemy's vessel, the presumption of its being enemy's property can only be repelled by strong and clear proofs of a neutral interest.—The London Packet, Case No. 8,474.

Proof that the claimant is a citizen or ally of the enemy country will authorize condemnation.—Conner v. The Coosa, Case No. 3,113.

Proof held not sufficient to show an intent to violate a blockade.—The Jane Campbell, Case No. 7,206.

For particular instances of condemnation of vessel and cargo for violating or attempting to violate a blockade, decided on conflicting evidence, see The Actor, Case No. 37; The Admiral, Id. 85; The A. D. Vance, Id. 92; The Advocate, Id. 94; The Agnes H. Ward, Id. 99; The A. J. View, Id. 118; The Albert, Id. 138, 139; The Albion, Id. 142; The Angelina, Id. 383; The Anglia, Id. 390; The Ann, Id. 396; The Anna, Id. 400; The Annie, Id. 416, 417, 418; The Annie Deas, Id. 419; The Annie Sophia, Id. 424; The Antelope, Id. 483; The Antona, Id. 492; The Banshee, Id. 965; The Belle, Id. 1,273; The Blenheim, Id. 1,538; The British Empire, Id. 1,901; The Captain Spedden, Id. 2,394; The Charlotte, Id. 2,621; The Cuba, Id. 3,457; The Delight, Id. 3,772; The Delta, Id. 3,777, 3,778; The Douro, Id. 4,034; The D. Holmes, Id. 8,597; The Lynchburg, Id. 8,637a, 8,639; The Maria, Id. 9,073; The Maria Bishop, Id. 9,077; The Mercury, Id. 9,456; The Merrimac, Id. 9,475; The Mersey, Id. 9,490, reversing Id. 9,489; The Ned, Case No. 10,078; The Neptune, Id. 10,119; The New Eagle, Id. 10,149; The North Carolina, Id. 10,316a, 10,317; The Oddfellow, Id. 10,425; The Olive, Id. 10,487; The Osceola, Id. 10,601; The Pioneer, Id. 11,173, 11,175; The Prince Leopold, Id. 11,428, 11,429; The Reindeer, Id. 11,680, 11,681; The Sally Magee, Id. 12,259; The Sarah, Id. 12,337; The Solidad Cos, Id. 13,164; The Troy, Id. 14,193; The Venus, Id. 16,914; The Water Witch, Id. 17,268; The Wave, Id. 17,298.

Vessels and cargoes were held to be neutral property, and ordered to be restored to the claimants. Case No. 5,526 reversed.—The Gondar, Case No. 5,528.

§ 63. Further proof.

A witness cannot claim a right to modify or enlarge his testimony after it has been formally completed and submitted to the court. —The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,022.

A motion for leave to take further proof will be refused persons who have shown themselves unworthy of trust.—The Cuba, Case No. 3,457.

Further proof is never allowed to a party who is guilty of fraud or of illegal conduct.—The Sally, Case No. 12,258.

Further proof will not be allowed in cases of fraudulent concealment and falsification of papers.—The Liverpool Packet, Case No. 8,406; The Bermuda, Id. 1,345.

An application for further proof will be refused where the claim and test affidavit of the claimant are utterly at variance with his answers to the standing interrogatories.—United States v. El Telegrafo, Case No. 15,049.

After a decision that a forfeiture had been incurred, the court allowed the case to stand open for further proof that the strictness of the blockade had been relaxed.—United States v. The Tropic Wind, Case No. 16,541a.

Where the captors have been guilty of irregularity in not bringing in the papers or the master of the captured ship, further proof will be ordered.—The London Packet, Case No. 8,474.

If the shippers in a hostile ship neglect to put on board any documentary evidence of its neutral character, they will not be allowed the benefit of further proof.—The Flying Fish, Case No. 4,892.

Where capture is admitted on original evidence, further proof not allowed to create doubts.—The Alexander, Case No. 164.

Further proof in cases of collusive capture.—The Bothnea, Case No. 1,686; The George, Id. 5,327.

Where the evidence affords probable cause for belief that the vessel was engaged in an illicit adventure, final decision was suspended to permit further proofs within the year.—The Levi Rowe, Case No. 8,293.

Before an order for further proof will be made, plaintiff must make it probable that, if it is granted, he will be able to overcome the probative force of the suspicious circumstances. —United States v. The Lilla, Case No. 15,600.

Case allowed to stand over for six months for additional proof, where no witnesses were sent in with the vessel, and no proof was made of violation of blockade.—The Nellie, Case No. 10,095.

On further proof, the affidavits of the captors are admissible evidence without a release.—The Sally, Case No. 12,258.

Further proof in prize causes is never admitted by way of oral testimony, but always by written evidence and depositions.—The George, Case No. 5,327.

Practice as to the taking of additional proof in prize cases.—The Amy Warwick, Case No. 343; The Lilla, Id. 8,348.

Where the claimants delayed until the hearing to object that only two of the persons on board the captured vessel were produced as witnesses, held a waiver, but the court suspended the final decree to give libelants an opportunity to submit further proof.—The Elizabeth, Case No. 4,350.

After an appeal, the court may allow evidence not received in season to be made a part of the case to be put upon the record de bene esse, with a memorandum of the fact.—The London Packet, Case No. 8,474.

Collateral subjects can be controverted in prize cases only by means of pleadings and further proofs, especially authorized by the court after a decision on the first issue.—The Napoleon, Case No. 10,012.

Leave for further proof is granted in cases of honest mistake or ignorance, and to clear doubts and remedy defects; but the application must be supported by evidence of probable cause and good faith.—United States v. The Lilla, Case No. 15,600.

Proceedings in condemnation suspended to permit production of evidence.—The Actor, Case No. 36; The Annie, Id. 415.

§ 64. Commissioners and proceedings before them.

A commission to take evidence in an enemy's country will not be allowed.—The Diana, Case No. 3,876.

A prize commissioner has no right to put to a witness any interrogatories, except the standing one, or those specially framed by the court for the particular case.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,024.

Relief for irregularities in the admission of testimony, or in the method of conducting the examinations before the prize commissioners, can be had only by special motion. Such matters will not be noticed on final hearing.—The Ezilda, Case No. 4,599.

Witnesses who, it appeared, had not fully answered, and had not disclosed the truth in regard to papers on board a voyage, were allowed to be re-examined on standing interrogatories.—The Stephen Hart, Case No. 13,364.

A master, who had been examined as a witness in preparatorio, was allowed to be examined on one of the standing interrogatories, on condition that he should at the same time be examined on certain special interrogatories, framed by the court.—The Peterhoff, Cases Nos. 11,022, 11,024.

§ 65. Survey and report.

If the character and origin of the captured property be in question, on the original hearing the court will order a survey and report.—The Liverpool Packet, Case No. 8,406.

The prize court of a belligerent, to which a captured neutral vessel is sent for adjudication, may order an examination of the cargo to ascertain its character, and to secure evidence to establish the culpability of the voyage.—The Springbok, Case No. 13,262.

§ 66. Hearing and reference.

The first hearing is limited to the inquiry whether the captured property is prize of war or not.—The Empress, Case No. 4,476.

Parties agreeing to refer a matter of prize or no prize to their respective governments are concluded by the decision of the ministers of those governments resident here.—Gernon v. Cochran, Case No. 5,368.

Such decision held sufficiently evidenced by a letter from the consul general of country of party against whom rendered.—Gernon v. Cochran, Case No. 5,368.

§ 67. Costs and fees.

The allowance of costs and fees to counsel and officers in prize cases discussed.—The Major Barbour, Case No. 8,984.

The costs fixed by statute for similar services in admiralty will be allowed in prize cases, where the allowance is not covered by special statute.—Costs, Fees, and Compensations in Prize Cases, Case No. 18,283.

A counsel employed by the captors, not authorized or recognized by the secretary of the navy, is not entitled to his bill of costs out of the prize fund.—The Nassau, Case No. 10,027.

Of the rule for apportionment of costs among the several claimants in prize causes.—The Hiram, Case No. 6,527.

The compensation directed to be made by Act March 25, 1862, will be computed and adjusted conformably to allowances by the laws of the United States to employés for like services under the government, or in accordance with established rules and usages of the courts in regard to their officers rendering like services.—Costs, Fees, and Compensations in Prize Cases, Case No. 18,283.

Compensation to the officers of court for their services will not be measured by a percentage on the amount of property involved.—Costs, Fees, and Compensations in Prize Cases, Case No. 18,283.

When a vessel is taken by the secretary of the navy under Act 1863, c. 86, § 2, the marshal is not entitled to his fees as in the case of a sale, or to half commission as when a case is settled without a sale.—The Victory, Case No. 16,938.

The charges of appraising and bonding prize property must be borne by the party who applies to have it bonded.—The Sally Magee, Case No. 12,261.

Such appraiser is entitled to no allowance beyond the per diem allowance provided by statute or the standing rules of the court for that description of services.—The Sally Magee, Case No. 12,261.

Pending an appeal to the supreme court, the district court refused to order the costs of the prize commissioner to be paid out of the funds in its registry.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,025.

As to costs to be taxed on several claims in one information, upon a remission of the forfeiture.—The Francis, Case No. 5,033.

Act July 17, 1862, forbids the allowance to a prize commissioner in the Southern district of New York of any larger emolument than a salary of $3,000 a year.—The Hattie, Case No. 6,217.

The marshal is entitled to commissions on prize property removed from his district by consent of the parties to another district, and there sold.—The San Jose Indiano, Case No. 12,323.

The gross costs taxed to any of the officers of the court for services in prize suits will be, in collection or payment, subject to all limitations as to amounts or periods of payment, under the acts of congress in force at the time of such taxation.—Costs, Fees, and Compensations in Prize Cases, Case No. 18,283.

Where a claim is rejected, the claimant is liable to pay all expenses which have accrued in consequence of his claim.—The Sally, Case No. 12,258.

Custody fees in prize cases are payable in the first instance out of the proceeds, and, in case of condemnation, are taxable to the claimant.—The Langdon Cheves, Case No. 8,063.

Commission of one-half of one per cent. allowed auctioneer on sale of prize cargo.—The Amy Warwick, Case No. 344.

Where property in a prize proceeding is restored to the owner, no costs will be allowed him, where there was probable cause for the capture.—The Argonaut, Case No. 518; The Forest King, Id. 4,937; The General Green, Id. 5,312a, 5,313; The Glen, Id. 5,479; The Hannah M. Johnson, Id. 6,029a; The Henry C. Brooks, Id. 6,374; Ingraham v. The Nayade, Id. 7,046; The Sybil, Id. 13,706.

Costs, fees, and compensation.—Anonymous, Case No. 432a; The Merrimac, Id. 9,477; The Nassau, Id. 10,027; The Sally, Id. 12,258.

§ 68. Decree.

In the absence of instructions of the sovereign, the rules of decision of prize courts are to be ascertained by reference to the known powers of such tribunals, and the principles by which they are governed under the public law and the practice of nations.—The Amy Warwick, Case No. 341.

The suspension of a year and a day after a default is allowed only when it is doubtful upon the evidence whether the property captured belongs to the enemy or is neutral.—The Falcon, Case No. 4,616.

Where the apparent ownership of a cargo is in an absent party, capable of claiming, it will not be condemned until he has had the benefit of the rule allowing a year for the assertion of claims.—The Herald, Case No. 6,391.

The rule of a year and a day for claimants to appear is not a vested right in neutrals.—The Julia, Case No. 7,576.

After a year and a day without claim made, condemnation is of course.—The Avery, Case No. 672.

Where, upon ship's papers, enemy ownership is doubtful, condemnation will be delayed, though no claim is interposed.—The Avery, Case No. 672.

Decree for condemnation for want of an answer where proctor on whom monition was served filed exceptions under oath on behalf of the owner against the requirements of the monition.—The Joseph H. Toone, Case No. 7,542.

Where no claimant appears upon return of the monition, the proctor of the captors may move for a decree upon the evidence as it appears on the record.—Conner v. The Coosa, Case No. 3,113.

Vessel condemned after the lapse of a year and a day for an attempt to break the blockade of Beaufort, N. C.—The Julia, Case No. 7,576.

Every resident of a hostile place or country is regarded in an admiralty court as a citizen or subject, and his property is condemned as that of an enemy without his being heard.—United States v. The Isaac Hammett, Case No. 15,446.

In the absence of legal proof of actual capture in the case of enemy property, a decree of condemnation was deferred to await its production, or an excuse therefor.—The Sarah and Caroline, Case No. 12,340.

The district court, as a prize court, has no power to open a decree after the expiration of the term or session in which it was rendered.—The Lizzie Weston, Case No. 8,425.

Decree of condemnation opened to permit loyal owners to show that the vessel had been previously captured from them by an enemy's privateer, and restoration awarded on the payment of one-eighth of the value, as salvage, to the captors.—The Hattie, Case No. 6,216.

A decree of condemnation passed by a court held on board a vessel at sea, out of the territorial jurisdiction of the country of the captors, is not binding.—Jolly v. The Neptune, Case No. 7,439.

Nothing will be presumed in favor of a foreign tribunal erected by a military commander. —Snell v. Faussatt, Case No. 13,138.

After the lapse of the term in which a decree is rendered in a prize case, the authority of the court to revoke or alter it is extinct.—The Major Barbour, Case No. 8,984.

The claimant of record to whom the property is ordered to be delivered on sentence of acquittal holds the same in trust for the true owner. The decree is not conclusive as to ownership, even as against the person procuring its rendition. Case No. 3,509 reversed.—Cushing v. Laird, Case No. 3,510.

A condemnation of a prize in court of admiralty is binding and conclusive against all the world.—Juando v. Taylor, Case No. 7,558.

Courts of U. S. will not, for purposes of retaliation, depart from fixed principles of the law of nations declaring decrees of foreign prize courts conclusive.—Armroyd v. Williams, Case No. 538.

A decree of a foreign prize court is conclusive both as to the right established and fact decided. —Armroyd v. Williams, Case No. 538. But see Bradstreet v. Neptune Ins. Co., Case No. 1,793.

A foreign decree of condemnation as prize held not examinable in our courts, although on its face appearing to have been founded upon an ordinance passed subsequent to the commission of the act for which the vessel and cargo were condemned. Rose v. Himili, Case No. 12,048, reversed.—Ropes v. Clinch, Case No. 12,041.

The practice of American prize courts is to make final condemnation of enemy property at the hearing of the cause, upon the ship's papers and the evidence in preparatorio.—The Falcon, Case No. 4,616.

§ 69. Appeal.
An appeal to the circuit court from a decree of condemnation operates as a stay of all proceedings in the district court.—The Sunbeam, Case No. 13,614.

On an appeal to the circuit court, the property follows the appeal into that court, and the district court has no authority over it.—The Grotius, Case No. 5,844.

An appeal to the supreme court from a decree of the district court in a prize cause places the prize property exclusively under the control of the appellate tribunal.—The Peterhoff, Case No. 11,025.

Irregularities in the proceedings in not making the captors parties, and not bringing the prize into court for adjudication, may be corrected.—United States v. Two Hundred and Sixty-Nine and One-Half Bales of Cotton, Case No. 16,583.

(E) RESTITUTION AND RANSOM.

§ 70. Restitution.
The prize court has jurisdiction to decree restitution of a vessel recaptured from the enemy.—The Dove, Case No. 4,035.

Belligerent captures by privateers armed and equipped within the United States in violation of the neutrality of the United States may be restored to the injured belligerent, if brought within the jurisdiction of the federal courts.—Chacon v. Eighty-Nine Bales of Cochineal, Case No. 2,568.

A vessel captured by a Confederate privateer, and condemned and sold by a Confederate prize court, on recapture will be restored to the original owners, upon payment of salvage.—The Lilla, Case No. 8,348.

Prizes made by armed vessels, either equipped originally, or whose force has been augmented, in the United States, will be restored if brought within their jurisdiction.—Juando v. Taylor, Case No. 7,558.

An American ship captured by a French privateer, with a neutral cargo on board, and brought into an American port for condemnation, will be restored.—Hollingsworth v. The Betsey, Case No. 6,612.

Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel for the restoration of a vessel belonging to a subject of a neutral nation, captured by an armed vessel of another nation within five miles of Port Henry, as taken within our territorial jurisdiction.—Moxon v. The Fanny, Case No. 9,-895.

The court of admiralty has no power to order restitution of a British ship, brought into our ports after seizure by French prisoners, who were being conveyed therein to England.—Reid v. The Vere, Case No. 11,670.

Property taken as prize may be pursued in rem in the hands of any persons becoming possessed of it, or by monition against them if its proceeds have been brought into court.—The Lynchburg, Case No. 8,638. But see Young v. Tavel, Case No. 18,175.

The claim for restoration on the ground that the property was captured within neutral waters can only be presented by the neutral nation whose rights have been infringed. The owner cannot make the claim.—The Lilla, Case No. 8,348.

The costs and expenses of the captors will be required as a condition of the restoration of the property where the proofs in preparatory showed a clear case of enemy's property.—The James Andrews, Case No. 7,189.

On a libel by the owners for restitution and damages, the court will ascertain whether there is a real question of prize to be tried, and, if so, will direct the captors to institute proceedings.—Fay v. Montgomery, Case No. 4,709.

The claimant can cause the suit to be disposed of where libelants are guilty of wrongful delay in its prosecution.—The Springbok, Case No. 13,-262.

A resident of South Carolina, after she proclaimed her independence and hostile measures were taken by the general government to restore its authority, cannot claim restitution of a vessel captured as prize of war during such hostilities.—The Parkhill, Case No. 10,755a.

§ 71. Ransom.
A friendly belligerent may ransom the property of a neutral after capture.—Maisonnaire v. Keating, Case No. 8,978.

An action may be sustained in a court of common law upon a bill of exchange given for the ransom of a vessel.—Maisonnaire v. Keating, Case No. 8,978.

In such action the capture must be taken to be justifiable and the ransom regular, for a court of common law cannot incidentally decide a question of prize.—Maisonnaire v. Keating, Case No. 8,978.

Duress arising from threats of destruction of the vessel and cargo cannot be admitted to avoid a contract of ransom, where the capture was justified by probable cause.—Maisonnaire v. Keating, Case No. 8,978.

(F) DISTRIBUTION OF PROCEEDS.

§ 72. In general.
The question of the disposition of prize proceeds is not governed by the international law. —United States v. The Active, Case No. 14,420.

All property captured in time of war belongs to the government, unless granted by it to other persons.—The Emulous, Case No. 4,479; The Merrimac, Id. 9,476.

Sale and distribution under decree of prize goods lying in foreign neutral port.—The Arabella, Case No. 501.

Distribution of proceeds on capture of prize by United States steam transport ship.—The Emma, Case No. 4,462.

In cases of recapture, French owners have the benefit of American laws in our ports if American owners are allowed the benefit of American laws in the admiralty courts of France.—Falliage v. The Hope, Case No. 4,626.

§ 73. Who entitled to share.
A vessel, to be entitled to share in the proceeds of prize property under the acts of congress, must show that she was within signal distance of the vessel making the prize, in circumstances which might have justified the capturing vessel in demanding and expecting her assistance.—The Anglia, Case No. 391; Rice v. Taylor, Id. 11,755; The Selma, Id. 12,647.

Who entitled as within "signal distance" to share in prize money.—The Aries, Case No. 529; The R. E. Lee, Id. 11,691; The St. John, Id. 12,225.

A vessel, to share with the actual captor, must show her position to have been such that the usual signals from the actual captor could have been read from the deck or topgallant forecastle.—The Ella, Case No. 4,367; The Ella & Anna, Id. 4,368.

Co-operation in a blockade does not constitute the blockading vessels joint captors.—The Cherokee, Case No. 2,640.

Vessels which pick up enemy's goods thrown overboard during a chase are entitled to them as captors, and not as salvors.—The Victory, Case No. 16,938.

A vessel not commissioned must be considered as a mere merchantman, and not entitled to share in a prize as a vessel in sight.—Pray v. The Recovery, Case No. 11,379; The Merrimac, Id. 9,476.

Where seamen duly shipped on board a privateer are put ashore without their consent or lawful cause, they are entitled to share in prizes made on the cruise.—Keane v. The Gloucester, Case No. 7,632; Mahoon v. The Glocester, Id. 8,970.

A seaman disabled and leaving the privateer before departure on her cruise is not entitled to share in prizes.—Ex parte Giddings, Case No. 5,404.

Officers and crew are entitled to the shares given under the prize act, where the shipping articles omit to state them.—The Dash, Case No. 3,584.

Abandonment by captors does not restore the rights of the owner; and, if the vessel is saved by others, the captors have a right, as against the owners, to a balance of proceeds.—The Mary Ford, Case No. 9,212a.

Rights of a nonconsenting mariner, where the cruise of a privateer is broken up, and a new one commenced, with the consent of all the others.—Hainey v. The Tristram Shandy, etc., Case No. 5,906.

A cruise begins and ends in the country to which the ship belongs, and from which she derives here commission, when it is not otherwise specially agreed.—The Brutus, Case No. 2,060.

A cruise begins when the ship breaks ground for the purpose of sailing.—The Brutus, Case No. 2,060.

When the term of a cruise once begins to run, it is not suspended by any intermediate accident or casualty happening in the course of the cruise.—The Brutus, Case No. 2,060.

Cruise of privateer, held not broken up in a foreign port into which the vessel went for repairs, though the term for which the crew shipped expired while in such port, and new articles were entered into.—The Brutus, Case No. 2,060.

Members of the crew of a privateer on a cruise broken up by distress are not entitled to share in prizes made in a second cruise.—Blanchard v. Haven, Case No. 1,511.

A court of prize has power to give salvage in lieu of prize money to persons, not of the navy, who have rendered valuable service in making a capture.—The Deer, Case No. 3,739.

