

and on any such appeal security for damages and costs shall be given as in the case of other appeals in which the United States is a party." The government moves to dismiss on the ground that the statute as to security for damages and costs has not been complied with, but insists only upon the provision as to security for costs. Unquestionably, the statute requires security for costs to be furnished with the original application. We understand the practice in the Second circuit conforms to this idea. In view of the facts, however, that the statute was comparatively new at the time this petition was filed, that there was no express rule of court on the subject defining what the security should be, and that counsel by affidavit establishes that the petition is being prosecuted in good faith, and that the statute was not understood by him as requiring security at the outset, I am disposed not to grant the motion to dismiss, except upon the following condition: The petition will be dismissed unless the petitioner, on or before December 2, 1894, files with the clerk the ordinary cost bond in the sum of $50. And leave is granted to the petitioner to file such security within such time, as of the date of filing the original application. The clerk will enter the same order in Nos. 173, 190, 236, 273, and 290.

No. 237.

CUSTOMS DUTIES—CLASSIFICATION—WOOLEN CLOAKS LINED AND TRIMMED WITH FUR—ACT 1890.

Cloaks of woolen cloth, lined and trimmed about the neck, sleeves, front, bottom, and back with fur, and not reversible, are dutiable at $4\frac{1}{2}$ times the duty on unwashed wool of the first class, and 60 per cent. ad valorem, as cloaks "or other outside garments for ladies, and children's apparel * * * composed wholly or in part of wool, * * * made up or manufactured wholly or in part," etc., under paragraph 397 of the act of 1890, and not at 35 per cent. ad valorem, under paragraph 461, as manufactures of leather, fur, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, "all of the above not specially provided for in this act," etc., though fur is a component material of chief value in such cloaks, since they are "specially provided for" by the former paragraph.

Petition by Alanson W. Beard for review of the questions of law and fact involved in the decision of the board of United States general appraisers in respect to a duty imposed on merchandise imported by C. F. Hovey & Co. in 1892. Decision of board reversed. Decision of collector affirmed.

ALDRICH, District Judge. This is a petition for review of the questions of law and fact involved in the decision of the board of United States general appraisers in respect to a duty imposed upon an importation from Germany by C. F. Hovey & Co. in 1892. Paragraph 397 of the act of 1890 establishes a duty of 4½ times the duty imposed on unwashed wool of the first class, and, in addition thereto, 60 per centum ad valorem, "on cloaks, dolmans, jackets, talmas, ulsters or other outside garments for ladies' and children's apparel and goods of similar description, or used for like purposes, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca or other animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part," etc. The article of import in question was invoiced with 15 other garments as "ready-made ladies' woolen garments," and entered by the importer as "German garments." It was a long, outside garment of woolen cloth, lined with fur, and the trimmings and ornamentations about the neck, sleeves, front, bottom, and back were likewise of fur. The basic or structural material, however, was wool. In other words, it was a cloth cloak, lined and trimmed with fur. The garment was not reversible, and therefore was in no sense a fur garment lined with cloth. The petitioner claims that the article of import was dutiable under paragraph 397, while the importer contends that it rightfully comes within the provisions of paragraph 461 of the act of 1890, which provides an ad valorem duty of 35 per centum. The latter paragraph describes "manufactures of leather, fur, gutta-percha, vulcanized India rubber known as hard rubber, human hair, * * * or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, all of the above not specially provided for in this act," etc. Unquestionably this paragraph is broad enough and sufficiently explicit to embrace the article of import in question, were it not specially covered by the earlier provisions of the same act. It is clear, however, that the purpose of congress was to exclude from the general provisions of this paragraph all articles of manufacture specifically provided for elsewhere in the act. So we come to the question whether the article of importation is covered by the description embraced in paragraph 397. I think it is. It would be difficult to employ words more clearly and unmistakably descriptive of a manufacture consisting of various component materials than those used in paragraph 397, "on cloaks, * * * or other outside garments for ladies' and children's apparel, * * * composed wholly or in part of wool * * * made up or manufactured wholly or in part," etc. The garment was a cloak. The structural part of the garment was not in part but wholly of woolen cloth, lined and ornamented with fur, and as such is specially provided for by this paragraph. It is true that fur was a component material, and that it was of chief value, but this fact does not relieve the article of import from the operation of the terms of paragraph 397, for the reason that the idea of chief value expressed by paragraph 461 is by the terms of the same paragraph limited to articles not specially provided for elsewhere. The argument presented that fur was the component material of chief value, and that the duty under paragraph 397 is disproportionate, is a strong equitable argument. It is apparent, however, that congress intended to lay a specific duty upon the manufactured wool entering into this class of garments, and also an arbitrary ad valorem duty on the value, including, of course, the component materials used in connection therewith; and, as said by Nelson, J., in Reimer v. Schell, 4 Blatchf. 328, 330, Fed. Cas. No. 11,676, in speaking of articles of importation: "The proper inquiry is as to their qualities and characteristics, with a view to ascertain whether they come within the description. If they do, no argument can take them out of the rate of duty which has been imposed." Section 397 is a designation of articles by special description (Barber v. Schell, 107 U. S. 617, 2 Sup. Ct. 301), and it would seem that the article of import is plainly within such description. Holding these views, the decision of the general appraisers must be reversed, and that of the collector affirmed, and it is so ordered.

THE C. G. WHITE.

THE C. G. WHITE et al. v. UNITED STATES.

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit. November 2, 1894.)

1. CUSTOMS LAWS—VIOLATION—PENALTY OF MASTER AND MATE—LIABILITY OF VESSEL.

Rev. St. § 3088, providing that when a vessel, its owner or master, has become subject to a penalty for violation of revenue laws, it shall be holden therefor, does not render it liable for a penalty imposed on its mate under section 2867, making the master and mate respectively liable for a penalty where the cargo of a vessel is unladen without authority of the customs officer.

2. SAME—ENFORCEMENT.

Under Rev. St. § 3088, providing that, when a vessel's master has become subject to a penalty for violation of revenue laws, it shall be holden for the payment thereof, and may be seized and proceeded against to recover the penalty, the lien may be enforced by libel of the vessel without judgment being first obtained against the master.

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of Alaska.

Libel by the United States against the schooner C. G. White. Decree for libellant. Libelee and H. P. Lauritzen and others, claimants, appeal. Modified.

Andros & Frank, for appellants.

Before McKENNA and GILBERT, Circuit Judges, and HAWLEY, District Judge.

GILBERT, Circuit Judge. The schooner C. G. White cleared from the port of San Francisco on the 31st day of January, 1893, bound for a hunting and fishing voyage. She had on board only ballast and sea stores, guns and ammunition, and hunting and fishing gear. She was obliged to put into Honolulu to leave mail and get water. She was compelled by the authorities there to make entry at the customhouse before landing her mail or procuring water. She remained there 14 hours, and took on board nothing but water. She then proceeded to sea, and on March 18th she was compelled to put into the port of Yokohama to repair her rudder head, which had become shaky and was unsafe. The repairs required five days. By the laws of the port, a vessel, after being at anchor 48 hours, was
