

June 1, 2012

Office of Management and Budget
725 17th Street NW
Room 9026
Washington, DC 20503

Submitted via www.regulations.gov

Comments of Consumers Union to the Office of Management and Budget on “Federal Participation in the Development and Use of Voluntary Consensus Standards and in Conformity Assessment Activities”
Docket No. 2012-7602

Consumers Union,<sup>1</sup> (CU) the advocacy and public policy arm of Consumer Reports®, appreciates the opportunity to offer comments to the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) on its request for information, entitled, “Federal Participation in the Development and Use of Voluntary Consensus Standards and in Conformity Assessment Activities.” In that Federal Register notice, OMB sought input on current issues regarding Federal agencies’ standards and conformity assessment related activities. Input is being sought to inform OMB’s consideration of whether and how to supplement Circular A–119 (Federal Participation in the Development and Use of Voluntary Consensus Standards and in Conformity Assessment Activities).

Consumers Union would like to provide input specifically on the issue of incorporation by reference, which allows private standard-setting bodies to charge the public for access to copyrighted standards that are incorporated into U.S. law by reference.

Consumers Union strongly believes that U.S. citizens should not be required to pay for access to U.S. laws. In the past, when voluminous standards could only be made available in print form, it may have been reasonable to expect that the public pay a fee to access them, to, for example, cover printing costs. Today, however, with the advent of electronic reading rooms where agencies can store or hyperlink an unlimited amount of data at very low cost, requiring individuals to pay in order read public laws no longer makes sense. We have recently submitted comments in support of a petition to the Office of the Federal Register,<sup>2</sup> which advocates for a change in this outdated and restrictive policy.

---

<sup>1</sup> Consumers Union is the public policy and advocacy division of Consumer Reports. Consumers Union works for telecommunications reform, health reform, food and product safety, financial reform, and other consumer issues. Consumer Reports is the world’s largest independent product-testing organization. Using its more than 50 labs, auto test center, and survey research center, the nonprofit rates thousands of products and services annually. Founded in 1936, Consumer Reports has over 8 million subscribers to its magazine, website, and other publications.

<sup>2</sup> “Incorporation By Reference,” 77 CFR 11414, available at: <http://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2012-02-27/pdf/2012-4399.pdf>.

Consumers and consumer representatives should be able to access standards without having to pay for them.

Consumer groups, in particular, play an important role in ensuring that the standards established are sufficiently protective of consumer health and welfare. Consumer Reports®, for example, often tests consumer products and evaluates mandatory and voluntary standards for efficacy. We use our findings to push for stronger and more protective standards for consumers. In addition, consumer groups can monitor the marketplace for compliance with standards, and can point out bad actors. Consumer Reports has, on several occasions, notified the Consumer Product Safety Commission and warned consumers about products that do not comply with existing standards, thus creating a public safety hazard. In order for non-profit consumer groups like ours to play this crucial role, however, they need easy and free access to relevant standards.

Not only consumer representatives, but also consumers themselves should be able to access and read standards for free. Free public access to laws is an essential component of any democratic society. All citizens, not just those directly subject to regulation, are affected by these standards and thus have a vested interest in being able to access them, easily and free of charge. Some of the standards may be dense and complicated, but others are fairly straight forward and easy to understand. The bottom line is that even if not every citizen wishes to read every part of every standard, these standards constitute U.S. law and consumers should be able to look at them if they wish to do so. Requiring consumers to pay a fee to access these standards is a significant obstacle. It will inevitably reduce consumer access, thus violating the “reasonably available” requirement.

Consumers Union urges you to revise Circular A-119 to encourage agencies to give the public free access to standards incorporated into law by reference. Advances in technology and the Internet should make this a relatively easy and cheap means to distribute information. In today’s digital age, it simply no longer makes sense to force the public to pay what are at times prohibitive fees to read U.S. laws. We urge you find a solution the will provide free public access to these documents.

Sincerely,

Ioana Rusu
Regulatory Counsel
Consumers Union

1101 17th St. NW, Suite 500
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 462-6262
irusu@consumer.org