Soldiers belonging to the land forces of the United States have not, in the absence of statute, any right of property in a vessel captured by them on the sea. The acts of April 23, 1800, and June 26, 1812, and articles of war do not give such right.—United States v. The Active, Case No. 14,420.

Land forces, who act in concert with vessels of war in making a capture, must prove that the capture was produced by their active interference to entitle them to share in the prize.—Two Hundred and Eighty-Two Bales of Cotton, Case No. 14,291.

If the party filing a libel against property, as prize of war, is not entitled to it, condemnation will go to the United States.—The Emulous, Case No. 4,479.

Captures by noncommissioned vessels belong to the government.—The Joseph, Case No. 7,533.

When the "capturing force" is superior within the act providing that in such case the prize shall be divided with the government.—The Atlanta, Case No. 619.

A war vessel within signal distance only of another, making a prize, is entitled to share, but is not a part of the "capturing force," so as to make it superior, and cause the prize to be divided equally with the government.—The Atlanta, Case No. 619.

A vessel fitted out in a loyal state to cruise against the United States, and seized on the instance side of the court, is not a prize entitling the officers and crew of the United States man of war aiding in the seizure to a share of the proceeds.—The Chapman, Case No. 2,602.

Neither were they entitled to such share under the act of August 5, 1861, as for a vessel fitted out for acts of piracy.—The Chapman, Case No. 2,602.

In cases of trading with the enemy, the property is to be condemned to the captors, and not to the United States.—The Joseph, Case No. 7,533.

Captors are entitled to property captured in a trade from an enemy's port, though it was previously forfeited to the United States by a breach of the nonimportation act of 1809.—The Rapid, Case No. 11,576.

Where title of claimants and captors was defeated, and the United States interposed a claim, the property was condemned to them.—The Gefla, Case No. 5,296.

§ 74. Amount of shares.

Salvors of captured property shipwrecked after seizure were allowed one-half the net proceeds. —The Maria Bishop, Case No. 9,077.

Four per cent. of the value of the prize and counsel fees granted to two persons who made known the rebel signals, and thus enabled the naval officers to make the prize.—The Deer, Case No. 3,739.

In cases of joint capture by privateers, they share in proportion to the number of men composing their respective crews.—The Despatch, Case No. 3,823.

The commander of a squadron is entitled to the flag twentieth of all prizes made by a ship attached to his command, although the other part of the squadron never sailed on the cruise, being blockaded by a superior force.—Decatur v. Chew, Case No. 3,721.

To deprive such a commander of his flag twentieth on account of having left his station (Act April 23, 1800, c. 33, § 6), it is indispensable that some local station should have been assigned to him.—Decatur v. Chew, Case No. 3,721.

Captors entitled to freight if goods are carried to port of destination.—The Ann Green, Case No. 414.

A parol agreement as to distribution of prize money being void, distribution will be made under the statute. Act 1812.—The Dash, Case No. 3,584.

§ 75. Forfeiture of share.

A captor may forfeit his title by misconduct.—Fay v. Montgomery, Case No. 4,709.

Irregularities against the property seized or the captured crew will forfeit the right of prize to the captors.—The Jane Campbell, Case No. 7,205.

§ 76. Title of captors and transfer of share.

The purchasers from captors acquire an inchoate right to the property, which is made perfect by its subsequent condemnation.—Rose v. Himely, Case No. 12,046.

Captors on public armed vessel have no title until distribution.—The Aigburth, Case No. 105; The Peterhoff, Id. 11,025.

A bill of lading transmitted to a party to cover advances on the cargo does not pass title to the cargo as against the captors.—The Lynchburg, Case No. 8,637a.

A parol assignment of a share in prizes is void. —The Dash, Case No. 3,584.

§ 77. Rights of lienors.

Property seized as prize of war under the law of nations is discharged from all latent liens or incumbrances.—Harlan v. The Nassau, Cases Nos. 6,066, 6,067; The Delta, Id. 3,777; The Mary Clinton, Id. 9,203; The Napoleon, Id. 10,012; The Nassau, Id. 10,028; The Sally Magee, Id. 12,260; The San Jose Indiano, Id. 12,322; United States v. The Isaac Hammett, Id. 15,446.

Claim of neutral will be recognized only where he is in possession with right of retention.—The Amy Warwick, Case No. 343.

A neutral having made advances on cargo shipped to enemy correspondents under bill of lading to his own order, has a claim cognizable in a prize court.—The Amy Warwick, Case No. 343.

Where the share of one owner in a vessel was condemned under the act of July 13, 1861, and the remainder acquitted, held, that the owner of the latter had no lien for outlays in fitting the vessel.—The Mary McRae, Case No. 9,221.

The claim of a warehouseman for storage, at the instance of the officers of the court, of property seized as prize, presented after the property was restored to the claimant, was allowed payable out of the fund for defraying expenses of suits in which the United States is a party, under Act June 30, 1864, § 14.—Two Hundred and Eighty-Two Bales of Cotton, Case No. 14,292.

Prize cargoes sent in for adjudication in a transport chartered by the government are not chargeable with freight, or any part of the charter money, in favor of the vessel owner.—The Undaunted, Case No. 14,336.

Freight on property captured as prize by a government vessel, shipped on board a merchant vessel under a bill of lading, will be paid out of the proceeds of the property in court.—Eight Hundred and Fifty-Eight Bales of Cotton, Case No. 4,318.

Expenses of crew of prize vessel, who are not needed or used as witnesses, incurred after arrival in port, are not chargeable upon the proceeds.—The Britannia, Case No. 1,894.

The amount of money sufficient for the necessary expenses of the master of a vessel captured in breaking a blockade, while detained as a witness, will be allowed him out of coin belonging to him found on board.—The Wando, Case No. 17,140.

Seamen on board a prize captured and condemned as enemy property have no lien for wages, as against the title of the United States and the rights of the captors.—United States v. The Sally Magee, Case No. 16,216; The Langdon Cheves, Id. 8,063; The Lilla, Id. 8,348.

Where the voyage was begun before hostilities were commenced, mariners not hostile are entitled to wages out of the proceeds.—The Parkhill, Case No. 10,756.

Where a vessel is condemned as enemy property, but the cargo is released as belonging to a neutral engaged in lawful trade, seamen are not entitled to wages out of the proceeds, nor will the master be allowed his advances for necessary repairs and supplies.—The Velasco, Case No. 16,910a.

The master of the vessel is not entitled to be paid freight for the voyage out of the proceeds of condemned property.—The Hannah M. Johnson, Case No. 6,031.

The title of the absolute owner prevails in a prize court over the interest of a lienholder, whatever the equities between those parties may be.—The Winifred, Case No. 17,873.

§ 78. Proceedings for distribution.

The members of a privateer's crew may maintain a libel in admiralty for their respective proportions of the prize.—Keane v. The Gloucester, Case No. 7,632.

Where the proceeds of prizes have been brought into court, the parties entitled to distributive shares therein may file their libel in their individual names.—In re Proceeds of Prizes of War, Case No. 11,440.

Until a final adjustment of all claims arising from the capture, the prize court will entertain a supplemental suit for the distribution of prize proceeds.—The St. Lawrence, Case No. 12,233.

The court will take cognizance of a second libel by members of a privateer's crew improperly omitted from the distribution of the proceeds on a sale under a decree of condemnation.—Keane v. The Gloucester, Case No. 7,632.

The moiety of the proceeds due to the officers and crew of the ship of war that made the seizure is not to be paid into the United States treasury, but must be distributed by the court.—The Glamorgan, Case No. 5,472.

Where the captured property is taken for the use of the government, its value is to be ascertained by sworn appraisal, and deposited in court or in the treasury, subject to the order of the court.—The Ella Warley, Case No. 4,370.

One-eighth of the vessel being condemnable in any event, the libelants have a right to enforce their remedy against her as an entirety, whether they retain or remit the proceeds.—The Napoleon, Case No. 10,013.

If the vessel and cargo are subject to condemnation, claimants cannot contest the competency of libelants alone to control the proceeds of the forfeiture.—The Gondar, Case No. 5,526; United States v. The Gordon, Id. 15,234a.

Where the proceeds have been paid to prize agents, the proper jurisdiction is the district court. Where they remain in the circuit court application may be originally made there.—The St. Lawrence, Case No. 12,233.

A commander of a privateer, authorized to award certain reserved shares among the most deserving in the cruise, cannot award a share to himself.—The St. Lawrence, Case No. 12,233.

The marshal is liable where he distributes the proceeds without an order of court.—Keane v. The Gloucester, Case No. 7,632.

The federal district court may enforce the decrees of the court of appeals under the articles of confederation, in prize causes, against the proceeds of prizes condemned in that court.—Olmstead v. The Active, Case No. 10,503a.

IV. CIVIL WAR.

§ 79. Commencement and termination.

Where a portion of an empire, by force of arms, throws off the authority of the general government, so as to compel it to resort to regular hostilities, a state of civil war exists, as distinguished from rebellion, so as to prevent the parties being liable as trespassers in the United States courts, though the independence of the new government is not politically recognized.—Juando v. Taylor, Case No. 7,558.

The existence of a state of war with a Southern state dated from the time that the government was justified in exercising belligerent rights, and not from the passage or adoption of the ordinance of secession.—United States v. The Arcola, Case No. 14,464a.

The Civil War did not end as to Arkansas until the proclamation by the president so declaring it.—Brown v. Hiatt, Case No. 2,011.

As far as South Carolina is concerned, the Civil War began April 19, 1861, and ended April 1, 1866.—Gooding v. Varn, Case No. 5,539.

The courts will be governed by the decision of the political department of the government in determining when the Civil War ended.—Philips v. Hatch, Case No. 11,094.

No formal declaration of war by the president, in the case of the war of the Rebellion, was necessary to render lawful the means adopted by him to repel the warlike measures of the enemy.—The Hiawatha, Case No. 6,451.

§ 80. Application of rules of international law in general.

Under the law of nations, the rights incident to a war waged by a government to subdue an insurrection or revolt of its own subjects or citizens are the same, in regard to neutral powers, as if the hostilities were carried on between independent nations.—The Hiawatha, Case No. 6,451; The Mary Clinton, Id. 9,203.

The principle of the law of nations, that where a war exists between two distinct and independent powers there must be a suspension of all commercial intercourse between their citizens, is not applicable to the war of the Rebellion.—United States v. Six Boxes of Arms, Case No. 16,295.

The proclamation of April 19, 1861, did not interdict commercial intercourse between the citizens of the states in rebellion and those of the other states.—Speed v. Smith, Case No. 13,226.

§ 81. Effect of Civil War on existing laws and contracts.

Contracts made prior to July 13, 1861, were not invalidated by the operation of the principles of international law.—Speed v. Smith, Case No. 13,226.

The Civil War did not revoke an agency in the Southern states for a citizen of a Northern state.—Anderson v. Bank, Case No. 354; Botts v. Crenshaw, Id. 1,690.

An agent of rebel owners of vessel insured their interests, and collected the loss during the war. Held, that he was liable to account to them after peace declared.—Caldwell v. Harding, Case No. 2,302.

A partnership between citizens of an insurgent state, one of whom continues a loyal citizen, and saves his citizenship by retiring within the Federal lines, is ipso facto dissolved, and an agreement that the partnership continue is void as against public policy.—Planters' Bank v. St. John, Case No. 11,208.

The suspension of intercourse during the Civil War did not prevent the accrual of interest on a debt due by a citizen of a state in insurrection to a citizen of a loyal state.—Shortridge v. Macon, Case No. 12,812; Rogers v. Arthur, Id. 12,006.

But, in the case of a debt owing by an inhabitant of a loyal state to an inhabitant of a state in insurrection, interest did not accrue during the war.—Chappelle v. Olney, Case No. 2,613; Bigler v. Waller, Id. 1,404.

For the purpose of computing interest, the Civil War, so far as Virginia was concerned, terminated on the establishment of the government at Richmond, May 26, 1865.—Bigler v. Waller, Case No. 1,404.

Where the creditors were residents of a loyal state, a sale, during the War of the Rebellion under a power of sale in a trust deed whose grantors were residents of a state in rebellion, and were not in default when the war broke out, is void.—Kanawha Coal Co. v. Kanawha & O. Coal Co., Case No. 7,606.

The right of redemption from the lien of the trust deed upon paying the debt may be enforced against the grantee of the creditor who purchased the lands on such sale.—Kanawha Coal Co. v. Kanawha & O. Coal Co., Case No. 7,606.

Obligations suspended during the Civil War held revived by the president's proclamation of June 13, 1865.—Semmes v. City Fire Ins. Co., Case No. 12,651.

The concession of belligerent rights by the government of the United States to the Confederate States did not operate to suspend the revenue laws, so as to relieve goods imported in a port under control of the insurgents from the payment of duties to the United States.—United States v. Stark, Case No. 16,378.

Nor was such effect produced by the proclamation of April 19, 1861, declaring a blockade of certain ports.—United States v. Stark, Case No. 16,378.

See, also, ante, § 2.

§ 82. Contracts between residents of belligerent states.

A contract between a resident of a state in insurrection and a loyal state is void where made without license or authority from the government.—Philips v. Hatch, Case No. 11,094.

A contract for the purchase of cotton, made during the Civil War by a subject of Norway, domiciled in New York, with a citizen of Texas, actually residing therein at the date of the contract, held void.—Habricht v. Alexander, Case No. 5,886.

A draft drawn within the Confederate States, in a section not under the control of the federal forces, upon a person in a loyal state, is absolutely void as to all parties.—Britton v. Butler, Case No. 1,903; Moore v. Foster, Id. 9,760.

A bill of exchange, drawn by a bank in Mobile while that city was in possession of the Confederate forces, on a bank in New Orleans, after that city had surrendered to and was occupied by the Federal forces, is void.—Williams v. Mobile Sav. Bank, Case No. 17,729.

Such a bill is void, even though the payee of the bill, at the time he received it, supposed the city of New Orleans was still occupied by the Confederate forces.—Williams v. Mobile Sav. Bank, Case No. 17,729.

In such case, the payee, acting in good faith, without knowledge, may recover from the drawer under the money counts the amount paid for the bill.—Williams v. Mobile Sav. Bank, Case No. 17,729.

Assumpsit will lie by the United States, after the return of peace, to recover against a person indebted for money had and received to one of the insurgent state governments, as on a common-law obligation.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,335.

§ 83. Martial law.

Military commissions and their acts in the trial of persons not in the military service, during the Civil War, in states where the courts were undisturbed, were unconstitutional.—Milligan v. Hovey, Case No. 9,605.

After the Rebellion had ceased, and the authority of the United States was acknowledged in a state, there is no jurisdiction to try offenses by citizens against soldiers upon military commission.—United States v. Commandant of Fort Delaware, Case No. 14,842.

The establishment of the provisional court for Louisiana by the president, as commander in chief of the forces of the United States, while they held the territory in which it was to exercise its functions, was an act warranted by the law of nations.—United States v. Reiter, Case No. 16,146.

Such court continued rightfully to exercise its functions so long as its commission remained unrevoked, and the power of the United States continued to support it in the exercise of them.—United States v. Reiter, Case No. 16,146.

Regulations of secretary of treasury, exacting certain payments as condition precedent to shipment of cotton from disloyal states (Act July 13, 1861), held legal and valid.—Hamilton v. Dillin, Case No. 5,979.

The two orders issued by the war department August 8, 1862, one "to prevent the evasion of military duty, and for the suppression of disloyal practices," and the other "authorizing the arrest of persons discouraging enlistments," held unconstitutional.—Ex parte Field, Case No. 4,761.

The order of the secretary of war, dated May 13, 1863, directing commanders of departments to prohibit the sale of live stock for exportation, and to cause live stock so sold to be appraised and appropriated by the government, was unauthorized and illegal.—The Matilda A. Lewis, Case No. 9,281.

Fowls are not "live stock," within the meaning of the order issued by the secretary of war dated May 13, 1863.—The Matilda A. Lewis, Case No. 9,281.

§ 84. Status of residents of Confederate states.

In determining the status of rebel persons the federal courts are guided by municipal, and not by international, law.—United States v. One Hundred Barrels of Cement, Case No. 15,945.

In the Rebellion, a resident in the "Confederacy," and subject to its control, is a public enemy.—Elgee's Adm'r v. Lovell, Case No. 4,344; Kanawha Coal Co. v. Kanawha & O. Coal Co., Id. 7,606; United States v. One Hundred Barrels of Cement, Id. 15,945; Same v. One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-Six Shares, Id. 15,960a, 15,960b.

A proclamation of amnesty cannot relieve such person of the disabilities imposed upon him in such case.—Elgee's Adm'r v. Lovell, Case No. 4,344.

A granting of a license to trade by the secretary of the treasury restores the standing of the grantee, so as to enable him to be heard in the federal courts.—United States v. One Hundred Barrels of Cement, Case No. 15,945.

A citizen of a seceding state, who adheres to the Union cause, and retires within the Federal lines, and remains there during the Rebellion, though he intends to return after hostilities cease, continues to be a citizen of the United States.—Planters' Bank v. St. John, Case No. 11,208.

§ 85. The Confederate government and seceded states, their laws and judicial proceedings.

The acts of the people of the states in rebellion merely suspended the practical relations of those states to the Union, but did not for a moment effect their separation therefrom.—Shortridge v. Macon, Case No. 12,812.

"De facto," as descriptive of a government, is most correctly used as signifying a government completely, though only temporarily, established, in place of the lawful or regular government, occupying its capital and exercising its powers. In this sense the Confederate government was never a de facto government.—Keppel v. Petersburg R. Co., Case No. 7,722.

The Confederate government was not a de facto government in any such sense that its acts are entitled to judicial recognition as valid.—Keppel v. Petersburg R. Co., Case No. 7,722.

The insurgent government of Virginia during the Civil War held a de facto government, and its acts regulating the common transactions of life were valid; but otherwise as to acts intended to subvert the authority of the United States.—Evans v. Richmond, Case No. 4,570.

Legal rights can neither be created nor defeated by the action of the government of the Confederate States.—Shortridge v. Macon, Case No. 12,812.

Concession of belligerent rights by the legislative and executive departments to rebels establishes no rights except during the war.—Shortridge v. Macon, Case No. 12,812.

The prescriptions of the Confederate government impose no legal or moral obligation, and obedience is justified only on the ground of deadly coercion by violence or threats.—United States v. One Thousand Five Hundred Bales of Cotton, Case No. 15,958.

The mayor and common council of a city in Virginia, elected under the de facto government of that state during the Civil War, during the occupation by federal forces, do not derive their authority from the military.—Woodson v. Fleck, Case No. 17,996.

An act of the insurrectionary legislature of Georgia abolishing the vendor's lien is valid and binding.—Cook v. Oliver, Case No. 3,164.

Transactions between individuals, which would be legal under ordinary circumstances, are not void because done in conformity with laws enacted by an insurgent body actually organized as a government within a large territory, and in complete exclusion of the regular government.—Keppel v. Petersburg R. Co., Case No. 7,722.

An act of an insurgent government authorizing a guardian appointed by it to invest the estate of the ward in Confederate bonds, and a decree of the probate court of the state settling his accounts, will not relieve the guardian from his liability to account to the ward for the funds so invested, where she was at the time within the Federal lines.—Van Epps v. Walsh, Case No. 16,850.

The act of the insurgent government of a seceding state in appointing a guardian for a resident infant is as valid and lawful as if done by a government de jure.—Van Epps v. Walsh, Case No. 16,850.

A bond given by a guardian after a state had seceded, conditioned to perform all the duties required by law, refers to the law of the insurgent government of the state, and a compliance with such law discharges the sureties.—Van Epps v. Walsh, Case No. 16,850.

The courts of a state forming part of the Confederate States had no jurisdiction during the Civil War over parties residing in states which adhered to the national government.—Livingston v. Jordan, Case No. 8,415; Keppel v. Petersburg R. Co., Id. 7,722; Van Epps v. Walsh, Id. 16,850.

The proceedings of a confederate prize court are null and void.—The Lilla, Case No. 8,348.

The sequestration acts of the Confederate States, and all acts under them injurious to citizens of Union-adhering states, are null and void.—Perdicaris v. Charleston Gas-Light Co., Case No. 10,974.

Stock in a Southern corporation owned by loyal citizens, and sequestrated by a Confederate court, and sold to citizens of the state, does not pass by such proceedings.—Perdicaries v. Charleston Gas-Light Co., Case No. 10,973.

A stockholder in a corporation of a Southern state, being a loyal citizen, whose stock is sequestered, may sue in equity to have canceled certificates issued to the purchaser on a sale in the sequestration proceedings.—Perdicaris v. Charleston Gas-Light Co., Case No. 10,974.

Compulsory payment of a debt to a receiver under the Confederate sequestration acts is no defense to a suit by the creditor.—Shortridge v. Macon, Case No. 12,812.

Payment of a debt, by the trustee, to a receiver under a decree of confiscation of a Confederate court, held a breach of trust as against a loyal citizen.—Dorr v. Gibboney, Case No. 4,006.

Where stock of a Virginia railroad company, owned by a citizen of a loyal state, was confiscated by a decree of a Confederate court, and dividends thereon paid to its receiver without protest, held, that the company was liable after the war for the dividends so declared, but to an amount equal only to what the Confederate money in which they were declared was worth at the time.—Keppel v. Petersburg R. Co., Case No. 7,722.

The judgment of a court of a state in insurrection merely settling the rights of private parties actually within its jurisdiction, not tending to defeat the just rights of citizens of the United States, nor in furtherance of laws passed in aid of the Rebellion, is valid.—Cook v. Oliver, Case No. 3,164; French v. Tumlin, Id. 5,104.

A judge whose term of office had not expired when a state seceded, and who continued to serve thereafter, became a judge of the new insurgent government without any new election or appointment.—Van Epps v. Walsh, Case No. 16,850.

