The California Electrical Code (California Code of Regulations, Title 24, Part 3) is based on a model building code, the National Electrical Code (NEC). The California Electrical Code includes both provisions of the NEC and amendments to the NEC adopted by California.

The National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) owns the copyright to the NEC; therefore, NFPA must be the publisher of the California Electrical Code if it is going to contain both NEC provisions and California's amendments to the NEC. IF NFPA is not the publisher, California's amendments to the NEC cannot be published with the provisions of the NEC adopted by California. The building industry found the latter to be unworkable.

 The California Building Standards Administrative Code (California Code of Regulations, Part 1), California Energy Code (California Code of Regulations, Part 6), California Elevator Safety Construction Code (California Code of Regulations, Part 7), California Historical Building Code (California Code of Regulations, Part 8), and California Referenced Standards Code (California Code of Regulations, Part 12) are not based on model building codes. However, in an advice letter dated June 6, 2001, from the Department of Justice, it was stated that, "if it obtains the appropriate administrative approvals, the [California Building Standards] Commission may arrange for publication of [all parts of] the [California] Building Standards Code on a sole-source basis." The reasoning given was that it may be more cost effective and there would be more uniformity if the non-model code based parts were published by one of the model code publishers publishing the model code based parts.
