I think this is how it will look for the most part. If we want to get away from our users having to select "California," we will have to hyperlink each Part on our Codes webpage to the ICC table of contents page for each corresponding Part (e.g., our link to Part 1 would go straight to the ICC table of contents page for Part 1). This is perhaps better explained with visuals:)

Note: If we link to each individual ICC table of contents page for each Part, we will need to provide separate links to Part 2, Volume 1 and Part 2, Volume 2.

I agree with the comments below.

I thought we were linking straight to the individual code parts from our webpage?

The link provided below is still to the main ICC page asking to select a state then the code part.

Is just for test purposes?

Hi Cynthia, thanks again for sharing this. I'm glad ICC is moving back to a searchable document. Per our discussion I have included feedback to your inquiries below.

Subject: Update- ICC Online Code

Please review the revised online code format, on the following ICC test site, and provide any suggestions or feedback at your earliest convenience.

Test Site home page: <http://testcodes.iccsafe.org>

I have already inquired about the following:

1. Please drop the word 'Part' down on 8 and 10 (otherwise the numbers are hanging on the next line); For some reason this doesn't affect my screen for Part 8 – this may be a screen resolution issue?
2. Please place Part 9 before 11 on the bookshelf; Agreed!
3. Can you clarify what the Errata binder (last code book) indicates? Is it a one stop source for all 2013 (Emergency) Supplements and Errata? If so, we'd like to clarify that in the text, which I can draft. Yes, I believe ICC previously posted all supplements and errata for the current and previous edition (by state), under the main heading "Errata Central"
4. It appears that these versions are downloadable and may be saved. Is that correct or is it just because it's not live? I was able to download them as well, although printing is still prohibited.

Thank you!