§ 86. Confiscation—Statutory provisions. The confiscation act of August 6, 1861, is constitutional.—United States v. Republican Banner Officers, Case No. 16,148.

The constitutional provision that "no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture, except during the life of the person attainted," does not apply to the confiscation of rebels' property. Act July 17, 1862.—In re Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097.

Construction of acts of congress and regulations of the treasury department in relation to commercial intercourse between the loyal and insurgent states.—United States v. The Henry C. Homeyer, Case No. 15,353.

Act July 13, 1861, is not a penal, but a revenue, statute, and is to be construed liberally, so as to accomplish its proposed object.—United States v. One Hundred and Twenty-Nine Packages, Case No. 15,941.

Acts July 13, 1861, and Aug. 6, 1861, are purely municipal regulations, with which foreigners have no concern.—United States v. The William Arthur, Case No. 16,702.

§ 87. —— Grounds of forfeiture. A forfeiture of property is imposed by Act Aug. 6, 1861, only where it is employed, with the knowledge or consent of its owner, in aid of insurrection.—United States v. One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-Six Shares of Capital Stock, Case No. 15,961.

A license to trade in the rebellious states, obtained through error, mistake, or fraud, will not prevent the forfeiture under Acts July 13, 1861, and May 20, 1862, the same being prohibitory acts.—United States v. One Hundred Barrels of Cement, Case No. 15,945; Same v. One Hundred and Twenty-Nine Packages, Id. 15,941.

Land conveyed to the Confederate States government for the purpose of aiding the Rebellion ipso facto became the property of the United States by right of conquest.—United States v. Tract of Land, Case No. 16,535.

Dry goods, groceries, and medicines sold to the inhabitants along the Mississippi river during the last year of the Civil War held not articles contraband of war by the legislation of congress, or the regulations of the treasury department, or by the law of nations.—United States v. The Henry C. Homeyer, Case No. 15,353.

Act July 13, 1861, positively prohibits residents of both the loyal and insurrectionary states from all commercial intercourse for whatever purposes, and subjects to confiscation the vehicles employed therein either for profit or gratuitously.—United States v. The Josie, Case No. 15,498a.

Transporting gold to a territory in insurrection, without a license, will subject it to forfeiture, though the insurrectionary district was at the time in possession of the federal forces. —United States v. Gay's Gold, Case No. 15,194.

Loans made in France by a citizen of France to a Confederate agent are valid when not knowingly made for the purpose of carrying on hostilities against the United States.—In re Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097.

Vessel belonging to alien woman residing transiently in rebel territory, not engaged in mercantile business, held not subject to confiscation. Act July 13, 1861.—The D. F. Keeling, Case No. 3,873.

The fact that the libelant, who was at the time of the capture resident in the district in insurrection, afterwards came into the United States, and took the oath prescribed by the acts of congress, could not divest the title of the government.—White v. Red Chief, Case No. 17,556.

A capture of a steamer, within the insurrectionary district, by the forces of the United States, vested in the government of the United States an absolute title to the property, without the necessity of any legal condemnation.—White v. Red Chief, Case No. 17,556.

A sale of contraband property by a citizen of one belligerent country to a citizen in the other belligerent country is a breach of allegiance.—United States v. One Hundred and Twenty-Nine Packages, Case No. 15,941.

§ 88. —— Property forfeited.

The confiscation act of July 13, 1861, did not embrace choses in action, such as bonds, stocks, etc., nor money.—United States v. Virginia Bonds, Case No. 16,626.

Gold coin comes within the description of "goods and chattels, wares and merchandise," within Act July 13, 1861, prohibiting intercourse with the inhabitants of the states in insurrection.—United States v. American Gold Coin, Case No. 14,439; Same v. Canoe, Id. 14,718.

The confiscation act (Aug. 6, 1861) applies to real estate.—United States v. Republican Banner Officers, Case No. 16,148.

Under the confiscation act of July 17, 1862, no interest in land could be forfeited which would extend beyond the life of the offender. —Pike v. Wassell, Case No. 11,164.

A transfer of property within the Union lines as security, after it became subject to confiscation, will not defeat the right of confiscation.—In re Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097.

The individual property of all officers and agents of the Confederate government having been declared confiscable, and all transfers thereof void, by Act July 17, 1862, § 5, one trading in insurgent territory under a license could acquire no title to such property by purchase or otherwise.—United States v. McKee, Case No. 15,689.

Merchandise at sea, consigned to merchants in an insurrectionary state, but assigned to creditors in New York, to cover previous advances, three days before the proclamation of August 16, 1861, and passing into the custody of the assignees on its arrival, held not subject to confiscation.—United States v. One Hundred and Fifty-Six Packages of Tea, Case No. 15,933.

The heirs apparent or presumptive of one whose estate in land has been condemned under the confiscation act have no interest which they can protect from forfeiture or incumbrance.—Pike v. Wassell, Case No. 11,164.

The mere existence of a law prescribed by an insurrectionary government in itself is not sufficient to justify a sale to it, and prevent a forfeiture of the property sold, under Act Aug. 6, 1861. Case No. 15,957 reversed.—United States v. One Thousand Five Hundred Bales of Cotton, Case No. 15,958.

A steamboat sunk while under impressment by the Confederate government, and subsequently paid for in full, is the property of such government, and on surrender of the Confederate forces becomes the property of the United States.—Leathers v. Salvor Wrecking, Etc., Co., Case No. 8,164.

§ 89. —— Captured and abandoned property act.

Recovery of money paid for the release of captured property.—Shipley v. Thompson, Case No. 12,790.

No treasury agent could receive after June 30, 1865, any captured or abandoned property, unless theretofore surrendered by Confederate agents or officers.—McLeod v. Callicott, Case No. 8,897.

Property surrendered by the military authorities of the Confederate government could not be released by any state or provost court.—McLeod v. Callicott, Case No. 8,897.

A treasury agent acting under color of the captured and abandoned property act, or under a mistaken sense of duty, cannot be held personally responsible.—McLeod v. Callicott, Case No. 8,897.

Where property was seized and sold, and the proceeds paid into the United States treasury, under the captured and abandoned property act, the question whether the property was in fact captured or abandoned is not open to litigation in the courts, but the only remedy of the person claiming to be the owner is by a proceeding for the proceeds in the court of claims.—Chamberlain v. Stanton, Case No. 2,579.

Property was not "abandoned," in the meaning of the statute (13 Stat. 375), unless the owner was voluntarily absent engaged in aiding or encouraging the Rebellion by arms or otherwise.—Kimball v. Taylor, Case No. 7,775.

The claimant of property seized and forcibly removed from his possession, as captured or abandoned property, is not liable for freight and charges on it, where the seizure was wrongful.—The Saratoga v. Four Hundred and Thirty-Eight Bales of Cotton, Case No. 12,356.

The remedy provided by the act of March 3, 1863, for the recovery of property captured or abandoned in the enemy's country, whether the capture be in accordance with its provisions or not, is exclusive in the court of claims.—Elgee's Adm'r v. Lovell, Case No. 4,344.

A plea in detinue, based on the act of March 3, 1863, which does not aver that the property had been taken in a district which had been declared in insurrection, is bad.—Elgee's Adm'r v. Lovell, Case No. 4,344.

The plea must exclude the idea of any special property in the plaintiff, with a present right of possession in him, in order to be good. —Elgee's Adm'r v. Lovell, Case No. 4,344.

The bar to an action provided in section 6 of the "Confiscation Act" applies only to property seized under the act. A plea in detinue which does not allege that the property was seized under the act is bad.—Elgee's Adm'r v. Lovell, Case No. 4,344.

§ 90. —— Jurisdiction and procedure.

Proceedings for condemnation of land under the confiscation acts of August, 1861, and July, 1862, as to form, and trial, exceptions, and review.—Semple v. United States, Case No. 12,661.

Forfeitures declared under Acts July 13, 1861, § 5, Aug. 6, 1861, May 20, 1862, July 17, 1862, can only be enforced by seizure of the property.—United States v. Stevenson, Case No. 16,396.

A seizure by the marshal under the confiscation acts, upon written order of the United States attorney, is sufficient to give jurisdiction of the res.—Bragg v. Lorio, Case No. 1,800.

A federal district court in New York cannot acquire jurisdiction in rem to declare a forfeiture under the confiscation acts of August 6, 1861, and July 17, 1862, of shares in the capital stock of an Illinois corporation.—United States v. One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-Six Shares of Capital Stock, Case No. 15,961.

Forfeitures incurred under Act July 13, 1861, during the continuance of hostilities, might be enforced afterwards.—United States v. Stevenson, Case No. 16,396.

A proceeding under the confiscation act (July 17, 1862) is not a criminal proceeding.—In re Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097.

Such proceedings are in rem, conforming to proceedings in admiralty or in revenue cases, according as the seizure is on water or on land. —In re Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097; United States v. One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-Six Shares of Capital Stock, Id. 15,961.

An alien enemy has a right to appear as claimant, and to answer and defend the suit under such acts.—United States v. One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-Six Shares of Capital Stock, Case No. 15,961. But see United States v. The Isaac Hammett, Case No. 15,446.

A charge of defendant's acts of service under the Confederate States, in the alternative, in the libel of information, will not support a confiscation decree.—In re Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097.

Upon a libel of information to condemn certain railway shares of an alien enemy, the railway company cannot become a party without showing that it is the true and bona fide owner, and that no other person is the owner of the property in dispute. Admiralty rule 12. —United States v. One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-Six Shares, Case No. 15,960b.

Issues of fact raised by the claimant of land or property seized on land are to be tried by jury.—In re Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097; United States v. Athens Armory, Id. 14,473.

When no answer is filed, judgment by default may be taken, and the court may proceed to ascertain the material facts in the case ex parte and without a jury.—In re Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097.

A decree condemning as forfeited an estate for the life of the owner does not immediately cast the entire beneficial estate in the property upon his children, so as to make them, while he is still living, his heirs.—Pike v. Wassell, Case No. 11,164.

A decree condemning property under the confiscation act cannot be collaterally assailed by disputing the recitals of the record as to seizure. —Brown v. Hiatt, Case No. 2,011.

A sale under a decree of confiscation, where the court has jurisdiction, will stand, though the decree be reversed for error.—In re Confiscation Cases, Case No. 3,097.

WAREHOUSEMEN.

§ 1, Contracts for storage in general. § 2, Warehouse receipts. § 3, Loss or injury to goods.

Liability of carrier, see "Carriers," § 26.
Warehouses for imported goods, see "Customs Duties," §§ 53, 54.

§ 1. Contracts for storage in general.
The Minnesota statute of March 3, 1876, "to regulate the storage of grain," does not abrogate the essential distinctions between bailments and sales.—McCabe v. McKinstry, Case No. 8,667.

Where grain is stored in an elevator warehouse under whose invariable course of business the highest market price or the same amount of grain of like quality is given on surrender of the receipt, but not the identical grain deposited, nor grain from any specific mass, the transaction is a sale and not a bailment.—Rahilly v. Wilson, Case No. 11,532.

§ 2. Warehouse receipts.
An instrument, "Received in store, for account of B. & W., 3,000 sacks of corn," signed by a warehouseman, held a warehouse receipt, and the title to the corn will pass by its indorsement and delivery.—Harris v. Bradley, Case No. 6,116.

In the absence of statute or usage, "warehouse receipts" need not be in a particular form.—Harris v. Bradley, Case No. 6,116.

A warehouse receipt to the order of a third person may be impeached if no advance has been made or responsibility incurred by him on account thereof.—Bebee v. Moore, Case No. 1,202.

A mill company's receipt for grain held to be subject to explanation by parol proof as to whether the grain was deposited merely for storage or for purposes of sale.—McCabe v. McKinstry, Case No. 8,667.

The owner of a warehouse receipt is not entitled to the specific grain deposited, but to the quantity specified in the receipt and contained in the warehouse.—Rahilly v. Wilson, Case No. 11,531.

The indorsement and delivery of a warehouse receipt will transfer the title to the property covered thereby.—Rahilly v. Wilson, Case No. 11,531; McNeil v. Hill, Id. 8,914.

The title to goods in a warehouse does not pass by the indorsement and delivery of warehouse receipts, as against an attachment laid before notice of the assignment.—Gibson v. Stevens, Case No. 5,401.

The warehouseman is estopped to deny that he has the articles mentioned in his receipt, in an action by an indorsee or assignee, who has purchased the paper in good faith.—McNeil v. Hill, Case No. 8,914.

§ 3. Loss or injury of goods.
Warehousemen are not liable for discoloration of coffee stored with them, arising from the storage of guano in the same building, unless it appear that they were wanting in ordinary diligence in storing the two articles together.—Tucker v. Oelrichs, Case No. 14,225.

Putting 160 kegs of gunpowder in the same warehouse with plaintiff's goods is negligence rendering the warehouseman liable for a loss resulting therefrom.—White v. Colorado Cent. R. Co., Case No. 17,543.

In delivering wheat from a warehouse through a pipe into a vessel, the liability of the warehouseman ceases with the discharge of the wheat into the pipe, and he is not responsible for negligence in its loading, causing the breaking of the pipe and the loss of grain.—The R. G. Winslow, Case No. 11,736.

§ 1. What constitutes waste.
The working of a gold mine is the taking away the substance of the estate.—United States v. Parrott, Case No. 15,998.

§ 2. Persons liable.
An action of waste is not maintainable against a tenant by elegit, either under the common law or the statutes of Virginia.—Scott v. Lenox, Case No. 12,538.

§ 3. Actions.
The holder of a certificate of sale of land on execution cannot maintain a bill to restrain waste. Rev. St. Wis. 1849, c. 102, § 100.—Law v. Wilgees, Case No. 8,132.

In an action of waste in the removal of a building, evidence of its cost is relevant to enable the jury to test the worth of opinions of witnesses as to its value.—Patterson v. Kingsland, Case No. 10,827.

In the District of Columbia, defendant in equity is not bound to discover the waste, unless complainant in his bill expressly waives the forfeiture and penalty.—Thruston v. Mustin, Case No. 14,013.

A court of equity will, in some cases, enjoin the removal of the fruits of past waste.—United States v. Parrott, Case No. 15,998.

On a motion for injunction to enjoin waste, complainant, on bill and answer, cannot read affidavits in support of his title.—United States v. Parrott, Case No. 15,998.

An injunction against waste will not be granted where the title of complainant is denied by answer, or where he had no sufficient notice of the motion.—Morse v. O'Reilly, Case No. 9,858.

Restraining waste, see, also, "Injunction," § 6.

WATERS AND WATER COURSES.

§ 1, Appropriation of rights in public lands. § 2, Natural water courses—Riparian rights in general. § 3, —— Obstruction and detention. § 4, —— Diversion. § 5, —— Bed of stream. § 6, Subterranean waters. § 7, Appropriation and prescription. § 8, Conveyances and contracts. § 9, Public water supply. § 10, Control and regulation.

See, also, "Canals"; "Levees"; "Navigable Waters."
As boundaries, see "Boundaries," § 4.
Injury from overflow, see "Mines and Minerals," § 15.
Jurisdiction over, see "Admiralty," § 4.

§ 1. Appropriation of rights in public lands.
So long as the title to land through which a stream flows remains in the United States, there can be no use of the waters of the stream which will ripen into a title by prescription, either against the government or its grantee.—Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Ferris, Case No. 14,371.

Act July 26, 1866, granting a right of way to ditch and canal owners, is prospective in its operation, and does not in any manner qualify or limit the effect of a patent issued before its passage.—Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Ferris, Case No. 14,371.

§ 2. Natural water courses—Riparian rights in general.
One who has entered land under the homestead act, and continues to reside thereon, is entitled to use water as other riparian proprietors may.—Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Dangberg, Case No. 14,370.

One who has entered and paid for land and received a certificate of purchase has the equitable title, and is entitled to riparian rights, although he has not received his patent.—Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Dangberg, Case No. 14,370.

The riparian right is protected as any other right.—Bowman v. Wathen, Case No. 1,740.

The owner of lots in Washington lying on Rock creek is entitled to the compensation awarded for the condemnation of the water privileges in front of them.—Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Union Bank, Case No. 2,654.

The riparian proprietor may use the water as it flows according to his pleasure, if the use be not to the prejudice of another proprietor.—Tyler v. Wilkinson, Case No. 14,312.

The right of each proprietor is limited and qualified by the precisely equal right of every other riparian proprietor, and this right determines reasonable use.—Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Dangberg, Case No. 14,370; Same v. Ferris, Id. 14,371.

In the exercise of his common right, every proprietor may consume so much water as is necessary for his household and domestic purposes and for watering his stock.—Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Dangberg, Case No. 14,370.

The use of water for irrigation is not for a natural want, as in the case of quenching thirst, and water cannot be diverted to such purpose so as to destroy or render useless or materially affect the application of the water by other riparian proprietors.—Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Ferris, Case No. 14,371.

A mill owner, as such, has no right to the water of a river beyond what has been legally appropriated to his mill by title or long use.—Tyler v. Wilkinson, Case No. 14,312.

§ 3. —— Obstruction and detention.
Where the construction of booms and piers has been acquiesced in by the public, one boom owner cannot sue another for the obstruction caused thereby.—Leigh v. Holt, Case No. 8,220.

The owner below the line of a riparian proprietor cannot subtract from the proprietor above by swelling or backing the water upon him.—Good v. Dodge, Case No. 5,531.

Actual damages need not be shown to sustain an action for an invasion of water rights, where defendant's use is not made in the exercise of the riparian owner's natural right.—

Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Dangberg, Case No. 14,370.

In the case of an alleged violation of a water privilege, the bill will not be retained after a decree in order to give plaintiffs an opportunity, by a new trial and proofs, to establish the fact that a further lowering of defendant's dam is necessary to the protection of plaintiff's rights. —Mann v. Wilkinson, Case No. 9,036.

§ 4. —— Diversion.

The riparian owner has no right to throw water back on a proprietor above, or to divert it from a proprietor below to his injury.—Tyler v. Wilkinson, Case No. 14,312; Webb v. Portland Mfg. Co., Id. 17,322.

In the case of mills owned in severalty on the same milldam, one cannot divert the water to his mill by means of a canal into the pond above the dam, though he takes less than he would naturally use at his mill on the dam.—Webb v. Portland Mfg. Co., Case No. 17,322.

Where parties on opposite sides of a stream between two states each have a water power, and own the land to the center line, so that each owns one-half of a dam, they are tenants in common of the water; and if one construct a canal on his own side, and draw off the water, the other has a right of action which he may enforce by injunction in the state where the canal is built.—Stillman v. White Rock Mfg. Co., Case No. 13,446.

In such case the laws which govern are those of the state within whose borders the injurious act is done.—Stillman v. White Rock Mfg. Co., Case No. 13,446.

Where there is a mere fugitive and temporary diversion of water, without damage, and without pretense of right, a court of equity will not interfere, by way of injunction. Quære, whether there would be any redress at law.—Webb v. Portland Mfg. Co., Case No. 17,322.

Proof that the natural flow of a stream was changed by a person not having a legal right to do so will entitle a riparian proprietor to recover nominal damages, though there has been no actual injury.—Whipple v. Cumberland Mfg. Co., Case No. 17,516.

Injunction granted to restrain an entry on land without authority of law to divert a stream thereon.—Baring v. Erdman, Case No. 981.

An injunction will not be granted to prevent the diversion of water from its natural course unless serious damage, actually incurred or impending, be shown.—Pierson v. Elgar, Case No. 11,157.

A party may proceed in equity to enjoin a diversion of a water course, where no actual damage has occurred, as a means of establishing and protecting his right.—Webb v. Portland Mfg. Co., Case No. 17,322.

In an action to restrain the diversion of water by tort feasors, one of the tort feasors, who resides out of the jurisdiction of the court, may be omitted.—Cole Silver Min. Co. v. Virginia & Gold Hill Water Co., Case No. 2,989.

On a bill to restrain maintenance of a well alleged to have caused a diversion of plaintiff's stream, where the testimony was voluminous and contradictory, the facts were submitted to a jury.—Dexter v. Providence Aqueduct Co., Case No. 3,864.

Construction of decree confirming complainants in their right and title to divert and use the water of a certain stream, on exceptions to a master's report refusing to award damages for diversion.—Lonsdale Co. v. Moies, Case No. 8,-497.

§ 5. —— Bed of stream.

Prima facie the proprietor upon each bank of a nonnavigable river is entitled to the land covered with water in front of his bank to the middle thread of the stream.—Tyler v. Wilkinson, Case No. 14,312.

In virtue of this ownership he has the right to the use of the water flowing over it in its natural current without diminution or obstruction, without any property in the water itself.—Tyler v. Wilkinson, Case No. 14,312.

§ 6. Subterranean waters.

The diversion and appropriation by defendants, by means of a mining tunnel, of subterranean waters previously appropriated and enjoyed by plaintiffs, will be enjoined.—Cole Silver Min. Co. v. Virginia & Gold Hill Water Co., Case No. 2,989.

In such case a preliminary injunction will be granted, though requiring defendants to build a bulkhead across their tunnel.—Cole Silver Min. Co. v. Virginia & Gold Hill Water Co., Cases Nos. 2,989, 2,990.

§ 7. Appropriation and prescription.

Priority of occupancy of flowing water creates no right, unless the appropriation be for a period which the law deems a presumption of right.—Tyler v. Wilkinson, Case No. 14,312.

Of the nature and effect of presumptions arising from use of water as to pre-eminent or prior use in case of a deficiency to supply all concerned.—Tyler v. Wilkinson, Case No. 14,312.

The use of water by a riparian proprietor does not become adverse until it amounts to an actionable invasion of another's right.—Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Ferris, Case No. 14,371.

No presumption of grant arises from an adverse use of water, unless the use has been peaceable; and to be peaceable it must have been with the acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement.—Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Dangberg, Case No. 14,370.

The exclusive use of flowing water for 20 years is a conclusive presumption of the right.—Tyler v. Wilkinson, Case No. 14,312; Hazard v. Robinson, Id. 6,281; Stillman v. White Rock Mfg. Co., Id. 13,446.

Acquiescence by plaintiff or his grantors in a diversion of water by defendant, even for a shorter period than 20 years, held sufficient to induce a refusal of injunction.—Haight v. Morris Aqueduct, Case No. 5,902.

The owner of a lower mill lowered his dam so as to prevent obstruction of an upper mill, and, after 38 years, sold his mill to the upper owner, who sold it to a third person. Held, that the lower owner had no right to raise the dam so as to obstruct the upper mill.—Hazard v. Robinson, Case No. 6,281.

Unity of possession does not extinguish the right to use a water course appurtenant to a mill.—Hazard v. Robinson, Case No. 6,281.

A right to use water, obtained by prescription, only operates against the property, and not against the proprietor, and he may purchase and hold other lands unaffected by such right.—Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Ferris, Case No. 14,371.

Twenty years' adverse possession of water which had previously flowed to plaintiff's mill held to vest a complete title, which was not impaired by three years' nonuse, during which the water reflowed to plaintiff's mill, where defendant did not intend to abandon its right.—Haight v. Morris Aqueduct, Case No. 5,902.

§ 8. Conveyances and contracts.

An incorporeal right to water may be granted in gross.—Lonsdale Co. v. Moies, Case No. 8,-496.

A stream of running water is part and parcel of the land through which it flows, inseparably annexed to the soil, and the use of it as an incident to the soil passes to the patentee.—

Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Ferris, Case No. 14,371.

Where estates subject to mill privileges are subsequently united in ownership, and are again conveyed, any change in privileges, claimed to have been made by such conveyances, must distinctly appear.—Perry v. Parker, Case No. 11,010.

The proprietor of adjoining lands, who is also owner of the bed of a creek, may grant and convey the bed of the creek, separate from the land which bounds it.—Hartshorn v. Wright, Case No. 6,169.

A lease for 500 years of certain land, covered with a pond of water, conveys, as incident, the water and the fish therein.—Smith v. Miller, Case No. 13,080.

§ 9. Public water supply.
A company required to supply water to a city, "in case of fire or other great necessity, without charge," held bound to furnish free water for irrigating public parks and squares, flushing sewers, etc.—Hawes v. Contra Costa Water Co., Case No. 6,235.

§ 10. Control and regulation.
It is doubtful whether state laws relating to weights and measures can have any validity, though congress has never exercised its power of regulation.—The Miantinomi, Case No. 9,521.

Collision with vessels at wharves, see "Collision," §§ 68–74.
Jurisdiction of admiralty, see "Admiralty," § 19.
—— of action for injury to, see "Admiralty," § 31.

§ 1. Power to control and regulate.
A municipality in the exercise of its police powers may control the landing of boats, by designating the place where they shall receive or discharge freight or passengers, and charge a reasonable compensation therefor.—Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. St. Louis, Case No. 10,345.

A city may charge reasonable compensation, proportioned to the tonnage of the vessel, for the use of its wharves, where there is ample space elsewhere to land in the harbor.—Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Clarksville, Case No. 10,342; Same v. Hannibal, Id. 10,343; Same v. Louisiana, Id. 10,344; Same v. St. Louis, Id. 10,345.

§ 2. Management and conduct of business.
A contract for the wharfage of a canal boat is a maritime contract.—The Kate Tremaine, Case No. 7,622.

A recovery cannot be had for an entire contract price where the vessel was not at the dock the whole period.—Earle v. The Alida, Case No. 4,245.

As to the right to occupy wharves in the city of Philadelphia, under the regulations and customs of the port.—Lincoln v. The Volusia, Case No. 8,357.

In Philadelphia, wharf owners have a right to use their wharfs for the unloading of their own vessels to the exclusion of others.—The Volusia, Case No. 16,992.

A usage for wharfingers to accept goods arriving at their wharves, as agents for the consignees, is not binding on the consignees.—The Middlesex, Case No. 9,533.

§ 3. Wharfage—Right in general.
Wharfage is the use of a wharf by a vessel for the loading or unloading of goods or passengers. Mere anchorage at a wharf is not wharfage.—The Gem, Case No. 5,303.

Act La. March 6, 1869, does not confer upon the railroad company or those claiming under it the right to collect wharfage dues from vessels, etc., landing at the levee front of its riparian property.—Ellerman v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., Case No. 4,382.

A lease giving the lessee "the sole and exclusive right to use a public wharf" for his ferryboat does not authorize the collection of a toll for wharfage.—Russel v. The Empire State, Case No. 12,145.

Where libelant is the owner of a part of a wharf, he can recover as wharfage only his proportionate share of the statutory rate.—The City of Hartford, Case No. 2,751.

A large steamship, while at the end of her pier, with her ends lapping the piers on either side, while waiting for slack water to enter her regular berth, put out a bow-line for better security. Held, that she was not "made fast to" the pier, within the New York wharfage act.—The Cornwall, Case No. 3,249.

A wharf owner whose wharf was used as a free public highway held entitled to the regular wharfage for goods carried over the wharf to a vessel lying at another wharf, 400 feet distant.—The J. H. Starin, Case No. 7,320.

A vessel which makes fast to two distinct landing places must pay wharfage for each under Act N. Y. May 21, 1875.—The Virginia Rulon, Case No. 16,974.

The liability of a canal boat for wharfage under Act N. Y. May 21, 1875, and the validity of such act, which discriminates between vessels of different classes engaged in different occupations.—The John M. Welch, Case No. 7,359.

§ 4. —— Amount.
The wharfinger, under Act N. Y. 1875, is entitled to full rates for the use of a stage berth.—The Francesca T., Case No. 5,030.

N. Y. Act May 6, 1870, fixing rates of wharfage and providing penalties in double wharfage for nonpayment is not unconstitutional.—The Ann Ryan, Case No. 428.

A vessel propelled by steam power, designed for the sole purpose of towing boats on the canals, while in the process of construction, is a canal boat, but is not engaged in navigating the canal, within the exception in Act N. Y. May 6, 1870, fixing rates of wharfage.—The Vermont, Case No. 16,917.

An Erie canal boat employed about New York harbor is not a boat "navigating the canals of this state" within Act N. Y. May 6, 1870.—The Ann Ryan, Case No. 428.

The presentation of a bill made out in English to the mate, a foreigner who cannot read it, the wharfinger agreeing to refer it to the master, is not such a demand of payment as Act N. Y. 1875, requires to entitle to double rates.—The Francesca T., Case No. 5,030.

§ 5. —— Actions.
The liability for wharfage of an agent to whom a vessel is consigned, created by a state law (Laws N. Y. 1873, p. 430), is maritime in its character, and enforceable in admiralty.—Atlantic Dock Co. v. Wenberg, Case No. 622.

Admiralty has jurisdiction in rem of a claim for double wharfage under Act N. Y. May 6, 1870, for leaving the wharf without paying wharfage due.—The Ann Ryan, Case No. 428.

Vessel not allowed to set off, against wharfage, damages for delay in loading by the wharfinger.—The Francesca T., Case No. 5,030.

§ 6. —— Liens and enforcement.
A wharfinger has a lien on a vessel under the common law for wharfage.—Johnson v. The McDonough, Case No. 7,395.

The wharfinger loses his lien where he parts with possession of the vessel.—Russel v. The Asa R. Swift, Case No. 12,144.

Where a vessel, removed from a wharf secretly or wrongfully, is afterwards brought back without fraud or force, the lien of the wharfinger is revived.—Johnson v. The McDonough, Case No. 7,395.

And this is so though the vessel has been levied upon in the meantime by the marshal.—Johnson v. The McDonough, Case No. 7,395.

There is no lien for wharfage when there is a personal agreement between the wharfinger and shipowner as to the rate of wharfage.—New York Mail Steamship Co. v. The Baltic, Case No. 10,213.

Query, whether a personal contract for wharfage, made with the shipowner, is a waiver of the wharfinger's lien.—Ex parte Lewis, Case No. 8,310.

The lessee of a wharf is entitled (in Pennsylvania) to a lien for wharfage upon vessels using the wharf.—Earle v. The Alida, Case No. 4,245.

A lien arises under the maritime law for wharfage to a vessel in a foreign port.—Ex parte Lewis, Case No. 8,310; United Hydraulic Cotton-Press Co. v. The Alexander McNeil, Id. 14,404.

A wharfinger, having a lien for wharfage on a vessel under arrest on legal process, cannot enforce his lien by detention of the vessel, but must apply to the court for its allowance.—The Phebe, Case No. 11,065.

A lien for wharfage arising under the common law is not enforceable in admiralty.—Delaware River Storage Co. v. The Thomas, Case No. 3,769.

No lien arises under the maritime law for wharfage to a domestic vessel.—Russel v. The Asa R. Swift, Case No. 12,144; The Gem, Id. 5,303; Squires v. The Charlotte Vanderbilt, Id. 13,271; Earle v. The Alida, Id. 4,245. CONTRA, see The Kate Tremaine, Case No. 7,622; The Ann Ryan, Id. 428.

A lien given by the local law for wharfage to a domestic vessel is not enforceable in admiralty.—Russel v. The Asa R. Swift, Case No. 12,144; The Gem, Id. 5,303. CONTRA, see The Ann Ryan, Case No. 428.

There is a lien on a vessel under Act N. Y. May 21, 1875, for double wharfage, where she leaves a wharf without paying the wharfage due, which is enforceable in admiralty.—The Virginia Rulon, Case No. 16,974.

§ 7. Injuries to vessels or cargoes.
Wharf owners are liable for damages suffered by a vessel lawfully using their wharf for defects in the bottom, known to them, and not to the master of the vessel.—Sawyer v. Oakman, Cases Nos. 12,402, 12,404.

Cases stated in which fees paid for surveys of injured vessels are allowed as part of the recovery for injuries caused by negligence.—Sawyer v. Oakman, Case No. 12,402.

The mere fact of insufficiency of water in a berth does not show fault on the part of the wharfinger that renders him liable to the vessel for damage or delay.—The Francesca T., Case No. 5,030.

A direction by the wharfinger who is consignee of the cargo to place the vessel in the dock is not equivalent to a notification that the water is deep enough at all times to float the vessel.—Nelson v. Phœnix Chemical Works, Case No. 10,113.

The master must ascertain that the depth of water in the dock is sufficient for the draught of his vessel. The wharfinger does not impliedly warrant the depth.—Nelson v. Phœnix Chemical Works, Case No. 10,113.

But the wharfinger must inform the master as to inequalities in the surface of the bottom when material to the safety of the vessel.—Nelson v. Phœnix Chemical Works, Case No. 10,113.

Under what circumstances the owner of a wharf must notify the master of a vessel about to enter of the condition of the bottom alongside.—Sawyer v. Oakman, Case No. 12,402.

I. NATURE AND EXTENT OF TESTAMENTARY POWER.

§ 1. Restrictions as to charitable devises or bequests.

A devise for the purpose of establishing a female school, not subject to denominational control, is not within the prohibition of devises to religious or ecclesiastical corporations, or for their use, or for the purpose of being given or appropriated to charitable uses. Code Ga. 1857, art. 55, p. 302.—Peters v. Bowman, Case No. 11,029.

A legacy to or for the use or support of a minister of the Gospel, as such, or to or for the use or support of a religious denomination, is void by the bill of rights of Maryland.—Newton v. Carbery, Case No. 10,190.

A devise which increases the income of an incorporated society beyond the sum which it is allowed by law to take and hold is not void.—Jones v. Habersham, Case No. 7,465.

§ 2. Omission of children.

Grandchildren of testator born before the date of the will, to whose father a life estate was given with remainder to certain charitable uses, held to have been intentionally omitted from the will. Gen. St. Mass. 1860, c. 92, § 25.—Loring v. Marsh, Case No. 8,515.

Rev. St. Mass. 1835, c. 62, § 21, providing for the case of a descendant omitted from the provisions of a will, is inapplicable to wills made in execution of a power of appointment.—Blagge v. Miles, Case No. 1,479.

II. TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

§ 3. What constitutes capacity.

The testator should appear to have had a sound disposing mind and memory; that is, that he was capable of making his will, with an understanding of what he was doing.—Harrison v. Rowan, Case No. 6,141.

A man may be capable of disposing by will, and yet incapable, by reason of infirmity, of making a contract, or of managing his estate.—Harrison v. Rowan, Case No. 6,141.

Whether a testator had a sound and disposing mind is to be determined by finding whether his mind and memory were sufficiently sound to enable him to understand the business in which he was engaged at the time of executing the will. The only time to be looked to is the time of the execution of the instrument.—Stevens v. Vancleve, Case No. 13,412.

§ 4. Married women.

At common law a will by a married woman disposing of her freehold estate is void.—Picquet v. Swan, Case No. 11,133.

In the absence of consent on the part of her husband, a wife cannot dispose of her personal property by will during his lifetime.—Hines v. Gordon, Case No. 18,302.

§ 5. Evidence.

The presumption is in favor of the sanity of the testator, and the burden of proof is on the party questioning it. Contra, if a previous state of insanity has been established.—Stevens v. Vancleve, Case No. 13,412.

A witness may depose as to what he thought of the testator's sanity, at or about the time the will was made; but not as to what the witness had declared upon the subject to others.—Harrison v. Rowan, Case No. 6,141.

In determining the soundness of a testator's mind the court will look rather to the facts on which witnesses have formed their opinions than to the opinions themselves, but will not entirely disregard the opinions.—Newton v. Carbery, Case No. 10,189.

On the question of testator's mental capacity the court will look to his substantial business acts, more than to his conversation, or occasional doings, not connected with business.—Turner v. Hand, Case No. 14,257.

III. CONTRACTS TO DEVISE OR BEQUEATH.

§ 6. Agreement to make mutual wills.

Under an agreement in writing to make mutual wills, neither party can make a will without notice to the other.—Robinson v. Mandell, Case No. 11,959.

IV. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

§ 7. Form and contents of instrument.

Any instrument may constitute a will which appears to be intended to operate after the death of the one making it, and not before.—Grattan v. Appleton, Case No. 5,707.

A devise is never construed absolutely void for uncertainty except from necessity.—Jackson v. Kip, Case No. 7,138.

A devise "in aid of the erection of a new Catholic church in Georgetown" is void for uncertainty.—Newton v. Carbery, Case No. 10,190.

§ 8. Execution and attestation.

Where a will of personalty is defectively executed, it must appear that testator intended it to operate as his will, or that he was prevented from completing it by being overtaken by sickness or other casualty.—In re McIntire, Case No. 8,823a.

No defect in the execution of a will conveying land can be supplied by parol proof.—In re McIntire, Case No. 8,823a.

It is not necessary to the validity of a will of personal property that it should have any date, that it should be in the handwriting of the testator, or signed by him, or have any subscribing witnesses, provided it was drawn at his request, and according to his dictation.—Darrell v. Brooke, Case No. 18,287.

A will is legally executed where the hand of a testator, by his consent, is guided by another, and he afterwards acknowledges the will.—Stevens v. Vancleve, Case No. 13,412.

Proof of forgery, derived from knowledge of handwriting, will not prevail against positive and unimpeached evidence of actual execution. —Turner v. Hand, Case No. 14,257.

A will not required by law to be sealed is good without a seal.—Piatt v. McCullough, Case No. 11,113.

A will may be republished by the testator's verbal declarations, so as to include property acquired after its original execution. Act Pa. 1833.—Dike v. Kuhns, Case No. 3,907.

A codicil confirming a will is in law a republication of the will so as to pass real estate intermediately purchased. — Brownell v. De Wolf, Case No. 2,037.

A will concerning land in Pennsylvania, no matter where made, must be proved by two witnesses.—Hylton v. Brown, Case No. 6,981.

The custom in California under the Mexican government authorizing two witnesses to a will, operated as a repeal of the law requiring three witnesses.—Adams v. De Cook, Case No. 51.

The title of office added by a ministerial officer attesting a will may be disregarded, and he be considered an attesting witness.—Adams v. De Cook, Case No. 51.

A will cannot be proved by witnesses who were appointed by a testator as guardians to testator's infant children.—Williams v. Wells, Case No. 17,746.

Witnesses ignorant of language in which a will is drawn, not interpreted, are incompetent. —Adams v. De Cook, Case No. 51.

The person to whom a fee is given by testator if she should survive his daughter dying without issue then living, is not a competent witness.—Harrison v. Rowan, Case No. 6,141.

§ 9. Holographic wills.
The month alone is sufficient to show the dating of an holographic will, under Civ. Code La., requiring that such a will shall be written, dated, and signed by the testator.—Gaines v. Lizardi, Case No. 5,175.

§ 10. Nuncupative wills.
From 1676, when the act of 29 Car. II. was enacted, no nuncupative will can, under any circumstances, pass real estate.—In re Kelby's Will, Case No. 18,306.

In the District of Columbia there must be not less than three witnesses to a nuncupative will where the amount of personal property exceeds £30.—In re Kelby's Will, Case No. 18,306.

§ 11. Fraud and undue influence.
The devisee must show that the will was read or that its contents were known to testator, where it appears that he was blind or incapable of reading, or if a reasonable ground be laid for believing that it was not read to him, or that there was fraud in the transaction. —Harrison v. Rowan, Case No. 6,141.

Declarations of an intention to alter a will, and of being prevailed upon not to do so, are inadmissible to show that testator was fraudulently prevented from revoking the will.—Smith v. Fenner, Case No. 13,046.

Declarations of the testator before and at the time of making the will, and afterwards, if so near as to be part of the res gestæ, are admissible to show fraud in obtaining the will. But declarations at any distance of time after execution are inadmissible.—Smith v. Fenner, Case No. 13,046.

Declarations of testator, after the alleged making of a will, as to the disposition of his property, tending to show a want of knowledge of the existence of the will, held admissible upon the question of forgery.—Turner v. Hand, Case No. 14,257.

The influence of the general doctrines of the church of which testator was a member is not such undue influence as will justify the avoidance of his will.—Newton v. Carbery, Case No. 10,189.

§ 12. Revocation.
Evidence as to the execution and destruction by Daniel Clark of a will making his daughter, Myra Clark, his universal legatee, reviewed.—Gaines v. Lizardi, Case No. 5,175.

An alteration of a pecuniary legacy in the will, by the legatee or a stranger, does not avoid the will as to other bequests.—Smith v. Fenner, Case No. 13,046.

A legacy to a granddaughter by codicil, "in lieu" of a devise in the will to her mother, since deceased, is a revocation of the original devise to the mother.—Brownell v. De Wolf, Case No. 2,037.

V. PROBATE, ESTABLISHMENT, AND ANNULMENT.

§ 13. Probate in general.
The common-law distinction between the probate of wills of realty and wills of personalty does not obtain in California.—Adams v. De Cook, Case No. 51.

Rev. St. Me. c. 62, § 25, in relation to the probate of wills, is merely affirmative of the law, as it antecedently stood.—Ex parte Fuller, Case No. 5,147.

A will is not effective until probated in the proper court.—Baldwin v. Wylie, Case No. 18,228.

An unprobated will executed in California under the Mexican government is not a nullity, and its due execution may be proved to sustain title to property thereunder.—Adams v. De Cook, Case No. 51.

Republished wills and codicils have the effect of new wills, and are to be probated in the same way.—Musser v. Curry, Case No. 9,973.

§ 14. Probate or establishment of lost or destroyed wills.
Code Prac. La. arts. 942, 943, relating to proving wills, do not apply to lost wills.—Gaines v. Lizardi, Case No. 5,175.

The presumption arising from the failure to find a will proved to have been executed by the testator is that it was destroyed, animo cancellandi; but such presumption may be overcome by circumstantial evidence.—Southworth v. Adams, Case No. 13,194.

In a suit to establish a lost will, secondary evidence of its existence and contents is admissible.—Southworth v. Adams, Case No. 13,194.

§ 15. Probate of foreign wills.
The will of a feme covert, under a power reserved in a postnuptial settlement, must be proved in the courts of probate of the country of her residence before it can be acted upon elsewhere.—Picquet v. Swan, Case No. 11,133.

§ 16. Limitations.
Civ. Code La. art. 3540, limiting the time to sue to annul a will, is not applicable to a suit in which the will is relied upon as a muniment of title by a party out of possession.—Gaines v. Lizardi, Case No. 5,175.

§ 17. Who may contest validity of will.
Parties to a suit in equity in the federal court, who are not barred by prescription, waiver, estoppel, or some other supervening cause, may contest the validity of a will involving the question of title to property by answer, or by proceedings for revocation in the probate court. —Fuentes v. Gaines, Case No. 5,145.

§ 18. Evidence.
On an issue as to the validity of a will, evidence for defendant that plaintiff purloined a former will of the testator is inadmissible, there being no purpose to prove the contents of the former will.—Stevens v. Vancleve, Case No. 13,412.

General declarations of testator applicable to any will are not competent to prove execution of a particular will.—Adams v. De Cook, Case No. 51.

§ 19. Hearing or trial.
On an issue devisavit vel non, the party contesting the will has the right to open and close. —Carrico v. Kirby, Case No. 2,442.

No exception can be taken at nisi prius to the opinion of the judge who tries an issue of devisavit vel non.—Harrison v. Rowan, Case No. 6,141.

§ 20. Judgment and decree.
When the validity of a will is brought in question incidentally on question of title to property, it is open for investigation in any court in which the title may be litigated.—Fuentes v. Gaines, Case No. 5,145.

The Massachusetts probate courts have complete jurisdiction over the probate of wills of both real and personal estate, and its decrees are conclusive upon all parties, and not reexaminable in any other court.—Tompkins v. Tompkins, Case No. 14,091.

A like effect is given to the probate of a will by the Rhode Island supreme court.—Tompkins v. Tompkins, Case No. 14,091; Spencer v. Spencer, Id. 13,233.

The probate of a will, in Louisiana, is not conclusive against parties in possession of property which is sought to be recovered from them by virtue of it, unless they were parties litigant in the probate proceedings.—Fuentes v. Gaines, Case No. 5,145.

The proceedings of the Pennsylvania orphans' court, upon the offer for probate of a will as to personal property, and the decree of the prerogative court, refusing the probate, are not admissible upon an issue to determine the validity of the will to pass real estate.—Harrison v. Rowan, Case No. 6,141.

§ 21. Review.
On appeal from the sentence of the orphans' court sustaining a will, the circuit court of the District of Columbia cannot inquire into the validity of any particular legacy.—Newton v. Carbery, Case No. 10,189.

§ 22. Operation and effect.
A derivative title to personalty may be proved under a foreign will without probate here.—Trecothick v. Austin, Case No. 14,164.

A will of lands, in Rhode Island, cannot be admitted as evidence of a devise, unless it has been duly probated.—Moore v. Greene, Case No. 9,763.

Where a suit brings incidentally in question the title to land held under devise in another state, the will need not be probated in the state where the suit is brought, before it can be used as evidence of title.—Slack v. Walcott, Case No. 12,932.

Under the statute of Indiana, a will made and recorded in any other state, according to the laws of such state, is valid to pass lands or other property in Indiana; and a copy duly certified from such record is made evidence.—O'Brien v. Woody, Case No. 10,398.

VI. CONSTRUCTION.

§ 23. General rule—What law governs.
As to the effect of the domicile of testator in the construction of his will.—Packer v. Nixon, Case No. 10,653; Grattan v. Appleton, Id. 5,707.

A will is to be construed under the law as existing at the time of testator's death.—Adams v. Wilbur, Case No. 70.

§ 23a. —— Evidence to aid in construction.
Parol evidence is not admissible to affect the construction of a will, but it is admissible where its introduction is required by considerations extrinsic of the will, and which, necessarily, depend upon such evidence.—Gallego v. Chevallie, Case No. 5,200.

Instructions given to a solicitor for the preparation of a will are not admissible to control or contradict its plain terms, nor to supply an omission, unless there is something on the face of the instrument to connect them therewith.—Warner v. Brinton, Case No. 17,179.

§ 24. —— Intention of testator.
The intention of the testator which is controlling in the construction of a will must be collected from the whole will.—Jackson v. Kip, Case No. 7,138; Nightingale v. Sheldon, Id. 10,265.

Testator's intention, when clearly expressed, will control technical words and set phrases.—Blagge v. Miles, Case No. 1,479.

§ 25. —— Presumptions.
Technical words will be presumed to be used in the sense the law has appropriated to them, unless a contrary intention is manifest.—Jackson v. Kip, Case No. 7,138; Nightingale v. Sheldon, Id. 10,265.

§ 26. —— Particular words and phrases.
The word "estate" will apply to real or personal estate, or to both, according to the manner in which it is used in reference to the respective clauses of the will.—Stump v. Deneale, Case No. 13,560.

The word "or" may be read "and" when it becomes necessary for the purpose of carrying into effect the clear and obvious intention of testator.—Jackson v. Kip, Case No. 7,138.

§ 27. —— Ambiguity and uncertainty.
Where a will is ambiguous in its words, and contains no reference to anything which can make it certain, or on its face admits of no construction, it is void.—Warner v. Brinton, Case No. 17,179.

§ 28. Designation of devisees and legatees.
"Issue" prima facie means heirs of the body, and refers to all lineal descendants.—Whartenby v. Daniel, Case No. 17,479.

"Issue," in a will penned with great regard to technical words, includes all direct descendants, and is not limited to children.—Maxwell v. Call, Case No. 9,323.

A general testamentary disposition of all one's "estate, real and personal," to his "heir at law," by one who has no realty, is not a disposition to the next of kin.—Aspden's Estate, Case No. 589.

"Heir at law," when used in context as a synonym with "lawful heir," does not create an ambiguity, and must be held to mean in Pennsylvania, where testator was technically domiciled, though resident most of his life in England, the person on whom the law of Pennsylvania casts an intestate's estate at the time of his death, though testator evidently meant otherwise.—Aspden's Estate, Case No. 589.

A devise to W. as bishop of the Roman Catholic Church, or his successor, in trust for the benefit of the community attached thereto in which testatrix should die a member, held, not a good bequest to the "Sisters of St. Joseph," as beneficiaries, and to K., successor to W., as trustee.—Kain v. Gibboney, Case No. 7,595.

§ 29. Survivorship, representation, and substitution.

Under a devise to the children of A., to be divided among them when they arrive of age, all children living when the eldest arrives of age, though born after the death of testator, take a share, and the shares of those dying in the meantime fall into the general residuum.—Moffit v. Varden, Case No. 9,689.

The revocation by codicil as to one child, without a devise over, of her share of a devise to "all surviving children in equal divisions," does not pass such share to the other surviving children.—Brownell v. De Wolf, Case No. 2,037.

A devise to "Zenas K. or his heirs; N. B. Ezra K. is to have a double portion of my estate more than Zenas K.'s other children,"—is a devise to Zenas K. and his heirs, but, in case of Zenas K.'s death before testator's, to such of his children as shall be living at testator's death, Ezra to have a double portion. —Kinsey v. Kinsey, Case No. 7,828.

Testator bequeathed a certain sum of money to a person in trust to invest in lands in the names of six grandchildren, to be conveyed and vested in them in fee simple, and, in case of the death of any of them, the share of the child so dying should go to the survivors. Held, that the will had reference only to a death during the lifetime of testator.—Wood v. Denny, Case No. 17,942.

Under a devise directly to the children of testator's brother and sister, the devisees take per capita, and not per stirpes.—Moffit v. Varden, Case No. 9,689.

§ 30. Description of property.

A bequest of "all my estate, and the proceeds thereof, to my daughters," gives a married woman, a residuary legatee, the proceeds of the sale, and not a share of stocks constituting the residue, disencumbered from the marital rights of the husband.—Canby v. McLear, Case No. 2,378.

Bags, bottles, and casks, containing coffee, wine, and brandy for current use, do not pass under a bequest of all "furniture and other household effects," but go with their contents, as incidents thereto.—Foxall v. McKenney, Case No. 5,016.

Proceeds of mortgages identified in lands will pass under a devise of "proceeds" of such mortgages where they were foreclosed before testator's death.—American Bible Soc. v. Holman, Case No. 291.

A Kentucky will, by which testator bequeathed "every part of my estate, of every kind whatsoever, to be equally divided (by sale or otherwise, as may seem best) between" his wife and children and their heirs, forever, held not to authorize the executors to divide or sell real property in Ohio.—Dunlap v. Pyle, Case No. 4,163.

A determination that certain premises are not within the operation of a will may be made without questioning its validity or its probate.—Coulson v. Holmes, Case No. 3,274.

A devise of a mill with appurtenances conveys, not the buildings merely, but the land under and adjoining which is necessary to the use, and is actually used with it.—Whitney v. Olney, Case No. 17,595.

A good title acquired after the date of a devise of land by a testator who had possession with claim of ownership, which might have ripened into a good title, is not merged therein so as to pass the land as land acquired prior to the date of the devise.—Girard v. Philadelphia, Case No. 5,459.

A will does not take effect upon an after-acquired estate; and any alteration of the estate of the testator in the premises after a specific devise works a revocation of the devise. —Coulson v. Holmes, Case No. 3,274.

The effect of an introductory clause, and of the words "remainder" and "residue," in the construction of a will. — Ferguson v. Zepp, Case No. 4,742.

A devise of "all the residue of my estate, of every name and kind," held sufficient to pass real estate.—Blagge v. Miles, Case No. 1,479.

Devise of property in Third street may be explained to mean property in Fourth street, where testator had no property in Third street. —Allen v. Lyons, Case No. 227.

§ 31. Nature of estates and interests created—Fee simple.

A devise for life to testator's wife, then to his son, passes the fee by implication to the son.—King v. Ackerman, Case No. 7,786.

A devisee takes a fee by implication where the will charges him personally with the payment of legacies.—King v. Ackerman, Case No. 7,786.

It is not competent for the purpose of preventing a devisee from taking a fee by implication, where he is personally charged with payment of legacies, to show the value of other real estate expressly devised to him in fee.—King v. Ackerman, Case No. 7,786.

A devise expressly for life or in tail cannot be enlarged into a fee by other words of doubtful import.—Willis v. Bucher, Case No. 17,769.

Under a devise as follows: "As to my worldly goods, I devise to my wife, A., all and singular my goods and effects, both real and personal, of what kind soever, after my debts and funeral expenses are paid,"—held, that the wife took a fee simple.—Ferguson v. Zepp, Case No. 4,742.

Under a law giving all the annual income of testator's estate to his wife during her widowhood, to be equally divided between her and his son, held, that the fee did not pass, and the title went to his heirs at law.—Pryor v. Dunkle, Case No. 11,458.

A devise upon certain conditions held to carry a fee when the conditions were performed.—McCoun v. Lay, Case No. 8,729.

§ 32. —— General devise or bequest with power of disposal.

A power of disposal by will does not enlarge an interest in the donee of the power beyond what is expressly limited.—Ward v. Amory, Case No. 17,146.

A devise of a fee to trustees and their heirs, with authority to sell, is consistent with an executory bequest with a fee to others after a life estate.—Ward v. Amory, Case No. 17,146.

An express limitation in a bequest or devise will not be held to be controlled by implications drawn from other provisions in the will, if the latter, by any fair intendment, can be reconciled with the former.—Ward v. Amory, Case No. 17,146.

§ 33. —— Conditional fee.

A devise over to the survivor or survivors of such as should die without issue, in a case of devises to several grandchildren, held to cut down a fee simple absolute, previously devised, to a fee simple conditional, or to an estate tail.—Crane v. Cowell, Case No. 3,353.

A devise, "If either of my sons, A. and B., should happen to die without any lawful heirs of their own, then the share of him who may first decease shall accrue to the other survivor and his heirs," held to give a fee simple conditional, and not a fee tail.—Abbott v. Essex Co., Case No. 11.

§ 34. —— Estates tail.

Under a devise to A. for life, remainder to her son B. and to his children in fee simple, but, in case B. die without children, to her son C. and to his children in fee simple, held, that B. took a fee tail with remainder to C. on an indefinite failure of issue of B.—Parkman v. Bowdoin, Case No. 10,763.

A devise to an only daughter and her husband, "to them, their heirs begotten of their bodies, or assigns, forever, or, for want of such heirs or assigns, then to the heirs begotten by, or either of them, and to their assigns forever," gives an estate tail to the daughter and her husband, which, in the event of their death without issue, is to go to the heirs of the body of the survivor.—Wright v. Scott, Case No. 18,092.

A devise to A., and, if he die without heir or issue, the estate to go to B., his brother, gives an estate tail to A. by implication.—Willis v. Bucher, Case No. 17,769.

A devise of lands to be held by the executors until the last born grandchild should become of age, then to be divided among all grandchildren per capita, the issue of those dead to take per stirpes, rents and profits to be divided among the devisees in the meantime, does not create an estate in fee tail.—McArthur v. Allen, Case No. 8,659.

§ 35. —— Rule in Shelley's Case.

The rule in Shelley's Case held not to apply where there were qualifying and explanatory expressions showing clearly a different intent. —McArthur v. Allen, Case No. 8,659.

To take a case out of the rule in Shelley's Case, the intent of the testator to change the primary meaning of the word "issue," and employ it in an unusual sense, must manifestly appear in the will itself.—Whartenby v. Daniel, Case No. 17,479.

The rule in Shelley's Case is not applicable to a devise of an equitable estate for life to the ancestor, and a legal estate after the termination of the life estate to the heirs.—Ward v. Amory, Case No. 17,146.

§ 36. —— Life estate.

A devise to a person for life with the remainder to his issue and heirs of the issue, does not give a mere life estate to the first taker unless there are also in the devise of the remainder words of distributive modification.—Whartenby v. Daniel, Case No. 17,479.

Where a gross sum in debts, etc., is charged by the will on the estate devised, and not on the devisee, the devisee in a general devise to him takes only an estate for life. But where the charge is on him personally, in respect of the devise, he takes a fee.—Ferguson v. Zepp, Case No. 4,742.

A devise of two houses to a daughter, the mother to be permitted to "occupy and dwell" in the better one during her life, held not a grant to the mother of a beneficial interest, but a mere permission to reside in one house.—Gardener v. Wagner, Case No. 5,218.

Where a person, having permission by will merely to reside in a house, leased the same, held, that her executors should account for the net income for six years back.—Gardener v. Wagner, Case No. 5,218.

A devise to A. for her support during life, and at her decease to become the property of B., not to be subject to his disposal, but to descend to his children free and unincumbered; but, in case he has none living at his death, to become the property of C. in fee simple, or of her heirs if she be not then living,—construed.—Leavitt v. Logan, Case No. 8,173.

Under a gift of the residuum to testator's wife "provided that she has no lawful issue," followed by a gift of all his property to her, "by her freely to be possessed and enjoyed," held, that the wife took only a life estate.—Page v. Wright, Case No. 10,669.

A devise to "A. and to his male children, lawfully begotten of his body, and their heirs, forever, to be equally divided amongst them and their heirs forever," passes a life estate to A., with a contingent remainder in fee to his children.—Sisson v. Seabury, Case No. 12,913.

§ 37. —— Devise or bequest for life with power of disposal.

Construction of will devising life estate with the remainders over as to provisions for the disposal of the estate.—Waldron v. Chasteney, Case No. 17,058.

A general devise of all testator's property for "life, and to do with as she sees proper before her death," held to give a life estate in land with power of disposal, in fee during her life.—Brandt v. Virginia Coal & Iron Co., Case No. 1,814.

§ 38. —— Devises in lieu of dower.

Under Rev. St. Ill. 1833, p. 624, declaring that any provision in the will bars dower, the amount must be such as to afford a reasonable presumption that it was given in lieu of dower.—United States v. Duncan, Case No. 15,002.

§ 39. Vested estates and interests.

A will giving all testator's property to his children share and share alike, but postponing distribution until the majority of the youngest child, and providing that the children should have college educations chargeable to the estate and to a sufficient allowance after majority until distribution, held to give a vested interest payable at a future day.—Lenox v. Lenox, Case No. 8,246a.

The title to property willed to executors to convert into a fund, and to keep and distribute, etc., remains in them until actual distribution; and, where a discretion is to be exercised, the ultimate distributee has no previous vested interest. —In re Jones, Case No. 7,444.

Under a devise to testator's wife, for life, remainder to his daughters A. and B., their heirs and assigns, but, in case they should die without issue, then to their sisters C. and D., held that, at common law, A. and B. took joint estates for life with several remainders in tail to their issue, which, under the statute of Rhode Island, was turned into a tenancy in common, and that the several estates tail in possession vested in them. —Lillibridge v. Adie, Case No. 8,350.

Under a devise to testator's wife until his son P. should attain the age of 21 years, then to him and his heirs, but, if he should die before attaining such age or without lawful issue, then to the testator's heir male in fee simple, P. takes an immediate vested estate in fee simple, liable to be defeated by his death before 21, but indefeasible, on attaining such age.—Arnold v. Buffum, Case No. 554.

The residuary estate was directed to be divided between certain persons according to their several specific legacies. Held, that the residuary legacies vested on the death of testator.—Reading v. Blackwell, Case No. 11,612.

Devise to executor for use of wife for life, remainder to persons named, gives vested interest to remainder-man, which will pass to his assignee.—Beecher v. Gillespie, Case No. 1,224.

Under a devise to testator's wife, "during her widowhood," and, in case of her marriage, the whole of the estate to be given to testator's daughter and her heirs, forever, the daughter takes a vested remainder in fee.—Farmers' Bank v. Hooff, Case No. 4,659.

§ 40. Contingent estates and interests.

Under a devise to A. "and if he shall die, without an heir, before he shall arrive at the age of 21 years," then to be equally divided among his brothers and sisters or their heirs, held, that A. took a fee simple, with an executory devise over to his brothers and sisters.—Lippett v. Hopkins, Case No. 8,380.

Where a bequest is to a daughter, with provision that her husband should have the income after her death, and on his death the property to go to her children, the limitation in favor of the children terminates on the death of the daughter's husband in her lifetime.—Clarke v. Johnston, Case No. 2,856.

Under a devise to S. "and to his male heir, * * * and to his heirs and assigns forever," and, in case of the death of S. without male heir, to O. in fee, held, that S. took an estate tail, with remainder to O. on indefinite failure of the issue of S.—Osborne v. Shrieve, Case No. 10,598.

Will construed as an executory devise to W. in tail, after an estate for life in himself, remainder in fee to his children living at his death, which executory devise in tail is to take effect on the contingency of his dying without children living at the time of his death.—Murdock v. Shackelford, Case No. 9,937.

A devise "in fee" to testator's granddaughter, "but, in case of her death without issue," then over, held a good executory devise, which took effect upon her death without issue.—Jackson v. Kip, Case No. 7,138.

In limitations of legal estates, where a remainder of inheritance is limited in contingency by way of use or by devise, the inheritance in the meantime remains in the grantor or his heirs, or in the heirs of the testator, until the contingency happens to take it out of them.—Vint v. King, Case No. 16,950; Findlay v. Vint, Id.; Allen v. Same, Id.; Sheffey v. Same, Id.

§ 41. Conditions and restrictions.
Testator may provide that the estate of the devisee on his becoming a bankrupt shall determine and go somewhere else.—Sanford v. Lackland, Case No. 12,312; Nichols v. Eaton, Id. 10,241.

A condition annexed to a devise that it shall not be liable for the devisee's debts is invalid.—Sanford v. Lackland, Case No. 12,312.

A bequest of slaves on condition that they be not carried out of the state or sold, in either of which events said slaves are to be free, is a conditional bequest of freedom, and valid as such.—Ash v. Williams, Case No. 573.

§ 42. Estates in trust and powers—Estate of trustee.
Under a devise "to my executor herein named in trust," held, that the executor's relation to the trust estate was the same as if he had not been named as executor in the will.—Parsons v. Lyman, Case No. 10,780.

Under a devise to A., on condition of his intermarriage with the unborn daughter of certain persons, in trust for his eldest son by such marriage, where such persons die without the birth of a daughter, A. takes no beneficial estate, but an estate in trust, and the resulting trust remains in the heirs, which vested at the time of the testator's death, and was then subject to alienation.—Vint v. King, Case No. 16,950; Findlay v. Vint, Id.; Allen v. Same, Id.; Sheffey v. Same, Id.

Under a devise to testator's wife of all his property, except outstanding debts, which he directs that she shall collect as executor and give to three persons as thereafter to be directed by him, where he dies without making such direction, the wife does not take title under the will to such debts or their proceeds.—Wisner v. Ogden, Case No. 17,914.

A devise to the executor, in trust to apply the rents and income to the support of the widow, with power to sell the estate if the income should not be sufficient, is a devise in fee to the executor, and he is entitled to receive the rents accruing after the death of the wife.—Hardy v. Redman, Case No. 6,061.

Under a devise of real estate to an executor and trustee, in trust to sell and convey it, and distribute the proceeds, the executor, under 1 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 728, § 55, takes no estate in the land, but it descends to the heirs at law, subject to the execution of the power in trust.—Pennoyer v. Shelden, Case No. 10,943; Lindenberger v. Matlack, Id. 8,360.

§ 43. —— Powers of trustee as to use and disposition of property.
Where a partner, by his will, makes his copartner executor, and devises the residue of his estate in trust for certain purposes, and authorizes him to use the property in the business until wanted for distribution, the residue, only, can be used in the business.—In re Clap, Case No. 2,783.

A bequest to trustees of the use of testator's "property" in a certain banking business held to include the use of slaves employed therein.—Foxall v. McKenney, Case No. 5,016.

Under a power in a trustee to sell land "when the major part of my children shall recommend and advise the same," the consent of the major part of those living at the time of the sale is sufficient.—Sohier v. Williams, Case No. 13,159.

§ 43a. Actions to construe.
Upon a bill to obtain the construction of a will the court will not allow parties whose estates and interests under a will are sought to be destroyed, on the ground of alienage and illegitimacy, to be represented by trustees, but will give them an opportunity to come in. Rule 49. —Cross v. De Valle, Case No. 3,431.

VII. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF DEVISEES AND LEGATEES.

§ 44. Acceptance of devise or bequest.
In the absence of an unequivocal act of disclaimer or renunciation, the consent of the devisee will be presumed where the devise is plainly for his benefit.—Ex parte Fuller, Case No. 5,147.

A mere nonpossession of real estate by the devisee under a devise, short of the period prescribed by the statute of limitations to bar a right of entry, does not amount to a positive renunciation or disclaimer of the devise, or to proof thereof.—Webster v. Gilman, Case No. 17,335.

A renunciation or disclaimer by a devisee must be evidenced by some solemn act or acknowledgment in writing, or by some open and positive act which will operate as an estoppel.—Webster v. Gilman, Case No. 17,335.

§ 45. When a devise or bequest takes effect.
The title passes to the devisee of real estate at the death of the testator, and the probate of the will relates back to that time.—Ex parte Fuller, Case No. 5,147.

Upon a devise that a slave should be sold for eight years, after which he should be free, the term begins to run from testator's death, or within a reasonable time thereafter.—Bazil v. Kennedy, Case No. 1,151.

§ 46. Time of payment.
Executors may, at their discretion, pay over legacies at any time within the year after testator's decease.—Sullivan v. Winthrop, Case No. 13,600.

§ 47. Property pledged as security for legacy.
Testator directed that a certain legacy be invested in an institution of savings to be paid to the legatee on her marriage or arrival of age, and that all of certain stocks standing in his name should be bound to pay the legacy. Held, that the whole of such stock was pledged as security for the principal legacy, but not for the accruing interest.—Vernon v. D'Wolf, Case No. 16,922.

§ 48. Interest on legacies.
Interest commences on a pecuniary legacy at the expiration of one year from testator's decease, whatever may be the posture of the estate, where not otherwise specified in the will.—Sullivan v. Winthrop, Case No. 13,600.

The cases of infant children and of adopted children under age, not otherwise provided for, are exceptions to such rule.—Sullivan v. Winthrop, Case No. 13,600.

An investment by executors, in the name of a legatee, of a sum less than the whole amount of the legacy, held a payment pro tanto, entitling the legatee to the interest accruing thereon.—Sullivan v. Winthrop, Case No. 13,600.

§ 49. Actions for legacies.
A previous demand for the legacy is not necessary under Code La. art. 1626, where the purpose of the bill is merely to establish the validity of the bequest.—Haines v. Carpenter, Case No. 5,905.

A court of equity will not interfere to declare future rights which may arise under a will.—Cross v. De Valle, Case No. 3,430.

§ 50. Specific legacies.
A bequest of "$20,000 out of the 6 per cent. stock of the corporation of Washington in my name, if so much should remain out of my personal estate after satisfying all previous bequests," is a specific legacy.—Larned v. Adams, Case No. 8,092.

A bequest of corporate stocks, or money in lieu thereof, with power to the executors to change the investment, held not a specific legacy, but liable to contribution on deficiency of assets.—Ladd v. Ladd, Case No. 7,972.

If there be a fund for the payment of debts and legacies, the executor may be compelled to assent to a specific legacy.—Chapman v. Fenwick, Case No. 2,604.

§ 51. Advancements.
An advancement by the testator to a husband, whose wife was an heir, with direction that it be deducted "from the share coming to the family," held should not be deducted from a legacy to the wife.—Gallego v. Chevallie, Case No. 5,-200.

§ 52. Satisfaction.
A conveyance accompanied by a deed of trust in favor of the grantor works a revocation of a previous devise of such property to the grantee. —Coulson v. Holmes, Case No. 3,274.

§ 53. Election—By widow.
The acceptance of a small installment of the income of a trust fund given by will held not a conclusive election to accept the provisions of the will in lieu of dower.—Crocker v. Beal, Case No. 3,396.

Where the widow accepts a devise in lieu of dower, not knowing the extent of the estate, she may renounce under the will, and claim, after the lapse of years.—United States v. Duncan, Case No. 15,002.

Where necessary, she may bring a suit to ascertain the true condition of the estate to enable her to make a proper election.—United States v. Duncan, Case No. 15,002.

§ 54. —— Rights of other devisees and legatees.
On renunciation by the widow, the remainderman takes an immediate estate subject to her dower.—Ladd v. Ladd, Case No. 7,972.

A widow who receives the portion of her husband's estate devised and bequeathed to her is not entitled to a share in the personalty, as to which the husband died intestate.—Reed v. Campbell, Case No. 11,640a.

The renunciation of the provisions in a will by the widow will have no effect on a clause manumitting slaves, where there is sufficient other personal estate to satisfy her claim.—Thompson v. Clarke, Case No. 13,951.

§ 55. Abatement.
A specific legacy will not abate or contribute if there be enough without.—Chapman v. Fenwick, Case No. 2,604.

Payment of general and specific legacies where fund set apart for payment of debts was inadequate, and a sale of the whole estate was directed.—Byrd v. Byrd, Case No. 2,267.

§ 56. Legacies charged on estate in general.
Under the Louisiana Code, a particular legacy is a charge upon the whole estate in preference to all others; it descends to the heir as a personal debt when he takes possession.—Labitut v. Prewett, Case No. 7,962.

A charge of the payment of debts and legacies made upon one to whom an estate is devised is always treated as a charge in rem, as well as in personam, unless the contrary is evident from the language in the will.—Sands v. Champlin, Case No. 12,303.

Annuities charged on real and personal estate will be paid out of personalty if there is sufficient to pay both annuities and legacies not specially charged.—Allen's Heirs v. Allen's Ex'rs, Case No. 242.

Otherwise the legatees will be subrogated to annuitants already paid out of personalty.—Allen's Heirs v. Allen's Ex'rs, Case No. 242.

Where testatrix charged her land and her personalty with her debts and legacies, and emancipated her slaves, and her personal estate was not sufficient without the slaves, but with the real estate was more than sufficient, the slaves were entitled to their freedom.—Chapman v. Fenwick, Case No. 2,604.

§ 57. Charges on land.
The words, "I will, in the first place, that my just debts be paid," charge the realty with the payment of debts.—McCulloch v. McLain, Case No. 8,739.

A devise of real estate "after the payment of debts" is a charge on the real estate.—Chapman v. Fenwick, Case No. 2,604; Wright v. West, Id. 18,102.

The word "condition," annexed to a devise of real estate, construed as a charge upon the real estate devised.—Sands v. Champlin, Case No. 12,303.

Under a devise to a son in fee of two third parts of a certain farm, "he paying all my just debts out of said estate," held, that the land was charged, but a bona fide purchaser was not bound to look to the application of the purchase money.—Gardner v. Gardner, Case No. 5,227.

If the purchase money is unpaid, it may be followed into the hands of the purchaser, and he is liable in equity for its misapplication after notice.—Gardner v. Gardner, Case No. 5,227.

A devise of land to an individual required to pay specific legacies constitutes a charge on the land in the hand of the vendee.—Morancy v. Quarles, Case No. 9,788.

A clause of a will construed as not charging the real estate with the payment of debts.—Stump v. Deneale, Case No. 13,560.

WITNESSES.

I. ATTENDANCE, PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS, AND COMPENSATION.

§ 1. Jurisdiction and power to compel attendance.

A state magistrate cannot issue process for defendant's witnesses, into another state; and in such case the cause must be continued.—United States v. Little, Case No. 15,610.

In New York, defendant in a federal court in a civil case in a trial at common law may be required to appear and be examined as a witness for plaintiff.—Fowler v. Hecker, Case No. 5,001.

The attendance of a witness living within 100 miles, but outside of the District of Columbia, may be compelled by the circuit court of the District.—Gustine v. Ringgold, Case No. 5,877.

Witnesses residing more than 100 miles from the place of trial, and out of the district, cannot be compelled to attend.—Henry v. Ricketts, Case No. 6,386.

§ 2. Persons who may be compelled to attend or testify.

A subpœna may issue to the president to compel his attendance as a witness.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692d.

Members of congress are not exempt from compulsory process to require their attendance as witnesses in behalf of one charged with crime.—United States v. Cooper, Case No. 14,-861.

County court judges are not excused from obeying a subpœna on the ground that the state supreme court judges are holding a nisi prius court in the county.—United States v. Caldwell, Case No. 14,708.

Neither the jurors, nor the officer to whose care they were committed, can be compelled to testify to the fact that the jury separated after the cause was submitted, and before the verdict was agreed upon.—Howard v. Cobb, Case No. 6,755.

Persons who are material as witnesses for a party in a federal court may be compelled to appear, though they are members of the cabinet of the president of the United States.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,342.

§ 3. Mode of compelling attendance—Subpœna, and service thereof.

It is not necessary that the subpœna for witnesses should be served by the marshal.—Cummings v. Akron Cement & Plaster Co., Case No. 3,473; Gordon v. Scott, Id. 5,620; In re Schwartz, Id. 12,502.

The indorsement, by a witness, of "Accepted" on a subpœna never placed in the hands of an officer, will not take the place of service of the subpœna.—Dreskill v. Parish, Cases Nos. 4,075, 4,076.

§ 4. —— Attachment.

The power to issue an attachment to punish a person for failure to obey a subpœna is incident to courts of justice.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,342.

A motion to bring on the trial will take precedence of a motion for an attachment against absent witnesses.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,342.

Where a witness living in another state and district fails to obey a subpœna, and an attachment is issued for him, such attachment should be directed to the marshal of the court issuing it.—United States v. Potter, Case No. 16,075.

Prior service of a subpœna upon a witness who fails to appear is an indispensable requisite to awarding an attachment against him.—United States v. Caldwell, Case No. 14,708.

Where a witness arrives before service of an attachment for not attending, and makes a reasonable excuse, the attachment will be countermanded on payment of the cost of issuing it.—United States v. Scholfield, Case No. 16,230.

An attachment for contempt for not attending must not be served in the court house.—United States v. Scholfield, Case No. 16,230.

An attachment against witnesses for disobedience to a subpœna must be served by the marshal, though the witnesses reside in a distant county.—United States v. Montgomery, Case No. 15,799.

An attachment may issue against a witness for failure to attend before a commissioner for examination de bene esse, in obedience to a subpœna.—Ex parte Humphrey, Case No. 6,867.

Granting of attachment for disobedience of subpœna running beyond the district is discretionary, and will be refused where circumstances render it oppressive.—Ex parte Beebees, Case No. 1,220.

On a motion for an attachment against witnesses, the court will not examine to determine whether the foreign suit is real or fictitious.—Ex parte Judson, Case No. 7,561.

The circuit court of the District of Columbia can issue an attachment for a witness residing in Virginia within 100 miles.—Lewis v. Mandeville, Case No. 8,326; Voss v. Luke, Id. 17,014.

A witness residing in Virginia cannot be compelled, by attachment, to attend the circuit court of the District of Columbia, in a criminal cause.—Ex parte Pleasants, Case No. 11,225.

Attachments may run from the District of Columbia into Maryland for witnesses residing within 100 miles of the place of trial.—Sommerville v. French, Case No. 13,173.

The circuit court of the District of Columbia will grant a rule on a witness residing in Baltimore, Md., to show cause why he should not be attached for not attending according to summons.—Hodgson v. Butts, Case No. 6,563.

In the district court of the Southern district of New York, an attachment may be issued in aid of a common-law information prosecuted by the United States.—United States v. Stevenson, Case No. 16,395.

Under Act Md. 1791, c. 68, § 8, an attachment for contempt can be issued against a witness who refuses to obey a summons issued by a justice of the peace.—Washington v. Dawson, Case No. 17,227.

The court will not compel the attendance of an interpreter or expert who has neglected to obey a subpœna, unless in case of necessity.—Ex parte Roelker, Case No. 11,995.

Quære: Whether an attachment should issue for the refusal of federal cabinet officers to obey a subpœna in a case where their testimony would not be legally admissible.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,342.

An attachment will not be issued against a member of congress who declines to attend as a witness.—United States v. Thomas, Case No. 16,476.

Attachment and penalty on failure to obey summons of justice of peace.—Ex parte Gorman, Case No. 5,628.

§ 5. —— Habeas corpus ad testificandum.

A commissioner has no power, by habeas corpus, to bring before him a committed person, for the purpose of giving his deposition to be used in a pending cause.—Ex parte Barnes, Case No. 1,010.

A person brought from another state under a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum, and discharged on habeas corpus, must be sent back in charge of the marshal of the district.—In re Hamilton, Case No. 5,976.

§ 6. —— Requiring bond or recognizance.

Where there is any doubt whether witnesses for the prosecution will appear, they should be recognized.—United States v. Durling, Case No. 15,010.

Where a witness appears in court at the term mentioned in his recognizance, and the same is not respited, he is not bound to attend at the following term to which the cause is continued.—United States v. Butler, Case No. 14,698.

One arrested as a witness for the United States in a criminal case, under Act Aug. 8, 1846, § 7, discharged on his own recognizance, under circumstances of peculiar hardship.—United States v. Lloyd, Case No. 15,614.

§ 7. Contempt.

Refusal of a physician to testify as an expert, even in criminal cases, unless first paid a reasonable fee, is not a contempt.—United States v. Howe, Case No. 15,404a.

One who was not a Quaker, being called as a witness, and refusing to be sworn on the ground of conscientious scruples arising from a declaration formerly made, may be committed for a contempt.—United States v. Coolidge, Case No. 14,858.

An order to commit a witness for not recognizing in a criminal case to appear and testify, or for a contempt of court, need not be in writing and sealed.—Ex parte Paris, Case No. 10,714.

Where fees of travel and one day's attendance, demanded by a witness at the time of the service of the subpœna in a civil cause in the federal court, are not paid, the witness is not liable for contempt for failure to attend.—In re Thomas, Case No. 13,889.

§ 8. Right of accused to compulsory process.

Any person charged with a crime in the federal courts has a right before as well as after indictment to the process of the court to compel the attendance of his witnesses.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692d.

The constitutional provision securing to an accused the right to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses does not authorize process to ambassadors or consuls.—In re Dillon, Case No. 3,914.

It is the duty of the court, on application of the prisoner showing that he is unable to send for his witnesses, to summon them at the expense of the government.—United States v. Kenneally, Case No. 15,522.

§ 9. Subpœna duces tecum.

Practice in respect to the issue and form of subpœna duces tecum stated.—United States v. Babcock, Case No. 14,484.

A subpœna duces tecum will be given for any witness to bring in the books who is supposed to have them.—Russell v. McLellan, Case No. 12,-158.

The court has no right to refuse its aid to motions for papers to which the accused may be entitled, and which may be material to his defense.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,-692d.

It is sufficient in an affidavit for the production of a paper in the possession of the prosecution to aver that it "may be material" to the defense.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,-694.

In Virginia a motion for subpœna duces tecum is to the discretion of the court, and, as a legal means of obtaining testimony, it cannot be regularly opposed by the opposite party, in his character as such.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692d.

The federal courts will not grant a subpœna duces tecum for the purpose of bringing up the original papers in a cause in a state court.—Dexter v. Sullivan, Case No. 3,868.

On application for a subpœna duces tecum directed to a consul, it must appear that the document is not an official paper protected by law from examination and seizure.—In re Dillon, Case No. 3,914.

An officer of a corporation, party to a suit, can be compelled by subpœna duces tecum to bring its books before a master to whom the cause is referred.—Erie Ry. Co. v. Heath, Case No. 4,513.

A subpœna duces tecum may issue to the president directing him to bring any paper of which the party praying it has a right to avail himself as testimony.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692d.

Where it does not affirmatively appear that letters and executive orders in the hands of the president, which may be material to the defense of an accused, contain any matter which it would be imprudent to disclose, a subpœna duces tecum will issue.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692d.

And in such case he is entitled to the production of the original letter, a copy not being sufficient.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,-692d.

A subpœna duces tecum requiring a military officer to produce official papers on file at headquarters at his department will be set aside, copies of such papers being admissible in evidence.—Corbett v. Gibson, Case No. 3,221.

A subpœna duces tecum will not be ordered to compel the clerk of another court to produce original paper.—Craig v. Richards, Case No. 3,-337.

The vice president, who was also secretary and treasurer, of a foreign railroad corporation, having an office in New York, held could not be required to produce books of the company, which had been in his control, but several years before had been sent to the home office, in another state, and were there in charge of a co-ordinate officer, over whom he had no control.—In re Sykes, Case No. 13,707.

It is the duty of the person to whom the writ is directed to use reasonable diligence to obey it, and to find and produce the required instruments of evidence if they are within his custody.—United States v. Babcock, Case No. 14,-484.

§ 10. Compensation of witnesses—Parties.

A party testifying in his own behalf is not entitled to travel and attendance as a witness.—Nichols v. Brunswick, Case No. 10,239.

Members of a partnership, summoned as trustee, who answer severally and are discharged, are entitled to several costs of travel and attendance, but not for counsel fees.—Perry Mfg. Co. v. Brown, Case No. 11,014.

§ 11. —— Attendance for several cases or purposes.

General rule adopted giving a witness summoned in several cases fees and mileage for but one case, charged equally among all.—Parker v. Cartzler, Case No. 10,730.

A person attending court, in obedience to process, both as a juror and a witness, is entitled to compensation for each service.—Edwards v. Bond, Case No. 4,294.

A witness attending for defendant, if sworn and sent before the grand jury by the government, is entitled to be paid by it for his attendance on the trial.—Ex parte Johnson, Case No. 7,367.

If a witness be summoned in several suits brought by the same plaintiff against different defendants, he is entitled to his attendance and mileage in each case.—Parker v. Bigler, Case No. 10,726.

§ 12. —— Mileage and travel fees.

A witness, subpœnaed at the place of trial on the day on which he is required by the subpœna to attend in court, is not entitled to travel fees.—The Sunnyside, Case No. 13,619.

Witnesses are entitled to travel "from the places of their abode," though beyond the line of the state, unless otherwise agreed by the parties.—Hathaway v. Roach, Case No. 6,213.

If a witness, whose residence is not at the place of holding court, is summoned at the place of trial, he is allowed mileage for returning to his home, but not for coming to the court.—Woodruff v. Barney, Case No. 17,986.

A deputy marshal is not entitled to charge for mileage for himself as a witness.—Wintermute v. Smith, Case No. 17,897.

§ 13. —— Manner of summoning and voluntary appearance.

A witness may be allowed his fees, although not regularly summoned.—United States v. Williams, Case No. 16,709.

Witnesses who attended in response to a summons, though served by a private person, are entitled to their fees.—Power v. Semmes, Case No. 11,360.

Travel fees allowed for witness residing out of state, more than 100 miles from place of trial, attending upon mere request, though his deposition is on file.—Anderson v. Moe, Case No. 359. CONTRA, see Anonymous, Case No. 432.

A witness attending voluntarily is entitled to his fees from the party at whose instance he attends, though they cannot be taxed against the losing party.—Dreskill v. Parish, Case No. 4,076.

§ 14. —— Imprisonment of witness.

A witness who, for want of surety to appear and testify, has been imprisoned, is entitled to the daily compensation for the time of imprisonment.—Higginson's Case, Case No. 6,471.

§ 15. —— Suspension of case.

Where a case is suspended for a few days, witnesses from a distance will be paid for continued attendance, rather than for travel fees home and return.—In re Griffen, Case No. 5,810; Hance v. McCormick, Id. 6,009; Hathaway v. Roach, Id. 6,213.

A witness is entitled to his fees taxed during the whole time of his actual attendance during the trial, although the examination on both sides has been closed or the trial suspended by illness of counsel.—Whipple v. Cumberland Cotton Mfg. Co., Case No. 17,515.

Witnesses from a distance are entitled to fees for attendance on Sunday when they are detained over that day.—Schott v. Benson, Case No. 12,479.

§ 16. —— Tender of fees in advance.

The fees must be paid or tendered at the time the summons or subpœna is served.—In re Griffen, Case No. 5,810.

A failure to tender travel fees to a witness subpœnaed by the government will not excuse his failure to appear, if he has means to travel. —United States v. Durling, Case No. 15,010.

§ 17. —— Actions and proceedings for fees.

If the fees are not paid, and the witness attends, they may be collected as in ordinary actions.—In re Griffen, Case No. 5,810.

The court will not grant an attachment against a party for not paying his witness, unless payment shall have been demanded by a person having authority to receive payment, and unless that authority appear.—Nally v. Lambell, Case No. 10,006.

A witness cannot have an attachment for his fees until he has shown, by affidavit, defendant's refusal to pay after service upon him of an order for payment.—Sadler v. More, Case No. 12,208.

II. COMPETENCY.

(A) CAPACITY AND QUALIFICATIONS IN GENERAL.

§ 18. Qualifications and competency in general.

The court will not look to remote contingencies in order to disqualify a witness from giving testimony.—Willings v. Consequa, Case No. 17,767; Consequa v. Willings, Id.

Act July 6, 1862, in relation to the competency of witnesses, does not apply to criminal cases.—United States v. Brown, Case No. 14,671.

§ 19. Knowledge or means of knowledge.

A witness may be competent to testify to general reputation of pedigree, though not one of the family or intimately acquainted with it.—Banert v. Day, Case No. 836.

§ 20. Witnesses subjected to improper influences.

A witness is not rendered incompetent by having received a letter from one of the parties requesting him to tell the whole truth, without any suggestion as to what the writer considered the truth to be.—Warner v. Daniels, Case No. 17,181.

A witness is not rendered incompetent by having received a copy of the interrogatories before the time of testifying, without any comments or any influence used to affect his answers.—Warner v. Daniels, Case No. 17,181.

§ 21. Husband and wife.

The incompetency of the husband to testify as a witness for his wife rests on grounds of public policy, and is not removed by a statute removing the disqualification of interest.—In re Jones, Case No. 7,444.

In an action against husband and wife, where the wife was not a necessary party, held, that the husband was competent as a witness in her favor, but not against her.—Green v. Taylor, Case No. 5,761.

A woman offered as a witness, and objected to on the ground that she is the wife of the party calling her, cannot be examined to disprove the marriage, when there is sufficient evidence aliunde before the court to raise a presumption of marriage.—Rose v. Niles, Case No. 12,050.

The wife of an accomplice who has testified for the government is competent to prove any independent facts not sworn to by her husband, and not forming any part of his acts.—United States v. Horn, Case No. 15,389.

The wife of the lessor in ejectment is not a competent witness to prove that he is living, on a motion to dismiss the action on the ground that he is dead.—Gilleland v. Martin, Case No. 5,433.

The wife of a party to an interference in the patent office is incompetent to testify in his behalf.—Nichols v. Harris, Case No. 10,243.

Wife of one of defendants not competent for plaintiff, though husband has been discharged under insolvent act.—Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, Case No. 851.

On the separate trial of one of two persons jointly indicted, the wife of the other is a competent witness for defendant.—United States v. Addatte, Case No. 14,422; Same v. Wade, Id. 16,629.

Upon an indictment against the husband for assault and battery of his wife, she may be examined as a witness against him.—United States v. Fitton, Case No. 15,106; Same v. Smallwood, Id. 16,316.

The wife of the owner of stolen goods is not a competent witness for the prosecution, unless the husband has released to the United States his share of the fine.—United States v. Shorter, Case No. 16,283.

§ 22. Idiots.

On a suggestion that a witness whose affidavit has been taken on a motion for new trial is an idiot, the court may require him to be brought before it for examination.—United States v. Lloyd, Case No. 15,619.

§ 23. Defect of religious sentiment or belief.

One who does not believe in a God or in a future life is not competent to testify as a witness.—Anonymous, Case No. 446; United States v. Kennedy, Case No. 15,524; Same v. Lee, Id. 15,586; Wakefield v. Ross, Id. 17,050.

A witness is competent if he believes that punishments are meted out in this life, but such belief may go to his credibility.—United States v. Kennedy, Case No. 15,524.

Query, whether a declaration of disbelief in a future state of rewards and punishment renders a witness incompetent.—Rutherford v. Moore, Case No. 12,174.

A witness objected to on the ground of his disbelief in a God and a future state of rewards and punishments cannot be examined respecting his religious sentiments, but will be permitted to explain them.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,675.

§ 24. Infamous persons and persons convicted of crime.

Where incompetency depends upon an infamous punishment, and the same is not inflicted where it might have been inflicted, the witness is not rendered incompetent.—United States v. Brockius, Case No. 14,652; Same v. Dickinson, Id. 14,958.

A particeps criminis, where the statute of limitations has run in his favor, may be compelled to testify against the defendant.—United States v. Smith, Case No. 16,332.

A person convicted in Pennsylvania of an assault and battery with intent to murder, and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, is a competent witness.—United States v. Brockius, Case No. 14,652.

A person who has been convicted of a conspiracy to defraud the creditors of an insolvent debtor is incompetent as a witness.—United States v. Porter, Case No. 16,072.

A person convicted of an infamous crime is restored to competency by a pardon.—United States v. Rutherford, Case No. 16,210. CONTRA, see Wallamet R. T. Co. v. Oregon S. N. Co., Case No. 17,106.

Serving out a term of imprisonment in the penitentiary for felony does not restore the person's competency.—United States v. Brown, Case No. 14,661.

A convict who has served out a sentence for felony may be restored by pardon to competency as a witness, but the jury are to judge of his credibility.—United States v. Jones, Case No. 15,493.

§ 25. Jurors.

Grand jurors may testify as to the confessions made by the prisoner before them upon oath, when under examination as a witness against another.—United States v. Charles, Case No. 14,786.

Jurors cannot be examined as witnesses of each other's conduct, to prove fraud, partiality, or irregularity.—Curtiss v. Georgetown & A. Turnpike Co., Case No. 3,506.

§ 26. Negroes, mulattoes, and slaves.

Competency of negroes, mulattoes, and slaves.—Minchin v. Docker, Case No. 9,628; O'Neale v. Willis, Id. 10,516; Pipsico v. Bontz, Id. 11,183; Queen v. Hepburn, Id. 11,503; Thomas v. Jamesson, Id. 13,900; United States v. Barton, Id. 14,533; Same v. Beddo, Id. 14,556; Same v. Beddo, Id. 14,557; Same v. Bell, Id. 14,564; Same v. Birch, Id. 14,596; Same v. Butler, Id. 14,699; Same v. Davis, Id. 14,925; Same v. Douglass, Id. 14,988; Same v. Dow, Id. 14,990; Same v. Farrell, Id. 15,074; Same v. Fisher, Id. 15,101; Same v. Gray, Id. 15,252; Same v. Hill, Id. 15,365; Same v. Minifie, Id. 15,782; Same v. Mullany, Id. 15,832; Same v. Neale, Id. 15,859; Same v. Shorter, Id. 16,284; Same v. Swann, Id. 16,425; Same v. Terry, Id. 16,454; Same v. Woods, Id. 16,760.

§ 27. Objections, and waiver thereof.

A party who has read the cross-examination of his adversary's witness, in support of his case, cannot thereafter object to his competency.—The Osceola, Case No. 10,602.

(B) PARTIES AND PERSONS INTERESTED IN EVENT.

See, also, ante, § 21; post, §§ 51–53.

§ 28. Parties to civil actions and proceedings.

Parties to suits in equity are not competent witnesses.—Blanchard v. Sprague, Case No. 1,516.

The general rule of law is that a party to a suit cannot be a witness. This rule is founded on the interest the party has in the suit, and when that interest is removed the objection ceases to exist.—Willings v. Consequa, Case No. 17,767; Consequa v. Willings, Id.

One defendant in a joint action of trespass cannot be a witness for the other, although they plead severally.—Johnson v. Chapman, Case No. 7,378.

One defendant in a joint action upon a promissory note, who suffers judgment by default, is not a competent witness for the other defendant.—Franklin Bank v. Hipkins, Case No. 5,056.

Defendant in replevin, bailiff of the landlord, and indemnified by him, may be examined as a witness in the cause.—Dixon v. Waters, Case No. 3,936; Hilton v. Beck, Id. 6,509; Wise v. Bowen, Id. 17,905.

A party remaining such on the record cannot, by any arrangement with his co-claimants, discharge himself from liability to the libelant, so as to become a competent witness for them.—Lane v. The Buck, Case No. 8,048.

In a suit between contending mortgagees, the mortgagor is a competent witness for the first mortgagee to identify the goods described in the first mortgage.—Wagner v. Watts, Case No. 17,040.

In a joint action of trespass against two defendants, if they plead severally, they may be mutually examined as witnesses for each other.—Piles v. Plum, Case No. 11,165.

Complainant held not a competent witness in a suit to restrain the removal of his slave from the district.—Thomas v. Mackall, Case No. 13,903.

A partner upon whose individual check firm moneys have been paid, and who has been released from all liability by the other members of the firm, is not a competent witness for the bank in an action by the partnership.—Coote v. Bank of the United States, Case No. 3,203.

The court can, against libelant's consent, discharge a claimant who has parted with all his interest, and make him a competent witness.—Lane v. The Buck, Case No. 8,048.

While parties to the record cannot be examined as witnesses, the name of a party for good cause shown may be stricken from the pleadings.—The Neptune, Case No. 10,120.

Executors who are parties in the cause cannot be examined as witnesses without an order of the court, and such order will not be given if they are interested in the event.—Walker v. Parker, Case No. 17,082.

Under the rule that a party cannot be a witness in his own cause, the record of conviction in a criminal prosecution in which such party has been sworn as a witness is inadmissible in his favor in an action by him, as a party will not be permitted to avail himself by indirect means of evidence which would be incompetent if offered directly.—Buck v. Hermance, Case No. 2,081.

§ 29. Defendants in criminal cases.

A defendant in a criminal case in the federal courts cannot testify in his own behalf, although by statute his testimony is admissible in the state courts.—United States v. Hawthorne, Case No. 15,332.

On an investigation before a commissioner sitting in the state of New York, the accused has the right to be examined as a witness in his own behalf.—In re Farez, Case No. 4,645.

§ 30. Incompetency by reason of interest in general.

One interested in result of suit is not competent.—Baird v. Wolfe, Case No. 760; Harrison v. Evans, Id. 6,135.

A witness who has a direct and positive interest in the event of the suit is incompetent.—Reece v. Johnson, Case No. 11,633a.

An expectant or contingent interest will not disqualify a witness.—Burroughs v. United States, Case No. 2,202.

A witness who is interested equally on both sides is competent to testify.—Stump v. Roberts, Case No. 13,561.

§ 31. Establishing interest of witness.

Interest of a witness to prove his incompetency cannot be shown by hearsay evidence or declarations out of court.—Vining v. Wooten, Case No. 16,949.

A witness cannot discharge himself of an objection to him on the ground of interest, by matter sworn by himself.—Murray v. Marsh, Case No. 9,965.

An objection on the ground of interest may be supported either by examining the witness himself, or by other independent evidence, but not by both such methods.—The Watchman, Case No. 17,251.

§ 32. Interest voluntarily acquired by witness after knowledge of subject-matter of suit.

A witness, who voluntarily became interested after acquiring knowledge of the subject-matter in dispute, may be compelled to testify.—Tatum v. Lofton, Case No. 13,766.

§ 33. Principal and surety.

The principal obligor in a bond is a competent witness for the surety.—Harper v. Smith, Case No. 6,092; Virginia v. Evans, Id. 16,969.

A surety in an administration bond is a competent witness for the administrator.—Burch v. Spaulding, Case No. 2,140; Craig v. Reintzel, Id. 3,336; Davies v. Davies, Id. 3,612; Fairfax v. Fairfax, Id. 4,613; Thompson v. Afflick, Id. 13,940.

One surety is a competent witness for another surety. but the sureties are not competent witnesses for the principal.—Virginia v. Evans, Case No. 16,969.

A surety in a replevin bond is not a competent witness for plaintiff in replevin, although he has an indemnifying bond.—Thompson v. Carbery, Case No. 13,945.

§ 34. Principal and agent.

An agent is competent to prove his authority as agent.—Livingston v. Swanwick, Case No. 8,419; Pannill v. Eliason, Id. 10,707.

An agent is a competent witness to prove what he did as agent.—Chapin v. Siger, Case No. 2,600; Livingston v. Swanwick, Id. 8,419.

An agent who purchased a chattel, and is interested therein, is not competent for plaintiff in a suit for fraud in a sale.—Ferson v. Sanger, Case No. 4,751.

Brokers who negotiate a contract of affreightment, their commissions not being dependent on its performance, are competent witnesses in a suit for breach.—Quirk v. Clinton, Case No. 11,518.

An agent who fitted out an expedition under authority of a written subscription, and drew on one of the subscribers for the expense, held a competent witness to prove the facts, in a suit by the payee of the draft against the drawee.—Lowber v. Shaw, Case No. 8,563.

On a libel in rem upon a bill of lading, the clerks and agents of the transportation company claimant, having personally no interest in the business, and not responsible for its defaults, are competent witnesses.—Howe v. The Lexington, Case No. 6,767b.

§ 35. Attorney of witness.

A proctor in the admiralty court in New York is a competent witness, though he is interested in the recovery; but where the claim is sustained upon his testimony alone, he cannot recover costs.—Richardson v. Eldridge, Case No. 11,781a.

§ 36. Competency of members of a partnership or corporation.

A stockholder in a company which itself owns stock in plaintiff company is competent for plaintiff.—Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, Case No. 851.

In assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, defendant may prove a partnership between plaintiff and a witness by such witness.—Lovejoy v. Wilson, Case No. 8,551.

On a prosecution of a vessel owner for casting away his vessel with intent to prejudice the underwriters, the president of an incorporated insurance company is a competent witness to prove defendant's handwriting to the manifest of cargo.—United States v. Johns, Case No. 15,481.

§ 37. Creditor of party.

A creditor of a firm is competent to prove its existence.—Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, Case No. 851.

A creditor of an insolvent debtor is not competent, in a suit by his trustee.—Herbert v. Bannatyne, Case No. 6,396.

A creditor of a firm is not a competent witness to prove defendant a dormant partner therein.—Corps v. Robinson, Case No. 3,252.

A creditor of a bankrupt is not a competent witness for the assignee in a suit to increase the estate.—Carr v. Hilton, Case No. 2,437.

§ 38. Inhabitants where municipality is a party.

Inhabitants of towns are competent witnesses in actions where the towns are parties.—Hunter v. Marlboro, Case No. 6,908.

In an action for the use of a county, inhabitants of the county are competent witnesses for the plaintiff.—Virginia v. Evans, Case No. 16,969.

§ 39. Parties to deeds collaterally in evidence.

Grantor in deed collaterally introduced, in cause inter alios, is competent to prove that the deed was fraudulently obtained.—Bank of Columbia v. French, Case No. 867.

§ 40. Legatees, heirs, and distributees.

A paid legatee is a competent witness where payment has been made by the executor, voluntarily, with knowledge of the claim sued upon, and without a refunding bond, and a long time has elapsed since the death of the testator. The length of time is regulated by analogy to the statute of limitations.—Wilcocks v. Phillips, Case No. 17,639.

The heirs of a deceased mortgagor are not competent witnesses, in a suit in equity by an assignee to redeem, to prove the assignment fraudulent.—Randall v. Phillips, Case No. 11,555.

A co-heir, or co next of kin is not a competent witness for the plaintiff in a suit brought for an account of a trust fund created for the benefit of all the heirs or next of kin.—West v. Randall, Case No. 17,424.

§ 41. Parties to negotiable instruments in actions relating thereto.

An indorser is a competent witness for the maker of a note.—Bank of Alexandria v. Clarke, Case No. 844; Gilman v. King, Id. 5,444; Mason v. Masi, Id. 9,244.

A bankrupt who indorsed a note before his bankruptcy, and who has obtained his certificate, is a good witness for the indorsee.—Murray v. Marsh, Case No. 9,965.

In an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of an inland bill of exchange, the indorser is a competent witness for defendant to prove usury in plaintiff's discounting of the bill.—Gaither v. Lee, Case No. 5,182.

The drawer of an inland bill of exchange is not a competent witness, in an action against the acceptor, to prove a usurious consideration.—Nicholls v. Wright, Case No. 10,236.

In an action on a bill of exchange, plaintiff's indorser is not competent to prove that the bill belonged to him.—Cropper v. Nelson, Case No. 3,417.

Upon an indictment for usury, the borrower is a competent witness for the prosecution, if he has paid the money, and be not the informer.—United States v. Moxley, Case No. 15,830.

§ 43. Prosecutors, informers, and persons entitled to portion of penalty or fine.

The prosecutor whose name is indorsed on an indictment for a misdemeanor is not a competent witness for the prosecution.—United States v. Birch, Case No. 14,595.

An informer is a competent witness, although he may receive part of the penalty.—United States v. Patterson, Cases Nos. 16,009, 16,010; Same v. Voss, Id. 16,628. CONTRA, see United States v. McCormick, Case No. 15,662.

A deposition, taken before trial, of an informer, who is entitled under the act of congress to a portion of a fine, forfeiture, or penalty, is not admissible.—The Thomas & Henry v. United States, Case No. 13,919.

The owner of goods stolen by a slave, being entitled to one-half of the fine, is not a competent witness for the prosecution.—United States v. Rhodes, Case No. 16,152.

§ 44. Master and crew of vessel in actions relating to vessel or against owner.

The master of a vessel is a competent witness for the owners, in a suit in rem for wages of a seaman.—The Hudson, Case No. 6,831; Malone v. Bell, Id. 8,994; The Trial, Id. 14,170.

In a libel against a vessel for wages, the master is incompetent to prove any matter of defense which originates in his own acts, for which he is responsible.—The William Harris, Case No. 17,695; Jones v. The Phœnix, Id. 7,489.

The master is not a competent witness to prove that a medicine chest was on board, for the purpose of throwing the expense of medical advice on a seaman.—The William Harris, Case No. 17,695.

The master of a vessel who hypothecated her on bottomry is a competent witness in favor of the holder of the bottomry.—Furniss v. The Magoun, Case No. 5,163.

In a suit on a bottomry bond, the master is competent to prove that the supplies for which it was given were furnished and were necessary.—The Medora, Case No. 9,391.

The master of a ship is not a competent witness in an information in rem for a forfeiture occasioned by his misconduct.—The Hope, Case No. 6,678; The Nymph, Id. 10,389.

The master and crew of a vessel are competent witnesses for the owner of the vessel in a cause of collision.—The Neptune, Case No. 10,120.

One party to a collision suit may call as witnesses persons who were on board the vessel of the other party.—The Monticello, Case No. 9,739.

§ 45. Seamen as witnesses for each other.

Seamen not interested in the event, though interested in the question, are competent to testify for each other.—The Elizabeth v. Rickers, Case No. 4,353.

Seamen are competent witnesses for each other in suits for wages earned on the same voyage.—The Cypress, Case No. 3,530; Spurr v. Pearson, Id. 13,268.

§ 46. Patent cases.

An assignee of a patent is incompetent to testify for the patentee on an interference.—Cressler v. Custer, Case No. 3,388.

On an interference in a patent case depositions of an inventor, who has assigned his rights, and of his wife, as to priority of invention, are incompetent and inadmissible.—Eames v. Richards, Case No. 4,240.

In a suit for infringement of a patent, a witness who uses a machine resembling that of the plaintiff is incompetent for defendant.—Evans v. Eaton, Case No. 4,560; Same v. Hettick, Id. 4,562.

A person having an exclusive right to a patent in a certain territory, but no interest in a certain county, or in the suit for infringement therein, may testify for plaintiff.—Buck v. Hermance, Case No. 2,081.

One who had sold an interest in an invention, but was to be paid something if it was successful, held disqualified.—Marshall v. Mee, Case No. 9,129.

§ 47. Salvage cases.

The rules as to the incompetency of witnesses for interest do not apply in salvage cases except as to facts occurring in port after the property is brought in.—The Boston, Case No. 1,673.

In cases of salvage, the salvors, though interested, are admitted as witnesses, from necessity.—The Elizabeth and Jane, Case No. 4,356.

A person claiming as a salvor will be permitted to testify in his own behalf without determining, by technical refinements, whether the service was strictly a salvage service or not.—The Huntress, Case No. 6,912.

§ 48. Removal of incompetency by release or assignment of interest, or by the statute of limitations.

Where a person has an interest in a fine, and releases his interest therein, he becomes a competent witness upon the prosecution of the offender.—United States v. Brown, Case No. 14,-657; Same v. Carnot, Id. 14,726; Same v. Clancey, Id. 14,800; Same v. Hare, Id. 15,302; Same v. McCann, Id. 15,655; Same v. Morgan, Id. 15,808; Same v. Tolson, Id. 16,530.

When a certificated bankrupt who has released all future claims upon his estate is a competent witness.—Barnes v. Billington, Case No. 1,015.

A grantee of a deed alleged to be fraudulent is a competent witness in support of the deed, in an action against his grantee upon receiving from him a release.—Linthicum v. Remington, Case No. 8,377.

The principal obligor, having confessed judgment, and having been released by the surety from the costs of the suit against him, is a competent witness for him to prove usury.—Peirce v. Reintzel, Case No. 10,908.

A plaintiff who has assigned all his interest in the suit to a co-plaintiff, and has deposited a sum with the clerk to cover all costs, is competent.—Willings v. Consequa, Case No. 17,767; Consequa v. Willings, Id.

An owner of a vessel who has settled with his co-owner may testify against a passenger in a suit for passage money, where his co-owner has released him.—Massoletti v. Miller, Case No. 9,264.

One of several defendants, who has judgment upon demurrer to his separate plea of bankruptcy, may be a witness for the others, upon releasing all rights in his estate.—Hurliki's Adm'r v. Bacon, Case No. 6,921.

In a libel against a vessel on a contract of affreightment by the shipper, the master is not a competent witness for the owners, without a release, but a release from some of the part owners is sufficient.—The Peytona, Cases Nos. 11,058, 11,059.

An interested party will not be allowed to assign his interest immediately before the hearing, so as to make him a competent witness.—Hill v. Dunklee, Case No. 6,489.

A release, in favor of a witness, of all actions and causes of actions or a particular cause of action which had happened before the time of the release, will discharge the witness from all liability pending on the event of the suit in which he is called to testify.—Citizens' Bank v. Nantucket Steamboat Co., Case No. 2,730.

Sufficiency of release to make a party competent in favor of an executor.—Oliver v. Vernon, Case No. 10,501.

An interested witness, who has been sworn in chief and examined, and whose interest is disclosed upon cross-examination, may be released, and re-examined.—Hall v. Fox, Case No. 5,932.

A release may be executed by the party leaving a blank for the name of the witness, to be filled up by the party's attorney.—Hall v. Fox, Case No. 5,932.

If a witness be surety for costs, the court will permit other security to be substituted so as to remove his interest.—Virginia v. Evans, Case No. 16,969.

Where a witness is protected from liability by the act of limitation, he is competent without a release.—Waller v. Stewart, Case No. 17,109.

In ejectment against two, if there be no evidence whatever of any possession by one, the jury may find a verdict for him at the bar, so as to authorize the other to examine him as a witness.—Lanning v. Case, Case No. 8,072.

§ 49. Particular instances of interest disqualifying witness.

It is no objection to the competency of a witness that a reward has been offered, to be paid on conviction of the prisoner, to which witness may be entitled.—United States v. Wilson, Case No. 16,730.

A wager on the event of a trial, being void at law, will not render the person incompetent as a witness.—United States v. Carrico, Case No. 14,734.

A liability for costs in the event of a recovery on notes prevents the person so liable from being a competent witness in a suit to have the notes surrendered and canceled.—Ferson v. Sanger, Cases Nos. 4,751, 4,752.

A customs officer, who has assisted in the seizure of goods for violation of the revenue laws, is competent in a suit for forfeiture.—United States v. Twenty-Five Cases of Cloths, Case No. 16,563.

On an indictment for bigamy, a person having an action pending against the prisoner for goods furnished to the supposed first wife is incompetent, by reason of interest, as a witness to prove the first marriage.—United States v. Maxwell, Case No. 15,749.

The deposition of a witness, on the part of the plaintiff, who had given certificates upon which a recovery was expected to be obtained, and who expected a commission of 1 per cent. on the amount to be recovered from the defendant, but which certificates were not evidence in the cause, is admissible.—Willings v. Consequa, Case No. 17,767; Consequa v. Willings, Id.

Owners of whale ships, in the absence of express contract making them partners, are only part owners in the vessel; and a mortgagee of the share of one of them has no interest in the vessel to prevent him from being a witness in a suit against the part owners for supplies.—Macy v. DeWolf, Case No. 8,933.

A mere honorary obligation to indemnify a prosecutor who is liable for costs is not a sufficient interest to exclude the testimony of the witness.—United States v. Lyles, Case No. 15,-645; Washington v. Fowler, Id. 17,229.

Possession of goods by a witness will not render his testimony inadmissible in favor of the party under whom he holds.—Hamilton v. Russell, Case No. 5,989.

In an action against a sheriff for an escape upon mesne process, the escaped prisoner is not competent to prove his bankruptcy at the time of his escape.—Duryee v. Webb, Case No. 4,198.

Where, in a case of collision between vehicles, the question of negligence is not settled, plaintiff's driver is incompetent without a release.—Beltzhoover v. Stockton, Case No. 1,283.

§ 50. Construction and effect of statutes removing incompetency by reason of interest.

The phrase "civil action," as used in Act July 2, 1864, making a party or interested persons competent, includes suits in equity as well as actions at law.—Rison v. Cribbs, Case No. 11,860.

The phrase "civil action," in the third section of Act July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 351), included all cases of a civil, as contradistinguished from those of a criminal, nature. A seizure of property for violation of the internal revenue law, and the controversy arising upon a claim interposed thereto by a third party, are within the act.—United States v. Ten Thousand Cigars, Case No. 16,451.

The phrase "civil action" (Act July 2, 1864, § 3) includes all cases of a civil, as contradistinguished from those of a similar, nature.—United States v. Ten Thousand Cigars, Case No. 16.451.

A seizure of property for violation of the internal revenue law, and the controversy arising upon a claim interposed thereto by a third person, is within Act July 2, 1864, § 3, which provides that in the federal courts there shall be no exclusion of any witness on account of color, nor in civil actions because he is a party to or interested in the issue tried.—United States v. Ten Thousand Cigars, Case No. 16,451.

A state statute allowing interested persons to be witnesses does not apply to suits in equity or criminal cases in the federal courts. Act 1789, § 34.—Segee v. Thomas, Case No. 12,633.

(C) TRANSACTIONS AND COMMUNICATIONS WITH PERSONS SUBSEQUENTLY DECEASED OR INCOMPETENT.

§ 51. Interest of witness.

In the case of the death of a claimant in admiralty who has given a stipulation to answer judgment, where the answer is filed by his administrator, the same rule as to the exclusion of parties in interest as witnesses (Rev. St. § 858) applies as in case of a common-law action brought against an administrator.—The Poland, Case No. 11,242.

But the court may permit a party to testify when it appears that justice demands it.—The Poland, Case No. 11,242.

In a proceeding by an assignee for relief from a mortgage for usury, the mortgagors, though not parties, are not competent against the executors of the deceased mortgagee, to testify as to transactions with or statements made by testator. Act March 3, 1865.—Bromley v. Smith, Case No. 1,922.

§ 52. Parties as witnesses.

In Massachusetts, where an executor or administrator is a party, the other party cannot testify in his own favor, unless the contract was originally made with a party who was living and competent to testify.—Robinson v. Mandell, Case No. 11,959.

Defendant may testify in his own behalf as to matters embraced in the deposition of plaintiff's intestate, offered in evidence on continuance of the suit by his administrator. Act March 3, 1865.—Mumm v. Owens, Case No. 9,919.

An execution creditor of complainant in a bill filed to establish a parol trust in lands, against the heirs and representatives of an intestate, is an "opposite party" to complainant, within Act March 3, 1865.—Eslava v. Mazange's Adm'r, Case No. 4,527.

An ex parte order obtained by complainant before process issued for his own examination as a witness does not qualify him as such, on the ground that he is required by the court to testify. Act March 3, 1865.—Eslava v. Mazange's Adm'r, Case No. 4,527.

§ 53. Proof of claims against estate of deceased person.

Creditors of plaintiff's intestate are competent witnesses to support a claim by plaintiff as administrator against the defendant.—Robertson v. Selby, Case No. 11,929.

(D) CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS AND PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

On examinations in bankruptcy, see "Bankruptcy," § 328.

§ 54. Communication between attorney and client.

The extent of the privilege of the client to exclude the examination of his attorney as witness, and what papers of his client the attorney may be compelled to produce on notice, considered.—Rhoades v. Selin, Case No. 11,740.

An attorney at law cannot be compelled to disclose any fact the knowledge of which has been communicated to him by his client.—Murray v. Dowling, Case No. 9,959; Linthicum v. Remington, Id. 8,377.

Counsel may testify as to facts not communicated to them in confidence by their clients.—Bank of Columbia v. French, Case No. 867; In re Donohue, Id. 3,990; In re O'Donohoe, Id. 10,435.

Matters relating to a conveyance to an attorney by his client, and a reconveyance to the client's wife, are not within the attorney's privilege.—In re Bellis, Case No. 1,274.

A communication relating to the perpetration of a crime by the counsel is not privileged.—In re Cole, Case No. 2,975.

A head clerk of a party is not privileged to refuse to testify for his adversary because standing in confidential relations to his employer.—Corps v. Robinson, Case No. 3,252.

Rule as to privileged communications does not extend to student in attorney's office.—Andrews v. Solomon, Case No. 378.

§ 55. Communications between partners.

Letters between partners concerning a lawsuit which they expect to and do begin are privileged; so are letters which concern only litigation of the party writing them.—In re Krueger, Case No. 7,942.

§ 56. Communications between officer and informant in a criminal prosecution.

In a criminal prosecution, the officer who apprehended defendant will not be compelled to disclose the name of his informant.—United States v. Moses, Case No. 15,825.

§ 57. Communication between a foreign government and its representatives.
In a suit by the United States against a minister to a foreign government to recover the difference between the amount of a private claim collected by him and the sum paid over, where the defense was that the difference had been paid to persons in Brazil with the consent of the state department, held, that defendant would not be required to disclose the names of such persons.—United States v. Webb, Case No. 16,-655..

§ 58. Waiver of privilege.
If plaintiff examines his attorney as a witness, he waives his privilege, and upon cross-examination he is bound to answer generally.—Crittenden v. Strother, Case No. 3,394.

III. EXAMINATION.

§ 59. Mode of examination in general.
Under Act 1789, § 30, witnesses may be examined and cross-examined ore tenus in equity suits as well as suits at law. This power was not taken away by any subsequent act, or by rule 67, promulgated March 2, 1842.—Sickles v. Gloucester Co., Case No. 12,840.

§ 60. Questions allowed.
A question cannot be put to a witness the relevancy of which does not appear.—United States v. Gibert, Case No. 15,204.

A question will not be allowed to be put to a witness which ought not to be answered.—United States v. Craig, Case No. 14,883.

Impertinent inquiries in examining a witness, having no bearing upon the case, should not be allowed.—Day v. Boston Belting Co., Case No. 3,673.

Upon an indictment for a nuisance in keeping a public gaming house, the question, "Who dealt the cards?" is objectionable as too general.—United States v. Strother, Case No. 16,412.

A witness with a chart before him may be asked whether, under the circumstances stated of the supposed time of the starting of the two vessels, they would or would not be likely to meet at the point marked on the chart; such question is a direct and proper question, and not leading.—United States v. Gibert, Case No. 15,204.

§ 61. Refreshing memory.
A witness cannot refresh his memory as to conversations by reference to memoranda copied by himself from notes made by him at the time of the conversations.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,693.

A witness will be permitted to refresh his memory as to the items of an account by the original entries only, made by himself, or by another in his presence, and he may swear to such items though he has no distinct recollection as to each one.—Jones v. Johns, Case No. 7,471.

A witness may refresh his memory from notes taken at the time of the former trial or from a newspaper printed by him, containing the evidence as taken down by him.—United States v. Wood, Case No. 16,756.

§ 62. Testifying from memoranda.
A notary who has no personal recollection of making a demand may testify from entries made in his book at the time.—Thornton v. Caldwell, Case No. 13,996; Same v. Stoddert, Id. 14,000.

§ 63. Effect of examination.
The complainant, who produces defendant as a witness, must accept the whole of his testimony.—Powden v. Johnson, Case No. 11,353.

The examination of respondent in equity as a witness, by the orator, does not operate as a release to him of the matters concerning which he is examined.—Scammon v. Hobson, Case No. 12,434.

§ 64. Cross-examination.
The general rule at law is that no evidence shall be admitted but what is or might be under the examination of both parties.—Gass v. Stinson, Case No. 5,262.

Leading questions may be asked in cross-examining a witness.—Dawes v. Corcoran, Case No. 3,664.

Upon the cross-examination of a witness, he may be asked leading questions, to draw a further disclosure in reference to the matter testified about on his direct examination, but not as to other matters.—Harrison v. Rowan, Case No. 6,141.

A witness cannot be asked a collateral question not relevant to the matter in issue, merely to test his credibility.—Odiorne v. Winkley, Case No. 10,432; United States v. Dickinson, Id. 14,-958.

Plaintiff's witness cannot be cross-examined by plaintiff to discredit himself by confessing that he had previously made a different and inconsistent statement of the matter.—Harris v. Berry, Case No. 6,115.

In a patent-interference case, a witness who, on direct examination, refers to and partly describes a device of his own, cannot refuse, on cross-examination, to give a further description, on the ground of exposing his private affairs.—Nichols v. Harris, Case No. 10,243.

Where a witness, in his direct examination, has testified that a certain person was reputed to be a man of large property, he may be asked on cross-examination in what such property was reputed to consist.—United States v. Flowery, Case No. 15,122.

§ 65. Re-examination.
Where a cross-examination calls out collateral facts tending to create distrust of the integrity, fidelity, or truth of a witness, it is competent for the adverse party to call for an explanation from the witness.—United States v. Eighteen Barrels High Wines, Case No. 15,033.

Where a witness is cross-examined upon a collateral matter, evidence will not be admitted to disprove that matter to discredit him.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,675.

§ 66. Privilege of witness—Testifying against interest.
A witness will not be compelled to testify against his interest in a cause in which he is interested.—Carne v. McLane, Case No. 2,416; Pritchard v. Georgetown, Id. 11,437.

§ 67. —— Exposure to criminal charge.
A witness is not bound to answer a question which might possibly criminate him.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692e; Same v. Goosely, Id. 15,230; Same v. Lynn, Id. 15,-649.

If the legislative protection against a witness' evidence being used against himself is as broad as the constitutional provision against compelling a person to criminate himself, he can be compelled to answer.—United States v. Three Tons of Coal, Case No. 16,515.

The secretary of a person charged with treason cannot refuse to answer whether he has present knowledge of the cipher in which is written a letter purporting to have been written by the accused, as any direct answer could not tend to implicate him.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692e.

A witness is not bound to answer the question whether he sold certain stolen goods to defendant.—United States v. Moses, Case No. 15,-824.

A bookkeeper of a bank is not obliged, in an action between the bank and a depositor, to answer a question, where the answer might charge him with a loss.—Bank of United States v. Washington, Case No. 940.

A witness may be compelled to answer the question whether he saw defendant at a public gaming table.—Ex parte Lindo, Case No. 8,364.

On an indictment for keeping a house of ill fame, where a witness is asked as to whether she resided in the house, and as to whether other women resided there who were of ill fame, she will not be required to disclose the names of the inhabitants.—United States v. McDowell, Case No. 15,671.

The witness' privilege of refusing to answer on the ground that the answer would criminate him does not extend to examinations before a grand jury.—Devaughn's Case, Case No. 3,837. CONTRA, see Sanderson's Case, Case No. 12,-297.

A person may be compelled, in a judicial proceeding, to testify to matters tending to criminate himself, but no use can be made of such testimony against the witness in a criminal proceeding. Act Feb. 25, 1868.—United States v. Brown, Case No. 14,671; Same v. Williams, Id. 16,717.

In determining the right of a witness to refuse to answer on the ground that his answer might tend to incriminate him, it is the province of the court to judge whether any direct answer to the question proposed will furnish evidence against him.—United States v. Burr, Case No. 14,692e; Same v. Miller, Id. 15,772.

A witness who cannot testify in a cause without criminating himself shall not be sworn.—Neale v. Coningham, Case No. 10,067.

A stipulation by the government officials of immunity from penalties or forfeitures in consideration of testimony of violations of the law will be enforced by the courts.—United States v. Roelle. Case No. 16,186.

Examinations in bankruptcy, see "Bankruptcy," § 327.

§ 68. —— Exposure to disgrace.
A witness need not answer a question which does not relate to any matter of fact in issue, or to any matter contained in his direct testimony, where a truthful answer would tend to degrade him.—In re Lewis, Case No. 8,312; United States v. Craig, Id. 14,883; Same v. Dickinson. Id. 14,958.

A witness, on cross-examination, cannot be asked as to any fact tending to disgrace him, which the other party would not be permitted to prove aliunde.—United States v. Hudland, Case No. 15,411.

An officer is not bound to be a witness against himself on a charge of misconduct, whether amounting to an indictable offense, or only to his discredit, which would furnish ground for his removal or impeachment.—United States v. Collins, Case No. 14,837.

A witness cannot be asked, on cross-examination, a question tending to degrade him, unless it be in relation to a fact in issue in the record.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,-676.

The mother of the child is a competent witness for the prosecution on an indictment of the putative father, under Act Md. 1781, c. 13, and may be cross-examined as to her connection with other persons.—United States v. Collins, Case No. 14,835.

§ 69. —— Cautioning witness.
The court should not instruct witnesses as to their privilege of refusing to answer questions, on the ground that the answers might incriminate them, until the questions are asked.—United States v. Darnaud, Case No. 14,918.

IV. CREDIBILITY, IMPEACHMENT, CONTRADICTION, AND CORROBORATION.

§ 70. Credibility in general.
Jurors should not disbelieve a witness unless for good reason.—United States v. Stevens, Case No. 16,392.

§ 71. Effect of mistake.
Mere mistake by a witness, without willful or corrupt falsehood, should not discredit him.—Marshall v. Mee, Case No. 9,129.

§ 72. Corroboration in general.
Testimony is not admissible to support the credit of a witness except in reply to impeaching testimony.—United States v. Holmes, Case No. 15,382.

A witness produced to testify to the credibility of another may not be asked to specify persons.—Patriotic Bank v. Coote, Case No. 10,-807.

Proper questions to be asked a witness called to testify as to the credibility of another.—Patriotic Bank v. Coote, Case No. 10,807.

§ 73. Impeachment in general.
The court will not permit testimony offered to discredit a witness on the opposite side if, in its opinion, the testimony will not have that effect.—Evans v. Eaton, Case No. 4,559.

An assertion of fact made by a wife in her husband's presence, and denied by him, is not admissible to impeach his testimony.—In re McCarty, Case No. 8,684.

§ 74. Right to impeach one's own witness.
A party may not contradict testimony of his own witness except in case of a surprise.—Trefz v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co., Case No. 14,166.

Although respondent is a competent witness in the trial of feigned issues, still he cannot be asked any question by the defense calling for testimony which contradicts his answer.—Cahoon v. Ring, Case No. 2,292.

§ 75. Requiring payment of fees by expert.
The fact that an expert requires payment for his opinions, as such, should not discredit him before the jury.—Harvey v. Evansville, Etc., Steam Packet Co., Case No. 6,179.

§ 76. Proof of general reputation and character in general.
Evidence of the general bad character of a witness will not be permitted to impeach his credibility, but only his general reputation for veracity.—United States v. Vansickle, Case No. 16,609; Same v. White, Id. 16,675.

The character of a witness may be impeached by general questions as to his truth.—United States v. Dickinson, Case No. 14,958.

The general good character of a witness cannot be proved, where his general character has not been impeached, though he has been contradicted by other witnesses.—Ray v. Donnell, Case No. 11,590.

A party cannot discredit his own witness by testimony as to his general character, but may contradict him as to any important fact.—United States v. Watkins, Case No. 16,649.

§ 77. General reputation for veracity.
The usual questions asked, in order to discredit a witness, are: What is the witness' general reputation for truth? Is it good or bad?—Gass v. Stinson, Case No. 5,261.

The witness may be asked whether, from his knowledge of the general character of the person, he would believe such person under oath.—United States v. Vansickle, Case No. 16,609.

The general reputation of a witness for veracity cannot be proven by the testimony of a juror as to what witnesses testified to at a former trial.—United States v. White, Case No. 16,679.

§ 78. Proof of reputation for unchastity.
Evidence is inadmissible that the witness is a common prostitute, to discredit her testimony. The question must go to her general reputation for veracity.—United States v. Masters, Case No. 15,739.

The attorney for the government will not be permitted to prove that his own witness is a woman of ill fame.—United States v. McDowell, Case No. 15,671.

§ 79. Proof of particular facts and crimes.
Particular acts of turpitude cannot be given in evidence to discredit a witness. The question is only as to his general character for veracity.—Davis v. Forrest, Case No. 3,634; United States v. Vansickle, Id. 16,609.

A customs officer, who has given evidence for defendant on a prosecution for smuggling, cannot be interrogated as to violations by him of the revenue laws not connected with the charge in question, for the purpose of discrediting him. —United States v. Harris, Case No. 15,314.

§ 80. Interest and bias of witness.
The interest of a party in the result should be considered on the question of his credibility. —White v. Commonwealth Nat. Bank, Case No. 17,544.

The court will instruct the jury to disregard the testimony of a witness who, upon cross-examination, is shown to be interested.—Brohawn v. Van Ness, Case No. 1,920.

A strong bias in favor of a party goes to the witness' credibility, and not to his competency. —Burroughs v. United States, Case No. 2,202.

The testimony of witnesses, who, while testifying under circumstances calculated to create a strong bias, state what is, in its nature, incredible, need not be believed.—The Helen R. Cooper, Case No. 6,334.

Inconsistencies in the testimony of a witness whose relation to the cause puts him under a strong bias to testify in favor of one of the parties may be used to discredit his entire testimony.—Sanders v. Parsons, Case No. 12,296.

If there be reason to suppose that the perjury or prevarication of one witness is the result of subornation, it affords a reasonable ground in doubtful cases, for suspecting the testimony of other witnesses adduced by the same party. —Wellman v. Blood, Case No. 17,385; Same v. Woodman, Id.

§ 81. Proof of witness making same statement out of court.
Testimony is not admissible that the witness gave the same account out of court, although it has been proved in order to contradict him that he had given a different account.—United States v. Holmes, Case No. 15,382.

§ 82. Effect of untruthful statement by witness.
The whole testimony of a witness may be rejected where it is found that he has willfully testified falsely as to a material fact.—United States v. Blaisdell, Case No. 14,608; Same v. Harries, Id. 15,309.

§ 83. Inconsistent statements by witness.
A witness cannot be impeached by proving that at other times he made contradictory statements, unless he be first interrogated as to such statements.—McKinney v. Neil, Case No. 8,865; United States v. Dickinson, Id. 14,958; Same v. White, Id. 16,679. CONTRA, see Howland v. Conway, Case No. 6,793.

But such rule does not apply where an ex parte deposition was read, of the taking of which no notice was given.—McKinney v. Neil, Case No. 8,865.

Error in admitting evidence of statements by a witness inconsistent with his testimony, without first calling his attention to such statements, is cured if, on being afterwards called by the prisoner, he denies such statements.—United States v. McHenry, Case No. 15,681.

Little reliance can be placed on the testimony of a witness who contradicted himself on cross-examination.—The Carroll, Case No. 2,451.

Inconsistencies and incongruities in the testimony of witnesses whose general character for veracity has not been impeached will be reconciled, if possible.—Dietz v. Wade, Case No. 3,903.

A shipmaster's protest may be read to discredit what he says on his examination in the cause.—Lamalere v. Caze, Case No. 8,002.

The declarations of a witness, not under oath, may be given in evidence to discredit his testimony.—Harper v. Reily, Case No. 6,091.

Declarations of a witness cannot be given in evidence, except only in answer to evidence of other declarations of the witness, inconsistent with what he had previously sworn to.—Wright v. Deklyne, Case No. 18,076.

Where defendant shows that plaintiff's witness made statements at other times different from those sworn to, plaintiff cannot show other statements corroborative of his evidence.—Ellicott v. Pearl, Case No. 4,386.

A previous and contradictory statement of a witness may be given in evidence to impeach his credit, but not as proof of the facts formerly stated.—Hand v. The Elvira, Case No. 6,015.

A party cannot discredit his own witness by proving that formerly he swore differently.— United States v. Jones, Case No. 15,494.

§ 1. When contract implied.
One held in slavery abroad, who remains with his master on coming into the United States, cannot recover for his services upon an implied promise.—Curranee v. McQueen, Case No. 3,488.

A person who performs valuable services as an officer of an association is entitled to compensation therefor unless he waive it.—Oliver v. Vernon, Case No. 10,501.

The mere knowledge of the doing of extra work and failure to object will not of itself raise a contract.—Belt v. Cook, Case No. 1,282.

Extra work done upon a house built by contract cannot be recovered unless there was an express or implied agreement therefor.—Belt v. Cook, Case No. 1,282.

An action will not lie for services to defendant's slave in nursing him in his last sickness, while on a visit to plaintiff's wife, where defendant offered to remove him.—Manning v. Cox, Case No. 9,042.

A person who contracts to do certain work at a certain price, and quits without cause before it is finished, cannot recover, upon a quantum meruit, the value of his labor.—Lewis v. Esther, Case No. 8,322.

Where there is a written contract, no recovery can be had for extra work or materials unless authorized or directed by the other party.—Cameron v. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co., Case No. 2,341.

A government contractor is not liable for extra work done by a subcontractor by direction of the government superintendent without proof that the work was embraced in the contract with the government, and not embraced in the subcontract.—Donohue v. Culley, Case No. 3,991.

§ 2. Persons in family relations.

In the absence of any contract, between brother and sister living together, to pay her for domestic services, she has no claim on him for such services.—Bartlett v. Mercer, Case No. 1,078.

TABLE OF CITATIONS

Giving the citation by volume and page of each Federal case reported in the United States Circuit and District Courts, and other Reports and Periodicals, and the number under which such case is reported in the Federal Cases.

This table gives the volume and page of the report in which each case was originally reported, and the number under which each such case is reported in this series. It furnishes the means of finding any case reported in this series, where a citation refers to the volume and page of a report, but fails to give the title of the case.
